486. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes the continued delay in the establishment of a Human Rights Commission. In addition, the Commission takes note of high levels of sexual violence and femicide against women. Moreover, the IACHR notes with concern violence against members of the LGBTI community in the State and the need for legal reforms to safeguard this vulnerable group.

487. On October 3, 2024, the State submitted its response to the request for information sent for the preparation of this chapter.<sup>1024</sup>

- Specific issues

488. With regards to democratic institutionality, in April the State established its Constitutional Reform Commission (CRC). According to official information, the Commission will review the Constitution to address the rights, duties, and obligations of the people of Guyana, as well as implement reforms related to elections and to the Guyana Elections Commission (GECOM). The CRC will evaluate submissions for constitutional changes and forward recommendations to the National Assembly. This will be the third constitutional reform process in Guyana.<sup>1025</sup>

489. Moreover, in July judicial proceedings began into allegations of fraud concerning the 2020 general and regional elections. In March 2020, the State held elections which resulted in a political impasse that sparked civil unrest.<sup>1026</sup> In April 2023, the State completed its inquiry and published a report on the circumstances of these elections.<sup>1027</sup> In these judicial proceedings, nine defendants are facing 19 conspiracy charges which allege that they attempted to defraud the electors of Guyana by manipulating the votes cast during the March 2020 general and regional elections.<sup>1028</sup>

490. In addition, within the context of the review of Guyana's third periodic report the UNHRC welcomed the efforts by the State in combatting corruption, including the creation of the Special Organized Crime Unit of the Guyana Police Force. However, the Committee expressed concern that the institutional framework to combat corruption was not sufficiently effective in practice to adequately prevent and prosecute corruption, particularly involving police officers and high-level public officials. In this regard, the Committee recommended the adoption of concrete measures to address the root causes of corruption, including those necessary to ensure the independence and effectiveness of all anti-corruption bodies.<sup>1029</sup>

491. In relation to human rights institutions, although the Constitution of Guyana provides for the establishment of a Human Rights Commission to promote the respect for and investigation of violations of fundamental rights, the State has yet to establish this Commission.<sup>1030</sup> The UNHRC recommended that the State should take the measures necessary to operationalize the Human Rights Commission as an independent national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. The UNHRC also emphasized that the State must ensure the Human Rights Commission, once established, is equipped with adequate human and financial resources to effectively fulfill its mandate.<sup>1031</sup>

492. Regarding citizen security, according to public information, there were 35 homicides reported from January to April 15, 2024, as compared to 28 homicides for the same period in 2023, which represented an approximately 25% increase.<sup>1032</sup> This is higher than the 21.4% increase in homicides recorded in 2023.<sup>1033</sup> The State's homicide rate now stands at 4 per 100,000 inhabitants as of April 2024.<sup>1034</sup>

493. In May, the UNHRC expressed concerns regarding the alleged extrajudicial killings that occurred between 2002 and 2006, called on the State to ensure that all allegations are promptly and thoroughly investigated, and recommended the establishment of a presidential commission of inquiry.<sup>1035</sup> Consequently, in September, the State announced that a commission of inquiry will soon be established to investigate extrajudicial killings for the period.<sup>1036</sup> At the time of the writing of this report, the commission of inquiry had not yet been established.

494. In terms of access to justice, the Commission takes note of the passage of the Criminal Law Procedure (Paper Committal) and the Criminal Procedure (Plea Discussion and Plea Agreement and Assistance Agreement) acts. The first act abolishes preliminary inquiries and provides for the implementation of paper committals. The paper committal process, which involves reviewing the evidence and arguments in written form rather than conducting an in-person hearing, aims to save time and resources during the preliminary inquiry stage. According to information provided by the State, this will save judicial time, reduce the backlog of criminal cases and reduce the prison population held on remand.<sup>1037</sup> In addition, the State passed the Criminal Procedure (Plea Discussion and Plea Agreement and Assistance Agreement) Act which establishes a system of plea discussion and plea agreements between defendant and State prosecutors in criminal proceedings. The Act aims to expedite criminal proceedings while ensuring proper sentencing for offenders, with the goal of reducing the court backlog and number of persons held on remand.<sup>1038</sup>

495. Concerning the rights of children, the Commission welcomes the introduction of the “International Measures for the Protection of Children (Hague Convention) Bill 2024”, which aims to strengthen child safety measures in the country by aligning Guyana’s legislation with the 1996 Hague Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Co-operation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children.<sup>1039</sup> The Commission also highlights the campaign led by the government of Guyana, through the Ministry of Human Services and Social Security, which awarded a grant of $50,000 Guyanese dollars to 200 children to cover three months of childcare services, thereby supporting working parents and ensuring a safe and quality environment for children.<sup>1040</sup>

496. With respect to the rights of women, the IACHR highlights the increase in women’s representation in the judiciary. According to information provided by the State, in June, 8 new women puisne judges were appointed bringing the total representation of women judges within the judiciary to 70%.<sup>1041</sup> In addition, the Commission welcomed the enactment of the Family Violence Act that strengthens the protection of victims of violence in intimate partner or family contexts.<sup>1042</sup> According to official information, there has been a 33% reduction in homicides caused by domestic violence for the year 2024.<sup>1043</sup> Moreover, the Commission notes that the State has informed that the draft law on Sexual Harassment<sup>1044</sup> and the proposed amendments to the Sexual Offences Act<sup>1045</sup>, are both in the process of being approved. On the other hand, the State is yet to include the crime of femicide in its legislation.<sup>1046</sup>

497. Furthermore, the IACHR notes with concern the situation of sexual violence and femicide against women, especially against indigenous and migrant women.<sup>1047</sup> The Demerara Assizes Court registered 114 people accused of rape in January; 94 in April; and 98 in June.<sup>1048</sup> According to information from civil society, between 2020 and 2024, 275 cases of violence against migrant women were registered.<sup>1049</sup> In addition, according to indigenous leaders, cases of sexual violence against indigenous women, girls and adolescents go unnoticed by the authorities due to alleged political influence.<sup>1050</sup>

498. In relation to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, according to public information, the State will undertake a survey of the existing Venezuelan migrants within its borders to assist with providing training and certification for their inclusion into the labor force.<sup>1051</sup> Further, English as a Second Language classes were offered during the school vacation period for an extended two-week period, with the primary goal of removing language barriers for migrant children in schools.<sup>1052</sup> Moreover, the Commission notes the recommendation of the United Nations Human Rights Committee that the State adopt national legislation to protect the rights of refugees and asylum-seekers, in accordance with international norms and standards.<sup>1053</sup>

499. Regarding human trafficking, the State informed that the new Combatting of Trafficking in Persons Act of 2023, which seeks to provide comprehensive measures to address trafficking in persons, came into effect in May.<sup>1054</sup> Likewise, the Commission welcomes the capacity-building training for frontline officials on the new Act launched on July 3, 2024, which will target 150 personnel by the end of 2024. In this context, the State also reported that during the first quarter of 2024, the Guyana Police Force- Trafficking in Persons Unit received and investigated seven cases of which 159 alleged victims were screened and interviewed, and one person was charged and placed before the court for the offence of trafficking in persons.<sup>1055</sup>

500. In relation to the rights of indigenous peoples, in June the State launched the Gender-Based Violence (GBV) Mobile Remote Unit as part of a strategy to provide essential services to remote Indigenous communities in the town of Mabaruma. According to official information, this Unit aims to provide accessible and immediate support to survivors of gender-based violence in Mabaruma and surrounding areas.<sup>1056</sup>

501. The Commission welcomes the holding, in July, of the Annual National Toshias Conference that brought together Indigenous leaders from over 200 communities across the country and focused on improving access to government services.<sup>1057</sup> In addition, in August the State granted land titles to seven indigenous communities: absolute grant titles to Hotoquai, Hobodai, and Red Hill in Region One, Akiwini in Region Two and Moco Moco in Region Nine, and certificate of title to Arrau Village in Region Seven and Karasabai, also in Region Nine.<sup>1058</sup>

502. Regarding the rights of people of African descent and against racial discrimination, in April, before a United Nations forum, the State reaffirmed its commitment to combating racial discrimination, ensuring that it will investigate all credible claims related to this issue. Senior public officials emphasized that discriminatory practices will not be tolerated, and that racial equality will be prioritized as a fundamental pillar to promote social cohesion in a country characterized by its cultural and ethnic diversity.<sup>1059</sup> hostility by individuals in political leadership roles and public office, as well as racial profiling practices carried out by law enforcement agents.<sup>1060</sup>

504. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, in November, during a public hearing in the context of the 191st Period of Sessions, the IACHR was made aware of high levels of sexual and gender-based violence in Guyana, in particular against migrant women, trans women and sex workers. The requesting organizations stressed the need for legal reforms to safeguard these vulnerable groups. In response, the State highlighted its progress in protecting women and improving access to justice, citing legislative measures including the Family Violence Act, specialized support programs for Venezuelan migrants and special gender-based violence police units.<sup>1061</sup> In this context, the Commission notes the homicide of a trans woman sex worker was reported and two people were formally charged in connection with this case.<sup>1062</sup>

505. On the matter of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission values the State's continuing commitment to facilitate social reintegration and improve the conditions of detention.<sup>1063</sup> According to data provided by the State, in July the Guyana Prison Service and the Central Housing and Planning Authority (CH&PA) signed an agreement for the production of 500,000 concrete blocks by inmates, under CH&PA's Community-based Employment Stimulation Project aimed at providing inmates employment opportunities, skills training, and income to support their families while in prison. Also, the State informed that during the first half of 2024, a total of 354 inmates completed training in several technical and vocational skills, and 271 prison staff completed approximately 50 courses related to prison management, human rights and supervisory management. In addition, according to information provided by the State, 13 ex-prisoners participated in the "Fresh Start" Programme aimed at equipping them with skills and resources for their reintegration into society and the workforce.<sup>1064</sup>

506. According to public information, in April the Guyana Prison Service established partnerships with different organizations with the aim of implementing programmes to promote female entrepreneurship and facilitate their reintegration into society.<sup>1065</sup> Public data indicate that inmates in the same facility received training in auto mechanics, joinery, masonry tailoring, welding, and carpentry.<sup>1066</sup> The Commission also highlights the State's efforts in expanding the availability of healthcare to all inmates and staff since January 2024,<sup>1067</sup> including with the opening, in February, of a new pharmacy at the Lusignan Prison envisioned to function on a 24-hour basis.<sup>1068</sup> The Commission takes note of the efforts to improve infrastructure of the New Amsterdam, Lusignan, and Mazaruni prisons<sup>1069</sup> aimed at providing better spaces for inmate rehabilitation and security.<sup>1070</sup>

507. Despite the above, according to the United Nations, the conditions of incarcerated people are characterized by overcrowding (exacerbated by the overuse of pretrial detention and the absence of application of alternative measures), physical abuse, and a lack of access to sanitation, water, health care and sunlight. In addition, pretrial detention is purported to be used for periods far exceeding maximum applicable prison sentences. In addition, there are allegations of the lack of independence and transparency of Prison Visiting Committees.<sup>1071</sup>

508. In relation to the death penalty, the IACHR observes that Guyana is the only country in South America that retains the death penalty as a punishment, with the last known execution carried out in 1997.<sup>1072</sup>

XIX. HAITI

- General considerations

509. As it relates to progress, the Commission takes note of the reappointment of the Prime Minister and President of the High Transitional Council (CPT) and the constitution and appointment of the members of the Provisional Electoral Council (CEP) both necessary to hold elections. In addition, the Multinational Security Support Mission (MMAS) was deployed in the country since June to restore security conditions.

510. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes with concern the upsurge in violent attacks, including massacres, and the heightened risk of gender-based violence. Additionally, the Commission is particularly alarmed by the increase in the number of displaced persons given the continued deterioration of the humanitarian and security situation in the country.

511. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

512. In terms of democratic institutionality, the IACHR takes note of the installation of the Presidential Transitional Council (CPT), after the resignation of the former Prime Minister, Ariel Henry, in April. The creation of the CPT was supported by the international community during a high-level meeting that took place in March.<sup>1073</sup> This new institution aims to promote dialogue and organize transparent general elections by February 2026.<sup>1074</sup> Initially, Edgar Leblanc-Fils was appointed as President of the CPT and Garry Conille was appointed Prime Minister. However, continued political instability is evident as both officers were replaced in their functions by Leslie Voltaire, in October, and by Alix Didier Fils-Aimé, in November, respectively.<sup>1075</sup>

513. In addition, the State constituted the “Provisional Electoral Council”<sup>1076</sup> (CEP) and appointed its members,<sup>1077</sup> despite the initial disagreements existing in the different sectors represented in the CEP, which prevented their appointment within the term agreed upon by Decree.<sup>1078</sup> In addition, civil society organizations have denounced their lack of meaningful participation and consultation in the appointment process and contested some of the designations.<sup>1079</sup>

514. The Commission notes that the instability of the political transition process is being undermined by armed gang violence, which prevents the re-establishment of authority and control by the State. The existence of endemic impunity for human rights violations and abuses<sup>1080</sup> and the high levels of corruption also contribute to instability.<sup>1081</sup> In this regard, according to civil society organizations, there is permissiveness and widespread corruption at all levels of government that undermines the role of the State and institutional trust.<sup>1082</sup>

515. The IACHR also highlights the work carried out by the Venice Commission, following a request by OAS Secretary General, Luis Almagro. The final opinion adopted by the Venice Commission understands as an incontestable priority of the government of Haiti to held elections and to restore of an appropriate level of security. In terms of constitutional and electoral rules amendments, the Venice Commission highlighted the need to amend the current constitution to eliminate all elements of instability which have led to the collapse of the state institutions as well as to enshrine in the future constitution the main features of the electoral system and of the electoral administration to ensure the stability of electoral law and of the electoral institutions. Finally, the opinion remarks support of the international community as essential.<sup>1083</sup>

516. Regarding citizen security, as it has been expressed throughout the year in the various press releases published<sup>1084</sup>, the Commission once again reiterates its concern about the context of insecurity and generalized violence that has worsened and deteriorated throughout this year, because of continuous attacks by armed gangs all over the country. According to United Nations data, the number of people killed in Haiti this year is estimated to have reached 5,000 people.<sup>1085</sup>

517. Between January and April 2024, the activation of an alliance and the launching of coordinated attacks against critical infrastructure between the G-9 and G-Pèp gangs –two opposing coalitions– in the Port-au-Prince metropolitan area reportedly contributed to an unprecedented increase in violence.<sup>1086</sup> This situation overwhelmed the capacities of the national security forces, which, in addition, were particularly affected by the lack of protection for agents, resignations from the police service and the loss of police facilities due to attacks perpetrated against them by armed gangs.<sup>1087</sup> All this led to the dismissal of the director of the Haitian National Police in June.<sup>1088</sup>

518. Subsequently, during the second semester of 2024, the Commission observed a spread of armed gang violence from the capital to different departments of the country, with repeated attacks by armed gangs in municipalities such as Ganthier, Cabaret and Arcahaie, Carrefour, Gressier, Petit-Goâve and Léogâne, among others.<sup>1089</sup> The last quarter of 2024, particularly from November, saw an upsurge in violence in the various neighborhoods of the capital, with armed gangs controlling more than 80% of the Port-au-Prince metropolitan area.<sup>1090</sup>

519. The Multinational Security Support Mission in Haiti (MMAS) created the UN Security Council was deployed in June and its mandate has been extended until October 2, 2025.<sup>1091</sup> The Mission is estimated to have more than 400 members, mostly from Kenya but also from Jamaica and Belize.<sup>1092</sup> Although the more effective and coordinated response to violence, according to information from civil society organizations, the deployment of the MMAS has not prevented armed gangs from expanding their territorial control into areas previously unaffected by gang violence.<sup>1093</sup> As a result of the continuing security challenges, in October, the President of the Presidential Transitional Council requested the United Nations to transform the MMAS into a UN peacekeeping mission,<sup>1094</sup> but the request was denied.<sup>1095</sup>

520. Access to justice is in a near total paralysis situation in the greater Port-au-Prince region due to the multiple violent attacks perpetrated by armed gangs against the main judicial institutions. The Commission observed an aggravated paralysis of the courts of first instance by the persistence of strikes by magistrates and judicial staff to demand labor rights.<sup>1096</sup> According to Bureau Intégré des Nations Unies en Haïti (BINUH), since the start of the judicial year in October 2023 and until June 2024, courts have been operational for only ten days.<sup>1097</sup>

521. Regarding the rights of children, the Commission expresses its concern about the impact that the context of generalized violence in the country has had on this population. According to the United Nations Integrated Office in Haiti, children continue to be killed and injured in gang attacks and during police operations. Some children have been targeted due to their alleged support for rival gangs or the police, while others, suspected of committing minor offenses, have been lynched and killed by local community members.<sup>1098</sup> Data from civil society indicates that, as of August 2024, at least 131 children, including infants, had been killed or injured due to violent attacks on their neighborhoods or confrontations between armed groups and the police.<sup>1099</sup>

522. The IACHR is also concerned about the rising number of children and adolescents being recruited by gangs in Haiti, largely driven by a lack of socio-economic opportunities.<sup>1100</sup> According to UNICEF, the number of children recruited by armed groups in Haiti increased by 70% in 2024.<sup>1101</sup> In addition to committing minor offenses, some of these children have also been involved in violent acts, including murders, kidnappings, attacks, and looting of public institutions.<sup>1102</sup>

523. In relation to the right to education, UNICEF reported that, as of October 2024, the Ministry of Education in Haiti had confirmed the closure of 919 schools across the country, representing an increase of more than 20% compared to 2023. This situation has disrupted school attendance, affecting more than 300,000 children.<sup>1103</sup> Additionally, nearly 2 million children—almost half of the country's youth—are enduring crisis levels of hunger. Among them, over 760,000 are experiencing emergency-level food insecurity, characterized by acute malnutrition and an elevated risk of death from starvation.<sup>1104</sup>

524. Moreover, the violent context has led to significant internal displacement among children and adolescents. By July 2024, the number of internally displaced children in Haiti had risen by approximately 60% since March due to the violence inflicted by armed groups.<sup>1105</sup>

525. Regarding the rights of women, the IACHR reiterates its concern about the national emergency of sexual violence against women, girls, and adolescents in the country, perpetrated by armed groups and gangs.<sup>1106</sup> These groups are reportedly using sexual violence as a weapon of extortion<sup>1107</sup> and amplifying sexual violence against victims who have been displaced and seek refuge as a result of gang clashes.<sup>1108</sup> According to civil society data, between January and October 2024, 5,400 acts of gender-based violence were registered, of which 72% were sexual violence.<sup>1109</sup> Along these lines, there is a 1,000% increase in cases of sexual violence against girls compared to last year.<sup>1110</sup>

526. In this context, the IACHR was informed of the serious situation of generalized impunity in cases of sexual violence. According to civil society data, of 1,375 complaints of sexual violence, 353 were followed up and only 31 cases were tried.<sup>1111</sup> In addition, obstacles to survivors accessing health care services, including maternal health, persist, such as lack of infrastructure, closures of health centers, staffing shortages, and the inability to afford private care.<sup>1112</sup>

527. Regarding the situation of human mobility, the Commission notes with concern the persistent increase in the number of internally displaced persons as a result of the context of generalized violence and multidimensional crisis that Haiti is experiencing.<sup>1113</sup> According to the International Organization for Migration (IOM), it is estimated that in 2024 the number of internal displacements will exceed 700,000 people, half of whom are children.<sup>1114</sup> The number of internally displaced people has doubled since December 2023.<sup>1115</sup> According to available information, many of these people find refuge in shelters, which have deficient conditions of access to drinking water, hygiene, sanitation and food.<sup>1116</sup> Also, according to IOM, displaced children would not receive education and the violence suffered by internally displaced persons has affected their mental health.<sup>1117</sup> Faced with this scenario, many people have opted to leave the island by sea, a situation that would have an impact on the growing number of interdictions, disappearances or fatalities on the high sea.<sup>1118</sup>

528. Regarding advances on people of African descent and against racial discrimination, the state has joined the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) Reparations Commission, which aims to seek reparations for the damages caused by slavery and colonialism in member countries.<sup>1119</sup>

529. With respect to persons deprived of their liberty, according to data from BINUH, as of June, with a total of 7,523 persons in detention, the prison occupancy rate was 295%. Of this total, 84% were held in pretrial detention.<sup>1120</sup> This percentage maintains Haiti as the country in the region with the highest percentage of people in pretrial detention.<sup>1121</sup>

530. In addition, the Commission reiterates its concern about the deplorable detention's conditions in Haitian prisons, which are said to have caused the death of incarcerated persons.<sup>1122</sup> In a press release published in June, the IACHR highlighted the deplorable situation of the prisons as being completely overcrowded –with the exception of the National Penitentiary of Port-au-Prince– and lacking sanitary and food services.<sup>1123</sup> Also, according to BINUH data, these spaces are characterized by a shortage of medicines and hygiene products. In this scenario, from January to June 2024, at least 107 people detained in Haitian prisons died, mostly due to lack of care, unsanitary conditions, lack of access to potable water, insufficient food and diseases caused by malnutrition.<sup>1124</sup>

531. The Commission is also concerned about the impact of the crisis of violence that the country is facing on detention centers. In a press release dated issued in March, the IACHR referred to the attacks perpetrated by armed groups on police stations and at the National Penitentiary in Port-au-Prince and a civilian prison in Croix-des-Bouquets, which resulted in the murder of at least 12 people, the wounding of multiple police officers, and the mass escape of thousands of detainees.<sup>1125</sup> According to UN estimations, a total of 4,299 people escaped from the National Penitentiary in Croix-des-Bouquets in Port-au-Prince during these events.<sup>1126</sup> In addition, according to public information, in August, an attack and prison break took place in the city of San Marcos, north of Port-au-Prince, resulting in the death of 12 prisoners during an exchange of fire with security forces.<sup>1127</sup>

<sup>1126</sup> The calculation was made by the IACHR based on BINUH data indicating that, as of June 30, 2024, there were 7,523 persons detained in Haitian prisons; and that, as of March 2024, before the escape, there were 11,822. of gender perspective, such as the approval of the Law on Safe Houses for women surviving violence, the resumption of activities by the technical investigation committee of the Inter-Agency Commission for Monitoring the Investigation of Violent Deaths of Women and Femicides, and the progress made in the inclusion of trans persons in the national identification system through processes that enable rectification of official IDs in the National Registry of Persons (RNP). The Commission also notes the creation of the National Institute of Historical Memory.

533. With regard to the challenges ahead, in 2024, the Commission observed that the State kept extending the state of emergency as part of its citizen security policy, as well as the continued presence of the Military Police for Public Order (PMOP) in the direction and control of penitentiaries. The Commission also learned about the high levels of violence against defenders, women and LGBTI persons.

534. The State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter on October 21, 2024.<sup>1128</sup>

- Specific issues

535. With regard to democratic institutionality, the State reported the measures being adopted by the National Election Council (CNE) for the forthcoming primary election to be held in 2025, including the official call for the 2025 primaries, the approval of a special budget, the rules on election monitoring and the taking of oath by the new members of the CNE plenary.<sup>1129</sup>

536. As for the fight against corruption, the Commission continued monitoring the potential creation of an International Commission against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (CICIH), under the auspices of the United Nations. In this regard, the Commission learned about the submission to the United Nations of a second draft of the CICIH convention under negotiation.<sup>1130</sup>

537. Furthermore, the State explained that on September 20, 2024, the Supreme Court of Justice declared that the Employment and Economic Development Zones (ZEDE) were unconstitutional.<sup>1131</sup> The Commission has followed up on the implementation of the ZEDEs in Honduras<sup>1132</sup> and has emphasized the importance of ratifying the repeal of the ZEDE Law issued by the National Congress in 2022.<sup>1133</sup>

538. Concerning human rights institutions, the State referred to the National Human Rights Commission (CONADEH), the Secretariat of Human Rights (SEDH), the Special Human Rights Prosecutor's Office, the Special Prosecutor's Office for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and the National Mechanism to Prevent Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment (MNP-CONAPREV). The State added that it provided training in a number of human rights topics to 7,159 persons, out of which 1,098 were public officials, 4,908 were law enforcement officials and 1,153 were part of the general public.<sup>1134</sup>

539. In terms of citizen security, the downward trend in homicides continues. According to preliminary figures from the Secretariat of Security, as of December 1, 2024, the partial rate of homicides was 23.42 every 100,000 people.<sup>1135</sup> Despite this drop, there is a general perception that crime rates have increased because crimes are not prosecuted.<sup>1136</sup> In this regard, Honduras continues to be considered as the most violent country in Central America, as it ranks first in murder rates.<sup>1137</sup> In addition, according to public information, between January and July, at least 200 persons disappeared, especially in cases of collective disappearance of young people.<sup>1138</sup> The CONADEH registered that in the last 18 months, at least 76 people disappeared in 13 departments across the country.<sup>1139</sup>

540. Honduras is still under the state of emergency ordered in December 2022. Since then, the State has extended this measure, effective in 158 municipalities across Honduras.<sup>1140</sup> Its last extension was ordered by means of Executive Decree No. PCM 18-2024, which extends it until December 31, 2024. In this regard, the United Nations Committee against Torture expressed its concern over the extension of the state of emergency, under which over 25,896 detentions and more than 17,062 raids without a warrant have taken place by virtue of the powers granted to the National Police and the PMOP of the armed forces.<sup>1141</sup> The Commission reminds the State that the suspension of guarantees is not a means within a security policy to address ordinary crimes. The Commission also highlights the need to adopt a comprehensive security policy based on a human rights approach that simultaneously takes specific actions and strategic plans from different operational, regulatory and prevention perspectives.<sup>1142</sup>

541. In terms of access to justice and judicial independence, the State informed that in February 2024, the National Congress appointed Johel Zelaya Álvarez as Attorney General of the Republic and Marcio Cabañas Cadillo as Deputy Attorney General.<sup>1143</sup> The State added that the judiciary is preparing a new bill to replace the current Judicial Service Law and taking specific measures to ensure the independence and integrity of its officials.<sup>1144</sup> Moreover, civil society organizations informed the Commission about allegedly ungrounded transfers and disqualifications of 17 judges and magistrates.<sup>1145</sup>

542. In connection with memory, truth and justice processes, the State of Honduras referred to the creation of the National Institute of Historical Memory, whose purpose is to investigate and disseminate information about human rights violations and interruptions of the democratic order in the country.<sup>1146</sup> Furthermore, the Commission is aware of a bill on a Law on Victims of Serious Human Rights Violations in Honduras as a Result of the National Security Doctrine, prepared in collaboration with human rights

Among the most important aspects of the law are a public policy on memory, a genetic profile bank, special investigation units, a National Directorate of Reparations charged with reparation management and a Unified Registry of Victims.<sup>1147</sup>

543. As for human rights defenders, the Commission learned of at least five murders of defenders in 2024. In particular, it notes that agricultural conflicts remain one of the primary factors of violence against defenders, especially in Bajo Aguán, department of Tocoa.<sup>1148</sup> In this regard, the Commission heard about the murders of Selvin Noé García Pérez, an active member of the Brisas del Aguán cooperative, who was murdered on October 17;<sup>1149</sup> Juan López, an environmental activist and a beneficiary of precautionary measures granted by the Commission, murdered on September 14 in the department of Tocoa;<sup>1150</sup> and Marvin Dubón, a member of the Farming Cooperative of Peasants Tranvio, murdered on March 17 in Bajo Aguán, Tocoa.<sup>1151</sup> In addition, the Commission learned of the assassination of land defender and peasant leader Olman García on August 4 in the department of Atlántida<sup>1152</sup> and of environmental defender and LGBTI activist Erlin Blandín Álvarez on July 14 in the department of Olancho.<sup>1153</sup> Based on estimations by CONADEH, from 2022 to 2024, at least 30 defenders of indigenous people, land, territory and the environment were killed.<sup>1154</sup> The Commission has been informed of the impunity in most of these cases, especially regarding the masterminds.

544. Concerning other acts of violence, the Commission granted precautionary measures in favor of Rodsman Saadik Molina Ortez, president of the Union of Workers of the Honduran Civil Aeronautics Agency after having learned of the multiple threats he suffered, including the interception of his vehicle by armed persons when he was on his way to work, threats, injuries, robbery, and an assault committed by individuals wearing police uniforms; he was also stalked and pictures of him were taken from unidentified vehicles.<sup>1155</sup>

545. Moreover, the Commission continued receiving information about the criminalization of defenders. In this context, it learnt of the case of Nolvía Obando, leader of women peasant movement Las Galileas, who is standing trial for land usurpation. Currently, the proceedings against her were suspended after the filing of an amparo writ that is still pending.<sup>1156</sup> In addition, on September 19, 2024, the Second Court of Appeals of La Ceiba ordered to reopen the criminal case against five water defenders from the Guapinol community and members of the Municipal Committee for the Defense of Community and Public Property

546. In connection with the criminal proceedings filed against those responsible for the murder of indigenous defender Berta Cáceres, the Commission was informed of delays in the resolution of the cassation remedies filed by the eight defendants in the case in 2018 and 2022.<sup>1158</sup> On November 25, 2024, the Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice (CSJ) ratified the convictions of seven out of the eight defendants as material perpetrators and co-perpetrators of the Berta Cáceres' assassination. Said ruling reduced the sentences of three of them and forwarded to the plenary of the CSJ the debate on whether or not to ratify the sentence of the remaining defendant, a decision that is still pending.<sup>1159</sup>

547. As to the rights of indigenous and Afro-Honduran persons, the State reported on the creation of the First National Plan to Safeguard the Languages of Indigenous and Afro-Honduran Persons, aimed at strengthening and preserving their linguistic heritage by means of collaborative efforts with these communities. Honduras also implemented the Project for Safeguarding the Intangible Afro-descendant Cultural Heritage, which focuses on protecting the cultural heritage of this population and adopting measures to combat racism and racial discrimination.<sup>1160</sup>

548. The State also achieved progress in the restitution of land to the Garifuna Community of Punta Piedra, in accordance with the judgment issued by the Inter-American Court in 2015, by convening the High-Level Intersectoral Commission for Compliance with International Judgments in April and starting the process to rehabilitate their lands in October 2024.<sup>1161</sup> The United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed its concern over the complex and slow process of registering and demarcating the lands of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples and over cases of eviction, dispossession and displacement of these peoples due to land disputes and the impact of extractive projects carried out in their customary territories without consultation or free, prior and informed consent.<sup>1162</sup> Civil society organizations reported that the State had conducted large-scale, violent evictions of black, indigenous and peasant communities without prior notice and in cases where judgments had not become final. They also denounced the forced displacement of communities from their ancestral territories due to extractive industry activities, which were generally supported by the State, and referred to the systematic criminalization and violence against community leaders.<sup>1163</sup> Moreover, the Commission learned of the construction of a prison in La Mosquitia, in the ancestral territories of the Miskito people, without their consultation or prior consent.<sup>1164</sup>

549. Additionally, according to public reports, the leaders of 50 Garifuna communities denounced social exclusion, institutional racism and marginalization and called for affirmative government measures to

550. With regard to the rights of women, the Commission highlights the passage of the Law on Safe Houses for women surviving violence.<sup>1168</sup> The Commission also welcomes various measures aimed at improving judicial responses and access to justice in cases of gender-based violence, such as the resumption of activities by the technical investigation committee of the Inter-Agency Commission for Monitoring the Investigation of Violent Deaths of Women and Femicides,<sup>1169</sup> the implementation of a model of open and accessible judicial offices and courts in the Specialized Court against Domestic Violence and the Sentencing Court of Francisco Morazán,<sup>1170</sup> and the steps taken towards establishing the Justice and Gender Observatory of the judiciary.<sup>1171</sup>

551. However, the Commission notes that limited progress was achieved in drafting the Comprehensive Law on Violence against Women, the Purple Alert Law for the search of disappeared women<sup>1172</sup> and the Law Against Political Violence Towards Women.<sup>1173</sup> The Commission also observes that the CONADEH received 1,566 complaints from women during the first half of the year, most of which involved human rights violations in relation to due process of law and access to justice.<sup>1174</sup> Furthermore, the Commission is alarmed at reports of media violence against women and adolescents arrested for alleged abortion who have been exposed by the authorities in both traditional and social media.<sup>1175</sup>

552. Moreover, the Commission notes that high rates of femicide, sexual and domestic violence against women, girls and adolescents persist in Honduras.<sup>1176</sup> According to official records, 177 violent deaths of women were recorded between January and October 2024,<sup>1177</sup> while the civil society reported 203 femicides during the same period, most of which were committed in public spaces.<sup>1178</sup> The Public Prosecutor's Office recorded 766 complaints of sexual violence against women and girls in the first quarter alone.<sup>1179</sup> Additionally,

27,809 domestic violence and 39,550 domestic abuse complaints were recorded between January and September 2024.<sup>1180</sup> In the same period, 3,799 victims of human trafficking received assistance, including 45 people rescued in 2024, including 33 children and eight women.<sup>1181</sup>

553. In terms of sexual and reproductive rights, the Commission notes the persistently high pregnancy rates among girls and adolescents aged 10 to 19,<sup>1182</sup> with 6,914 births reported over the first seven months of 2024.<sup>1183</sup> In this context, the Commission voices its concern over the fact that the Law on Comprehensive Education and Teenage Pregnancy Prevention, vetoed in 2022,<sup>1184</sup> was excluded from the legislative agenda, and, in turn, a bill that could hinder its enactment was introduced.<sup>1185</sup> Furthermore, the Commission observes barriers to accessing reproductive healthcare, particularly for victims of sexual violence who become pregnant.<sup>1186</sup> Some of these barriers include the limited distribution of the emergency contraceptive pill<sup>1187</sup> and deficiencies in the effective implementation of the Assistance Protocol for Victims and Survivors of Sexual Violence.<sup>1188</sup>

554. As to persons in the context of human mobility, the National Institute of Migration of Honduras reported that 290,902 persons entered the country irregularly between January 1 and August 31, 2024. Most of them were nationals from Venezuela (140,400), Cuba (47,247), Haiti (16,726), Ecuador (16,372) and Colombia (14,037).<sup>1189</sup> These figures account for a 16.3 percent increase compared to the same period in 2023, when the irregular entry of 249,972 migrants was recorded.<sup>1190</sup> The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) noted that the rising number of persons in mobility aggravates the need for assistance and protection.<sup>1191</sup> In this context, the Commission notes that the validity of the measure suspending administrative penalties for entering the country through unauthorized border points,<sup>1192</sup> which was initially adopted under Legislative Decree No. 42-2022, was extended.<sup>1193</sup>

555. Moreover, the Commission continues to monitor the return of Hondurans. As of August 31, 2024, the National Institute of Migration had received 24,392 returnees, primarily from Mexico and the United States. This marks a decrease compared to the same period in 2023, when 40,895 people returned.<sup>1194</sup> In this regard, the Commission takes note of the presentation of the 2024–2025 National Reintegration Plan.<sup>1195</sup> According to public information, this plan introduces a series of concrete measures to help returnees rebuild their economic, social and psychosocial ties, ensuring their well-being and livelihoods, while contributing to the sustainable development of their communities. 556. With regard to internal displacement, the IDMC reported that Honduras had recorded 5,100 internal displacements associated with conflict—a conservative estimate as it only includes beneficiaries of humanitarian support in some parts of the country—as well as 5,800 internal displacements caused by disasters.<sup>1197</sup> More than one year after the enactment of Law for the Prevention, Assistance and Protection of Internally Displaced Persons, the regulations outlining the guidelines and procedures for its implementation have yet to be issued.<sup>1198</sup>

557. With respect to human trafficking, the Commission welcomes the steps taken by the State, including the progress achieved in amending the Criminal Code to incorporate precise terminology related to the crime of trafficking.<sup>1199</sup> The Commission also commends the State for delivering training sessions on sexual cybercrimes and human trafficking in La Ceiba.<sup>1200</sup>

558. Regarding the rights of children and adolescents, the Commission welcomes the enactment of the law creating the National Children’s Congress in April 2024.<sup>1201</sup> Composed of 128 children, this congress is authorized to convene, engage in discussions and propose bills on issues affecting children and the general population; however, the law does not define its specific mandate or the actual impact of its deliberations.<sup>1202</sup>

559. Moreover, the Commission notes concerns raised by the CONADEH and UNICEF over the closure of several facilities of the Secretariat for Children, Adolescents and the Family following staff protests in April. These demonstrations were prompted by overdue payments, alleged unjustified dismissals and claims of workplace harassment. The interruption of services reportedly had a negative impact on the protection of the rights of children and adolescents under state guardianship, inasmuch as assistance to this population was temporarily suspended.<sup>1203</sup>

560. The Commission also notes the high number of children impacted by violence. The CONADEH recorded the violent deaths of approximately 950 children between 2020 and April 2024. Until May 2024, the CONADEH had received 93 complaints related to violations of children’s rights, including at least 22 cases of abuse, four cases of school dropout and four cases of injuries, among others.<sup>1204</sup> In addition, the CONADEH reported that more than 20 children and adolescents had disappeared between January and July.<sup>1205</sup>

561. With regard to the rights of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission welcomed the ratification of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture by Honduras and the deposit of its ratification instrument on July 23.<sup>1206</sup> The Commission also notes that the Honduran Mechanism against

Torture, along with others in the region, adopted the Declaration of San José aimed at institutional strengthening and networking and the Global Action for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Deprived of Liberty.<sup>1207</sup> Moreover, the Commission welcomes the issuance of Decree No. 40-2024, which, inter alia, establishes the Interinstitutional Committee for the Follow-up of Commitments and Recommendations on Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and provides for the registration of detainees, the training of security agents and the medical examination of detainees upon entry to detention centers.<sup>1208</sup> Similarly, the Commission appreciates the refurbishment of the National Women's Penitentiary for Social Adaptation (PNFAS) to improve detention conditions for women and their children.<sup>1209</sup>

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the CONADEH documented the deaths of 30 people in custody across various detention centers between June 23, 2023, and June 14, 2024.<sup>1210</sup> In addition, the armed forces reportedly remain involved in penitentiary operations, as the state of emergency concerning the national penitentiary system was extended and the decree appointing the Military Police for Public Order (PMOP) as the Intervening Commission of the National Penitentiary System in charge of managing detention centers remains in force.<sup>1211</sup>

563. In this regard, during the public hearing titled "Honduras: Human rights of individuals who are deprived of liberty in the context of the prison crisis," the Commission learned that the militarization of prisons had exacerbated the violations of the rights of detainees. The civil society highlighted deaths in custody, overcrowding, torture practices and risks faced by incarcerated women and their children among the main violations. The organizations also expressed their concern over the construction of a "mega prison" in an unpopulated area and a new prison in the Swan Islands. The State acknowledged the fact that it is facing a prison crisis, and it committed to building a system focused on the protection of human rights. Honduras also reported that 16 members of the 18th Street Gang had been charged for the deaths of 46 women who were detained in the PNFAS in June 2023 and that investigations to identify the state officials involved remained ongoing.<sup>1212</sup>

564. Additionally, the State informed the Commission of the measures taken to ensure dignified living conditions for the prison population. In this regard, Honduras described the phases of intervention and control, stabilization, governance, development of rehabilitation programs and expansion and/or update of the legal and regulatory framework and provided data on the institutional modernization and strengthening of the National Penitentiary Academy. Among the reported achievements, the Commission highlights a prison census that covered 95 percent of the prison population as of July 2024 and the reduction of violence as a relevant indicator.<sup>1213</sup>

565. As for the fight against torture, the Commission learned of the creation of the National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment (MNP-CONPAREV). The State reported that a new executive branch representative was sworn into the mechanism on August 20, 2024.<sup>1214</sup> Nevertheless, the Commission notes that the civil society representative has yet to be appointed, although she was elected on July 25, 2023.<sup>1215</sup>

566. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, Honduras has achieved progress in the inclusion of trans persons in the national identification system. The National Registry of Persons (RNP) announced plans to implement processes for people to rectify their official documents, in compliance with the judgment issued by the Inter-American Court in Vicky Hernández et al. v. Honduras.<sup>1216</sup> Additionally, the Secretariat for Social Development (SEDESOL) ran a diploma course on equity and human rights for people living with HIV and the LGBTI population, and developed a guide to educate and raise awareness on the rights of LGBTI persons.<sup>1217</sup>

567. However, in terms of challenges, the civil society had recorded at least 17 murders of LGBTI persons until August. The civil society has also identified high levels of violence, exclusion and social rejection in the workplace, educational institutions and family settings, which are rooted in prejudice against diverse sexual orientations or gender identities.<sup>1218</sup>

568. With respect to the rights of older persons, based on public information, the Commission has identified issues concerning the rights to community participation, social security, housing, food and nondiscrimination. The Commission welcomes the entry into force of Decree No. 34-2024, which exempts older persons from fees associated with bank services, such as the issuance of credit cards and bankbooks.<sup>1219</sup> The Commission also acknowledges the creation of the diploma course titled “Development of Capabilities to Provide Healthcare to Older Persons,” designed for public officials and offered by the Secretariat for Social Development.<sup>1220</sup>

569. As to the right to work and nondiscrimination, the Commission welcomes a law passed by the National Congress of Honduras aimed at preventing age discrimination against people over 35 of age in recruitment, selection and hiring processes, as well as in their terms of employment.<sup>1221</sup>

570. Finally, the Commission takes note of a study conducted by the Food and Nutritional Security Observatory of the National Autonomous University of Honduras (OBSAN-UNAH), which found that 44.33 percent of persons over 60 years of age in at least 15 departments of the country face a risk of malnutrition, while 7.91 percent suffer from severe malnutrition.<sup>1222</sup> The Commission also welcomes the discounts mandated by the General Directorate for Consumer Protection, which benefit older persons with 30 to 40 percent reductions on transportation tickets, restaurant meals, healthcare services, pharmacies and drugstores, general and specialized medical care, as well as on the purchase of frames and lenses for eyeglasses.<sup>1223</sup>

XXI. JAMAICA

- General considerations

gender-based violence, including amendments to its Domestic Violence Act, and to increase protection of children.

572. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes with concern the continued use of States of Emergency and Zones of Special Operations as crime suppression measures. In addition, the Commission took note of reports of human rights abuses against Haitian citizens in human mobility in Jamaica and the persistence of regulatory frameworks that criminalize consensual sexual activity between adults of the same sex.

573. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

574. With regards to democratic institutionality, the IACHR notes that, in February, the State held local government elections for 228 Electoral Divisions. Via these elections, citizens elected councilors and mayors to develop and manage infrastructure and public facilities within the divisions.<sup>1224</sup> According to the Electoral Office of Jamaica, the results indicate that the ruling Jamaica Labour Party won the majority of the seats in seven parishes, while the People's National Party won five.<sup>1225</sup> Further, the IACHR notes that in December, the government introduced in the House of Representatives the Bill to abolish the Constitutional Monarchy and transition Jamaica to a Republic. According to official information, the Bill will also clarify provisions regarding Jamaican citizenship and provide provisions for the Office of the President of Jamaica as a Republic, including qualifications to hold the office and procedure for appointment.<sup>1226</sup>

575. As it relates to human rights institutions, in its 2023 Annual Report, the Commission noted that the State was in the process of transferring the functions of the Office of the Political Ombudsman to the Electoral Commission.<sup>1227</sup> This transition was finalized through the amendment of the Political Ombudsman Act. According to official information, it is anticipated that this transfer will lead to more effective recommendations to political parties and their representatives, enhancing oversight of the political process and conduct.<sup>1228</sup> In addition, the Commission notes the renewed call by civil society for the establishment of a National Human Rights Institution to investigate claims of human rights abuses and monitor human rights violations in the State.<sup>1229</sup>

576. With respect to citizen security, according to the figures presented by the Jamaica Constabulary Force, there was a total of 842 homicides reported from January 1 to September 21, 2024, compared to 1,013 homicides reported in the same period in 2023, which represented an approximately 17% decrease.<sup>1230</sup> This represents a homicide rate of rate of 29 per 100,000 inhabitants as of September, 2024.<sup>1231</sup>

577. Additionally, the Commission notes the State's continued use of States of Emergency (SOEs) as a crime suppression strategy. In August, the State declared a SOE for the parish of Clarendon after a shooting incident in which eight persons were killed and nine injured.<sup>1232</sup> In a press release, the Commission expressed concern over Jamaica's reliance on SOEs and underscored that such measures should be exceptional and limited in scope and duration. The IACHR called on the State to address the causes and consequences of crime from a comprehensive and intersectoral perspective and to adopt prevention and response measures that guarantee respect for human rights, including gender and intersectional approaches.<sup>1233</sup> In response, the State reiterated its commitment to protect, uphold and respect the human rights of all persons in Jamaica, in accordance with its Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms.<sup>1234</sup> In December, according to public information, the State declared an SOE across the St Andrew South police division and sections of St Andrew Central due to an increase in criminal activities.<sup>1235</sup>

578. Moreover, the IACHR also takes note of the continued use of Zones of Special Operations (ZOSOs) across Jamaica. These ZOSOs have been used by the State in addition to SOEs. In December, the ZOSOs in seven communities were further extended for an additional 180 days.<sup>1236</sup> According to the State, the ZOSOs that have been extended are all in the 'community development' phase which entails the establishment of a Social Intervention Committee. This Committee is responsible for assessing and developing sustainable development plans for the community, including addressing issues relating to health, the environment, education and economic development. Additionally, the Committee recommends social interventions which may include compulsory school attendance and urban renewal initiatives.<sup>1237</sup>

579. In relation to access to justice, the Commission notes the efforts by the State to increase access to justice for persons with disabilities and children in contact and conflict with the law by partnering with civil society. According to official information, the 'Social Justice' project seeks to enshrine equity, access, participation and rights as the cornerstone of a modernized judicial system and make judicial services easier for every citizen to understand and use.<sup>1238</sup> Via this program, 56 attorneys-at-law, legal aid and justice service providers from the Ministry of Justice have completed training in Jamaican Sign Language and Deaf Culture in order to be able to better communicate and connect with members of the deaf community.<sup>1239</sup>

580. In addition, the IACHR takes note of the intention of the State to develop a legal information portal to improve public access to Jamaica's laws, educate the public about all aspects of legal information and provide a facility for the persons to express views on and query the status of any law. The portal is expected to be operational by February 2025.<sup>1240</sup>

581. Concerning the rights of children, the Commission notes that the Child Protection and Family Services Agency (CPFSA) endeavored to improve the quality of services it provides to children at risk by strengthening its workforce and working with the Ministry of Education and Youth (MOEY) to fill a number of vacant positions.<sup>1241</sup> In addition, the IACHR commends the State on receiving certification from the World Health Organization for eliminating the mother-to-child transmission of HIV and syphilis (EMTCT).<sup>1242</sup>

582. The Commission also commends the initiatives led by the MOEY to increase public awareness of children's rights, empower children with knowledge of their rights and responsibilities, and promote positive engagement and affirmation. These initiatives include the National Child Online Protection Forum on the importance of safeguarding children in digital spaces, the "Child Conversation" series with an edition for children with special needs, and the "Wellness Bench Lyme – Child Conversation" in collaboration with the Ministry of Health and Wellness.<sup>1243</sup>

583. On the other hand, civil society organizations reported that children are often moved within the childcare system in Jamaica, allegedly without proper assessments or follow-ups, and that aftercare support and placement procedures remain insufficient<sup>1244</sup>. In April, in a letter sent to the State under art. 41 of the American Convention, the Commission requested information on the delicensing of the Sunbeam Boys Home in January 2024 by the Child Protection and Family Services Agency (CPFSA) following allegations of child abuse at the facility. According to publicly available information, children from the home had to be relocated to other residential childcare units, placed in foster care, or, in some cases, returned to their families<sup>1245</sup>. In this context, the IACHR requested details on the measures taken to support the affected children and the criteria guiding decisions on their placement within the residential care system. However, the Commission did not receive a response from the State.

584. The Commission also takes note of UNICEF's call to update the National Plan of Action for an Integrated Response to Children and Violence and to allocate the necessary funding with the aim of reinforcing coordination mechanisms and strengthening programs and services designed to protect children from violence.<sup>1246</sup>

585. Regarding the rights of women, the Commission notes that the amendments to the Domestic Violence Act came into force in January 2024, thereby expanding the categories of persons who can apply for a protection order and establishing the possibility of non-compliance with a fine of up to 1 million Jamaican dollars and imprisonment for up to one year.<sup>1247</sup> However, the IACHR notes that civil society organizations have highlighted the limited scope of the reforms, as they focus on physical violence and disregard other forms of violence.<sup>1248</sup>

586. Moreover, the Commission highlights the workshop given to first responders to address gender-based violence in emergency situations,<sup>1249</sup> and the ongoing review and update of the National Policy for Gender Equality of 2011.<sup>1250</sup> Finally, the Commission reiterates its concern over the persistence of the criminalization of abortion in all cases with penalties that include life imprisonment.<sup>1251</sup>

587. With respect to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, according to official information, the State facilitated the move of approximately 50 Haitian children, including children with disabilities, from an orphanage in Haiti under siege from organized criminal groups, to a private orphanage in Jamaica for their care and welfare.<sup>1252</sup> However, the State continued to deport Haitian migrants allegedly without proper assessment of international protection needs. According to public information, in October 17 Haitian nationals were deported.<sup>1253</sup>

588. Moreover, via a public hearing held during its 191st Period of Sessions, the IACHR received information from civil society organizations on the human rights abuses to which Haitians in human mobility in Jamaica were allegedly subjected, including instances of alleged torture, arbitrary detention, separation of families, detention of children and collective expulsions.<sup>1254</sup> During the hearing, the State highlighted the operational and logistical challenges it faced as a result of the irregular movement of Haitians to Jamaica. In this context, the IACHR called for the establishment of a regulatory framework to protect and regularize the status of Haitians in Jamaica and the region.<sup>1255</sup>

589. Regarding human trafficking, the Commission takes note of the commitment expressed by the State regarding the Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection to reduce the incidence of irregular migration and combat human trafficking. Likewise, the Commission welcomes actions led by the Ministry of National Security to protect children from child trafficking, including: i) the creation of friendly spaces to assist child victims of trafficking; ii) the institutionalization of 24-hour hotlines; iii) the establishment of child protection agencies with family services; and iv) the establishment of a national referral mechanism to interview child victims and witnesses with a friendly approach to avoid the revictimization of child victims.<sup>1256</sup> The Commission also notes the ongoing implementation of the National Referral Mechanism Framework for interviewing child human trafficking victims and witnesses, which would provide a child-friendly approach to interviewing child victims and witnesses of human trafficking to avoid retraumatizing such individuals.<sup>1257</sup>

590. Regarding the rights of people of African descent and against racial discrimination, the Commission notes that the Court of Appeal of Jamaica ruled that a school's policy on the wearing of dreadlock hairstyles violated a female child's constitutional rights when she was denied access to the school after her family refused to trim her dreadlocked hair. The Court ruled that the policy violated her constitutional rights to freedom of expression and to equitable treatment by a public authority. In relation to the general protection of children's rights, the Court of Appeal held that the formalization of rules and exemptions should lie with the executive and would not be given in the judgment.<sup>1258</sup>

591. In relation to the rights of LGBTI persons, the Jamaican Ministry of Health has reportedly suspended the chat and artificial intelligence service "Yute Chatz." This program was intended to provide information to people over 13 years of age on health issues, including sexual and reproductive health. The suspension occurred following allegations that the program promoted values considered contrary to Jamaican "morality," by stating that gender is a personal choice and not a biological reality, and by directing users to LGBTI organizations as a source of information.<sup>1259</sup> This context reflects the persistence of regulatory frameworks that criminalize consensual sexual activity between adults of the same sex.

592. On the matter of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission values the opening, in September, of an infant nursery for incarcerated pregnant mothers at the South Camp Adult Correctional Centre in Kingston. According to official information, the nursery has three rooms and is equipped with cribs, feeding chairs, toys, a changing table, and washing areas.<sup>1260</sup> Moreover, the IACHR welcomes the State's efforts in September to repurpose a newly refurbished hostel into a temporary housing facility for individuals who are eligible for parole. Specifically, the facility functions as temporary housing where parolees who do not have accommodation after being released from detention can reside.<sup>1261</sup>

593. The IACHR also values the continued implementation of an educational rehabilitation programme during 2024, which is a result of the partnership established in January 2020 among the State, the University of the Commonwealth Caribbean, and civil society.<sup>1262</sup> With regard to inmates suffering from mental illnesses, according to civil society, the current system does not provide adequate care and protection as a result of the shortage of facilities for long-term treatment and housing.<sup>1263</sup>

594. Regarding the death penalty, the IACHR notes that there has been no progress with removing this punishment from the statutory books. On the other hand, no person has been sentenced to death since the last execution in 1988, and as of May 23, 2023, no one is currently on death roll.<sup>1264</sup>

XXII. MEXICO

- General considerations

595. As regards the advances, the IACHR welcomed the deep democratic vocation of the Mexican people and celebrated the election of the first woman as President. Including several measures in the Constitution is a positive development; these include measures related to pensions, minimum wage, housing, improved conditions for workers, and differentiated protections for persons with disabilities and older persons, as well as the constitutional reform on equality as between men and women and on indigenous and afrodescendants, and the reduction in the percentage of the population living in multidimensional poverty. Also viewed in a positive light is the registry of persons held in immigration detention, which was ordered by the Supreme Court of Justice. The drop in crime is a gain, as are the actions to strengthen the Mechanism of Protection for Human Rights Defenders and Journalists.

596. As regards the challenges, special mention can be made of tensions around the judicial reform, and the concern over guarantees of the independence and suitability of judicial officers. Constitutional reforms for the constitutional militarization of the National Guard and the shutting down of the National Institute on Transparency, Access to Public Information, and Protection of Personal Data impact Mexico's human rights obligations. Violence continues against persons and groups in vulnerable situations, such as women, human rights defenders, journalists, trans women, persons engaged in searching for the disappeared and people in mobility. In addition, there were elevated levels of violence against candidates in the electoral context. The failure to issue visitor cards on humanitarian grounds, which aggravates the risk of violence against migrants, is of concern. Figures from 2024 indicate that there were 120,000 persons disappeared in Mexico, and 72,000 unidentified corpses in the custody of the State.

- Specific issues

598. In terms of the institutional framework for human rights the State affirmed that it has been working on implementing the 2020-2024 National Human Rights Program (PNDH). It indicated that more than 90% of the 188 specific actions of the PNDH have seen substantive progress and that implementation is monitored through a digital platform.<sup>1266</sup>

599. The IACHR welcomes the reforms that incorporate into the Constitution a non-contributory pension for persons with a permanent disability who are under 65 years of age, the right to rehabilitation and enablement of persons living with a permanent disability (with priority for persons under 18 years of age), and the right to a universal non-contributory pension for all persons 65 and over. In addition, these reforms establish a safe, fair, and permanent workday for peasant farmers, direct economic support and support in the form of free fertilizer for small-scale agricultural producers and fisherpersons, and access to credit or affordable rental housing for workers.<sup>1267</sup>

600. The Commission also took note of the concerns around a possible weakening of the National Commission on Human Rights (CNDH) related to allegations of irregularities in the process whereby the Senate selects its chairperson;<sup>1268</sup> reports that complaints have been dismissed without an adequate investigation, smear campaigns against civil society organizations, journalists, and human rights defenders, as well as the disintegration of its Advisory Council as a means of protesting how the institution is being managed.<sup>1269</sup>

601. Regarding the democratic institutional framework, the State explained that it carried out the largest election in history, in which 20,000 public officials were elected at the federal and state levels. Among the elected authorities, the election of Dr. Claudia Sheinbaum, the first woman president of Mexico, stood out.<sup>1270</sup> The IACHR congratulated the Mexican people for its profound democratic vocation and celebrated the election of the first woman president in Mexico's history.<sup>1271</sup>

602. Public information emerged about serious acts of violence against the lives and integrity of candidates and pre-candidates; according to some counts, 37 were killed, of a total of 320 attacks identified.<sup>1272</sup> Pursuant to a request for information as per Article 41 of the American Convention concerning such incidents, the State reported that establishment of the Inter-institutional Roundtable for Security for the 2023-2024

<sup>1266</sup> In addition, in the period covered it noted that the PNDH organized two editions of the course "Legislative practice from a human rights perspective" in 14 state legislatures for 150 officials; convened two sessions of the "National Agenda for Coordination on Human Rights" (February and July); and gave 27 training courses and seven sessions of the course Constitutional Principles to 12,395 public servants from the three levels of government on issues such as the right to protest, the right to freedom of expression, and gender violence. Federal Elections, and the specific Protocol for addressing requests for security schemes from candidates and political parties, related to the security situation in various states.<sup>1273</sup> The Commission recognized Mexico's efforts to prevent and respond to these acts of violence, regretted the loss of human life in the electoral context, and urged the Mexican authorities to strengthen the measures necessary for ensuring the security of candidates and investigating the incidents, respecting due process guarantees.<sup>1274</sup> According to public information reported in the press, after the election recently-elected authorities were assassinated.<sup>1275</sup>

603. The Commission also followed up on the constitutional reform process in Mexico, which began February 5, 2024 with the forwarding by the Executive branch of a package of 20 constitutional and statutory reforms to Congress for legislative consideration.<sup>1276</sup> In addition, two reforms were introduced and recently approved after the initial package: one insulating constitutional reforms from judicial challenge;<sup>1277</sup> and another on issues related to gender equality.<sup>1278</sup>

604. In light of the profound legal and political impact of the constitutional reforms, they are directly related to the democratic institutional framework of the State. The State indicated that the constitutional reform process in Mexico is structured such that it guarantees the legality and legitimacy of the reforms; and that approval in the Senate requires a supermajority which no political force has acting alone, which would make clear the need to prioritize dialogue in order to actually adopt the reform.<sup>1279</sup> Moreover, the State reported that the constitutional reform process is the result of the free exercise of political participation by the citizens and their approval by means of freely-elected representatives, who constitute supermajorities in both chambers of the Mexican Congress and in most of the legislatures of the states of the federation, which reflects a political consensus on a reform of the Constitution of Mexico. The State also explained that the new constitutional framework is the result of social participation in the exercise of political rights, and, consequently, is compatible with the American Convention on Human Rights (ACHR).<sup>1280</sup> Pursuant to Article 41 of the ACHR, the Commission reiterated to Mexico the importance of the constitutional reform processes being conducted in a manner consistent with the State's human rights obligations.<sup>1281</sup>

605. As regards the constitutional reform on judicial matters, the Commission requested information on the adoption of the reform, based on Article 41 of the ACHR;<sup>1282</sup> issued a press release highlighting the concerns that were expressed by experts, civil society organizations, international human rights bodies, and associations of judicial officers;<sup>1283</sup> and convened a public hearing on the matter.<sup>1284</sup>

606. The Commission values the participation of and information provided by Mexico throughout the year.<sup>1285</sup> The Commission observes that the constitutional reform entails a fundamental transformation of one of the branches of government. The scope of the judicial reform, as regards the process of designating justices and judges by popular vote; terminating the designations of almost 1,700 judicial officers; establishing the Judicial Disciplinary Tribunal (Tribunal de Disciplina Judicial) and the Organ of the Judicial Administration (Órgano de Administración Judicial); adopting measures to keep confidential the identities of judicial officers; and other procedural changes related to time frames and amparo actions are far-reaching. All these measures have been the subject of grave concern by several stakeholders who have called into question, in particular, popular election as a method for selecting suitable and independent judicial authorities; the possible negative impact on the guarantee of tenure; and the labor rights of the outgoing judicial authorities.<sup>1286</sup> Along these lines, the relationship between the possible election of unsuitable judicial authorities and the right of access to justice or the victims of serious human rights violations was also brought to the attention of the Commission. Some of these topics were covered in a public statement by the IACHR.<sup>1287</sup>

607. The State noted that the judicial reform was carried out in keeping with adequate constitutional procedures and in a participatory manner. It also indicated that in its implementation the reform will respect the labor rights of the judicial personnel who have been dismissed and that it will guarantee the election of suitable persons through the selection committees. Regarding the foregoing, in a public hearing convened by the IACHR on the matter the State acknowledged not having an assessment that had determined a model for the reconfiguration of its courts through the popular vote.<sup>1288</sup>

608. The IACHR has learned of the concerns and feelings of uncertainty of judicial personnel with respect to the judicial reform, in particular with respect to the positions that have been terminated. Along these lines, the Commission was also informed that the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic (FGR: Fiscalía General de la República) had initiated investigations of judges who granted amparo actions brought against the judicial reform; they were being investigated for the offense of abuse of authority.<sup>1289</sup>

609. Regarding the INAI, the Commission observes that in November 2024 the constitutional reform was adopted that eliminates the textual reference to an autonomous and specialized agency responsible for guaranteeing implementation of the right of access to public information and the protection of personal data.<sup>1290</sup> Accordingly, human rights organizations indicated that this constitutional reform eliminated a fundamental pillar for the transparency of government and that constituted a major setback in transparency and access to information.<sup>1291</sup>

610. As regards access to justice and judicial independence, in addition to what was reported, the State identified three technological tools for improving the management and transparency of judicial entities.<sup>1292</sup> The State also communicated advances in consolidating the criminal justice system in the 32 states of the federation, highlighting 16 working groups with judicial and prison authorities from 23 states to improve the system, 11 virtual working groups with judicial officers in five states, and the certification of 382 experts in key functions of the criminal justice process from August 2022 to June 2024.<sup>1293</sup>

611. The IACHR observes that impunity continues to constitute a serious problem in Mexico. México Evalúa reports that in 2023 the impunity rate for crimes was 93.6%; the crimes with the highest impunity were forced disappearance (99.5%), extortion (98.4%), fraud (97.2%), and intentional homicide (96.8%).<sup>1294</sup> According to data from the INEGI from 2024, in 2023 the prosecutors' offices across Mexico opened approximately 2,226,000 investigations, yet in only 9.2% were criminal prosecutions brought; the rest were archived.<sup>1295</sup>

612. In addition, in the framework of the regional public hearing on the situation of judicial independence in the Americas, Mexican organizations reported threats to judicial independence including attacks on judicial officers after issuing judgments unfavorable to certain state policies, among which reference was made to the use of impeachment proceedings (juicios políticos).<sup>1296</sup> In response to a request for information the State explained that impeachment proceedings in its domestic legislation apply in cases of human rights violations, attacks on the democratic institutions, and serious breaches of the Constitution and the laws.<sup>1297</sup> For its part, the Fundación para la Justicia y el Estado de Derecho and México Evalúa reported that from January 1, 2023 to October 11, 2024, 449 alleged "attacks" against judicial officers by different authorities from other branches of government.<sup>1298</sup>

613. As regards citizen security the State reported that it has a National Strategy for Public Security that is carried out through the Security Cabinet presided over by the principal of the Federal Executive, and which has succeeded in installing 32 State Roundtables and 266 Regional Roundtables for Peace and Security. Mexico indicated that to date, the National Guard has 133,102 members deployed throughout the national territory. According to the information provided, the average daily number of victims of intentional homicide in 2024 fell 18% compared to the average for 2018.<sup>1299</sup> In addition, according to the comparative data provided covering December 2018 and June 2024, kidnapping declined 62.9%, while theft of hydrocarbons declined 94.2%; total robberies declined 34.8%; and robbery of vehicles decreased 50.3%.<sup>1300</sup>

614. A constitutional amendment was adopted establishing that the National Guard is a public, professional, and permanent security force made up of military personnel with police training and that it is under the Ministry of National Defense to carry out the National Public Security Strategy.<sup>1301</sup> The militarization of citizen security has been a historic concern of the inter-American system with respect to Mexico.<sup>1302</sup> Accordingly, this reform may not be consistent with the recommendations and rulings of international human rights bodies on the need to demilitarize citizen security in Mexico.<sup>1303</sup>

615. The acts of violence in the state of Sinaloa due to confrontations between organized crime organizations are of concern. The media have reported that more than 100 days of continuing violence took the lives of more than 600 persons.<sup>1304</sup>

616. As regards torture, Mexico reported that it has been implementing the National Strategy against Torture for preventing torture and assisting torture victims in 18 offices and administrative units of the federal public administration and the 32 states. In addition, it designed and put in place the National Program for Training on Torture 2024-2025 and since June 2024 has been disseminating the National Campaign against Torture.

617. Regarding disappearances the State reported that since the implementation of the so-called “National Strategy for the massive search for persons disappeared and not located in Mexico,” 20,193 disappeared persons were found: 4,656 were found in house-to-house visits; 4,629 due to reports they had died; 10,717 were reported by the local authorities as already located; and 191 persons who were on record as disappeared were found in prisons. As regards identifying disappeared persons, 317 persons were identified genetically, using data bases of the INE and the Forensic Medical Service (Servicio Médico Forense). In addition, 15 brigades went out to take samples from 3,749 families, resulting in 22 genetic matches, among other findings.<sup>1305</sup>

618. The Commission notes that the organizations Quinto Elemento Lab and A dónde Van Los Desaparecidos indicated that to date there are at least 72,100 unidentified bodies under the State’s custody in the country’s morgues,<sup>1306</sup> which represents an increase of almost 20,000 corpses with respect to the last report, in 2021, by the Movimiento Por Nuestros Desaparecidos México.<sup>1307</sup>

619. In addition, the IACHR observes that in March 2024 a census was carried out that reduced by nearly 11,000 the number of names in the National Registry of Persons Disappeared and Not Located (RNPDNO), as it was understood that they had been located.<sup>1308</sup> In this regard, the Commission takes note of the concerns of civil society organizations regarding the lack of transparency in the census methodology, the absence of the central role of victims’ family members in applying the census, and the alleged irregular modification of the records of the RNPDNO.<sup>1309</sup> The State has highlighted that the so-called “census” is not “disappearing the disappeared” and that no record is erased.<sup>1310</sup> In addition, information was received on challenges in the forensic identification of disappeared persons. It is noteworthy that the Extraordinary Forensic Identification Mechanism has been shut down,<sup>1311</sup> as is the reduction of expert personnel and the lack of an adequate budget for the operation of the National Center for Human Identification.<sup>1312</sup>

620. In a public hearing the Commission received information from searchers who were calling for better security measures during the search days, their recognition as human rights defenders, and an end to the acts of harassment and attacks directed against them. The Commission values the fact that the State has recognized that searching is a responsibility of the State and a right of the families; and that it will no longer allow the families to search alone. In 2024, the Fundación para la Justicia reported the assassinations of Noé Sandoval (February 13) and Angelita Meraz (February 8), and the disappearance of Lorenza Cano (January 15), all of them persons engaged in searching.<sup>1313</sup>

621. As regards indigenous peoples and Afro-Mexican communities, the Commission welcomes the creation of the National Council of Indigenous Peoples as an entity for the participation of these peoples and the Executive branch in the design and implementation of public policies.<sup>1314</sup> It also values the constitutional recognition of indigenous and Afro-Mexican peoples as subjects of public law, with their own juridical personality and property, after the reform of Article 2 of the Constitution.<sup>1315</sup> Nonetheless, the IACHR takes note that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) of the United Nations expressed its concern that the reform did not adequately reflect the results of the prior consultation, especially in relation to the right of indigenous peoples to self-determination.<sup>1316</sup>

622. As regards the protection of women's human rights, the IACHR highlights the creation of the Ministry of Women's Affairs (Secretaría de las Mujeres)<sup>1317</sup> and the constitutional reform on women's substantive equality, gender perspective, and women's right to a life free from violence.<sup>1318</sup> The IACHR also highlights the recognition of responsibility and public apology of the State for the disappearance and femicides of women and girls in Ciudad Juárez from 1995 to 2003.<sup>1319</sup>

623. Similarly, the IACHR values the federal and state measures to prevent and punish violence, as well as to protect victims, such as the opening of new Women's Justice Centers,<sup>1320</sup> support for 75 shelters nationwide,<sup>1321</sup> and Operation Violeta in municipalities that have a Gender Violence Warning.<sup>1322</sup> In addition, it highlights the criminal law reforms to punish aiding and abetting femicide,<sup>1323</sup> withdrawing patria potestas from fathers convicted of this crime, and preventing and punishing vicarious violence.<sup>1324</sup>

624. Despite these efforts, the IACHR observes that violence against women continues to be alarming. From January to September 2024 a total of 598 femicides were reported, along with 449 cases of human trafficking of women, 16,398 reports of rape, and 214,572 complaints of family violence; and 248,854 emergency calls related to incidents involving violence against women.<sup>1325</sup> In addition, the demand for services at shelters climbed 75.6% from January to July 2024.<sup>1326</sup>

625. In the area of sexual and reproductive rights, abortion was decriminalized in four other states<sup>1327</sup> and judicial decisions were adopted that expand protection for these rights, including access to abortion for women with disabilities, recognizing their right to reproductive autonomy.<sup>1328</sup> In Aguascalientes a reform was adopted that reduced the time limit for abortions from 12 to six weeks.<sup>1329</sup>

626. With respect to the rights of children and adolescents, the Guidelines and Actions for Healthy Living were presented, focused on guaranteeing adequate food and nutrition for children and adolescents in schools.<sup>1330</sup> The IACHR also takes note of the 0.3% increase in crimes against this population from January to September 2024, compared to the same period in 2023, especially in corruption of minors, extortion, femicide, homicide, abduction, and trafficking of minors.<sup>1331</sup>

627. As regards persons deprived of liberty, the IACHR values state efforts to guarantee the vote for persons held in pretrial detention. In the 2024 general elections, 86% of this group voted in 214 prison establishments nationwide, except in Yucatán.<sup>1332</sup> In addition, though the number of persons subject to pretrial detention has declined, it is worrisome that it continues to be used for more than 35% of all persons facing criminal charges.<sup>1333</sup>

628. The IACHR received information on reports of poor conditions of detention due to the lack of resources, self-government, the lack of medicines, and the poor treatment accorded to the persons detained.<sup>1334</sup> In a public hearing before the IACHR, organizations reported on seven suicide attempts in February 2024, and the occurrence of 13 suicides in the last three years of women deprived of liberty at CEFERESO No. 16, attributable to problems accessing rights, including shortcomings in physical and mental health care. The State regretted the deaths and highlighted the measures adopted to prevent future incidents and investigate the deaths.<sup>1335</sup> In addition, the Commission observes with concern acts of violence in 2024 that resulted in several violations of the rights to life and integrity of both persons detained and prison personnel.<sup>1336</sup>

629. With respect to LGBTI persons, in June legislative reforms were adopted to prohibit and punish efforts to modify sexual orientations and non-normative gender identities and expressions.<sup>1337</sup> In addition, Baja California Sur passed the Law on Trans Childhoods (Ley de Infancias Trans), making it possible to recognize gender identity and change one's name,<sup>1338</sup> whereas Yucatán adopted a similar initiative.<sup>1339</sup> In Hidalgo, the State Electoral Institute demanded the inclusion of persons of sexual diversity on lists of candidates for elective office,<sup>1340</sup> and Guanajuato adopted the Law on Sexual and Gender Diversity, which established an Office of Sexual Diversity.<sup>1341</sup> Also, in Nayarit and Mexico City the crime of trans-femicide was codified.<sup>1342</sup> The IACHR highlights the gains in the case-law when it comes to the recognition of trans-femicide by the Supreme Court<sup>1343</sup> and the obligation to legislate recognizing the right to gender identity in Guanajuato.<sup>1344</sup>

630. In the course of the year there were at least 36 assassinations of trans women.<sup>1345</sup> In addition, in the context of the electoral processes three assassinations of LGBTI candidates were reported, in addition to threats and acts of intimidation.<sup>1346</sup> A civil society observatory recorded 35 cases of LGBTI persons disappeared as of December 2024.<sup>1347</sup>

631. As for older persons the State reported gains consolidating the National Care System to guarantee accessible and quality services, sufficient in quantity, for older persons through information systems, research, and support for the bill to establish the system. In addition, as reported, the Pension Program for the Well-being of Older Adults delivered economic pensions to 12,343,472 persons, of whom 1,070,549 reside in Indigenous or Afro-Mexican municipalities or localities.<sup>1348</sup>

632. Regarding the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, official data show that from January to August 2024, 925,085 foreigners with irregular immigration status were identified and brought before the authorities;<sup>1349</sup> 11.72% were children and adolescents.<sup>1350</sup> That figure represents an increase of 131.85% in relation to the same period in 2023.<sup>1351</sup> The Commission welcomes the decision of the Supreme Court that orders that a public registry be created of migrants in detention.<sup>1352</sup>

633. In the area of asylum and complementary protection, figures from the Mexican Commission for Refugee Aid (COMAR: Comisión Mexicana de Ayuda a Refugiados) indicate that from January to October 2024, a total of 66,179 persons applied for asylum in Mexico, which represents a diminution of 48.21% compared to the same period in 2023, when 127,796 applications were filed.<sup>1353</sup> And on top of that, official data show that by late October 2024, 3,457 visitor cards on humanitarian grounds (Tarjetas de Visitante por Razones Humanitarias, hereinafter TVRHs) had been issued,<sup>1354</sup> a steep decline of 97.32% compared to the same period in 2023, when 129,212 such cards were issued.<sup>1355</sup>

634. In response to reports from civil society that the National Migration Institute (INM: Instituto Nacional de Migración) had suspended the delivery of the TVRHs the IACHR requested information from the State pursuant to Article 41 of the ACHR.<sup>1356</sup> The State explained that the asylum system is saturated by the “inadequate use of the TVRHs,”<sup>1357</sup> and identified a high percentage of requests that were abandoned. The State indicated that the improvement in the procedures has been reflected in the increased rate of recognition. According to the data provided by the State, in 2023 the rate of recognition of refugee status was 69%, and the rate of complementary protection was 5%; whereas as of mid-year 2024 the rate of recognition of requests for asylum rose to 73%, and for complementary protection to 7%.<sup>1358</sup>

635. As regards internal displacement, data from the Internal Displacement Monitoring Centre (IDMC) indicate that Mexico recorded 11,000 displacements associated with conflicts and violence in 2023, 20% more than in 2022. Specifically, the IDMC notes that Chiapas was the state hardest hit by confrontations between the Jalisco Nueva Generación Cartel and the Sinaloa Cartel. In this regard, at its 190th period of sessions the Commission held a public hearing on the worsening situation of extreme violence and insecurity in the state of Chiapas.<sup>1359</sup> In addition, it has followed up with a request for information sent to the State.<sup>1360</sup>

636. As regards human rights defenders, as of August 2024, the State reported that the Mechanism of Protection for Human Rights Defenders and Journalists was working with 1,994 persons, 1,320 of whom were human rights defenders (724 women and 596 men). In addition, it noted it had tripled the investment in its budget and increased personnel from 42 to 72 staff. It also highlighted its focus on the internal

637. Civil society organizations told the Commission that both the budget allocated and the number of staff for the mechanism are still insufficient and unsustainable in relation to the number of beneficiaries, which has also increased.<sup>1362</sup> Reports have also been received about the lack of coordination between the federal government and the state or municipal governments in charge of providing protection to beneficiaries of the mechanism.<sup>1363</sup>

638. Figures from UN Human Rights indicate that at least seven human rights defenders were assassinated from January to October 2024.<sup>1364</sup> In October 2024, the IACHR condemned the murder of priest Marcelo Pérez Pérez, a human rights defender and beneficiary of precautionary measures issued by the IACHR.<sup>1365</sup> In addition, the Commission has learned of the disappearance, in the state of Oaxaca, of human rights defender Sandra Domínguez on October 4, 2024.<sup>1366</sup> In terms of criminalization of their work, the UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders identified at least nine cases of indigenous human rights defenders said to have been convicted in judicial proceedings.<sup>1367</sup>

639. The Commission takes note that in February the State began to implement the national and comprehensive public policy on human trafficking with a human rights focus.<sup>1368</sup>

640. As for processes around memory, truth, and justice, the IACHR welcomes the reform to include the right to memory in the General Law on Disappearance, as the State reported<sup>1369</sup> The State also reported on designating as a memory site the basement of the building that served as the headquarters of the now-dismantled Federal Security Directorate (Dirección Federal de Seguridad), where torture and other serious human rights violations were committed from 1960 to 1990.<sup>1370</sup> The Supreme Court determined that applying legal rules on prescription, atypicality, and non-retroactivity to the investigation of crimes against humanity committed during the “dirty war” violates the rights to truth and access to justice.<sup>1371</sup> Finally, civil society organizations delivered the final report of the Mechanism for Historical Clarification of the Commission for Access to the Truth and Promoting Justice for Serious Human Rights Violations (MEHV) in two parts: On June 25, 2024 a collection was presented entitled “Fue el Estado (1965-1990)” (“It was the State (1965-1990)”), and on July 11, 2024, the Mechanism distributed the report “Verdades innegables. Por un México sin impunidad” (“Undeniable Truths: For a Mexico without Impunity”). These reports document serious human rights violations, the factors that determined the persistence of these practices, and the barriers faced when it comes to accessing information from the Armed Forces and other security agencies. The second part of the report was presented on October 10, 2024, after the conclusion of the mandate of the MEHV. 641. Finally, Mexico presented abundant information on its policy in respect of economic, social, and cultural rights and different social programs that have diminished unemployment and increased salaries; the increase in the number of persons affiliated with the social security system; the implementation of nutrition plans for children; and the expansion of the offer of housing subsidies, among other policies to provide direct attention in health and education. It emphasized that multidimensional poverty fell from 41.9% to 36.3%; and that unmet needs in the areas of social security, food, and access to income also diminished. Extreme poverty dropped from 18.6% to 13.5%, and poverty fell among older adults, persons with disabilities, and children, and in rural areas.<sup>1372</sup>

XXIII. PANAMÁ

- General considerations

642. In terms of progress, the Commission highlights the approval of gender-related measures, such as the adoption of criminal law reforms to punish sexual violence in the digital sphere, the National Plan against Sexual Exploitation and protocols to prevent and address gender-based violence, including political violence and violence against women with disabilities. Also, the Commission underscores the measures undertaken by the State for the care of children, such as the expansion of the capacity of Comprehensive Early Childhood Care Centers and the implementation of a protocol for the identification and care of children and adolescents who are unaccompanied or separated from their families in contexts of human mobility.

643. As it relates to challenges, the Commission notes difficulties in the care of persons in the context of human mobility during their transit through the Colombian-Panamanian jungle, underscoring the lack of detailed information on this situation and highlights the need to establish regional care mechanisms. The Commission also identifies challenges related to free, prior and informed consultation processes with indigenous peoples regarding business ventures. In addition, it received reports on attacks against the LGBTI population and on stigmatizing speech targeted at this group during the electoral period.

644. On November 15, 2024, the State of Panama submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>1373</sup>

- Specific issues

645. With regard to democratic institutionality, the Commission notes that, on May 5, 2024, general elections were held in Panama to vote for the new president of the Republic, as well as for members of the National Assembly, mayors, corregimiento (district) representatives and representatives to the Central American Parliament.<sup>1374</sup> In this regard, Panama reported on various measures implemented to promote dissemination, awareness-raising, transparency, access to information, citizen training, international cooperation and supervision in relation to the electoral process.<sup>1375</sup> The Commission notes that, according to the OAS Electoral Observation Mission, the elections took place without major incidents, with a high turnout that amounted to an average of 78 percent of the voter roll. It also underscores the high levels of women

646. As for human rights institutions, the Commission notes that the Office of the Ombudsperson of Panama submitted a bill to the National Assembly to amend Law No. 7 of February 5, 1997, under which the Office of the Ombudsperson was first created. The purpose of the bill is to strengthen its legal framework in line with international human rights standards and the United Nations Paris Principles.<sup>1378</sup> Among the suggested amendments, the bill seeks to promote greater participation of the civil society in the process to select the Ombudsperson, to create a Deputy Office of the Ombudsperson for Children and Adolescents, to establish that the Ombudsperson's career be based on merit and to grant them the power to intervene as amicus curiae in human rights proceedings of collective importance.<sup>1379</sup>

647. In terms of citizen security, the Commission notes that, according to figures from the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic of Panama, between January 1 and October 31, 2024, 501 homicide victims were preliminarily recorded nationwide, which constitutes an increase by 70 homicides compared to the same period in 2023.<sup>1380</sup> In October 2024, the executive branch announced the implementation of Plan Panama 3.0 with the purpose of combating gangs and organized crime in the country, which provides for the deployment of over 1,000 police agents and the purchase of 100 vehicles and 50 motorcycles for police patrols.<sup>1381</sup> According to information in the public domain, during the first 18 days of implementation of this strategy, a total of 2,907 persons were detained, having been arrested either by court orders, in flagrante delicto or over administrative offenses.<sup>1382</sup>

648. Regarding access to justice and judicial independence, Panama reported a series of training measures on access to justice for women victims of gender-based violence, with a focus on indigenous women and women in the context of human mobility; on human rights and access to justice for the Afro-descendant population; and on the prevention and prosecution of crimes of corruption.<sup>1383</sup> The State added that it is currently implementing the Certificate Program for Prosecutors and Ombudspersons to hone their technical, ethical and professional skills.<sup>1384</sup> Moreover, it indicated that the subregional agencies of the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic in Canaán, Membrillo and Bajo Chiquito, in the province of Darién, are open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, to assist people in the context of human mobility.<sup>1385</sup>

649. With respect to persons deprived of liberty, the Commission takes note of the building of a new women's detention center in Las Garzas, which will have a capacity for 498 women inmates. According to official information, it will comply with international standards and will guarantee better detention conditions. The Ministry of the Interior reported that the new center will comprise several spaces, including the following: homes; a classification sector; an administrative area; sectors for general, family and intimate visits; a clinic; an auditorium; workshop areas; a roofed court; a school; guard dormitories; a kitchen; a kiosk; and a laundry.<sup>1386</sup>

650. In relation to the rights of women, the Commission welcomes the measures undertaken to improve the way in which the State prevents, addresses and punishes sexual violence. In terms of legislation, it highlights the passage of criminal law reforms to punish sexual violence in the digital sphere, including practices such as sexual extortion and grooming,<sup>1387</sup> and the draft criminal law amendments to allow early depositions through the submission of evidence of sex crimes in advance.<sup>1388</sup> At the institutional level, the Commission welcomes the inauguration of a Gesell chamber at the Protection and Care Unit for Victims and Witnesses (UPAVIT) in the province of Darién<sup>1389</sup> and the approval of the 2024–2028 National Plan against Sexual Exploitation.<sup>1390</sup> In addition, note was taken of the adoption of various protocols to prevent and address gender-based violence,<sup>1391</sup> including political violence, and to provide adequate care for women with disabilities who are survivors of violence.<sup>1392</sup>

651. Similarly, the efforts of the State of Panama to promote gender equality in different areas are also appreciated. Among these, the Commission highlights the passage of the law that institutionalizes the National Care System, thus establishing the right to receive and provide care under equal conditions;<sup>1393</sup> the updating of the 2024–2034 Public Policy on Equal Opportunities for Women;<sup>1394</sup> and the actions to promote women's political participation through campaigns,<sup>1395</sup> bulletins and training courses on women's political rights.<sup>1396</sup>

652. In the area of sexual and reproductive rights, the Commission highlights the creation of the Casa Materna (Home for mothers) in Metetí-Darién, which seeks to contribute to safe childbirth and to reduce maternal and infant mortality.<sup>1397</sup> However, the Commission also takes note of the civil society's request that free menstrual products be available in public institutions and comprehensive menstrual education be incorporated into the curricula.<sup>1398</sup> In addition, the rates of violence against women reported by the Public Prosecutor's Office are of concern to the Commission. Between January and October 2024, a total of 17 femicides, two attempted femicides, 23 violent deaths of women, 13,225 complaints of family or intimate partner violence and 5,185 cases of sexual violence were recorded.<sup>1399</sup> Also, women, girls and adolescents in a situation of human mobility are still at a high risk of suffering violence and sexual exploitation.<sup>1400</sup>

653. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, Panama faces challenges in terms of inclusion. In March, civil society organizations called for the adoption of an ethical pact to avoid hate campaigns against LGBTI persons in the context of the general elections.<sup>1401</sup> However, research led by the civil society pointed to widespread stigmatizing or offensive speech on social media against LGBTI persons during this period.<sup>1402</sup>

654. Panama also faces challenges regarding the exclusion of the gender perspective in educational programs. In 2024, several congresspersons suggested eliminating content on sexual and gender diversity from the curricula, arguing that it contradicts the traditional values of society. This initiative, which was criticized by civil society organizations, might serve as justification for acts of discrimination and violence against LGBTI persons and may limit access to inclusive education.<sup>1403</sup> At least five gay men and two trans women were murdered in 2024, crimes allegedly motivated by prejudice towards the victims' sexual orientation.<sup>1404</sup>

655. As to the rights of indigenous peoples, the Commission welcomes the fact that the State conducted a series of training sessions and workshops on the Protocol on Access to Justice for Women Victims of Gender-Based Violence, with a particular focus on indigenous women.<sup>1405</sup> According to reports, the State transferred Guna families from the island of Gardi Sugdub to the continent, due to the overcrowding they faced in their territory.<sup>1406</sup> Moreover, the Commission notes with concern the reports of lack of information and the absence of processes of free, prior and informed consultation on the development of business ventures that affect indigenous communities, thus causing an impact on their lives, health and the environment.<sup>1407</sup>

656. With respect to the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the State of Panama reported that it has taken measures and designed public policies to promote equity and the inclusion of Afro-descendants. It also underscored the progress made by the National Development Secretariat for Afro-Panamanians (SENADAP).<sup>1408</sup> During a public hearing before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Afro-descendant communities from the Casaya, Casayeta and Bolaños islands denounced violations of their rights to land, development and livelihood, as well as barriers to their access to justice, education and basic services. They also reported illegal detentions and the ungrounded criminalization of islanders.<sup>1409</sup> These communities highlighted the lack of collective titles over the territories they have historically occupied, which worsens their situation.<sup>1410</sup> Moreover, the State acknowledged the situation of poverty in the archipelago and the persistent challenges to providing basic services in the islands and explained that the land titling process was constitutionally restricted by a special regime intended to ensure the security of the Panama Canal and protect the ecosystem of the archipelago.<sup>1411</sup> In this regard, the

State of Panama assured it is taking steps to reconcile the rights of possession of Afro-descendant communities with the legal framework.<sup>1412</sup>

657. Regarding the rights of children and adolescents, the Commission appreciates the efforts made by the State to expand the capacity of the Comprehensive Care Centers for Early Childhood (CAIPIs), which seek to promote the integral development of children under 4 years of age through services focused on education, health, nutrition, identity and upbringing. According to official records, the capacity of the CAIPIs went from 1,200 children in 2019 to 2,400 in 2024.<sup>1413</sup> In addition, the Commission takes note of the release of three guides on community and family practices in May, prepared by the Ministry of Social Development (MIDES) together with UNICEF and the Development Bank of Latin America and the Caribbean (CAF). The purpose of these guides is to improve care practices, foster positive upbringing and promote early learning and development in children under 47 months of age in Panama.<sup>1414</sup>

658. Furthermore, the Commission welcomes the approval, in June, of the Protocol for the Identification and Attention to Unaccompanied and/or Separated Children in the Context of Human Mobility in Panama. The protocol is intended to ensure the protection, well-being and comprehensive development of unaccompanied and/or separated children and to serve as a guide and working tool for officials and other persons involved in the care of children and adolescents to promote effective interinstitutional coordination.<sup>1415</sup> The context in which the protocol was adopted is of relevance because, as of July 2024, 46,567 children and adolescents had passed through the Darién National Park, out of which 2,400 were unaccompanied.<sup>1416</sup>

659. In connection with the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission notes with concern the approval of Executive Decree No. 194 on October 25, 2024, under which a fine ranging from 1,000 balboas to 5,000 balboas is imposed on anyone who enters the country bypassing state border checkpoints. To address the situation of vulnerability faced by some people in human mobility, the fine is adjusted so they can pay for it before leaving Panama. If they lack the economic resources to do so, they are deported.<sup>1417</sup> In turn, data from the National Migration Service show that, as of August 2024, a total of 238,185 migrants had crossed the Darién region, which constitutes an approximate decrease of 28 percent compared to the same period in 2023, when 333,704 crossings were recorded.<sup>1418</sup>

660. During the 191st period of sessions, at the request of the Office of the Ombudsperson of Panama, the Commission held a public hearing concerning the rights of persons in human mobility across the Colombian–Panamanian jungle, in which the States of Colombia and Panama were present. The Office of the Ombudsperson explained that the lack of accurate information about the people who go through the jungle makes it difficult to know the actual number of victims of human rights violations, especially those in an at-risk situation, and emphasized the need to create regional protection and care mechanisms for migration flows.<sup>1419</sup> The State of Panama, for its part, explained that the Darién is a transit route with a growing flow of migrants due to factors that are out of the State’s control and reaffirmed its commitment to handling the situation while observing human rights. The Commission thanked the State of Panama for the invitation to monitor the situation and highlighted the importance of these efforts to address human mobility in the region.<sup>1420</sup>

661. With respect to the rights of older persons, the Commission has identified, based on information in the public domain, situations related to the rights to social security, care, health and a life without violence. The Commission applauds the introduction of the public policy Por un Envejecimiento Saludable (Healthy ageing), under the charge of the MIDES, designed to address economic security, health and well-being for the elderly, as well as to promote adequate and healthy environments for such population.<sup>1421</sup> The Commission also appreciates the allowances granted by the MIDES to older persons under the money transfer program called “120 a los 65” (120 at 65), which involves a monthly delivery of 120 balboas to people who are 65 years of age or older and who have no retirement plan or pension and are facing a situation of social risk, vulnerability, social exclusion or poverty.<sup>1422</sup>

662. As for the right to health, the Commission values the enactment of Law No. 423, which ensures a free, public healthcare service for older persons without economic resources at the medical care centers administered by the Ministry of Health.<sup>1423</sup> In addition, the Commission commends the launch of the Electronic Portal for Older Persons (PAM) by the Ministry of Health, which is a safe, reliable tool for older persons to access relevant information and stay connected with their community.<sup>1424</sup>

663. Finally, the Commission observes that, between January and July 2024, the Public Prosecutor’s Office recorded a total of 484 complaints related to the ill-treatment of older persons.<sup>1425</sup> It also takes note of the increase in the number of complaints for crimes against the family, which rose by 35 percent, based on the figures published by the Public Prosecutor’s Office, with breach of family duties being the most prevalent crime this year (287 cases).<sup>1426</sup>

XXIV. PARAGUAY

- General considerations

664. In 2024, progress was achieved in terms of democratic institutionality with the reestablishment of the National Human Rights Institution as an “A” entity under the Principles of Paris. Furthermore, the State improved access to justice for vulnerable groups, reinforced the response to violence against women and launched a survey on the Afro-Paraguayan population.

665. Paraguay also faced challenges. A law that restricts freedom of association was passed, which could hinder human rights defense work. Furthermore, the Commission noted that the civic space was shrinking, which has an impact on the Rule of Law, and that narratives against gender perspectives are surfacing, which undermine the rights of LGBTI persons and women.

666. On October 15, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission’s request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>1427</sup>

- Specific issues

667. As regards the progress achieved in terms of democratic institutionality, the Superior Tribunal of Electoral Justice (TSJE) created a unit to fight election disinformation and submitted a proposal for a legal reform intended to strengthen electoral processes.<sup>1428</sup> In this context, civil society organizations called on the Congress to ensure that members of academia and broad social sectors are involved in all election reforms.<sup>1429</sup>

668. The Senate removed senator Katty González from office for alleged influence peddling.<sup>1430</sup> The removal process<sup>1431</sup> was challenged as unconstitutional<sup>1432</sup> and regarded as part of a pattern of gender-based political violence.<sup>1433</sup> Furthermore, the Law on Transparency and Accountability was enacted, targeted at nonprofit organizations,<sup>1434</sup> which, according to the civil society, shrinks the civic space, threatens the autonomy of human rights organizations<sup>1435</sup> and particularly affects feminist and LGBTI organizations, inasmuch as it restricts freedom of association.<sup>1436</sup>

669. In this context, the Congress set up a bicameral committee to investigate potential ties between political financing and human rights organizations, with a special focus on those receiving international funding.<sup>1437</sup> This has raised concerns over possible information leaks, as well as persecution and smear campaigns.<sup>1438</sup> The civil society has warned against these actions that, coupled with the Law on

670. With regard to human rights institutions, the Office of the Ombudsperson regained the “A” grade granted by the Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI), which recognized the progress achieved in ensuring the independence of institutions.<sup>1440</sup> For its part, the State informed that the executive branch promoted activities by the Human Rights Network, strengthened mechanisms to monitor international recommendations and moved forward with human rights training sessions for state agents.<sup>1441</sup>

671. In terms of citizen security, the State submitted data about the strengthening of the Directorate of Comprehensive Women Protection to improve women’s protection against gender-based violence.<sup>1442</sup> Furthermore, the State reported to the Commission that the Public Prosecutor’s Office undertook education initiatives intended to deter and prevent violence.<sup>1443</sup> Moreover, the State offered a higher reward for the safe return of Edelio Morínigo, Félix Urbieto and Óscar Denis, who were kidnapped by the self-proclaimed “Paraguayan People’s Army” and remain in captivity.<sup>1444</sup>

672. As for the challenges, the executive branch authorized the armed forces to participate in internal security tasks in Itapúa, Misiones and Ñeembucú for an indefinite period of time.<sup>1445</sup> This initiative attracted criticism from civil society organizations, which expressed their concern over the new measures that contribute to the militarization of security. These new measures add to the ones already implemented by the Joint Task Force (FTC).<sup>1446</sup> The joint action of military and police forces has been monitored by the IACHR, taking into account Inter-American standards that restrict the involvement of military forces in citizen security tasks.<sup>1447</sup>

673. In 2024, the State reported on the progress achieved in terms of access to justice and judicial independence with the opening of three new Victim Support Center offices, as well as mediation centers and working groups focused on violence against women.<sup>1448</sup> The State updated the Commission on the initiatives to enhance access to justice for indigenous peoples, which included at least five sessions aimed at improving access to justice in indigenous communities. cases filed with the inter-American system on human rights.<sup>1449</sup> The State added that the Ministry of Public Defense provided legal counsel to the LGBTI population, indigenous communities, women and persons with disabilities.<sup>1450</sup> Likewise, said ministry advised groups in situations of historical and structural vulnerability, including indigenous peoples.<sup>1451</sup>

674. Concerning the rights of indigenous peoples, the State informed the Commission about the creation of a working group to address land tenure and property issues. The State reported that, as of August, the Directorate on Human Rights had supported five legal proceedings for land restitution where indigenous communities had allegedly not been affected.<sup>1452</sup> The Primero de Marzo community voiced their concern over potential evictions from territories to which the community holds titles or where titles are disputed. For its part, the Huguá Po'i community, from the Mbya Guaraní people, denounced the lifting of a precautionary measure that protected a portion of land that was at the center of a dispute with a company.<sup>1453</sup>

675. Moreover, the Native Ayoreo People's Union of Paraguay (UNAP), together with Ayoreo organizations and communities, filed a constitutional remedy against deforestation and farming activities in the Tamocodé territory, Estancia Faro Moro, in the department of Boquerón, as they believe these activities threaten the survival of the Ayoreo people, who are in voluntary isolation.<sup>1454</sup> This case had the support of the Public Prosecutor's Office which, as informed by the State, has been defending the rights of these peoples.<sup>1455</sup>

677. However, in 2024, the Paraguayan penitentiary system featured an overcrowding rate of 391 percent, a very high figure pursuant to human rights standards.<sup>1460</sup> Such a rate resulted from an excessive use of pretrial detention, which affects 57 percent of the prison population, and has made Paraguay the third country in the region with the highest percentage of people under pretrial detention.<sup>1461</sup> Furthermore, 36 workers at the Social Reinsertion Center have been accused of torture, who are currently under investigation.<sup>1462</sup>

678. With respect to the human rights of women, the State underscored the campaigns to prevent violence launched by the Ministry of Women.<sup>1463</sup> In addition, it expanded the use of electronic devices to monitor compliance with injunctions in cases of domestic violence, opened the Regional Women's Center of San Pedro and set up two safe houses in Boquerón and Concepción.<sup>1464</sup>

679. Notwithstanding the foregoing, available data shows that most of the complaints related to violence against women that enter the judicial system at the national level are cases of family, domestic or intimate partner violence. These crimes also prevail in indigenous communities.<sup>1465</sup> As of October 2024, there had been 27 victims of femicide and 40 victims of attempted femicide, most of them committed by the victim's partner or former partner, or by people close to the victim.<sup>1466</sup> Despite its efforts, the State's response proves to be insufficient considering that, according to official data, the police only deals with 16 out of the 95 complaints for violence against women that are recorded on a daily basis.<sup>1467</sup>

680. As for the challenges faced by LGBTI persons, a top state official publicly declared his dislike for students who had what he called "homosexual tendencies" in agrarian schools.<sup>1468</sup> This adds up to the refusal by public officials to allow LGBTI organizations to participate in the Children Council and in debates on comprehensive sex education.<sup>1469</sup> In this context, the Chamber of Deputies passed a bill to remove the word "gender" from the name of the Social Equity and Gender Commission.<sup>1470</sup>

Concerning the rights of Afro-descendant persons and policies against racial discrimination, the State undertook an initiative to calculate the number of Afro-descendants and learn about the characteristics of this population to generate key data on their socioeconomic situation.<sup>1471</sup> Moreover, Afro-Paraguayan organizations demanded the government issue the regulations to the Law on the Prevention and Punishment of Racist and Discriminatory Acts, which remains unregulated two years after its passage.<sup>1472</sup>

682. With respect to the rights of children and adolescents, Paraguay launched a program to support and protect children and adolescents deprived of family care.<sup>1473</sup> The State also introduced an initiative to raise awareness among children and adolescents of the risks of drug use, the social and legal consequences of microtrafficking and how to safely use social media.<sup>1474</sup> The country also deployed an operation to control the transit of children and adolescents over the De la Amistad International Bridge with the purpose of identifying and preventing crimes such as human trafficking, especially involving migrants.<sup>1475</sup>

683. Furthermore, the Senate approved a proposal to declare a state of national emergency to act on the alarming figures of abuse and violence against children and adolescents.<sup>1476</sup> According to official records, as of July 2024, the Public Prosecutor's Office had handled 11,482 offenses against children and adolescents, which translates into approximately 54 victims a day.<sup>1477</sup>

684. With regard to processes of memory, truth and justice, the Criminal Court of Appeals convicted a former chief of the Paraguayan police for torture during the military dictatorship.<sup>1478</sup> In addition to this judgment, the executive branch issued regulations providing for the compensation of armed forces agents who participated in the events of February 2 and 3, 1989, to fight against the dictatorship.<sup>1479</sup>

685. Finally, with respect to human trafficking, Paraguayan and Bolivian authorities held a meeting to pinpoint challenges and best practices on this matter and on migration.<sup>1480</sup>

Towards 2040 (PNMD). It also strengthened intercultural legal services, providing support to indigenous communities and women through working groups with a focus on care, femicides and the rights of sex workers.

687. However, significant challenges persist, such as the deterioration of democracy due to congressional interference with institutions that are key to the Rule of Law, including the National Board of Justice (JNJ), the National Election Jury (JNE) and anticorruption prosecutors. In addition, the Congress passed controversial laws on crimes against humanity and war crimes.

688. On November 9, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>1481</sup>

- Specific issues

689. With regard to democratic institutionality, the Congress moved forward with a bill to guarantee the right to vote of Peruvian citizens living abroad.<sup>1482</sup> The State also informed about the approval of a technical instrument to expand citizen participation in accountability hearings related to regional and local governments.<sup>1483</sup> In addition, the Office of the Ombudsperson acknowledged that such instrument represents a step forward and demanded that it be mandatory so as to strengthen social audit mechanisms.<sup>1484</sup>

690. However, the Commission notes the persistence of undue congressional interference with the operation of the other branches of government and public institutions by means of the initiation of disciplinary proceedings against authorities whose positions are essential to preserve democracy, such as the JNJ, the JNE and anticorruption prosecutors.<sup>1485</sup> In this regard, the legislative branch filed at least 14 disciplinary proceedings against the JNJ, which led to the suspension and subsequent removal of two JNJ members, Inés Tello and Aldo Vásquez.<sup>1486</sup>

691. Under these circumstances, the Commission resorted to its several mechanisms, including a request for information on the situation of the JNJ, a request for information on investigations against reporters and prosecutors, and a press release where the Commission expressed its concern about a series of actions to tamper with the system of checks and balances that might weaken the Rule of Law in Peru. In this context, the Commission underscored the need for the State to preserve democracy and human rights and urged the State to guarantee the respect for the independence of the judiciary and the electoral system, as well as for human rights, all of which strengthen democracy.<sup>1487</sup>

692. As for human rights institutions, the State reported that the executive branch approved the PNMD which, among other aspects, seeks to address inequality and structural discrimination as a public matter, following a decentralized participatory process to learn about the needs of the communities.<sup>1488</sup> The State also

693. Despite this progress, the Congress also considered a bill to allow the government to denounce the American Convention on Human Rights and withdraw from the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court, amidst a growing political trend that is contrary to the inter-American human rights system.<sup>1491</sup> Paradoxically, the Executive nominated a candidate for the Inter-American Court, who was ultimately elected during the OAS General Assembly. Moreover, the Congress introduced reforms to the Constitutional Procedural Code, which, in the opinion of social organizations, will weaken courts' power to exercise the conventionality control, as such reforms establish that only judgments rendered by international courts against Peru can be considered by constitutional courts.<sup>1492</sup> In addition to this reform, the Congress is studying a bill to restrict diffuse control of conventionality.<sup>1493</sup>

694. Concerning access to justice and judicial independence, the State informed that the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, through the Public Criminal Defense Unit, held 280,725 consultations and provided legal representation in 171,306 cases, including the provision of intercultural assistance with a differentiated approach to specific groups.<sup>1494</sup> The executive branch launched information campaigns and training sessions on the support provided by the Free Legal Assistance Centers (ALEGRA) with an intercultural approach to ensure access to justice in areas where indigenous peoples live.<sup>1495</sup> Moreover, the JNJ dismissed national prosecutor Liz Patricia Benavides Vargas from office for serious disciplinary wrongdoing after having used her position to remove prosecutor Bersabeth Revilla, who was investigating Ms. Benavides Vargas's sister.<sup>1496</sup> The Commission held a public hearing where organizations reported that personnel from the Public Prosecutor's Office were being subjected to administrative and criminal proceedings, as well as to dismissal without grounds. They also denounced threats of legal reforms that might affect institutional integrity, the dismantling of teams in charge of investigating high-impact cases and interferences that jeopardize the independence of the Public Prosecutor's Office.<sup>1497</sup>

695. Furthermore, Congress representatives submitted at least two proposals to reform the Peruvian Constitution: one to replace the JNJ with a national school of magistrates and another one to reorganize the JNJ and the Public Prosecutor's Office, which would result in the removal of those responsible for such entities and might weaken the country's institutional integrity.<sup>1498</sup>

696. At the same time, the State appointed the new members of the JNJ after a process that was described as nontransparent by civil society organizations, which underscored the lack of assessment of basic information about the candidates to detect potential conflicts of interest.<sup>1499</sup> The Commission held a public hearing about this issue where it highlighted that the selection process of justice officials is the cornerstone of the Rule of Law to ensure that the judiciary is impartial, transparent and competent. The Commission recalled that it has been monitoring the democratic and justice system in Peru and emphasized the importance of the justice system in protecting democratic institutionalism.<sup>1500</sup>

697. In addition, an amendment to the Criminal Code of Procedure was approved, under which investigation powers traditionally held by the Attorney General's Office were transferred to the National Police of Peru (PNP). This transfer of powers, in the opinion of social organizations and the Board of Supreme Prosecutors, threatens prosecutors' independence and the objectivity of investigations.<sup>1501</sup> Moreover, a series of initiatives were introduced, which have been a cause for concern among civil society organizations given their impact on the justice system and access to it.

698. Organizations, families and victims of human rights violations perpetrated between December 7, 2022, and January 23, 2023, continued expressing their concern over the challenges to access to justice and the failure to comply with the recommendations made by the Commission in its report Situation of Human Rights in Peru in the Context of Social Protests. The Commission visited Peru on August 12 and 13 to follow up on the aforementioned recommendations. During that visit, authorities, human rights defenders and the civil society shared information about the situation and the challenges faced in the implementation of such recommendations, including information from the Attorney General's Office of Peru related to investigations into human rights violations and data from different authorities and the civil society on matters related to democratic institutionalism.<sup>1502</sup>

699. In terms of citizen security, as of August, the Secretariat of Social Management and Dialogue had been involved in 117 cases to prevent social conflict. It also held 1,338 meetings with civil society organizations and local authorities to manage conflicts, promoted training sessions on conflict dialogue, prevention and management, and took steps to update the executive branch's guidelines and protocols governing social management, dialogue and the participation of women in dialogues to address conflicts.<sup>1503</sup> All of this took place in the context of at least 40 states of emergency ordered by the government across the country, mainly rooted in the fight against organized crime.<sup>1504</sup>

700. Conversely, the Congress passed a law on organized crime that narrowed down the concept of organized crime so that it would only apply to organizations that commit crimes punishable with six years of imprisonment and above, which leaves out crimes such as extortion.<sup>1505</sup> Social organizations and transport workers unions affected by extortion took to the streets to protest against such law as it would potentially weaken the fight against organized crime.<sup>1506</sup> As a result, the government submitted a bill to introduce a new crime called “urban terrorism” and impose harsher sentences for contract killing and extortion.<sup>1507</sup> Congress also passed Law No. 32,181, which prevents courts from ordering pretrial detention for PNP agents who use their firearm while in service.<sup>1508</sup>

701. As for the progress made in connection with Afro-descendant persons and policies against racial discrimination, the Congress approved a reform that includes the Afro-Peruvian population in the Constitution, which was reported by the State as a milestone in the recognition and guarantee of their fundamental rights. The State also took steps forward in the implementation of the 2030 National Policy for Afro-Peruvian People (PNPA).<sup>1509</sup>

702. Despite these positive measures, according to available information in the public domain, methodological limitations were observed in the follow-up and assessment of indicators associated with the objectives of said policy, which hinders its implementation and the possibility of setting clear perspectives to eliminate racial discrimination and ensure the full exercise of rights.<sup>1510</sup> This is reflected in the barriers faced by Afro-Peruvian women and girls in accessing sexual and reproductive health services due to deficiencies in rural infrastructure, a lack of adequate information and the criminalization of abortion.<sup>1511</sup> Civil society organizations warned against the different impacts that adverse weather events have on Afro-descendant communities such as the Yapatara people, located in Piura, where pre-existing inequalities are worsened by recurrent environmental challenges.<sup>1512</sup>

703. With regard to human rights defenders, the Intersectoral Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders (MINJUSDH) monitored risks in connection with 192 defenders to coordinate risk response measures. Furthermore, it created regional working groups to coordinate work and take action to protect defenders.<sup>1513</sup>

704. Moreover, the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Congress approved a report that grouped six bills intended to amend the Law on the Peruvian Agency for International Cooperation (APCI), with a potential negative impact on the defense of human rights and the work of civil society organizations.<sup>1514</sup> According to this report, the use of resources from international technical cooperation and donations by organizations to conduct activities declared by the State as contrary to public interest and internal order constitutes a serious violation, which could lead to the potential cancellation of such organizations.<sup>1515</sup> This initiative was described by the civil society as a strategy to shrink the civic space and prevent the defense of human rights. In addition, the human rights coalition National Human Rights Coordinator (CNDDHH) reported intimidation and

707. As to the rights of women, the National Specialized Criminal Court of Appeals sentenced 13 military officers who had been accused of sexual violence against peasant women in the Huancavelica region during the internal armed conflict.<sup>1525</sup> The State created the Working Group for Strengthening the Assistance Provided by the Emergency Centers for Women (CEM) in Cases of Femicide and Attempted Femicide, composed of public officials and civil society representatives, to monitor the cases handled by these centers.<sup>1526</sup> Additionally, the State established a working group and a pilot plan to coordinate interventions focused on care, aiming to improve conditions for both paid and unpaid caregivers,<sup>1527</sup> as well as the Working Group for the Promotion and Protection of the Rights of Women who Perform Sexual Work.<sup>1528</sup>

708. However, high rates of gender-based violence against women, girls and adolescents persisted in the country, particularly including femicide, psychological and sexual violence, as well as disappearances.<sup>1529</sup> Between January and October 2024, the authorities received 5,518 alerts on disappeared women, including 603 cases in October alone, out of which 413 (68 percent) involved girls and adolescents.<sup>1530</sup> For its part, the Ministry of Women and Vulnerable Populations (MIMP) reported that, as of November 11, the death of 135 women under circumstances potentially linked to femicide had been recorded. Most of these crimes were committed by the victim's partner in her home.<sup>1531</sup> Additionally, as of October, 189 attempted femicides had been reported,<sup>1532</sup> and the CEMs had assisted women in 25,067 cases involving sexual violence, including 10,804 cases of rape and 868 instances of violence against pregnant women.<sup>1533</sup> Moreover, 6,489 cases of rape against girls and adolescents had been documented as of October 2024.<sup>1534</sup>

709. Between January and May 2024, more than 300 cases of sexual assault committed by teachers in educational institutions were recorded nationwide.<sup>1535</sup> Reports of 524 incidents of sexual violence perpetrated by teachers against indigenous students from the Wampís and Awajún communities between 2010 and May 2024 were monitored.<sup>1536</sup> These reports included cases involving HIV transmission and pregnancies resulting from rape.<sup>1537</sup> Executive branch authorities referred to sexual violence as a "cultural practice," a statement condemned by the civil society and the Office of the Ombudsperson.<sup>1538</sup> The Commission submitted a request for information to the State to monitor this situation.<sup>1539</sup>

710. In this context of violence, regressive initiatives emerged concerning equality and the fight against gender discrimination. These included proposals to rename the Ministry of Women as the Ministry of the Family or merge it with the Ministry of Development and Social Inclusion, which would undermine the specific focus of actions against gender-based violence,<sup>1540</sup> and the repeal of decrees requiring the appointment of gender equality officers in public institutions and the delivery of training on gender to public officials.<sup>1541</sup> In addition, a bill was introduced to allow parents to exempt their children from courses that include comprehensive sex education components.<sup>1542</sup>

In this regard, the civil society highlighted contradictions between this law and the legal framework for therapeutic abortion, the only circumstance under which abortion is permitted.<sup>1543</sup> The enactment of the aforementioned law also followed the introduction of a bill seeking to decriminalize abortion in cases of rape committed by a victim's relative.<sup>1544</sup> In addition, the State has yet to implement a reparations policy for victims of forced sterilization, which has been recognized as a form of gender-based violence and intersectional discrimination.<sup>1545</sup> Moreover, according to public information, up to six maternal deaths reportedly caused by inadequate medical care were recorded in the Pasco region.<sup>1546</sup>

712. As regards the rights of LGBTI persons, the State took steps towards the enactment of a gender identity law and the prohibition of attempts to change a person's sexual orientation or gender identity.<sup>1547</sup> Peru also implemented public policies including the Technical Health Standard for Combined HIV Prevention and the Protocol for the Legal Assistance of Women Sexual Workers.<sup>1548</sup> The Constitutional Court ordered the correction of the sex marker of an intersex person.<sup>1549</sup> Furthermore, the Committee on Justice and Human Rights of the Congress of the Republic of Peru passed a same-sex civil union bill,<sup>1550</sup> which was criticized by LGBTI organizations for failing to guarantee equal rights.<sup>1551</sup> In turn, religious sectors opposed the initiative arguing that it undermines traditional values.<sup>1552</sup>

women and sexual workers in education, healthcare and access to justice in Peru. They urged the State to pass a gender identity law that allows trans persons to rectify their names and gender in identity documents, provide training on equality and nondiscrimination to judges and judicial assistants, and compile statistics on violence against LGBTI persons, among other measures. In turn, the State referred to existing laws, regulations, workshops and roundtables aimed at promoting LGBTI rights and affirmed its commitment to improving LGBTI persons' access to rights in the country.<sup>1557</sup>

715. This takes place in a context in which, according to official figures, between 2012 and June 2024, violence has claimed the lives of 157 LGBTI persons<sup>1558</sup> and the Public Defender's Office has provided assistance to 231 LGBTI individuals.<sup>1559</sup>

716. Regarding persons in the context of human mobility, the State enacted legislation extending temporary healthcare coverage through the Comprehensive Health Insurance (SIS) to migrants and refugees diagnosed with HIV and tuberculosis, regardless of their migration status.<sup>1560</sup>

717. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the State issued Supreme Decree No. 011-2024-IN, which provides for the identification of migrants to "ensure security and public order," restricts the entry and transit of foreigners for security reasons and requires lodging businesses to verify the migration status of their guests, imposing penalties for noncompliance.<sup>1561</sup> This decree transfers immigration control duties to private individuals<sup>1562</sup> and was issued in a context where migrants have been blamed for rising crime rates, a narrative that may lead to more stigmatization.<sup>1563</sup>

718. With regard to the progress achieved in processes of memory, truth and justice, the Commission highlights the adoption of the consolidated amended text of Legislative Decree No. 1,428 and its regulations to strengthen the system for the search of disappeared persons, address cases involving the disappearance of persons in vulnerable situations and establish a standardized framework of action for the authorities in charge.<sup>1564</sup> In addition, the Office of the Second Supraprovincial Public Prosecutor Specialized in Human Rights and Interculturalism of Ayacucho recovered the skeletal remains of 11 possible victims of the 1984 Putis massacre.<sup>1565</sup> Moreover, the judiciary convicted 10 military officers for crimes against humanity — specifically, sexual violence— committed against nine peasant women between 1984 and 1985, during the internal armed conflict.<sup>1566</sup> denying the existence of an internal armed conflict in the country.<sup>1567</sup> Furthermore, the State enacted the Law Establishing the Application and Scope of Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes in Peruvian Legislation, which prevents the investigation and punishment of crimes committed before July 1, 2002.<sup>1568</sup> The IACHR urged the repeal of the initiative and its non-application, recalling that the imprescriptibility of these crimes is a principle of international law and that Peru has an obligation to ensure access to justice in cases of this gravity.<sup>1569</sup> This took place despite the order of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights that the State should take the necessary actions to ensure that the bill was not adopted; this generated condemnation from civil society organizations and victims' organizations<sup>1570</sup>.

720. For its part, the Commission held a thematic hearing, which had been requested by organizations to report on the consequences of Law No. 32,107 of 2024. Civil society organizations informed that, under said law, no person shall be prosecuted, convicted or punished for crimes against humanity committed before July 1, 2022, and called for its repeal. According to these organizations, this law represents a setback in access to justice for the victims of the cases included in the joint press release and affects more than 550 individuals and their families. The State underscored its commitment and the steps taken to monitor the cases, which included periodic meetings with the Commission and the petitioners to address justice and investigation issues. As for the impact of Law No. 32,107, the State argued that courts, as independent bodies, had decided to refrain from enforcing the law, based on the principle of diffuse control of conventionality, and added that, as of the reporting date, no sanctions had been imposed on justice operators who refused to enforce the law, although administrative investigations were ongoing. In parallel, the State emphasized that there were constitutional remedies against the law pending before the Constitutional Court.<sup>1571</sup>

721. Additionally, the Commission received reports concerning reprisals and the misuse of criminal law against justice operators who declined to enforce Law No. 32,107 during 2024.<sup>1572</sup> Furthermore, the Congress moved forward with the passage of Bill No. 7,549/2023-CR, which would grant amnesty to agents of the National Police, the armed forces, self-defense groups and state officials under investigation in cases where a judgment has not become final, as well as to those convicted of crimes committed between 1980 and 2000 who are over 80 years of age.<sup>1573</sup>

723. With regard to the rights of children and adolescents, the National Specialized Protection Program for Children and Adolescents was launched in November, and its implementation is scheduled for 2025. This program aims to provide care for children and adolescents at risk or facing family abandonment.<sup>1578</sup> The State provided care to 3,064 children and adolescents in rural communities through the Plataformas Itinerantes de Acción Social (Itinerant Social Action Platforms) program.<sup>1579</sup>

724. Members of Congress submitted bills aimed at amending the Criminal Code and the Code of Criminal Liability for Adolescents so that adolescents aged 16 and 17 may be criminally charged as adults. Under this proposal, they could face penalties such as life imprisonment in serious cases, including contract killings, extortion, drug trafficking, kidnapping, femicide and rape.<sup>1580</sup>

725. The Office of the Ombudsperson voiced its concern over the low vaccination rates among children under five, particularly in remote areas, including indigenous communities. It also noted that, as of April 2024, the Ministry of Health had recorded 158 cases of girls and adolescents aged 11 to 14 who had given birth, as well as 9,224 pregnancies of adolescents aged 15 to 19. The Ministry of Education reported that, as of March 2024, 398 cases of violence among students had been recorded, including 63 instances of sexual violence. In the same period, 394 cases involving violence by staff against students were documented, including 71 instances of sexual violence.<sup>1581</sup> Furthermore, according to estimates from UNICEF, severe droughts in the country have impacted 344,000 children and adolescents.<sup>1582</sup> Additionally, the wildfires in September 2024 are estimated to have affected over 160,000 children and adolescents.<sup>1583</sup>

726. Regarding the rights of older persons, the State created the Working Group for the Coordination of Sector Interventions Focused on Care, aimed at coordinating sector interventions for various groups, including older persons.<sup>1584</sup> Peru approved the regulations for Law No. 31,781, which strengthens care for older persons with disabilities facing family abandonment or at risk of social exclusion. ## XXVI. SAINT KITTS AND NEVIS

735. In relation to progress, the IACHR highlights the legislative reforms to address the current backlog of criminal cases and to deter the smuggling of migrants into the State.

736. As it relates to challenges, the Commission notes with concern a law which seeks to criminalize children loitering.

737. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

738. Concerning human rights institutions, the Commission notes the amendment in February of the Freedom of Information Act<sup>1605</sup> that permits either the Ombudsman or the Special Prosecutor to serve as the Information Commissioner, in an effort to enhance transparency and improve operational and budgetary efficiencies.<sup>1606</sup> In addition, in February the Ombudsman Act was amended to revise the remuneration and increases the tenure of the Office of the Ombudsman to five years with eligibility for re-appointment.<sup>1607</sup>

739. With respect to citizen security, in August the State announced plans to establish a new Citizen Security Department which will advance the State's public health approach to addressing crime. This public health approach focuses on the root causes of crime such as poverty, lack of education and mental health.<sup>1608</sup> Further, following the passage of the amendment to the Firearms Act, a 15-day gun amnesty was implemented from May 10 to May 25, aimed at addressing the proliferation of illegal firearms and ammunition in the State.<sup>1609</sup> In addition, the amendment to the Offences Against the Person Act, increased the penalties for offences involving firearms, including shooting with intent to murder and shooting with intent to cause grievous bodily harm.<sup>1610</sup>

740. Regarding access to justice, the Commission notes the passage in September of the Judge Alone Trials Bill. According to the State, this law which introduces judge-alone trials in the High Court for certain criminal matters, is expected assist with the current backlog of criminal cases by allowing appropriate matters to be heard before a judge without a jury.<sup>1611</sup>

741. In relation to the rights of children, in August, the State announced its intention to strictly enforce the Criminal Law Amendment Act which, in order to maintain public order and protect the youth, prescribes that any child or adolescent under 16 found wandering or loitering after 10 p.m. without a valid reason may be subject to police intervention. Officers are authorized to stop these children and, if necessary, escort them to the nearest police station.<sup>1612</sup>

742. With regard to the rights of women, note is taken of the launch in August of the "Menstrual Wellness Project" which seeks to eliminate menstrual poverty and promote menstrual health education through educational workshops and community outreach programs.<sup>1613</sup>

743. With respect to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission notes the passage of the amendment to the Immigration Act and the Anti-Smuggling of Migrants Bill in February.<sup>1614</sup> Both laws seek to deter the smuggling of migrants into the State. The amendment to the Immigration Act increases the penalties for offences, such as smuggling, concealing, harboring or shielding migrants. The Anti-Smuggling of Migrants Bill penalizes those involved in such activities and addresses broader networks of illegal activities, including by establishing an Agency for the Prevention and Countering of the Smuggling of Migrants within the State.<sup>1615</sup>

744. Regarding the rights of people of African descent and against racial discrimination, the Commission notes that the State initiated discussions in February with the owner of a foreign business to pursue reparations for the enslavement of African and Afro-descendant people.<sup>1616</sup>

745. Regarding the death penalty, the IACHR notes that no executions have been carried out since 2008. In addition, there is no person currently awaiting execution, and no new death sentences have been imposed.<sup>1617</sup>

XXVII. SAINT VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES

- General considerations

746. In relation to progress, the Commission takes note of the efforts undertaken by the State to address the crime situation. Further, the Commission welcomes the creation of a working group on gender-based violence and that the State received the World Health Organization's certification for eliminating the mother-to-child transmission of HIV and syphilis.

747. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR highlights the high homicide rate within the State, the dismissal of a case challenging the constitutionality of laws which criminalize consensual sexual relations between adults of the same sex, and the security inside State prisons.

748. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

749. In relation to democratic institutionalism, the Commission notes that the State ranked 7th out of 32 countries in the Americas, and 42nd out of 142 countries globally, in terms of adherence to the rule of law according to the Rule of Law Index issued by the World Justice Project (WJP).<sup>1618</sup> There has been no change since the State's previous rankings.<sup>1619</sup>

750. Regarding citizen security, to address the crime situation, a National Firearm Amnesty was implemented from March to May which allowed persons to surrender illegal firearms without prosecution. According to public information, approximately 18 firearms and 327 rounds of ammunition were surrendered by individuals during the amnesty.<sup>1620</sup> Further, the Firearms Act was amended in order to raise the penalties for firearm-related offences and to introduce two new offences, namely trafficking in firearms and the 3D printing of firearms.<sup>1621</sup>

751. In relation to the homicide rate, according to public information, the State recorded a total of 54 homicides for 2024, compared to 55 homicides recorded for 2023, which represents an approximate 1.82% decrease.<sup>1622</sup> This indicates that the State's homicide rate was 52,07 per 100,000 inhabitants.<sup>1623</sup>

<sup>1623</sup> The IACHR calculated the homicide rate based on the State's population of 103,698 according to data from The World Bank, Population total – Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, 2023.

752. With regard to the rights of children, the IACHR commends the State on receiving certification from the World Health Organization (WHO) for eliminating the mother-to-child transmission of HIV and syphilis (EMTCT).<sup>1624</sup>

753. With regard to the rights of women, the Commission values the creation in November of a working group on gender-based violence, composed of experts in the field, whose objective is to support coordination between providers of essential services for dealing with cases of gender-based violence and the main stakeholders in the routes of attention to such cases.<sup>1625</sup>

754. In relation to human trafficking, the Commission takes note of the efforts made by the police through public demonstrations against human trafficking, which highlight the importance of education, prevention, and prosecution in the fight against this crime; as well as community participation for the protection of children.<sup>1626</sup>

755. In relation to the rights of LGBTI persons, the Commission regrets the dismissal in February by the Supreme Court of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines of a case challenging the constitutionality of the State's laws which criminalize consensual sexual relations between adults of the same sex.<sup>1627</sup>

756. Concerning persons deprived of liberty, according to public data, in July, the Acting Superintendent of Prisons informed that acts of violence between inmates continue to exist within the facilities, where, despite security protocols, detainees introduce weapons, drugs and other prohibited objects. In addition, it was noted that the increase in the number of inmates with psychosocial disabilities is a particular concern because prison officers do not have the necessary training to support them.<sup>1628</sup>

757. In relation to the death penalty, IACHR notes the de facto moratorium in effect and that no executions have taken place since 1995, and no new death sentences have been imposed in recent years. However, one individual still remains under a sentence of death at least since 2021.<sup>1629</sup>

XXVIII. SAINT LUCIA

- General considerations

758. As it relates to progress, the Commission welcomes the implementation of the Community Re-entry Program aimed at the rehabilitation and reintegration of adult offenders into society, the State's decision to amend the Citizenship of Saint Lucia Act and efforts to establish a new facility for the Boys Training Centre.

759. With respect to challenges, the IACHR notes the State's high level of homicides, an increase in cases of sexual violence against women and the lack of establishment of a national human rights institution for the promotion and protection of human rights.

760. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

761. Concerning human rights institutions, the Commission recalls the establishment of a National Coordinating Committee for Human Rights but notes that the State is yet to establish a National Human Rights Institution (NHRI).<sup>1630</sup> In this regard, the Commission notes calls from civil society in December for the establishment of an NHRI.<sup>1631</sup> The IACHR emphasizes the necessity of establishing an independent body at the national level for the promotion and protection of human rights in accordance with the Paris Principles.

762. With regard to citizen security, the Commission takes note of the State's efforts to reduce crime.<sup>1632</sup> According to public information, between January and October, 72 illegal firearms and 1,318 rounds of ammunition were confiscated.<sup>1633</sup> However, as of December 11, there were 74 homicides recorded, compared to 75 homicides in 2023 which represents an approximate 1.33% decrease.<sup>1634</sup> This indicates that the State's homicide rate was approximately 41.05 per 100,000 inhabitants as of December.<sup>1635</sup>

763. With respect to the rights of children, the Commission welcomes the State's decision in June to amend the Citizenship of Saint Lucia Act to allow the children and grandchildren of Saint Lucians who migrated and started families in foreign countries the opportunity to become naturalized Saint Lucian citizens.<sup>1636</sup>

764. On the other hand, in terms of juvenile justice, the IACHR takes note of the Ministry for Equity and Social Justice's plans to repurpose and renovate the former George Charles Secondary School into a state-of-the-art Youth Services Centre for children, adolescents, and young people in need of care and protection. This facility aims to incorporate education, counseling, and vocational training into the juvenile justice system.<sup>1637</sup>

765. With regard to the rights of women, the Commission takes note of the measures to facilitate the access of 751 women to training programs that promote employability as a tool to eradicate poverty.<sup>1638</sup> Additionally, in May the State provided training aimed at paramedics, the Royal Police Force, firefighters and the health sector to raise awareness of intersectionality factors such as gender, ethnic-racial origin and age in order to offer an appropriate response to their needs.<sup>1639</sup>

766. On the other hand, the Commission notes with concern publicly available data which indicate that between January to June, there were 77 sexual offence cases reported.<sup>1640</sup> According to public information, by November, sexual offences had increased by 19% as compared to 2023.<sup>1641</sup>

767. Regarding persons deprived of liberty, the Commission welcomes the implementation in June of the Community Re-entry Program (C-REP) directed at the rehabilitation and reintegration of adult offenders into society. C-REP offers inmates educational and vocational training, career counselling, psychosocial support and other services.<sup>1642</sup> In addition, the State implemented inter-ministerial collaboration efforts to improve the access to health services at the Bordelais Correctional Facility, where, as of March, medical supplies had been provided by the Ministry of Health and a full-time doctor was available to attend to the needs of inmates.<sup>1643</sup>

768. In relation to the death penalty, the IACHR notes the ongoing de facto moratorium in effect in Saint Lucia, where no executions have been carried out since 1995 and nobody is currently under the sentence of death.<sup>1644</sup>

XXIX. SURINAME

- General considerations

769. As it relates to progress, the Commission notes the amendment to the Electoral Regulation Act aimed at facilitating more efficient elections. In addition, the establishment of the National Education Policy aimed at guiding the State's education system is noted. Moreover, the IACHR notes the landmark judicial decision regarding the obligation of prior, free, and informed consultation with indigenous and tribal peoples concerning their lands.

770. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes the delay in approving the Collective Rights of Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Act. Additionally, the Commission notes the lack of establishment of a National Human Rights Institute (NHRI) in accordance with the Paris Principles. Moreover, the IACHR notes with concern reports of inhumane conditions faced by persons deprived of their liberty at the Santo Boma Prison.

771. On September 30, 2024, the State submitted its response to the request for information sent for the preparation of this chapter.<sup>1645</sup>

- Specific issues

772. In relation to democratic institutionality, the Commission notes the passage of the amendment to the Electoral Regulation Act, the Constitutional Court's ruling regarding security deposits for political parties and anti-corruption measures adopted by the State. Regarding the Electoral Regulation Act, according to official information, the amendments provide rules on voting, counting votes and fulfilling the tasks of the Central Polling Station. Moreover, these amendments aim to facilitate more efficient elections, ensure effective implementation of electoral regulations, and guarantee that voters can fully exercise their right to vote.<sup>1646</sup>

773. With the State's next general election set for May 2025,<sup>1647</sup> the Constitutional Court ruled that the increase in security deposit for political parties, which was adopted in October 2023, was contrary to the Suriname's Constitution and its obligations under the Inter-American Human Rights System. In assessing the aim, proportionality and necessity of the measure, the Court found that the 1,000% increase was disproportionately high and could not be justified. Furthermore, it was held that the increase had a discriminatory impact as it excluded smaller and less established political parties as a result of their limited financial capacity. Ultimately, referencing decisions of the Inter-American Court, the Constitutional Court concluded that the increase in the deposit was contrary to the right to vote and therefore incompatible with the fundamental rights and freedoms essential to a democratic State.<sup>1648</sup>

774. Regarding the State's fight against corruption, the Commission took note of the establishment of an Anti-Corruption Commission and issuance of an anti-corruption decree in 2023.<sup>1649</sup> The UN Human Rights Committee (UNHRC), within the context of the review of the State's fourth periodic report, recommended accelerating the implementation of the 2017 Anti-Corruption Act, ensuring the enforcement of the Decree on Declaration of Income and Assets, and fully operationalizing the Anti-Corruption Commission. The UNHRC also emphasized the importance of promptly investigating all allegations of corruption, prosecuting those responsible, and applying appropriate sanctions when found guilty.<sup>1650</sup>

775. Regarding human rights institutionality, the Commission notes that after the Bill to establish the National Human Rights Institute (NHRI) was presented to the President in 2022, there have been consultations and awareness campaigns aimed at gathering input from stakeholders, including civil society and international organizations. In its fourth periodic report to the UNHRC, the State noted that the Bill had been revised in response to feedback. It also reaffirmed its commitment to engaging national stakeholders, including government agencies and civil society, in creating the necessary frameworks for establishing the NHRI. The IACHR takes note of the recommendation of the UN Human Rights to Committee which called for an acceleration of the establishment of an NHRI in accordance with the Paris Principles via an open and transparent consultation process.<sup>1651</sup>

776. Regarding the rights of children, the IACHR celebrates the adoption of a National Education Policy and the establishment of multidisciplinary working groups. The Commission values the adoption of the National Education Policy 2030 in September 2024. This policy seeks to guide the country's efforts toward achieving inclusive and high-quality education for all children.<sup>1652</sup> The IACHR also acknowledges the formation of seven multidisciplinary working groups for a national approach to youth issues. These groups are dedicated to addressing key areas such as education, employment, health, safety, and welfare, with the goal of developing a comprehensive, effective, and efficient national policy for youth.<sup>1653</sup>

777. Regarding the rights of women, the Commission notes that there is currently only one State operated shelter for women victims of domestic violence. According to the State, the shelter provides practical and emotional assistance through conversations with the court, prosecution office or the Bureau for Family Law Affairs. The shelter also provides assistance regarding interacting with the police, family doctor, emergency room if necessary and making appointments with employers and transportation of the children to school.<sup>1654</sup>

778. With regards to memory, truth and justice, following the upholding of the conviction of ex-President Desi Bouterse for the homicides of political opponents during the military regime,<sup>1655</sup> the IACHR takes note of the ruling by the Court of Justice in March 2024 which declared inadmissible the request to suspend the sentences of the former President and four co-convicts.<sup>1656</sup> However, this sentence has yet to be enforced as those convicted of the homicides have absconded. In December, the Commission learnt of the passing of former President<sup>1657</sup> On this particular matter, the UNHRC stressed the necessity of ensuring accountability for serious human rights violations during the de facto military regime, including investigating and prosecuting alleged crimes, enforcing sentences related to the “December murders” trial and ensuring that victims and their families receive full reparation.<sup>1658</sup>

779. In relation to the rights of indigenous peoples, the IACHR notes the landmark judicial decision regarding territorial lands of indigenous peoples and the obstacles this community still faces in accessing justice. The Commission welcomes the judicial decision regarding the obligation of prior, free, and informed consultation with indigenous and tribal peoples by the State before allowing economic activities in their territories. Regarding this decision, the IACHR notes that the court recognized the territorial rights of twelve Indigenous and Maroon groups and held that once there is a direct impact on the territories, their consent must also be obtained before the State adopts a decision.<sup>1659</sup>

780. On the other hand, the Commission notes with concern the obstacles in access to justice for indigenous and tribal peoples, including the lack of recognition of collective legal personality and collective rights, as well as the geographic, economic, linguistic and educational barriers that exist.<sup>1660</sup>

781. Regarding the rights of people of African descent and against racial discrimination, the Commission notes the delay of the approval of the Collective Rights of Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Act, intended to protect these communities’ collective rights over their lands.<sup>1661</sup> This delay has enabled the ongoing sale and lease of public lands to private entities, raising concerns that lands claimed by Indigenous and tribal Afro-descendant peoples may be compromised.<sup>1662</sup> Furthermore, the Association of Saramaka Communities has urged the government to halt deforestation activities in their territories, to require prior consultation for any development project, and to ensure the protection and enjoyment of their collective rights.<sup>1663</sup> In this context, according to civil society organizations, 77% of the negative impacts on Saramaka territories occurred after the Inter-American Court ruling in 2007.<sup>1664</sup>

782. In relation to the rights of the elderly, the Commission welcomes the creation of the “Royalties for All” (RVI) program by the State to distribute profits of the country’s energy sector to the public.

The IACHR values that the State proposes to prioritize people over 60 years of age and those with disabilities to receive this economic support before 2028.<sup>1665</sup>

783. On the matter of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission values the ‘My story counts!’ training programme implemented in 2024 at the Duisburg Penitentiary Institution and the House of Detention, where detainees had an opportunity to share their personal stories and inspire others.<sup>1666</sup> On the other hand, the Commission expresses its concerns about the situation of the Santo Boma Prison. According to public information, cells are overcrowded as they have been designed for six persons and are occupied by more than double the number of individuals.<sup>1667</sup>

XXX. TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

- General considerations

784. As it relates to progress, the Commission takes note of the passage of the Whistleblower Protection Act in the State’s pursuit to combat corruption. Moreover, the IACHR welcomes the decision to admit migrant children from Venezuela into the State’s public school system. In addition, the Commission welcomes the landmark decision regarding the duty to protect domestic violence victims and the launch of the National Strategic Action Plan on Gender-Based Violence.

785. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes with concern an increase in homicides and high levels of violence recorded against women. Additionally, the Commission notes the lack of progress in the implementation of public policies to protect the rights of LGBTI persons.

786. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

787. With regards to democratic institutionalism, the IACHR takes note of the efforts of the State to reform its constitution and to combat corruption. In particular, the Commission notes the publication, in August, of the Report of the National Advisory Committee on Constitutional Reform. In its report, the Committee recommended several reforms, including the removal of savings law clauses to allow legal challenges to colonial-era laws that infringe on fundamental rights and freedoms; the explicit constitutional recognition of the rights of the First Peoples; and clear protections for women’s rights to gender equality, children’s rights, and the right to nondiscrimination based on sexual orientation.<sup>1668</sup>

788. Moreover, in its pursuit to combat corruption, the State passed the Whistleblower Protection Act 2024 which aims to fight corruption and other wrongdoings by encouraging and facilitating disclosures of improper conduct in the public and private sectors. The Act also seeks to protect persons making disclosures from retaliation and regulate the receipt and investigation of reports of improper conduct.<sup>1669</sup>

789. Regarding human rights institutions, the Commission notes the recommendation of the National Advisory Committee on Constitutional Reform for reform of the Office of the Ombudsman. According to the Report, the Committee recommended that the Office be reformed into a Commissioner for Public Justice in order to better reflect its constitutional mandate which includes the power to investigate administrative injustice.<sup>1670</sup> However, the Commission notes that while the establishment of a Human Rights Commission was considered, the Committee ultimately concluded that its establishment is unlikely to make a significant difference in the cases concerning alleged infringements of human rights as there are currently other public bodies with very similar mandates. In this regard, the Committee recommended that the Equal Opportunity Commission and the Equal Opportunity Tribunal be recognized under the Constitution.<sup>1671</sup>

790. In relation to citizen security, according to public information there were 624 homicides reported in 2024, the highest recorded annual homicide toll in the country.<sup>1672</sup> As compared to 577 homicides recorded in 2023, this represents an approximately 8% increase.<sup>1673</sup> This represents a homicide rate of 40 per 100,000 inhabitants as for 2024.<sup>1674</sup> In response to threats of heightened criminal activity, the State declared a State of Emergency (SOE) in December.<sup>1675</sup> Once approved by the Parliament, the SOE can last for three months, with a possibility of extension.<sup>1676</sup> Under the SOE, bail provisions are suspended and members of the police service have the authority to arrest persons on suspicion of involvement in illegal activities.<sup>1677</sup>

791. With respect to access to justice, the Commission notes the proclamation of the amended Administration of Justice Act and the amended Bail Act 2024. The amended Act seeks to reform the judicial process for indictable offence cases by removing preliminary enquiries at the District Courts. As such, indictable offence cases will now proceed directly to the High Court which will aid in reducing the backlog of cases presently before the High Court by reducing delays and providing opportunities for stronger case management by the Court.<sup>1678</sup>

792. In addition, the State amended the Bail Act in order to give effect to the July 2022 decision of the Privy Council which declared that persons on remand charged with murder could access bail pending trial.<sup>1679</sup> In addition to the removal of bail restrictions for persons accused of murder, the Act imposes conditions on the Court's discretion in granting bail for serious offenses, requires a higher burden of proof for persons accused of murder who seek bail, and mandates a review of the Act by the Office of the Attorney General every five years.<sup>1680</sup>

793. In relation to the rights of children, the Commission commends the State's decision to admit migrant children from Venezuela into the State's public school system in compliance with the Immigration (Amendment) (No.2) Regulations 2024.<sup>1681</sup> As of August 2024, according to public information, 23 migrant children out of the 111 who applied, were eligible to start the September 2024 school term.<sup>1682</sup>

794. Regarding the rights of women, the Commission notes the landmark decision on domestic violence, the launch of the National Strategic Action Plan on Gender-Based Violence and reported high levels of gender-based violence in the State. Regarding the judicial decision on domestic violence, the IACHR welcomed the High Court ruling which determined that the State has a positive obligation to act with due diligence to protect all victims of domestic violence and their families from the actions of non-State actors.<sup>1683</sup>

795. Moreover, the Inter-American Commission takes note of the launch of the National Strategic Action Plan on Gender-Based Violence and Sexual Violence 2023-2027,<sup>1684</sup> which establishes a comprehensive framework for the prevention and response to gender-based violence in all its manifestations, as well as the Survivor Transformation and Training Programme, which aims to provide essential life skills, educational opportunities and business training for women who have suffered gender-based violence.<sup>1685</sup>

796. On the other hand, it notes with concern the situation of violence against women, girls and adolescents, especially family or intimate partner violence and femicide. According to official data, between January and August, 1,227 cases of domestic violence in the form of physical violence and 117 cases in the form of sexual abuse were reported.<sup>1686</sup> Publicly available information indicates that, between January and September, 34 violent deaths of women were registered, of which 28 would be linked to femicides preceded by domestic violence.<sup>1687</sup> In this regard, the IACHR called on the State to adopt urgent measures to prevent and eradicate gender-based violence against women, including the incorporation of a gender and intersectional approach, ensuring the effective protection of survivors and the eradication of socio-cultural patterns that normalize gender-based violence against women.<sup>1688</sup>

797. With respect to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the IACHR welcomes the State's decision to extend of the Work Permit Exemption for Venezuelan nationals in Trinidad and Tobago, but continues to note with concern the treatment of migrants and refugees, notably in State custody.<sup>1689</sup> According to official information, the State extended the duration of its Work Permit Exemption, with the most recent extension running until December 31, 2025. However, the extension is only granted to Venezuelan nationals in Trinidad and Tobago with renewal documents dated between June 20, 2023 and August 11, 2023.<sup>1690</sup> Further, the Commission notes that members of the Trinidad and Tobago Coast Guard are facing disciplinary procedures over an allegation of sexual exploitation by a detained Venezuelan female.<sup>1691</sup> At the time of writing this report, the outcome of the disciplinary procedure was still pending.

798. Regarding human trafficking, the Commission highlights that, through collaboration between the Anti-Trafficking Unit of the Ministry of National Security and the Trinidad and Tobago Police Service, the State has conducted successful operations which has led to the identification of possible trafficking victims and of suspected traffickers. These joint operations led to the rescue of several alleged victims of human trafficking who are now under State protection.<sup>1692</sup>

799. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, the Commission notes the lack of progress in the implementation of public policies to protect the rights of this population within the State.<sup>1693</sup> In this context, the IACHR takes note of the homicide of a known LGBTI activist on November 15, 2024, which highlights that acts of violence against persons with diverse sexual orientations, gender identities and/or expressions and sexual characteristics continue in the State.<sup>1694</sup>

800. In relation to persons deprived of liberty, the IACHR values the Writers Class 2024 initiative contributing to rehabilitation through storytelling in female prisons, where detainees received educational information from a renowned author on writing, editing, and publishing.<sup>1695</sup> Moreover, the Commission once again welcomes the “Link Up” initiative by the College of Science, Technology and Applied Arts of Trinidad and Tobago (COSTAATT), which in August 2024, partnered with Regency Recruitment and Resources Limited.<sup>1696</sup> This partnership is intended to further support prisoners’ transitions into society and the workforce, as private firms have pledged to support prisoners by offering them on-the-job training.<sup>1697</sup>

801. Regarding the death penalty, the Commission welcomes the release, in November 2023, of Mr. Wenceslaus James, who was the longest-serving death row inmate, who had been detained for over 30 years, of which 24 were under the sentence of death. The High Court of Trinidad and Tobago resented Mr. James to a term that he had already served and subsequently ordered his release.<sup>1698</sup> On the other hand, the IACHR notes that, while the last known execution took place in 1999, 48 individuals remain under the sentence of death.<sup>1699</sup>

XXXI. UNITED STATES

- General considerations

802. In terms of progress, the IACHR acknowledges measures such as California's reparations fund for African American communities and efforts to improve access to justice for survivors of gender-based violence. It also highlights federal actions to combat gun violence, including the Emerging Firearms Threats Task Force and the implementation of red flag laws, as well as initiatives to protect children from online exploitation. Additionally, the Commission observed efforts to enhance electoral integrity, ensure public safety during elections, and combat digital disinformation.

803. Regarding challenges, the IACHR emphasizes ongoing concerns about persistent patterns of racism, institutional and structural inequalities, the continued application of the death penalty, the frequency of mass shootings, gun-related violence, and excessive use of force by law enforcement in the United States. The Commission also expresses concern regarding restrictive migration and asylum policies, legislative restrictions on reproductive rights and transgender protections.

804. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

805. In terms of democratic institutions, the IACHR closely followed the development of the national elections on November 5, 2024, in which citizens elected a President and a Vice President, 33 seats in the Senate, and 435 seats in the House of Representatives. Despite some delays, technical issues, and long queues due to a high voter turnout, elections took place in an organized and peaceful manner.<sup>1700</sup> In this context, the IACHR takes note of the efforts of the State to ensure the safety of the population. In particular, several polling stations in different States received bomb threats which were quickly deemed non-credible and false by authorities, who assured voting could resume safely.<sup>1701</sup> Moreover, authorities detected the spreading of disinformation online in the form of videos fabricated to mislead and attempt to keep the population from going to vote in person. In response, the population was swiftly made aware of the inauthenticity of this content.<sup>1702</sup>

806. In relation to the outcome of the elections, the Commission takes note of the victory of the Presidential candidate from the Republican Party, former President Donald Trump, as well as the subsequent recognition of this victory by the opponent candidate from the Democratic Party and their commitment on a peaceful transfer of power.<sup>1703</sup>

807. Nevertheless, the IACHR noted with concern that a political campaign for the Presidency included discriminatory and false remarks, often targeting persons in human mobility. In this scenario, the Commission condemned these remarks and reminded that such rhetoric fosters xenophobia, fuels discrimination, and undermines the dignity and rights of migrants.<sup>1704</sup>

808. In addition, the IACHR takes note of the ruling issued in July by the U.S. Supreme Court on the extent of presidential immunity concerning actions taken within constitutional authority, which could have a potential impact on the rule of law, accountability, and checks on executive power.<sup>1705</sup>

809. With respect to human rights institutions, the IACHR once again notes that the United States does not yet have a national institution exclusively mandated to the promotion and protection of human rights.<sup>1706</sup> The Commission reiterates that national human rights institutions play an important role as autonomous, independent and pluralistic bodies for the promotion and protection of human rights.<sup>1707</sup>

810. Regarding citizen security, the IACHR welcomes the announcement of new measures to reduce gun violence and enhance public safety. In September, the President of the United States signed an Executive Order, which establishes the Emerging Firearms Threats Task Force, and instructs federal agencies to develop and publish information on school safety protocols.<sup>1708</sup> In addition, the Department of Justice released model legislation and guidelines for States to conduct more thorough background checks on individuals who aspire to obtain firearms. The State also allocated funding to various programs in intervention, prevention, outreach, therapy, support training and technical assistance.<sup>1709</sup>

811. Moreover, according to information provided by the State, the recent establishment of the National Extreme Risk Protection Order (ERPO) Resource Center aims to offer technical assistance and resources to different stakeholders in the optimization of red flag laws, which allow for law enforcement officers or family members of firearm holders, who may be a danger to themselves or others, to seek judicial authorization to take away their access to the firearm. The State reported that 21 states have passed red flag laws, 6 of which have been using the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act funding to implement these laws. The State also communicated that it continues to urge states to pass and effectively implement red flag laws.<sup>1710</sup> The Commission welcomed these measures build on previous efforts such as the establishment of the White House Office of Gun Violence Prevention.<sup>1711</sup>

812. Nevertheless, the Commission received information on the persistence of endemic gun violence in the United States. From January to November 2024, there were 465 mass shootings and 14,904 homicides and unintentional killings, which resulted in the death of more than 2,592 persons, including 1,247 children.<sup>1712</sup> The total number of deaths and injuries caused by firearms stood at 43,457,<sup>1713</sup> over 15% more than in the same period in the previous year.<sup>1714</sup> Moreover, there were 210 victims in 300 incidents involving firearms in educational institutions until November 2024.<sup>1715</sup> The IACHR observes that the U.S. Surgeon General Advisory Report in 2024 declared firearm violence to be a public health crisis in the United States, as it is the leading cause of death for children.<sup>1716</sup>

813. In November, during the 191st period of sessions, the IACHR held a public hearing on the impact of gun violence on human rights in the United States. During the hearing, the requesting civil society and academic organizations informed the Commission about the impact of firearm violence on children, which affects Afro-descendant children disproportionately. They referred to the current legal framework, which they consider entails minimal regulation and represents a danger to populations in situations of vulnerability. They also requested the Commission to prepare a report about gun violence in the United States, including considerations on due diligence, immunity, and the lack of remedies for victims.<sup>1717</sup> In response, the State reaffirmed its commitment to address the gun violence issue with concrete actions, some of which have already been implemented. Such actions include the offering of mental health services to those affected by gun violence, increasing restrictions on access to firearms, and measures to address unsecured firearms in the home.<sup>1718</sup>

814. Furthermore, the IACHR continues to observe the excessive use of force by law enforcement that is often accompanied by impunity. As of October 2024, civil society reported that 1,151 individuals were killed in instances of police violence.<sup>1719</sup> In August, the IACHR issued a statement in particular about the case of Sonya Massey, an African American woman killed by a police officer in her home.<sup>1720</sup> In addition, the Commission takes note of the occurrence of these acts against people with psychosocial disabilities, especially those of African descent and other racial-ethnic backgrounds. This trend can be illustrated by the cases of the police shootings of Ryan Gainer, Win Rozario, and Yong Yang, who were all killed during mental health crises despite family calls for assistance.<sup>1721</sup>

815. On the other hand, 47 law enforcement officers were killed in the line of duty in the first eight months of 2024, representing a 6.8% increase compared the same period in 2023. Firearms were used in 76.6% of the cases. The leading circumstances surrounding the officers' deaths were related to investigative/enforcement (16), unprovoked attacks (8), and ambushes (entrapment/premeditation) (6).<sup>1722</sup>

816. Regarding access to justice, the IACHR welcomes the Department of Justice's publication, in May, of the "Framework for Prosecutors to Strengthen Our National Response to Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence Involving Adult Victims", which seeks to reduce the re-traumatization of victims and ensure greater accountability for perpetrators of sexual assault and domestic violence. The framework is based on five main principles: i) reliance on the evidentiary value of the victim's testimony; ii) the importance of a victim centered multidisciplinary action; iii) the effective use of the law and evidence regulations; iv) thoughtful and conscious actions based on what justice and accountability represent; and v) a redefinition of success built on a productive, healthy and committed workforce.<sup>1723</sup>

817. Moreover, the Commission takes note of the implementation of 'Access DOJ', a human-centered initiative aimed at improving people's access to the Department's services, programs, and resources. With this initiative, the Office for Access to Justice collaborates with the Office of the Pardon Attorney in removing obstacles for individuals who seek a Presidential Pardon. It also collaborates with the U.S. Trustee Program to increase access to bankruptcy meetings, especially for individuals who do not count with legal representation.<sup>1724</sup>

818. In relation to the rights of children, the IACHR welcomes the signing into law of the Bill to Protect Children from Online Exploitation which will require websites and social media platforms to report crimes involving Federal trafficking and enticement of children to the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC).<sup>1725</sup>

819. On the other hand, the Commission notes that, according to civil society organizations, as of December 2024, there have been 39 reported school shootings nationwide, resulting in 18 fatalities and 59 injuries.<sup>1726</sup> During a hearing on the impact of gun violence on human rights in the United States, the Commission expressed its concern about the impact of armed violence on children and adolescents, especially those of African American descent. It also recognized the efforts made by the State, stressing the importance of these measures being sustainable in the long term.<sup>1727</sup> Additionally, the IACHR has been informed that the US Supreme Court will analyze the legality of the ban on gender-affirming medical care for transgender children and adolescents.<sup>1728</sup>

820. With respect to the rights of women, the IACHR values the measures announced in September at the federal level to improve care and protection for victims of gender-based violence, through the allocation of new funds to assist survivors; the approach to violence in the digital sphere and artificial intelligence; limitations on access to weapons by aggressors; the issuance of protection orders for the elderly; the issuance of protection orders for the victims; and the issuance of protection orders for women electronically, among other measures.<sup>1729</sup> It also notes the launch, in July, of the Department of Homeland Security's Combating Gender-Based Violence website, which contains information on immigration options available to survivors of human trafficking, domestic violence, and other crimes<sup>1730</sup>. However, the persistent situation of violence in the family or couple environment<sup>1731</sup> and sexual violence, in particular, that which occurs in educational institutions<sup>1732</sup>, is worrying.

821. In terms of sexual and reproductive rights, progress has been made at the federal level, such as the granting of leaves<sup>1733</sup> and the prohibition of disclosing protected health information<sup>1734</sup>. At the state level, seven states approved incorporating reproductive health guarantees into their constitutions during the November 2024 elections.<sup>1735</sup> However, as of November 2024, abortion was illegal in 13 states<sup>1736</sup> and severely restricted in 12.<sup>1737</sup> In addition, various initiatives and lawsuits that seek to expand or block access to abortion services<sup>1738</sup>, contraceptive methods<sup>1739</sup>, abortion pills,<sup>1740</sup> and emergency medical care are pending approval or resolution.<sup>1741</sup>

822. This has generated legal uncertainty regarding the legality of the provision of reproductive health goods and services, which has resulted in a lack of access to them, particularly affecting women of African descent, women with disabilities, migrants, indigenous women, Latinas, and those living in rural areas.<sup>1742</sup> Thus, the fear of possible sanctions has caused health personnel to stop or delay medical care<sup>1743</sup>, even in cases of emergency and high-risk pregnancies.<sup>1744</sup> There have been reports of suspension of family planning services<sup>1745</sup> and threats to those who facilitate travel out of the states to obtain an abortion.<sup>1746</sup> There have also been acts of violence against health personnel, including physical attacks on people and facilities, as well as harassment and threats of legal, economic and professional sanctions.<sup>1747</sup>

823. On the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the IACHR continues to monitor the impact that the State's policies have had on their human rights. In particular, the Commission has observed the restriction of the right of individuals to seek international protection, the continuing detention of migrants, and the inadequate monitoring of unaccompanied children.

824. In relation to the right of individuals to seek international protection, the Commission expresses its concern over the prospective implementation of the Presidential Proclamation on "Border Security" by the United States government, which aims to strengthen security at the State's Southern border. According to the State, the measures would restrict individuals who enter the territory of the State "unlawfully" from seeking asylum.<sup>1748</sup> In addition, the IACHR takes note of the end of the parole processes for certain nationals of Cuba, Haiti, Nicaragua, and Venezuela. According to public information, approximately half a million people will be directly impacted by this decision and possibly face deportation.<sup>1749</sup> The Commission also further notes that, according to official information, 525,610 repatriations took place between January and August 2024.<sup>1750</sup>

825. Moreover, the IACHR observes the increased use of detention of migrants. According to the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse, by November 2024, there were a total of 38,863 migrants held in detention by Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). Out of this number, 23,588 (or 60.7%) of detainees have no criminal record, and many have minor offenses such as traffic violations.<sup>1751</sup> In relation to the detention of migrants, the Commission completed a visit in October 2024 to monitor the implementation of the precautionary measures in favor of persons detained at the Northwest ICE Processing Center (NWIPC) in Tacoma, state of Washington. During its visit, the Commission toured the NWIPC, held meetings with civil society organizations and local authorities, and conducted interviews with beneficiaries from the Commission's precautionary measures. It also observed the conditions of detention and received complaints about poor hygiene, food quality, and deficient medical response to mental health issues.<sup>1752</sup> Regrettably, the Commission learned about the death of an individual detained at the NWIPC merely a few days after its visit, marking the second death in 2024 in these facilities.<sup>1753</sup>

826. The Commission also takes note of the State's international cooperation agreements with other countries from the region centered around repatriation efforts. Specifically, it observes that the United States has signed a Memorandum of Understanding on Assistance and Cooperation in Migration Matters with Panama, aiming to implement measures, such as repatriation flights, to address the situation in the Darien

National Park.<sup>1754</sup> In relation to unaccompanied children, the Commission expresses its concerns about ICE's reports concerning its inability to monitor the location and status of more than 291,000 unaccompanied migrant children. According to the State, this is partly due to the lack of an automated process for sharing information between domestic authorities.<sup>1755</sup>

827. Regarding human trafficking, the House of Representatives approved H.R. 443, the Human Trafficking Detection Improvement Act, which will ensure that the Department of Labor personnel have the tools and resources to identify cases of exploitation, their prevention and prosecution.<sup>1756</sup>

828. In relation to the rights of indigenous peoples, the IACHR takes note of the President Joe Biden's apology, during a visit to the Gila River Indian Reservation in Arizona in October, for the federal government-run boarding school system that separated Indigenous children from their families for decades, acknowledging this as a "stain on American history".<sup>1757</sup>

829. On the other hand, in February, in a hearing held during the 189th period of sessions, the IACHR expressed its concern on the environmental exploitation of uranium contaminating groundwater and generating radioactive emissions, its impact on the health of Indigenous peoples increasing the rate of people with cancer, and the lack of prior, free, and informed consent regarding the potential impacts.<sup>1758</sup>

830. Regarding rights of people of African descent, the state of California has allocated a 12 million dollars budget for reparations to address historic "harms and atrocities" against the state's Black population. This decision marks a significant milestone in acknowledging and atoning for the legacy of systemic racism. The funds will support initiatives such as community programs and direct assistance to individuals, aiming to address the lasting impacts of discriminatory policies and practices.<sup>1759</sup> Moreover, some states and localities have made progress in addressing racially discriminatory policing and impunity.<sup>1760</sup>

831. Nevertheless, there have been continued challenges experienced by those people. African descent population and other historically marginalized racial and ethnic groups kept experiencing systemic racism in policing across the country, which included racial profiling, and extrajudicial executions, excessive use of force and increased surveillance. Police in California killed Ryan Gainer, a 15-year-old Black boy with autism, on March 9.<sup>1761</sup> Police in New York killed Win Rozario, a 19-year-old Bangladeshi-American who sought help for a mental health crisis, on March 27.<sup>1762</sup> Police in Illinois killed Sonya Massey, a Black woman, on July 6 after she called for assistance with a suspected break-in at her home.<sup>1763</sup> disproportionately concentrated in neighborhoods inhabited by African and Latin American communities.<sup>1766</sup> Despite some specific advances at the federal level, national legislative initiatives aimed at increasing police accountability, such as the George Floyd Justice in Policing Act, continued to face delays in Congress<sup>1767</sup>. Reports also highlighted a rise in hate crimes, with 52.5% driven by biases related to race, ethnicity, or ancestry.<sup>1768</sup>

833. In addition, on May 23 the U.S. Supreme Court reversed a lower court ruling and allowed racially discriminatory practices in drawing voting maps in South Carolina, diminishing Black voters' political representation. The Congressional District 1 map removed over 60% of Black residents from the district, leaving Black South Carolinians likely to elect only one of seven U.S. representatives, despite being over a quarter of the state's population.<sup>1769</sup>

834. In relation to the rights of LGBTI persons, progress was made through the publication in May of the revised Title IX policy, which aims to combat discrimination based on sex stereotypes, sex characteristics, pregnancy, sexual orientation, and gender identity in state-funded school programs.<sup>1770</sup> However, according to recent public information, the implementation of these policies has not been consistent across the entire territory of the United States, as various have filed injunctions to block the implementation of the policy.<sup>1771</sup>

835. By November 2024, civil society organizations reported at least 36 violent deaths of transgender individuals in the United States, the majority of whom were trans women of color.<sup>1772</sup> These incidents occur within a broader context of legislative activity in 2024, during which more than 600 bills were introduced across 43 states, aiming to limit or negatively impact the human rights of transgender persons. Of these initiatives, 48 were approved, 482 were dismissed or archived, and 139 remain active or pending legislative procedures.<sup>1773</sup> Studies indicate that such legislative measures disproportionately target and affect transgender children and youth.<sup>1774</sup>

836. In December 2024, the U.S. Supreme Court heard oral arguments in the case United States v. Skrmetti, a case that examines whether Tennessee's law prohibiting gender-affirming care—specifically hormone therapies for trans children and adolescents—violates the Equal Protection Clause of the U.S. Constitution.<sup>1775</sup> Notably, the American Psychological Association and other leading mental health organizations have submitted amicus curiae briefs supporting the petitioner, highlighting the potential long-term negative mental health consequences of legislation that bans gender-affirming treatments and the challenges such laws pose to mental health professionals striving to provide personalized care to their patients.<sup>1776</sup>

837. Regarding persons deprived of liberty, the Commission values the judicial decision issued in April that orders the appointment of a special supervisor for the Dublin Federal Correctional Institution, a federal women's prison located in California, known for widespread sexual abuse of female inmates. The judge also appointed several staff members to assist her, who all shall have full access to the prison facilities and its records.<sup>1777</sup> In addition, the IACHR welcomes the procedures conducted by the U.S. Attorney's Office to investigate the sexual abuse of multiple female inmates at that detention center. As of March 2024, at least seven federal prison correctional officers had been sentenced to prison for those crimes committed at the Dublin Federal Correctional Institution.<sup>1778</sup>

838. On the other hand, the constant increase in the number of women deprived of liberty is a matter of concern to the Commission. According to research published in July, the female incarcerated population stands almost seven times higher than in 1980. Even, this rate of growth for female imprisonment has been twice as high as that of men since that year, which might be related to policies and practices that lead to female criminalization and mass incarceration. The research also highlights that between 2000 and 2022, the rate of imprisonment in state and federal prisons declined by 69% for Black and Latina women, while the rate of imprisonment for white women rose by 18%. However, the imprisonment rate for Black women is still higher than the rate of imprisonment for white women and for Latina women.<sup>1779</sup>

839. Additionally, the Commission expresses its concern for the approval of the bills No. 9 and 10 that eliminates discretionary parole which allowed to release people from prisons and, diminishes the possibility reduce the time in prison for good behavior and requires convicted persons to serve at least 85% of their sentence, respectively.<sup>1780</sup>

840. On the matter of death penalty, the IACHR continued to monitor its application as the United States is the only country in the Western Hemisphere that executes persons sentenced to this punishment. Particularly, through two statements published in January, the IACHR expressed deep concern on the scheduled execution of Kenneth E. Smith via nitrogen hypoxia in Alabama. In addition, it highlighted its alarm over the first application of this untested method of execution.<sup>1781</sup>

841. Likewise, through a press release publish in November, the Commission condemned the execution of Richard Moore, despite the fact that on July 4, 2023, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in his favor<sup>1782</sup>, and on October 30, 2024, the IACHR had urged the country to refrain from applying the death

XXXII. URUGUAY

- General considerations

842. Uruguay has a solid democratic and human rights institutional framework. In 2024, significant progress was achieved in connection with safe migration and asylum, human rights institutions and processes of memory, truth and justice.

843. However, challenges to the recognition and protection of the rights of women, LGBTI persons and indigenous communities persist. In addition, the State faces challenges related to incarceration rates, detention conditions and violence against children, adolescents, women and older persons.

844. On October 28 and 29, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>1785</sup>

- Specific issues

845. With regard to democratic institutionality, the State took steps to strengthen the solid democratic foundation for which the country is known,<sup>1786</sup> by holding inclusive national elections to vote for the president and congress members, with broad citizen participation.<sup>1787</sup> In this context, matters of great public interest were submitted to public consultation, such as social security and night raids, both rejected through a transparent and participatory process. Furthermore, legislation was passed to impose clear and prorated sanctions on public officials who misuse the power of office.<sup>1788</sup>

846. As for judicial independence, during a thematic hearing, the Commission received information concerning certain challenges related to legislative issues, salaries, budgets and appointments that might restrict the autonomy of the Attorney General's Office (FGN). In addition, offensive speech and attacks by political stakeholders were documented, especially in high-profile cases where corruption, crimes against humanity or gender-based violence are being investigated. In this regard, the State explained that the regulatory, institutional and budgetary framework ensures the independence of the FGN and noted that criticism against authorities is framed under a democratic system with independence of powers.<sup>1789</sup>

847. Uruguay also took steps forward in terms of human rights institutions with the launch of the first 2023–2027 National Human Rights Plan (PNDH), whose purpose is to consolidate and mainstream this approach into public policies and public administration entities.<sup>1790</sup> In this context, in 2024, the Secretariat of Human Rights (SDH) of the Office of the Presidency ran two editions of the course A Human Rights Approach in Public Policies, targeted at public officials.<sup>1791</sup> Moreover, the National Honorary Advisory Commission for the Protection and Restitution of the Right to Birth Identity came into operation with the purpose of promoting spaces for training, knowledge sharing and information generation to ensure an effective response for those who need it.<sup>1792</sup>

848. With respect to processes of memory, truth and justice, the State created an area within the National General Archive to collect, organize and preserve documents related to recent events and human rights violations.<sup>1793</sup> The State also identified the remains of two people who had disappeared during the military dictatorship.<sup>1794</sup> With regard to liability for the crimes committed during the dictatorship, a former military member of the Coordinating Agency for Antisubversive Operations was sentenced to prison for torturing detainees at a clandestine center in La Tablada.<sup>1795</sup> Furthermore, three military officials were also convicted for crimes against humanity involving 39 detainees, who had been kidnapped and tortured in a town called Treinta y Tres.<sup>1796</sup>

849. Moreover, a significant challenge that Uruguay faces is the submission of a motion to challenge the jurisdiction of ordinary courts over cases involving crimes against humanity and to transfer jurisdiction over these crimes to the Supreme Court of Justice. This motion has made some progress in court.<sup>1797</sup> If it were admitted, it could have a significant impact and perpetuate impunity in cases of violence during the dictatorship.<sup>1798</sup>

850. In terms of citizen security, a slight decrease in certain types of crimes was noted. Based on official records, homicide reports dropped by 30.6 percent, robberies fell by 31.7 percent and domestic violence declined by 1.6 percent in the first half of 2024, compared to the same period in 2023.<sup>1799</sup> In addition, a law was passed to incorporate cybercrimes, as well as aggravating circumstances and specific protections for victims who are in a situation of greater vulnerability, into criminal legislation.<sup>1800</sup> Furthermore, to reinforce and improve police action, guides on best practices were prepared to address sex crimes against children and adolescents,<sup>1801</sup> and to incorporate sexual diversity and gender perspectives.<sup>1802</sup> Training sessions were also delivered to police agents in relation to said guides and on topics such as domestic violence and gender, sexual harassment, human trafficking and exploitation, and perspectives on ethnics and race.<sup>1803</sup>

851. Concerning the progress made in the protection of children and adolescents, the State passed the Law on Guarantees for Early Childhood, Childhood and Adolescence to ensure the development, support and comprehensive protection of that sector of the population.<sup>1804</sup> The State also passed a law creating the Uruguay Amber Alert system for the early search of individuals under 18 years of age whose location is unknown to their parents or guardians when it might be presumed that such absence results from a criminal or violent act that exposes them to danger; that is, people who are “missing or absent” under the law.<sup>1805</sup> In addition, the Institute of Children and Adolescents (INAU) established new Support Centers for Children and Families (CAIF) and planned to have 30 additional centers in operation by the end of 2024.<sup>1806</sup>

852. Moreover, Uruguay faced several challenges related to sexual violence, including the sexual exploitation of children and adolescents. Between January and October 2024, 64.9 percent of victims in sexual abuse complaints were children and adolescents.<sup>1807</sup> During the same period, complaints for conducts associated with sexual exploitation declined by 27 percent, with girls and female teenagers accounting for 81 percent of the victims.<sup>1808</sup> However, a 40 percent increase was recorded in the number of complaints for online grooming,<sup>1809</sup> and there was a 36 percent rise in the number of complaints for the dissemination of explicit pictures.<sup>1810</sup> In addition, a girl who was under the protection of the INAU was reported dead as a result of the preterm delivery of her baby after having been sexually abused and exploited in a context of unauthorized exits.<sup>1811</sup>

853. With regard to human trafficking, the 2023–2028 Third National Plan for the Eradication of Commercial and Noncommercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents, which was drafted in mid-2023, is still pending approval.<sup>1812</sup> Conversely, measures were taken to strengthen victim support and improve the identification of cases of human trafficking and sexual exploitation. These measures included better infrastructure and expert training. Furthermore, the Guide on Interinstitutional Action for Situations of Human Trafficking and Exploitation in Uruguay, which lays down specific procedures designed for effective detection and institutional coordination cases of human trafficking and exploitation, was approved.<sup>1813</sup>

854. As for the rights of women, the State approved laws that improve labor conditions,<sup>1814</sup> facilitate access to health treatment, such as the HPV test<sup>1815</sup>, and provide hygiene products to people who menstruate.<sup>1816</sup> The State also lifted the prohibition of the Partner-Assisted Reproduction (ROPA) technique

855. The figures on gender-based violence are proof of a persistent challenge in the country. Between January and October 2024, complaints for domestic violence and related crimes dropped by 1.3 percent but still exceeded by 5.2 percent those of 2022, and by 10.8 percent those of 2021.<sup>1821</sup> In most cases, the perpetrator was the victim's partner, former partner or someone with whom they had an emotional-sexual relation,<sup>1822</sup> which is also the case for the 60 percent of women homicides committed in situations of domestic and gender-based violence.<sup>1823</sup> In addition, rates of violence against nonheterosexual, migrant and Afro-descendant women are even higher.<sup>1824</sup> In this context, a bill punishing false claims of gender-based violence moved forward in Congress and could undermine the existing protection guarantees if it were approved.<sup>1825</sup>

856. The State took measures to promote the rights of older persons. These included training sessions on information technology to improve older persons' chances in the labor market and facilitate their integration into daily activities.<sup>1826</sup> Furthermore, the National Institute of Older Persons (Inmayores) expanded the national coverage of its regulation, strategic action and decentralization divisions.<sup>1827</sup> It also conducted over 400 surveys in Long-Term Care Facilities for Older Persons (ELEPEM) and carried out awareness activities on abuse and ill-treatment of older persons addressed both to ELEPEM personnel and the public at large.<sup>1828</sup>

857. Despite these efforts, 10 older persons died in a fire on July 7, 2024, at an ELEPEM located in the Treinta y Tres department. In this regard, the State reported that the last inspection carried out in that facility in 2024 had been positive in terms of food, accommodation and health, and submitted inspection records between 2020 and 2024 that confirmed optimal sanitary and heating conditions. The fire is still under investigation by the prosecutor's office of Treinta y Tres.<sup>1829</sup> Furthermore, the National Institute of Human Rights and Office of the Ombudsperson (INDDHH) opened their ex officio investigation and emphasized the need for stricter supervision and follow-up of ELEPEMs.<sup>1830</sup>

858. With regard to the rights of Afro-descendants, the State made progress in the implementation of the National Afro-Descendants Plan and designed actions to fight child poverty among the Afro-descendant population.<sup>1831</sup> The State also submitted the 2025 National Plan for Racial Equality and African Descent and created the Observatory to Follow Up on the Implementation of Affirmative Actions for

Persons of African Descent.<sup>1832</sup> In addition, a bill is under study to define measures intended to eradicate hate, racism, xenophobia and intolerance in sports.<sup>1833</sup>

859. Moreover, according to a report prepared by the INDDHH, the adoption of the Law on Affirmative Actions for Afro-descendants has proved insufficient.<sup>1834</sup> Other studies have shown that racial discrimination has led to low levels of satisfaction of basic needs and to low territory development rates, and contributed to an increase in the number of Afro-descendants living in irregular conditions compared to other groups.<sup>1835</sup> Furthermore, physical traits such as hair and skin color are associated with the early exclusion of Afro-descendants from the education system, with lower attendance rates and higher dropout rates, as they face discrimination since the first years of school.<sup>1836</sup>

860. In terms of persons in the context of human mobility, the country approved a pilot plan for the recognition of prima facie refugee status for asylum-seekers from Venezuela, which will give priority to applicants in an at-risk situation or with specific needs, such as families with children, gender-based violence survivors, persons with disabilities, older persons and persons in a situation of economic vulnerability.<sup>1837</sup> The State also created the Ties-Based Residency Program, which allows nearly 20,000 asylum applicants to stay in the country as regular migrants and access rights.<sup>1838</sup> The program upholds the commitments undertaken in the 2023 Global Refugee Forum and reinforces the principles of the 2022 Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection.<sup>1839</sup>

861. Despite these efforts, in a thematic hearing before the Commission, civil society organizations explained that citizenship holders are facing difficulties because this regular migration status prevents them from securing Uruguayan nationality. In addition, the nationality in their passports is not Uruguayan, which prevents them from enjoying their freedom of movement when travelling to other countries and from accessing certain rights within Uruguay. In this regard, the State reaffirmed its commitment to international obligations and highlighted the steps taken to adjust legal frameworks and adopt public policies that guarantee the effective exercise of the rights of all its residents. It also expressed its willingness to keep discussing the right to nationality, as well as legal citizenship issues, and reassured that the State is committed to addressing these concerns.<sup>1840</sup>

862. As for persons deprived of liberty, university centers were opened at Units No. 3 and No. 20 of the National Rehabilitation Institute (INR), the latter located in Salto.<sup>1841</sup> Furthermore, some infrastructure improvement works were performed to improve detention conditions for women, which included new accommodation spaces<sup>1842</sup> and a specific unit for trans women.<sup>1843</sup> To foster crime-related policies, the enforcement of judgments issued by criminal courts and social reinsertion, an interinstitutional working group was created between the INDDHH and the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for the Penitentiary System.<sup>1844</sup> Also, a white book on prison reform is under way.<sup>1845</sup> In addition, the country adopted the San José Declaration aimed at institutional strengthening and networking, as well as the Global Action for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Deprived of Liberty, thus reaffirming its commitment to human rights in the penitentiary system.<sup>1846</sup>

863. Moreover, Uruguay still ranks fifth in the region, and tenth worldwide, in the list of countries with the highest detention rates.<sup>1847</sup> Between April 2023 and April 2024, the number of women detainees rose by 18 percent, whereas the number of male detainees increased by 6 percent. As of April 30, 2024, the penitentiary system had recorded an occupation rate of 121 percent, with an overcrowding rate of 47 percent for women and 19 percent for men.<sup>1848</sup> This situation was worsened by the lack of human, technical and material resources to adequately support the prison population, coupled with restrictions in accommodation, health, food and access to education, work and recreational activities due to insufficient supplies. Also, infectious diseases, such as tuberculosis and skin conditions, persist and pose serious challenges to the living conditions of detainees.<sup>1849</sup>

864. With respect to the rights of LGBTI persons, the State released a guide on how to comply with the employment quota for trans persons in public institutions, as required by Law No. 19,684.<sup>1850</sup> Conversely, some political leaders used stigmatizing speech, denying the existence of trans persons and rejecting their gender identity.<sup>1851</sup>

865. Finally, concerning the rights of indigenous peoples, Uruguay continued to discuss the conditions to enforce Convention No. 169 of the International Labour Organization (ILO) at the national level, despite the ongoing calls for measures recognizing and bringing visibility to indigenous peoples in Uruguay.<sup>1852</sup>

PARTIAL DISSENTING VOTE OF COMMISSIONER CARLOS BERNAL PULIDO ON CHAPTER IV.A DEVELOPMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE REGION - OVERVIEW OF THE HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION BY COUNTRY

With the customary respect for my colleagues and in accordance with Article 19.1 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights ("the Commission" or "the IACHR"), I submit a partial dissenting vote on certain points raised by the majority of the plenary of the Commission in Chapter IV. A of the 2024 Annual Report on the Development of Human Rights in the Region, Overview of the Human Rights Situation by Country (the "Report" or the "Annual Report").

I would like to highlight the relevance of this report and the judicious monitoring of the human rights situation in the region. I also salute the important effort made in the collection and systematization of the information included, although I consider that some statements are not properly substantiated. Likewise, as I have made clear on other occasions, given that the report included information on the State of Colombia, and that I am a national of that State, I abstain from participating in discussions and voting on that section.

Next, I will issue my partial dissenting vote in which I will highlight that the report: (i) contains considerations that pose a risk to pregnant persons and disregard integral needs of women; (ii) incorrectly uses the term "forced pregnancy"; (iii) inadequately addresses conscientious objection; (iv) incorrectly uses the concept of gender identity and other issues related to the LGBTI community; (v) omits the rights of parents vis-à-vis sex education; (vi) improperly uses the concept of "sex work". Finally, (vii) I will draw attention to the importance of using appropriate terminology.

1. Chapter IV. A contains considerations that pose a risk to pregnant women and ignore the integral needs of women

Paragraphs 179, 362, 405, 422, 424, 467, 553, 625 and 702 of the Report address various aspects related to the regulation of abortion, including: (i) different regulatory models; (ii) the celebration of its decriminalization; (iii) concern about the "absolute criminalization of abortion"; and (iv) the consideration that its criminalization generates "disproportionate" impacts on women's sexual and reproductive rights.

Next, I will analyze: (i) the non-existence of a right to abortion in international law and the margin of state configuration in the matter; (ii) the deficit of protection for the unborn in the considerations on abortion made in the report; and (iii) the Report's limited approach to reproductive health and contraceptive methods.

1.1. Non-existence of a right to abortion in international law and the margin of state configuration

As I have indicated on other occasions, there are no binding sources in international law -and especially in the American Convention or other treaties that make up the Inter-American System- that contemplate (i) the so-called right to abortion or (ii) a correlative obligation for the States to provide abortion services. Under this framework, States have a wide margin of configuration - by virtue of the principles of subsidiarity or complementarity and representative democracy - to take measures to protect prenatal life - which is protected by the American Convention<sup>1853</sup> - including, although it is not the only means, the use of criminal law.

In his partially dissenting opinion to the judgment in the case of Manuela et al. v. El Salvador, former IACHR Court Judge Eduardo Vio Grossi stated that there is no right to abortion:

"And in this regard it is indisputable that, (...) there is no inter-American or international legal norm, whether conventional, international custom or general principle of law, that recognizes abortion as a right. There are only resolutions of international bodies, most of which are made up of international officials and not representatives of States, decisions which, in addition to not being binding, are not interpretative of current international law but rather reflect aspirations to change it in the direction they suggest"<sup>1854</sup>.

In the case of Beatriz v. El Salvador, the IACHR and the representation of the victims alleged the existence of an alleged "right to abortion". However, it is important to note that the Court, in its judgment, did not recognize such a right<sup>1855</sup>. This reaffirms the inexistence of a binding legal source that establishes it.

However, the margin of configuration derived from this non-existence, together with the convergence of rights in tension, acquires greater amplitude due to the power of the States to define punishable conducts and their consequences. Furthermore, according to the IACHR Court, Article 7(2) of the American Convention automatically refers to domestic legislation with respect to the deprivation of liberty, in application of the principle of reservation of law.<sup>1856</sup>

Likewise, the sections in which these assessments are presented lack sufficient support to clearly substantiate the existence, within the Inter-American System, of a binding criterion that would allow the criminalization of abortion models to be classified as negative. In contrast, the binding conventional parameter is Article 4 of the ACHR, which, as I have pointed out on other occasions, protects the right to life from conception and requires the existence of regulatory frameworks that avoid an absolute deficit of protection for unborn children.

This is especially relevant if one considers that, according to a systematic reading of Articles 31, 76 and 77 of the American Convention, new international obligations in addition to those already established in the ACHR can only arise through consensus-manifested by the States through the signature and ratification of amendments or treaties.

In this sense, I conclude that, given that there is no right to abortion in the ISHR or clear rules on criminalization models, States have a wide margin of configuration in this matter.

Finally, the Report does not present sufficient documentary support to establish a relationship between the criminalization of abortion and the reported threats to women's sexual and reproductive rights. Furthermore, it is not possible to argue, in abstract terms, that the criminalization of abortion imposes a disproportionate burden on women, since: (i) the determination of whether or not a limitation on rights is proportional requires a case-by-case analysis; (ii) this general approach omits the necessary weighing of the rights of women and those of pregnant women; and (iii) it overlooks the fact that the regulatory models that criminalize abortion impact not only women, but also those who participate in these procedures.

1.2. Deficit of protection for the unborn in the Report

I emphasize that the references to abortion in the Report ignore the other person whose right to life is also conventionally protected: the unborn person. Thus, the necessary weighting that must exist between the rights in tension of all internationally protected persons is ignored. In this regard, it is emphasized that unborn persons are also subjects of law and holders of the right to life. A pronouncement on abortion always implies a position on a practice that necessarily implies the termination of the life of a dignified human being and that Article 4 of the ACHR protects, so it is necessary to expressly recognize the rights of the unborn person as part of the weighing required in any case of abortion.

In this regard, Article 1.2 of the ACHR clearly establishes that, for the purposes of the Convention, a "person" is every human being<sup>1857</sup>. Thus, in light of the Convention, human rights are not only recognized for persons who have already been born, but all individuals must be protected from their conception, understanding them as human beings. Moreover, the IACHR Court itself in its advisory opinion 22 indicated that, without being a matter open to interpretation, the term person is equivalent to the term human being for the purposes of the ACHR.<sup>1858</sup>

In view of this, there is no doubt that the unborn person is a human being<sup>1859</sup>. Even the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights states that "the human genome is the basis of the fundamental unity of all members of the human family and of the recognition of their inherent dignity and diversity. In a symbolic sense, the human genome is the heritage of humanity".<sup>1860</sup>

The consequence of recognizing the unborn as a person as a human being is that he or she becomes a holder of rights. Thus, the ACHR establishes in the articles that develop rights the formula "Every person (...)"<sup>1861</sup>. Likewise, the instruments for the protection of human rights generally recognize the ownership of rights by members of the human species, especially the right to life.<sup>1862</sup>

Furthermore, in the Artavia Murillo judgment, the Inter-American Court determined that "the protection of the right to life is not absolute, but gradual and incremental as the development of the fetus progresses". This implies that, without prejudice to the concepts of graduality and incrementality (from which I completely separate myself), the Court has already established that persons in gestation must be protected by the State in their "right to life". In a similar sense, in the judgment of the Cuscul Pivaral case<sup>1863</sup>, the IACHR Court applied the ACHR to a person in gestation and also applied Article 19 of the ACHR, thus recognizing the legal status of a child to the person in gestation.

Finally, I emphasize that the preamble of the Convention on the Rights of the Child states that the child needs protection and care both before and after birth<sup>1864</sup>. This implies that, in light of the CRC, the unborn person is a child who requires special care. This was reiterated in the preparatory work for the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.<sup>1865</sup>

1.3. Limited approach to reproductive health and contraceptive methods

Paragraph 243 of the Report states that:

"In addition, challenges persisted in access to reproductive health goods and services, including high rates of conscientious objection, limited access to contraceptives and family planning, stigmatization of women living with HIV and obstetric violence, with a particular impact on the most vulnerable women".

In this regard, I emphasize that it is not enough that the use of contraceptive methods be approved to guarantee women's sexual and reproductive rights, but that these measures must be accompanied by other measures of education and awareness-raising on the use of contraceptive methods in general, information on the specific physical effects they entail and their impact on the right to health. I emphasize that freedom in decision-making is not limited to the opening of options. True freedom comes when sufficient information is provided to make such decisions.

On this matter, the World Health Organization has indicated that the adoption of the contraceptive method will depend on "the general state of health of the person", among other criteria<sup>1866</sup>. This is of great relevance, since it shows that not every method is suitable for every person and that, in this context, the provision of such methods may represent a health risk in specific cases. Thus, it is essential that people receive adequate guidance on existing contraceptive methods so that they can make an informed choice of the most appropriate option for them.

Only with proper guidance can it be guaranteed that persons who use contraceptive methods give their informed consent, an essential guarantee that derives from the conventional text<sup>1867</sup>. With regard to informed consent, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has stated that:

"The concept of informed consent consists of a prior decision to accept or submit to a medical act in a broad sense, obtained freely, i.e. without threats or coercion, inducement or improper inducements, expressed after obtaining adequate, complete, reliable, understandable and accessible information, provided that this information has been truly understood, which will allow the full consent of the individual. Informed consent is the positive decision to undergo a medical act, derived from a process of prior, free and informed decision or choice, which constitutes a bidirectional mechanism of interaction in the doctor-patient relationship".<sup>1868</sup>

In relation to this, in the case of I.V. v. Bolivia, the Court reproached that the victim never had the possibility of knowing and weighing different alternatives of contraceptive methods<sup>1869</sup>. In this case, the IACHR emphasized the importance of people having the necessary information to make an informed decision. In this context, the Court highlighted the relevance of addressing the effects or impacts of the method for free choice.<sup>1870</sup>

Thus, the autonomy of individuals in the choice of contraceptive methods can only be guaranteed when they have the capacity to consent to their use or non-use with the necessary information.

2. Incorrect use of the term "forced pregnancy"

Paragraph 467 of the Report states the following:

"In addition, it warns of the disproportionate impact of the criminalization of abortion, such as exposure to criminal proceedings and forced pregnancies, the impediments to access therapeutic abortion services - the only one permitted under the current legal framework - even in cases of pregnancies of girls under 14 years of age considered high risk due to their nature, and the acts of public ridicule to which women are subjected when detained and accused of having an abortion" (Bolding outside the original text).

As I have pointed out in other dissenting opinions, the use of this term in the report is incorrect. Thus, in the first place, this term refers to an international crime regulated by international criminal law, without this being the context of the analysis carried out by the Commission. Secondly, even if this were the concept to which the Report would like to refer, the elements for the configuration of the crime are not met either.

Thus, the Rome Statute - by considering it a crime against humanity and a war crime - has defined it as "the unlawful confinement of a woman who has been forcibly impregnated"<sup>1871</sup>. Under this framework, in the development of the elements of the crimes, it has been identified that this conduct takes place when (i) "the perpetrator has confined one or more women who have become pregnant by force"<sup>1872</sup> and (ii) with the intent to modify the ethnic composition of a population or to commit another serious violation of international law<sup>1873</sup>. Therefore, the intent plays a determining role for the purposes of its concreteness. Hence, it is wrong (i) to associate a pregnancy resulting from rape - without ignoring its intrinsic gravity - with a forced pregnancy - the latter conduct does not necessarily always occur in these scenarios - or (ii) to equate - as paragraph 373 does - an unwanted pregnancy with a forced pregnancy.

Finally, I stress the importance of not interpreting the concept of forced maternity, or even forced pregnancy, in the sense of classifying as such any policy of prohibition of abortion. As I have stated on several occasions, there is no right to abortion, there is no obligation of the State to provide it and, on the contrary, the State does have the duty to protect the right to life from conception.

3. Inadequate approach to conscientious objection

Paragraph 179 of the Report states the following:

"179. On the other hand, the STF suspended the validity of the resolution of the Federal Council of Medicine in Brazil that prohibited the performance of legal abortions after 22 weeks of gestation. However, there continued to be obstacles to access to legal abortion, such as inadequate or delayed provision of health services, the demand for requirements that are not in the law, denial of service in cases permitted by law, misinformation, conscientious objection of medical personnel and the lack of these health services outside the state capitals. In addition, several bills have been introduced that seek to impose greater restrictions on access to sexual and reproductive health care. This in a context of high maternal mortality figures in the country, which reported 43,196 cases between January and August 2024, most of the victims being Afro-descendant women" (Bolted outside the original text).

Likewise, paragraphs 242, 243, and 405 establish conscientious objection as an impediment or challenge to access to abortion services. In turn, in paragraph 207, reference is made to the possibility of public officials to refrain from conducting training on LGBTI issues, in exercise of conscientious objection.

In this regard, I reiterate that the exercise of the right to freedom of conscience<sup>1874</sup> through the right to conscientious objection cannot be considered as an obstacle, impediment or challenge to other rights, such as the right to health, when access to abortion services has been granted domestically. This view is particularly dangerous and troubling coming from an international human rights such as the IACHR as it does not align with the intention of the OAS Assembly to seek to ensure that Member States fulfill their primary responsibility to respect, guarantee and protect all human rights, "including the right to freedom of conscience and religion or belief for all"<sup>1875</sup>

In fact, I note that far from constituting an obstacle, the exercise of conscientious objection constitutes a vehicle for the protection of various rights, such as: the right to freedom of conscience and religion, the right to honor and dignity, and the right not to be subjected to forced labor. Even the IACHR itself has recognized that conscientious objection arises as a guarantee of these rights<sup>1876</sup>. This position, in fact, has been upheld by the Human Rights Committee, which has found in conscientious objection a concretization or materialization of the right to freedom of conscience.<sup>1877</sup>

Now, it is clear that conscientious objection, like any right, can of course come into tension with other fundamental guarantees. While it is true that the exercise of freedom of conscience can be subject to limitations, it is also true that since it is a human right, its exercise cannot be stigmatized in a generalized manner, much less when it is being exercised in the context of abortion, where decisions on the limitation must be made on a case-by-case basis and in compliance with the requirements widely developed by the ISHR, making an adequate weighing between freedom of conscience and other rights such as the right to life.<sup>1878</sup>

At this point, I would like to clarify that this does not mean that there should be a weighing exercise between abortion and conscientious objection, given the non-existence of a right to abortion in the IACHR. In such a case, the weighing analysis should be based on rights such as the right to health.

In any case, an interpretation that seeks to annul conscientious objection in a generic manner in specific contexts and without taking into account the particularities of the cases would: (i) imply leaving conscientious objection without content in specific contexts and without taking into account the particularities of the cases; (i) would mean leaving freedom of conscience and religion without content; (ii) would imply consolidating a hierarchical vision of rights - far removed from the foundations of international human rights law; (iii) would completely depart from the logic of weighing rights and (iv) would represent, consequently, a very serious attack on one of the most important guarantees of the internal jurisdiction of every person.

4. On gender identity and other issues related to the LGBTI community

In paragraphs 64, 220, 247, 370, 422, 629, reference is made to: (i) the right to gender identity; (ii) the adaptation of identification documents to gender identity; (iii) the right to marriage for same-sex couples; (iv) the right to adoption; and (v) the prohibition of state funding for hormonal treatments for trans children and treatments aimed at modifying gender identity.

In this regard, I will now refer to: (i) the non-existence of the obligation to guarantee the rectification of the sex marker in identity documents for persons who identify themselves as transgender; (ii) the vision incorporated by the ACHR on marriage and the margin of configuration in matters of adoption; and (iii) the need for more information and academic and scientific rigor regarding gender affirmation therapies and hormone treatments.

4.1. No obligation to guarantee the rectification of the sex marker on identity documents for persons who identify as transgender.

Regarding the so-called "right to gender identity" and the adaptation of identification documents to gender identity, I reiterate that the American Convention does not expressly contemplate a right to gender identity, nor is there a binding instrument in the Inter-American system that establishes an obligation to adapt identification documents to gender identity.

As I have indicated, recognizing new rights that are not in the Convention through an interpretation that does not follow the procedures established in the Convention itself would undermine Articles 31, 76 and 77, ignoring the original will of the States that ratified the Convention.

Therefore, any pronouncement in which one of the organs of the ISHR applies a right that is not established in the binding instruments of international law that govern its activity will be an act that will violate the literal meaning of the American Convention and will exceed the scope of the competences of the IACHR or the Court, as the case may be. Such an irregular constitutive act would also undermine the principles of good faith and pacta sunt servanda.<sup>1879</sup>

By virtue of the above, given that there is no conventional right to gender identity in the ISHR, it is possible to affirm that there are no correlative obligations of recognition of this right on the part of the States either. On the other hand, although I am not unaware that OC-24/17 affirmed the existence of the so-called "right to gender identity" and an alleged obligation to adapt identification documents to the self-perceived gender identity in the terms indicated in this Chapter, I emphasize that the Advisory Opinions of the IACHR Court do not have the capacity to contemplate rights or obligations other than those expressly contemplated by the American Convention.<sup>1880</sup>

In this regard, in the first place, Article 68 of the Convention expressly states that the States are obliged to comply with the decisions rendered by the Court "in any case to which they are parties". This provision is of great relevance in that (i) it is the only one that refers to the legal value of the Court's pronouncements and (ii) it expressly limits the binding nature to the States parties to a case, thus limiting the addressee of the obligations -the State party to a case- and the context in which the pronouncement is issued -that is, the contentious one-. This position has also been sustained by some sectors of the doctrine, also based on the principle of consent of the States as the basis of conventional law.<sup>1881</sup>

Secondly, specifically regarding OC-24/17, it is appropriate to take into consideration Article 64 of the ACHR, which circumscribes the competence of the Court to issue advisory opinions regarding the Convention or treaties of the Inter-American System. Thus, given that OC-24/17 establishes alleged rights not contemplated in the ACHR, nor in any other treaty of the IAHRs, its binding nature is even more questionable.

Thirdly, to derive obligations or so-called rights not contemplated in the Convention, based exclusively on an advisory opinion, would be contrary to the principle of pacta sunt servanda that governs international treaty law, by virtue of which States are only bound to comply with that to which they have expressed their consent.<sup>1882</sup>

Fourth, although the Inter-American Court has affirmed that advisory opinions are parameters of conventionality control<sup>1883</sup>, I emphasize that an open and transparent inter-American dialogue is still necessary to further discuss this position, which is not expressly derived from the American Convention, nor from any other international instrument binding on the States. I call attention to the fact that there is still no consensus on the matter, neither in the States of the region nor in the academy; hence, important constitutional courts still refrain from invoking the figure of conventionality control and from incorporating advisory opinions as a parameter.<sup>1884</sup>

Finally, I note that some authors have indicated that the extension of the effects of advisory opinions could contribute to distort the functioning of the Inter-American System and, thus, weaken it, since (i) it results in equating decisions issued in the advisory function of the Court with the text of the convention itself<sup>1885</sup>, and (ii) it blurs the differences between the jurisdictional and advisory functions of the Court. Some have even indicated that these interpretations of the Court generate legal uncertainty, since there is no certainty as to the effects with which the advisory opinions are issued.<sup>1886</sup>

On the contrary, as I have stated in previous reasoned votes, gender identity, understood under the criterion of self-determination or self-perception, poses serious risks to the rights of persons, in general, and, in particular, to population groups with special inter-American protection, such as women. Insisting that States change even the sex markers on identity documents increases these risks, since it completely dilutes the differentiation of the sexes and truncates the application of affirmative measures for women.

The Commission must deliberate deeply on this matter, from a human rights perspective and with a differential approach, in order not to harm or frustrate affirmative measures in favor of women or other population groups with special inter-American protection.

If it is enough for a person to state that she perceives herself as a woman for the State to automatically recognize her as such, without any additional regulation or reasonable requirement, affirmative measures in favor of women will most likely lose their effectiveness, and the States will end up erasing the very identity of women and of any other population group.

On this, the then H. Justice Elizabeth Odio Benito was clear, explaining that:

"...] the central subject of feminism (and, in this case, of the violence exercised against women because they are women) is women and the specific oppression they suffer, its origin and impact. If we confuse the feminist struggle and replace the subject of feminism, if the subject of feminism ceases to be the biological woman to be a strange and confusing variable subjective identities, we must consider and put on the table the more than foreseeable negative impact it would have on decades of struggle and feminist theory. And not only feminism would disappear, but also the theory of human rights, which is also based not on feelings or self-perceptions, but on objective and scientific categories. Thus, one might ask: if sex, a material and scientific category, disappears, absorbed by "gender identity", an individual subjective perception, what would gender violence be based on? And what would female sex be reduced to? How would rape and other crimes of sexual violence against women be documented? How would the violence suffered by trans people be documented if the change of sex is something confidential that cannot be documented? And the wage differentials? And the discrimination in access to education at all levels, formal and informal? There are many more questions. But these few are enough to show the chaos and the regression we are facing".<sup>1887</sup>

I take advantage of the considerations of then Judge Elizabeth Odio Benito to insist on the defense of the value that exists in being biologically female or male, which is not equivalent to reducing the identity of a person only to his or her biological sex.

Therefore, if international human rights law erases biological sex and measures with a differential approach based precisely on the criterion of biological sex, it would deprive the protection of population groups such as women of any rational basis. If the majority position continues to promote absolute legal recognition of self-perceived or self-determined gender identity, it will hinder - if not annul - the effectiveness of countless special protection measures.

4.2. Same-sex couples: disregard of the vision incorporated by the ACHR on marriage and margin of configuration in adoption matters

Regarding the "right to marriage of same-sex couples" and the "right to adoption" mentioned in the report, first of all, I reiterate that there is no treaty provision that obliges States to recognize same-sex marriages. As I have mentioned on several occasions, the treaties that are part of the Inter-American Human Rights System and grant competence to the Inter-American Commission to address contentious cases do not contemplate any obligation with respect to the recognition of marriage between same-sex couples. This absence of obligation derives from the literal wording of the American Convention, which clearly establishes that marriage is a right reserved for "man and woman:"

"The right of men and women to marry and to found a family if they are of age and meet the conditions required by domestic law, insofar as these do not affect the principle of non-discrimination established in this Convention, is recognized."<sup>1888</sup> (Boldface outside of original text).

Therefore, in accordance with the hermeneutic principle that calls for a literal and good faith interpretation<sup>1889</sup>, the State is only obliged to recognize the right to marriage for the couples specifically mentioned in Article 17(2) of the American Convention.

It is essential to underline that, according to the jurisprudence of the International Court of Justice, the good faith interpretation of a treaty should not result in changes in the literal meaning of the treaties or in inferring what is not expressly contained in the text. This approach implies that the interpreter must assume that the parties intended what follows from the ordinary meaning of the terms used in the international agreement<sup>1890</sup>. The text-centered approach to treaty interpretation is not only accepted in the field of international law, but is also highly recommended, since it is based on the only empirically verifiable evidence of the intentions of States: the text of the treaty itself.<sup>1891</sup>

Following these rules of interpretation, the European Court of Human Rights has considered the conception of marriage as that between a man and a woman - as established in the European Convention on Human Rights, in a provision similar to that of the ACHR.<sup>1892</sup> In this sense, the European Court supports the idea that there is no binding obligation for States to recognize marriage between same-sex couples, which leaves a wide margin of State configuration for the regulation of this matter.<sup>1893</sup> Likewise, in terms of the European Court of Human Rights:

"The Court reiterates that, according to Article 14 in conjunction with Article 8, States are free to restrict marriage only to opposite-sex couples and have a certain margin of configuration to decide the exact nature of the legal status granted by other means of legal recognition."<sup>1894</sup>

On this point, it is worth noting that this same approach is upheld by the European Court in the cases Orlandi v. Italy<sup>1895</sup> and Fedotova and others v. Russia.<sup>1896</sup> Indeed, in both cases, the European Court held that, although States must provide mechanisms for the protection of same-sex unions, this protection does not necessarily derive from the recognition of same-sex marriages.

Within this framework, I fully agree that the margin available to States in this regard concerns both the form of recognition and the content of the protection to be granted to same-sex couples, which, of course, cannot translate into an absolute absence of protection for same-sex couples.

Finally, I would like to point out that there is no international instrument that establishes obligations of recognition regarding adoption for same-sex couples, so that the States have a wide margin of configuration in this matter. However, I emphasize, as I have done on other occasions, that any decision in this regard must be based on the principle of the best interests of the child or adolescent, always guaranteeing his or her well-being and integral development.<sup>1897</sup>

4.3. The need for more information and academic and scientific rigor regarding gender affirming therapies and hormonal treatments.

Finally, regarding the prohibition of state funding for hormone treatments for trans children and treatments aimed at modifying gender identity, I reiterate that there is a need for the Commission to deepen these discussions with scientific arguments in order to address them comprehensively. In particular, there are studies that indicate the damage that can be caused by having undergone hormone treatments during adolescence.<sup>1898</sup>

Moreover, in the case of children and young people, it is essential that their capacity to consent to hormone treatments be taken into account and assessed. Indeed, it is necessary to have an in-depth discussion on the negative effects linked to these treatments and to harmonize this information with the statements made by the Commission.

The same holds for Article 14 taken in conjunction with Article 12 (see Oliari and Others, cited above, § 193)." (Translation: The Court reiterates that States remain free under Article 12 of the Convention, as well as Article 14 in conjunction with Article 8, to restrict access to marriage to different sex couples. The same applies to Article 14 in conjunction with Article 12). Para. 192.

<sup>1896</sup> In this case, the Court analyzed -only- the possible violation of Article 8 of the ECHR, which refers to the right of individuals not to be subjected to arbitrary interference by the State in their private life. In the case of same-sex couples, the Court established that the lack of a legal framework that allows same-sex couples to have their relationship recognized and protected under national law may generate significant obstacles in the daily life of these couples. Without prejudice to the foregoing, it established that the State may enjoy a margin of appreciation to determine the form of registration of same-sex unions, which implies that this registration should not necessarily be through the figure of marriage.

<sup>1897</sup> The Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) enshrines in Article 3.2 that "States undertake to ensure the child such protection and care as is necessary for his or her well-being, taking into account the rights and duties of his or her parents, legal guardians or other persons legally responsible for him or her".

Indeed, scholars argue that there are long-term studies that show - in individuals who have undergone gender affirming or hormonal treatments - an increase in morbidity and mortality and a risk of suicide after transition.<sup>1899</sup>

These elements cannot be ignored by the Commission; especially when this body has the mandate to promote and defend human rights in the region, including the right to health.

5. On the failure to consider the rights of parents with regard to sex education

Paragraph 422 of the Report states the following:

"In this context, it is of concern that the directive of the Ministry of Education that banned the misnamed "gender ideology" in educational institutions, without explaining its scope, restricting access to comprehensive sex education, which hinders the implementation of the National Intersectoral Strategy for the Prevention of Pregnancy in Girls and Adolescents (ENIPENA)."

On the other hand, in paragraphs 138, 257, 276, 311, 450, and 505, reference was made to restrictions on access to comprehensive sex education, among others, when such education refers to matters related to gender or sexual diversity.

First, I consider that with these considerations the IACHR ignored the duty to protect the best interests of children and adolescents and to avoid hypersexualization. As I have mentioned previously, hypersexualization represents a risk that disproportionately affects the population of children. This has been recognized by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in General Comment 20, stating that "[t]he digital environment may also expose adolescents to risks, including (...) hypersexualization."<sup>1900</sup> This has been reiterated by the Committee in several reports, in which it has stated that hypersexualization is a problem that must be addressed by States, since it puts the rights of children and adolescents at risk.<sup>1901</sup>

It is reiterated that sex education, therefore, should be a means to prevent the hypersexualization of children and adolescents<sup>1902</sup> and not a mechanism to promote it. Consistent with this, the ECtHR has established that for sex education to be in accordance with the Convention, it must aim to provide children with correct, accurate, objective and scientific knowledge on the subject, presented in an age-appropriate manner.<sup>1903</sup>

Complaints have been filed all over the world about the hypersexualization of educational materials; this calls for very strict regulation by the States and vigilance and research in these matters.<sup>1904</sup> In the United States, multiple bills have been introduced to establish the right of parents to know the education their children receive in matters such as gender identity.<sup>1905</sup> Also, multiple states have banned educational materials that include references contrary to the best interests of the child.<sup>1906</sup>

Finally, there was no adequate balance between the rights and subjects involved in the discussion regarding comprehensive sexual education, in particular, the right of parents to choose the education of their children, which is especially relevant in these discussions since, according to Article 12.4 of the ACHR, "[p]arents, and where appropriate guardians, have the right to ensure that their children or wards receive a religious and moral education in accordance with their own convictions". As mentioned above, this same guarantee has been provided for in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>1907</sup>, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights<sup>1908</sup>, the Convention on the Rights of the Child<sup>1909</sup> and the Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights<sup>1910</sup>. According to the ECtHR, the right of parents to choose their children's education, including sex education, is an aspect of the right to respect for private and family life protected by the ECHR.<sup>1911</sup>

In this regard, I reiterate that there is a consensus on the existence and recognition of this right of parents. The Inter-American Commission has understood that the right of parents to choose the education of their children (i) must be interpreted in conjunction with the rights of children and adolescents, especially the right to education<sup>1912</sup> and (ii) must respect the provisions of the Inter-American instruments that establish that education must be oriented to train children to respect human rights, public freedoms and tolerance<sup>1913</sup>.

Of course I agree with these criteria, however, it cannot be omitted that: (i) all types of education must be respectful of the best interests of children as a guiding principle, and (ii) the right of parents to choose the education of their children is derived from the right to education of children itself; therefore, there is a false dilemma in considering that both rights are incompatible.

Thus, the ECtHR, in its interpretation of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1, has stated that,<sup>1914</sup> it is on the fundamental right to education that the right of parents to respect for their philosophical and religious convictions is based. According to the European Court of Human Rights, although the ownership of this right rests with the parents, it also rests with the children, who have the right to education and teaching.<sup>1915</sup>

Undoubtedly, this right has an impact on the sexual education of children and adolescents since sexual education, like any other type of education, must be framed within the scope of protection of conventional law, recognized by international human rights law, which grants parents the right to choose the education of their children, in accordance with Article 12.4 of the Convention. However, the Commission did not take this right into account when criticizing the State's actions.

Finally, it should be noted that the term "gender ideology" is not incorrect, but has been a concept that has been widely studied and defined in the doctrine. Therefore, it is problematic to silence or stigmatize those who use this term.

6. Misuse of the concept of "sex work"

Paragraphs 497, 504, 686, and 714 refer to the expressions "sex workers" and "sex work". In this regard, I disagree with the use of these expressions to refer to prostitution and the women who are subjected to this practice. As mentioned by the Special Rapporteur on violence against women and girls, its causes and consequences, in her May 2024 report on prostitution, these terms "erroneously describe prostitution as an activity as dignified as any other work. It fails to take into account the gross human rights violations that characterize the prostitution system and involves psychological manipulation of the victims and their experiences."<sup>1916</sup> Instead of "sex workers" I suggest that, in line with the report referenced at the bottom of the page, the term prostituted persons, women or girls be used as a recognition of the magnitude of the harm experienced by women and girls subjected to prostitution.

However, I emphasize the importance that the measures taken to protect prostituted persons must respect differential approaches in relation to biological women and persons identified as "trans women", because the experiences, risks, degree of vulnerability and health needs that each group experiences are different, depending on their biological differences and the conditions that influenced them to be prostituted.

As I have done previously and because it is relevant to the present analysis, I share the position held in the dissenting vote in the Vicky Hernández case by former Judge Elizabeth Odio Benito, who considered that mistakenly mixing specific regimes for the protection of groups in situations of vulnerability entails the risk of making invisible the particular struggles of each one and diluting the concrete forms of violence, so that they are not properly analyzed and counteracted.<sup>1917</sup> The former Judge considered that confusing the biological category of "woman" and replacing it with "gender identity" contributes to reducing decades of struggle to achieve equality between the female and male sexes, and women themselves, to a strange and confusing variable of subjective identities.<sup>1918</sup>

I agree with former Judge Odio Benito, in turn, that the situations of violence and discrimination suffered by people who identify as transgender are not the same as those suffered by people who are biologically female. Therefore, protection systems must apply the instruments and specific standards of protection in a differential and appropriate manner for each vulnerable group.

7. On the use of appropriate terminology

In paragraph 412 of the Report, it was indicated:

"412. During 2024, the IACHR continued to receive information on human rights violations related to citizen security operations against persons allegedly linked to gangs in the context of the emergency regime" (Bolding outside the original text).

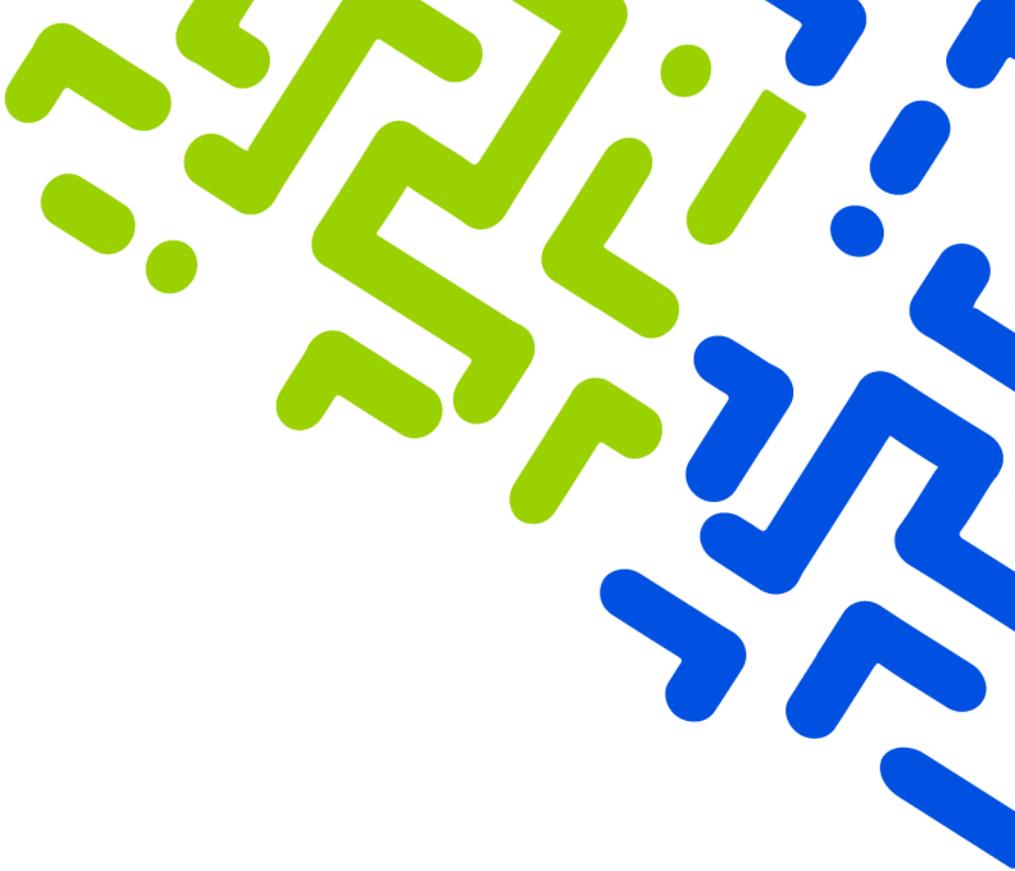

In this regard, I suggest that, for the sake of methodological rigor, the expression "alleged" should always be included to qualify "human rights violations". This is because, as it is written, it would seem that the IACHR is establishing the responsibility of the State for committing human rights violations, for which it does not have jurisdiction since we are not in a quasi-judicial scenario. At the same time, this affects subsidiarity, since pronouncements are made on violations of rights without having studied whether the State had the opportunity to resolve them.

CHAPTER IV.B

CUBA

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has consistently held that it is competent to examine the human rights situation in Cuba and to process individual petitions submitted by Cuban citizens. The Commission considers that the exclusion from the inter-American system occurred with respect to the Government of Cuba, not the State. The State of Cuba is party to international instruments on human rights in the Hemisphere, such as the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man and the Charter of the Organization of American States; it also signed Resolution VIII of the Fifth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs (Santiago, Chile, 1959), which established that the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights is “charged with furthering respect for such rights.” Therefore, the international obligations entered into the State of Cuba have legitimized the competence of the IACHR.

2. Furthermore, with respect to the States that have not ratified the American Convention on Human Rights, the States conferred on the Commission the power “to pay particular attention to the observance of the human rights referred to in Articles I, II, III, IV, XVIII, XXV and XXVI of the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man,” as established in Article 20(a) of the Statute of the IACHR. Accordingly, it is incumbent on the IACHR to monitor human rights in Cuba.

3. In the exercise of its competence to promote and protect human rights in the Americas, the Commission followed up on the human rights situation in Cuba, in particular the events of 2024, which could have a bearing on the full enjoyment of human rights.

4. The IACHR published its latest country report on Cuba in June 2020, which provides an overview of the human rights situation in the country between 2017 and 2019.<sup>1</sup> Following the publication of that report, the IACHR continued to monitor the human rights situation in Cuba and noted that the main concerns identified in the report persisted and were exacerbated in recent years. Since 2021, the IACHR has decided to continue to publish special reports on Cuba in Chapter IV-B of its Annual Report.

5. Also, in April 2023, the IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship for Economic, Social, Cultural, and Environmental Rights (REDESCA) published a thematic report on labor and trade union rights in Cuba. In connection with that report, they were able to identify patterns of violation of labor and union rights, related to the following: (a) discrimination and persecution for political reasons in the workplace; (b) workplace harassment; (c) impediments to access to justice in labor-related matters; (d) violations of due process; (e) insufficient wages to meet basic needs; (f) unjustified obstacles to freedom to choose a profession; (g) gender discrimination; (h) violation of academic freedoms; (i) lack of trade union and professional association freedoms; and (j) abusive disciplinary measures.<sup>2</sup>

6. During 2024, the IACHR continued to take cognizance of various facts that constituted obstacles to the enjoyment of the rights of persons under the jurisdiction of the Cuban State, such as arbitrary restrictions to the right to assembly and association, and to freedom of expression and dissemination of thought - particularly in the context of the various social protests that have occurred in the country since July 2021, and that continued in 2022, 2023, and 2024 -.

7. In addition, the IACHR notes that Cuba continues to face structural human rights challenges. These challenges are rooted in the aforementioned absence of the essential elements of representative democracy, especially the continuity of a single-party model, the absence of free elections and political pluralism, and the prohibition of association for political purposes.

8. This political model of the State has a negative impact on human rights in two main ways. On the one hand, there is an active tendency on the part of the State to systematically intimidate and repress those who express disagreement with the government or are considered dissidents/opponents of the Communist Party. On the other, it prevents implementation of the reforms needed to reestablish the separation and independence of public powers, improve living conditions, and combat impunity in cases of human rights violations.

9. In addition, the IACHR continued to receive numerous complaints of massive violations of freedom, security, and personal integrity; of protection against arbitrary detention; of inviolability of the home; and of Cubans' freedom of movement and circulation. The IACHR also continues to observe serious ongoing violations of minimum judicial guarantees and judicial protection. The Commission ascertained that these human rights violations have mainly affected human rights defenders, dissident social and political leaders, activists and independent journalists, as well as Afro-descendants, women, LGBTI people, and other vulnerable groups.

10. In evaluating the human rights situation in Cuba in 2024, the IACHR decided to include the country in Chapter IV-B of its annual report, given that it considers that the country's situation falls within the provisions of Article 59, paragraph 6.a.i of its Rules of Procedure, which refers to:

- (a) a serious breach of the core requirements and institutions of representative democracy mentioned in the Inter-American Democratic Charter, which are essential means of achieving human rights, including:
  - (i) there is discriminatory access to or abusive exercise of power that undermines or denies the rule of law, such as systematic infringement of the independence of the judiciary or lack of subordination of State institutions to the legally constituted civilian authority;

11. The IACHR also found that the foregoing situation meets the criteria set forth in Article 59(6)(c) of the Rules of Procedure, which provides that:

- (c)[t]he State has committed or is committing massive, serious, and widespread violations of human rights guaranteed in the American Declaration, the American Convention, or the other applicable human rights instruments.

12. In accordance with Article 59.5 of its Rules of Procedure, in preparing this report, the Commission relied on information provided by international agencies, civil society organizations, and the Government itself through its official Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Cuba website and other official media. The IACHR has also relied on information obtained through its other monitoring and protection mechanisms, such as, inter alia, the system of petitions and cases, precautionary measures, and public hearings. The IACHR analyzes the information received in light of Inter-American human rights norms and standards and issues recommendations to the State. It also takes this opportunity to report on the activities carried out during 2024 with respect to Cuba.

13. As part of the process of preparing this report, the Commission received abundant information from civil society organizations, particularly in connection with the four meetings of the Network of Civil Society Organizations regarding the human rights situation in Cuba (RED Cuba) held in 2024. With this initiative, the IACHR has been reinforcing its strategic monitoring of the human rights situation in the country through its various mechanisms and mandates, while promoting inter-American standards for the protection of human rights in a more synergistic manner and in direct and constant cooperation with civil society. In addition, RED Cuba meetings have successfully increased the exchange of information, the receipt of complaints, and the reception of specialized inputs from civil society.

14. The IACHR approved this report on December 10th, 2024. On January 24th, 2025, the Commission sent the State a copy of the preliminary draft of this report in accordance with Articles 59(7) and 59(10) of its Rules of Procedure, giving it one month to submit its comments. The State did not submit any observations.

II. DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTIONS AND THE RULE OF LAW

15. Article XX of the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man (1948) establishes that: "Every person having legal capacity is entitled to participate in the government of his country, directly or through his representatives, and to take part in popular elections, which shall be by secret ballot, and shall be honest, periodic and free."<sup>3</sup>

16. Moreover, upon adopting the Inter-American Democratic Charter in 2001, the OAS member states recognized that representative democracy is the system through which stability, peace, and development in the region can be achieved, and that it is fundamental for attaining the full exercise of fundamental rights. Article 3 of the Inter-American Democratic Charter<sup>4</sup> states that:

Essential elements of representative democracy include, inter alia, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, access to and the exercise of power in accordance with the rule of law, the holding of periodic, free, and fair elections based on secret balloting and universal suffrage as an expression of the sovereignty of the people, the pluralistic system of political parties and organizations, and the separation of powers and independence of the branches of government.<sup>5</sup>

17. For its part, by way of reference, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (Inter-American Court of Human Rights), in the case of San Miguel Sosa et al. vs. Venezuela (2018), indicated that the Inter-American Democratic Charter "is a rule of authentic interpretation of the treaties to which it refers, since it reflects the interpretation that the OAS Member States themselves, including the States Parties to the Convention, make of the norms pertaining to democracy in both the OAS Charter and the Convention."<sup>6</sup> Thus, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights concluded that "the effective exercise of democracy in the American States is, therefore, an international legal obligation and they have sovereignly agreed that such exercise is no longer a matter solely for their domestic, internal or exclusive jurisdiction."<sup>7</sup>

18. At the same time, the IACHR teaches that the exercise of the right to political participation implies "the right to organize parties and political associations, which through open discussion and ideological struggle, can improve the social level and economic circumstances of the masses and prevent a monopoly on power by any one group or individual."<sup>8</sup> In addition, the Commission has considered that:

Governments have, in the face of political rights and the right to political participation, the obligation to permit and guarantee: the organization of all political parties and other associations, unless they are constituted to violate human rights; open debate of the principal themes of socioeconomic development; the celebration of general and free elections with all the necessary guarantees so that the results represent the popular will.<sup>9</sup>

19. Accordingly, as reflected in its annual reports, the IACHR has postulated a direct relationship between the exercise of political rights and the concept of democracy as a form of governmental organization, which, in turn, implies the exercise of other fundamental human rights.<sup>10</sup> Indeed, for the IACHR, the concept of representative democracy is based on the principle that political sovereignty resides with the people and that, in the exercise of that sovereignty, they elect their representatives to exercise political power. These representatives are also elected by citizens to implement specific policy measures, which in turn implies that there has been broad debate on the nature of the policies to be applied – freedom of expression – among organized political groups – freedom of association – that have had the opportunity to express themselves and meet publicly – right of assembly.<sup>11</sup> The exercise of political rights is therefore inseparable from other fundamental human rights.

A. Serious violation of the fundamental elements and institutions of representative democracy

20. Pursuant to Article 59, paragraph 6.a.i of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR considers that there exists in Cuba a serious violation of the fundamental elements and institutions of representative democracy, including an abusive exercise of power that contravenes the rule of law through the systematic infringement of the independence of the Judiciary. There are three structural reasons for this: (1) continuity of a single-party political model; (2) concentration of faculties and powers in the management of public affairs; (3) subordination of the administration of justice to political power.

1. Continuity of a single-party model

21. The current Cuban Constitution promulgated in 2019 confirmed the establishment of the Communist Party of Cuba (PCC) as the superior driving force of the society and the State and, effectively, the only party in Cuba.<sup>12</sup> The Commission notes that this results, formally and in practice, in the non-existence of opposition political parties and of diverse schools of thought.<sup>13</sup>

22. Likewise, although Cuba's electoral law establishes active and passive suffrage for Cuban citizens without ideological restrictions,<sup>14</sup> in practice, as indicated to the IACHR,<sup>15</sup> the Candidacy Commissions<sup>16</sup> -bodies in charge of preparing and presenting the draft candidacies for deputies to the National Assembly of People's Power and filling the positions elected by this and the municipal assemblies of People's Power- reportedly continue to act as an ideological filter in order to ensure that people who do not identify with official state views and the PCC do not occupy public elective positions.

23. Thus, the Commission notes that, although de jure the law allows free political participation of citizens, de facto the Communist Party reportedly continues to regulate, control, and direct electoral processes in the country. Furthermore, the Commission notes that the official departure of former President Raúl Castro from the leadership of the Communist Party in 2021 did not result in changes with respect to political participation or in openness to party and ideological pluralism.<sup>17</sup>

24. During 2024, the National Electoral Council of Cuba conducted multiple electoral processes to fill vacant seats in the Municipal Assemblies of People's Power,<sup>18</sup> in accordance with the provisions of Article 144 of the 2019 Electoral Law.<sup>19</sup> In this regard, the Commission took note of the complaints made by civil society organizations regarding the lack of transparency of these processes. In particular, they mentioned the lack of information surrounding the vacancies and the reasons for them, the constituencies involved, and voter turnout or results.<sup>20</sup>

25. Also, on May 4, special indirect elections<sup>21</sup> were held in Cuba to renew the governorships of the provinces of Matanzas, Cienfuegos, Villa Clara, and Santiago de Cuba. Civil society organizations referred to this process as "ghost voting" (votación fantasma) due to the lack of information and the fact that the delegates of the Municipal Assemblies of People's Power in the respective provinces did not have the option of rejecting the candidacies proposed by the President of the Republic.<sup>22</sup>

26. As indicated by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the case of Castañeda Gutman v. Mexico of 2008, although the Inter-American system does not impose a specific electoral system or a specific means of exercising the rights to vote and to be elected, there are general guidelines that determine a minimum content of political rights that must be observed.<sup>23</sup> Consequently, as highlighted by the Court in the case of Yatama v. Nicaragua of 2005, "the full scope of political rights cannot be restricted in such a way that their regulation or the decisions adopted in application of this regulation prevent people from participating effectively in the governance of the State or cause this participation to become illusory, depriving such rights of their essential content."<sup>24</sup>

27. In the case of Cuba, the IACHR observes that the single-party system and the monopoly of power in a single political group negate the fundamental essence of political rights, by, inter alia, permanently restricting the exercise of political participation. This, in turn, fosters a political structure characterized by the absence of democratic institutions.

2. Concentration of powers and authority for the conduct of public affairs

28. According to Article 3 of the Inter-American Democratic Charter, the separation of powers and independence of the branches of government are essential elements of democracy. In this regard, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights specified, in Advisory Opinion No. 28 of 2021, that:

In this regard, the Inter-American Court has stated that "The separation of State powers into different branches and organs is linked closely with the aim of preserving related freedoms, with the understanding that concentration of power leads to tyranny and oppression. At the same time, the separation of State powers allows for the efficient fulfillment of the various aims entrusted to the State."<sup>25</sup>

29. In the same vein, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights considers that "the separation and independence of powers assumes the existence of a system of controls and oversight to constantly regulate the balance of powers."<sup>26</sup> This system of "checks and balances" would therefore require the existence of guarantees that allow the powers to act freely and autonomously, without interference or subordination to one another.<sup>27</sup>

30. In the case of Cuba, the foundations of the State and the characteristics of the branches of government show that the main powers for the conduct of public affairs remain concentrated in a small number of authorities. The Commission observes that the National Assembly of People's Power (ANPP) continues to be an institution with very high concentration of functions, including broad powers to adopt laws and appoint the leaders of the main judicial, oversight, and administrative institutions.<sup>28</sup> In addition, it can dismiss officials, a role that could affect independent and impartial decision-making.<sup>29</sup>

31. The Commission considers that this structure, which did not change in 2024, continues to create an environment in which political affiliation and loyalty to the government and its ideology become fundamental requirements to access and remain in such positions. This situation perpetuates a structure in which power and decision-making remain concentrated in the ruling political group, rather than being based on diverse and truly democratic representation. It also makes it impossible to implement reforms in the country.

3. Subordination of the administration of justice to political power

32. Regarding the right to justice, the American Declaration contemplates in Article XVIII that: "Every person may resort to the courts to ensure respect for his legal rights. There should likewise be available to him a simple, brief procedure whereby the courts will protect him from acts of authority that, to his prejudice, violate any fundamental constitutional rights."<sup>30</sup> The Declaration also provides in Article XXVI the right to due

In addition, it elects the President and Justices of the People's Supreme Court, the Attorney General of the Republic, the Comptroller General of the Republic, and the President and members of the National Electoral Council. process of law, establishing that “Every person accused of an offense has the right to be given an impartial and public hearing, and to be tried by courts previously established in accordance with pre-existing laws, and not to receive cruel, infamous or unusual punishment.”<sup>31</sup>

33. In addition, with respect to judicial independence, the Commission has discussed how critical the guarantee of independence is to the administration of justice, as it is a condition sine qua non for compliance with the standards of due process established by international law.<sup>32</sup> The IACHR has emphasized that independence is two dimensional: the first dimension is institutional or systemic, while the second is functional, referring to justice operators’ individual independence in performing their functions. Regarding the first dimension, it has pointed out that the independence of the Judiciary must be guaranteed by the State and proclaimed by the Constitution or legislation of the country.<sup>33</sup> The IACHR also stresses the importance of judges they need to be guaranteed as soon as they are elected for carrying out their work independently, impartially, in accordance with the law, and with respect for human rights.<sup>34</sup>

34. In the case of Cuba, the Commission notes that although Article 150 of the 2019 Constitution states that “Magistrates and judges, in their function of imparting justice, are independent and do not owe obedience except to the law.”<sup>35</sup>, testimonies gathered by the IACHR from former members of the Cuban Judicial System indicate that, in practice, judicial independence is not respected. The following accounts in particular are worth highlighting:

Judicial independence, as established by the Constitution, the law of the courts and the law of the prosecution, is not achieved in practice. Everything is judicial arbitrariness in all senses and processes. [...] Since the complaint is filed, the investigative process is opened, and it is presented to the court, arbitrariness has been verified. Everything is directed by the Communist Party and the interests of the Government, structures that have the “leading voice” in all the processes in which they have an interest.<sup>36</sup>

Judicial independence is highly compromised in Cuba, since all the actors have to be part of the Communist Party of Cuba. Independence is very well conceived from the legal and constitutional point of view, but, in practice, the pressures to which we are subjected force us away from what we would like to do.<sup>37</sup>

35. The Commission also notes that the Assemblies of People's Power continue to have a high degree of interference in the appointment of judges, who are accountable to it for their actions and can be revoked by the body that elects them.<sup>38</sup> In this way, judges who do not conform to the government's ideology are persecuted and removed from office, undermining the integrity of the judicial system.<sup>39</sup> With regard to the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic, the Constitution provides that it is an indivisible organic unit subordinate to the President of the Republic.<sup>40</sup> In the Commission's opinion, these provisions violate the fundamental principle of separation of powers and negatively affect public confidence in the impartiality of the judicial system.

36. The Commission notes that the absence of judicial independence has serious repercussions on judges' decisions. In specific cases of dissidents and activists, there are complaints regarding a lack of impartiality and guarantees such as the right to a public trial are not fully respected.<sup>41</sup>

37. Thus, in the framework of the follow-up hearing on precautionary measures for beneficiaries deprived of liberty held on November 7, 2023, during the 188th Period of Sessions, the Commission took note of comments by civil society regarding structural violations of due process, such as: the absence of judicial protection in cases of deprivation of liberty; the non-existence of independent defense attorneys; legal organizational dependence of judges and courts on political power; restrictions on the use of evidence and the right to defense; summary proceedings with verbal sentences of which there is no documentary record; and the use of military criminal proceedings against civilians.<sup>42</sup>

38. In turn, in the report on labor and trade union rights in Cuba, published in April 2023, the IACHR highlighted serious impairments of due process in the framework of labor-related proceedings, including: the lack of independence and impartiality of the Labor Justice bodies; failure to substantiate rulings handed down in labor cases; the lack of effective review of the rulings of Labor Justice Organs by Municipal Courts, which should be functioning as a second instance; and the difficulties in obtaining legal representation through the National Organization of Collective Law Firms and, even when it is possible to obtain it, it could be biased. According to complaints from civil society organizations, there is extensive government interference in the National Organization of Collective Law Firms.<sup>43</sup>

39. On this last point, during the hearing on freedom of association in Cuba held on February 29, 2024 during the 189th Session, the Commission noted the restrictions on the right to practice law.<sup>44</sup> Attorneys who are not members of the National Organization of Collective Law Firms are prohibited from practicing before the courts. In addition, to be a lawyer, a person must meet certain "morality requirements" determined by the ideology of the State; not have been convicted of an intentional crime that "dishonors the public concept", nor be subject to criminal proceedings for such a crime; and not exercise judicial, fiscal, administrative, or arbitration functions.<sup>45</sup>

40. In this regard, the Commission notes that the functioning of the judicial system in Cuba reflects the subordination of the Judiciary to the political power, which results in the lack of real independence and autonomy of the public authorities, and leads to the absolute lack of legal certainty, effective access to justice, and judicial protection. This has a direct impact on the violation of the rights to justice (Article XVIII) and to due process of law (Article XXVI) as established in the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man. Ultimately, the lack of independence of the Judiciary undermines its ability to guarantee the full exercise of human rights. It therefore not only compromises its ability to provide fair and impartial trials in the interest of securing human rights but also threatens the rule of law as a whole.

III. SITUATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN CUBA

A. Massive, gross, and systematic violations of human rights

41. For decades, the IACHR has continued to ascertain, with extreme concern, arbitrary restrictions on the right to assembly and free expression of the population, as well as the persistence of violations of the right to liberty, security, and integrity of individuals, of protection from arbitrary detention, inviolability of the home, minimum judicial guarantees, and judicial protection, to which political dissidents, social leaders, activists, human rights defenders, and independent journalists are subjected. In particular, between 2021 and 2024, the IACHR warned that repression of dissent has got worse, especially since the July 2021 protests in Cuba.<sup>46</sup>

42. In 2024, the IACHR continued to observe systematic repression by state agents and pro-government groups seeking to prevent peaceful gatherings and protests organized by people who dissent from the positions imposed by the government in the country. Repressive practices have included, inter alia, arbitrary detentions, criminalization, house arrests, surveillance, interrogations, threats, fines, and internet shutdowns. All this is taking place in a context of deep social and economic crisis, which has included power outages for prolonged periods of time, making it difficult to access essential basic goods, already in short supply, such as food, water, and medicines.

43. The Commission considers that these state practices constitute massive, serious, and systematic violations of human rights. This conclusion is based on the large number of victims, the seriousness of the actions undertaken, and the existence of certain patterns of conduct carried out with state resources in response to a policy defined and endorsed by the top echelons of the state. Therefore, the IACHR considers that the current human rights situation in Cuba is covered by the provisions of Article 59, paragraph 6.c of its Rules of Procedure.

44. The following are the main rights violations identified in 2024.

Human rights defenders

45. In 2024, human rights defenders in Cuba continued to carry out their defense and denunciation activities under a hostile environment characterized by repressive actions against them by the State and total curtailment of civic liberties. In the course of its monitoring activities, the IACHR observed that human rights defenders in the country face arbitrary detentions, house arrests, threats and coercion, surveillance, internal mobility restrictions, and police summonses, among other obstacles.<sup>47</sup>

46. Civil society organizations have notified the Commission of patterns of repression that are intended to silence and obstruct the work of human rights organizations.<sup>48</sup> In particular, the Commission has learned of threats and intimidation directed at human rights defenders. For example, activist Yamilka Laffita publicly denounced having been the victim of death threats through social networks due to her humanitarian work.<sup>49</sup> For their part, Consuelo Rodríguez Hernández and Lázaro Roberto Aguiar Mendoza, members of the Independent Trade Union Association of Cuba (ASIC) in Cruces, Cienfuegos, were summoned to appear at the local police unit. While there, State Security allegedly warned them that they should stop making their denunciations on social networks or else they could be sent to prison for between 2 and 8 years.<sup>50</sup>

47. The Commission has ascertained that these threats and acts of intimidation have also been directed at family members of human rights defenders. On May 8, 2024, the Commission granted precautionary measures in favor of Mariens Pavó Oñate, wife of public defender Julio Alfredo Ferrer Tamayo, who has been followed by State agents, and has been the target of threatening phone calls and visits to her workplace to prevent her husband, who is outside the country, from returning.<sup>51</sup>

48. Likewise, human rights defenders are continuously monitored and tracked by state security forces. The home of the leader of the Damas de Blanco (Ladies in White), Berta Soler, is reportedly surrounded by surveillance cameras, while she herself is allegedly subjected to constant surveillance.<sup>52</sup> The same is reportedly true for Coco Fariñas, leader of the United Anti-Totalitarian Front (FANTU), who, according to the information received, is often persecuted and detained by State security agents in order to curtail his freedom of movement.<sup>53</sup> In September, activist Jenn Pantoja's home was surrounded by state security cars, and she was subsequently detained after denouncing this situation on her social networks.<sup>54</sup> The activist was released a few hours later.<sup>55</sup> The Commission also learned about the case of activist Julio César Góngora Milo, whose home is said to be under constant surveillance by police officers and who is reportedly constantly threatened with contempt of court and incitement to commit a crime proceedings.<sup>56</sup>

49. The IACHR again received information on de facto prohibitions to prevent human rights defenders from carrying out peaceful protests. In this case, the information referred to the case of activists Wilber Aguilar Bravo, Jorge Fernández Era, and Miryorly García, whose homes were reportedly visited by police cars in order to prevent them from leaving, in an effort to prevent citizen demonstrations on the eve of the anniversary of the death in combat of the Cuban National Hero, José Martí.<sup>57</sup> As for activist and intellectual Jorge Fernández, the Commission learned that in August he was detained by officers of the National Revolutionary Police as he left his home after having called for a peaceful march.<sup>58</sup> The activist was released eleven hours later.<sup>59</sup>

50. During 2024, the Commission continued to receive information about activists who are frequently arbitrarily detained by State security in retaliation for their advocacy activities. For example, defender Berta Soler was detained on December 4 and released after 69 hours; she had previously been detained on September 22 (67 hours of detention) and November 10 (76 hours of detention).<sup>60</sup> In September, information emerged regarding the case of Mirdael Matos Gainza, a member of the Patriotic Union of Cuba (UNPACU), who was reportedly detained and transferred to Guantanamo prison, where he remains to this day.<sup>61</sup> In March, activist and former political prisoner Ramón Jesús Velázquez Toranzo was arrested at the Sanctuary of the Virgen de la Caridad del Cobre, in Santiago de Cuba, after calling for a peaceful march on the church. After a month of detention in Villa Marista prison, the activist was released.<sup>62</sup>

51. The Commission is concerned about the persistent use of criminal law as a tool of the Cuban State to limit the exercise of the defense of human rights in the country. In June, the People's Provincial Court of Havana sentenced activists Josiel Guía Piloto and Lázaro Romero Piloto to seven years in prison; while Jesús Alfredo Pérez Rivas and William Cepero García received five-year prison sentences and Alain Yosvani Cruz Suescum was sentenced to five years of correctional work without internment, all for the crime of "propaganda against the constitutional order", after demonstrating in February, 2023.<sup>63</sup>

52. In connection with its precautionary measures, the Commission has been informed about defenders who have been sentenced and deprived of their liberty and whose life and personal integrity are at risk due to their conditions of detention. On June 28, the Commission granted precautionary measures in favor of human rights defender J.M.M.B., who has been deprived of his liberty since July 12, 2021. After his arrest he was subjected to a "brutal" beating, interrogations, and a "torture method" known as "the bicycle." There were also reports that he was subjected to an attempted rape and further beatings.<sup>64</sup> On April 26, the Commission granted precautionary measures in favor of activist Aniette González García, who is deprived of liberty and sentenced for the crime of "insulting the national symbols."<sup>65</sup>

53. In addition, the Commission continued to receive information on the imposition of fines on human rights defenders as a way to dissuade them from continuing their defense activities. Activist Alberto Turis Betancourt Pérez was arrested and fined for "public disorder" on September 4, after taking to the streets to denounce drug sales in his neighborhood.<sup>66</sup> The IACHR has warned that the principal aim of imposing fines or other penalties on the work of human rights defenders and depriving them of their liberty is to criminalize their activities in promoting and defending human rights, as well as deterring them from continuing to advance their causes.<sup>67</sup> The organs of the inter-American system have indicated that attacks on the lives of human rights defenders have a multiplier effect, which goes beyond the person of the defender, because it produces a chilling effect on those defending similar causes.<sup>68</sup>

54. The defense of human rights in Cuba continues to be carried out in an environment that prohibits any kind of dissidence or opposition to the regime. Civil society organizations have told the Commission that human rights defenders are stigmatized and delegitimized by being labeled by the State as "mercenaries", "traitors", or "terrorists" in an attempt to diminish public support and socially isolate them.<sup>69</sup> The organizations also reported continuous blocking of their websites, which reportedly limited their ability to operate.<sup>70</sup>

55. In view of the facts described above, the Inter-American Commission considers that the situation of human rights defenders continues to be of concern. In Cuba, the minimum conditions needed to guarantee the defense of human rights do not exist. On the contrary, it is observed that these activities are carried out in a hostile environment, characterized by acts of intimidation and harassment by state authorities and subjection to unjustified criminal proceedings as a way of criminalizing those who seek to defend human rights in the country.

56. The IACHR reiterates its call to the State to adopt effective measures to guarantee and protect the rights of human rights defenders, activists, journalists, and other social leaders. In this regard, the Commission urges the Cuban State to refrain from actions that arbitrarily interfere with the exercise of human rights related to opportunities for citizens to participate in society (“civic space”) and to guarantee an environment conducive to the defense of human rights.

Persons deprived of liberty

57. Regarding persons deprived of liberty, the Commission reiterates its concern about the lack of updated official information on the situation of this segment of the population, the high rate of incarceration, and the deplorable conditions of detention and difficulties in accessing rights that reportedly lead to hunger strikes and acts of corruption. It is also concerned about the prevalence of acts of torture and ill-treatment in Cuban prisons, including the practice of forced labor.

58. With regard to the lack of updated official information and the high rate of incarceration, the Commission regrets that the Cuban State persists in its refusal to publish official data on persons detained in the country.<sup>71</sup> In particular, the most recent official data were published in 2012, at which time 57,337 persons were detained in the country’s prisons.<sup>72</sup> Notwithstanding, as the IACHR indicated in its Annual Reports for 2021, 2022, and 2023,<sup>73</sup> this figure contrasts sharply with the most recent figure, from January 2024, documented by the Institute for Research on Crime and Justice in the World Prison Brief (WPB), which reports that there are said to be close to 90,000 people detained in Cuban prisons.<sup>74</sup> Thus, considering that the total number of inhabitants of the country reported by the World Bank is 11,194,449,<sup>75</sup> the above prison population figure means that Cuba, together with El Salvador, would be one of the two countries with the highest per capita prison population rate worldwide. Specifically, Cuba has 893 persons deprived of liberty per 100,000 inhabitants.<sup>76</sup>

59. Regarding detention conditions, the IACHR continued to receive information on overcrowding - although the exact percentage is unknown - inadequate food, lack of water and medicine supply, deficiencies in medical care, and poor hygiene conditions.<sup>77</sup> According to public information, the lack of medical care reportedly caused the death of two persons deprived of liberty in the Kilo 7 and Prison 1580 prisons in August

2024.<sup>78</sup> In this regard, from January to September 2024, the Cuban Prison Documentation Center received 466 complaints about denial of medical care or deficient care in more than 29 prisons.<sup>79</sup>

60. Likewise, available data indicate a shortage of medical supplies and medicines as they are sometimes rationed.<sup>80</sup> With regard to food, according to information from civil society organizations, detainees have reported a reduction in rations and poor quality food, as well as the absence of main courses. In some prisons such as Guantánamo, Boniato, Veguitas 1, and Kilo 7, cases of malnutrition have even been reported.<sup>81</sup> In addition, persons detained for political reasons reportedly also face a lack of communication with their families.<sup>82</sup>

61. In this scenario, characterized by deplorable detention conditions, there were hunger strikes, mostly by people deprived of liberty for political reasons, who reportedly demanded basic rights, better conditions, adequate food, medical attention, and the cessation of arbitrariness within the penitentiary centers.<sup>83</sup> Specifically, according to data published in 2024, the organization Cubalex allegedly documented 100 cases of hunger strikes during 2023, of which 94 were men and 70 corresponded to people detained for political reasons.<sup>84</sup>

62. Likewise, the Commission notes that, according to available information, the lack of access to rights in prison leads to practices of abuse of authority and corruption in Cuba's prison system by guards, who would withhold medicines or food and then sell them to detainees. Reportedly there are even cases in which prisoners and guards together engage in illicit business and allow some detainees to carry weapons. In addition, prison agents are said to introduce prohibited substances such as alcohol or drugs to offer them to inmates in exchange for money or "favors."<sup>85</sup>

63. Moreover, the IACHR reiterates that, under international human rights law, overcrowding of persons deprived of liberty in itself could constitute a form of cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment, which means that the State cannot continue to fill already collapsed prisons with additional inmates.<sup>86</sup> In addition, it reminds Cuba of the obligation of States to ensure that persons deprived of their liberty are held in conditions of detention compatible with their human dignity. These include, among others, access to safe drinking water, sufficient and quality food, and appropriate hygienic conditions.<sup>87</sup> In addition, it is essential to provide timely, adequate, and specialized health care services to persons in their custody.<sup>88</sup> Measures should also be adopted to prevent, identify, and punish acts of corruption in prisons.<sup>89</sup>

64. On the other hand, the Commission reiterates its concern over the persistence of acts of mistreatment and torture in Cuban prisons which, according to data from civil society, between March 1, 2023 and June 30, 2024, reportedly resulted in the death of five persons in custody due to physical torture and beatings by officials.<sup>90</sup> Along the same lines, in connection with public hearing held during its 189th Period of Sessions, the IACHR was informed of 5,685 acts of repression in Cuba between 2022 and 2023.<sup>91</sup> Likewise, the Prison Documentation Center recorded at least 1,100 cases of human rights violations in detention centers between January and August 2024. Most of the violations were allegedly committed by prison staff, State Security officials, and the judicial system, and consist of incidents of harassment of inmates, beatings, and physical torture, as well as a lack of food or food in poor condition.<sup>92</sup>

65. In addition, civil society documented solitary confinement, degrading treatment, sexual abuse, forced labor, denial of religious attendance, denial and monitoring of telephone calls, transfers to prisons outside the province, and denial of special temporary releases in sensitive cases.<sup>93</sup> In addition, sanctions administered by the Disciplinary Council against people who refuse to receive food include temporary transfers or transfers to other provinces, confinement in punishment cells, physical violence and corporal punishment, prohibition of the use of white or black clothing, and threats.<sup>94</sup>

66. In addition to the above, regarding forced labor, on January 17, 2024, Decree-Law No. 81/2023 was adopted, which establishes a labor regime to guarantee the labor rights of persons deprived of liberty both inside and outside penitentiary centers, and provides that the penitentiary authority is empowered to enter into labor contracts.<sup>95</sup> However, the Commission notes that this legal framework has been criticized by civil society because it reportedly does not prevent the persistence of exploitative labor conditions against persons deprived of liberty, who cite irregular contracts and inadequate remuneration. A special case concerns people who produce charcoal in the country, whose working conditions are reportedly "inhumane".<sup>96</sup>

67. The Commission warns that persons detained for political reasons are disproportionately singled out for ill-treatment and torture. Specifically, according to Prisoners Defenders, this group is constantly and systematically subjected to acts of physical and psychological violence that include, in addition to those mentioned above, the denial of food and medicine, no medical attention, and denial of visits, as well as threats against their family members.<sup>97</sup> Specifically, on the denial of medical care, it was reported that, up to September 2024, none of the 356 persons detained for political reasons with serious medical pathologies including chronic illnesses and none of the 62 with serious mental health disorders received adequate medical or psychiatric treatment.<sup>98</sup>

68. In addition, women deprived of their liberty as a result of their participation in independent civil society organizations reportedly face greater subjection to acts of violence. In particular, at a public hearing held in July 2024 in connection with the 190th Period of Sessions, the IACHR was informed that, according to civil society records of human rights violations in Cuba, most of the violations recorded in the last 16 months were committed against women. Specifically, 860 of the 1,577 incidents in 2023 were violations against women's rights and, up to July 2024, 416 of the 702 incidents recorded involved women as victims, who were abused, tortured, harassed, vexed, and harassed by representatives of the State.<sup>99</sup>

69. In the same vein, in connection with the 189th Period of Sessions, the IACHR received data indicating that the years 2022 and 2023 were characterized by intense repression against women activists in Cuba, which included measures such as isolation in punishment cells, threats, and severe restrictions on communications. Added to this is the institutional gender violence exercised by the Cuban State against mothers, through coercion, intimidation, and threats to take away custody of their children.<sup>100</sup>

70. In light of the above, the IACHR reiterates its condemnation of all forms of torture or cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment, and recalls that these acts must be absolutely prohibited and prevented under any circumstances. In this regard, it recalls that States have the obligation to condemn such practices, to carry out investigations ex officio and with due diligence, and to punish all perpetrators and instigators.<sup>101</sup> In addition, the IACHR insists on the duty of States to act with enhanced due diligence and, in this regard, to adopt and apply a gender and intersectional perspective to prevent, investigate, punish, and redress all acts of discrimination and violence perpetrated against women deprived of liberty.<sup>102</sup>

Freedom of expression

Attacks, threats, and intimidation against journalists and the media

71. In 2024, the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (SRFE) of the IACHR continued to record cases of harassment, attacks, and intimidation against journalists and independent media in Cuba, mainly by State agents. These actions include harassment, police operations, searches, seizures, arbitrary arrests, summonses, and interrogations, as well as threats of criminalization or exile. According to public reports, the government uses these tactics to intimidate and restrict independent and critical journalism in the country.

72. In 2024, the IACHR and its Office of the Special Rapporteur received reports of arbitrary detentions and the imposition of criminal sanctions against journalists and communicators in Cuba for going about their legitimate work. Thus, for example, reporter Luis Ángel Cuza Alfonso, a contributor to CubaNet, was sentenced on November 7, 2023 to one year and six months in prison for allegedly committing the crime of "public disorder."<sup>103</sup> According to the organization Cubalex, between January 2022 and November 2023, Cuza Alfonso was subjected to ten arbitrary detentions, eight surveillance operations with house arrest, four illegal summonses, and four threats, as well as interruptions in internet service.<sup>104</sup> The journalist is currently being held in the Combinado del Este maximum security prison in Havana.

73. The Rapporteurship also learned that journalist Yeris Curbelo Aguilera, a contributor to CubaNet, was sentenced to two years in prison by the Municipal Court of Niceto Pérez, Guantánamo, charged with causing "minor injuries."<sup>105</sup> According to reports from civil society organizations, this sentence follows acts of aggression against him by the political police in June of this year. The conviction is considered a reprisal for his participation in the Camareira demonstrations in May 2023. After sentencing, Curbelo Aguilera was reportedly transferred to the Combined Prison of Guantánamo.<sup>106</sup>

74. According to public information, on March 18, CubaNet journalist Osniel Carmona Breijo was detained by State Security and National Revolutionary Police (PNR) forces and later released.<sup>107</sup> This arrest occurred in the context of anti-government protests in the east of the island, triggered by the increase in power outages and the food crisis.<sup>108</sup> Likewise, in April 2024, it was reported that another CubaNet contributor, Armando Sardiñas, was also detained for more than five hours in a police station in Havana after posting a live broadcast of a march in the capital.<sup>109</sup>

75. On April 26, 2024, according to public reports, Cuban authorities detained journalist José Luis Tan Estrada while he was on board a bus, accusing him of "being a mercenary and spreading false information."<sup>110</sup> Subsequently, he was transferred to Villa Marista, the State Security detention center in Havana.<sup>111</sup> On April 29, his family reportedly filed a writ of habeas corpus with a court, requesting information on his whereabouts and the reasons for his detention.<sup>112</sup> For their part, civil society organizations reported that Tan Estrada was reportedly interrogated on at least two occasions in a period of less than 72 hours and fined 3,000 pesos under Decree-Law 370.<sup>113</sup> According to public information, during his detention, the communicator was subjected to multiple daily interrogations in which he received threats and was told to

76. Similarly, in April 2024, Camila Acosta, a journalist for CubaNet and ABC correspondent, was also reportedly detained while on her way to Cárdenas, in the province of Matanzas, to interview relatives of political prisoners. According to public reports, the journalist was taken to the Cárdenas police station, where she was held for an hour and told that she would be taken to Havana.<sup>117</sup>

77. In addition, the Office of the Special Rapporteur has also followed the case of journalist Lázaro Yuri Valle Roca, sentenced on July 28, 2022 by the People's Provincial Court of Havana to five years in prison for allegedly repeatedly committing the crimes of resistance and enemy propaganda.<sup>118</sup> On May 15, 2024, Valle Roca was transferred from the Combinado del Este prison to complete immigration procedures, and then returned to prison until his release. According to public reports, on June 5, 2024, the journalist was exiled by the regime and arrived in the city of Miami, in the United States, after obtaining a humanitarian parole.<sup>119</sup> During his imprisonment, relatives of the journalist reported that they were detained by political police officers while trying to visit him. In addition, it is reported that he was physically assaulted and his physical and mental condition deteriorated due to confinement and various illnesses, including loss of vision, pulmonary disorders, and multiple skin conditions.<sup>120</sup>

78. On May 4, 2024, the Rapporteurship learned of the detention of independent journalist and activist Carlos Michel Morales Rodríguez, accused of "disobedience." This arrest followed his release after serving a sentence of two years and ten months for his participation in the protests of July 11, 2021 in Caibarién, Villa Clara.<sup>121</sup> According to public information, the detention was the result of the authorities' threat to imprison him again if he did not abandon independent journalism and his activism in Cuba Decide.<sup>122</sup> On July 22, journalist Morales Rodríguez was sentenced to eight months of house arrest.<sup>123</sup> Subsequently, on October 16, he was summoned to the Municipal Court of Caibarién, where he was given an ultimatum to work with state entities. Reports in the public domain indicate that the authorities reportedly rejected a request from the local Baptist church for his maintenance work at the institution to be considered valid for the remaining five months

79. In May 2024, in the municipality of Pinar del Río, there were reports of repression against journalists and activists through house searches, arbitrary detentions, and confiscation of equipment. Journalists Yosmaury Casares Soto and Raciél Álvarez Díaz of Panorama Pinareño were arrested and their equipment confiscated, according to the Cuban Institute for Freedom of Expression and the Press (ICLEP).<sup>125</sup> They were also transferred to the training center known as "El Técnico", where they reportedly received threats of imprisonment for practicing independent journalism and for alleged ties with the opposition. In particular, journalist Casares Soto was reportedly warned that he could face the same fate as his brother, José Rolando Casares, imprisoned for political reasons in 2017.<sup>126</sup>

80. The Office of the Special Rapporteur has also received reports of threats, summonses, and interrogations of journalists and press workers. Emilio Almaguer de la Cruz, an independent journalist in Baracoa, was summoned on April 16 by an agent of the National Revolutionary Police. According to public reports, during the meeting, an official of the Department of State Security warned him that his publications in international press agencies constituted crimes and indicated that, in order to lift the regulation that prevented him from leaving Cuba, he should cease such publications.<sup>127</sup> In addition, during the interrogation, he was allegedly physically assaulted and threatened with legal proceedings that could lead to a minimum sentence of eight years in prison.<sup>128</sup>

81. Also, on June 20, 2024, journalist Julio Aleaga Pesant was reportedly summoned by State Security agents to the Ministry of Communications in Havana, accused of breaking Decree Law 370.<sup>129</sup> According to public reports, he was fined 3,000 Cuban pesos (approximately US$116) for violating Article 68 of the Decree. In addition, he was allegedly threatened with the seizure of his equipment and with being accused of committing enemy propaganda if he continued to publish.<sup>130</sup>

82. Likewise, the organization Cubalex recorded a repressive peak on April 30, on the eve of the official celebration of International Workers' Day. Since April 29, independent journalists from ICLEP reported being under siege and threatened with criminal prosecution for taking to the streets. Between that day and the next, Cubalex documented at least seven arbitrary house arrests, four detentions, and 17 cases of Internet outages.<sup>131</sup>

83. In addition, in July 2024, José Jasán Nieves Cárdenas, a Cuban journalist in Miami and director of El Toque, reported having received threats from an unknown number, saying: "we know exactly where to find you," along with a photo and video of a car driving past his house.<sup>132</sup> According to published reports, there are indications that the message came from Cuban State Security agents. For their part, civil society organizations have stressed the importance of the U.S. authorities guaranteeing the safety of the journalist and conducting an investigation into these threats.<sup>133</sup>

84. In September 2024, the Rapporteurship received reports of a new escalation of repression against the independent press in Cuba. At least six women journalists publicly resigned from media and activist work, in some cases under threat of imprisonment by State Security. They include María Lucía Expósito (Alas Tensas), Adriana Normand (El Toque), Yennys Hernández Molina, Annery Rivera Velasco, Yadira Álvarez Betancourt, and Lucy G. Morell (Periodismo de Barrio). In addition, several CubaNet journalists, who chose to remain anonymous, also resigned.<sup>134</sup>

85. Elaine Díaz, director of Periodismo de Barrio, denounced through the social network X (formerly Twitter) that State Security agents are forcing innocent people to film videos of themselves incriminating themselves for crimes they did not commit and to publicly resign from the media in which they worked.<sup>135</sup>

86. CubaNet also reported acts of intimidations against people working for it, indicating that several have been detained and threatened with long prison sentences or threats against the safety of their families. In addition, it was reported that they have been recorded against their will and that electronic devices and savings have been confiscated.<sup>136</sup> In October 2024, there were also cases of summonses and intimidation of several media directors, including Orlidia Barceló Pérez (El Espirituano) and Mabel Páez Díaz (El Majadero de Artemisa).<sup>137</sup>

87. The Office of the Special Rapporteur has also received reports that Cuban authorities, including agents of State Security and the National Revolutionary Police, are reportedly using the new Law on Social Communication to persecute journalists who refuse to go along with the regime's official version of events. Since October 2024, at least 11 journalists have been summoned, interrogated, and forced to resign from their profession, as reported by Reporters Without Borders (RSF).<sup>138</sup> In addition, journalists have reportedly been charged with "propaganda against the government" and "mercenary activities" under this law.<sup>139</sup>

88. The Office of the Special Rapporteur reiterates that journalism is the primary and principal manifestation of freedom of expression, since it is journalists and the media that keep society informed on matters of public interest and contribute to the existence of broad, robust, and pluralistic public debate. For this reason, States have the obligation to create the conditions for journalists to freely, independently, and safely go about their work.<sup>140</sup>

89. According to Principle 9 of the Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression of the IACHR, the murder, kidnapping, intimidation of and/or threats to social communicators violate the fundamental rights of individuals and strongly restrict freedom of expression. The IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship have considered that these kinds of actions are intended to restrict or hinder the work of journalists who investigate abuses, abuses, irregularities, or illicit acts of any kind, whether carried out by public officials or private individuals. Likewise, they are intended to be tools of intimidation, through which a message is sent to all those members of civil society who investigate irregularities in public administration. The SRFE has also argued that this practice "seeks to silence the press in its watchdog role", preventing society from being informed about events of public interest.<sup>141</sup>

Persecution of critical voices and restrictions on citizens' opportunities to participate in society (civic arena)

90. In 2024, the Commission and its Special Rapporteurship continued to document the Cuban government's persecution of a series of social sectors, including political opponents, activists, and human rights defenders. A prominent case is that of Aniette González García, sentenced in February 2024 to three years in prison for "insulting symbols of the homeland" after posting photos with the Cuban flag on Facebook.<sup>142</sup> As mentioned above, on April 26, 2024, the Inter-American Commission granted precautionary measures in her favor, upon noting the seriousness of her situation and the irreparable risk to her life, integrity, and health.<sup>143</sup> During her detention, Aniette was labeled "counterrevolutionary." She was subjected to interrogation and received constant threats from State security agents, who told her that her conviction would ensure that "[she] will never again use the Internet as a platform for expression using the national flag."<sup>144</sup> Currently, she is allegedly being kept isolated as much as possible from the other inmates. Her rights are said to be controlled by a State Security officer, which is said to be evidence of different treatment for political reasons.<sup>145</sup>

91. The Office of the Special Rapporteur also documented the case of Lizandra Góngora, sentenced to 14 years in prison for her participation in the protests of July 11, 2021 in Güira de Melena, Artemisa.<sup>146</sup> According to published reports, Góngora was charged with "sabotage", "robbery using force", and "public

In addition, public allegations indicate that she has suffered from several forms of abuse in prison, including punishment cells, physical violence, and harassment by prison officials.<sup>148</sup> It is alleged that she was transferred to isolate her from her family. Her relatives reported that in March 2024 she was diagnosed with a uterine fibroid, in addition to other health problems, such as Sickle cell disease and swollen lymph nodes.<sup>149</sup>

92. Likewise, the Office of the Special Rapporteur has closely monitored reports of repression against the organization Damas de Blanco. Thus, for example, on September 22, 2024, it was reported that Berta Soler, leader of the group, was arbitrarily detained and suffered an enforced disappearance in Havana while on her way to protest.<sup>150</sup> On October 14, 2024, the Damas de Blanco denounced the temporary detention of at least 12 members during the 100th "repressive Sunday" since 2022.<sup>151</sup> Berta Soler reported through social networks about ten arrests in Matanzas and one in Villa Clara, in addition to her own arrest, which lasted more than 16 hours in Havana.<sup>152</sup> She reported that she was intercepted by "paramilitaries in civilian clothes" ordered by State Security when she attempted to exercise her "freedom to demonstrate peacefully."<sup>153</sup>

93. The Office of the Special Rapporteur has received reports of digital repression by the Cuban State. In particular, it has been reported that activist José Manuel Barreiro Rouco faces the risk of being sentenced to two and a half years in prison for "contempt" and "illegal possession and sale in dollars", after making publications about the president of Cuba in a family chat on Facebook, considered by the government as "denigrating actions" that affect the honor of key figures of the Cuban Revolution.<sup>154</sup> In addition, it has been reported that activist Yamilka Laffita, known as "Lara Crofts," received a death threat on September 24 on Facebook.<sup>155</sup> The message claims that she meets with "counterrevolutionary people" and mentions the academic Alina Bárba López Hernández, who is also allegedly a victim of harassment by the State.<sup>156</sup>

Social Protest

94. During the first half of 2024, 137 protests were registered, mainly triggered by blackouts, water problems, food shortages, violence, and growing social discontent among the Cuban population.<sup>157</sup> In March 2024, the first mass protests reportedly took place in Cuba in Santiago de Cuba, Granma, Matanzas, and Sancti Spíritus.<sup>158</sup> During that month, blackouts reportedly lasted more than 15 hours, and public services, such as water supply, garbage collection, and the health system, continued to face serious problems. In addition, a protest was held outside the El Cobre police station in Santiago de Cuba, where citizens expressed their disapproval of the arbitrary arrests carried out during the protest.<sup>159</sup> In light of these events, the IACHR urged the State to respect the right to free demonstration and to refrain from the use of force.<sup>160</sup>

95. According to public reports, the harassment continued after the March 17 demonstrations, with targeted arrests and police summonses.<sup>161</sup> The political police allegedly carried out "prophylactic" actions in localities where no protests were registered, with the presumed objective of inhibiting future demonstrations and violating the rights of possible leaders or sympathizers, according to the organization Cubalex.<sup>162</sup> As of March 31, Cubalex documented at least 37 arrests linked to these protests. Of those arrested, 19 people reportedly remain imprisoned.<sup>163</sup> In addition, it was reported that Holy Week processions were banned in parishes in Villa Clara, Havana, Granma, and Camagüey.<sup>164</sup>

96. In May 2024, the Office of the Special Rapporteur received reports of repressive acts in connection with the commemorations of International Workers' Day (May 1) and the founding of the Republic of Cuba (May 20).<sup>165</sup> Cubalex documented at least 63 incidents aimed at restricting the movement and communications of activists, journalists, and citizens, including internet shutdowns, house arrests, surveillance operations, arbitrary detentions, fines, and police summonses.<sup>166</sup> Reports also indicate that repression intensified with gunfire and physical violence in response to peaceful protests triggered by blackouts and economic crisis. In particular, in a protest in Ciudad Nuclear, Cienfuegos, at least 11 arrests were recorded, on charges of public disorder, contempt, and assault. According to reports in the public domain, those detained face prison sentences and bail of up to 200,000 pesos (equivalent to 95 times the minimum wage in Cuba).<sup>167</sup> Persecution against those who recorded the events was also documented, including summonses, interrogations, and warnings.<sup>168</sup>

97. In addition, there were reports of pot-banging at the Cienfuegos Nuclear Power Plant on the night of May 28, in response to the prolonged power cuts imposed by the Cuban regime.<sup>169</sup> At least ten people were arrested during the protest, as reported by the group Justicia 11J. transferred to the Provincial Criminal Investigation and Operations Unit (Upico), the State Security Investigation Unit, and the First Station of the National Revolutionary Police (PNR).<sup>170</sup>

98. In July 2024, surveillance operations, house arrests, and internet shutdowns were reportedly stepped up around the anniversary of the July 11 protests and the assault on the Moncada barracks on July 26.<sup>171</sup> The Office of the Special Rapporteur learned that the regime has reportedly interrupted Internet access and, in some cases, the use of cellphones, affecting at least 42 activists, independent journalists, and opponents.<sup>172</sup> In addition, at least 52 citizens were reportedly besieged or monitored in their homes by State Security patrols to prevent them from leaving.<sup>173</sup> According to published reports, these measures lasted for several days and were accompanied by threats of criminal prosecution, arrests, and reprisals against family members if the restrictions imposed were violated.<sup>174</sup>

99. Three years after the mass protests in Cuba, the IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship condemned the growing state repression against activists and human rights defenders. They also called on the government to address the legitimate demands of the people and called for the release of all persons detained for participating in the social protests.<sup>175</sup>

100. Furthermore, the Office of the Special Rapporteur documented at least 70 protests in Cuba as a result of the collapse of the national electricity system on October 18, 2024. As of the evening of October 20, demonstrations were recorded in Havana, Villa Clara, Holguín, Mayabeque, Santiago de Cuba, Sancti Spíritus, and Artemisa.<sup>176</sup>

101. The Office of the Special Rapporteur also observed the activation and continuation of judicial proceedings and criminal sanctions for the alleged commission of the crimes of sabotage, sedition, disrespect, and public disorder, directed against those who participate in protests and social demonstrations. Thus, for example, on July 17, the Municipal People's Court of Niceto Perez, in Guantanamo province, convicted six activists for their participation in the May 6, 2023 Caimanera protests. According to public reports, the persons sentenced are Daniel Álvarez González, Luis Miguel Alarcón Martínez, Freddy Sarquiz González, for public disorder and instigation to commit a crime, and Felipe Octavio Correa Martínez, sentenced to two years for assault.<sup>177</sup>

102. In addition, Cuban authorities have reportedly threatened to charge those who promote or participate in mass protests against the regime with the crime of sedition. In the program "Hacemos Cuba", officials of the Ministry of the Interior, including Colonel Hugo Morales Karell, reportedly accused alleged terrorists in the United States of instigating acts against the authorities, arguing that their objective is to provoke excessive reactions from the Police to discredit the Government. According to the available information, Morales dismissed the allegations of abuse of power, attributing them to "unconventional war plans" of the enemy.

103. For his part, Otto Molina Rodríguez, president of the Criminal Chamber of the Supreme People's Court, warned about calls on social networks to disrupt public order and threatened to apply the crime of sedition, which has been used against protesters on July 11, 2021, with penalties that can reach up to 30 years in prison, life imprisonment, or the death penalty in exceptional circumstances.<sup>178</sup> On May 3, 2024, the IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship recalled that the death penalty is contrary to the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man and, if in force, only applies for the most serious crimes, never for political or related crimes.<sup>179</sup>

104. Finally, the Special Rapporteurship learned with grave concern of the death of Yosandri Mulet Almarales, Gerardo Díaz Alonso, and Jesús de Guillen Esplugas, who had been convicted of demonstrating in July 2021.<sup>180</sup> These cases are in addition to that of Luis Barrios Díaz, who died in prison on November 21, 2023.<sup>181</sup>

105. The Office of the Special Rapporteur reiterates that social protest, which includes the exercise of the right to freedom of peaceful assembly without arms, freedom of association, and freedom of expression, is a fundamental tool in the defense of democracy and human rights, and the State is obliged to respect, protect, and guarantee these rights.<sup>182</sup> Regarding the obligation to respect these rights, the Commission and its Special Rapporteurship reiterate that "the exercise of freedom of assembly through social protest should not be subject to government authorization or excessive requirements that make it difficult to carry out."<sup>183</sup> Likewise, with respect to the obligation to protect and facilitate, the Commission has emphasized that "the overriding social interest in the right to take part in public demonstrations gives rise to a general presumption in favor of its exercise."<sup>184</sup> As mentioned in the IACHR report on protest and human rights, States must act on the basis of the lawfulness of protests and public demonstrations and on the assumption that they do not constitute a threat

Legal Framework restricting the Right to Freedom of Expression

106. In October 2024, the Office of the Special Rapporteur became aware of the entry into force of the new Social Communication Law.<sup>187</sup> Recently, five opposition figures in Havana were reportedly sentenced under this legislation to prison terms of up to seven years for "propaganda against the constitutional order" after peacefully demonstrating with posters and disseminating their messages on social networks.<sup>188</sup> On June 16, 2023, the Office of the Special Rapporteur warned that this law severely restricts the exercise of freedom of the press by imposing certain duties on journalists and social communicators that are excessive, discretionary, and contrary to the very nature of journalistic work.<sup>189</sup> In this regard, the Office reiterated its call to the State to align the legal framework with international standards on freedom of expression, and to respect and guarantee this right without prior conditions.

107. In addition, the Office of the Special Rapporteur draws attention to the adoption of new regulations that could have an impact on the exercise of freedom of expression and access to information in Cuba. On July 18, 2024, during the third term of its tenth legislature, the National Assembly approved the Law on Transparency and Access to Public Information<sup>190</sup>. The Minister of Science, Technology, and Environment presented the legislation, highlighting that it regulates and promotes the culture of transparency in public management. The Minister affirmed that the regulation reflects "the highest expression of the political will of the State and the Government to make its management transparent"<sup>191</sup>. He also argued that the law seeks to reduce administrative corruption and bribery, in addition to creating effective and transparent institutions that respond to the needs of access to public information<sup>192</sup>. He also pointed out that mechanisms are established to guarantee that citizens have access to Public Administration information, namely "that which is generated or kept by the subjects in the exercise of their public functions, as well as by natural and legal persons that receive financing and other public benefits".<sup>193</sup>

108. According to available information, the new Law on Transparency and Access to Public Information could be used to reinforce control over information, instead of facilitating genuine access to data of public interest<sup>194</sup>. In this context, the Office of the Special Rapporteur has received reports from civil society organizations that indicate that the provisions of the law could contravene international standards on access to public information. In particular, they warn that the regulation contains a restrictive interpretation of "public information", limiting it to that in possession of the official reporting entities (sujetos obligados), instead of covering the "Activity of Public Interest", which includes those "matters or areas of management that should be resolved through governmental political decisions, at any of the levels of administrative, legislative or judicial political organization, that seek to satisfy the maximum interest of the community".<sup>195</sup> In addition, the law does not incorporate the principle of "maximum disclosure" and does not establish that those requesting information are exempt from justifying their reasons for doing so. Likewise, the organizations point out that the wording of the regulations regarding regulated entities/persons is not clear.<sup>196</sup>

109. The organizations also informed the Special Rapporteur that the law stipulates that requesters are responsible for the use of public information and may face administrative, civil, or criminal sanctions for misuse.<sup>197</sup> They emphasize that it establishes exceptions to public access, including classified information and any fact that, when disclosed, could cause damage, danger, impairment, or violation of sovereignty, defense, and national security.<sup>198</sup> In addition, they note that exceptions are included for personal data, pending legal proceedings, intellectual property rights, commercial confidentiality, and the environment.<sup>199</sup> The organizations warn that these exceptions are broad and vague, which may facilitate censorship and control over sensitive information.

110. In addition, the new transparency law would exclude independent media from its scope of application, stipulating that "the request for information made by journalists and managers of media organizations, for the management of communication processes in the exercise of their social function, is governed by the specific legislation of Social Communication"<sup>200</sup>. This provision has raised concern among civil society organizations, as it could constitute a form of discrimination against the practice of journalism and a serious risk to freedom of expression.<sup>201</sup>

111. The Office of the Special Rapporteur recalls that Article 13 of the American Convention guarantees the right of citizens to "seek" and "receive" information and ideas of any kind, thereby requiring the State to provide the information in its possession. Likewise, Principle 4 of the IACHR Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression establishes that access to state information is a fundamental right, subject only to exceptional and legally established limitations, only in cases of real and imminent danger to national security in democratic societies.<sup>202</sup> In accordance with the principle of maximum disclosure, all information must be accessible, except for strictly delimited and legally defined exceptions designed to protect imperative public interests.<sup>203</sup>

Internet and Human Rights

112. Finally, in 2024, the Office of the Special Rapporteur continued to document an increase in internet outages in connection with social protests and activists' calls for meetings. In addition, according to public reports, surveillance operations are often accompanied by interruptions in Internet access, which prevents the dissemination of information of public interest. This practice, allegedly ordered by State Security and executed by the Cuban Telecommunications Company (ETECSA), is implemented selectively, as well as on commemorative dates and in entire territories during protests. The persistent blocking of websites of independent media and human rights organizations is also observed, along with massive blackouts and power outages.<sup>204</sup> Throughout the year, anomalies were also recorded in the operation of social networks such as Signal.<sup>205</sup>

113. The Rapporteurship recalls that, just as States must ensure access to public spaces, such as streets, roads and public squares for holding meetings, they must also ensure that the Internet is available and accessible to all citizens in order for them to be able to form associations and arrange meetings to participate in the political life of the country.<sup>206</sup>

Economic, Social, Cultural, and Environmental Rights

114. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR), through the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA), is constantly monitoring the situation of economic, social, cultural and environmental rights (ESCR) in Cuba. In general terms, the information gathered from different sources indicates that exercising and guaranteeing ESCR in the country is still precarious. This occurs in a context of low economic growth, high inflation, reduced food production and sales, and infrastructure problems, particularly in the electricity sector.

115. The Commission and REDESCA take note of the package of fiscal and economic measures announced by the Government of Cuba at the end of 2023, which seeks to correct distortions and reactivate the economy. The measures include an increase in fuel prices, an increase in basic services tariffs, and the elimination of the basic food basket subsidy.<sup>207</sup> However, these adjustment measures have made it more difficult for the population to exercise ESCR, triggering new social protests during 2024.<sup>208</sup>

116. Worth noting, in this context, is the importance of the peaceful and spontaneous demonstrations that began on March 17 in Santiago de Cuba and quickly spread throughout the country, motivated by citizens' demands related to electricity supply and food shortages. According to data provided by civil society, in the month of September 2024 alone, 855 spontaneous protests and complaints were registered, 79.4% of which were linked to the demand for economic and social rights, particularly in areas such as health, public services, insecurity, food, social problems and housing.<sup>209</sup>

117. The IACHR and its REDESCA are alarmed by the findings of the VII Report "State of Social Rights in Cuba" of the Cuban Observatory of Human Rights, which states that extreme poverty rose to 89% of the Cuban population in 2024, one point higher than a year ago. More than a thousand interviews conducted for this study revealed that the main concern of the Cuban population is the food crisis, followed by electricity blackouts, inflation, low purchasing power of wages and the precarious situation of public health.<sup>210</sup>

118. Regarding the food crisis situation, the report of the Cuban Observatory of Human Rights emphasizes that 7 out of 10 Cuban people have stopped eating some food due to lack of money or food shortages. It also underscores the disproportionate impact this situation has on people of African descent, affecting 80% of this group, as well as 79% of the elderly, which exacerbates pre-existing social and economic inequalities.<sup>211</sup> For its part, a study conducted by the Food Monitor Program reveals that at least 60% of the people surveyed consider that they have significantly lost access to food.<sup>212</sup>

119. The IACHR and REDESCA note that shortages of basic products such as milk, flour, rice, sugar, sugar, chicken, and oil have become a daily reality for many Cubans. The crisis in the production and supply of subsidized food and the high prices in illegal markets and MSMEs have triggered demonstrations throughout the country. In this regard, note was taken of the Cuban Government's request for support from the United Nations World Food Program (WFP) to continue delivering milk to children under seven years of age at a subsidized price.<sup>213</sup> Also, during February, authorities of the Ministry of Food Industry (MINAL) declared the need to reduce the supply of bread for the standard family basket due to delays in shipments of wheat and flour<sup>214</sup> and, as a substitute, to use sweet potato, cassava or pumpkin, reducing the quality of the bread produced, forcing the population to consume other ingredients without alternatives. In September, it transpired that a decision had been made to reduce the size of a loaf of bread in order to guarantee its production and distribution without affecting consumers or priority facilities such as schools and hospitals.<sup>215</sup>

120. Lack of essential medicines and medical supplies also remains a widespread problem in Cuba, with a direct impact on the health of the population. According to statements made by the Minister of Public Health, the public drug network is facing significant shortages.<sup>216</sup> This shortage is especially critical for people with chronic diseases, who are often forced to purchase drugs on the black market or, in the worst cases, to do without them, putting their well-being at risk.<sup>217</sup> Testimonies provided to the IACHR and the Office of the Special Rapporteur reveal that, due to the shortage of supplies in hospitals, it is the patients themselves who must bring their own kit of medical supplies, including items such as anesthesia, for their surgical procedures.<sup>218</sup> In addition, the purchase of medicines in pharmacies has become extremely difficult, as many products are not available, which forces the population to resort to the illegal purchase and sale of imported products offered at high prices on the island. This situation highlights the crisis of the Cuban health system and its repercussions on the quality of life of its population.

121. The IACHR and REDESCA welcome the Cuban Government's decision to extend until January 31, 2025 the tariff exemption for food, medicines, and other products imported by individuals for non-commercial purposes, which will help alleviate scarcity and generalized shortages.<sup>219</sup> Likewise, as has been stated on several occasions<sup>220</sup>, they reiterate their concern about the effects of the tightening of the economic, financial, and commercial embargo sanctions imposed by the United States, while calling for their lifting in order to safeguard the human rights affected by this measure.

122. In relation to the existence of power outages, the IACHR and REDESCA take note of the creation of four solar parks in the province of Santiago de Cuba with the aim of reducing energy dependence in the area.<sup>221</sup> However, they warn that widespread and prolonged power cuts continue to affect the daily life of the majority of the Cuban population, and are one of the main reasons behind the street protests. At the same time, press reports indicate a significant increase in the frequency of blackouts, mainly in provinces in the interior, where in some cases these outages can last up to 20 hours a day.<sup>222</sup> In October there was a generalized collapse of the electricity service that affected the power supply in a large part of the island for several consecutive days, which led to new protests<sup>223</sup> and the suspension of classes and cultural events.<sup>224</sup> Reports showed up to 35 hours without electricity and cases of food shortages and water rationing.<sup>225</sup> The power outages experienced by the population not only affect daily life, but also have a direct impact on the safeguarding of other ESCR such as access to food in adequate conditions for consumption; the quality of health and education services, or the supply of drinking water given the dependence on electrical systems for its distribution.

123. Regarding access to drinking water, more than 600,000 people in Cuba, 7% of the total population, lack adequate access.<sup>226</sup> This deficit is mainly attributed to power outages and breakdowns in pumping equipment and hydraulic networks, which have seriously impaired the distribution of this essential resource. The figure represents a 25% increase in the number of people affected in the last ten months, and is evidence of a trend that reflects not only the infrastructure crisis, but also the deficiencies in the management of basic services in the country. In this context, the Commission and REDESCA urge the Cuban State to adopt effective measures to guarantee access to essential public services and improve the resilience of infrastructure in order to meet the vital needs of the population and promote its comprehensive development, especially in a context of growing vulnerability to the effects of climate change.

124. The IACHR and REDESCA express their concern over the significant loss of purchasing power of wages and salaries and pensions in Cuba, a situation that translates into economic hardship for a large part of the population and particularly affects groups in especially vulnerable situations. Based on the information available, 86% of Cuban households find it hard to subsist on their income; and of these 61% indicate that they have difficulties even in acquiring the most essential goods for their survival.<sup>227</sup> Widespread price increases also impact the elderly, who in many cases spend more than half of their pension to cover their basic needs.<sup>228</sup> According to official sources, 39% of the beneficiaries receive minimum pensions amounting to 1,528 Cuban pesos, equivalent to 4.70 dollars at the exchange rate in the informal market.<sup>229</sup> Given this situation, elderly people can be seen in the streets of Havana going through the garbage in order to find recyclable materials to sell and to be able to collect a little money to make ends meet.<sup>230</sup>

125. Regarding persons deprived of their liberty, the Commission and REDESCA continued to receive complaints about detention conditions related to overcrowding, poor food, lack of access to drinking water, medicines, and medical care.<sup>231</sup> Civil society organizations documented between March 2023 and May 2024 at least 2,093 cases of human rights violations in detention centers, of which 739 are related to lack of medical care and health problems. Most of these abuses are perpetrated by prison staff, State Security agents, and members of the judicial system, and include harassment of inmates, beatings, physical torture, and insufficient or spoiled food.<sup>232</sup> Likewise, the food received by people in State custody is scarce, poorly balanced, and, in many cases, in a state of decomposition.<sup>233</sup> There is also a lack of adequate and timely medical care; medication sent by family members is not delivered and necessary tests are not performed, even for those with chronic illnesses and people with disabilities.<sup>234</sup> During the same period (March 2023 and May 2024), 44 people are reported to have died in prison, mainly due to lack of medicines and lack of adequate medical care.<sup>235</sup>

126. In addition, note was taken of the reports made by civil society on forced labor imposed in prisons on political prisoners, who are forced to work for state-owned companies in coal production and sugarcane harvesting without the necessary protective equipment. In addition, they denounce that persons deprived of their liberty receive insignificant salaries and are coerced to perform their work under threats and reprisals.<sup>236</sup>

127. Regarding the situation of Cuban workers abroad, especially those involved in medical missions, the IACHR and REDESCA received information on the serious human rights violations experienced by health personnel, who face exploitative working conditions, inadequate salaries, and various forms of harassment and pressure.<sup>237</sup> However, as reported, abandoning these missions carries severe penalties, including prison sentences of up to eight years or a ban on returning to the country. In addition, precarious housing conditions, withholding of salaries in favor of the government, reprisals against family members of those who express dissent, and serious allegations of sexual harassment and constant surveillance were reported. Annually, the Cuban government sends more than 50,000 doctors and other specialists abroad, generating revenues ranging from 7 to 11 billion dollars, which is equivalent to three to four times the income from tourism. Regarding this situation, the Commission and the Office of the Special Rapporteur take note of the Resolution of the European Parliament, in which it expresses its concern about the existence of forced labor in Cuba and condemns this type of practice promoted by the State, especially the medical brigades, but which also affects teachers, sailors, engineers, artists, athletes, and other persons.<sup>238</sup>

128. The housing deficit in Cuba continues to be a structural problem that affects a large part of the population. According to the official press, the country faces a deficit of more than 856,500 housing units, given that in 2023 only 65% of planned housing projects were executed.<sup>239</sup> In 2024, as of August, 5,262 homes were completed, representing an execution rate of 39%.<sup>240</sup> This deficit is aggravated by factors such as population growth, urbanization, the deterioration of many existing buildings, and the lack of economic resources of individuals to improve them.

129. In relation to the guarantee of the right to a healthy environment and actions in the face of the climate emergency, the IACHR and REDESCA take note of the development of a national air monitoring system to measure pollution; and that, among the actions planned for its revitalization, are the updated characterization of air quality behavior, the acquisition of equipment and technologies to measure the main

B. Groups in situations of vulnerability and discrimination

130. In 2024, the Commission continued to receive information on the human rights situation of vulnerable groups and groups traditionally subject to discrimination. In the following section it addresses the main concerns in relation to certain populations in Cuba, such as people of African descent, women, LGBTI persons, persons in situations of human mobility, people deprived of their liberty, and persons with disability.

People of African descent

131. In relation to the situation of Afro-descendants, the Commission emphasizes its concern regarding the persistence of challenges in the implementation of actions and measures for the elimination of racial and structural discrimination in the country, as well as the situation of extreme vulnerability to which this ethnic-racial group continues to be exposed.

132. According to information received by the IACHR during its 190th session, racially profiled violence and structural discrimination are persistent problems in Cuba, especially within the justice system and the actions of police forces. Cases documented by civil society show that Afro-Cubans are more likely to be perceived as dangerous and criminal, leading to increased police persecution, imprisonment, and repression.<sup>242</sup>

133. In this regard, according to publicly available information, state repression during the "11" protests has disproportionately affected Afro-descendants. Also, according to information systematized by the organization Cubalex, Afro-descendants accused of sedition for participating in the aforementioned protests have received harsher sentences than non-Afro-descendants tried for the same crime. According to them, these sentences reflect racial profiling, within the framework of a judicial system with entrenched structural racism.<sup>243</sup>

134. Likewise, in the framework of the aforementioned hearing, civil society organizations denounced the lack of facilities to participate and build a social and political agenda that would lead the State to espouse public practices that would enable them to occupy a place in society to advocate for respect for their rights. They denounced that Afro-descendant human rights defenders were harassed by State security agents when attempting to assemble peacefully and suffered arbitrary detentions, without the right to an effective defense, and with greater violence on the part of police forces.<sup>244</sup>

135. On the other hand, the IACHR has warned of the special impact on the economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights of Afro-Cuban people, particularly in the areas of health, housing, unemployment, and access to sanitation and drinking water.<sup>245</sup> On this point, civil society organizations emphasized that poverty and extreme poverty mainly affect people of African descent, who live in a precarious situation, in unhealthy areas, with low salaries, no remittances, and little schooling.<sup>246</sup> In addition to the difficulty of finding employment in decent conditions, Afro-Cuban activists have denounced that they have been fired from their jobs in retaliation for speaking out against racial discrimination and human rights violations.<sup>247</sup>

136. In addition, there is apparently no recent official information that would allow us to verify the inequalities affecting people of African descent and to design public policies to combat the growing racial inequality in Cuba. According to civil society representatives, the last population census of 2012 did not account for these inequities because it did not include the existence of segments of the population differentiated according to ethno-racial descent. Moreover, the population census that was to be carried out in 2022 was postponed until at least 2025.<sup>248</sup>

137. The Commission continues to take note of the follow-up actions to the National Program against Racism and Racial Discrimination adopted by the Cuban State in 2019 and in effect until 2030, which include the inauguration in October 2023 of the Laboratorio Social Color Cubano, which monitors implementation of the Program.<sup>249</sup> However, civil society organizations denounce significant challenges in terms of implementation and impact, such as the lack of communication and dissemination of the few actions that are carried out<sup>250</sup> and the lack of measurable objectives that can be evaluated by citizens.<sup>251</sup>

138. The Commission also reiterates its call on the State to take positive steps to ensure the political participation of people of African descent in public bodies, either by adopting a system of electoral quotas or by creating channels for civil society participation in legislative processes and public policy development. The IACHR believes that their participation would contribute substantially to the modification of racist patterns and enable their specific needs to be highlighted, by heeding their right to equality before the law, provided for in Article II of the American Declaration, as well as the substantive dimension of the principle of equality.

Women

139. Regarding the human rights situation of women, the Commission reiterates its concern about the harassment, intimidation, and persecution suffered by women human rights defenders, Afro-Cuban activists, and women deprived of their liberty in Cuba. Particularly notable is the absence of public policies and specialized legislation to combat violence against women in the country and the lack of official and updated statistical data on this type of violence.

140. The Commission appreciates the enactment of Decree 109, which created the National System for the Integral Care of Life that aims to contribute to the redistribution of care work taking the gender approach into account in order to transform unequal relations between men and women.<sup>252</sup> However, it notes with concern the lack of adoption of specialized regulations to prevent, investigate, and punish gender-based violence against women.<sup>253</sup> Despite repeated demands by civil society organizations, the discussion of the Comprehensive Law against Violence and the classification of femicide as a crime has not yet been included in the legislative agenda.<sup>254</sup> In this regard, the Commission regrets the lack of ratification of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment, and Eradication of Violence against Women, the main regional instrument for the protection of women's human rights.<sup>255</sup>

141. On the other hand, the Commission warns of the prevalence of femicidal violence and the absence of measures to combat it, such as prevention protocols and temporary housing for victims of violence.<sup>256</sup> Publicly available information indicates that, between January and October 2024, 40 violent deaths of women were recorded, most of them perpetrated by their partners or ex-partners.<sup>257</sup> In addition to these data are the people affected by these deaths, mainly family members who depended on the victims.<sup>258</sup> The Commission appreciates the recognition in the Cuban regulatory framework of the right to reparation in cases of gender violence. However, civil society organizations have pointed out that there are challenges to its timely implementation, such as the absence of a gender focus in legislation, the limitation of reparation to compensation, and bureaucratic obstacles.<sup>259</sup>

142. Likewise, the Commission warns that, during 2024, women activists and human rights defenders continued to face acts of repression to discourage their participation in protests, activism, or defense work.<sup>260</sup> The persistence of short-term arbitrary detentions<sup>261</sup>, harassment, physical, psychological, and vicarious violence<sup>262</sup>, sexual violence, and threats by State officials has been reported, particularly affecting Afro-Cuban women.<sup>263</sup> Also notable were reprisals against family members of women defenders in the form of harassment, forced disappearance, and expulsion from schools and workplaces.<sup>264</sup> In addition, women deprived of their liberty face inadequate detention conditions that put their personal integrity at risk,<sup>265</sup> as well as physical and sexual assaults committed by state agents.<sup>266</sup> Along these lines, the Commission was informed about the denial of food and adequate medical care to a pregnant woman deprived of liberty who was pressured to terminate her pregnancy.<sup>267</sup>

143. The aforementioned acts of violence collide with the rights enshrined in the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man. Article II recognizes the right to equality without distinction as to race, sex, and other categories.<sup>268</sup> However, Cuban women defenders and prisoners face discrimination, firstly, due to the absence of regulations that guarantee the exercise of their rights and, secondly, due to the various forms of violence they suffer in both the public and private spheres. In addition, the exercise of the right to protection of motherhood and childhood<sup>269</sup> is affected by the conditions inside detention centers and the reprisals faced by family members of women defenders, including children.

144. In summary, serious deficiencies persist in the protection of the rights of women, who are deprived of public policies and adequate legislation to prevent and punish gender violence, which exacerbates the vulnerability of specific groups such as women defenders, Afro-Cuban activists, and women deprived of liberty. This absence of protection mechanisms increases the commission of acts of violence as reflected in the number of violent deaths. Finally, there is evidence of a pattern of discrimination and violence against women activists and human rights defenders exercised by state agents that particularly affects Afro-descendant women.

LGBTI persons

145. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, the Commission remains concerned about the situation of generalized violence against this group. At the same time, there are numerous complaints from civil society about the lack of investigations by the authorities into violent crimes, possibly motivated by prejudice. Concern is also reiterated about transgender political prisoners and the lack of official data on the rights of LGBTI people.

146. The IACHR notes that between May 3 and 18, 2024, the country conducted “Cuban Days against Homophobia and Transphobia”.<sup>270</sup> On those days, peaceful association meetings were organized by the State to draw attention to the struggle for the rights of LGBTI people. Likewise, political leaders and high-level public officials expressed their support for LGBTI rights during the year.<sup>271</sup>

147. On the other hand, the Commission warns about the lack of official and public data and information on the human rights situation of LGBTI persons, a situation that makes monitoring difficult. The IACHR notes that most of the data are generated by civil society organizations and the independent press.

148. The IACHR also continues to receive information related to acts of violence and repression against LGBTI persons in Cuba. In February, for example, the murder of Helen García Artelles, a trans woman and human rights defender from Camagüey, was reported.<sup>272</sup> In July, according to information in the public domain, Cuban activist and artist Kiriam Gutiérrez Pérez was banned from participating in and even attending an event known as “Reina de la Copla en Cuba” (Queen of the Couplet in Cuba). This was due to an anonymous accusation that an act of protest could take place at the event.<sup>273</sup> Likewise, the Commission learned about the lack of interest of the authorities in investigating crimes allegedly motivated by prejudice and that the impunity that this generates is one reason why LGBTI people want to leave the island.<sup>274</sup>

149. In addition, the Commission reiterates its concern about the wellbeing of trans activist and political prisoner Brenda Díaz, who has been housed in a male prison since her arrest during the July 11, 2021 demonstrations. According to information in the public domain, Brenda was transferred to a punishment cell on January 1, 2024 and, although she is no longer in this cell, she reports being in inhumane conditions and being the victim of acts of violence by guards.<sup>275</sup>

150. In light of the above, the IACHR urges the State to make efforts to collect and analyze data regarding the prevalence and nature of violence and bias-based discrimination against LGBTI persons.<sup>276</sup> It also reiterates the recommendation made in 2023 on guaranteeing the right to life and integrity of LGBTI people; first by refraining from practicing, through its agents, acts of violence against them; and, secondly by ensuring a legal framework that protects them against actions by third parties.<sup>277</sup>

151. Finally, the Commission reiterates to the State the urgent need to adopt protocols that provide security for trans persons deprived of their liberty.<sup>278</sup> Likewise, the State is called upon to investigate acts of violence against LGBTI persons in accordance with international standards of due diligence to guarantee adequate access to justice for LGBTI persons and ensure measures of non-repetition.

People in a situation of human mobility

152. Regarding the population in a situation of human mobility, the Commission noted with concern the enactment of the new Citizenship Law, which contains provisions that would allow depriving persons of their nationality for acts contrary to political, economic, and social interests. It also reiterates its alarm at the persistence of arbitrary restrictions on the right of movement and residence, including the right of nationals to leave and return freely to the country, and continues to closely observe the increase in the massive outflow of Cuban nationals from the country.

153. Regarding the new Citizenship Law,<sup>279</sup> approved in July 2024 by the National Assembly of People's Power, the Commission notes with concern that the norm allows depriving a person of Cuban nationality if he or she, in the opinion of the corresponding citizenship authority, "from abroad perform acts contrary to the high political, economic, and social interests of the Republic of Cuba". In addition, the aforementioned law provides that "when any person gives cause for deprivation of citizenship and causes serious damage to the country in relation to national security, endangers the stability of the State, international relations, or the general health of the population, the citizenship authority may issue a Presidential Decree without complying with the requirements and formalities for the processing of the case". In this regard, the

IACHR stresses that nationality constitutes a non-derogable right, and that its arbitrary deprivation, especially as a punishment or sanction for political reasons, is contrary to international human rights law.<sup>280</sup>

154. With regard to restrictions on the right of movement and residence, during 2024, the Commission continued to observe that the exercise of this right is extremely restricted in law and in fact, especially for those who have espoused critical positions towards the Government. The IACHR learned of new cases of activists and independent journalists who have been banned from leaving the country by Cuban authorities. In March, activist Martha Beatriz Roque was prevented from leaving the country to attend a ceremony in which she was awarded the International Women of Courage Award by the U.S. State Department.<sup>281</sup> Similarly, on June 6, CubaNet contributor Armando Sardiñas was prevented from boarding a flight to Nicaragua.<sup>282</sup> In turn, writer Adriana Normand denounced on November 13 that she was informed that she was under surveillance (se encuentra regulada) when she was in the office in charge of issuing passports in Havana.<sup>283</sup>

155. In particular, the Commission is concerned about certain provisions of the new Migration Law<sup>284</sup> that allow limiting the entry into the country of Cuban citizens for the purpose of guaranteeing defense, national security, internal order, or public order and interest. The IACHR stresses that, in accordance with Article VIII of the American Declaration, every person has the right to establish his or her residence within the territory of the state of which he or she is a national, to move about freely within such territory, and not to leave it except by her or his own will.<sup>285</sup> Likewise, the refusal to return nationals to their country is considered a serious violation of the rights associated with the exercise of nationality.

156. In addition, the IACHR continues to take note of the significant increase in the migration of Cuban persons to the United States in 2024. In this regard, according to the most recent Customs and Border Protection (CBP) statistical update, between October 2023 and September 2024, 217,615 Cuban nationals arrived in the United States.<sup>286</sup> This number already exceeds 641,000 for fiscal years 2022 to 2024, and continues to surpass the 125,000 who emigrated in 1980 during the historic Mariel exodus. In 2024, the IACHR continued to receive information linking this increase in migration to the severe economic crisis in the country, constant power outages, and restrictions on the exercise of basic human rights, as well as ongoing state repression of social demonstrations in the country.

157. Given this reality, the Commission urges the State to eliminate any provisions of the new Citizenship Law that may lead to arbitrary deprivation of nationality for political and/or ideological reasons. In addition, it reiterates its call on the State of Cuba to eliminate restrictions on exit and entry into the country imposed on individuals due to their activities as activists or for political reasons, as well as to adopt urgent and comprehensive measures to address the factors that are generating the massive outflow of its nationals from the country, including violations of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Older persons

158. Regarding the situation of the rights of the elderly, the IACHR is concerned about social protection and the exercise of the rights to housing, food, and health with independence and autonomy, particularly given the impoverishment of this segment of the population. The Commission also takes note of arbitrary detentions of elderly opposition members.

159. According to available information, the aging population in Cuba is one of the largest in the region, with 24.4% of the population over 60 years of age.<sup>287</sup> Given the current economic, energy, water and food crisis,<sup>288</sup> this population is in a situation of extreme vulnerability. According to the aforementioned civil society reports, extreme poverty escalated to 89% of the general population.<sup>289</sup> Among people over 60 years of age, this percentage rises to 91%, and among those over 70 years of age, it reaches 94%.<sup>290</sup> Likewise, these reports indicate that the pension received by most of the elderly is insufficient to cover food, health and housing expenses.<sup>291</sup>

160. In relation to the right to food, information gathered by civil society organizations indicates that more than 80% of the elderly have experienced a significant loss of access to essential foodstuffs.<sup>292</sup> This population faces different, specific difficulties in acquiring food, due, among other causes, to the need to travel long distances and stand in long lines to do so, and to the lack of access to remittances.<sup>293</sup> In this regard, multiple public information sources report that the elderly have been seen scavenging for food.<sup>294</sup> Regular lack of potable water, electricity, and liquefied gas directly impacts food storage and cooking.<sup>295</sup> In this situation, reports point out the difficulty of accessing data or evaluation reports on the status of the food services provided by the Family Assistance System.<sup>296</sup>

161. With regard to the right to housing, the Commission learned from public information about the poor quality of housing for some elderly people and the relationship between housing and the disintegration of family nuclei due to migration. In this regard, worrying photos have circulated on social networks of extremely precarious dwellings in which elderly people live alone.<sup>297</sup> In addition, heavy migration is reportedly having a serious impact on the disintegration of family nuclei and intergenerational care, since homes are being sold to pay for the migration expenses of the rest of the family group, leaving the elderly who do not migrate homeless.<sup>298</sup> In the same vein, the Deputy Director of Social Work at the Center for the Care of Homeless People in Havana publicly acknowledged that there has been an increase in the number of people living on the street in recent months<sup>299</sup>, most of whom are older people.<sup>300</sup>

162. The IACHR has highlighted the need for care facilities for the elderly to guarantee decent living conditions.<sup>301</sup> On this point, the Cuban Prime Minister noted in April 2024 that difficulties persist in the implementation of multisectoral policies and programs related to the care of "grandparents' homes, homes for the elderly and psycho-pedagogical medical centers". Problems reported in these establishments include poor food quality, non-compliance with established schedules, lack of recreational options, lack of hygiene, and deterioration of facilities.<sup>302</sup>

163. The Commission has also received information on gender violence and femicide involving women over 65 years of age, who are more vulnerable because they are more socially isolated and do not have the resources to end violent relationships. Likewise, the scant attention paid to this form of violence reportedly leads to those women not identifying themselves as victims and, therefore, not reporting their situation or asking for help. Civil society organizations have expressed concern about the few official statistics on gender-based violence against the elderly and the social and economic impact of this violence, which greatly impairs the stability of the dependents of the murdered women.<sup>303</sup>

164. The Commission also continued to receive information on the situation of elderly persons deprived of their liberty for political reasons. Félix Navarro, founder of the Pedro Luis Boitel Party for Democracy, now 71 years old, is serving his third sentence for political reasons.<sup>304</sup> According to available information, Navarro, a beneficiary of precautionary measures, is reportedly very thin and is not receiving the medications he needs to treat his diabetes.<sup>305</sup>

165. Finally, the IACHR has also taken cognizance of temporary deprivations of liberty involving elderly persons whose political opinions are contrary to the regime. Academic Alina Bárbara López Hernández was detained on April 18 and June 18 when she traveled to Havana to protest against acts of censorship. In the first case, she was detained for 7 hours, held incommunicado, and suffered physical violence that caused a sprain in her right shoulder.<sup>306</sup> In the second case, she was physically assaulted at the time of arrest and was deprived of her liberty for 11 hours.<sup>307</sup> Similarly, in the framework of the celebration of its twenty-second anniversary, 18 people from the Opposition Movement for a New Republic were arrested by the National Revolutionary Police, among them 71-year-old Luis Jesús Gutiérrez Campos.<sup>308</sup>

166. Based on the above, the IACHR reiterates that older persons have the right to access a social security system that protects them against the consequences of old age that make it physically or mentally impossible for them to obtain the means of subsistence.<sup>309</sup> Thus, the right to food is a human right that has been linked to guaranteeing the preservation of the health of all people in the Americas.<sup>310</sup> The IACHR also highlights the importance of ensuring the active and full social participation and integration into the community of older persons<sup>311</sup>, without fear of reprisals regarding their personal liberty. In addition, the Commission notes that the Principles and Best Practices on the Protection of Persons Deprived of Liberty in the Americas outlaw discrimination against the prison population on the basis of age or political opinion.<sup>312</sup>

Persons with disabilities

167. With respect to persons with disabilities, the IACHR continues to observe with concern the obstacles faced by these persons in the exercise of their rights under conditions of equality and non-discrimination. It also highlights the serious situation of persons with disabilities deprived of their liberty for political reasons or as a result of exercising their right to defend human rights.<sup>313</sup>

168. During 2024, the Commission continued to register complaints of physical and psychological abuse against these individuals. In particular, the Commission learned of physical aggressions against Iliván Fuentes Fonseca, who has been a psychiatric patient since he was 12 years old, for protesting after the food his family had provided him was taken away from him.<sup>314</sup> Likewise, civil society organizations denounced the lack of medical care for people with disabilities who are deprived of their liberty for having participated in the protests of July 11, 2021.<sup>315</sup> According to available information, Ismael Rodríguez González, who has a diagnosis of intellectual disability, suicidal risk, and personality disorder, is not receiving the medications and medical attention he needs.<sup>316</sup> Similarly, Walnier Luis Aguilar Rivera, a beneficiary of precautionary measures who has an intellectual disability, is detained in a highly dangerous area, suffers mistreatment, and cannot access his medication.<sup>317</sup>

169. The Commission was also informed about the denial of medical treatment to Iran Almaguer Labrada, a member of the Christian Liberation Movement (MCL), who suffers from retinitis pigmentosa, which causes progressive loss of vision. Almaguer Labrada, who is a beneficiary of precautionary measures, has been subjected to persecution, intimidation, short-term detentions and threats of suspension of treatment in retaliation for his activism. In early 2020 this threat materialized, and since then he has not received medical attention. According to information provided by the civil society, this situation has caused the total loss of vision in his right eye and an almost total decrease in his left eye.<sup>318</sup>

170. Likewise, the Commission continues to observe that the organizations that assist persons with disabilities in the exercise of their rights are selective in their actions and abide by a political-ideological profile established in their Bylaws, which prevents persons with disabilities who do not share the ideology of the governing party from joining as associates. For example, the statute of the National Association of the Blind (ANCI) states that those who wish to join the association must "maintain moral and social conduct in accordance with the principles of socialist society".<sup>319</sup>

171. The IACHR reminds the Cuban State that, according to international standards on the rights of persons with disabilities, those persons are a priority group for protection and States have the role of primary guarantor of their human rights and inherent dignity, including the right to life, health, liberty, and personal integrity throughout the life cycle, and especially when they are in their care in a situation of deprivation of liberty. The IACHR stresses that States are responsible for protecting persons with disabilities against discrimination of any kind and for ensuring that they are not subjected to cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment for any reason. In addition, they must ensure that they have equal access to the justice system and due process, with all the facilities required to ensure accessibility.

IV. RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE STATE AND OTHER STAKEHOLDERS

A. Situation of the Cuban State vis-à-vis the OAS and the IACHR

172. On January 31, 1962, the Government of Cuba was excluded from participation in the inter-American system by means of Resolution VI, adopted at the Eighth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, held in Punta del Este (Uruguay).<sup>320</sup> That resolution ceased to have effect on June 3, 2009, when the General Assembly of the Organization of American States, at its Thirty-Ninth Regular Session in San Pedro Sula, Honduras, determined by resolution AG/RES. 2438 (XXXIX-O/09) that "the participation of the Republic of Cuba in the OAS will be the result of a process of dialogue initiated at the request of the Government of Cuba, and in accordance with the practices, purposes, and principles of the OAS.”<sup>321</sup>

173. As of the date of adoption of this report, the annulment of the 1962 resolution that excluded the Cuban Government from the inter-American system has not resulted in Cuba's reincorporation in the OAS. In 2018, for example, at the Eighth Summit of the Americas, Cuba sent a delegation and, despite walking out of the inaugural session prior to the address delivered by the Secretary General of the Organization, it announced that it would continue to “exercise [its] legitimate right to participate at a forum to which it should have been a party for a long time.” At the same event, Foreign Minister Bruno Rodríguez reiterated the position of the Cuban State with respect to what it views as the use of the OAS as an instrument of the geopolitical interests of United States.

174. The exclusion of the Cuban government by the OAS has not prevented the Commission from fulfilling its mandate to promote and protect human rights<sup>322</sup>; since it recognizes it as “legally responsible before the Inter-American Commission with respect to human rights”, since it is “party to the international instruments that were initially established in the American Hemisphere to protect human rights”, and because Resolution VI of the Eighth Meeting of Consultation “excluded the government of Cuba, and not the State, from participation in the Inter-American system”.<sup>323</sup>

175. The Commission recalls that the States that have not ratified the American Convention on Human Rights conferred on the Commission the power “to pay particular attention to the observance of the human rights referred to in Articles I, II, III, IV, XVIII, XXV, and XXVI of the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man,” in accordance with Article 20(a) of the Statute of the IACHR.

176. Under this mandate, the Commission has prepared eight country reports and one thematic report, with the last country report dated 2020 and the thematic report dated 2023. Cuba has also been included in Chapter IV, or its equivalent, of the Annual Report in the years 1984-1985 to 1994, and continuously since 1996. In the wake of the regulatory amendments in 2013, Cuba's inclusion in the annual reports was based on the criteria set forth in article 59(6)(a.i) and (c) of the Rules of Procedure.

177. Over the past ten years, the IACHR has held an average of two public hearings per year with respect to Cuba. In 2024, the Commission held 5 hearings: Cuba: Human rights of persons participating in medical missions" and "Cuba: Right to freedom of association" (189th Session); "Cuba: Human rights violations in the context of institutional violence" and "Cuba: Human Rights of Persons Arbitrarily Deprived of Liberty for Political Reasons" (190th Session); and "Rights of the Elderly in Cuba" (191st Session).

178. Likewise, information has been requested from the State in accordance with the powers set forth in Article 18, paragraph d, of the Statute; and, in addition, individual petitions, cases, and precautionary measures continue to be received, processed, and examined.

179. With regard to precautionary measures, as of the date of preparation of this report, Cuba has 52 precautionary measures in force. Of these, 7 were granted in 2024. In 2024, the IACHR highlights the approval of Follow-up Resolution 27/24 regarding precautionary measure MC 484-11, whose beneficiary is José Daniel Ferrer García, who is deprived of his liberty. The Commission decided to issue this Follow-up Resolution, considering that State agents have been pursuing actions that intensify the beneficiary's risk situation, instead of mitigating it. In this regard, the Commission observed that, after the granting of the precautionary measure, the beneficiary was again deprived of liberty on July 11, 2021 and has been subjected to punishment cells, prolonged periods of incommunicado detention, physical and psychological torture, inadequate food, and lack of medical care.<sup>324</sup>

<sup>322</sup> During 2018, the IACHR issued two letters requesting information from the State and published two press releases: IACHR, Press Release R82/2018, IACHR publishes merits report in case related to criminalization of political opinion and deliberation in Cuba April 11, 2018 and IACHR, Press Release R152/2018, The Office of the Special Rapporteur Expresses Concern over Criminal Convictions for desacato laws in Cuba, July 17, 2018.

180. Although the Cuban government does not respond to the communications and decisions of the IACHR, civil society organizations report experiencing the cessation or decrease in intensity, sometimes temporarily, of the mistreatment, reprisals, harassment and/or aggressions to which they were subjected prior to the Commission's actions.

B. U.S.-Cuba Relations

181. The U.S. economic embargo against Cuba, initiated more than 60 years ago, is based on a set of U.S. laws and regulations that prohibit or limit trade relations with the island, in particular: the Trading with the Enemy Act (1917), the Foreign Assistance Act (1961), the Cuban Democracy Act (1992), the Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity Act, known as Helms-Burton (1996) and the Trade Sanctions and Trade Enhancement Act (2000).<sup>325</sup>

182. Over time, the intensity of the blockade has fluctuated between easing and adding restrictions. Since the announcement on December 17, 2014 of the reestablishment of relations between Cuba and the United States of America<sup>326</sup>, the Commission has continued to monitor the partial lifting of the economic blockade by the U.S. Congress.<sup>327</sup>

183. As of 2019, the United States Government reactivated some sanctions imposed on the Cuban Government.<sup>328</sup> In early 2020, the United States established restrictions on private flights to all airports in the country, with the exception of Havana's José Martí International Airport,<sup>329</sup> in addition to having previously restricted the sending of remittances to the island.<sup>330</sup> During 2021, the Commission observed that the U.S. government did not resume the policy of rapprochement of relations with Cuba.

184. In 2022, the IACHR took note of the relaxation of some restrictions. Thus, in May 2022, the U.S. government announced measures that seek to make Cuba policy more flexible and that represent a reversal of the decisions taken by former President Donald Trump. In particular, the State Department reported the reestablishment of commercial flights to several Cuban cities, which since August 2020 had only reached Havana; that the $1,000 per quarter limit on remittances will be suspended; and that family reunification will be facilitated through the reestablishment of the Cuban Family Reunification Parole (CFRP) Program.<sup>331</sup>

185. In 2023, the IACHR took note of the new processes adopted by the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) targeting Cuban, Haitian, Nicaraguan, and Venezuelan individuals. According to these, Cuban individuals who have support in the United States (financial or other support person) and travel by air will be able to reside temporarily in the United States for two years and apply for employment authorization.<sup>332</sup> By the end of September 2024, more than 111,000 Cubans reportedly arrived under this program.<sup>333</sup> In August 2024, the processing of Advance Travel Authorizations was briefly suspended to investigate possible sponsor-related irregularities and was then resumed with increased scrutiny of financial supporters.<sup>334</sup> Also, in early October 2024, it was reported that humanitarian parole will not be extended after two years, and that those who have not applied for legal status will have to leave the country at the end of their permit.<sup>335</sup>

186. As it has reiterated on several occasions, the IACHR calls for the lifting of the U.S. economic blockade of Cuba due to its impact on the Cuban population and their rights. On the other hand, it reiterates that the blockade does not exempt the Cuban State from complying with its international obligations, nor does it excuse it for the violations of the American Declaration.<sup>336</sup>

187. The blockade of Cuba has also been criticized by the United Nations on several occasions. Since 1992, the UN General Assembly has called on the United States to lift sanctions on Cuba, so far without success. In this regard, on October 30, 2024, for the thirty-second time, the General Assembly approved a new resolution calling for an end to the economic, commercial, and financial embargo imposed on Cuba. The resolution received 187 votes in favor, two against, those of the United States and Israel, and one abstention, that of Moldova.<sup>337</sup>

V. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

188. The IACHR notes with great concern that, in light of the information gathered in 2024, taking into account the recommendations made in its most recent country report and in chapters IV of previous annual reports, it does not observe an improvement in structural aspects, such as violations of the rights to personal liberty and integrity, arbitrary restrictions on the right to vote and to participate in government, freedom of expression and dissemination of thought. In addition, violations of due process guarantees, undue restrictions on the right of transit, among other anomalies, persist. In addition, the IACHR regrets the limited official information available and the State's historical distancing from this regional human rights body.

189. At the same time, the IACHR reiterates its interest in carrying out an on-site visit to Cuba, in order to initiate rapprochement and dialogue with the Cuban State, and thus provide technical support in human rights matters as required, in order to promote respect and guarantees for human rights on the island.

190. In light of the above, in compliance with its mandate, the Commission urges the State of Cuba:

Representative democracy and political rights

1. To guarantee access to public information in the framework of electoral processes and to allow electoral observation in the country, ensuring an environment conducive to public scrutiny and transparency in such processes.
2. To eliminate the use of the Candidacy Commissions as tools of ideological control and guarantee that no opposition candidate is arbitrarily excluded from the electoral process.
3. To provide periodic reports on measures taken with respect to legislative changes for the institutionalization of representative democracy in the country and respect for human rights related to its exercise.
4. To release persons detained for political reasons or reasons of conscience, including activists, artists, and journalists prosecuted for their work or advocacy.

Independence of public authorities, procedural guarantees, and judicial protection

5. To ensure that judicial system operators have safeguards as soon as they are elected to enable them to carry out their work independently, impartially, in accordance with the law, and with respect for human rights. To this end, appointment and dismissal processes must be conducted on the basis of previously established legal requirements and without ideological conditioning.
6. To investigate alleged human rights violations, punish those responsible, and take measures to prevent impunity due to a lack of judicial independence.
7. To review and reform criminal legislation to avoid the use of broad criminal offenses to unduly restrict the rights of dissidents, activists or critics of state officialdom.
8. To prohibit illegal or arbitrary detentions, ensuring that deprivation of liberty is an exceptional measure and that all legal guarantees are respected, including the right to be immediately brought before a judge.
9. To adopt measures to ensure that lawyers can practice their profession without restrictions for political reasons and without threats or harassment.

Human rights defenders

10. To refrain from acts of harassment, threats, aggression, persecution, arbitrary detentions, and criminalization committed by State authorities, to the detriment of human rights defenders.
11. To provide an environment free of hostilities and with respect for fundamental freedoms for the defense of human rights. Accordingly, to refrain from actions that could impair opportunities to participate in society (espacio cívico abierto y participativo).
12. To avoid imposing arbitrary restrictions on the right to free movement of human rights defenders, allowing them to exercise their right to freedom of movement on Cuban territory.

Persons deprived of liberty

13. To develop a public registry of persons deprived of their liberty that is easily accessible and regularly updated. In particular, the registry must contain, at least, the following data: (i) number of persons detained in each place of deprivation of liberty, and installed capacity of each center; (ii) age; (iii) gender, sexual orientation, gender identity and expression; (iv) nationality, migratory status and ethnic-racial origin; (v) special risk situation, such as the existence of disability; (vi) family composition; (vii) procedural situation; (viii) sentence or measure applied and estimated date of release; (ix) causes of imprisonment; and (x) data on the court or tribunal that ordered and oversees the detention.
14. To ensure that persons deprived of liberty are treated with dignity. In particular, to ensure that persons held in prisons have access to the medical care that their particular health status requires and are provided with sufficient food of high nutritional value and safe drinking water. Likewise, to take measures to ensure that infrastructure conditions comply with sanitation and hygiene requirements.
15. To implement actions to prevent and combat all forms of torture or ill-treatment. To this end, to create an independent mechanism with broad powers to examine detention centers, hold private interviews with detainees, and receive complaints and initiate investigations into acts of torture or ill-treatment.

Freedom of expression

16. To guarantee the legal conditions needed for the full exercise of the right to freedom of expression, freedom of the press, freedom of peaceful assembly, and freedom of association, both online and offline. This includes making domestic regulation compatible with international human rights standards on the subject.

17. To ensure that all individuals and groups, including journalists, artists, human rights defenders, political opponents, among others, can exercise their right to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly, and association without fear of reprisals or criminalization.
18. To refrain from arbitrarily obstructing -even by indirect means- the journalistic activities of both the local press and international correspondents.
19. To immediately cease all forms of harassment, threats, intimidation, and censorship, such as subpoenas, interrogations, arbitrary detentions, and police intimidation, among others, against any person for causes related to the exercise of their freedom of expression, and freedom of association and assembly.
20. To respect, protect, and guarantee the right to social protest. In particular, to refrain from imposing requirements contrary to international human rights law, such as prior authorization; and to refrain from applying criminal sanctions against individuals solely for participating in public demonstrations.
21. To guarantee universal access to the Internet without restrictions, discrimination, blocking, or arbitrary interference. In particular, to avoid any kind of discrimination in the treatment of data and Internet traffic based on factors such as devices, content, author, origin and/or destination of the material, service or application, in accordance with the principle of net neutrality.
22. To adapt the internal legal framework, including the recently approved Law on Transparency and Access to Public Information, to abide by international standards on freedom of expression and access to information. In particular, to adhere to the guiding principles of maximum disclosure and good faith. The right of access to information includes the State's obligation to produce or collect information on human rights violations and judicial investigations into them.
23. To facilitate the operation of international observation mechanisms regarding the situation of the right to freedom of expression in Cuba, including providing all official information considered relevant.
24. To guarantee pluralism and diversity in the media and adopt measures to prevent the existence of public media monopolies. Likewise, to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the State's media are subject to appropriate legislation and regulation.

Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights

25. To guarantee economic, social, cultural and environmental rights without discrimination and under conditions of equality, paying special attention to vulnerable groups, such as people living in poverty and people deprived of their liberty.
26. To take concrete steps to ensure access to adequate food or the means to obtain it and to essential public services. The international community should foster cooperation in the supply of food, medicines, and basic commodities in Cuba.
27. To promote effective measures to ensure access to essential public services such as water and electricity and enhance the resilience of infrastructure in order to meet the vital needs of the population and promote their integral development, especially in a context of growing vulnerability to the effects of climate change.

People of African descent

28. To generate updated and disaggregated data on the Afro-Cuban population, after first agreeing with grassroots and civil society organizations, through adequate and accessible communication channels, on the ethnic-racial self-identification questions to be used in surveys, censuses, and other statistical tools. To have specialized technical teams for data collection and analysis, and to train them in intercultural perspective, rights of Afro-descendants, and racial discrimination.

29. To ensure compliance with international standards on the use of force based on the principles of legality, proportionality, and absolute necessity, including a gender focus and the prevention of racial profiling. Therefore, to sensitize and train justice operators and officials of the criminal justice system and police bodies on the prohibition of racial profiling and other explicit or implicit discriminatory practices based on ethno-racial origin, color, or national origin.
30. To adopt measures to guarantee the effective enjoyment of the economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights of Afro-descendants, with an intersectional perspective. In particular to ensure access to education, health, work, drinking water, and a healthy environment.
31. To guarantee the effective participation of Afro-descendants in decision-making.

Women

32. To ratify the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment, and Eradication of Violence against Women ("Convention of Belém do Pará").
33. To adopt comprehensive legislation with an intersectional and gender-based approach to address gender-based violence in all its forms and facilitate the prevention, investigation, and punishment of gender-based violence against women, considering the particular risks faced by women activists, human rights defenders, and women deprived of liberty.
34. To establish specialized protection mechanisms for women who are victims of gender-based violence, including the creation of safe temporary shelters and emergency hotlines staffed with personnel trained in a gender perspective.

LGBTI persons

35. To guarantee the right to life and integrity of LGBTI persons, fulfilling its obligation to act with due diligence to prevent, investigate, prosecute, punish, and redress human rights violations against them.
36. To collect and analyze data regarding the prevalence and nature of violence and bias-based discrimination against LGBTI people.
37. To refrain from carrying out, through its agents, acts of violence against LGBTI people and guarantee a legal framework that protects them from the actions of third parties.
38. To adopt protocols that guarantee the dignified treatment and safety of LGBTI persons deprived of liberty, following the inter-American standards on the matter, and to guarantee respect for the gender identity of persons identified as trans women by providing accommodation that suits their needs and avoiding contexts that may put them at risk.

People in a situation of human mobility

39. To eliminate the provisions of the new Citizenship Law that could lead to arbitrary deprivation of nationality for political and/or ideological reasons.
40. To create an expeditious and public procedure to determine the grounds for imposing restrictions on freedom of movement between provinces or leaving the country, and ensure in all circumstances that the procedure does not entail any type of discrimination, including for political reasons. This policy should clearly explain the valid constitutional and legal grounds for labeling a person "regulated." In any case, there must be a procedure that avoids arbitrariness and is expeditious and impartial, so that citizens can denounce restrictions on leaving the country or on taking up residence in another part of Cuba and obtain a response in a reasonable time, before preparing their travel.
41. To remove travel restrictions imposed on individuals because of their activities as activists or for political reasons.
42. To refrain from impeding or creating legal or administrative obstacles for Cuban nationals to return to the country.

43. To adopt urgent and comprehensive measures to address the factors that lead its nationals to leave the country, including violations of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Older persons

44. To provide and disseminate disaggregated statistical information on the situation of food security, access to housing, access to the right to health, and gender violence against the elderly in Cuba.
45. To address the situation acknowledged by the State authorities in relation to the care of the elderly in residences and community homes.
46. To account for the reasons for the detention of the elderly and review the procedural situation of those who have not been granted access to alternative or substitute measures to the deprivation of liberty based on allegedly discriminatory criteria.

Persons with disabilities

47. To promote a reform of the penitentiary system to make it accessible and establish oversight, sanctions, and training of personnel in full respect for the human rights of persons deprived of liberty with disabilities, with a differential focus on women and elderly persons with disabilities.
48. To take measures to guarantee access to health services for all persons with disabilities, without discrimination for political, ideological, or any other reasons.
49. To develop public policies and programs that favor the exercise of the rights of persons with disabilities, including their right to organized and representative participation in organizations that assist persons with disabilities, regardless of their political position and ideology.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. In compliance with its conventional and regulatory mandate<sup>1</sup>, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (“the Commission”, “the Inter-American Commission” or “the IACHR”) has been following with special attention the human rights situation in Nicaragua in the context of the protracted breakdown of the constitutional and democratic order.

2. As documented by the IACHR, the social protests of April 2018 spontaneously exposed the social discontent that had built up over several years, in response to the institutional processes that gradually co-opted public institutions and led to a concentration of state power in the hands of the executive branch. These protests were initiated by the elderly and supported by youths and university students in response to proposed reforms to the Social Security Act.<sup>2</sup>

3. In the report Gross Human Rights Violations in the Context of Social Protests in Nicaragua, the IACHR found that the State’s response to this expression of social dissent was the arbitrary use of violence.<sup>3</sup> The Commission also noted that the magnitude of repression by the State, as well as the strategies deployed to deter demonstrations, evidenced the government’s intention to stifle social demands and regain control of public space.<sup>4</sup> According to the findings of the Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts for Nicaragua (GIEI-Nicaragua, by its Spanish acronym), in the context of repression by the State, Nicaragua conducted actions that could amount to crimes against humanity, such as murder, deprivation of liberty, rape, torture, and enforced disappearance.<sup>5</sup>

4. Since then, the Commission has documented various phases of repression by the State, which is still taking place through imposition of a police state to silence any opposition to the regime. In view of the worsening political, social, and human rights crisis, and the situation of structural impunity<sup>6</sup> for human rights

<sup>1</sup> The IACHR prepared this report by virtue of its competence and functions, as established in Article 18 of its Statute, and pursuant to Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights. On September 25, 1979, the State of Nicaragua ratified the American Convention on Human Rights. Despite Nicaragua having denounced the OAS Charter on November 18, 2021, the IACHR has ratified its jurisdiction over the country. See Press Release No. 312/21 “The IACHR Stresses Its Competent Jurisdiction Concerning Nicaragua and laments Nicaragua’s Decision to Denounce the Charter of the OAS in a Context of Serious Human Rights Violations.” Washington, D.C., November 20, 2021.

<sup>4</sup> The Commission revealed that state violence followed a common pattern, marked by: the excessive and arbitrary use of police force, including lethal force; the use of parapolice forces or shock groups with the acquiescence, tolerance and cooperation of state authorities; intimidation and threats against leaders of social movements; arbitrary arrests of young people and adolescents who were participating in protests; lack of diligence in opening investigations into the killings and bodily injuries taking place in this context; obstacles in accessing emergency medical care for the wounded, as a form of retaliation for their participation in protests; and the dissemination of propaganda and stigmatization campaigns, measures of direct and indirect censorship. IACHR, Gross Human Rights Violations in the Context of Social Protests in Nicaragua OAS/Ser.L/V/II Doc. 86, June 21, 2018, para. 2.

<sup>5</sup> This conclusion is based on the number of victims, the seriousness of the repressive actions, the existence of certain patterns of conduct that were carried out with State resources, according to a policy that was determined and supported by the State’s highest authorities. Also, the characteristics of State-sponsored violence in Nicaragua, demonstrate that there was a State decision to adopt a course of conduct which resulted in the commission of multiple criminal acts directed against protesters and political dissidents. GIEI-Nicaragua, Report on the violent events that took place between April 18th and May 30th, 2018, p. 226.

<sup>6</sup> Impunity has been defined in inter-American jurisprudence as the total lack of investigation, prosecution, capture, trial and conviction of those responsible for violations of the rights protected by the American Convention, in view of the fact that the State has the violations since 2018, the Commission has included Nicaragua in the Annual Report, Chapter IV.B, according to the grounds set forth in its Rules of Procedure.<sup>7</sup>

5. At the close of 2023, the Commission concluded that closure of civic and democratic spaces in Nicaragua constitutes one of the most serious cases in the region.<sup>8</sup> In particular, the Commission observed the radicalization of the repressive strategy to completely repress fundamental rights and freedoms that are part of civic space, through massive closures of civil society organizations, persecution of members of the Catholic Church, as well as criminalization, arbitrary deprivation of nationality, and banishment or forced expulsion as mechanisms of punishment or retaliation against dissident voices.<sup>9</sup>

6. In 2024, the Commission received information about new actions the purpose of which was to perpetuate the totalitarian regime by concentrating power in the President's family.<sup>10</sup> The new actions include the approval on November 22, 2024, of the amendments to the Political Constitution of Nicaragua that modify more than one hundred articles. The amendments establish a model of "direct democracy" that centralizes power in the presidency of the Republic, headed by a co-president and a [female] co-president.<sup>11</sup> The actions also include large-scale firings from public institutions and the de facto takeover of the judicial branch, replaced by the Mme. Vice-President's own persons of trust;<sup>12</sup> approval of new laws and reforms that seek to extend repression beyond the territory of the State, and intensifying repression during elections in the autonomous region of the Caribbean Coast, one of the last regions in the country where civic and democratic spaces have not yet been entirely suppressed.<sup>13</sup>

7. As discussed below, in 2024, the IACHR observed the persistence of serious and systematic human rights violations in Nicaragua. These human rights violations include arbitrary detentions, allegations of enforced disappearance, dire detention conditions, torture, arbitrary deprivation of nationality, prohibition of return, banishment, religious persecution, and severe restrictions on civic space, both in the physical and digital spheres. Further, this regime of repression extended beyond political opponents or their families, also reaching government sympathizers, state officials, and society in general, seeking to eliminate any space for the exercise of freedoms and autonomy of the population living in a climate of fear, surveillance, and persecution. (See Infra. II. Situation of Human Rights in 2024).

8. Furthermore, during the period under analysis, the IACHR took into account the reports and findings on Nicaragua by various monitoring mechanisms within the United Nations system. In 2024, the Group of Human Rights Experts on Nicaragua (GHREN) reported to the Human Rights Council that the Nicaraguan government continued to perpetrate systematic human rights violations to eliminate all critical voices and to dissuade, for the long term, any new organization and initiative for social mobilization.<sup>14</sup> The GHREN further concluded that these human rights violations would amount to crimes against humanity for persecution for obligation to use all the legal means at its disposal to combat that situation, since impunity fosters chronic recidivism of human rights violations, and total defenselessness of victims and their relatives. political reasons, among others.<sup>15</sup> In 2024, the GHREN reported on the serious human rights violations systematically perpetrated against peasants,<sup>16</sup> indigenous persons and persons of African descent in the autonomous regions of the Caribbean Coast,<sup>17</sup> members of the Catholic Church and other Christian denominations in Nicaragua,<sup>18</sup> as well as against students, teachers, academic authorities and other university staff for violations of rights to education, academic freedom, and other fundamental rights.<sup>19</sup>

9. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) observed that the human rights situation in Nicaragua continued to seriously deteriorate.<sup>20</sup> According to the OHCHR, in 2024, the State progressively intensified persecution of opponents of the Government or those perceived as dissenting voices.<sup>21</sup> In addition, authorities continue to persecute any individual or organization that does not fall directly under their control of opponents of the Government, including human rights defenders, media outlets, non-governmental organizations and any other entity that advocates for social or political change without government oversight.<sup>22</sup>

10. After assessing the human rights situation in Nicaragua in 2024, the IACHR decided to include Nicaragua again in Chapter IV.B, because it deems that the situation falls under the grounds set forth in subparagraphs 6.a.i., 6.b. and 6.c. of Article 59 of its Rules of Procedure, which lay out the following criteria for the inclusion of a Member State in this Chapter:

(a) a serious breach of the core requirements and institutions of representative democracy mentioned in the Inter-American Democratic Charter, which are essential means of achieving human rights, including:<sup>23</sup>

i. there is discriminatory access to or abusive exercise of power that undermines or denies the Rule of Law, such as systematic infringement on the independence of the judiciary or lack of subordination of state institutions to the legally constituted civilian authority;

[...].

(b) the unlawful suspension, total or partial, of free exercise of the rights guaranteed in the American Declaration or the American Convention, by imposition of exceptional measures such as declaring a state of emergency, state of siege, suspension of constitutional guarantees, or exceptional security measures.<sup>24</sup>

Article 59.6.b.

(c) The State has committed or is committing massive, serious, and widespread violations of human rights guaranteed in the American Declaration, the American Convention, or the other applicable human rights instruments.<sup>25</sup>

11. Regarding the commission of serious and systematic human rights violations, in 2024, the IACHR noted the persistence of arbitrary detentions to repress any opposition to and criticism of the regime, as well a pattern of violations of access to justice, due process guarantees, and the right to a fair trial in a context of a complete lack of independence and impartiality of the justice system.<sup>26</sup> The IACHR also received alarming information on arrests carried out without judicial warrants, about which relatives were not informed of the whereabouts of the detainees.<sup>27</sup> According to the OHCHR, in many cases, these individuals were removed from the protection of the law for days or even months, amounting to enforced disappearance under international law.<sup>28</sup>

12. Furthermore, the IACHR observed the continuation of a repressive strategy aimed at dismantling civil society. Among other actions, the IACHR rejected the cancellation of the legal status of more than 1,500 civil society organizations and confiscation and illegitimate appropriation of their assets, as well as the approval of a legal reform that establishes a new model for the operation of organizations, called “Alianzas de Asociación” [Partnership Alliances], which restricts formation of new organizations and subjects the activities of the existing organizations to state control.<sup>29</sup> Since 2018, the government has cancelled the legal status of more than 5,000 of the total 7,227 registered organizations,<sup>30</sup> making it one of the most severe repressive regimes in the region.

13. The IACHR observed that restrictions persist against freedom of religion with prohibition of religious celebrations in public spaces, surveillance of celebrations of mass, and persecution of members of the Catholic Church through arbitrary detentions, criminalization, and even banishment.<sup>31</sup> In August 2024, twelve priests and two female church collaborators were arbitrarily detained. Since 2018, at least 46 priests and bishops have been detained, released, and expelled from the country.<sup>32</sup> The IACHR warned that these acts of repression and persecution have also extended to Protestant and evangelical religions. Most notably, the Ministry of the Interior cancelled the legal status of more than 60 evangelical churches or associations during 2024, including the Moravian Church, prominent on the Caribbean Coast.<sup>33</sup>

14. In 2024, the IACHR repudiated the arbitrary deprivation of Nicaraguan nationality of 135 individuals deemed to be political opponents of Daniel Ortega's regime, and described this measure as one of the most severe forms of repression employed by the regime, as it had profound consequences for these people and their families, leaving them in a situation of extreme vulnerability.<sup>34</sup> These individuals who remained arbitrarily detained under dire conditions were released from prison and expelled from the country on September 5, 2024. Days later, the State of Nicaragua announced the arbitrary deprivation of these individuals' Nicaraguan nationality and confiscation of their assets. Since 2023, at least 450 people deemed political opponents have had their Nicaraguan nationality deprived arbitrarily.<sup>35</sup>

15. In addition to the arbitrary deprivation of nationality, the Nicaraguan State continued to expel nationals and foreigners from the country and restrict entry into and exit from their own country. These measures were applied indiscriminately against anyone who was perceived to be outside the regime's control, including government sympathizers or officials. Between June 2023 and June 2024, OHCHR documented 62 cases of Nicaraguan nationals who were denied entry into their own country.<sup>36</sup> In some cases, persons who were arbitrarily prevented by the State from returning reported being in a situation akin to statelessness due to their inability to renew expired passports or gain access to other identity documents because they were outside the country and because the State refused to issue said documents. According to civil society organizations, between 2021 and 2024, more than 100 Nicaraguans reported considering themselves in a condition like statelessness.<sup>37</sup>

16. Regarding the situation of persons arbitrarily deprived of their liberty in Nicaragua, the IACHR received information regarding serious human rights violations and dire conditions of detention.<sup>38</sup> Women and indigenous detainees face harsher treatment on the basis of their gender and cultural identities.<sup>39</sup> Additionally, the testimonies from some of the 135 individuals released from prison and expelled to Guatemala on September 5, 2024, revealed the persistence of cruel, inhumane, or degrading treatment or punishment committed by the regime, including beatings and electric shocks, prolonged isolation, sleep deprivation, continuous interrogation, and restricted access to daylight.<sup>40</sup> According to the records of the Mechanism for the Recognition of Political Prisoners, as of September 25, 2024, at least 45 persons were still being arbitrarily deprived of their liberty.<sup>41</sup>

17. In 2024, the IACHR received information on the situation of violence that indigenous and Afro-descendant communities continue to face in the Caribbean Coast of Nicaragua, including murders, kidnappings, threats, sexual violence, and attacks by armed settlers seeking to dispossess them of their ancestral territories.<sup>42</sup> In March 2024, the IACHR condemned the holding of regional elections despite the proven absence of an independent electoral system, in a context of state repression and actions aimed at preventing the opposition from political participation.<sup>43</sup> The outcome was that the Sandinista National Liberation Front

(FSLN) won every position,<sup>44</sup> further concentrating its power in that area of the country, to the detriment of the autonomy of the communities of the Caribbean Coast.

18. The IACHR, through the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA), received information on the persistence of serious and systematic violations of the economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights of the population with regard to violations of the right to social security of persons arbitrarily deprived of their nationality in Nicaragua, labor rights for those persons expelled from the country, academic freedom, among others (see Infra. IV Economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights).

19. The Commission and the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE) noted with extreme concern the steady deterioration of the situation of freedom of expression, freedom of peaceful assembly, and freedom of association in Nicaragua. Documented information in 2024 shows the continuation of a pattern of persecution against journalists, human rights defenders, artists, opponents, and religious leaders for merely expressing their ideas and opinions, which is indicative of the intolerance towards any opinion that questions or contradicts the official narrative. As discussed below, these actions are part of a deliberate State strategy to silence critical voices, stifle dissent, and strengthen a state monopoly over information through various tactics that include manipulation of the criminal justice system, administrative and fiscal harassment, and strict control over the digital sphere (see Infra. IV. Situation of freedom of expression).

20. Based on the circumstances described, the Inter-American Commission deemed that the situation in Nicaragua also meets the criteria set forth in subparagraphs 6.d.i, 6.d.ii, 6.d.iii of Article 59 of its Rules of Procedure, which read as follows:

- (a) The presence of other structural situations that seriously affect the use and enjoyment of fundamental rights recognized in the American Declaration, the American Convention or other applicable instruments. Factors to be considered shall include the following, among others:<sup>45</sup>
- i. serious institutional crises that infringe the enjoyment of human rights;
  - ii. systematic noncompliance of the State with its obligation to combat impunity, attributable to a manifest lack of will;
  - iii. serious omissions in the adoption of the necessary measures to make fundamental rights effective, or in complying with the decisions of the Commission and the Inter-American Court;

21. For Nicaragua's inclusion in this chapter, the IACHR took into consideration the persistent unwillingness of the Nicaraguan State to overcome the social, political, and human rights crisis impacting the country. Specifically, this is evidenced by the lack of comprehensive reform of Nicaragua's state institutions; its failure to comply with the recommendations of the IACHR and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (I/A Court H.R.);<sup>46</sup> its withdrawal from the Organization of American States since November 18, 2023, as well as its failure to take actions to foster an inclusive, broad and effective dialogue to restore the Rule of Law and

<sup>46</sup> The State has repeatedly stated its rejection of the I/A Court's orders and, after its last communication on April 11, 2022, it refused to respond to the Court's requirements. The Court declared Nicaragua in a state of permanent contempt. Cf. I/A Court H.R., Matter of Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. regarding Nicaragua. Provisional Measures. human rights. In this regard, on June 29, 2024, the OAS General Assembly recognized that the democratic and human rights crisis in Nicaragua was affecting the stability and security of other countries in the region.<sup>47</sup>

22. Similarly, the IACHR took into consideration Nicaragua's persistent lack of cooperation with the human rights mechanisms within the United Nations system. According to the information gathered and prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) for the Universal Periodic Review of Nicaragua, six treaty bodies indicated that, since 2019, Nicaragua had ceased to cooperate and had neither submitted replies or participated in constructive dialogues with those treaty bodies, which include the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities,<sup>48</sup> the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women,<sup>49</sup> the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination,<sup>50</sup> the Human Rights Committee,<sup>51</sup> the Committee against Torture,<sup>52</sup> as well as the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.<sup>53</sup> In 2022, the Human Rights Council expressed concern at Nicaragua's ongoing refusal to cooperate with international and regional human rights mechanisms, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), including its regional office for Central America, and the special procedures of the Council, and recognized that its refusal continued to create a protection deficit in the country.<sup>54</sup> Further, the Group of Human Rights Experts on Nicaragua has also regretted the lack of cooperation from Nicaragua, in particular the lack of access to the country.<sup>55</sup> The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) noted that Nicaragua had not submitted national reports to either the ninth or tenth consultations on the Convention against Discrimination in Education.<sup>56</sup>

23. Lastly, the IACHR evaluated the widespread situation of impunity<sup>57</sup> for serious human rights violations committed since 2018, in the context of concentration of power and undermining of the rule of law. As the IACHR has extensively documented, the violent and repressive state response against dissent and political opposition has resulted in the deaths of at least 355 persons; more than 2,000 persons arbitrarily detained since 2018; more than 2,000 persons injured during social protests; more than 450 persons deprived of their nationality; as well as the closure of more than 5,000 civil society organizations. Between 2018 and 2023, more than 250,000 persons had allegedly been forcibly displaced to other countries.<sup>58</sup>

Regarding the primary sources, the IACHR analyzed the testimonies received through MESENI; information available from cases, petitions, and precautionary and provisional measures; information presented at public hearings; and well as the information obtained and documented in the Commission's press releases and annual and thematic reports.

25. Regarding secondary sources, the report took into account the following: official acts of all levels and branches of government, including constitutional amendments, legislation, decrees, judicial decisions, official statements; findings of other international human rights bodies, including treaty bodies, Rapporteurs, working groups, the Human Rights Council and other United Nations bodies and specialized agencies; human rights reports issued by governments and regional bodies; reports by civil society organizations and information submitted by those organizations and by individuals; public information widely disseminated in the media; and relevant legal and academic research.

26. In 2024, the IACHR issued nine press releases<sup>59</sup> and held three public hearings on the human rights situation in Nicaragua.<sup>60</sup> Additionally, the Commission adopted 13 precautionary measure resolutions aimed at protecting persons whose rights were at serious and irreparable risk.<sup>61</sup> Taking into account the extremely serious and urgent situation of some of the beneficiaries, the IACHR submitted several requests for the extension and/or granting of provisional measures to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights,<sup>62</sup> which were granted.<sup>63</sup>

27. On December 3, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights approved this report. Subsequently, on January 24, 2025, the Commission sent the preliminary draft of the report to the Nicaraguan State in accordance with Articles 59.7 and 59.10 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure. Allowing a month for the receipt of observations from the State, which, however, did not present any information.

II. SITUATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN 2024

28. As the IACHR has indicated, the principle of separation of powers that governs democratic states has been violated in Nicaragua. The various functions of the state are not conducted by independent bodies whose powers are balanced, but instead, all powers of the state are aligned with or directed by the executive branch, and therefore do not represent checks and balances that limit the exercise of power or prevent arbitrariness; on the contrary, they facilitate or consolidate it.<sup>64</sup> Below, the IACHR addresses the events of 2024 that demonstrate the democratic breakdown in the country has been perpetuated through measures that seek to strengthen the long-term concentration and centralization of power in the hands of the head of the executive branch.

A. Concentration and centralization of power

29. In the context of severe undermining by the democratic State, during 2024 the IACHR observed a set of actions that aimed to perpetuate the totalitarian regime to concentrate power in the family of President Daniel Ortega in the run-up to the elections scheduled for 2026, specifically through measures that reinforce the repressive apparatus and the coopting of every state institution.<sup>65</sup>

30. On November 22, 2024, “the National Assembly approved the bill, Law on Partial Reform of the Political Constitutions of the Republic of Nicaragua, which modifies more than 100 articles of the constitutional text to modernize and update “the Revolutionary State to continue strengthening the fight against poverty and guaranteeing the new times of Security, Prosperity, and Peace with Well-being,”<sup>66</sup> as well as to reaffirm the nation’s “Independence, Sovereignty, and Self-determination.”<sup>67</sup>

31. Among the most worrisome changes to the Constitution, this reform established a model of “direct democracy” that centralizes power in the Presidency of the Republic, now headed by a Co-President and a [female] Co-President with six-year terms.<sup>68</sup> According to the IACHR, this model eliminates the principle of separation of powers, further subordinating the legislative, judicial, and electoral bodies to the control of the Executive. Additionally, it grants discretionary powers to the Executive Branch to remove public officials who fail to align with the “fundamental principles” of the Constitution.<sup>69</sup> Other concerning aspects of the amendments included a reduction in the composition and alteration of the functions of the Supreme Court of Justice, deepening its lack of independence, as well as modifications that expand the powers of the Executive to arbitrarily deprive Nicaraguans of their nationality and, at the same time, confiscate their assets.<sup>70</sup>

32. According to the IACHR, these modifications contravene the fundamental principles of the rule of law, representative democracy, and separation of powers established in the Inter-American Democratic Charter, thus formalizing the absolute concentration of power in the Executive.<sup>71</sup> In the same vein, the Group of Human Rights Experts on Nicaragua stated that the bill grants the government of President Daniel Ortega “virtually unlimited power over the nation’s people.”<sup>72</sup>

33. Previously, on December 28, 2023, the National Assembly approved, as a matter of urgency, a bill to replace the Ministry of Governance with a Ministry of the Interior<sup>73</sup> to prevent, neutralize, and put an end to any activity aimed at destroying or undermining the constitutional order and institutions of the country, which were established by the Revolution.<sup>74</sup> According to available information, this Ministry operated in the 1980s to repress political opposition to the Sandinista Revolution, thus its creation had the intention of reinforcing repression and persecution.<sup>75</sup> For instance, among the Ministry of Interior’s responsibilities are the supervision and regulation of non-governmental organizations.<sup>76</sup> In this regard, President Ortega said that by “coming back to life”, “we once again have two great instruments with which we defeated the counterrevolution: the Army and the Ministry of the Interior.”<sup>77</sup>

34. Furthermore, the IACHR received information on massive firings within state institutions with the aim of placing and/or maintaining in public positions only persons loyal to the Vice President of the Republic, as well as imposing a climate of fear and anxiety in the public administration.<sup>78</sup> According to the information available, more than 2,000 persons have been dismissed since 2023, including more than 100 top-level officials,<sup>79</sup> such as, presidential advisors, ministers, deputy ministers, police commissioners, army officials, as well as 13 mayors and three acting deputy mayors.<sup>80</sup> In this regard, the Vice President stated that these actions are part of the “ordering, restructuring, and redesigning”<sup>81</sup> of institutions to “promote savings and efficiency in public spending and management.”<sup>82</sup>

35. Regarding the judiciary, the information available indicates that, since October 2023, more than 1,000 officials have been arbitrarily terminated, including judges and both the President and Vice President of the Supreme Court of Justice, the former also having been detained under house arrest.<sup>83</sup> According to the GHREN, these actions constituted a de facto takeover of the judicial branch to ensure total control by the Vice President of the Republic.<sup>84</sup> In July 2024, more than 50 individuals considered to be persons of trust of the Vice President were allegedly appointed as judges without any legal procedure and despite not having careers in the judiciary.<sup>85</sup> The Supreme Court of Justice, with 10 of its 16 seats remaining unfilled, continued to operate under the direct orders of the Executive.<sup>86</sup>

36. The IACHR has noted that Nicaragua has not had an impartial and independent justice system for several years. On the contrary, following the onset of the April 2018 crisis, the breakdown of the principle of separation of powers has paved the way for criminalization of persons identified as opponents of the regime, and for perpetrating impunity for human rights violations.<sup>87</sup> In this regard, the IACHR considers that the actions described further undermine the conditions necessary to guarantee access to justice and restoration of the checks and balances of a democratic State.

37. The IACHR also learned of the approval of a set of amendments to reinforce the legal framework imposed in 2018, which has been used to criminalize and persecute any form of opposition to the government. Specifically, amendments to laws such as Law No. 977, against money laundering, financing of terrorism, and the financing of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; Law No. 976, of the financial Analysis Unit and Law No. 1042, on cybercrime, among others.<sup>88</sup>

38. On September 3, 2024, the National Assembly approved Law No. 1216, which reforms the Nicaraguan Penal Code.<sup>89</sup> Among other modifications, Article 16 of the Penal Code expanded the application of criminal laws to Nicaraguans or foreigners who have committed serious crimes outside the country, such as: money laundering, terrorism, financing of terrorism, organized crime, cybercrimes, crimes against public administration, among others.<sup>90</sup> Law No. 1216 also established criminal liability of juridical persons<sup>91</sup> and the penalties applicable to offenses committed by them, which include the confiscation of assets, both for natural and juridical persons, and forced dissolution.<sup>92</sup> According to the National Assembly, these reforms comply with the recommendations of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) and the Financial Action Task Force of Latin America (GAFILAT), as well as those of multilateral international organizations and United Nations agencies committed to combating transnational. Thus, the State positions Nicaragua “as a model country and leader in the fight against international crime, given the emergence of transnational organized crime in the trafficking of virtual and digital forms of currency.”<sup>93</sup>

39. In turn, civil society organizations have pointed out that the amendments to the Penal Code allow the State’s control to reach across national borders, based on “transnational” repression and persecution of persons identified as political opponents in exile, and their families.<sup>94</sup> These organizations also indicated that, in practice, the inclusion of forfeiture as a serious penalty against individuals or legal entities legalizes the forfeiture of assets conducted by the State since 2018 against organizations, universities, forcibly dissolved churches, and political opponents and their families, the value of which is $250 million.<sup>95</sup>

40. In this context, on September 10, 2024, the National Assembly also amended Law No. 1042 on Cybercrimes extending its scope of application to crimes committed outside the nation's territory,<sup>96</sup> escalating the persecution of journalists, communicators, human rights defenders and activists who are abroad.<sup>97</sup> That same day, September 10, the National Assembly amended the Code of Criminal Procedure enabling the National Police to request information from information technology or telephone service providers without a court order,<sup>98</sup> expanding the regime's surveillance and control capacity to penalize any criticism or dissent in the digital sphere (see Infra. IV.B. Laws restricting freedom of expression).

41. In its report Closure of Civic Space in Nicaragua, the IACHR expressed its concern about the implementation of certain laws that, based on the alleged compliance with international recommendations on the fight against organized crime, have been deployed to consolidate the regime power concentration in the Executive branch, criminalize political opponents, and dismantle organized civil society, affecting the exercise of freedom of expression, to peaceful assembly and of association.<sup>99</sup> In this context, the IACHR is concerned that this set of approved reforms is intended to perpetuate executive control, expand repression against dissenting voices, and ultimately restrict the possibility of any process for rebuilding democracy in the run-up to the presidential elections scheduled for 2026. The IACHR urges repeal of laws limiting civic space, and measures to restore the principles of separation of powers and rule of law, particularly as a necessary condition for the holding of the next presidential elections.

B. Closure of civic space

42. According to the IACHR, the closure of civic and democratic spaces in Nicaragua is one of the most serious scenarios in the region.<sup>100</sup> Since 2018, Nicaragua has been a police state, characterized by the executive branch directing control, surveillance, and repression through state security institutions and para-state groups, against anyone considered to be its opposition.<sup>101</sup> At present, there are no conditions for civil society to participate freely and safely in social and political life.<sup>102</sup>

43. In 2024, the IACHR observed that restrictions of civic and democratic spaces increased with the announcement of the forced dissolution of any civil society organizations still operating in the country, even including those with ties to segments of the population or groups that sympathize with the Sandinista National Liberation Front; the sustained prohibition of social protest, as well as the measures adopted to suppress any area of civic, social, and religious participation, in both the physical and digital spheres.

44. According to MESENI records, in 2024, a total of 1,600 non-governmental organizations had their legal status canceled, in most cases this action was accompanied by the confiscation and illegitimate appropriation of their assets. At least 700 of these organizations are religious, with 500 or so affiliated with evangelical congregations. Additionally, 56 associations deemed loyal to the current government and historically known as FSLN-party groups were closed.<sup>103</sup> According to available information, most cancellations of these organizations were conducted on a massive scale, without due process, through ministerial agreements issued by the Ministry of the Interior. For instance, on August 19, 2024, the Ministry of the Interior canceled the legal status of 1,500 organizations, by way of Agreement No. 38-2024-OSFL, on the purported grounds that these organizations had failed to submit financial statements.<sup>104</sup> The ministerial agreement further ordered the transfer of the organizations' real and personal property to the Attorney General's office.<sup>105</sup>

45. The Commission reiterates that the involuntary dissolution of an association through cancellation of its legal status constitutes one of the most severe forms of restriction on freedom of association, and therefore these limitations should be used only when other less restrictive measures are insufficient, and should be governed by the principles of proportionality and necessity.<sup>106</sup> For instance, dissolution should not be the measure used for "minor" administrative sanctions. In this regard, Principle 12 of the Inter-American Declaration of Principles on the Creation, Operation, Financing, and Dissolution of Non-Profit Civil Entities recognizes that forced dissolution, as a legal sanction, is an exceptional measure for the most serious cases involving a threat to a legitimate interest recognized in international human rights instruments.<sup>107</sup>

46. Since 2018, the Commission has noted the cancellation of the legal status of more than 5,000 organizations in Nicaragua out of a total of 7,227 registered organizations in the country.<sup>108</sup> This massive closure has severely limited the ability of civil society actors to actively participate in political, social, cultural, and religious life, or in activities that promote and defend human rights.

47. At the same time, the IACHR warned about other measures that would not only hinder the creation and operation of new organizations but also consolidate the Executive's control over civil society in the long term. On August 22, 2024, the National Assembly approved a series of amendments to Law No. 115, to establish a new model for the operation of non-governmental organizations, called "Alianzas de Asociación."<sup>109</sup> This model requires non-profit organizations to implement and develop their activities, projects, and programs in collaboration with state institutions, and only with prior approval of the Ministry of the Interior or the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in the case of organizations identified as foreign agents.<sup>110</sup>

48. The IACHR recalls that the protection afforded to freedom of association is not limited only to establishment of the organization, but rather endures for the entire life of the association.<sup>111</sup> In this regard, in addition to facilitating registration of an organization, freedom of association includes the right to "set into motion their internal structure, activities and action programme, without any intervention by the public authorities that could limit or impair the exercise of the respective right.”<sup>112</sup> Furthermore, Principle 6 of the Inter-American Declaration of Principles on the Creation, Operation, Financing, and Dissolution of Non-Profit Civil Entities recognizes that nonprofit civil society entities may pursue broad mission functions, with no restrictions, other than those permissible under international human rights treaties, or illegal or arbitrary interference.<sup>113</sup>

49. Lastly, as noted by the IACHR, the escalation of repression against civil society has resulted in dozens of human rights defenders being forced to work in exile owing to relocation of their organization’s structure, the creation of new entities, or individuals acting on their own behalf. The organizations that remain in the country, even after having their legal status revoked, work clandestinely, in a climate of fear of criminalization, persecution, and self-censorship.

50. In this regard, in the first half of 2024, the Mesoamerican Initiative of Women Human Rights Defenders documented a total of 1,534 assaults against 121 women defenders and 6 organizations, representing an increase of almost double the number of assaults reported for the same period in 2023.<sup>114</sup> Additionally, the organization documented an upward trending number of digital attacks against women defenders who have been banished or live in exile and continue their activities, using social media to denounce the situation. Specific patterns include spreading fake news, challenging or questioning women defenders’ leadership, professionalism or ethics, ridiculing women defenders and their activities, and verbal and psychological violence. Gender discrimination was identified in 58% of the documented digital attacks.<sup>115</sup>

51. The IACHR notes that these actions are additional evidence of the repressive policy to completely control civic and democratic spaces in Nicaragua, facilitated by subordinating all branches of government to the Executive, with no checks and balances in place.

52. By virtue of the general obligation to provide guarantees recognized in the ACHR, States are obligated to conduct positive actions that create environments that are favorable to and safe for civil society, which also includes measures to suppress scenarios that are hostile or dangerous to protection of human rights.<sup>116</sup> This includes the obligation of States to prevent and protect civil society actors from violence, threats, and attacks in retaliation for their work, to ensure accountability by conducting independent, timely, and effective investigations into all alleged acts of violence that occur within their jurisdiction, and to ensure access to justice, truth, and reparations for victims and their families.<sup>117</sup>

53. In this context, the IACHR recalls that the participation of civil society in all its diversity, in both physical and digital environments, is a crucial element for strengthening democracy and the rule of law. Particularly, freedom of association is an appropriate way for people to participate and act collectively in all matters that interest or affect them. Combined with the rights of assembly and freedom of expression, these

C. Criminalization

54. In 2024, the IACHR noted the persistence of arbitrary detentions and the use of deprivation of liberty to maintain a climate of fear among the population, in a context of a lack of independence of the justice system that allows for manipulation of criminal law to criminalize anyone who exercises or attempts to exercise their rights and freedoms that are part of the civic space.

55. At the hearing “Arbitrary deprivation of liberty for political reasons,” civil society organizations informed the IACHR about the ongoing practice of arbitrary detentions and other patterns of repression, such as withholding information on the whereabouts of detained persons and their status. In these cases, the arrests have been carried out without a court order, and detained persons have been moved without formal charges being lodged, and without their families or legal defense being notified. As they reported, legal remedies such as habeas corpus were rejected outright by the courts, having no effect.<sup>119</sup> According to the OHCHR, in many of these cases, detainees were deprived of protection of the law for days or even months, which under international law is the equivalent of enforced disappearance.<sup>120</sup>

56. In this regard, on July 2, 2024, the Inter-American Court granted provisional measures in favor of Freddy Antonio Quezada, detained on November 29, 2023, and Carlos Alberto Bojorge Martínez, detained on January 1, 2024, considering the serious risk to their lives after being missing for several months, until they were released on September 5, 2024.<sup>121</sup> In October, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of five persons, considering the risk to their lives and personal integrity and having received no official information on their whereabouts or situation. These include: Lesbia del Socorro Gutiérrez, administrator of the Caritas Association of Matagalpa, detained on August 10, 2024; Eveling Carolina Matus, detained on July 25, 2024; Gersom Zeledón Mott, detained on March 5, 2024; Carmen Sáenz, member of the Diocese of Matagalpa<sup>122</sup>; as well as Steadman Fagot Muller, 71 years old, Miskito indigenous leader, detained on September 14, 2024.<sup>123</sup> As of the closing date of this report, Mr. Brooklyn Rivera, YATAMA indigenous leader and beneficiary of provisional measures, was also still missing.

57. Additionally, the IACHR was informed about continuous roadblocks to legal representation, the impossibility of accessing court files and conviction rulings. In addition, hearings for arbitrarily detained persons were held by videoconference, which limited the possibility of contact with a lawyer.<sup>124</sup> Another pattern reported and documented by the IACHR between 2019 and 2020, was that individuals were charged with common crimes, such as drug trafficking, aggravated robbery or sexual crimes, to conceal politically motivated prosecutions.<sup>125</sup>

58. The IACHR recalls that immediate judicial oversight helps prevent arbitrary or unlawful detention, since it is incumbent on the judge to guarantee the rights of the detainee, authorize adoption of precautionary or coercive measures when strictly necessary, and ensure that the accused is treated in a manner consistent with the presumption of innocence.<sup>126</sup> Under the American Convention, States have the obligation to immediately inform detainees, their families, and their legal counsel of the reasons for their detention. The State must also inform the location of detention. This is “a mechanism to avoid illegal or arbitrary detentions from the very moment of arrest and, at the same time, ensures the individual’s right to defense.”<sup>127</sup>

59. The IACHR urges that persecution of people deemed political opponents cease, and, especially, that all persons arbitrarily detained in the context of the crisis that began in 2018 be immediately released.

D. Arbitrary deprivation of nationality, prohibition of return, and risk of statelessness

60. In 2024, the IACHR received information and documented new incidents of arbitrary deprivation of Nicaraguan nationality, as well as reports of expulsion from the country and arbitrary restrictions on leaving or returning to Nicaragua. These actions resulted in serious violations of the human rights of the affected persons and profound consequences for their families, perpetuating a climate of fear and persecution against all [Nicaraguan citizens] living outside its borders.

61. On September 10, 2024, the Supreme Court of Justice (CSJ) reported on the judicial resolution adopted by the Criminal Chamber One of the Court of Appeals, Managua jurisdiction, which ordered revocation of the nationality of 135 individuals “convicted of criminal acts that threatened the Sovereignty, Independence, and Self-Determination of the Nicaraguan People, by inciting and promoting violence, hatred, terrorism, and economic destabilization, altering the peace, security, and constitutional order.”<sup>128</sup> The resolution also provided for “the confiscation of all the assets of the convicted persons, in order to respond for the severe material and immaterial damages that their criminal activities caused to the population and to the country, thus providing effective justice to the victims of these crimes.”<sup>129</sup>

62. The IACHR notes that this decision was announced days after this group of persons was released from prison and banished to Guatemala. In this regard, the Commission repudiated the decision of the CSJ and reaffirmed that nationality is a fundamental right and is irrevocable, and therefore its arbitrary deprivation, especially as a sanction imposed for political reasons, contravenes the norms of international law recognized in the American Convention on Human Rights and the Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness.<sup>130</sup>

63. Since 2023, at least 450 persons identified as political opponents have been arbitrarily deprived of Nicaraguan nationality.<sup>131</sup> In this regard, the IACHR has been informed that, in addition to being deprived of their status as Nicaraguan nationals, some of the affected persons are in a situation of “legal non-existence” or “civil death” based on the annulment of their civil identity records, birth certificates, academic records and, in general, the loss of their civil, political, social, and property rights, as well as the forfeiture of their assets and pensions. These persons have also reported that the cancellation of their records could affect the identity rights of their children under the age of 18, being that the non-existence of the parents could have the legal effect of rendering the children “without parents.”<sup>132</sup>

64. At the hearing “Nicaragua: Arbitrary deprivation of liberty for political reasons,” civil society organizations reported that at least 36 elderly persons deprived of nationality have been affected, by removal of their records from the Nicaraguan Social Security Institute (INSS) and forfeiture of their pensions, and now find themselves in a situation of greater vulnerability, given the intersection of factors such as age and gender.<sup>133</sup> These organizations highlight the specific case of human rights defender Vilma Núñez de Escorcia, a beneficiary of provisional measures granted by the I/A Court H.R., who is in a situation of extreme defenselessness, within Nicaraguan territory in a condition of “in situ” statelessness, under police siege and without access to effective appeals against the arbitrary exercise of public power.<sup>134</sup>

65. Furthermore, in 2024, an arbitrary policy continues to be in place regarding the freedom to leave the country, through arbitrary passport retention and refusal to issue of documents, as a mechanism to prevent individuals from leaving the country. These measures equally affect political opponents or their families and government sympathizers, civil servants, and the population in general, imposing a climate of total control. Between June 2023 and June 2024, the OHCHR recorded 62 cases of Nicaraguan nationals, including 33 women and 29 men.<sup>135</sup> Further, Nicaraguan nationals have reported patterns of repression to prevent them from returning to Nicaragua. In some cases, these persons reported finding themselves in a situation akin to statelessness, facing the impossibility of renewing expired passports or obtaining other identity documents because they are outside the country and because of the State's refusal to issue such documentation.<sup>136</sup> According to civil society organizations, between 2021 and 2024, more than 100 Nicaraguans reported being in a situation akin to statelessness.<sup>137</sup>

66. In 2024, the United Nations Group of Human Rights Experts on Nicaragua concluded that, from April 2018 to February 2024, a widespread and systematic attack has been organized, directed against a segment of the population that includes people expelled from the country.<sup>138</sup> In this regard, the GHREN indicated that it has reasonable grounds to believe that the expulsions of Nicaraguans and foreigners who

<sup>138</sup> In the Report, [the GHREN] documented that, since 2022, 263 Nicaraguan persons have been expelled from Nicaragua: 1 person expelled by land to Honduras on April 14, 2022; 222 persons expelled by plane to the United States on February 9, 2023; 4 persons expelled by plane to the United States on March 25, 2023; 12 priests expelled by plane to the Vatican on October 19, 2023; 2 women expelled on a plane to Mexico on November 24, 2023; 2 men expelled on a plane to Mexico on January 7, 2024; 19 religious persons expelled on a plane to the Vatican on January 13, 2024; and 1 priest expelled on January 19, 2024. The Group also documented the expulsion by land of 21 foreign nationals who were legally in Nicaragua at the time of their expulsion: 1 music producer on 12 April 2022; 18 nuns of the Order of Mother Teresa of Calcutta on 7 July 2022; 1 priest on 4 April 2023; and 1 journalist on 8 August 2023. oppose or are perceived as opponents are related to this widespread and systematic attack and constitute the crimes of deportation and persecution, which are tantamount to a crime against humanity.<sup>139</sup>

67. The GHREN further concluded that the serious and systematic violations of the rights to nationality and freedom of movement in Nicaragua constitute another mechanism to “persecute and silence any person who is seen as a critical or opposing voice of the Government, real or perceived, and thus guarantee its stay in power.”<sup>140</sup> These violations have also led to multiple additional human rights violations that are impossible to quantify, including violations of the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to participate in public affairs, to work, to social security, and other economic and social rights.<sup>141</sup>

68. The IACHR has recognized that nationality is an irrevocable right of all persons, and arbitrary deprivation of it, especially as a punishment or sanction for political reasons, is contrary to international human rights law. In this regard, it urges Nicaragua to guarantee full access to and enjoyment of the right to nationality in accordance with its international obligations, to cease arbitrary expulsions of nationals and foreigners, and to guarantee the right of its nationals to return to the country.

69. Lastly, the IACHR recalls that, pursuant to its Resolution No. 2/23 on the right to nationality, prohibition of arbitrary deprivation of nationality, and statelessness, States must extend recognized rights of stateless persons to those individuals who have no possibility of returning to their country of nationality due to a legal and/or practical impediment that is attributable to the authorities of said State.<sup>142</sup> In the case of persons who are in a situation similar to that of stateless persons and who cannot return to their countries of nationality, the IACHR encourages States to consider authorizing temporary residence to those individuals, for humanitarian reasons. Likewise, the States must consider issuance of a special travel document for foreigners who cannot obtain a valid travel document from the authorities of their country of nationality.<sup>143</sup>

E. Freedom of religion and religious persecution

70. In 2024, the Inter-American Commission observed the persistence of acts of repression and persecution against members of the Catholic Church, which extended to other religious denominations, tightening restrictions against freedom of religion in Nicaragua.

71. At the hearing “Indigenous peoples in the Northern Caribbean Coast Region and violations of the right to freedom of religion,” civil society organizations reported that the prohibition of Catholic processions or celebrations in public spaces is still in effect, as is surveillance of religious services and homilies and sermons by priests, which severely limits the expression of Catholic worship and practices. They also reported that members of the Catholic Church continue to be subjected to harassment, siege, intimidation, monitoring, surveillance, physical attacks, arbitrary detentions, and even the banishment.<sup>144</sup>

72. Among other events, on January 14, 2024, the IACHR learned of the release from prison and transfer to the Vatican of two bishops, 15 priests and two seminarians of the Catholic Church. Among them, Monsignor Rolando Álvarez Lagos, beneficiary of provisional measures granted by the Inter-American Court, who was arbitrarily deprived of his liberty in August 2022, and was sentenced to 26 years in prison in 2023, without a trial or due process of law.<sup>145</sup> Since the beginning of the crisis, in 2018, this Monsignor was considered one of the most critical voices speaking about the deteriorating situation and serious human rights violations in Nicaragua. He also played a leading role in the mediation efforts by the Nicaraguan Bishops' Conference during the talks that followed social protests, and he constantly demanded the release of all political prisoners.<sup>146</sup>

73. Between August 1 and 10, 2024, the IACHR received information on the deployment of operations and raids conducted by the national police in various curial houses and properties of the Catholic Church. As a result, twelve priests and at least two other church collaborators were detained, most of them linked to the Dioceses of Matagalpa or Estelí. On August 8, seven of these priests were expelled from the country and transferred to the Vatican State.<sup>147</sup> In total, since 2018, at least 46 priests and bishops have been detained, released from prison and expelled from the country.<sup>148</sup>

74. The IACHR warned that these acts of repression and persecution also extended to evangelical denominations. In April 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of ten people from the "Puerta de la Montaña" church ministry, who were deprived of their liberty and placed under dire conditions of detention<sup>149</sup> until their release from prison and banishment in September. Likewise, during 2024, the State canceled the legal status of more than 60 evangelical churches or associations; on August 29, the legal status of the Moravian Church, one of the predominant religions in the Caribbean Coast, was also canceled.<sup>150</sup> In total, 311 evangelical associations have been dissolved since 2019.<sup>151</sup>

75. In 2024, the GHREN published a report on systematic and widespread violations and abuses of international human rights law committed against members of the Catholic Church and other Christian denominations, documented between 2018 and March 2024.<sup>152</sup> According to the GHREN, the documented violations and abuses are part of a policy to suppress all current or potential forms of criticism or autonomous social mobilization capacity against the government that could generate a change in the status quo in Nicaragua and that are considered a threat to the control exercised by the Executive branch.<sup>153</sup> In that regard, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights noted that the events of 2024 are a "disturbing symbol of the ruling party's efforts to consolidate its control across all spheres of society and to crackdown on any independent voice."<sup>154</sup>

76. Article 12 of the American Convention on Human Rights (ACHR) recognizes the right of all persons to freedom of conscience and of religion, which entails "freedom to profess or disseminate one's religion or beliefs, either individually or together with others, in public or in private."<sup>155</sup> It further provides that

“freedom to manifest one's religion and beliefs may be subject only to the limitations prescribed by law that are necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals, or the rights or freedoms of others.”<sup>156</sup>

77. The Commission has pointed out that the exercise of freedom of religion depends on the existence of an inclusive, free, and pluralistic environment in which different religious expressions coexist and contribute to the cultural and social enrichment of a community. In other words, an open and plural civic space is an essential element to guarantee that people have the freedom to profess, manifest, and practice their religion or beliefs without discrimination.<sup>157</sup> Regarding the relationship between the right to freedom of expression and freedom of religion, the IACHR has even recognized that religious speech enjoys a “special level of protection because it expresses an integral element of personal identity and dignity”.

78. Further, the Commission warns that the de facto prohibition of Catholic processions and celebrations in public spaces since 2018, as well as the restrictions on religious celebrations through surveillance, siege, and harassment, the persecution of priests, the cancellation of the legal status of congregations, among other acts, would constitute an affectation of the collective dimension of the right to religious freedom recognized in Article 12 of the ACHR, by hindering and preventing the Nicaraguan population from freely manifesting their Catholic faith.<sup>158</sup>

79. Likewise, the IACHR notes with concern that the cancellation of the legal status of congregations and associations in charge of schools and study centers since 2018, and the arbitrary confiscation of their assets, affects the rights of parents and their children to access religious education in accordance with their own convictions, in keeping with Article 12.4 of the ACHR. Among other cases, in 2024, the IACHR became aware of the confiscation of the Escuela Casa Nazareth belonging to the Congregation of Our Lady of Charity of the Good Shepherd,<sup>159</sup> as well as the school Colegio Madre Divino Pastor administered by the religious congregation Madre Divino Pastor in Diriamba.<sup>160</sup>

F. Persons deprived of liberty

80. In 2024, the IACHR received information and testimonies about the persistence of deplorable detention conditions, which resulted in the granting of precautionary measures to protect more than 40 persons detained in a situation of heightened risk to their lives and personal integrity.<sup>161</sup> Following the release

<sup>158</sup> In the same regard, in 2024, the GHREN concluded that “Nicaraguan security forces and authorities, as well as individuals, pro-government armed groups and Sandinista mobs, acting with the connivance of the State” had committed systematic and widespread violations of the right to freedom of religion. It noted that “the repeated assaults against temples, images, symbols, processions and other forms of religious celebrations constitute arbitrary restrictions on the religious freedom of Catholic and other Christian faithful and religious, who were unable to freely manifest their faith and had places and objects, essential for their worship, be affected. from prison and expulsion from the country of 135 people on September 5, 2024, the Mechanism for the Recognition of Political Prisoners in Nicaragua reported that at least 46 people still remained arbitrarily detained in the country in the context of the crisis that began in 2018.<sup>162</sup>

81. At the hearing “Arbitrary deprivation of liberty for political reasons in Nicaragua,” civil society organizations reported on the dire conditions of detention because of unsanitary cells, lack of access to drinking water, insufficient and poor-quality food, negligent medical care and lack of access to medicines, as well as restrictions on the reception of parcels and family visits, particularly in “La Modelo” prison. They also reported torture and ill-treatment by prison authorities, including sexual violence, as well as the pattern of concealment of information on the whereabouts and situation of detainees.<sup>163</sup>

82. In September 2024, testimonies collected by the Special Follow-up Mechanism for Nicaragua (MESENI) regarding those individuals who were released from prison and expelled to Guatemala confirmed a systematic pattern of torture and cruel treatment of persons considered to be political prisoners, through beatings and electric shocks, prolonged isolation, sleep deprivation, interrogations, and limited access to sunlight.<sup>164</sup>

83. Regarding women deprived of their liberty, in 2024, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women expressed concern about gender-based violence, solitary confinement, and poor conditions of detention, including overcrowding, inappropriate prison infrastructures for women and their children, and lack of access to clean drinking water, hygiene products, and adequate health care. In addition, the CEDAW notes with concern the degrading treatment of lesbian, bisexual, and transgender women in detention due to the disregard for their specific needs.<sup>165</sup> These conditions are aggravated in the case of women identified as political prisoners, as has been widely documented by the IACHR.

84. Also concerning is the situation of 24 older persons who are being arbitrarily detained, some of them suffering from chronic diseases such as hypertension, diabetes, Parkinson’s, allergies, and other severe illnesses that place their lives and integrity at even greater risk due to the precarious conditions of detention and the lack of medical care.<sup>166</sup> In addition to not receiving adequate medical treatment, detainees do not receive a diet suitable to their health condition, leading to further deterioration of their health.<sup>167</sup>

85. The Commission urges the Nicaraguan authorities to guarantee dignified treatment and access to adequate medical care, sufficient nutritious food, and healthy conditions of detention for all persons in their custody. The IACHR emphasizes that providing adequate medical care to persons deprived of liberty is an obligation that directly stems from the State’s duty to guarantee the right to humane treatment set forth in Articles 1.1 and 5 of the American Convention, and Article I of the American Declaration.<sup>168</sup>

86. Similarly, the IACHR recalls that the State’s obligation to respect physical integrity, not to engage in cruel and inhumane treatment, and to respect the inherent dignity of human beings, includes ensuring access to adequate medical care for persons deprived of liberty. Additionally, given that incarceration of women takes on a dimension of its own that results in particular violations of their rights based on gender and intersectionality with other factors such as age, the IACHR urges the State to adopt with due diligence all necessary and comprehensive measures to ensure that their full rights are effectively respected and guaranteed.

87. Based on the foregoing, the IACHR reiterates its call on the State of Nicaragua to guarantee the right to life and to humane treatment of all persons in its custody, as well as to comply with the precautionary and provisional measures granted by the IACHR and the I/A Court H.R., respectively. In this regard, it reiterates its call to immediately release all persons arbitrarily deprived of their liberty in the context of the crisis that began on April 18, 2018.

G. Situation of the indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples in the Caribbean Coast

88. Throughout 2024, the IACHR received information about the intensification of a repressive strategy deployed in the Caribbean Coast [autonomous regions] in the context of regional elections held in March to renew the positions of 90 authorities. The goal was to convey a message of control and fear against indigenous and Afro-descendant movements and to limit their participation.

89. In this regard, in February 2024, the IACHR warned of the absence of conditions for holding free, fair, and competitive elections, given the closure of civic spaces, state repression, police sieges, and militarization in the territories of the Caribbean Coast. Among other events, since 2023, the IACHR documented the closure and confiscation of the headquarters of the indigenous community radio stations Yapti Tasba Bila Baikra Bilwi and Waspam; the cancellation of the legal status of the indigenous party Yapti Tasba Masraka Nanih Asla Takanka (YATAMA) and the seizure of its regional facilities; the detention of the deputy of the National Assembly and president of the YATAMA party, Brooklyn Rivera, as well as the legal representative and alternate deputy of YATAMA, Nancy Elizabeth Henríquez; both beneficiaries of provisional measures by the Inter-American Court.<sup>169</sup>

90. On March 3, 2024, the Nicaraguan observatory Urnas Abiertas noted that these elections displayed serious irregularities such as vote-buying in exchange for gifts or favors and promises of participation in welfare programs; massive get-out-the-vote efforts, which included voting by nonresidents of the autonomous regions, among other things.<sup>170</sup> In addition, for the first time since 1990, no indigenous or Afro-descendant party headed an electoral ballot.<sup>171</sup> Finally, on March 4, 2024, the Supreme Electoral Council reported that the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN) won 88,95% of the votes and all elected positions.<sup>172</sup>

91. The IACHR emphasized that the regional elections in Nicaragua were the result of historical demands and the struggle for recognition of the autonomy of indigenous peoples and Afro-descendant communities in Nicaragua, leading to the approval of the “Statute of Autonomy of the Atlantic Coast Regions” (Law No. 28) and other national laws. In this regard, the IACHR noted that the absence of conditions for holding free elections in 2024 was a significant setback to the rights to self-determination of indigenous and Afro-descendant communities.<sup>173</sup>

92. According to the OHCHR, these results led the Executive to further tighten its improper control over the autonomous regions of the Caribbean Coast, the only remaining regions where independent political activity in public spaces had not yet been completely suppressed.<sup>174</sup> Further, civil society organizations noted that the total control of the autonomous regional governments and councils would increase the Executive's decision-making power over the use of natural resources and other political, social, and cultural aspects of those communities.<sup>175</sup>

93. The IACHR also received information on the persistent situation of violence faced by indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples due to incidents of murder, kidnapping, threats, sexual violence, and attack by armed settlers seeking to deprive them of their ancestral lands. The impunity of these acts, framed in a historical context of marginalization, exclusion, and increasing violence since 2018, have subjected the communities to forced migration.

94. At the hearing "Indigenous peoples in the Northern Caribbean Coast region and violations of the right to freedom of religion," civil society organizations reported that, "since 2015, systematic attacks against indigenous peoples, especially the Miskitu and Mayangna communities of the Northern Caribbean Coast, have increased exponentially." As indicated, in the first half of 2024, there were 643 documented cases of violations of the rights of indigenous peoples, 682 victims in all, due to the burning of homes, threats, kidnappings, and attacks. Additionally, in 2024, four murders of indigenous people were recorded, for a total of 75 documented deaths since 2013. The organizations emphasized that 78% of the cases are related to attacks that occurred in communities for which precautionary measures had been granted by the Commission and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.<sup>176</sup>

95. The upsurge in violence against indigenous communities resulted in the criminalization of leaders and defenders of the land, especially in the Mayangna Sauni As and Wangki Li Aubra territories. In the first half of 2024, indigenous organizations registered 37 cases of the government charging forest rangers with crimes.<sup>177</sup> According to available information, at least 11 traditional leaders and forest rangers of the Mayangna people have been convicted and remain in detention, four of which have been granted precautionary measures by the Inter-American system.<sup>178</sup> On August 15, 2024, the Commission learned of the arrest of Steadman Fagoth by the Nicaraguan Army, the day after he publicly denounced the invasion and destruction of indigenous land on the Caribbean Coast.<sup>179</sup>

96. The IACHR also received information about violations of due process and their specific effects on indigenous persons detained, because of trials held outside the jurisdiction of the Caribbean Coast, private hearings with no access to relatives or counsel of choice, and the refusal to hand over copies of the conviction rulings.<sup>180</sup> According to testimonies received by the MESENI, indigenous persons deprived of liberty suffer inhumane treatment in prisons and find themselves in conditions more dire than other persons identified as political prisoners. Of particular concern is the concealment of the whereabouts and health conditions of Mr. Brooklyn Rivera, leader of YATAMA, previously mentioned in this report.

97. Regarding the right to communal property, in 2024, the IACHR learned that mining concessions had been granted on indigenous lands without a consultation process that adheres to international standards.<sup>181</sup>

98. On March 1, 2024, various United Nations mandates expressed their concern about alleged violations of the rights of indigenous peoples and Afro-descendant communities, including the rights to land, territory, and resources, prior, free, and informed consultation and consent, due to the implementation of the “Bio-CLIMA” reforestation project, financed by the Green Climate Fund (GCF), the Central American Bank for Economic Integration (CABEI) and the Global Environment Facility (GEF).<sup>182</sup> On March 7, 2024, the Green Climate Fund terminated the project due to non-compliance with its policies and procedures on socio-environmental safeguards.<sup>183</sup>

99. Lastly, in 2024, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women expressed its concern about the multiple forms of discrimination faced by indigenous and Afro-descendant women in Nicaragua. It highlighted the higher vulnerability and impunity of gender-based violence, including sexual violence, murder, internal displacement, forced eviction, and an alarming situation regarding Wilú indigenous women in the Bosawás reserve and in the Mayangna Sauni territory. It also highlighted the lack of progress in land demarcation and the issuance of land titles, which impact the livelihoods of indigenous women.<sup>184</sup>

100. The IACHR urges the State of Nicaragua to cease repression against indigenous and Afro-descendant communities. In addition, it reiterates its call to the State to adopt urgent and differentiated measures aimed at protecting the territories and natural resources, and that these be developed in consultation and coordination with them. In particular, the IACHR urges compliance with the precautionary measures granted under the Inter-American system of human rights.

III. ECONOMIC, SOCIAL, CULTURAL, AND ENVIRONMENTAL RIGHTS

101. Through the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural, and Environmental Rights (REDESCA), the IACHR received information on the persistence of serious and systematic violations of the economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights (ESCER) of the population.

102. First, the IACHR is concerned about the situations of people expelled from the country and arbitrarily deprived of their liberty, since they find themselves in situations of extreme vulnerability, deprived of fundamental rights essential to guarantee their dignity, well-being, and personal development. Documented violations include the loss of the rights to access social benefits, to legally exercise a profession, or to access quality education because of the elimination of professional or academic records.

103. Additionally, in 2024, the United Nations Group of Human Rights Experts on Nicaragua identified three types of violations of social security rights of persons arbitrarily deprived of their nationality in Nicaragua. First, there are cases of elderly retirees whose pensions were confiscated; secondly, there are persons of retirement age with weeks of contributions who are unable to apply for their pension due to deprivation of their nationality; and lastly, there are people who had been contributing to the Nicaraguan

Institute of Social Security, not yet of retirement age, who lost both their contributions and the number of contribution weeks.<sup>185</sup>

104. Regarding labor rights guarantees for persons expelled from the country, the IACHR learned of the decision of the National Council for Judicial Administration and Career within the Supreme Court of Justice, to permanently suspended the licenses of exiled lawyers and notaries public who, after being deprived of their nationality, are considered “foreigners” by the government and do not have the legal capacity to practice their profession in the country.<sup>186</sup>

105. The IACHR notes that deprivation of nationality and exile have forced victims to rebuild their lives away from their families, facing extreme vulnerability with little or no support from host countries. This situation is especially serious for people in vulnerable situations, such as children whose mental health is compromised by not being able to see their banished parents, as well as people with chronic illnesses and older adults who require medical care and adequate psychological support.<sup>187</sup>

106. The lack of support networks and legal uncertainty in their new surroundings heighten their vulnerability, hindering their integration with and access to essential services. REDESCA has pointed out that it is the responsibility of the States to adopt effective measures to guarantee protection of the ESCER of the entire population under their jurisdiction, regardless of their migratory status. This includes implementing inclusive policies that promote equity and social justice, as well as strengthening human rights protection mechanisms to prevent abuses and ensure access to essential resources and services.

107. Additionally, the IACHR and REDESCA noted with concern that the university sector is in a critical situation, marked by severe restriction of academic freedom. In particular, the IACHR found constant harassment and intimidation of student groups opposed to the government, creating an atmosphere of fear that undermines participation and the free exercise of their rights. Additionally, academic authorities and faculty who denounce abuses and indoctrination by the government are persecuted in retaliation for their efforts to promote critical thinking and freedom of thought.<sup>188</sup> This situation not only significantly compromises the educational development of present and future generations but also violates the fundamental principles of university autonomy and the right to quality education.

108. During 2024, the Commission rejected the closure of more than 1,600 civil society and religious organizations in Nicaragua, many of which engaged in social and education issues. Most of these closures resulted in confiscation and illegitimate appropriation of assets.<sup>189</sup> Furthermore, the legal status of the Universidad de Ciencias de la Salud y Energías Renovables (UCSER) was canceled due to alleged non-compliance with regulatory laws.<sup>190</sup> According to the conclusions and recommendations of the Group of Human Rights Experts, “[t]here are no longer any autonomous institutions in the university sector of Nicaragua. The authorities have suppressed any organized movements and critical voices from university students and faculty members.”<sup>191</sup>

109. The IACHR learned of two amendments to Law No. 89 “Law on the Autonomy of Higher Education Institutions.” The first reform grants broad powers to the National Council of Universities (CNU by its Spanish acronym) over decisions made in higher education institutions, such as in budgetary matters. this regard, insufficient budget allocations to higher education in Nicaragua is a matter of concern, given that the CNU saw its 2024 budget reduced by 56%.<sup>192</sup> The second reform is tied to the Nicaraguan government's decision to impose on public universities and technical education centers the obligation to pay for public services, such as water and electricity, thus altering fundamental spending and operational-related aspects of educational institutions.<sup>193</sup> In this regard, by transferring costs to universities, the reform not only compromises their financial stability, but also significantly undermines their autonomy, limiting their ability to operate independently and to adapt to the academic needs of their communities.

110. Regarding the Nicaraguan public health system, REDESCA received information that shows marked deterioration since 2018, caused by massive dismissals, the exodus of specialists, and health personnel being trained by non-academic faculty.<sup>194</sup> Additionally, there are still situations in which health personnel are being controlled and surveilled by both pro-government unions and Ministry of Health officials, in deteriorating working conditions, with salaries being lower than the cost of a basic food basket, incentives being removed, and exploitative labor conditions.<sup>195</sup>

111. Regarding the guarantee of the indigenous peoples' ESCER, during the IACHR's 190th period of sessions, the petitioning organizations denounced the increase in violence against the Miskitu and Mayangna communities on the Northern Caribbean Coast of Nicaragua due to increased mining activity by public and private mining companies. The organizations highlighted the ways these large and small-scale activities have affected the lives of these communities, limiting their access to economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights.<sup>196</sup> The organizations also pointed to the out-of-control increase in the number of mining concessions the State has granted to foreign companies in indigenous territories without a prior consultation process. In areas such as Mayangna Sauni As, mining concessions encompass 41% of the territory. They also indicated that the State has allowed the expansion of large-scale farming of cattle and crops, in many cases oil palm monoculture. Additionally, forestry and mining companies with government ties have been promoted, resulting in environmental degradation and paving the way for colonization of indigenous territories.

112. In the context of the global climate emergency, the Commission and REDESCA express their concern over information that reveals a loss of 650,000 hectares of primary rainforest in Nicaragua, equivalent to 36% of its total tree coverage loss over the same period. The total area of primary rainforest in Nicaragua decreased by 32% during this time.<sup>197</sup> The IACHR and REDESCA recall the State's duty to "consult and seek the consent of persons whose rights could be violated by programmes and projects that involve a risk of significant environmental damage. Such programmes and projects include those aimed at mitigating greenhouse gases and adapting to the impacts of climate change."<sup>198</sup>

IV. SITUATION OF FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

In its decision, the GCF Secretariat decided to work together with the entities to develop a clear strategy to bring the project to an orderly and responsible conclusion that includes informing all stakeholders on the ground and managing the expectations of those who would have been beneficiaries had the project been implemented. expression, peaceful assembly, and association in Nicaragua. The information documented during 2024 shows a pattern of continued persecution of journalists, human rights defenders, artists, opponents, and religious leaders for merely expressing their ideas and opinions, which is indicative of the intolerance towards any opinion that questions or contradicts the State's narrative.

114. These actions are part of a deliberate state strategy to silence critical voices, stifle dissent, and consolidate a state information monopoly, conducted through various mechanisms that include manipulation of the criminal justice system, administrative and fiscal harassment, and strict control over the digital sphere. This, together with a regulatory framework that restricts fundamental freedoms, has institutionalized a system of censorship that is incompatible with the basic pillars of a democratic society.

115. The comprehensive and sustained deployment of abusive institutions has contributed to the progressive closure of civic and democratic spaces where self-censorship is prevalent, as has been widely documented by the IACHR. Citizens in general refrain from expressing opinions or participating in debates on matters of public interest for fear of retaliation. With more than 270 journalists exiled from the country in the last six years, organizations that defend journalism and freedom of expression report that the government continues to “purge” the country's political system and that the “siege of freedom of the press and expression continues to escalate.”<sup>199</sup>

A. Attacks, threats, and intimidation against journalists and media outlets

116. The Inter-American Commission and the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression continued to monitor the serious situation for journalism in Nicaragua, characterized by a pattern of repression that affects multiple aspects of the right to freedom of expression. In 2024, persistent and intensifying practices have been documented, including: (i) arbitrary arrests and criminalization; (ii) expulsions and arbitrary deprivation of nationality; (iii) closure and confiscation of media outlets; iv) police surveillance and harassment; (v) threats on social media; (vi) use of stigmatizing and violent discourse from the highest levels of state power; (vii) widespread self-censorship, which mainly affects journalists and sources on the ground; and, (viii) an intensive official propaganda campaign.

117. Journalists who attempt to report on matters of public interest face imminent risk of arrest. Against this backdrop, the Commission is concerned about the case of journalist Fabiola Tercero Castro, who was reported missing on July 12, 2024. At the time of this report, more than 100 days have passed without authorities providing any information on her whereabouts.<sup>200</sup> According to available information, seven police officers raided her Managua home without a warrant, confiscating electronic equipment and work-related materials. It was reported that the journalist had previously been subjected to repressive measures such as house arrest and the obligation to report daily to a police station.<sup>201</sup>

118. Civil society organizations have labeled this case an enforced disappearance and have demanded clear information about her situation and respect for her physical integrity.<sup>202</sup> The Inter-American Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur urge the State of Nicaragua to adopt urgent measures to locate her, protect her physical integrity, and cease these repressive practices, in accordance with applicable standards and recommendations under international law.

119. Another reported detention was that of journalist Orlando Chávez Esquivel, director of the news program “El Metropolitano” at La Consentida radio station in the city of León. According to available information, Chávez was arrested by police on May 19, 2024, following a raid at his home where his siblings, Obed and Merary Chávez, were also arrested on charges of obstruction. Reports indicate that the operation was in retaliation for his participation in presenting the book “Los Brujos y sus prodigios.” Orlando Chávez was allegedly interrogated and released days later.<sup>203</sup>

120. The IACHR and RELE also followed up on the situations of the politically imprisoned journalists Víctor Ticay Ruiz and Sergio Catarino Castiblanco Hernández. Ticay, a correspondent for Canal 10, was arrested on April 6, 2023, after covering a religious procession that is prohibited in Nicaragua.<sup>204</sup> According to information documented by the IACHR, while detained he was tortured by state agents with electric shocks to his feet, and was interrogated repeatedly in the early hours of the morning, in addition to beatings and death threats.<sup>205</sup> Ticay was sentenced to eight years in prison for the crime of spreading fake news.<sup>206</sup>

121. Further, Sergio Catarino Castiblanco Hernández, teacher, journalist, broadcaster, and member of political groups, was arrested along with his wife, Jacqueline Rodríguez Herrera, on April 22 and 23, 2023, respectively, and sentenced to eight years in prison for the crimes of conspiracy to undermine national integrity and spreading fake news.<sup>207</sup> According to information provided to the IACHR, Sergio Catarino was allegedly assaulted by state agents, leaving him in constant pain; he was also diagnosed with diabetes, neuralgia and fluid retention in his lower limbs.<sup>208</sup> Despite these health problems, he reportedly has not received adequate medical care.<sup>209</sup>

122. In 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures, and the I/A Court H.R. issued provisional measures in favor of both, recognizing that they were in a serious and urgent situation that threatened their rights to life, to humane treatment, and to health due to the dire conditions of detention they faced.<sup>210</sup> As part of the release of 135 political prisoners on September 5, 2024, Víctor Ticay Ruiz and Sergio Catarino Castiblanco Hernández were released from prison and sent to Guatemala.<sup>211</sup> This release was part of a humanitarian agreement brokered by the U.S. government.<sup>212</sup>

123. The IACHR and RELE recall that the detention of journalists for the legitimate exercise of their profession constitutes a restriction incompatible with the right to freedom of expression. This type of intimidating action not only violates the right of these individuals to express and impart ideas, opinions, and information, but also violates the rights of citizens and societies as a whole to receive and seek information and ideas of any nature.<sup>213</sup> As the Inter-American Court has held, “journalism can only be exercised freely when

124. Further, the IACHR and RELE also learned of the detention and subsequent expulsion from the country of journalist Nohelia González Valdivia, on July 9, 2024.<sup>215</sup> Police agents reportedly arrived at her home in Veracruz at 6:00 a.m. and forcibly transferred her to the Augusto C. Sandino international airport to be expelled. Initially it was reported that her destination was Panama, however, it was later confirmed that she was expelled to the United States.<sup>216</sup> With almost 28 years of experience as head of information at the newspaper La Prensa, Nohelia González had opted to retire from active journalism to avoid persecution by the regime, after having also worked at the now closed Canal Católico (Catholic channel of Nicaragua), where she had collaborated closely with Monsignor Rolando Álvarez in the interview program “Pueblo de Dios” (People of God).<sup>217</sup> This program addressed the country’s political crisis, the role of the Church, and other socio-political issues, criticizing government actions. According to civil society reports, her connection to Monsignor Alvarez and her coverage of these issues may have been one of the reasons she was persecuted.<sup>218</sup>

125. The IACHR and RELE also express their concern about government actions aimed at dismantling the ecosystem of independent media and civil society organizations associated with freedom of expression in Nicaragua.<sup>219</sup> Since 2018, the Office of the Special Rapporteur has observed a systematic attempt by the government to put pressure on and interfere with news reporting by the media, with the aim of directing information policy.<sup>220</sup> In its previous annual reports, this Office warned about the consolidation of a duopoly over Nicaragua’s communications media, which controls the majority of television and radio media. In practice, “most of the audiovisual media is under the political control of the presidential family or of a businessman related to the government.”<sup>221</sup>

126. Those who still engage in independent journalism in Nicaragua have been forced to radically modify their approach to news reporting or engage in self-censorship due to the risk of retaliation and criminalization.<sup>222</sup> In a scenario of massive closure of media outlets and non-governmental entities, confiscations, and fiscal and administrative harassment by institutions such as the General Revenue Directorate (DGI), the Nicaraguan Social Security Institute (INSS) and the Ministry of the Interior, many media outlets have opted to completely alter their programming towards a non-news content – mainly music, entertainment or religious content – in order to protect their collaborators.<sup>223</sup>

127. In this context, in 2024, Radio Maria, a radio station that operated for over 40 years, was reportedly closed down after the Ministry of the Interior canceled its legal status on July 9.<sup>224</sup> The measure, announced through a ministerial agreement published in the official gazette La Gaceta, is based on an alleged “breach of obligations,” including the failure to submit financial statements and the expiration of the term of its

Board of Directors.<sup>225</sup> The Nicaraguan Ministry of Governance canceled the legal status of Radio María along with that of 11 other non-governmental organizations.<sup>226</sup> A few months earlier, the station reported that its bank accounts had been blocked and frozen “without justification” and that its broadcasting schedules had been restricted.<sup>227</sup> The station’s assets were subsequently transferred to the State.<sup>228</sup>

128. Likewise, according to public information, Radio Mujer and Radio Cepad are at risk of closure following the cancellation of the legal status of their parent organizations by the Ministry of the Interior in August 2024.<sup>229</sup> Both outlets could face confiscation of assets by the Attorney General’s Office, following the documented trend in prior cases where non-profit organizations were canceled by the State.<sup>230</sup>

129. The IACHR and the Rapporteurship also documented the cancellation of the legal status of the Nicaraguan Association of Parliamentary Journalists (ANPP) on August 19 and, subsequently, on August 22, of the Nicaraguan Chamber of Radio Broadcasters (CANIRA).<sup>231</sup> According to information received by the Office of the Special Rapporteur, the Association of Parliamentary Journalists played a fundamental role in the training and specialization of journalists who provided coverage of the National Assembly, where they tracked the legislative cycle and the work of parliamentary committees.<sup>232</sup> CANIRA sought to promote the growth and strengthening of radio broadcast and production services and the defense of free competition and fundamental freedoms in the sector.<sup>233</sup>

130. These conditions have led to the current predominance of musical, religious, and pro-government radio stations, while the few remaining independent radio stations have been forced to self-censor.<sup>234</sup> RELE notes that, in departments such as Granada, stations such as Radio Volcán (102.9 FM), Bahía Azul (96.5 FM) and La Gran Sultana (107.7 FM) have limited their coverage to news of events and social services, avoiding any content critical of the authorities.<sup>235</sup> This Office is concerned that several radio station owners have been pressured to sell their media outlets to religious associations, as has been the case with Radio Bethel and Radio Restauración, a trend also observed in the department of Masaya.<sup>236</sup>

131. According to what the IACHR and RELE have been able to document, media outlet closures have left at least nine departments within the country without journalism and independent media: Carazo, Chontales, Jinotega, Madriz, Nueva Segovia, Granada, both the Northern and Southern Caribbean Coast regions, and most recently León.<sup>237</sup> The Rapporteurship finds that the concentration of media outlets in state-owned or pro-government hands, together with the elimination of independent voices, has created a monopoly of official news in those regions, or what this Office calls “zones of media silence.”<sup>238</sup> This has a particularly serious impact in regions distant from the capital since, in these territories where internet access is limited or practically non-existent, radio has historically been the main source of information for the communities.<sup>239</sup>

132. The cancellation of media and closure of civil society organizations are part of a repressive strategy of the Government to consolidate a regime of concentration of power.<sup>240</sup> The IACHR and RELE are of the view that this is the most illustrative and drastic pattern of attacks on pluralism, and on the State's intention to completely shut down civic and democratic spaces in Nicaragua.<sup>241</sup>

133. In view of the foregoing, the IACHR and its Rapporteurship emphasize that ownership and control of the media by monopolies or oligopolies are violations of freedom of expression, as they threaten democracy by restricting the plurality and diversity which ensure the full exercise of the right to information. Without plurality of voices and opinions, the media cannot fulfill their contributory role in democracy, given that “[p]luralism is a thus a basic general rule of [...] media policy.”<sup>242</sup>

134. They also warn that these acts of administrative and financial harassment constitute forms of indirect censorship, prohibited by international human rights law. According to Principle No. 13 of the Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression: “[t]he exercise of power and the use of public funds by the state, the granting of customs duty privileges, the arbitrary and discriminatory placement of official advertising and government loans; the concession of radio and television broadcast frequencies, among others, with the intent to put pressure on and punish or reward and provide privileges to social communicators and communications media because of the opinions they express threaten freedom of expression, and must be explicitly prohibited by law. The means of communication have the right to carry out their role in an independent manner. Direct or indirect pressures exerted upon journalists or other social communicators to stifle the dissemination of information are incompatible with freedom of expression<sup>243</sup>.”

135. Therefore, they reiterate to the State of Nicaragua its duty to ensure respect for the independence of the media and to refrain from imposing prior censorship by any State body, as well as any type of prior conditioning that could imply censorship of the information content.

136. In addition to the above, the Commission and its Rapporteurship note the persistence of official discourse that identifies journalists and the media as adversaries of the State and domestic enemies seeking to carry out a “coup d'état,” labels used to justify judicial persecution and expulsion from the country of any person critical of the administration.<sup>244</sup> In 2024, Vice President and government spokesperson Rosario Murillo, on several occasions, called journalists and opponents “stateless fools,” “enemies of peace,” “enemies of humanity,” “traitors,” “terrorists,” “brainless,” “false slanderers,” “not-yet-buried criminals of history,” and “pure scum,” among others things.<sup>245</sup> This Office expresses its concern over the explicit threats made by the Vice President against journalists, human rights defenders, and opposition members in exile, warning that she will not “hesitate” to take action against those who “dare touch our soil” and return to Nicaragua, referring to those who have been exiled.<sup>246</sup>

137. This type of discourse from the highest levels of public power, not only incites animosity, violence and hostility toward the press, but also legitimizes the government's repressive tactics, creating an environment where the exercise of freedom of expression is threatened. For the IACHR and RELE, the stigmatizing and violent discourse of the authorities against critics has resulted in a climate of fear that has almost completely inhibited the exercise of freedom of expression and has undermined the practice of journalism in the country.

138. The Commission and its RELE call attention to the impact that these repressive strategies have had on training new journalists. In this regard, reports indicate that the country's universities have stopped training communications professionals, given that journalism is currently perceived as a "career prone to criminalization" and a high-risk activity.<sup>247</sup> According to civil society reports, the few institutions that still offer training have become centers of agitation, indoctrination, and propaganda in favor of the governing party, with a curriculum that is far removed from journalistic principles, values, and ethics.<sup>248</sup> Given this scenario, there are those who propose building partnerships between Nicaraguan media in exile and universities in neighboring countries to train new journalists.<sup>249</sup>

139. The lack of educational institutions to train new communicators not only affects the right to academic freedom but also contributes to perpetuating the information siege imposed by the State in Nicaragua.<sup>250</sup> In this regard, the Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur urge the States of the region and the international community to support initiatives that ensure the continuity of journalism training for Nicaraguans.

140. Attacks on freedom of expression have also extended to international media correspondents. Several journalists and photojournalists from media outlets such as El País, and the AFP, Reuters and EFE agencies have been forced to leave the country due to government harassment. In 2024, RELE learned of the case of photojournalist Oswaldo Rivas, of the Agence France-Presse (AFP), who had to leave the country in June 2024 after police agents raided his home.<sup>251</sup> According to the information received, Rivas was alerted while covering an event that he was "surrounded" by the authorities, that there were vehicles outside his house, and that he would probably be arrested, so he decided not to return home. The next day, he was informed that police patrols had entered his home and were taking his belongings, from computers and televisions to bicycles and a pick-up truck.<sup>252</sup> Given this situation, Rivas remained in hiding for several days before leaving the country through unmarked border crossings, finally arriving in the United States, where he has requested political asylum.<sup>253</sup> In previous years, there had been reports that international media had been blocked, especially during the 2021 electoral process.<sup>254</sup>

141. Finally, the Commission and its RELE emphasize that the repression of fundamental freedoms and the hostile climate directed against the independent press has led to a historic exodus of journalists. According to available information, between April 2018 and June 2024, at least 278 journalists and communicators have reportedly fled Nicaragua in search of protection.<sup>255</sup> In this regard, civil society reports that "there are almost no independent journalists left" in the country and an exiled press is now a "permanent condition."<sup>256</sup>

142. The IACHR and its Office of the Special Rapporteur are particularly concerned that transnational repression and fear of reprisals against family members who remain in Nicaragua have led to self-censorship continuing even in exile.<sup>257</sup> Likewise, independent media operating from outside the country have had to significantly reduce their operations due to challenges accessing collaborative resources, maintaining secure contact with sources within Nicaragua, and accessing information about what is happening on the ground.<sup>258</sup> This situation has led some journalists in exile to temporarily pause their work or leave the profession altogether.<sup>259</sup>

143. RELE emphasizes that the set of tactics used by the Government to silence independent and critical voices contravene the State's international obligations to respect and ensure the right to freedom of expression and freedom of the press. The Rapporteurship urges the State to immediately cease persecution of journalists and media outlets, and to adopt urgent measures to ensure the full exercise of freedom of expression in the country. It also calls on the States of the region and the international community to support initiatives that ensure the continuity of independent Nicaraguan journalism and the training of new professionals.

B. Laws restricting the right to freedom of expression

144. In the last five years, the IACHR and RELE have been documenting a pattern of criminalization of statements regarding matters of public interest using laws that directly restrict freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association, and seek to make an example of the situation at hand in Nicaraguan society.<sup>260</sup> In particular, the approval of Law No. 1042 “Special Cybercrimes Act” in October 2020 has allowed the Government of Nicaragua to arbitrarily exercise control over information and expressions on the internet.<sup>261</sup> Since then, the authorities have used the law to censor journalists, media outlets, human rights defenders, artists, students and religious leaders, generating a climate of fear of reprisals that has led many people to opt for anonymity on social media.<sup>262</sup>

145. In this context, the Commission and its RELE note with concern a series of amendments to this law, approved as a matter of urgency by the National Assembly on September 11, 2024.<sup>263</sup> Among the amendments is the expansion of Article 1 to explicitly include “the use of social media and mobile applications”, thus expanding State control over the dissemination of ideas and opinions in the digital space.<sup>264</sup> Additionally, Article 2 extends application of the law beyond the national territory, to “material or intellectual authors, aiders and abettors, accomplices, or any person who facilitates or encourages the commission of enumerated crimes,” whether committed within or outside the national territory.<sup>265</sup>

146. Further, prison sentences were increased for crimes related to dissemination of information on social media. Article 30 increases the penalties for “publishing or disseminating false or misleading information” from two to four years to three to five years of imprisonment.<sup>266</sup> It also raises penalties to up to ten years of imprisonment when publications allegedly “incite discrimination, hatred, and violence” or

“jeopardize economic and social stability, public order, sovereign security, or public health.”<sup>267</sup> These penalties may be increased by up to two thirds for those who “organize, finance, carry out, collaborate and/or facilitate the creation or mass dissemination” of such information.<sup>268</sup>

147. In the opinion of the Commission and its Special Rapporteurship, the Law on Cybercrime expands the State’s law enforcement apparatus to punish legitimate expression, in contravention of international standards on the matter.<sup>269</sup> As noted above, “when a state’s law enforcement apparatus seeks the criminal punishment of statements on [sic] regarding matters of public interest, the legitimacy of the criminal penalty is weakened, either because there is no pressing social interest to justify it, or because it becomes a disproportionate response, or it constitutes an indirect restriction.”<sup>270</sup>

148. The application of criminal law in these cases, as a tool to silence public debate and punish criticism, contravenes the fundamental principles of international human rights law. Any limitations on freedom of expression must meet certain requirements to avoid arbitrary controls on speech: it must be precise, pursue a legitimate aim, and be necessary and proportional to achieve that aim.<sup>271</sup> Further, it must be subjected to strict scrutiny, particularly when it affects specially protected speech such as that related to matters of public interest or criticism of public officials.<sup>272</sup>

149. In addition to the above, a series of amendments to the Code of Criminal Procedure were approved almost simultaneously, on September 10, 2024, through Law No. 1218.<sup>273</sup> In particular, the IACHR and the Rapporteurship note their concern about Article 230, which gives the National Police broad surveillance and investigation powers without prior judicial oversight. These powers include the ability to: (a) require and access information from computer service providers; (b) extract information from electronic and computer systems; (c) conduct searches, raids, and seizures; d) obtain sensitive data from telephone companies on users’ communications, such as data about telephone line account holders, call records, text and voice messages, geolocation, location of transmitting and receiving antennas, subscriber identity module (SIM) number, internet protocol (IP) addresses, international mobile equipment identifiers (IMEI) and user data across all devices.<sup>274</sup>

150. The Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur recall that any interference with the right to privacy must strictly abide by the principle of legality, that is, it must be specifically authorized by a law that is precise and that clearly establishes the scope of circumstances and conditions under which authorities may implement such measures.<sup>275</sup> In this case, the breadth of the powers granted to the National Police allows excessive discretion to access personal data and private communications. Moreover, it does not specify the circumstances that would justify such interference, nor does it establish temporal or material limits for its exercise.

151. Further, although the law establishes that these measures must be subject to review by the judiciary within three business days, the absence of prior judicial oversight eliminates an essential safeguard against abuse of power. As noted by the UN Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, measures involving interference with the privacy of individuals must be subject to authorization by an independent and impartial judicial body, granted in accordance with due process of law, and with all appropriate limitations on time, manner, place, and scope.<sup>276</sup> In this regard, the Commission and RELE emphasize that the three business day period established by law is inadequate as control mechanism, given that during that time frame authorities might have already accessed, collected, and processed the data in an irreversible manner.

152. Another aspect of concern is the risk that such extraordinary police powers could pose to the confidentiality of journalistic sources, a fundamental component of freedom of the press, enshrined in Principle 8 of the IACHR Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression.<sup>277</sup> The Commission and RELE warn that the possibility of authorities gaining access to communications records, notes, files, and other information on journalists, without prior judicial oversight, can have an intimidating effect on sources.

153. The Commission and RELE call attention to Article 211, which empowers the Director General of the National Police and the Attorney General to “seize, restrain or freeze assets, securities, certificates of deposit, documents and bank accounts” and to suspend financial operations without prior judicial order.<sup>278</sup> This provision, combined with the possibility of executing the measures without notifying the person under investigation, could be used to economically suffocate independent media and civil society organizations.

154. Lastly, they call attention to the approved bill [to modify] the Law on General Convergent Telecommunications.<sup>279</sup> In its explanatory statement, the Executive argued that this law needs to be updated because it is totally anachronistic and obsolete and its “extreme longevity” cannot keep pace with rapid technological advances.<sup>280</sup> According to the Legislative Assembly, this law “establishes a modern regulatory framework adapted to the technological advances in the field, in order to guarantee families efficient access to the internet, telephone, radio and other services associated with information technologies.”<sup>281</sup>

155. The Commission and RELE note that this bill would grant additional control and oversight powers to the Nicaraguan Regulatory Entity of Telecommunications and Postal Services (TELCOR).<sup>282</sup> According to Article 110 of the bill would compel telecommunications operators to “provide all the information required, including georeferenced and statistical data” to the regulator, without establishing adequate safeguards for the protection of personal data.<sup>283</sup>

156. Additionally, Article 20 establishes a prior authorization regime for assignment or transfer of public telecommunications and audiovisual communications services licenses, granting broad powers to TELCOR to authorize the transfer of licenses and the rights conferred therein.<sup>284</sup> The bill would also seek to impose a licensing system for local channel operators and creators of audiovisual content over the internet, as provided in Articles 5 and 16.<sup>285</sup>

157. The Commission and its Rapporteurship find it problematic that the proposed bill lacks clear parameters for the granting or revoking licenses and, due to its broad language and the discretion granted to TELCOR, could be used to hinder the transfer of licenses to independent or critical media. It is of particular concern that the law could be used to prevent the transmission of content from independent media operating from exile, currently reaching the country over the internet.

158. Furthermore, they consider it important to highlight that this entity has been used by the executive branch as an instrument for exerting control over independent media. In recent years, TELCOR has intensified the arbitrary use of its regulatory powers to cancel licenses and close media outlets critical of the government.<sup>286</sup> In this context, the IACHR and its RELE warn that the proposed bill to modify the Law on General Convergent Telecommunications would significantly expand these control capacities.

159. The Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur maintain that these laws, as a whole, comprise a legal framework that institutionalizes censorship and transnational persecution of critical voices, and allows for an environment where violations of freedom of expression are legitimized under the premise of public safety. Further, they deepen a state of fear and self-censorship, which not only affects the media and journalists, but also has a paralyzing effect on various sectors of Nicaraguan civil society.<sup>287</sup>

160. In view of the foregoing, the IACHR and RELE urge the State of Nicaragua to immediately repeal the Special Cybercrimes Act and the amendments to the Code of Criminal Procedure, as they are manifestly incompatible with international standards on the right to freedom of expression. They also urge the State to refrain from passing new telecommunications legislation that could be used to unduly restrict the flow of information and hinder the operation of independent media.

161. Furthermore, they reiterate that the State must immediately cease the use of criminal law as a mechanism of intimidation and reprisal against journalists, human rights defenders and dissident voices, and urge the adoption of all necessary measures to ensure that individuals can exercise their right to freedom of expression without fear of being criminalized and harassed, an indispensable condition for the reestablishment of the rule of law in Nicaragua.

C. Freedom of expression on the internet

162. The Inter-American Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur note that during 2024, surveillance and control over the digital sphere has intensified in Nicaragua.<sup>288</sup> The information gathered shows that the State, coordinated from the highest levels of government, continues to use legal and technological tools to restrict public debate on the internet, criminalize critical expressions, and promote propaganda operations, disinformation, and manipulation of information.<sup>289</sup>

163. In this regard, the IACHR and RELE take note of investigations by independent media and civil society organizations that reveal the existence of “digital mobs” or “troll farms” in various public institutions, including the Nicaraguan Post Office, the Office of the Mayor of Managua, the Youth Institute (Injuve) and the offices of the Supreme Court of Justice.<sup>290</sup> These operations are allegedly dedicated to producing and disseminating pro-government content and attacking opponents on digital platforms such as TikTok, Instagram, Facebook, and X (formerly Twitter).<sup>291</sup> Further, they point out that the Nicaraguan government has a network of at least 13 Telegram channels dedicated to the dissemination of government propaganda and attacks against people deemed to be opponents.<sup>292</sup> Analysis of 162,580 messages posted between 2018 and

164. The Commission and RELE emphasize that, in recent years, the State has strengthened its control capacity over the digital sphere through various legislative amendments. As noted above, the proposed bill to modify the Law on General Convergent Telecommunications, introduced by the executive branch in March 2024, and the amendments to the Special Cybercrimes Act could serve as the legal basis for greater control over speech in the digital sphere and to criminalize legitimate expressions. The IACHR and its Rapporteurship note with concern that this regulatory framework has an intimidating effect that has led to widespread self-censorship among citizens.<sup>294</sup>

165. Regarding the foregoing, several cases have been documented that illustrate the seriousness of persecution in the digital sphere. On November 29, 2023, writer, sociologist, and former lecturer Freddy Quezada was arrested for criticizing on social media the manner in which authorities showed Bishop Rolando Álvarez in prison and for “liking” a post related to Miss Universe Sheynnis Palacios.<sup>295</sup> Since 2018, Freddy Quezada had publicly criticized the government's management multiple times, especially through social media, where he has expressed his critical opinions and remarks about the situation in the country.<sup>296</sup> In this context, Quezada was subjected to a judicial process without due process guarantees, conducted through a video call, without meaningful access to a fair trial, and was convicted for allegedly committing the crime of “incitement to hatred.”<sup>297</sup> In December 2023, The Commission granted precautionary measures in favor of Freddy Quezada, in the belief that he faced a serious, urgent risk of suffering irreparable harm to his rights in Nicaragua.<sup>298</sup> In September, he was expelled from the country along with another 134 political prisoners, including journalists Victor Ticay and Sergio Catarino Castiblanco.<sup>299</sup>

166. Along the same lines, information was received about the case of content creator Cristóbal Geovanny López Acevedo, known as “Tropi Gamer,” who was arrested on November 22, 2023 after a live broadcast where he celebrated the victory of Miss Nicaragua Sheynnis Palacios and defended her against criticism from pro-government media.<sup>300</sup> López Acevedo was allegedly tried for various crimes, including child pornography, drug trafficking, and organized crime, where the evidence against him included videos downloaded from the internet and testimonies of police officers. According to public reports, he was transferred to the maximum-security area of “La Modelo” prison, where he spent nine months in solitary confinement in a cell measuring three meters by two meters, with no ventilation.<sup>301</sup> López Acevedo was released from prison and expelled from the country in the same way as Freddy Quezada.<sup>302</sup>

167. These cases are part of a series of repressive acts targeting any expression of support for Miss Universe, including artistic and cultural expressions, as evidenced by the case of two artists who were prevented by the authorities from making a mural in her honor in the city of Estelí, and were even arrested for it.<sup>303</sup> The Commission and the Rapporteurship find that the criminalization of such basic acts of expression on social media, such as “liking” a post or making critical remarks, is a testament to the level of control and censorship that currently exists in the digital sphere in Nicaragua.<sup>304</sup>

168. In this regard, the Commission and the Rapporteurship note that the internet is no longer a medium for the free exercise of the right to express oneself in Nicaragua. Far from being an alternative platform to share opinions and information as was the case in previous years, social media has become a space under surveillance and control by the State, where any critical expression or even interaction can result in criminal action against its author.

169. Against this backdrop, individuals find themselves forced to resort to anonymity or to directly refrain from expressing opinions on social media for fear of criminal reprisals. The Commission and RELE are concerned that this climate of fear has created an inhibiting effect that impacts not only journalists and human rights defenders, but also society in general, seriously hindering public debate on issues of public interest. In this regard, a 2023 Digital Rights report documented that, since 2021, many journalists have stopped attaching bylines to their articles due to concerns for their own safety and that of their families and opting to carry out their journalistic work anonymously.

170. Some media outlets have sought alternative ways to circumvent these restrictions. The IACHR takes note of initiatives such as the campaign launched by the media outlets 100% Noticias and Despacho 505 to promote the use of virtual private networks (VPNs) among their audiences. However, even these digital protection measures are insufficient given the risk of criminalization faced by individuals who attempt to speak out publicly, particularly in a context where the slightest interaction with content deemed contrary to the official narrative can have serious legal implications.

171. The Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur emphasize that the use of cybercrime legislation to criminalize political criticism and dissent contravenes human rights standards, given that any measure that could affect the exercise of freedom of expression on the internet must be established by law, pursue a legitimate aim, and be necessary to accomplish such aim.<sup>305</sup> They also emphasize that public policy and internet regulations seek to preserve and promote “the open, distributed, and interconnected nature of the internet.”<sup>306</sup>

172. In its report “Freedom of Expression and the Internet,” RELE stated that “maximizing the number and diversity of voices able to participate in the public debate is both a means and an end of the democratic process. In this sense, robust guarantees of the exercise of freedom of expression through the Internet are currently a condition for opening the public sphere. It is up to the State to preserve ideal internet conditions for promoting and maintaining informational pluralism. This means ensuring that changes are not made to the Internet that result in a reduction of the number of voices and amount of content available. Public policies on these subjects should protect the multidirectional nature of the Internet and promote platforms that allow for the search for and circulation of information and ideas of all kinds, without regard to borders.”<sup>307</sup>

173. Furthermore, the IACHR and its Rapporteurship recall that, according to Principle 5 of the IACHR Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression, “[p]rior censorship, direct or indirect interference in or pressure exerted upon any expression, opinion or information transmitted through any means of oral, written, artistic, visual, or electronic communication must be prohibited by law. Restrictions to the free circulation of ideas and opinions, as well as the arbitrary imposition of information and the imposition of obstacles to the free flow of information violate the right to freedom of expression.”<sup>308</sup>

174. Considering the foregoing, the IACHR and RELE urge the State of Nicaragua to cease criminal prosecution of persons exercising their right to freedom of expression on the Internet and to repeal or modify regulations that allow for criminalization of legitimate online expression. Lastly, they call attention to the urgent need to ensure a pluralistic and diverse digital environment, which are of utmost importance in those areas of the country where access to alternative sources of information is already severely limited by closures of traditional media.

V. CONCLUSIONS

175. In 2024, the IACHR observed the persistence of repression and the instrumentalization of the entire state apparatus with the long-term goal of suppressing any space for pluralism, expression, practice of faith, dissent, and democratic participation. This has been achieved through the approval of new laws that are contrary to international human rights law and through criminalization of the population, in an effort to maintain a regime of total concentration of power in the Executive in the run-up to the elections scheduled for 2026.

176. In particular, the IACHR found that the repressive regime in place in the country extended beyond political opponents or their families, but also to government sympathizers or officials and to the population in general. Primarily, through arbitrary detentions, dismissals or expulsions, restrictions on entering and leaving the country, among other measures, seeking to impose the subjugation of Nicaraguan society under a climate of fear, surveillance and persecution.

177. The IACHR warned that the closure of civic and democratic spaces in Nicaragua remains one of the most serious scenarios in the region. In 2024, the number of closed organizations amounted to more than 5,000 out of a total of 7,200 registered before 2018, representing the almost total dismantling of organized civil society. At the same time, the amendments approved in this area eliminated any possibility of autonomy in the creation of new organizations. Additionally, the systematic repression against the Catholic Church, which extended to other religious denominations, reveals the regime’s intention to eliminate any space for thought or expression outside its control.

178. In 2024, the IACHR observed the persistence of serious and systematic human rights violations, such as arbitrary detentions and allegations of enforced disappearance. Additionally, it documented new cases of arbitrary deprivation of nationality and banishment as mechanisms of repression and silencing of people abroad, placing them in a situation of extreme vulnerability and civil death. These repressive practices, typical of authoritarian regimes, are contrary to international human rights law.

179. In 2024, the Executive consolidated its absolute control of the autonomous regions of the Caribbean Coast, by way of reported actions of electoral fraud, repression, and violence, to the detriment of the free self-determination of indigenous and Afro-descendant communities. This would increase the risk to the cultural survival of these communities by facilitating the dispossession of their territories, forced displacement, and impunity. At the same time, the detention of indigenous people and leaders for their work in defense of their land, territory, and collective rights, or for opposing the government, would have a chilling effect on the population of the Atlantic Coast region.

180. The IACHR reaffirms its competent jurisdiction over the State of Nicaragua and will continue to exercise its monitoring mandates through MESENI, which includes following up on compliance with the recommendations issued by its various mechanisms, analyzing and processing cases and petitions, supervising recommendations issued in its reports on merits, and active analysis and oversight of compliance with the precautionary measures in force.

VI. RECOMMENDATIONS

181. Based on the foregoing analysis, the Inter-American Commission renews its call for the State to comply with and implement the recommendations issued in the Final Report of its working visit to the country, the recommendations issued by the Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts (GIEI), and the recommendations issued under Chapter IV.B of the annual reports published since 2018, all of which are still pending compliance. These include:

General recommendations

1. Adopt the necessary measures to overcome the human rights crisis by reestablishing democratic institutions, the full validity of the Rule of Law and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression.
2. Promote and sustain an effective, legitimate and inclusive dialogue with civil society. To this end, the State must foster the necessary conditions for building trust among the population by ceasing repression, the recognition of the facts that occurred and complying with its international obligations in matters of truth, justice and reparation.
3. Release all people that have been arbitrarily detained in the context of the crisis that began in 2018.
4. Restore nationality to all Nicaraguan persons affected by the arbitrary deprivation of their nationality since 2018.
5. Initiate processes that promote truth, justice and reparations for the victims of the serious crisis that the country is experiencing.
6. End impunity for human rights violations since the beginning of the crisis in 2018.

Civic and democratic space

7. Overrule all decrees and acts of authority related to the cancellation of the legal status of civil society organizations that have been approved without guaranteeing due process of law. Where applicable, give back all the confiscated assets and premises to the members of these organizations, in the same conditions in which they were at the time of the search of the organizations' facilities.
8. Immediately cease all judicial persecution, repression, stigmatization, attacks, threats, and intimidation against civil society actors on and offline, including journalists, human rights defenders, activists, artists, members of the academia, political opponents and members of religious communities and the Catholic Church.
9. Cease persecution against the Catholic Church, arbitrary arrests, confiscations, and all acts that curtail freedom of religion for the population.
10. Lift obstacles to the legitimate exercise of the right to protest, in particular, through the elimination of the requirement of prior authorization for holding demonstrations and the express establishment of a general presumption in favor of the exercise of the right of assembly and freedom of expression.

11. Effectively comply with the precautionary measures granted by the Inter-American Commission and the provisional measures of the Inter-American Court in favor of persons deprived of liberty.
12. Guarantee due process of law for detained persons. In particular, immediately inform the detainees, their family members and representatives of the grounds and reasons for the detention. Likewise, the right to a fair trial must be ensured, so that defendants have regular contact with their legal representatives and are involved in the preparation for their respective hearings. In addition, it is essential for legal representatives to have unrestricted access to the detainees.
13. Guarantee the dignified treatment of persons in the custody of the State pursuant to international standards. In particular, ensure that they receive medical attention in line with their specific health conditions, are given sufficient food with high nutritional value, and are housed in good sanitary conditions.
14. Create the necessary conditions to ensure effective contact between persons deprived of their liberty with their families, by implementing an adequate, regular and predictable visitation schedule. In that regard, visits must be held with the frequency stipulated in the Penitentiary Regulations and take place in a decent manner and in conditions that are in no way degrading to the persons deprived of liberty. The State must also guarantee the delivery of medicines, food and personal hygiene items.
15. Use the solitary confinement in maximum security centers on an exceptional basis and following an individualized risk assessment and implement it for the shortest amount of time possible and as a last resort. Solitary confinement orders must be authorized by a competent authority and must be subject to independent review.
16. Adopt all necessary and comprehensive measures for the rights of women detainees to be effectively respected and guaranteed, so that they do not suffer from discrimination and are protected against any form of violence that may arise because of their gender.

Indigenous and Afro-descendant communities

17. Guarantee the right of indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples to territory as the first step to safeguard their basic rights. In particular, guarantee the complete and effective demarcation, titling and clearance of their territories in accordance with international standards and the recommendations issued by the bodies of the inter-American system.
18. Adopt all legislative measures to ensure the effective exercise of the right to prior, free and informed consultation and consent of the indigenous communities, pursuant to international standards, particularly regarding development projects or for the exploitation of natural resources that could affect their rights.
19. Guarantee the right of indigenous and Afro-descendant communities and their defenders to a life without violence, in the face of threats, attacks and other acts of intimidation by third parties or companies in their territories.

20. Adopt measures to guarantee the right of indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples to exercise self-determination in a practical and effective manner, in accordance with international standards.
21. Effectively comply with the precautionary measures granted by the Inter-American Commission and the provisional measures of the Inter-American Court in connection with indigenous and Afro-descendant communities of the Caribbean coast. This entails facilitating 710 and guaranteeing the participation of the representatives of the beneficiary communities and their defenders in the enforcement of said measures.

Economic, Social, Cultural, and Environmental Rights

22. Restore the property rights over the retirement and pension accounts of persons who have been affected by the arbitrary confiscation of these accounts. The State must guarantee that these persons can access and make use of their funds, by ensuring their registration and inclusion in INSS records.
23. Comply with the terms of the provisional measures requested by the Commission to the InterAmerican Court to guarantee medical care and adequate nutrition to persons deprived of liberty at different detention facilities in the country.
24. Stop all acts of harassment and persecution against any civil society organization that engages in activities aimed at guaranteeing the respect for ESCERs, such as health, education and labor rights, especially those targeting persons in vulnerable situations.
25. The State must also cease all acts of persecution against the staff and faculty of higher education establishments. In that same regard, it must guarantee the right to academic freedom at all schools of all levels, avoiding any attempt to indoctrinate and fostering educational environments that are participatory, inclusive and diverse.
26. Guarantee access to participation, information and justice in environmental-related matters, so that civil society organizations engaging in environmental defense are able to carry out their activities without any type of intimidation by the State, taking into consideration inter-American standards, Resolution 3/2021 by the Commission and the REDESCA, and the provisions of the Escazú Agreement to which the State is a party.
27. Refrain from harassing and persecuting public officials who do not belong to the incumbent party, respecting their fundamental freedoms and the right to work in safe and dignified conditions.

Freedom of Expression

28. Immediately cease all judicial persecution, repression, stigmatization, attacks, threats and intimidation against individuals and groups who exercise their right to freedom of expression, both on and offline, including journalists, human rights defenders, activists, artists, members of the academia, political opponents and members of religious communities.
29. Provide full judicial guarantees to persons subjected to criminal proceedings for reasons related to the exercise of their right to freedom of expression. Likewise, guarantee the rights to life and humane treatment of persons deprived of liberty who face criminal proceedings, with due respect for the dignity inherent to human beings, pursuant to international human rights standards.

30. Fully, exhaustively and impartially investigate reports of human rights violations of persons deprived of their liberty for reasons related to the exercise of their right to freedom of expression.
31. Refrain from enforcing the law and using the resources and powers of the State in an arbitrary, selective and exemplary manner, and from engaging in abusive government practices to hinder or restrict the exercise of the rights to freedom of expression, freedom of peaceful assembly and freedom of association. In particular, cease any kind of pressure against journalists and the media, especially pressure aimed at punishing and silencing those who investigate and report on matters of public interest.
32. Refrain from exerting pressure on or interfering with the media and cable operators, both in terms of news content and editorial policy, as well as operation.
33. Refrain from retaliating against persons who file complaints or report information on matters of public interest, especially those associated with the human rights crisis in Nicaragua.
34. Refrain from arbitrarily hindering - even by indirect means - journalistic activities, including those of the local press and international correspondents. In particular, restore the Powers of operation of the international press in Nicaragua, as applicable, wherever they have been arbitrarily restricted.
35. Guarantee the right of access to public information, observing the guiding principles of maximum disclosure and good faith. In particular, guarantee the right of the citizenry to access State information related to allegations of human rights violations and to judicial investigations into such violations.
36. Bring domestic legislation into line with international human rights standards. In particular, repeal all laws that are contrary to the principles and standards on freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association, including the Special Cybercrimes Act, the Law on Foreign Agents, the Law of Defense of the Rights of the People to Independence, Sovereignty and Self-Determination for Peace, and the Law on Regulation and Control of Non-Profit Organizations.
37. Refrain from taking measures that impede Nicaraguans' entry into or departure from the country for reasons related to the exercise of the right to freedom of expression, such as the withholding of passports or the denial of any type of migration documentation.
38. Facilitate the operation of international observation mechanisms with respect to the situation of the right to freedom of expression in Nicaragua, which includes providing all official information that is deemed relevant.

---	------------

I. INTRODUCTION

1. In compliance with its conventional and statutory mandate, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (the Commission, the Inter-American Commission, or the IACHR) has followed the human rights situation in Venezuela with special attention. Since 2005, the State has been included in Chapter IV.B of the annual report due to the severe human rights situation in the country and the complete erosion of democracy and the rule of law.

2. In 2024, serious and systematic human rights violations were recorded. Before, during and after the July 28 presidential election, the regime implemented a coordinated repressive strategy, in three stages, to illegitimately perpetuate itself in power. Within the framework of this strategy, State terrorism practices were implemented with the purpose of preventing the political participation of the opposition, hindering the development of a free, fair, competitive and transparent electoral contest, and sowing terror among the citizens.<sup>2</sup> These facts could only be performed, without any control, due to the co-optation of the different branches of government in the last two decades.

3. The first stage took place during the pre-electoral period and was aimed at preventing the political participation of the opposition, which constituted a violation of their right to equal opportunity to run and campaign without arbitrary or discriminatory restrictions. The State resorted to the power of institutions such as the Office of the Comptroller General of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, the Supreme Court of Justice (SCJ) and the security forces to carry out arbitrary arrests of opposition, human rights defenders and social leaders under vague accusations. In addition, acts of harassment, persecution and disqualification were registered against opposition persons or perceived as such, as well as the withdrawal of international electoral observation missions. On the other hand, the National Telecommunications Commission (CONATEL) imposed severe restrictions to freedom of the press, while the National Electoral Council (CNE) established obstacles which denied the right to vote abroad, affecting nearly 5 million Venezuelans.

4. The second stage took place on July 28, during the presidential election. The government implemented a strategy aimed at manipulating the results to proclaim Nicolás Maduro as the winner without any kind of transparency. For this purpose, the CNE halted the transmission of data under the pretext of an alleged cyber-attack. Likewise, it suspended the audits of the electoral process and refused to publish the voting records supporting the announced results. Anticipating an electoral fraud, the opposition compiled more than 80% of the digitalized tally sheets at national level, with the purpose of ensuring transparency and credibility of the results of the contest. The totalization of the votes contained in these tally sheets would award the victory to the opposition candidate Edmundo Gonzalez Urrutia, with 67% of the votes.

5. The perception of fraud among citizens triggered close to 300 spontaneous protests, led mainly by young men living in poverty. In response, the regime implemented a third stage of systematic repression, increasing terror as a tool of social control. The authorities mobilized civilian shock groups against the demonstrations and launched “Operation Tun Tun,” referring to the characteristic sound of agents knocking on doors before making arrests. This operation resulted in at least 25 murders, dozens of brief forced disappearances, some 2,000 arbitrary detentions - including children and adolescents - torture, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, and serious violations of fair trial guarantees and freedom of expression. In addition, the authorities employed tactics such as mass arrests, searches without warrants, the marking of opposition homes, raids in popular neighborhoods, and the abrupt cancellation of passports.

<sup>2</sup> The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights expressed a similar concern, noting in its August 13, 2024 oral update that “arbitrary detentions and disproportionate use of force fuel the climate of fear”. In this regard, see: Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Venezuela: Continued arbitrary detentions and disproportionate use of force fuel climate of fear, warns Türk, August 13, 2024. Available at: <https://www.ohchr.org/es/press-releases/2024/08/venezuela-ongoing-arbitrary-detentions-disproportionate-use-force-fuelling>.

6. The political and human rights crisis in Venezuela is the result of the total co-optation of state institutions by a regime that seeks above all to maintain itself illegitimately in office. The control of institutions designed to promote and protect human rights and democracy, along with large-scale corruption for the collection of licit and illicit rents, have been instrumental in guaranteeing the impunity of the security forces.<sup>3</sup> These actions have not only compromised governance, but have also significantly affected the enjoyment of human rights, especially among historically discriminated groups such as indigenous peoples, Afro-descendants, women, LGBTI people, children and adolescents, the elderly, as well as those living in poverty and extreme poverty.

7. This report is divided into five chapters. Following the introduction, the second chapter presents the elements that justify the inclusion of Venezuela in Chapter IV.B of the IACHR Annual Report 2024. Chapter three documents the serious impact on the democratic order and political rights in the context of the presidential election, including the repressive response of the State and the situation of freedom of expression. Given the co-optation of State institutions and the neglect of public policies, the fourth chapter presents the persistent challenges to the enjoyment of economic, social, cultural and environmental rights (ESCR). This section also develops the situation of groups that have historically suffered structural discrimination. The last chapter outlines a conclusion and a series of recommendations for the respect and guarantee of human rights in Venezuela.

8. The Inter-American Commission stresses that the Venezuelan case clearly illustrates the intrinsic relationship between human rights, democracy and the rule of law. These three elements form a triad in which each is defined, complements and takes on meaning in conjunction with the others. The collapse of this triad, caused by the co-optation of public powers by the Executive Branch, facilitated the establishment of a de facto regime.

II. PRESENCE OF REGULATORY ELEMENTS FAVORING INCLUSION

9. After reviewing the human rights situation in Venezuela, the Commission decided to include this country in this chapter, in accordance with Article 59, paragraphs 6.a.i, 6.a.ii, 6.d.i and 6.d.iii of the Rules of Procedure, which establishes the following criteria:

a. A serious violation of the fundamental elements and institutions of representative democracy provided for in the Inter-American Democratic Charter, which are essential means for the realization of human rights, inter alia:

i. should there be discriminatory access or an abusive exercise of power which undermines or contradicts the rule of law, such as the systematic infringement of the independence of the judiciary or the lack of subordination of State institutions to the legally constituted civilian authority;

<sup>3</sup> The democratic institutionalism in the country is not guided by the separation and balance of public powers, as set forth in the Inter-American Democratic Charter. The Executive Branch concentrates public power after having co-opted institutions such as the Supreme Court of Justice, the National Assembly, the National Electoral Council, the Public Ministry and the Ombudsman's Office. The term of the National Assembly elected in 2015, considered by this Commission as the last institution of national public power vested with democratic legitimacy, ended in 2020. In this regard, see: IACHR, Annual Report 2021, Chapter IV.B - Venezuela, June 2, 2022. Likewise, see the Inter-American Democratic Charter, approved by the OAS Member States during a Special Session of the General Assembly held on September 11, 2001 in Lima, Peru.

- ii. if an alteration of the constitutional order that seriously affects the democratic order has taken place [...].
- d. The presence of other structural situations that seriously and gravely affect the enjoyment of the fundamental rights enshrined in the American Declaration, the American Convention or other applicable human rights instruments. Among other factors to be assessed, the following shall be included:
  - i. serious institutional crises which infringe on the enjoyment of human rights;
  - iii. serious omissions in the adoption of provisions necessary to give effect to fundamental rights or to comply with the decisions of the Inter-American Commission and the Inter-American Court [...]

10. With regard to Article 59, paragraphs 6.a.i and 6.d.i, the IACHR reiterates that the Executive Branch has managed to co-opt the various branches of government. Indeed, the various institutions of public power operate as appendices of the government and systematically adopt decisions detrimental to the rule of law, the separation of powers and political participation. All of this, in clear violation of the Inter-American Democratic Charter and other applicable instruments.

11. In 2024, the SCJ adopted decisions ratifying the administrative disqualifications of the main opposition candidates. Additionally, it validated the electoral results announced by the National Electoral Council (CNE), despite the fact that said institution failed to publish the voting records or the electoral results disaggregated by states or municipalities. On its part, the CNE hindered the registration of opposition candidacies and the registration of Venezuelan citizens abroad, which prevented millions of people from exercising their right to vote.

12. Aside from political participation, the subordination of institutions to the Executive Branch had two major consequences in 2024. First, no suitable measures were taken to combat impunity for violations that occurred in previous years, especially during the 2014 and 2017 protests. In this regard, it should be noted that the severity, systematic mode and impunity of such violations led the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court (ICC) to initiate an investigation for the alleged commission of crimes against humanity, an unprecedented event in the Western hemisphere.

13. Second, the National Assembly did not adopt reforms to reestablish the separation and independence of public powers or strengthen citizen oversight. On the contrary, it discussed and adopted laws that restrict civic space and criminalize the work of human rights defenders. Such is the case of the “Law for the control, regularization, performance and financing of non-governmental and related organizations”, adopted on August 15.

14. As for Article 59, paragraph 6.a.ii, the Inter-American Commission notes that the manner in which the presidential election of July 28 was conducted constituted an alteration of the constitutional order. Although the IACHR is not a body with competence to certify elections, the circumstances that preceded and surrounded the election show that Venezuelan citizens were not able to exercise their political rights under conditions of equality.<sup>4</sup> As a result of this situation, the announcement of the CNE, proclaiming the reelection of Nicolás Maduro, cannot be considered to hold democratic legitimacy.

<sup>4</sup> Political rights are enshrined in various international human rights instruments, such as the American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, Article XX; the American Convention on Human Rights, Article 23; and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Article 25. The Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR) has held that “the effective exercise of political rights constitutes an end in itself and, at the same time, a fundamental means for democratic societies to guarantee the other human rights provided for in the Convention. Political rights have both an individual and a collective dimension, since they protect individuals who

15. With regard to section 6.d.iii of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR observes that structural situations persist which severely limit the enjoyment of human rights, especially with regard to economic, social, cultural and environmental rights (ESCR). Since 2015, more than 7.7 million people have migrated in a forced manner, in what constitutes the largest displacement in the region and one of the largest in the world. This migratory movement responds to a survival strategy to safeguard rights such as life, humane treatment, health and food. All of this is a consequence of the severe human rights situation in Venezuela.

16. Pursuant to Article 59.5 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, the preparation of this report is based on primary and secondary sources of information. Regarding the primary sources, the IACHR analyzed the testimonies received through the Special Follow-up Mechanism for Venezuela (MESEVE), the information available in the cases, petitions and precautionary and provisional measures, the information provided at the public hearings, as well as that recorded in the Commission's press releases, annual and thematic reports.

17. With regard to secondary sources, the report took into account: official acts of the State at all levels and in any of its branches, including constitutional amendments, legislation, decrees, judicial decisions, official announcements; findings of other international human rights bodies, including treaty bodies, Rapporteurs, working groups, the Human Rights Council and other United Nations bodies and specialized agencies; human rights reports of governments and regional bodies; reports of civil society organizations and information submitted by the latter and by individuals; public information widely disseminated in the media; and relevant legal and academic research.

18. The IACHR adopted this report on December 16, 2024. On January 24, 2025, the Commission sent the State of Venezuela a copy of the preliminary draft of this report in accordance with Articles 59.7 and 59.10 of its Rules of Procedure with a period of one month to receive its observations. The State did not submit observations.

III. SERIOUS IMPACT ON DEMOCRATIC ORDER AND POLITICAL RIGHTS

19. This chapter analyzes the regime's instrumentalization of State institutions to illegitimately maintain itself in office, as well as the practices employed to persecute the opposition and prevent its political participation on equal terms. To this end, below, the regime's strategy will be analyzed in three separate stages. The first corresponds to the pre-electoral period, that is, from January 1 to July 27. The second stage refers to the events of July 28, the day of the presidential election. The third stage comprises the regime's repressive response to the allegations of electoral fraud and the broad social protests against it.

A. Stage I: political persecution during the pre-electoral period

20. In the pre-electoral period, the government not only used the machinery of the State to favor the campaign of Nicolás Maduro, but also to hinder and prevent the political participation of the opposition. During this stage, there were: administrative disqualifications of opposition persons; obstacles to the registration of opposition candidacies; discriminatory impediments to the exercise of the vote abroad; the withdrawal of international electoral observation missions; as well as arbitrary detentions and intimidation of opposition persons or those perceived as such.

participate in public affairs as well as candidates and their electors. In general terms, these rights imply: i) to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives; ii) to vote and to be elected in genuine and periodic elections, by universal and equal suffrage and by secret ballot, guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the electors; and iii) to have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in one's own country.

1. Administrative ineligibility of opposition persons

21. At least since 2021, the government and the opposition have held negotiations for the establishment of democratic guarantees and the settlement of the crisis.<sup>5</sup> Several countries of the international community have supported these efforts, especially because of the need to provide transparency and confidence to the presidential elections. Finally, on October 17, 2023, the Venezuelan government and the opposition signed the “Partial Agreement on the Promotion of Political Rights and Electoral Guarantees for all Venezuelans” (Barbados Agreement), which established the commitment to hold peaceful presidential elections with international observation.<sup>6</sup>

22. Point 1 of the Barbados Agreement provides: “1) The parties recognize and respect the right of each political actor to select its candidate for the presidential elections, freely and pursuant to its internal mechanisms, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and the law.”<sup>7</sup> Despite the provisions of point 1, on January 26, the Supreme Court of Justice (SCJ) issued a series of decisions aimed at reviewing the disqualifications imposed by the Office of the Comptroller General of the Nation against opposition leaders.

23. In said decisions, the SCJ decided to maintain the ban on Henrique Capriles Radonski and María Corina Machado (who won the opposition primary elections) from holding elected office and to temporarily waive the disqualifications of Leocenis García, Richard Mardo, Pablo Pérez, Zulay Medina, Daniel Ceballos and Rosa Brandonisio de Scarano.<sup>8</sup> In the case of Henrique Capriles Radonski, the ratification of his disqualification was based on alleged administrative irregularities during his term as governor of the state of Miranda between 2011 and 2013. The SCJ argued that the request for review filed by Capriles did not meet the established requirements, thus maintaining the prohibition to hold public office.<sup>9</sup>

24. For her part, María Corina Machado was disqualified for alleged violations to administrative and fiscal regulations and for her support to international sanctions against Venezuela. Specifically, the authorities accused her of participating in a corruption scheme orchestrated by Juan Guaidó, which allegedly led to the “criminal blockade” of Venezuela and the diversion of national assets abroad.<sup>10</sup> The SCJ declared Machado's request for amparo injunction inadmissible and confirmed the disqualification that prevented her from running for public office for 15 years.<sup>11</sup>

25. These type of disqualifications are not new in Venezuela. In 2021, within the context of the elections of regional and municipal authorities, the CNE rejected 27 candidacies due to disqualifications imposed by the Office of the Comptroller General of the Republic. Said decision had a disproportionate impact on dissident political parties of the government, as is the case of the Communist Party of Venezuela, with 15

disqualifications, and the opposition parties gathered in the Democratic Unity Table (MUD), which received at least three disqualifications.<sup>12</sup>

26. The IACHR recalls that the State of Venezuela was internationally condemned in the López Mendoza case for this type of sanctions. In this regard, it reiterates that, in accordance with the American Convention on Human Rights (ACHR), no administrative body may restrict the political rights to elect and be elected through sanctions of disqualification or removal. According to Article 23.2 of the ACHR, in order to consolidate and protect a democratic order respectful of human rights, this type of sanction may only be imposed through conviction by a competent judge, within the course of criminal proceedings.<sup>13</sup>

2. Obstacles to the registration of opposing candidacies

27. From March 21 to March 26, opposition leaders reported to the public and the CNE that they could not access the automated system for nominations due to technical problems. When the deadline for the registration of candidacies arrived on March 26, the aspiring opposition candidate, Corina Yoris, could not formalize her registration on behalf of the Democratic Unity Table (MUD) due to the persistence of such problems.<sup>14</sup> Finally, the persons who were able to register as candidates were: Nicolás Maduro, for the United Socialist Party of Venezuela; Edmundo González Urrutia, for the Democratic Unity Table; Benjamin Rausseo, for the National Democratic Confederation; Luis Eduardo Martínez, for the Democratic Action Party; Enrique Márquez, for the Centrados Party; Claudio Fermín, for the Solutions for Venezuela Party; Daniel Ceballos, for the Arepa Digital Party; Antonio Ecarri, for the Alianza Lápiz Party; José Brito, for the Primero Venezuela Party; and Javier Bertucci, for the El Cambio Party.<sup>15</sup>

28. The Inter-American Commission stresses that these technical problems prevented the registration of the main candidates opposing the regime<sup>16</sup>, whereas the pro-government candidates, as well as the low-profile opposition candidates, had no obstacle whatsoever to register. This circumstance suggests a discriminatory treatment in the access to the public function and an arbitrary affectation to the electoral offer of the citizenship.<sup>17</sup>

3. Discriminatory obstacles to voting abroad

29. In June 2024, the IACHR recorded impediments for Venezuelan persons abroad to register in the electoral registry due to their migratory status. The Venezuelan Constitution provides that all persons who have reached 18 years of age and are not disqualified are eligible to vote. Meanwhile, Venezuelan consulates, following instructions of the National Electoral Council (CNE), began to demand a resident visa as the only valid proof for registration in the electoral registry,<sup>18</sup> This requirement ignored the fact that millions of Venezuelans have a non-regularized migratory status, or a status different from that of a resident visa, such as: the Temporary Protection Permit (Colombia); the Temporary Permanent Residence Permit (Peru); the Temporary Residence Visa for Venezuelan Citizens (Ecuador), and the Temporary Residence (Chile).<sup>19</sup>

30. Due to the severe human rights crisis in Venezuela, at least 7.7 million people have forcibly left the country since 2015 to safeguard their lives and the lives of their families.<sup>20</sup> Although it is not known exactly how many of these people are over 18 years of age, civil society organizations estimate that around 5.5 million Venezuelans were eligible to vote.<sup>21</sup> As a consequence, a significant number of potential voters abroad had their right to political participation affected by not being able to register in the electoral registry.<sup>22</sup>

31. The American Declaration, the American Convention and the Inter-American Democratic Charter provide that the participation of citizens in decisions related to their own development is a right, a responsibility, and a necessary condition for the full and effective exercise of democracy. For this reason, requiring millions of people abroad to present a resident visa in order to register to vote is arbitrary and seriously affects the integrity of the presidential election<sup>23</sup>.

4. Withdrawal of international electoral observation missions

32. On May 29, 2024, the Venezuelan regime revoked the invitation to the European Union to observe the development of the presidential election. This announcement was made by the President of the National Electoral Council, Elvis Amoroso<sup>24</sup>. The decision to withdraw the invitation to the European Union Electoral Observation Mission represents a clear disregard for point 4 of the Barbados Agreement.<sup>25</sup> For the Inter-American Commission, this fact corroborated the lack of commitment to what had been agreed, as well as the reluctance to international scrutiny in electoral matters.

5. Arbitrary arrests and intimidation of opponents or perceived opponents prior to the July 28 election

33. In the months leading up to the 2024 elections, the Venezuelan government intensified repression against individuals in the opposition or perceived as such, using security forces to silence critical voices and neutralize electoral campaigns. This pattern included arbitrary arrests and harassment of at least 50 opponents, as well as human rights defenders and social leaders. The actions evidence a pattern of persecution against Vente Venezuela, the campaign unit of María Corina Machado, who supported the candidate Edmundo González Urrutia. The arrests were conducted in different locations and without due process, and involved different state security forces, as well as unidentified individuals. These acts reflected an effort to control the political landscape and dismantle the organizational capacity and expression of the opposition in Venezuela.<sup>26</sup>

34. In general, arbitrary detentions prior to the July 28 election took place in public spaces, homes, workplaces and at the airport. The main perpetrators were the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN), the General Directorate of Military Counterintelligence (DGCIM), and the Bolivarian National Police (PNB), through the Directorate of Strategic and Tactical Actions (DAET). In some cases, unidentified persons in unmarked vans or motorcycles were also involved. In several of the arrests, State agents took people out of their vehicles while pointing guns at them and then placed them in official vehicles.<sup>27</sup>

35. It should be noted that, during the pre-electoral period, repression was not only directed against opponents, but also against human rights defenders and journalists. One of the most emblematic cases was that of Rocío San Miguel, who was detained while trying to board a flight at Maiquetia International Airport. As reported to this Commission, her whereabouts remained unknown for more than 48 hours, which constituted a short-term forced disappearance. Afterwards, the defender was accused of treason, terrorism and conspiracy. Several of Rocío San Miguel's family members were also detained, including her daughter Miranda Díaz San Miguel, her brothers Miguel Ángel San Miguel Sosa and Alberto San Miguel, her daughter's father Víctor Díaz Paruta, as well as the defender's ex-husband Alejandro González.<sup>28</sup> Rocío San Miguel is beneficiary of precautionary measures by IACHR.<sup>29</sup>

36. In the case of members of Vente Venezuela, the arbitrary detentions of 2024 began on January 23, when Luis Camacaro, Juan Freitas and Guillermo López, coordinators in the states of Trujillo, Yaracuy and Vargas, were arrested simultaneously by officials of the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN). These arrests were carried out without warrants and without informing their families of their whereabouts, resulting in brief reports of forced disappearance and lack of due process.<sup>30</sup> This operation, conducted in a coordinated manner in different states, reflects the planned strategy of the security services to intimidate the opposition.

37. On March 8, 2024, Emil Brandt Ulloa, director of María Corina Machado's campaign staff in Barinas, was also arrested by SEBIN under charges of "conspiracy, association, gender (physical) violence and insulting an official". His arrest took place just days after a visit of Machado to the region, suggesting a clear intention to intimidate those supporting his candidacy.<sup>31</sup> Shortly thereafter, on March 20, Henry Alviárez and Dignora Hernández, both members of the organization and campaign team of Vente Venezuela, were arrested in Caracas under charges of conspiring against President Maduro and seeking to destabilize the country.<sup>32</sup>

38. Arrests continued in April and June, affecting both social leaders and campaign members. On April 28, Víctor Castillo, head of the Comando con Venezuela, together with Ámbar Márquez and Óscar Castañeda, Machado's supporters, were arrested after the opposition leader's visit to the municipality of Santa Rosalía, in the region of Portuguesa<sup>33</sup>. On June 14, Julian Iriarte, a member of the Comando con Venezuela in Vargas state, was arrested under charges of incitement to hatred and association to commit crimes<sup>34</sup>. June 17 in Caracas, indicating a persecution also aimed at controlling public speech and silencing critical voices.<sup>35</sup>

39. In July 2024, the leaders of the Vente Venezuela party in Guanare, Portuguesa state, Mary Rodríguez and Mayra Montilla, were detained by Venezuelan state security forces. In the early morning of July 14, their homes in the El Progreso neighborhood were raided without a warrant by officials of the DGCIM, the Bolivarian National Police (PNB), the State Police and the Bolivarian National Guard (GNB). Subsequently, the Public Ministry charged them with conspiracy, association to commit a criminal offense and obstruction of public roads, crimes which could carry sentences of up to 30 years' imprisonment.<sup>36</sup>

40. In addition to the above, the opposition complained that at least ten commercial premises used for meetings of opposition campaigns were closed, while several opposition delegations were repeatedly detained in roadblocks. Also, opposition leaders denounced the lack of spaces in public radio and television for non-government candidates<sup>37</sup>. A prominent case occurred in June, when a restaurant in Corozopando, Guárico State, was closed after the visit of opposition leader María Corina Machado<sup>38</sup>. Likewise, the following month, the restaurant Asados Taguanes, located in the state of Cojedes, was also closed by the National Integrated Customs and Tax Administration Service (SENIAT) after the visit of the opposition candidate Edmundo González and his family<sup>39</sup>.

41. The arbitrary arrests of opposition leaders or those perceived as such, as well as human rights defenders and social leaders prior to the election, evidenced a systematic pattern of political persecution in the country. The government's actions sought to silence critical voices, dismantle organized opposition and maintain absolute control over the political and social landscape. The omission of judicial proceedings, the secrecy surrounding the situation of detained persons and the intimidation of their families, in particular, underline a deliberate, planned and coordinated character of different institutions.

42. Added to the above are the threats issued by the highest authorities of the State in the event of an eventual defeat. Indeed, on July 17, during a campaign rally, Nicolás Maduro warned of a "bloodbath and a civil war in the country" should the opposition attain an electoral victory.<sup>40</sup>

43. In conclusion, the Inter-American Commission highlights the implementation of a systematic pattern of political persecution and repression in Venezuela in the months leading up to the 2024 elections. The arbitrary arrests of opposition leaders, human rights defenders, and opposition supporters, along with the use of state security forces to silence critics and hinder political activities, constitute an abuse of power. These actions undermine basic principles of the rule of law and democracy, and violate the civil and political rights of Venezuelan citizens.

addition, the instrumentalization of the Judiciary and the Electoral Power was observed to prevent the results announced by the National Electoral Council (CNE) from being challenged through legal remedies. This set of factors, added to the censorship actions against the media and critical voices after the presidential elections, contributed to the consolidation of an information siege that favored the official narrative on the electoral results. This section addresses three key aspects: the July 28 presidential election, the opposition's claim of possible electoral fraud, and the legal remedies filed in response to the controversy over the results.

1. July 28 presidential election, announcement of election results by the CNE and electoral fraud allegations

45. The presidential election was held on July 28. According to the “UN Panel of Experts for the Venezuelan Presidential Election of July 28”, the day of the electoral contest took place in a predominantly peaceful environment and with a good logistical organization. The CNE reported a turnout of 59.97% of the total electoral roll, i.e. 45.74% more than during the 2018 presidential election.<sup>41</sup> The Inter-American Commission notes the broad participation of citizens despite the regime's efforts to dismantle the opposition and prevent the main opposition candidate, María Corina Machado, from running as a candidate.

46. Venezuela has an electronic voting system that issues two physical proofs of support: an official record that gathers the votes from each voting table; and a voucher that each person who actually voted receives. According to the United Nations/Carter Center panel,<sup>42</sup> institutions with a presence on the ground during the election, such a system is secure and reliable.<sup>43</sup> In the words of The Carter Center: “The electronic voting system is excellent.”<sup>44</sup>

47. In this context, the IACHR received reports of restrictions on the verification of results in several voting centers, as well as the denial of access to candidate Gonzalez's witnesses at the CNE headquarters. In addition, although initially the electronic transmission of results functioned normally, it was suddenly suspended without clear explanation in the hours following the closing of the polling stations.<sup>45</sup>

48. For his part, the President of the CNE, Elvis Amoroso, announced on television that there was a “terrorist cyber-attack” which had affected the transmission of votes. According to the UN Mission, the CNE itself cancelled three audits that could have determined the veracity of the alleged cyber-attack.<sup>46</sup> The Attorney General of the Nation, Tarek William Saab, announced that the cyber-attack was executed from North Macedonia and was aimed at altering the results of the election. However, Saab clarified that the results had not been altered but slowed down, and held Lester Toledo, Leopoldo López and María Corina Machado responsible for the fact.<sup>47</sup> In response to these statements, North Macedonia informed that the Venezuelan authorities had neither requested nor provided information on the facts in order to exercise the corresponding controls.<sup>48</sup>

49. On July 28, near midnight, Elvis Amoroso, without the presence of the other CNE rectors, announced that President Nicolás Maduro had won the election with 5,150,092 votes, that is, 51.2% of the total votes; followed by Edmundo González, with 4,445,978 votes, equivalent to 44.2%. Amoroso stated that these results reflected the votes transmitted from 80% of the voting tables and that they were irreversible, although mathematically they could be reversed with the non-transmitted votes. Subsequently, on August 2, the CNE confirmed, with the supposedly transmitted results of 96.97% of the polling stations, that President Maduro had won the election with 51.95% (6,408,844 votes), while Edmundo Gonzalez obtained 43.18% (5,326,104 votes).<sup>49</sup>

50. The announcements made by the CNE were not supported by infographics or data broken down by polling station, city or state, as required by Venezuelan electoral regulations<sup>50</sup>. Following the announcement of the results by the president of the CNE, access to the CNE website was restricted, and according to technical analysis, the page is not accessible from some networks or outside Venezuela<sup>51</sup>. As of the date of this report, the CNE has still not published the voting tally sheets, nor allowed their scrutiny by table, despite the fact that they are in the custody of the State.

51. The UN Panel concluded that “the CNE's results management process did not comply with the basic measures of transparency and integrity that are essential for credible elections. It did not follow national legal and regulatory provisions, and not all stipulated deadlines were met. In the Panel's experience, the announcement of an election result without publication of its details or delivery of tabulated results to candidates is unprecedented in contemporary democratic elections. This had a negative impact on the confidence in the result announced by the CNE among a large portion of the Venezuelan electorate.”<sup>52</sup>

52. The Carter Center concluded that the July 28 presidential election “did not comply with international parameters and standards of electoral integrity and cannot be considered democratic (...) The fact that the electoral authority had failed to announce results broken down per polling station constitutes a serious violation of electoral principles.”<sup>53</sup>

2. Opposition strategy in view of a possible electoral fraud

53. On the day of the election, the opposition in Venezuela collected 83.5% of the tally sheets nationwide, claiming their authenticity because they had the corresponding seals, signatures and security codes. The totalization of these tally sheets shows that Edmundo Gonzalez Urrutia won the election<sup>54</sup>. In addition, the opposition compiled and centralized the tally sheets in an independent and verifiable database (“resultadosconvzla.com”) of the actual results obtained at each polling station<sup>55</sup>. When comparing these data with the official results, the opposition pointed out inconsistencies and possible manipulations that might be evidence of electoral fraud.

54. This strategy allowed the opposition to present to the Venezuelan citizenry and the international community concrete evidence questioning the legitimacy of the process, strengthening its allegations of possible fraud and reinforcing the call for an impartial review of the results.

55. In the days following the election, the “resultadosconvzla.com” portal was blocked. In addition, as announced by the Attorney General, those responsible for the publication and maintenance of said portal are being criminally investigated for the crimes of usurpation of functions, falsification of public documents, incitement to disobedience of laws, computer crimes, association and conspiracy<sup>56</sup>. The IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship warned that the information contained therein is of great public interest and requires enhanced protection, given its relevance for transparency and accountability.<sup>57</sup>

56. The announcement of the results without the publication of the supporting tally sheets, together with the reluctance to allow audits to verify the veracity of the alleged cyber-attack, generated distrust among the citizenry in the results announced by the CNE and gave rise to numerous complaints of electoral fraud at the national and international level. The Inter-American Commission timely called to ensure the protection of electoral information through the publication of the totality of the voting records; to allow its independent scrutiny and to respect the popular will expressed in the vote, pursuant to human rights standards.<sup>58</sup>

3. Legal remedies filed following the results controversy

57. In view of the electoral opacity and the serious allegations of electoral fraud raised by the opposition, the international missions invited to the field and the international community, on July 31 Nicolás Maduro filed a contentious electoral appeal before the Supreme Court of Justice (SCJ).<sup>59</sup> On August 22, 2024, the Electoral Chamber published in social networks only the resolute part of the decision on said appeal, validating the announcement of the National Electoral Council (CNE).<sup>60</sup> Likewise, it held that the decision was final and, therefore, not subject to appeal. The IACHR notes that, as of the date of preparation of this report, the SCJ has not published the grounds for the decision, which constitutes a serious omission in its duty to give reasons for its judgments.

58. Contrary to the SCJ's announcement on social networks, civil society organizations argued that the ruling is subject to a review remedy.<sup>61</sup> In fact, two such appeals were filed before the Constitutional Chamber: one by former candidate Enrique Márquez and another by former presidential candidate, Antonio Ecarri. Both appeals were rejected by the Constitutional Chamber of the SCJ.<sup>62</sup>

59. Civil society organizations denounced several irregularities related to the contentious electoral appeal filed by Nicolás Maduro and the decision of the SCJ. In the first place, they questioned the nature of the remedy. The CNE defines the contentious electoral remedy as “a brief, summary and effective means to challenge the acts, actions and omissions of the National Electoral Council (CNE) and to reestablish the subjective legal situations injured by it, in relation to the constitution, operation and cancellation of organizations with political purposes”. This implies that the recourse is intended to challenge, not to certify, an action of the CNE.<sup>63</sup>

60. Secondly, questions were raised regarding the procedural legitimacy of the appeal filed. After having been declared the winner, Nicolás Maduro did not have procedural legitimacy to file the remedy, and therefore, it should not have been admitted. Such legitimacy would have corresponded to any party that considered that the CNE's actions affected its rights. In addition to the foregoing, Nicolás Maduro filed the contentious electoral appeal together with his attorney Reinaldo Muñoz, who has been proposed as candidate for Attorney General of the Republic. For this reason, he should not have acted as legal representative of the President of the Republic or of a presidential candidate in this context.<sup>64</sup>

61. Third, civil society organizations claim that the SCJ would have assumed electoral functions by declaring Nicolás Maduro as President before the CNE completed the process of totalization, awarding and proclamation of the winner. According to the regulations, the law grants up to 30 consecutive days, counted from the day following the election, to publish the totality of the itemized results and to perform the corresponding audits. However, the SCJ certified the victory of Nicolás Maduro with partial results, before the CNE complied with this mandate.<sup>65</sup>

C. Stage III: State terrorism practices

62. The third stage documented human rights violations and State terrorism practices aimed at instilling fear and repressing social protests in order to consolidate the regime's power, following allegations of electoral fraud. In this section, the following repressive patterns are developed: arbitrary use of force and loss of human lives; arbitrary detentions in the context of manifestations; cancellation of passports and other acts of harassment.

63. Serious allegations of irregularities and electoral fraud led to nearly 300 massive and spontaneous protests throughout the country that mobilized different social sectors, particularly in low-income neighborhoods. In response, the regime implemented state terrorism practices to instill terror in the population, defuse the protests and silence the non-conformist citizens. Among the main perpetrators are the state security forces and non-state armed groups aligned with the government, known as “colectivos” (collectives),<sup>66</sup> that are legally incorporated in the “People's System of Protection for Peace.”<sup>67</sup>

64. The repression reflected patterns already observed by the IACHR in the 2014 and 2017 protests, such as the arbitrary use of force, resulting in loss of life and injuries; arbitrary detentions and short-term forced disappearances; judicial persecution and harassment against persons perceived as opponents and electoral observers; censorship and restrictions on the freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly. Additionally, new and serious repressive patterns aimed at intimidation were observed, such as the abrupt and arbitrary cancellation of passports of human rights defenders and journalists, as well as their families. The purpose of this was to prevent them from leaving the country, in serious violation of their right to freedom of movement.<sup>68</sup>

65. A distinctive feature of this repressive peak is that the highest authorities of the regime and the security forces contributed to fuel the climate of terror with their statements and publications in social networks. As previously noted, on July 17, during a proselytizing act, Nicolás Maduro warned of a “bloodbath and a civil war in the country” if the opposition were to achieve an electoral victory.<sup>69</sup> On August 5, also in a public act, President Nicolás Maduro made reference to “Operation Tun Tun” (Operation Knock-Knock), whose name refers to the knocking on the doors of the residences of people suspected of having participated in the protests, by security forces, for their location and detention. In this context, the President sang a traditional Christmas melody with the lyrics “no seas llorón, vas pa' Tocarón” (Don't be a cry-baby, you're going to Tocarón), in reference to a penitentiary center located in the state of Aragua.<sup>70</sup>

66. On August 7, then Deputy Diosdado Cabello, who would later be appointed Minister of the Interior, said during a television program that, within the context of “Operation Tun Tun,”<sup>71</sup> journalists who published information on the electoral controversy would be arrested. On August 8, the DGCIM published on its social networks a video referring to said operation.<sup>72</sup>

67. Generally, in autocratic regimes such as Venezuela's, the process of adopting security measures does not follow pre-established procedures, nor is it communicated through official channels, but rather by direct messages from high-level authorities through interviews or announcements on social networks, among others. The IACHR considers that the threats made by the highest authorities, together with the serious, systematic and widespread human rights violations registered after the election, evidence the intention to instill terror among citizens through the articulation of the different powers of the State and the use of public resources.<sup>73</sup>

<sup>72</sup> Although the international media reported on the magnitude of “Operation Tun Tun”, the Inter-American Commission does not have sufficient evidence to determine whether the entire State repression was part of a specific operation, according to the official narrative of the highest authorities, or whether different security operations were coordinated.

68. In various judgments of the Inter-American system, it has been concluded that States engage in terrorist practices when they execute policies of human rights violations, making a perverse use of state resources to generate fear in the population, especially in political opponents.<sup>74</sup> Historically, in the region, these practices have been carried out directly by States or by non-State groups with the acquiescence, tolerance or collaboration of States<sup>75</sup>; including forced disappearances and extrajudicial executions.<sup>76</sup> These practices enjoy impunity, since there is no recourse for protection, due to the fact that the control agencies respond to the regime and are part of the repressive strategy of the State. Taking into account these elements of analysis, it is reaffirmed that the practices of the Venezuelan State during 2024 crossed the necessary threshold to be qualified as State terrorism practices.

1. Arbitrary use of force and loss of human lives

69. Between July 28 and July 30, there were serious allegations of abuse of public force against the protests. The violence resulted in the deaths of at least 25 people, all men between the ages of 15 and 56.<sup>77</sup> The names of the deceased persons registered by the IACHR, mostly as a consequence of the arbitrary use of force by the State or paramilitary groups are: Isaías Jacob Fuenmayor González (15); Ángel David Mora Masculino (17); Jeison Gabriel España Guillén Masculino (18); Anthony Enrique Cañizales Gareta (19); Luis Eduardo Roberto Hernández (19); Jhon Alejandro Graterol Mendoza (19); Anthony David Moya Mantia (20); Jesús Gregorio Tovar Perdomo (21); Dorian Rair Rondón (22); Jeison Javier Bracho Martínez (22); Olinger Johan Montaña López (23) Euris Junior José Mendoza Royé (24) José Antonio Torrents Blanca; and (26) Aníbal José Romero Salazar; Carlos Oscar Porras (26); Gustavo Rojas (29); Walter Páez Lucena (29); Rancés Daniel Yzarra Bolívar (30) Gabriel Ramos (33); Víctor Alfonzo Bustos (34); Yorgenis Emiliano Leyva Méndez (35); Andrés Alfonso Ramírez Castillo (36); Julio Valerio García (40); Edgar Alexander Aristeguieta (42); and Jesús Ramón Medina Perdomo (56).<sup>78</sup>

70. According to public information, 10 of the deaths were attributed to state forces. Of these, eight were military forces and two were police. Six of the deaths could be attributed to the “colectivos”, which act with the consent, tolerance or acquiescence of the State, and are even legally incorporated in the “People’s System of Protection for Peace.”<sup>79</sup> Two of the cases could be attributed to mixed actions between state forces and non-state groups. In the other cases, there is no information on the profile of the alleged perpetrators.<sup>80</sup>

71. With regard to the causes of death, the documentary and testimonial information leads to the conclusion that all the victims were killed by firearms: seven were shot in the neck, five in the thorax, four in the head, three in the back, two in the abdomen, and three in other parts of the body<sup>81</sup>. The trajectory of the projectiles leads to the conclusion that the weapons were fired with intent to kill.

72. In periods of high conflict in previous years, such as those of 2014 or 2017, the protests were led by middle class and upper middle class people, and took place, mostly, in central avenues or commercial or affluent neighborhoods. The protests registered on July 28, 29 and 30 took place mainly in low-income neighborhoods and were led by young men living in poverty.<sup>82</sup> Information documented by the International Independent Mission shows that several of the people who died during these days worked as laborers, motorcycle taxi drivers, barbers and small merchants.<sup>83</sup> On the other hand, the eight fatal incidents in Caracas occurred in outlying parishes such as El Valle, Sucre, San Juan, Antímano and Macarao.<sup>84</sup> This change in the profile of place and protesters could suggest that the regime has lost support in social bases where it traditionally had support.

73. On August 19, Tarek William Saab, Attorney General of the Nation, announced during an interview that María Corina Machado and Edmundo González Urrutia would be summoned “at any moment”, as they could be “held responsible as intellectual authors of all these events”, referring to the deaths of July 28, 29 and 30. On August 21, Saab reported that all the deaths were attributable to “instrumentalized criminal groups, wrongly called ‘comanditos’”, and added that the Public Ministry had no reports on excessive use of force.<sup>85</sup> At the 57th session of the United Nations Human Rights Council, the Venezuelan ambassador held that the fascist right wing was responsible for the deaths.<sup>86</sup>

74. The IACHR has been able to verify that the State's response was characterized by the excessive and disproportionate use of force, in many cases, including lethal force by the “collective” groups, legally incorporated in the “People’s System of Protection for Peace.”<sup>87</sup> This could be cross-checked with the information received through public hearings, meetings with social organizations and individual testimonies. In this regard, the Commission reiterates that the protocols on the use of public force must respond to the criteria of legality, necessity and proportionality. In complex scenarios, the actions of the authorities should not be indiscriminate, but should be able to identify the violent actors and to distinguish them from those exercising the legitimate right to protest.

75. By the date of preparation of this report, the authorities have not published information on the context in which the deaths occurred, the progress in the investigations or the evidence that would allow holding opposition leaders responsible for the events. The lack of a diligent investigation of these events corroborates the lack of independence of the Public Ministry, as well as the instrumentalization of the collective groups.

2. Arbitrary arrests in the context of protests

76. After the first protests on July 28, the regime launched a series of neighborhood raids to massively and indiscriminately arrest people. Although most of the arrests took place during the manifestations at the assembly points, there were also arrests of people who were not participating in the events and in isolated places.<sup>88</sup>

77. Between July 28 and August 24, civil society organizations recorded 1,542 arrests, including women and adolescents, as well as people with disabilities, indigenous people, as well as journalists and press workers.<sup>89</sup> The Commission notes that, in an unusual development, the number documented by the social organizations was lower than that announced by President Nicolás Maduro, who said on August 6 that the number of people detained had risen to 2,229.<sup>90</sup>

78. In this context, President Maduro made public statements prejudging and stigmatizing the protesters. Among these are: “with the capacity of response and reaction of the civic-military-police union we resolved, with the Constitution and in peace, the fascist outbreak”; or “this time there will be no pardon, this time what there will be is Tocarón”, referring to a prison in Aragua State.<sup>91</sup>

79. Testimonies gathered by this Commission, as well as by the Independent International Mission, show that all of the arrests occurred without arrest warrants and without informing family members of the place of detention. Many of the detentions were perpetrated following anonymous complaints through applications such as VenApp. This application, created by the government to report failures in public services, was enabled to denounce people suspected of participating in the protests.<sup>92</sup>

80. The detention of children and adolescents in the context of demonstrations is extremely worrying. According to information provided by the organization Foro Penal (Criminal Forum), after the presidential elections in Venezuela, at least 158 adolescents were arbitrarily and indiscriminately detained. At the time of writing this report, six adolescents, i.e., persons under 18 years of age, continue to be deprived of their liberty.

81. As revealed by the civil society, in many cases, the adolescents were pre-classified by the authorities as terrorists and deprived of liberty in the same cells as adults; and in some cases without separation by gender. In addition, all these persons were imposed an official public defender, denying them the possibility of having a trusted attorney, and several of them were presented virtually before courts on terrorism matters, without the presence of their relatives, guardians or responsible adults.<sup>93</sup>

82. The IACHR condemns cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment of adolescents deprived of their liberty. Such is the case of a pregnant teenager who was subjected to gender-based violence while in State custody. Agents insinuated to her that they would make her have an abortion so that she would not have terrorist children.<sup>94</sup> In addition, she was forced to perform physical exercises and to place herself in uncomfortable and humiliating positions. There is also a recorded case of a child on the autism spectrum who continues to be deprived of liberty without seeing his family or receiving medical attention. Another case of particular concern is that of a child who reported having been beaten while in detention and who, as a result, suffered facial paralysis.<sup>95</sup>

83. The mothers of several of the adolescents deprived of their liberty have denounced that the authorities are allegedly using torture and ill-treatment to force the adolescents to confess to crimes they did not commit. According to testimonies gathered, State agents have beaten them to force them to record videos declaring that they participated in the demonstrations in exchange for money. They also reported that their children were threatened with disproportionate sentences if they refused to admit their participation in violent acts. Some mothers have publicly expressed their helplessness over calls for their children to be removed from detention centers. The media have documented that several of the youths show severe depression and traces of beatings; that they are confined in cells with latrines overflowing with sewage and are forced to perform their physiological needs in public.<sup>96</sup>

84. On this matter, the IACHR recalls that, in accordance with the State's international obligations, all procedural acts resulting from torture and cruel treatment, or any type of coercion capable of breaking a person's will, must be annulled.<sup>97</sup>

85. In general, the people arrested following serious allegations of electoral fraud, including political leaders such as María Oropéza,<sup>98</sup> Williams Dávila,<sup>99</sup> Freddy Superlano<sup>100</sup> and Biagio Pilieri,<sup>101</sup> are being subjected to criminal proceedings for ambiguously and broadly worded offenses which, in addition to having excessively high penalties, conflict with the exercise of freedom of expression and seek to generate a paralyzing effect due to fear of prosecution. The charges brought by the Public Ministry include the crimes of incitement to hatred, terrorism, conspiracy, treason, association to commit crimes, resistance to authority, obstruction of streets or roads and disobedience of the laws.

86. In the criminal proceedings that followed the arrests, numerous human rights violations were reported, particularly of fair trial guarantees. These violations include the imposition of public defenders, thus denying access to a reliable technical defense; and the violation of the right to be tried by a natural judge in the case of adolescents who are brought before courts with anti-terrorism jurisdiction.<sup>102</sup> Likewise, civil society organizations reported other violations, such as the refusal to provide interpretation in the case of indigenous persons deprived of liberty, and the absence of reasonable accommodations for persons with disabilities in criminal proceedings and in prisons.<sup>103</sup>

3. Passport cancellations and other acts of harassment

87. In the context of the post-electoral repression, new and old patterns of repression were observed. Among the new patterns are the abrupt, arbitrary, and unmotivated cancellation of passports. At least 40 human rights defenders, social leaders, journalists, and their families have been victims of this practice aimed at limiting freedom of movement and instilling terror. In some cases, passports were confiscated by the authorities at the Simón Bolívar International Airport in Maiquetía while people were trying to travel abroad. In other cases, people found out about the cancellation of their passports by consulting the web page of the Administrative Service of Identification, Migration and Foreigners (SAIME).<sup>104</sup> Another unusual pattern observed was the persecution of poll watchers and election observers. According to press reports, at least five of these persons have had to move to Colombia due to death threats.<sup>105</sup> The Commission considers that these patterns respond to a retaliation for the activity of defense and promotion of human rights and democracy.

On the other hand, in the context of the post-electoral repression, old intimidating practices were registered, such as the marking of houses of opponents or those perceived as such with an “X”.<sup>106</sup> In 2020, the Inter-American Commission also documented the marking of houses with the legend “furia bolivariana” (Bolivarian fury).<sup>107</sup>

89. In the context of political persecution, several opposition leaders sought protection in the residence of the Argentine ambassador in Caracas. Among them are Pedro Urruchurtu, international affairs coordinator; Claudia Mancero, communications coordinator; Omar Gonzalez, political secretary; Magalli Meda, strategic planning coordinator; and Humberto Villalobos, electoral coordinator. On September 6, the official residence of the Embassy of Argentina in Caracas (under the custody of the Brazilian State since August 1)<sup>108</sup> was harassed by State agents. At least 20 armed public officials intervened at the site and proceeded to cut off the electricity supply and suspend the entry of food for at least 24 hours.<sup>109</sup> A similar situation occurred on November 24. State security agents closed streets and surrounded the residence of the Argentine ambassador in Caracas in an act of intimidation.<sup>110</sup>

D. Situation of the freedom of expression

90. The IACHR and its Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE) continued to document severe restrictions on freedom of expression in Venezuela, especially in matters critical of the government. The practice of journalism faces significant obstacles due to fear of violence, harassment and the possible criminalization of reporting. Human rights organizations are also affected by legislative reforms that threaten their funding and independence. The application of criminal legislation, including anti-terrorism laws, continues to be applied for alleged purposes of silencing dissident or critical voices.

91. In 2024, the IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship have warned about the persecution and repression of opponents, political leaders, electoral witnesses, activists, human rights defenders, journalists and the media, in the context of the July 28 presidential elections. In addition to this, there are reports of a lack of state transparency, especially in electoral matters, as well as the expansion of “zones of silence”, where journalistic coverage of issues of public interest is practically non-existent. These factors constitute an adverse environment for the exercise of fundamental rights in the country, especially affecting freedom of expression, freedom of association, peaceful assembly and political participation.

1. Criminalization of journalists and use of criminal law for silencing purposes

92. In 2024, the activation of judicial processes and criminal sanctions against journalists in Venezuela was documented, especially in the electoral context. Arrests and criminal proceedings were reportedly conducted under the “Law Against Hate”, without judicial guarantees and with severe restrictions on the right to defense. Common charges include terrorism, incitement to hatred, public instigation, illegal association, disturbance of public order and obstruction of the public roads, with allegations of manipulation of evidence by the authorities. In addition, difficulties have been reported for the families of detained journalists, such as lack of information on their whereabouts, excessive requirements for visits and extortion by officials. Families of journalists accused of terrorism face obstacles to travel to the Caracas metropolitan area, where the specialized courts are located.<sup>111</sup>

93. In the first months of the year, the Attorney General reportedly issued arrest warrants against journalist Sebastiana Barráez, lawyer and human rights defender Tamara Suju, the president of Venezuelans Persecuted in Political Exile (Veppex), José Antonio Colina, and youtubers Wender Villalobos and Norbey Marín, who were accused of serious crimes<sup>112</sup>. In particular, Barráez, Suju, Colina, Villalobos, Marín and Mario Carratú Molina were allegedly charged with “attempted intentional homicide,” “terrorism” and “association”. These charges were related to the “white armband case”, which allegedly sought to perpetrate terrorist acts, including the kidnapping of the governor of Táchira, and the assassination of the President of the Republic.<sup>113</sup> Sebastiana Barráez, a journalist, denied the link made by the Attorney General's Office through her social networks.

94. For their part, the National College of Journalists (CNP) and various civil society organizations have described the criminalization of journalist María Sebastiana Barráez Pérez as a serious attack on freedom of expression and due process.<sup>114</sup> They have also warned the international community about the Venezuelan state's attempts to silence communicators, especially during an election year.<sup>115</sup>

95. In addition, the Attorney General reportedly ordered the arrest of Voz Media journalist Orlando Avendaño on charges of “incitement” to hatred.<sup>116</sup> The Prosecutor's Office claimed that the journalist subverted the order with a publication on X (Twitter).<sup>117</sup> According to public reports, agents of the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN) raided his home in Valencia and confiscated electronic equipment.<sup>118</sup> In this regard, journalist Avendaño denied having called for insurrection and denied receiving funds from a political organization, stressing that “the only thing I have done, as a journalist, is to exercise my freedom of expression.”<sup>119</sup> Subsequent to these events, the President allegedly harassed and threatened journalist Avendaño on television after a publication on his social network X (formerly Twitter) about women who harassed opposition leader María Corina Machado.<sup>120</sup>

96. On March 31, journalist and youtuber Óscar Alejandro Pérez was arrested at the National Airport of Maiquetía.<sup>121</sup> After his arrest, his relatives reported that he was accused of activities related to “terrorism”. Public reports state that the journalist was taken to the Anti-Terrorism Division of the Scientific, Penal and Criminal Investigations Corps (CICPC) in Caracas and released the following day.<sup>122</sup>

97. During the last year, reports were also received regarding the detention of journalist Carlos Julio Rojas on April 15. According to public reports, while he was with his wife, unknown individuals kidnapped expression, as it is journalists and media outlets that keep society informed about matters of public interest and contribute to the existence of a broad, robust, and plural public debate.<sup>160</sup> For this reason, states have the obligation to create the conditions for journalists to perform their duty freely, independently, and safely.<sup>161</sup>

2. Harassment and aggressions against the press and obstructions to press coverage

109. According to public information, national and foreign journalists face a climate of hostility and repression characterized by threats, physical assaults, censorship and restrictions on access to information.<sup>162</sup> Thus, for example, on February 15, René Herrera, a journalist from Revista del Tuy, reported that workers from the State Railways Institute prevented his coverage at the Libertador Simón Bolívar station (La Rinconada) by denying him access to verify reports of irregularities; and that he was searched by officials of the Bolivarian National Police.<sup>163</sup>

110. Likewise, Luis López, a journalist from the regional media outlet La Verdad de Vargas, reported on January 24 about the presence of police officers near his home in the Carlos Soublette parish, Vargas state. In a video released on social media, López expressed his concern and stated that he was doing his job and that he has "nothing to hide."<sup>164</sup> Additionally, he reported that SEBIN officials took photographs of his house from a motorcycle and a truck.<sup>165</sup>

111. On January 17, officials from state security agencies reportedly forced Gerson Cuevas, a journalist from the YouTube channel Televisora Cultural Barinesa, and Neptalí Querales, a photojournalist from the newspaper La Noticia de Barinas, to hand over their phones. According to public reports, they had deleted the audiovisual content related to a police operation at the headquarters of the National Federation of Trade Unions and Colleges of Education Workers of Venezuela (Fenatev), where Professor Víctor Venegas was detained.<sup>166</sup>

112. During the electoral day of July 28, 2024, civil society organizations documented at least 15 cases and 16 complaints of violations of the right to freedom of expression. In particular, they recorded instances where journalists were denied access to polling stations despite having accreditation from the National Electoral Council (CNE).<sup>167</sup> Among the affected individuals were nine journalists, four media outlets, two private individuals, two photojournalists, and one cameraman.<sup>168</sup>

113. After the July 28 elections, the IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship warned about the escalation of repression against journalists and media in Venezuela. The main aggressions against the press included: raids, media closures, confiscation of equipment, cancellation of passports, deportation of international journalists, unjustified dismissals, threats and censorship, which has generated a climate of fear among media professionals, who have been forced to restrict their informative activity.<sup>169</sup> At the local level, the Commission and the Office of the Special Rapporteur received reports of threats of criminalization by mayors, governors and “collectives”.<sup>170</sup> There have also been reports of the circulation of pamphlets and lists containing personal information of journalists and members of polling stations to facilitate their detention.<sup>171</sup>

114. In particular, in 2024 a concerning pattern was observed in the detention and expulsion of international correspondents in Venezuela, as well as the prohibition of their entry into the country. Such was the case of Colombian journalists Carolina Trinidad and Vanessa de la Torre, of Radio Caracol, on July 28, who were reportedly deported from the Maiquetía airport.<sup>172</sup>

115. On August 1, Chilean journalists Iván Núñez and José Luis Tapia were reportedly detained and held incommunicado at the military post of Chururú (Barinas) after entering the country from Cúcuta, Colombia.<sup>173</sup> Similar events occurred on August 2 with Spanish journalist Álvaro Nieto, director of The Objective, who was reportedly expelled after a two-hour interrogation<sup>174</sup> and on August 3, Ecuadorian journalist Dayana Krays.<sup>175</sup> Likewise, there were reports of the arrest and expulsion of Italian journalist Marco Bariletti.<sup>176</sup>

116. There were also reports of the deportation of Argentine journalist Jorge Pizarro. The Association of Argentine Journalistic Entities (ADEPA) strongly rejected his detention and possible deportation.<sup>177</sup> Italian journalist Barbara Schiavulli claimed that a group of international reporters were denied visas two days before their trip, preventing them from covering the presidential elections.<sup>178</sup>

117. The Commission and RELE were informed about the detention and expulsion of the reporter of the Spanish media Ok Diario, Cake Minuesa, during the July 28 elections. Minuesa, who allegedly described the result announced by the CNE as “fraud”, was arrested by officials of the Directorate of Military Counterintelligence (DGCIM). According to Ok Diario, he was transferred to Bogotá on July 29 to be deported to Spain. According to public reports, the journalist was released after the efforts of the Spanish Foreign Ministry and the Spanish Embassy in Caracas.<sup>179</sup>

118. In the post-electoral period, the dismissal of at least 100 workers of the public channel Venezolana de Televisión was also reported, after the review of their status and content in the instant messaging application WhatsApp, which contained messages against the government. According to publicly available information, the human resources office of the channel would be monitoring the workers' publications.<sup>180</sup>

119. In this regard, it is recalled that intimidation and threats against social communicators severely restrict freedom of expression, and that it is the State's duty to prevent and investigate these events.<sup>181</sup> The Commission and its Special Rapporteurship have held that attacks against journalists and the media are aimed at silencing them, thus not only violating the individual right of reporters to express and disseminate their ideas, opinions and information, but also affecting the right of a society to freely access information.<sup>182</sup> An independent and critical press is a fundamental element for the validity of the other freedoms that make up the democratic system and the rule of law.<sup>183</sup>

120. In addition, there are reports of stigmatizing statements against journalists and independent media. Public officials, both at the national and local levels, frequently brand them as “coup perpetrators”, “accomplices” and “financed terrorists”.<sup>184</sup> Thus, for example, on March 25, the President criticized the news agencies EFE (Spain), AFP (France) and AP (USA) for not covering any of the more than 10 candidates nominated. In this regard, he held “the agencies of the West, the United States, Europe and the right wing have no morals. They cover up the reality of Venezuela”.<sup>185</sup> Likewise, he allegedly disqualified other news agencies such as CNN en Español, accusing it of trying to “smear the electoral process”.<sup>186</sup> According to public reports, these statements reflect recurring behavior during his campaign.<sup>187</sup>

121. The IACHR and its Rapporteurship for Freedom of Expression reaffirm that public authorities are required to maintain a narrative conducive to public deliberation and freedom of expression. In this sense, they have the duty to refrain from making stigmatizing or intentionally false statements that may increase the risk of attacks on journalists’ lives and integrity, inherent to the profession.<sup>188</sup> International human rights standards require that authorities treat journalists in interviews and press conferences with respect and fairness. The Inter-American human rights system understands that stigmatizing statements by public officials may constitute an indirect restriction on the right to freedom of expression.<sup>189</sup>

3. Attacks, raids and closure of communication media

122. By the end of 2023, civil society organizations documented the closure of at least 408 media companies in Venezuela during the last 20 years, as a result of a prolonged process of restriction of information spaces and the practice of journalism in the country.<sup>190</sup> According to public reports, radio stations have been the most affected, with 285 stations closed in the last two decades, representing 71% of the total number of media outlets shut down.<sup>191</sup>

123. The NGO Espacio Público has noted the scarcity of information in regions such as Falcón, where 36 radio stations operate, of which 29 only broadcast music and content aligned with the government.<sup>192</sup>

It has also documented that 13 states lack independent media after these closures, including Amazonas, Apure, Aragua, Barinas, Cojedes, Delta Amacuro, Falcón, Guárico, Mérida, Monagas, Portuguesa, Sucre and Trujillo.<sup>193</sup>

124. Between January and April 2024, the IACHR and the Office of the Special Rapporteur were informed of the closure of at least 13 radio stations in the states of Apure, Bolívar, Carabobo, Distrito Capital, Lara, Portuguesa, Trujillo and Zulia.<sup>194</sup> According to public information, these closures are part of a government policy aimed at limiting the dissemination of opinions and information.

125. On January 23, 2024, Radio Hispana 89.5 FM in San Felipe, Yaracuy, was reportedly vandalized by unknown groups that painted “Furia Bolivariana 2024”. This act was repeated in stores and opposition parties.<sup>195</sup>

126. The IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship learned that on February 2, the National Telecommunications Commission (Conatel) reportedly closed the radio station Onda 100.9 FM in Valencia, Carabobo. According to the SNTP, the station had been previously inspected in 2023.<sup>196</sup> On the other hand, on February 23, Conatel reportedly ordered to shut down the transmitters of Senda 96.1 FM, Mágica 93.3 FM and Clásicos 93.9 FM in Ciudad Ojeda, Zulia.<sup>197</sup>

127. For its part, on March 8, 2024, Conatel officials, accompanied by military personnel, reportedly shut down the radio station Bendición Stereo 93.9 FM in Uputa, Bolivar state, arguing that the station “shone too brightly”. According to the administrative order, it was found that the station did not have a license or concession for the use of the radio electric spectrum.<sup>198</sup>

128. On the other hand, Ecos del Paramo 100.3 FM, a radio station located in Tuñame, Trujillo state, reportedly ceased operations on February 27 by order of Governor Omar Marquez. According to public information, state officials and police officers took away the station's equipment, arguing that it was operating in a clandestine manner and without Conatel's permission.<sup>199</sup>

129. Likewise, on March 4, the Spanish-language Deutsche Welle (DW) news channel was removed from the SimpleTV cable network in Venezuela, upon the publication of a video that addresses corruption in Latin America, including Venezuela.<sup>200</sup> It was reported that the channel, which was tuned to 770, displayed a “not found” message and was also removed from Supercable and NetUno.<sup>201</sup>

131. Since March 4, some Internet companies in Venezuela have reportedly blocked access to the news portal El Político. The Observatorio de Internet VE sin Filtro confirmed the blocking, in which CANTV and the private companies Movistar, Digitel, Inter and NetUno are allegedly involved.<sup>205</sup>

132. On April 12, 2024, Radio Cristal 610 AM in Barquisimeto, Lara State and Reconciliación 93.5 FM in Quíbor were shut down.<sup>206</sup> On April 5, Conatel closed Excelente 107.9 FM in Upata, Bolívar state, where equipment was taken.<sup>207</sup> On the other hand, the digital media Última Hora, in Portuguesa, reportedly ceased operations due to threats from the pro-government governor Primitivo Cedeño, and in order to “safeguard the physical integrity of its journalists and workers”.

133. It was also reported that the main Internet operators in Venezuela have blocked access to The Wall Street Journal’s website after the publication on August 1 of an opinion article by opposition leader María Corina Machado, in which she questioned the results of the presidential elections.<sup>208</sup>

134. Likewise, reports were received stating that the mayor of Boconó, Alejandro García, had suggested the local media to avoid publishing critical content, accusing the radio station Boconesa 107.3 FM of being a “coup plotter and accomplice” in an attack on the Dalla Acosta High School on July 28.<sup>209</sup> In addition, the governor of Trujillo, Gerardo Márquez, reportedly threatened the media that they would be “visited” by “Operation Tun Tun”, referring to the visit of state security agencies.<sup>210</sup> Also the coordinator of Conatel in Monagas state, Rosalva Teresen, informed the Monagas media of the prohibition to broadcast news that “infringe elements classified as violence”, warning of possible fines or the withdrawal of concessions.<sup>211</sup>

135. In view of the aforementioned facts, the Commission and its Special Rapporteurship recall that direct or indirect pressures aimed at silencing the informative work of social communicators are incompatible with the right to freedom of expression. According to Principle 13 of the Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression of the IACHR, “the use of State power and the resources of the public treasury; the granting of tariff privileges; the arbitrary and discriminatory allocation of official advertising and official credits; the granting of radio and television frequencies, among others, with the aim of pressuring and punishing or rewarding and privileging social communicators and the media according to their informative lines, violates freedom of expression and should be expressly prohibited by law”. The IACHR and RELE stress that the allocation of radio and television frequencies must consider democratic criteria that guarantee equal opportunities, diversity and pluralism.<sup>212</sup>

4. Discrimination and persecution of critical and dissident voices

136. The Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur have documented various repressive practices and acts of violence against activists, human rights defenders, opposition leaders, and electoral witnesses. For example, on February 2, 2024, officials of the Criminal Investigation Service of the state of Zulia reportedly arrested influencer Marcos Caraballo for wearing “indecent clothing” during a photo session in front of the Basilica of La Chinita. Nerio Antonio Bello, supplier of the costume, was also reportedly arrested as a result of complaints in social networks and pressure from religious sectors.<sup>213</sup>

137. Likewise, LGBTIQ+ activist Yendri Velásquez was detained on August 3 at the International Airport of Maiquetía, La Guaira, while attempting to travel to Switzerland to participate in the UN Committee against Racial Discrimination. According to publicly available information, he was informed at the airport that his passport had been annulled, and was subjected to forced disappearance before being released that night in Caracas.<sup>214</sup> In addition, reports from civil society organizations warn of discriminatory messages from state officials in national media such as Globovisión and Venezolana de Televisión, which are leading to harassment and persecution of LGBTIQ+ people and human rights defenders.<sup>215</sup>

138. On February 9, lawyer and activist Rocío del Carmen San Miguel Sosa was detained at the Simón Bolívar International Airport when she attempted to travel with her daughter.<sup>216</sup> The Public Ministry confirmed her detention on the basis of an arrest warrant for allegedly being linked to the “White armband” conspiracy, the purpose of which was to attempt an attack on the life of the president and other officials.<sup>217</sup>

139. According to public reports, during 2024, it became known of the arbitrary detention of citizens who shared or disseminated critical information about the government. Such was the case of Jesús Alexander Suárez, when on August 1 he was arrested in Puerto Cabello by the SEBIN after publishing a video on TikTok mentioning the President of the Republic and the Minister of Interior Relations, Justice and Peace. According to public reports, after his arrest he was recorded “confessing” under duress. The video was posted on the Instagram account of Colonel Alexander Granko Arteaga.<sup>218</sup>

140. That same day, a 43-year-old woman was reportedly arrested in Ocumare del Tuy for writing “freedom” on the street with flour from the CLAP program.<sup>219</sup> According to reports, she was accused of “incitement to hatred”. In Anzoátegui, Jesús Manuel Martínez was reportedly arrested by the regional police for disseminating content of “promotion and incitement to hatred”.<sup>220</sup> Likewise, it was reported that Iris Rincón was arrested in Maracaibo for criticizing the President of the Republic and the CLAP program on TikTok. Rincón was accused of “instigation to hatred”. According to reports, the GNB commander shared a video where she apologizes and assures that she was paid to record it.<sup>221</sup> A similar episode occurred with the lawyer and coordinator of Vente Venezuela in Portuguesa, María Oropeza, who was allegedly arbitrarily detained after publishing a critical video about the persecution of opponents.<sup>222</sup>

5. Closure of civic space and restrictive legislative initiatives.

141. On April 2, 2024, Executive Vice President Delcy Rodríguez presented a bill for a Law against Fascism, Neo-Fascism and Similar Expressions, which had already received approval in first discussion by the National Assembly<sup>223</sup>. Rodríguez informed through his account on X (formerly Twitter) that the President of the Republic has decided to establish a High Commission of State against Fascism and Neofascism, in charge of presenting a bill to the National Assembly.<sup>224</sup> According to civil society organizations, in a context of increasing political repression and violations of freedom of expression, this law would be added to a series of regulations that seek to restrict civic space and silence critical sectors, in line with the previous Anti-Hate Law.<sup>225</sup>

142. As far as the Commission and the Office of the Special Rapporteur were able to learn, Article 4 of the bill defines characteristic features of “fascism” as racism, chauvinism, classism, moral conservatism, neoliberalism, misogyny and any phobia “against human beings and their right to non-discrimination and diversity”. In addition, “neo-fascism and similar expressions” would be understood to include any ideological stance which reproduces, in whole or in part, the principles and methods of fascism.

143. Article 11, on the “Prohibition of fascist messages”, would establish a list of forbidden acts related to the apology and promotion of fascism. Paragraph 3 prohibits messages that “denigrate democracy, its institutions and republican values”, creating a wide margin of discretion that can restrict freedom of expression and silence criticism of the government. On the other hand, numeral 5 prohibits expressions that “exalt or make apology of principles and methods of fascism”.<sup>226</sup> On this matter, civil society organizations have expressed their concern, since its ambiguous wording may allow arbitrary interpretations and discretionary use by the authorities.<sup>227</sup>

144. According to reports from civil society organizations, the Law against Fascism would impose severe restrictions on freedom of expression and the right of association. In particular, it would oblige the media to “guarantee spaces free of fascist messages”, allowing Conatel to impose administrative sanctions, such as excessive fines and revocation of concessions, as well as penalties of up to 12 years in prison for those who promote fascism and allows for the dissolution of organizations that promote or praise fascism.<sup>228</sup>

145. This law would have as one of its aims to disqualify those who allegedly promote fascist behavior, which could affect their right to participate in politics and parliamentary immunity. In addition, it would contemplate fines for those who finance organizations that incur in actions contrary to the regulations, which could imply an “undue interference by the State in matters of international cooperation in violation of the principle of autonomy as a guarantee of free association”.<sup>229</sup> On August 12, the President of the National Assembly, Jorge Rodríguez, announced the suspension of the parliamentary recess to approve these laws.<sup>230</sup>

6. Restrictions on freedom of expression on the Internet

146. Cases of violations to freedom of expression on the Internet have increased during 2024. In particular, in March of this year, massive service failures were recorded in several regions of the country, allegedly caused by failures in the electricity supply, with special incidence in the states of Nueva Esparta, Lara,

Sucre, Trujillo, Táchira and Barinas and Carabobo, Falcón, Lara and Zulia.<sup>231</sup> On March 14, a new failure in Táchira led to a reduction of connectivity to 91% nationwide, but in that state, the connection was reduced by half.<sup>232</sup>

147. In addition, the government reportedly used the blocking of digital portals as a strategy to silence the independent press and non-governmental organizations.<sup>233</sup> In particular, on July 22, the main operators reportedly blocked the domain vesinfiltro.com. On that day, six news sites, including Tal Cual, El Estímulo, Análítica and Runrun.es, as well as the organizations Medianálisis and the platform Ve Sin Filtro, were blocked by internet suppliers Cantv, Movistar, Digitel, Inter and NetUno.<sup>234</sup>

148. On July 17, state-owned Cantv reportedly implemented a DNS block on the website of the organization Espacio Público, according to Ve Sin Filtro.<sup>235</sup> Likewise, civil society organizations register around 62 sites that have been blocked by Conatel, including verification platforms such as the Venezuelan Fake News Observatory, EsPaja and Cazadores de Fake News, prior to the July 28 elections.<sup>236</sup>

149. Following the presidential elections, the government has intensified repression in the digital sphere, using technology to profile, monitor and intimidate opponents and critical voices.<sup>237</sup> Blocking of websites, social networks and instant messaging platforms has been documented, as well as the use of applications that encourage citizens to inform on each other. In particular, the VenApp application, originally intended for the management of public services, has been reconfigured with functions to inform on individuals to the government under labels such as “suspicious” activities, “fascist guarimba”, “disinformation” and “public disorder”.<sup>238</sup> According to available information, the VenApp application has been disabled in the Apple Store and Google Play stores, preventing its download on iOS and Android devices in Venezuela.<sup>239</sup> In that context, the IACHR and its RELE have received information on random street detentions for the inspection of content on mobile devices, as well as the use of video surveillance and patrolling drones.<sup>240</sup>

150. According to public reports, state security forces are reportedly actively monitoring social networks and asking supporters to report dissident activities, which has led to arrests and warrantless raids.<sup>241</sup> Those detained are reportedly being denied access to a fair trial and are being sent to “re-education centers”. This is reportedly part of “Operation Tun Tun”, which uses platforms such as Instagram, Telegram and X (formerly Twitter) to reveal names, photos and addresses of dissidents and opponents, including activists, journalists and electoral witnesses.<sup>242</sup> In addition, government leaders would use their social networks and state-run media to expose and intimidate.<sup>243</sup>

151. On August 5, the President of the Republic announced his intention to regulate or block TikTok, Instagram and X (formerly Twitter), accusing these platforms of promoting “hate and fascism”. Two days later, it became known that he initiated a criminal investigation against those responsible for the page

152. On August 9, the government also reportedly blocked the website Reddit and warned television networks of sanctions if they covered protests. According to public reports, the state-owned CANTV blocked Microsoft domains, affecting access to Microsoft Teams and other services. There were also reports of blockages in the CANTV network to Binance and Mercado Libre portals and applications, among others.<sup>245</sup>

153. On August 14, the Internet connection in the country reportedly dropped to 81% of its capacity, especially affecting the states of Trujillo, Barinas and Portuguesa.<sup>246</sup> As far as the Commission and its Special Rapporteurship were able to determine, on August 31 there was a massive blackout that affected at least 20 states, causing an immediate drop in the connection to the Internet.<sup>247</sup>

154. The IACHR and its RELE recall that, as part of their positive obligation to promote and facilitate the enjoyment of human rights, States must take all measures within their power to ensure that all persons have effective access to the Internet. Furthermore, the obligation to respect implies that authorities should refrain from interfering with access to the internet and digital communication platforms, unless the restriction is in full compliance with the requirements set forth in the applicable human rights instruments.<sup>248</sup>

7. Academic freedom and repression of the educational community

155. Criminalization, persecution, threats, harassment and arbitrary detentions of members of the educational community and human rights defenders, motivated by political reasons, continue to be recurrent practices being reported by Venezuelan civil society organizations.<sup>249</sup> In particular, between January and November 2024, the organization Aula Abierta registered a total of 180 protests by members of the university community. Of these, 125 took place in universities in the center of the country, 28 in Los Andes, 6 in the East and 21 in the West. Of the documented protests, 89 were in person and 91 took place in digital spaces.<sup>250</sup> The main demands were a worthy salary and the defense of university autonomy, with 15 protests in defense of the financial autonomy of universities and 24 protests related to the defense of democracy and human rights.<sup>251</sup>

156. As for arbitrary detentions of members of the university community in the exercise of freedom of expression and academic freedom, the organization Aula Abierta documented, between June 2021 and March 2024, at least two cases of detention of professors and ten of students. Between 2014 and 2024, more than 410 arbitrary detentions have been recorded, as well as nine extrajudicial executions and four forced disappearances of members of the university community.<sup>252</sup>

157. On the other hand, the IACHR and its Office of the Special Rapporteur observe that during the post-electoral context, repressive practices against members of the educational community have intensified. They have received reports of multiple cases of arbitrary detentions, forced disappearances, threats and stigmatization, as well as acts of vandalism in academic facilities. In particular, between July 28 and September 30, 2024, Aula Abierta documented 51 incidents of reprisals against members of the university community, including 12 professors detained for their participation in post-election protests, 22 students deprived of liberty, 31 cases of harassment, and 71 students expelled from the Universidad Nacional Experimental de la

Seguridad (UNES).<sup>253</sup> There were also acts such as the cancellation of a teacher's passport and 18 student protests demanding improvements in university services.

158. Likewise, on July 28, 2024, irregularities were reported at the National Experimental Security University (UNES) in Caracas, where students were pressured to vote for Nicolás Maduro under threat of reprisals. At least 25 students who refused to vote for the president are still missing, and their relatives have complained about the lack of official information on their whereabouts.<sup>254</sup> Likewise, on August 1, 2024, an attack on the Gustavo Leal Library of the Central University of Venezuela (UCV) was reported following a critical statement made by the university regarding the elections.<sup>255</sup> In addition, armed groups linked to the government reportedly intercepted students and teachers, threatening and accusing members of the educational community of being “terrorists”.

IV. STRUCTURAL SITUATIONS WITH SERIOUS IMPACT ON THE ENJOYMENT AND EXERCISE OF HUMAN RIGHTS

159. This chapter analyzes how the political crisis in Venezuela, caused by the co-optation of state institutions, the collapse of public services and the use of corruption, undermined the State's capacity to guarantee and enjoy human rights. This had a special impact on groups in situations of vulnerability and historical discrimination, such as indigenous peoples, Afro-descendants, women, LGBTI people, children, adolescents and people living in poverty.

160. A large portion of the Venezuelan population continues to face a complex, severe and multidimensional humanitarian crisis, characterized by high rates of poverty, inequality and food insecurity, as well as by the collapse of the health system and the impact on various economic, social, cultural and environmental rights. In this context, despite reports of an improvement in the country's economic situation - with GDP growth projections of 4% by 2024 - it has been noted that this recovery has not translated into a substantial improvement in conditions for the population. According to reports, multiple regions of the country would remain mired in an economic depression and a severe crisis of public services, with an income poverty rate affecting 85% of the population.<sup>256</sup>

161. According to the UN Special Rapporteur on the Right to Food, 82% of the population lives in conditions of poverty and 53% in extreme poverty, with insufficient income to access a basic food basket.<sup>257</sup> According to the results of the National Survey of Living Conditions 2023, conducted by the Universidad Católica Andrés Bello, 51.9% of the population lives in multidimensional poverty.<sup>258</sup>

162. Along the same lines, high levels of economic inequality persist, which continue to place the country at historical highs and as one of the most unequal countries in Latin America. As a result, despite the decrease in the Gini in 2023 -from 60.3 to 51.2,<sup>259</sup> the difference in average per capita income is almost 35 times ($10 versus $347.2).<sup>260</sup> In this context, the Commission and REDESCA note that the high levels of inflation, 30.4%, between January and September 2024<sup>261</sup> continues to reduce the purchasing power of households and, thereby, their life standard.

A. Challenges in the access and enjoyment of the rights to health, water, food and education

163. The collapse of the health system persists. Millions of people do not have access to basic services,<sup>262</sup> as a result of the shortage of basic supplies, medicines and equipment, as well as lack of access to water in hospitals<sup>263</sup> and the shortage of health personnel.<sup>264</sup> According to UNICEF, 75% of health centers in the country have no medical doctors and 74% do not have enough nursing staff.<sup>265</sup> Likewise, it has been reported that 72.4% of public health centers endure shortage of medicines, personnel and material, while 88.9% of public services reportedly do not function and 55% of public establishments lack access to water. As a result, 90% of patients would have to bring their own medical supplies in order to access health care.<sup>266</sup>

164. In this context, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) reported that, between May 1, 2023 and April 30, 2024, there was a shortage of approximately 35% of medical equipment and supplies in hospitals and 27.2% of the medicines needed for the treatment of common diseases such as diabetes, convulsions and respiratory infections. This situation affects several groups in a differentiated and disproportionate manner, including indigenous peoples, rural communities and people with HIV.<sup>267</sup> In turn, note was taken of the low vaccination rate in the country, with only 50.5% of 5-year-old children vaccinated.<sup>268</sup> As for children, the death of at least 85 infants who have died in the last seven years while waiting for a transplant in the context of the suspension of the Organ and Tissue Procurement System (SPOT) in Venezuela is also a matter of concern.<sup>269</sup>

165. This situation is aggravated by the lack of access to information, where the State has still not published the weekly epidemiological bulletin since 2016;<sup>270</sup> which hinders the proper identification of areas for improvement in Venezuela's public health system. The lack of access to drinking water also continues to be reported,<sup>271</sup> which has led to 69% of the population suffering from a lack of water supply.<sup>272</sup> In this regard, it has been noted that 4.3 million people in Venezuela require access to drinking water, while 27% of the population would receive water less than once a month.<sup>273</sup>

166. Along the same lines, the Commission and REDESCA remain concerned about the serious food insecurity crisis in the country. According to Hum Venezuela, by 2023, 91.6% of households had to use survival strategies to feed themselves, stressing that 45.2% of the population reportedly experienced food insecurity, representing an estimated 13 million people.<sup>274</sup> Likewise, 25.7% of the families would eat less than three meals a day and 22.8% would spend entire days without eating.<sup>275</sup>

167. Government programs do not resolve this situation because, in addition to being politically conditioned, they fail to address the structural causes of hunger.<sup>276</sup> On this point, note is also taken of the complaints on the quality of the food provided by the CLAPs. In this way, it has been warned about the alarming setback in nutritional indicators, with millions of people suffering from malnutrition.<sup>277</sup>

168. In this appalling scenario, it is noted that, as noted by the OHCHR, the country's Indigenous peoples are disproportionately affected by malnutrition, exposure to disease and environmental degradation, which is due in part to the extractive activities carried out in their territories.<sup>278</sup>

169. On the other hand, in Venezuela there has been a 40% decrease in school attendance due to a lack of personnel because of insufficient salaries. In addition, the difficult living conditions in the country have led many students to abandon their studies in order to contribute financially to their families.<sup>279</sup> According to UNICEF, 75% of teachers and 61% of students have considered dropping out of university due to precariousness.<sup>280</sup>

170. The Commission and the Rapporteurship have also received concerning information on the impacts of the mosaic schedule established in the country, which involves scheduling classes in schools for two or three days a week for each grade, which has amplified educational inequalities affecting lower-income students.<sup>281</sup> This affects the quality of education received by students, which is also a consequence of the insufficient salaries of teachers and their difficulty in paying for daily commutes to and from work.<sup>282</sup>

171. In addition, according to Hum Venezuela, 74.6% of the 28,000 schools in the country face infrastructure problems, 73.4% do not have constant access to electricity and 80.9% lack a regular supply of drinking water.<sup>283</sup> As a result, 87% of teachers perceive that their institutions are stagnating or regressing. 91% hold that they do not have access to drinking water, and 85% report problems with the functioning of the restrooms.<sup>284</sup>

B. Labor precariousness and hostile environment for the defense of labor and union rights

172. The defense of labor and union rights continues to face a hostile environment in which trade unionists and workers -among other groups- have claimed persecution, intimidation, harassment and other acts of violence against them.<sup>285</sup> Likewise, the International Trade Union Confederation has held that Venezuela is among the 13 countries in the world with the worst guarantee of the rights to strike, collective bargaining, unionization, access to justice, freedom of expression and association, among other rights.<sup>286</sup>

173. Said situation is particularly complex when most working people do not live a dignified life, while the minimum wage is 130 bolivars per month and unchanged since 2022<sup>287</sup> while pensioners also receive insufficient income. In this context, it is reiterated that salaries and pensions must ensure the guarantee of a dignified life. Due to the serious deprivations in this regard, in the first half of 2024 alone there were 2,383 protests, 70% of which focused on the demand for economic, social, cultural and environmental rights.<sup>288</sup>

C. Climate emergency and environmental protection

174. With regard to the environment, REDESCA and the Commission are closely monitoring the effects of the climate emergency in the country, as well as cases of environmental degradation, including deforestation and fires. Among others, the loss of glaciers in the Andes region of Venezuela has been reported<sup>289</sup>, and over 11,000 fire outbreaks.<sup>290</sup> Hurricane Beryl reportedly affected around 400 homes and approximately 8,000 people by July.<sup>291</sup> Along these lines, it is noted with concern the impacts suffered by the indigenous communities of the region, such as the Wayuu, who suffered losses of up to 10 hectares of crops.<sup>292</sup> In this context, the IACHR and the Rapporteurship recall that the increase in the frequency and intensity of hurricanes and other natural disasters is a direct consequence of climate change, which alters global climate conditions and aggravates the risks and impacts on the lives, health and livelihoods of the most vulnerable populations.<sup>293</sup>

175. In particular, Lake Maracaibo has faced serious problems in recent years due to oil spills. These spills have had negative consequences in the communities of the region, due to the excess of crude oil in the water, affecting more than 5,000 workers in the fishing sector.<sup>294</sup> From January to August, approximately 35 spills were reported, which have had a negative impact on the ecosystem and the economy of the region. In addition, there are concerns about the effects on the health of the surrounding communities, who could be consuming food polluted with toxic substances derived from these spills.<sup>295</sup>

D. Companies and Human Rights: mining exploitation and impacts on communities

176. The Commission and REDESCA reiterate their deep concern for the human rights impacts of the exploitation of mineral resources in the Orinoco Mining Arc, affecting mainly indigenous peoples in their livelihoods, with the precariousness of their ways of life and multiple violations.<sup>296</sup> On this matter, it is observed that, as held by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, with the establishment of the Orinoco Mining Arc National Strategic Development Zone, there is a militarization of indigenous territories and military operations without due prior consultation with the affected peoples. In addition, there are human rights abuses and violations committed by state agents, such as members of the National Armed Forces, and by non-state armed groups.<sup>297</sup>

177. In turn, note is taken of the pollution of hybrid resources by gold mining, which continues to seriously affect the health and traditional ways of life of these communities, as well as increasing the alteration of the ecosystem.<sup>298</sup> Thus, violations have been reported for children, adolescents, women, indigenous people and workers in the region due to mercury intoxication.<sup>299</sup> Likewise, health effects have been reported, such as chronic allergies, lung damage, renal, respiratory and cardiac insufficiency, problematic pregnancies, among others, as well as the accumulation of mercury in edible plants that are essential in the region, such as cassava and chili peppers.<sup>300</sup>

178. As for the environmental consequences, illegal mining would also be one of the main causes of vegetation loss south of the Orinoco, with a reduction of up to 520,900 hectares between 2000 and 2020.<sup>301</sup> Although these figures are reflected in deforestation, they also translate into multiple forms of violence and exploitation associated with illegal mining, such as human trafficking, sexual slavery, extrajudicial executions, etc., and the use of illegal mining as a tool for the illegal mining industry.<sup>302</sup> Along the same lines, it is noted that, between 2017 and February 2024, 47 mining accidents occurred, resulting in 131 casualties and an undetermined number of injured people.<sup>303</sup>

E. Groups in a situation of historical discrimination

1. Children and adolescents

179. Children and adolescents in Venezuela face serious limitations to their rights. The IACHR notes with great concern that there are no publicly available official data on the guarantee of their rights.

180. With regard to the right to education, by June 2024, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) reported that 40% of students were attending school irregularly.<sup>304</sup> In this regard, the Commission received information on the lack of investment in education, especially at the high school level. In particular, as mentioned above, the IACHR was informed about the low salaries of educational personnel, which are around US$10 per month. This has led to high teacher absence, with an estimated 2.5 teachers for each of the 40,000 schools in the country, which has limited school attendance to three days a week, leaving some 3 million students without continuous attention.<sup>305</sup>

181. On the other hand, with regard to access to food, UNICEF estimates from June 2024 indicate that malnutrition rates in children under five could be among the highest in the region.<sup>306</sup> Along these lines, the Commission received information on the inoperability of the state food programs and the poor quality of the water. This reportedly resulted in cases of acute and moderate malnutrition in this population, with progressive weight loss over the last five years. In addition, even when nutritional treatments are applied, the lack of continuous access to adequate food would cause these children to return to critical health situations within six months.<sup>307</sup>

182. In this context, the Commission exhorts the Venezuelan State to take measures to guarantee access to and quality of education, instilling in children and adolescents the knowledge of their rights, the development of life skills and a responsible social participation. Likewise, it reiterates its call to comply with the obligation to adopt legal, technical and economic measures that ensure the life, integrity and health of this population, especially with respect to the satisfaction of their nutritional needs in accordance with their best interest.

2. Women

183. Structural challenges persist in guaranteeing women's rights. In particular, the absence of an official registry of data and statistics that would allow the design of adequate public prevention of violence policies. Although the Public Ministry reported 317,584 complaints of gender-based violence from 2017 to October 2024, the types of violence reported and how many of them correspond to the year 2024 are unknown.<sup>308</sup> Due to the above, it is taken from the records and reports made by civil society organizations. In this regard, a civil society organization reported 58 deaths of women and 27 attempted femicides up to July 2024,<sup>309</sup> while another civil society organization reported 108 deaths of women in the same period.<sup>310</sup> In addition, they highlight that cases of sexual violence against girls constitute 81% of the total registered up to July 2024.<sup>311</sup>

184. Similarly, a report by the Universidad de los Andes reported a high incidence of violence against women in digital environments, which, as they point out, is often encouraged by the authorities themselves, since they expose women accused of committing crimes to public scorn by using stereotypical and sexist messages.<sup>312</sup> Along these lines, we note the remarks made by civil society regarding the conviction imposed on a woman for alleged complicity in the murder of her son, without taking into account that she herself was a victim of gender-based violence, specifically vicarious violence, by the perpetrator.<sup>313</sup>

185. In addition, women residing in or transiting through Venezuela's neighboring states continue to face dangers caused by the presence of irregular armed groups and criminal organizations.<sup>314</sup> There have been reports of contemporary forms of slavery such as human trafficking for sexual exploitation, extortion, disappearances and femicides.<sup>315</sup> In this context, the Commission notes the absence of specialized legislation and assistance protocols for victims of human trafficking.<sup>316</sup> It is also concerned about the disproportionate impact of food insecurity on women, who are forced to exchange sex for food, thus exposing them to other forms of exploitation.<sup>317</sup>

186. Along these lines, the Commission urges the State to adopt policies to prevent violence against women, which should be based on updated data and statistics on the causes, consequences and frequency of violence against women, with a comprehensive approach that addresses the different manifestations and contexts in which it occurs. It also calls on the State to establish measures to prevent and protect women in situations of gender violence, as well as to investigate, punish and redress with due diligence acts of violence against women, adolescents and girls with a gender approach.

187. In terms of sexual and reproductive health, note is taken of the campaign "Love yourself, take care of yourself, examine yourself", as part of the fight against breast cancer.<sup>318</sup> However, civil society organizations claim that there are still some deficiencies in this regard, such as the fact that the protocol for timely diagnosis is outdated,<sup>319</sup> lack of access to information and services for mammography and radiotherapy;<sup>320</sup> and the lack of trained personnel to handle the scarce available equipment.<sup>321</sup> In addition, women living in rural and border areas must travel long distances to access these services.

188. In the same vein, media reports report limited access to contraceptive methods by women living in rural areas and indigenous communities, where the highest rates of teenage pregnancies are found.<sup>322</sup> They also hold that the National Humanized Childbirth Program is not being adequately implemented; on the contrary, practices constituting obstetric violence persist.<sup>323</sup> On the other hand, there is still a lack of medical protocols for the provision of therapeutic abortion services,<sup>324</sup> the only one allowed by law;<sup>325</sup> therefore, people seeking abortions resort to unsafe practices, or must travel to other countries, to access this health service.<sup>326</sup>

189. In the context of the above, the Commission urges the State to adopt legislative, budgetary, public policy and any other measures necessary to guarantee, without discrimination, the availability, accessibility, relevance and quality of sexual and reproductive health facilities, goods and services, under an intersectional and gender-based approach, including access to health services for the voluntary interruption of pregnancy. At the same time, it notes that these measures must be accompanied by solid education and awareness-raising initiatives that address both the appropriate use of contraceptive methods and their impact on the right to health. In this way, clear, sufficient and accessible information is provided to enable women to make informed and autonomous decisions.

3. Human rights defenders

190. The defense of human rights in Venezuela takes place in a hostile environment characterized by stigmatization, discrediting and acts of harassment, persecution and criminalization by state authorities against these groups. During 2024 these aggressions and obstacles were intensified, particularly after the elections held on July 28.

191. The Commission continued to receive information on acts of violence, criminalization and stigmatization of human rights defenders. Between May 1, 2023 and April 30, 2024, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights documented 30 cases of threats and harassment, one attempted kidnapping, two cases of physical aggression, 38 cases of arbitrary detention (27 men and 11 women), as well as 13 cases of other forms of criminalization of civil society actors, including journalists, trade unionists, peasant leaders and other voices considered critical.<sup>327</sup>

192. It is observed that, in the post-electoral context, there was an increase in attacks against human rights defenders. Figures from the Center for Defenders and Justice (CDJ) show that during the month of July there were 56 attacks and security incidents against human rights defenders, 20% of which occurred in the three days following the election.<sup>328</sup> In August, the CDJ documented 134 attacks and security incidents.<sup>329</sup>

193. By means of the accusation of crimes such as terrorism, information continued to be received on arbitrary detentions and criminalization of human rights defenders. Among these, the detention and deprivation of liberty of the defender and member of the organization Foro Penal (Criminal Forum), Kennedy Tejada, who has been deprived of liberty since August 2 in the state of Carabobo, after inquiring about the whereabouts of protesters in a military command.<sup>330</sup> The defender was reportedly presented before courts under charges of terrorism, without knowing the crimes with which he is charged.<sup>331</sup>

194. On August 2, community leader Edward Ocariz was detained and is reportedly being held in the Tocuyito prison in Carabobo;<sup>332</sup> whereas on August 17, Henry Gómez, a human rights defender was arrested in the state of Amazonas.<sup>333</sup> He was reportedly presented at a hearing with a public defender and was allegedly charged with terrorism offenses. Mr. Gómez is believed to be detained in Tocorón prison.<sup>334</sup>

195. In addition to these cases, there are those documented prior to the electoral process, such as that of defender Rocío San Miguel,<sup>335</sup> arrested on February 15, 2024 and presented five days later before the Second Anti-Terrorism Court of Caracas on charges of treason, conspiracy, terrorism, among others;<sup>336</sup> and Javier Tarazona, deprived of his freedom since 2021 and accused of incitement to hatred, treason and terrorism.<sup>337</sup>

196. There were also reports of short-term detentions as a form of intimidation, as was the case of LGBTI defender Yendri Velásquez, who was arbitrarily arrested at the airport when he was about to travel to participate in the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.<sup>338</sup> Subsequently, he was released.<sup>339</sup>

197. In addition, a new form of intimidation and reprisal against human rights defenders was reported through the cancellation of their passports, and that of their family members, without them being officially informed of this fact or the reason for the measure adopted by the State.<sup>340</sup> According to the information available, at least 40 passports have been cancelled. The purpose of these measures would be to obstruct the advocacy activities performed by human rights defenders outside Venezuela and would be generating fear among human rights defenders and civil society representatives to leave the country due to the possibility that their passports may be cancelled.<sup>341</sup>

198. The current government has also intensified repression in the digital sphere, using technology to profile, monitor and intimidate opponents and critical voices, including defenders. In particular, the VenApp app, originally intended for the management of public services, has been reconfigured with functions to report individuals to the government in office under labels such as “suspicious” activities, “fascist guarimba,” “disinformation” and “public disorder”.<sup>342</sup> This situation was addressed in the section of the Special Rapporteurship on Freedom of Expression.

199. The defense of human rights in Venezuela during 2024 took place in an increasingly restricted civic environment. Non-governmental organizations (NGOs) operating in the country faced greater difficulties in performing their work, especially after the approval, on August 15, of the Law of “Fiscalization, Regularization, Performance and Financing of Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) and Non-Profit Social Organizations”.<sup>343</sup> Articles 1 and 2 of these rules establish the purpose of regulating the incorporation, registration, operation and funding of NGOs established and operating in Venezuela.<sup>344</sup>

200. Civil society organizations have expressed concern that this law could jeopardize the existence of community, humanitarian and human rights organizations. In particular, the ambiguous articles of the law could disproportionately limit the activities of NGOs, imposing severe sanctions and even giving state authorities the power to unilaterally dissolve organizations that, in their appraisal, are involved in political activities or are considered a threat to national stability or state institutions.<sup>345</sup>

201. According to available reports, the law was initially approved in first discussion on January 24, 2023, without having been subject to prior public consultation.<sup>346</sup> Although it was announced that a formal consultation would be held on January 12, 2024, there is no evidence that this consultation was conducted in a broad, inclusive and transparent manner, according to public reports.<sup>347</sup>

202. In January 2024, the IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship expressed concern over statements made during discussions of the bill, in which pro-government deputies described civil society organizations as “enemies,” “destabilizers,” “traitors to the homeland,” and “party facades,” among other stigmatizing terms.<sup>348</sup> These statements reflect a climate of hostility towards those who defend human rights or practice journalism in Venezuela. In this regard, IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship urged the Venezuelan state to refrain from passing any legislation or regulations that arbitrarily limit the right of association, freedom of expression and public participation.<sup>349</sup>

203. Likewise, the bill against fascism, neo-fascism and similar expressions, approved in a first discussion before the National Assembly on April 2,<sup>350</sup> already cited in the section on freedom of expression, contains vague and ambiguous wording on the concepts of fascism and neo-fascism, as well as on the application of their punishments, which could lead to greater censorship and restriction of the right to defend human rights.<sup>351</sup>

4. Lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and intersex persons (LGBTI)

204. Venezuela continues to produce no official data on violence and discrimination affecting LGBTI people. There is no legal framework that guarantees their fundamental rights, under the principle of equality and non-discrimination, including the recognition of diverse families and gender identity. Additionally, the Inter-American Commission received information on violations to the freedoms of association and expression of LGBTI persons.

205. In 2024, actions of persecution due to prejudice against LGBTI people and those who defend their rights in Venezuela were observed. In particular, there have been actions by State security agents and stigmatizing speeches made by high authorities that not only fuel a climate of discrimination but also erode confidence in government institutions.<sup>352</sup> In addition to this, civil society has documented at least 3 murders of LGBTI people in 2024.<sup>353</sup>

206. In 2024, raids and detentions were registered against LGBTI rights defenders. Nelson Merino was reported missing on July 30, after a raid on his home by state security forces.<sup>354</sup> According to information from civil society, Merino was transferred to the Tocarón prison, despite being in a serious state of health.<sup>355</sup> On the other hand, in August of this year, activist Kody Campos denounced that DIE officials tried to illegally raid his home in western Caracas.<sup>356</sup>

207. The closure of two LGBTI human rights organizations in the country has also been a matter of concern. On October 12, the organization Venezuela Igualitaria reported the cease of its activities due to “the current economic, social and political context.”<sup>357</sup> On October 14, the organization País Narrado also announced the end of its activities, stating as the reason “The Venezuelan social, political and economic situation, as well as the new challenges the country is facing.”<sup>358</sup> The closure of these organizations takes place in a context of

5. Elders

208. The elderly in Venezuela continue to face great challenges in order to lead a dignified life. Although the country has contributory and non-contributory pensions that are supplemented through vouchers, the basic amount received is less than US$5.<sup>359</sup> In addition, retired senior citizens residing abroad have had their pensions suspended for almost nine years.<sup>360</sup>

209. With regard to the poverty situation of the elderly, specialists have expressed their concern due to the widespread precariousness of this age group. According to data from civil society, more than 5 million elders are in a situation of extreme poverty, in addition to the fact that there is no social security system to protect the elderly through a government that provides benefits or effective social protection policies with a human rights approach.<sup>361</sup>

210. Finally, the United Nations International Independent Fact-Finding Mission on Venezuela reported that, with the partial announcement of the election results, thousands of people, including the elderly, took part in social demonstrations of rejection of the results.<sup>362</sup> Ricardo Albacete Vidal, a 72-year-old Venezuelan businessman, has been arbitrarily detained for having hosted opposition leader, María Corina Machado, in a home he owns. This would contravene Venezuelan law itself, which states that persons over 70 years of age cannot be placed in pretrial detention.<sup>363</sup>

211. The situation of persons deprived of liberty in Venezuela continues to be characterized by the absence of updated official statistics, dual prison systems, overcrowding, high use of pretrial detention, corruption, self-government in the units, deplorable detention conditions, and mistreatment. The Inter-American Commission highlights that the massive detentions that took place in 2024, in the context of the electoral protests, could have aggravated the pre-existing prison overcrowding and precarious conditions of detention.

212. In particular, the State continues to fail to produce or publish official data on the population deprived of liberty in the country and the existence of a duality of penitentiary systems. An official one which, according to civil society, as of September 2024, held approximately 30,000 people in prisons under the responsibility of the Ministry of People's Power for the Penitentiary Service;<sup>364</sup> and a parallel one, consisting of approximately 500 pretrial detention facilities, which, as of the same date, reportedly harbors 28,000 people.<sup>365</sup>

213. With regard to overcrowding, the “procedural impulse” pilot plan aimed at combating overcrowding in prisons and pretrial detention centers was launched in 2024.<sup>366</sup> However, it is of concern that, according to information from civil society organizations, as of September 2024, prison occupancy was 30,000 people, while the actual capacity was 16,230, due to the closure of 18 prisons, which resulted in the loss of 10,008 spaces.<sup>367</sup> Said figures indicate that the current overcrowding rate is 85%.<sup>368</sup> On this matter, the IACHR reiterates that when the collapse of a penitentiary system or a penitentiary center leads to the material impossibility of offering dignified conditions to detainees, it is not reasonable for the State to continue admitting people to these spaces.<sup>369</sup>

214. The excessive use of pretrial detention is one of the main causes of this phenomenon. According to data from civil society organizations, of the total number of persons detained in penitentiary centers as of December 2023, 19,217 were being prosecuted and 10,348 were convicted.<sup>370</sup> Said figures indicate that the rate of application of pretrial detention in the penitentiary system is 65%. The IACHR recalls that the application of pretrial detention must be based on the right to the presumption of innocence, and be applied in accordance with the criteria of exceptionality, legality, necessity and proportionality.<sup>371</sup>

215. In terms of corruption, reports show that detainees reportedly pay prison officials sums of money to obtain access to food, water, visits and transfers, among other things.<sup>372</sup> This, in a context characterized by “self-governance”.<sup>373</sup> According to information from civil society organizations, this phenomenon has been evidenced in the negotiation between the Ministry of People's Power for the Penitentiary Service and the criminal group “pran” of the Aragua Penitentiary Center for the transfer of 38 detainees to another location during 2023.<sup>374</sup> In this regard, the Commission recalls that effective control of detention centers is essential for States to be able to guarantee the rights of persons deprived of their liberty.<sup>375</sup>

216. On the other hand, the deplorable conditions of detention have caused deaths in custody. They have even led to hunger strikes by both detainees<sup>376</sup> and prison officers due to lack of security conditions.<sup>377</sup> In particular, there is a persistent lack of medical personnel, medicines, treatments and laboratory tests.<sup>378</sup> In this scenario, from 2017 to December 2023, tuberculosis-along with malnutrition and respiratory infections-constitutes the leading cause of death of people under custody.<sup>379</sup> In this regard, the Commission regrets the death of 39 people in detention centers registered until the end of 2023, due to negligent medical care.<sup>380</sup>

217. In addition, data shows that inmates face serious difficulties in accessing food, even as a form of punishment.<sup>381</sup> As a result, at least 51% of the population in pretrial detention is reportedly suffering from malnutrition.<sup>382</sup> In addition, water distribution would occur infrequently, forcing people to ingest contaminated water.<sup>383</sup> On the other hand, the persistence of ill-treatment of detainees in Venezuela is a matter of concern.<sup>384</sup> In particular, reports from civil society highlight that ill treatment and torture occur in both prisons and pretrial detention centers, including beatings and searches with the aim of inflicting additional suffering or humiliation, sometimes committed by other detainees with the complicity of prison officials or wardens.<sup>385</sup>

218. Based on the foregoing, the IACHR recalls that States have the duty to ensure conditions of detention for persons deprived of liberty that are compatible with their human dignity. These include, inter alia, access to sufficient and quality food, as well as to safe and drinking water.<sup>386</sup> It also involves providing timely, adequate and specialized health services to all persons under its custody.<sup>387</sup> In addition, it highlights the absolute prohibition of any form of mistreatment or torture.<sup>388</sup>

7. Persons in human mobility

219. The severe human rights crisis in Venezuela has led to an unprecedented forced displacement of people. According to the Interagency Coordination Platform for Refugees and Migrants in Venezuela (R4V Platform), it is estimated that between January and August 2024, a total of 242,000 people left the country, reaching a total of 7,774,494 refugees, migrants and asylum seekers from Venezuela. Of this total, 6,590,671 were distributed in the region.<sup>389</sup> The main receiving countries were: Colombia, with a total of 2,813,997; Peru, with 1,662,889; and Brazil, with a total of 585,361 people.<sup>390</sup> The most recent data from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) revealed that, by mid-2024, there were 369,826 Venezuelans recognized as refugees, 1,318,912 asylum seekers and 5,793,723 people in need of international protection worldwide.<sup>391</sup>

220. According to the R4V Platform, the context of economic and socio-political uncertainty that these people experienced in their country of origin is added to certain needs in the destination countries. These include effective integration into the host societies, obtaining formal employment, a safe and stable home, sufficient food and education for children and adolescents, especially those in an irregular situation, recently arrived or in transit.<sup>392</sup>

221. Regarding the arbitrary restriction of the right of movement and residence, the Commission observes with concern that on July 29, 2024, the People's Power Ministry for Foreign Affairs issued a communiqué through which it decided to “withdraw all diplomatic personnel from the missions in Argentina, Chile, Costa Rica, Peru, Panama, the Dominican Republic and Uruguay”.<sup>393</sup> The measure implied the closure of Venezuelan consulates and embassies in the respective countries. As a consequence of this decision, limitations were reported in obtaining and renewing personal documentation and difficulties in accessing regular entry and exit routes to other territories. Both factors favor the use of irregular migratory routes, increasing the risks of exposure to abuse, exploitation, gender violence and human trafficking, among others.<sup>394</sup> Likewise, they hinder access to international protection procedures and increase exposure to the risk of refolement (non-refoulement).

222. On the other hand, the Ministry of People's Power for Transportation announced the temporary suspension of commercial flights “to and from” Venezuela with Panama, Peru and the Dominican Republic, as of July 31, 2024.<sup>395</sup> Along with the interruption of consular services, the measure is expected to affect a total of 1,846,000 Venezuelan citizens, according to the records of the R4V Platform.<sup>396</sup> In particular, the decision violates the right to unity and the protection of family life, making direct air connections impossible and compromising family reunification.

223. The IACHR stresses that, in accordance with Articles 22.1 and 22.2 of the American Convention, everyone has the right to move and leave their country freely.<sup>397</sup> Likewise, in accordance with Articles 22.7 and 22.8 thereof, everyone has the right to seek and receive asylum in foreign territory and not to be returned to another country where his or her life or freedom would be threatened.<sup>398</sup> In particular, the exercise of these rights requires State authorities to provide the documentation required to ensure regular, safe, accessible and affordable channels for migration, in order to reduce the risks that people in the context of human mobility may face.<sup>399</sup>

224. Given this reality, the Commission reiterates its exhortation to the State of Venezuela to adopt urgent and comprehensive measures to address the factors that are causing the massive departure of its nationals from the country, including violations of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms. In addition, it urges the State to eliminate the obstacles imposed by the closure of consular services and the suspension of air transportation routes that may generate an increase in irregular displacement.

8. Indigenous peoples

225. The human rights situation of indigenous peoples continues to be precarious. In particular, the IACHR received information on the impacts of illegal mining and other unlawful economies on the life, health and survival of the Yanomami people in the Orinoco Mining Arc, which has resulted in increased violence, the spread of infectious diseases and environmental deterioration. According to indigenous leaders of the Yanomami people,<sup>400</sup> due to the activity of garimpeiros and groups from other illegal economies of Brazilian and Colombian origin, violence has increased in the states of Amazonas, Bolivar and Delta Amacuro.

226. In this context, their right to health is particularly affected by the prevalence of respiratory infections, tuberculosis, diarrhea, hepatitis and, in general, sexually transmitted diseases and other vaccine-

preventable diseases.<sup>401</sup> According to the Yanomami people's own records, malaria has caused the death of at least 390 indigenous people in the last two years. This scenario is consistent with that documented by the International Independent Mission for the Determination of Facts in the Orinoco Mining Arc.<sup>402</sup>

227. This situation was also observed by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), which expressed its concern<sup>403</sup> by the negative impact of mining on the natural resources found on indigenous peoples' lands and territories, affecting their livelihoods and ways of life. The Committee observed that, as a result, the food crisis, forced displacement and health problems of its members have worsened.

228. The Committee also expressed its concern about the lack of disaggregated data and socioeconomic indicators regarding the indigenous community, since the last population census was conducted in 2011. Therefore, it recommended that the State continue its efforts to conduct a census in order to generate statistics and socioeconomic indicators disaggregated -inter alia- by ethnicity and thus be able to develop public policies aimed at this population.

229. With regard to schooling rates, the Committee expressed concern about the high dropout levels and the lack of qualified teachers in schools located in areas inhabited by indigenous peoples. It also noted limitations in access to quality and culturally appropriate health services, as well as the challenges they face in accessing the labor market due to discrimination based on their ethnic origin. For this reason, the Committee recommended that the State adopt measures to mitigate these gaps.<sup>404</sup>

230. Regarding the demarcation of indigenous lands,<sup>405</sup> the Committee also noted the slowness of the processes of demarcation and titling of indigenous lands, which has been paralyzed since 2016 and that this situation has contributed to attacks and illegal invasions by non-indigenous people, generating conflicts and violence over access to land, territory and natural resources. Consequently, the Committee recommended that the State adopt measures to guarantee this right, including through the effective implementation of the Organic Law on Indigenous Peoples and Communities and the full functioning of the National Commission for the Demarcation of the Habitat and Lands of Indigenous Peoples and Communities.

231. As for the right to free, prior and informed consultation, the Committee took note of the information provided by the State regarding the process of drafting a protocol. However, it noted that such a document should be promoted by undertaking the corresponding consultation in order to obtain free, prior and informed consent.

9. Persons of African descent

232. The concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) on the 22nd to 24th periodic reports of Venezuela, in the context of the 113th session in August 2024, highlighted that, in terms of racial discrimination, Indigenous Peoples and Afro-descendants continue to be victims of structural discrimination, which is reflected in the levels of poverty and social exclusion they face, as well as in the disproportionate impact of the socioeconomic crisis on the enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights.<sup>406</sup>

233. At the same time, CERD stressed that it has no information on concrete results as to the implementation of the Second and Third Socialist Plan for the Economic and Social Development of the Nation, which prioritized fighting racial discrimination against Indigenous Peoples and Afro-descendants.<sup>407</sup> In this sense, it expressed concern about the racial stereotypes that are still ingrained in Venezuelan society; and regretted that it did not receive concrete information on how the history, culture and contributions of Indigenous Peoples and Afro-descendants have been included in the public education system.<sup>408</sup>

234. The Committee recommended that the State of Venezuela intensify efforts so that the National Council for the Development of Afro-descendant Communities elaborate and implement effective public policies that promote equality and the effective exercise and enjoyment of the rights of Afro-descendant persons, taking into account their specific needs. Likewise, special public policies to foster social inclusion and active participation in public and political life of the Afro-descendant population, including in decision-making positions.<sup>409</sup>

235. With respect to the situation of indigenous and Afro-descendant women, CERD highlighted multiple and intersectional forms of discrimination they face, in particular, access to work, education and health, especially sexual and reproductive health services and information.<sup>410</sup> It also observed closely the high rates of sexual violence against indigenous and Afro-descendant women, as well as trafficking for economic and sexual exploitation, particularly in mining areas of the states of Amazonas, Bolivar and Zulia, where armed and criminal non-state organizations operate.<sup>411</sup>

V. CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

236. The absence of the rule of law and of an institutional system guided by the separation and independence of public powers continues to be the greatest challenge for the respect and guarantee of human rights in Venezuela.

237. A presidential election was held on July 28 of this year. The circumstances surrounding this election clearly constitute an alteration of the constitutional order. The regime executed a planned strategy aimed at discouraging the political participation of the opposition, preventing the development of a free, fair and competitive contest, and repressing the social protests provoked by the electoral opacity and the allegations of fraud. All this, with the participation, acquiescence and tolerance of the institutions created to safeguard democracy and protect human rights.

238. The Inter-American Commission highlights that, as of the date of preparation of this report, the State has still failed to present the voting records that support the results announced by the National Electoral Council, which gave Nicolás Maduro as the winner. The electoral opacity and, in general, the restrictions to political rights documented in this report prevent this Commission from considering that the reelection of Nicolás Maduro enjoys democratic legitimacy.

239. The electoral opacity and serious allegations of fraud led to nearly 300 demonstrations nationwide. State repression included practices of State terrorism aimed especially at spreading terror among citizens and silencing dissenting voices. Among the documented violations are: extrajudicial executions, short-term forced disappearances, arbitrary detentions, torture and other cruel, inhumane and degrading treatment, cancellation of passports, violent deaths, and a myriad of violations of judicial guarantees and freedom of expression.

240. The Inter-American Commission notes that impunity persists for serious human rights violations committed in previous years, especially since 2017. This impunity is also a consequence of the lack of separation and independence of the public authorities, in particular, the Judiciary. For such reason, it urges the Prosecutor's Office of the International Criminal Court to formally file a case for the commission of crimes against humanity.

241. The regime has concentrated its political and economic efforts to perpetuate itself in office. To this end, it has relied on schemes of major corruption at all levels of the State. As a result, there have been major omissions in the design and implementation of suitable and effective public policies aimed at guaranteeing the ESCR of groups in a situation of historical discrimination, such as LGBTI people, indigenous peoples, women, Afro-descendants, the elderly, people in a situation of mobility, and, in general, those living in poverty and extreme poverty.

242. The IACHR appeals to the international community to recognize the serious human rights crisis in Venezuela, to remain vigilant against new repressive escalations, and to activate all diplomatic and institutional channels for the return of democracy to the country. It also reaffirms its interest and willingness to visit the country, and therefore formally requests the State's consent to accompany and verify compliance with the following recommendations.

General recommendations and democratic institutions

1. To immediately put an end to political repression and persecution.
2. To immediately and unconditionally release all political prisoners, particularly children and adolescents.
3. To cease arbitrary detention as a form of reprisal against those who manifest a critical opinion or dissident to the regime, human rights defenders and social leaders.
4. To restore constitutional order guaranteeing:
  - i. the independence and balance of powers, in particular, of the Judiciary and the Electoral Power;
  - ii. political participation without any type of repression or discrimination, and;
  - iii. effective citizen control over the actions of the different branches of government.
5. To publish all voting records and allow for an independent audit with international observance.

6. To guarantee a legitimate and peaceful constitutional succession.
7. To adopt suitable and effective measures to ensure the independence of the judiciary and the Public Ministry.

Fight against impunity and administration of justice

8. To immediately release people arbitrarily deprived of liberty.
9. To ensure compliance with the guarantees of due process in all procedural stages related to detentions in the electoral context.
10. To investigate with due diligence all allegations of human rights violations in the electoral context, and to prosecute and punish those materially and intellectually responsible.

Political rights and participation in public life

11. To adapt the domestic regulatory framework to ensure that any disqualification of persons aspiring to hold elected office be imposed pursuant to Inter-American standards.
12. To refrain from illegal or arbitrary detentions, particularly of children and adolescents; and in the event that a person is deprived of liberty, to ensure that all due process guarantees are met, including prompt appearance before a competent, independent and impartial judicial authority.
13. To guarantee the right to vote abroad to Venezuelan nationals who are over 18 years of age and have not been convicted of a criminal offense.

Violence and citizen security

14. To ensure that the use of force is in strict compliance with the principles of exceptionality, legality, necessity, proportionality, non-discrimination and accountability.
15. To immediately and decisively adopt measures to exclude the participation of armed civilian groups in citizen security functions.
16. To ensure that the actions of security and intelligence institutions have external and independent control, which may include, in the particular case of Venezuela, international technical assistance.

Freedom of expression

17. To grant journalists the maximum degree of guarantees so that they are not detained, threatened, assaulted, or have their work materials and tools confiscated because of exercising their profession.
18. To modify ambiguous or vague criminal laws that limit freedom of expression -such as those designed to protect the honor of ideas or institutions or those intended to protect national security or public peace- so as to avoid the use of criminal law to inhibit free democratic debate on matters of interest.
19. To refrain from applying limitations to the operation of websites, blogs, applications, or other internet, electronic, or similar information dissemination systems, including support systems, such as ISPs, or search engines.

Poverty and ESCR

20. To implement economic and fiscal policies with a human rights approach to combat poverty and extreme poverty, as well as to guarantee the ESCR of the population, with special attention placed on the most vulnerable populations and without discrimination.
21. To adopt the necessary measures to ensure that children and adolescents have access to quality health services, including the provision of medicines; especially considering the situation of those who suffer from chronic illnesses.
22. To refrain from any action or conduct that may limit the autonomy of universities, investigating, reviewing and modifying any legislation or practice which undermines it.

Children and adolescents

23. To guarantee access and quality of the right to education for children and adolescents through adequate investment in the educational system, ensuring regular attendance of students and teachers.
24. To strengthen and implement sustainable food programs that ensure continuous and adequate access to nutritious food for children and adolescents, including economic and technical support measures to guarantee meeting their nutritional needs.

Women

25. To adopt the necessary measures to comply with the State's obligation of enhanced due diligence in the prevention, protection, investigation, punishment and reparation of all forms of violence against women.
26. To urgently adopt all necessary measures to make available a varied, accessible and acceptable supply of contraceptive and family planning methods, both female and male, as well as reproductive and maternal health services throughout the country.
27. To review domestic legislation on the voluntary interruption of pregnancy in order to guarantee the effective exercise of the sexual and reproductive rights of girls, women and pregnant women of all ages.

Human rights defenders

28. To immediately cease all acts of harassment and intimidation against human rights defenders, including arbitrary detentions, short-term forced disappearances, criminalization, stigmatization, monitoring and surveillance, among others.
29. To immediately release all human rights defenders who have been arbitrarily detained for their human rights work.
30. To refrain from resorting to invoke criminal offenses against human rights defenders, such as incitement to hatred, public instigation, unlawful association and terrorism.
31. To cease the use of administrative measures, such as the retention and cancellation of identity and travel documents, with the purpose of preventing and/or repressing the work of human rights defenders.

32. To abolish the Law for the Control, Regularization, Performance and Financing of Non-Governmental and Related Organizations; and to guarantee that human rights defenders may perform their activities free from any type of intimidation.

Lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and intersex persons (LGBTI)

33. To take immediate actions aimed at the effective collection and analysis of data on violence and discrimination affecting LGBTI persons.
34. To adopt the necessary measures to guarantee access to justice without discrimination for LGBTI persons, and to conduct impartial and due diligence investigations into deaths or violent crimes against these persons.
35. To adopt a comprehensive legal framework that explicitly protects against bias-based discrimination based on sexual orientation, gender identity, non-normative gender expression or diverse sexual characteristics.

Elders

36. To release persons over 70 years of age deprived of their liberty under pretrial detention.
37. To assist the elderly in extreme poverty by identifying priority cases, incorporating them into existing social programs and providing access to non-contributory pensions.
38. To readjust the economic allocation received through the contributory and non-contributory systems in order to guarantee a dignified life for elderly pensioners; as well as to reactivate pension payments to Venezuelan citizens living abroad.

Persons deprived of liberty

39. To put an end to the intentional deprivation of food and medicine as a tool of coercion or punishment against persons deprived of liberty, particularly those detained for political reasons.
40. To adopt the judicial, legislative and administrative measures required to reduce the inmate population and, in particular, to put an end to the detention of persons in pretrial detention facilities.
41. To guarantee detention conditions compatible with human dignity and respect for fundamental rights that ensure the dignified treatment of persons under custody and meet the needs of this population with respect for the gender perspective and intersectional approaches.

Persons in situation of human mobility

42. To ensure consular services for the processing of essential identification and travel documents.

43. To implement all efforts to inform Venezuelans in mobility situations about possible risks on irregular migration routes, including human trafficking, gender-based violence, abuse and exploitation.
44. To ensure alternative ways to guarantee the reunification of family groups that have been separated since the suspension of the direct air connection, in order to avoid the need to resort to irregular migratory means.

Persons of African descent

45. To adopt the necessary measures to effectively implement the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) on the 22nd to 24th periodic reports of Venezuela.
46. To adopt policies to guarantee the effective enjoyment of the economic, social, cultural and environmental rights of Afro-descendant people, with an intersectional perspective and a focus on Afro-descendant women. In particular, to ensure access to education, health, work, drinking water and a healthy environment.
47. To adopt affirmative actions that encourage and facilitate the effective participation of Afro-descendants in decision-making spaces, guaranteeing equal conditions and opportunities for their access and representation.

Indigenous peoples

48. To guarantee the self-determination and the right to territory of indigenous peoples, particularly in view of the impacts of illegal mining and other illegal economies in the Orinoco Mining Arc.
49. To guarantee equitable and culturally appropriate access to quality health and education services through policies and programs with an intercultural and intersectional approach.
50. To guarantee the right to prior, free and informed consultation with respect to any measure that could directly or indirectly affect indigenous peoples.

REASONED VOTE OF COMMISSIONER CARLOS BERNAL PULIDO REGARDING CHAPTER IV.B-VENEZUELA OF THE 2024 ANNUAL REPORT

With the customary respect for my colleagues and in accordance with Article 19.1 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights ("the Commission" or "the IACHR"), I submit a partial reasoned vote on certain points raised by the majority of the plenary of the Commission in Chapter IV.B corresponding to the State of Venezuela ("the Chapter" or "Chapter IV.B-Venezuela"), of the Annual Report 2024 (the "Report" or the "Annual Report").

Without prejudice to the observations that I will present in this vote, I emphasize the relevant impact that the work carried out by the IACHR in this chapter has on the guarantee of human rights. Notwithstanding, in this reasoned opinion I will analyze, in particular, aspects incorporated into the Chapter on sexual and reproductive rights, abortion, and gender identity.

In particular, I will state that Chapter IV.B: (i) contains considerations that pose a risk for pregnant women and ignore the integral needs of women; (ii) presents an insufficient approach in relation to the approval and use of contraceptive methods; and (iii) is imprecise in relation to the rights of LGBTBI persons.

1. Chapter IV-A contains considerations that pose a risk to women and ignore the integral needs of women.

Paragraph 188 of the Report mentions that "[...] there is still a lack of medical protocols for the provision of therapeutic abortion services, the only one allowed by law, therefore, people seeking an abortion resort to unsafe practices, or must travel to other countries, such as Colombia, to access this health service".

Paragraph 189 states that: "in the framework of the above, the Commission urges the State to adopt legislative, budgetary and public policy measures and any other measure necessary to guarantee, without any discrimination, the availability, accessibility, relevance and quality of sexual and reproductive health facilities, goods and services, under an intersectional and gender-based approach, including access to health services for the voluntary interruption of pregnancy" (Bolding outside the original text).

Consistent with this, recommendation 27 states: "Review domestic legislation on voluntary termination of pregnancy, so as to ensure the effective exercise of the sexual and reproductive rights of girls, women and pregnant women of all ages" (Bolded outside the original text).

Next, I will address the following issues: (i) the non-existence of the right to abortion and the margin of state configuration; (ii) the deficit of protection for the unborn; (iii) the inadequate limitation of sexual and reproductive rights derived from the chapter; and (iii) the invisibilization of women with the use of some terms.

1.1. Non-existence of the right to abortion and the state's margin of configuration

First, I reiterate that there are no binding sources in international law -and especially in the American Convention or other treaties that make up the Inter-American System- that contemplate (i) the so-called right to abortion or (ii) a correlative obligation for States to provide abortion services. Under this framework, the States have a wide margin of configuration - by virtue of the principles of subsidiarity or complementarity and representative democracy - to take measures to protect prenatal life - which is protected by the American Convention<sup>412</sup> - including, although it is not the only means, the use of criminal law.

In his partially dissenting opinion to the judgment in the case of Manuela et al. v. El Salvador, former IACHR Court Judge Eduardo Vio Grossi stated that there is no right to abortion:

"And in this regard it is indisputable that, (...) there is no inter-American or international legal norm, whether conventional, international custom or general principle of law, that recognizes abortion as a right. There are only resolutions of international bodies, most of which are made up of international officials and not representatives of States, decisions which, in addition to not being binding, are not interpretative of current international law but rather reflect aspirations for it to change in the direction they suggest".<sup>413</sup>

In fact, it should be noted that the Inter-American Court recently heard the case of Beatriz v. El Salvador, in which the alleged existence of a "right to abortion" was alleged by the IACHR and the representation of victims. However, in the judgment, the Court did not establish the existence of such a right.<sup>414</sup> This is further evidence of the non-existence of a binding legal source from which an alleged right to abortion is derived.

Now, I emphasize that this margin of configuration derived from the non-existence of a right to abortion and the convergence of rights in tension acquires greater amplitude thanks to the competence that falls to the States to define punishable conducts and their consequences, and to the automatic referral that, according to the IACHR Court, Article 7.2 of the American Convention makes to domestic law for the area of deprivation of liberty -principle of reservation of law- .<sup>415</sup>

This is relevant if one takes into account that, from a systematic reading of Articles 31, 76 and 77 of the American Convention, only through consensus - expressed by the States through the signature and ratification of amendments or treaties - can additional international obligations arise in addition to those already contemplated in the ACHR.

1.2. Deficit of protection for the unborn in the Report

Secondly, I emphasize that the references to abortion ignore the other person whose right to life is also conventionally protected: the unborn person. Thus, the necessary weighting that must exist between the rights in tension of all internationally protected persons is ignored. In this regard, it is emphasized that unborn persons are also subjects of law and holders of the right to life. A pronouncement on abortion always implies a position on a practice that necessarily implies the termination of the life of a dignified human being and that Article 4 of the ACHR protects, so it is necessary to expressly recognize the rights of the unborn person as part of the weighing required in any case of abortion.

In this regard, Article 1.2 of the ACHR clearly establishes that, for the purposes of the Convention, a "person" is every human being.<sup>416</sup> Thus, in light of the Convention, human rights are not only recognized for persons who have already been born, but all individuals must be protected from their conception, understanding them as human beings. Moreover, the IACHR Court itself in its advisory opinion 22 indicated that, without being a matter open to interpretation, the term person is equivalent to the term human being for the purposes of the ACHR.<sup>417</sup>

In view of this, it is clear that the person in gestation is a human being.<sup>418</sup> Even the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights establishes that "the human genome is the basis of the fundamental unity of all members of the human family and of the recognition of their inherent dignity and diversity. In a symbolic sense, the human genome is the heritage of humanity".<sup>419</sup>

The consequence of recognizing the unborn as a person as a human being is that he or she becomes a holder of rights. Thus, the ACHR establishes in the articles that develop rights the formula "Every person (...)".<sup>420</sup> Likewise, the instruments for the protection of human rights generally recognize the ownership of rights by members of the human species, especially the right to life.<sup>421</sup>

Furthermore, in the Artavia Murillo judgment, the Inter-American Court determined that "the protection of the right to life is not absolute, but gradual and incremental as the development of the fetus progresses". This implies that, without prejudice to the concepts of graduality and incrementality (from which I completely separate myself), the Court has already established that persons in gestation must be protected by the State in their "right to life". In a similar sense, in the judgment of the Cuscul Pivaral case,<sup>422</sup> the IACHR Court applied the ACHR to a person in gestation and also applied Article 19 of the ACHR, thus recognizing the legal status of a child to the person in gestation.

In the same vein, I emphasize that the preamble of the Convention on the Rights of the Child states that the child needs protection and care both before and after birth.<sup>423</sup> This implies that, in light of the CRC, the unborn child is a child who requires special care. This was reiterated in the preparatory work for the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.<sup>424</sup>

1.3. Inadequate limitation of sexual and reproductive rights arising from the chapter.

Finally, I call attention to the importance of not limiting so-called sexual and reproductive rights to access to abortion. This is not only because there is no law that enshrines abortion as a guarantee of these rights, but also because this vision simplifies and makes invisible the problems to which women in the region are subjected. Therefore, it impedes the development of debates that would lead to the formulation of comprehensive and integral proposals to address the structural problems faced by women in the region.

1.4. Invisibilization of women through the use of certain terms

The recommendations included in the chapter refer to the term "pregnant person". It is worth mentioning that

"On the other hand, the Court has pointed out that extreme poverty and the lack of adequate medical care for pregnant or post-pregnant women are causes of high maternal mortality and morbidity, so the States must provide adequate health policies that allow to offer assistance with adequately trained personnel for the care of births, policies to prevent maternal mortality through adequate pre-natal and post-partum controls, and legal and administrative instruments in health policies that allow to adequately document cases of maternal mortality. Likewise, the Court has recognized that, by virtue of Article 19 of the Convention, the State must assume a special position of guarantor with greater care and responsibility, and must take special measures guided by the principle of the best interests of the child."

United Nations. General Assembly. Report of the Third Committee on the Draft International Covenants on Human Rights. A/3764. P. 40.

the gestational process is one that is protected by international human rights law. Thus, the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women,<sup>425</sup> the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR),<sup>426</sup> and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women<sup>427</sup> provide special protection for pregnant women.

This right to the protection of pregnancy has been established in international instruments for women. Thus, for example, the CEDAW refers to the necessary protection of "women during pregnancy";<sup>428</sup> and the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women refers to the protection measures that must be granted to "women who are subjected to violence when they are pregnant".<sup>429</sup> In this sense, the term woman is directly established in the international instruments in relation to the gestational process, but not other terms such as the pregnant person used by the majority of the Commission in the chapter referred to in this vote.

On this matter, I take this opportunity to express my concern regarding a trend of invisibilization that has been generated in international law in relation to terms that are intrinsically related to the fact of being a woman, in order to implement an apparently "neutral" or "more inclusive" language. Thus, terms such as woman pregnant or pregnant have been replaced by "pregnant person", woman by "menstruating person", or mother by "parent".

This trend, far from being more inclusive, has devastating effects for women. The replacement of the term woman negates the years of struggle to make women visible in international law instruments. Thus, through language, it erases women the protection of international law. Furthermore, it prevents the recognition in international law of realities that have a special impact on women and require differentiated measures, such as pregnancy, maternity or breastfeeding. Finally, it reduces women to their reproductive characteristics, reducing their nature to beings that gestate or menstruate. In relation to the use of these terms, it is important to have open and democratic dialogues that take into consideration the consequences and impacts of their use before they are included in the Commission's documents

2. Inadequate approach to contraceptive method approval and use

Paragraph 188 of the chapter states that "In the same vein, media reports indicate limited access to contraceptive methods by women living in rural areas and indigenous communities, where the highest rates of teenage pregnancies are found".

In view of this, I criticize the fact that the majority of the Commission has opted to promote the guarantee of contraceptive methods and has rejected the inclusion in the Report of a paragraph urging States to accompany such measures with education and awareness-raising initiatives on the use of these methods, information on the possible specific physical effects they entail and their impact on the right to health. I emphasize that freedom in decision-making is not limited to the opening of options. True freedom comes when sufficient information is provided to make decisions.

In this regard, the World Health Organization has indicated that the adoption of the contraceptive method will depend on "the general state of health of the person", among other criteria.<sup>430</sup> This is of great relevance, since it shows that not every contraceptive method is suitable for every person and that, in this context, the provision of contraceptives may represent a health risk in specific cases. Thus, it is essential that individuals receive adequate guidance on existing contraceptive methods so that they can make an informed choice of the most appropriate option for them.

Only with proper guidance can it be guaranteed that persons who use contraceptive methods give their informed consent, an essential guarantee that derives from the conventional text.<sup>431</sup> With regard to informed consent, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has stated that:

"The concept of informed consent consists of a prior decision to accept or submit to a medical act in a broad sense, obtained freely, i.e. without threats or coercion, inducement or improper inducements, expressed after obtaining adequate, complete, reliable, understandable and accessible information, provided that this information has been truly understood, which will allow the full consent of the individual. Informed consent is the positive decision to undergo a medical act, derived from a process of prior, free and informed decision or choice, which constitutes a bidirectional mechanism of interaction in the doctor-patient relationship".<sup>432</sup>

In relation to this, in the case of I.V. v. Bolivia, the Court reproached that the victim never had the possibility of knowing and weighing different alternatives of contraceptive methods.<sup>433</sup> In this case, the IACHR emphasized the importance of people having the necessary information to make an informed decision. In this context, the Court highlighted the relevance of addressing the effects or impacts of the method for free choice.<sup>434</sup>

Thus, the autonomy of individuals in the choice of contraceptive methods can only be guaranteed when they have the capacity to consent to their use or non-use with the necessary information. It is therefore particularly unfortunate that the approved Chapter has deliberately omitted these elements.

3. Inaccuracies in relation to the rights of LGBTI persons

In paragraph 206, it states "Venezuela continues to produce no official data on violence and discrimination affecting LGBTI persons. Despite this, there is no legal framework that guarantees their fundamental rights without discrimination, including their rights of association, freedom of expression, recognition of diverse families and gender identity." In relation to this, below, I will refer to: (i) the non-existence of a right to gender identity and (ii) non-existence of the right to marriage or adoption in same-sex couples.

3.1. Non-existence of the right to gender identity

Paragraph 206 includes among the rights of LGBTI persons the right to gender identity. In this regard, I reiterate that the American Convention does not expressly contemplate a right to gender identity, nor is there a binding instrument in the Inter-American System that establishes an obligation to adapt identification documents to gender identity.

As I have indicated, recognizing new rights that are not in the Convention through an interpretation that does not follow the procedures established in the Convention itself would undermine Articles 31, 76 and 77, ignoring the original will of the States that ratified the Convention.

Therefore, any pronouncement in which one of the organs of the ISHR applies a right that is not established in the binding instruments of international law that govern its activity will be an act that will violate the literal meaning of the American Convention and will exceed the scope of the competences of the IACHR or the Court, as the case may be. Such an irregular constitutive act would also undermine the principles of good faith and pacta sunt servanda.<sup>435</sup>

On the other hand, although I am not unaware that OC-24/17 affirmed the existence of the so-called "right to gender identity" and of the obligation to adapt identification documents to the self-perceived gender identity in the terms indicated in this Chapter, I emphasize that the Advisory Opinions of the IACHR Court do not have the capacity to contemplate rights or obligations other than those expressly contemplated by the American Convention.<sup>436</sup>

In this regard, in the first place, Article 68 of the Convention is clear in that the States are obliged to comply with the decisions rendered by the Court "in any case to which they are parties". This provision is of great relevance in that (i) it is the only one that refers to the legal value of the Court's pronouncements and (ii) it circumscribes the binding nature expressly for the States parties to a case, thus limiting the addressee of the obligations -the State party to a case- and the context in which the pronouncement is issued -that is, the contentious one-. This position has also been sustained by some sectors of the doctrine, also based on the principle of consent of the States as the basis of conventional law.<sup>437</sup>

Secondly, specifically regarding OC-24/17, it is appropriate to take into consideration Article 64 of the ACHR, which circumscribes the competence of the Court to issue advisory opinions regarding the Convention or treaties of the Inter-American System. Thus, given that OC-24/17 establishes alleged rights not contemplated in the ACHR, nor in any other treaty of the IAHRs, its binding nature is even more questionable.

Thirdly, to derive obligations or so-called rights not contemplated in the Convention, based exclusively on an advisory opinion, would be contrary to the principle of pacta sunt servanda that governs international treaty law, by virtue of which States are only bound to comply with that to which they have expressed their consent.<sup>438</sup>

Fourth, although the Inter-American Court has affirmed that advisory opinions are parameters of conventionality control,<sup>439</sup> I emphasize that an open and transparent inter-American dialogue is still necessary to further discuss this position, which is not expressly derived from the American Convention, nor from any other international instrument binding on the States. I call attention to the fact that there is still no consensus on the matter, neither in the States of the region nor in the academy; hence, important constitutional courts still refrain from invoking the figure of conventionality control and from incorporating advisory opinions as a parameter.<sup>440</sup>

Finally, I note that some authors have indicated that the extension of the effects of the advisory opinions could contribute to distort the functioning of the Inter-American System and, thus, weaken it, since (i) it results in equating the decisions issued in the advisory function of the Court with the text of the convention itself,<sup>441</sup> and (ii) blurs the differences between the jurisdictional and advisory functions of the Court. Some have even indicated that these interpretations of the Court generate legal uncertainty, since there is no certainty as to the effects with which the advisory opinions are issued.<sup>442</sup>

By virtue of the above, given that there is no conventional right to gender identity in the ISHR, it is possible to affirm that there are no correlative obligations of recognition of this right on the part of the States.

3.2. No right to marriage or adoption in same-sex couples

First, I reiterate that there is no treaty provision that obliges States to recognize same-sex marriages. As I have mentioned on several occasions, the treaties that are part of the Inter-American Human Rights System and grant competence to the Inter-American Commission do not contemplate any obligation with respect to the recognition of marriage between same-sex couples. This absence of obligation derives from the literal wording of the American Convention, which clearly establishes that marriage is a right reserved for "man and woman":

"The right of men and women to marry and to found a family if they are of age and meet the conditions required by domestic law, insofar as these do not affect the principle of non-discrimination established in this Convention, is recognized."<sup>443</sup> (Boldface outside of original text).

Therefore, in accordance with the hermeneutic principle that calls for a literal and good faith interpretation,<sup>444</sup> the State is only obliged to recognize the right to marriage for the couples specifically mentioned in Article 17(2) of the American Convention.

It is essential to underline that, according to the jurisprudence of the International Court of Justice, the good faith interpretation of a treaty should not result in changing the literal wording of the treaties or in inferring what is not expressly contained in the text. This approach implies that the interpreter must assume that the parties intended what follows from the ordinary meaning of the terms used in the international agreement.<sup>445</sup> The text-centered approach to treaty interpretation is not only accepted in the field of international law, but is also highly recommended, since it is based on the only empirically verifiable evidence of the intentions of States: the text of the treaty itself.<sup>446</sup>

Following these rules of interpretation, the European Court of Human Rights has considered the conception of marriage as that between a man and a woman - as established in the European Convention on Human Rights, in a provision similar to that of the ACHR.<sup>447</sup> In this sense, the European Court supports the idea that there is no binding obligation for States to recognize marriage between same-sex couples, which leaves a wide margin of State configuration for the regulation of this matter.<sup>448</sup> Likewise, in terms of the European Court of Human Rights:

"The Court reiterates that, according to Article 14 in conjunction with Article 8, States are free to restrict marriage only to opposite-sex couples and have a certain margin of configuration to decide the exact nature of the legal status granted by other means of legal recognition."<sup>449</sup>

Colombia*), Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2016, p. 116-123, paras. 34-38, 46. Although the International Court of Justice did not rely exclusively on the literal criterion of interpretation, this was one of the first criteria taken into account by that Tribunal to dismiss the interpretation of the Colombian party.

On this point, it is worth noting that this same approach is upheld by the European Court in the cases Orlandi v. Italy<sup>450</sup> and Fedotova and others v. Russia.<sup>451</sup> Indeed, in both cases, the European Court held that, although States must provide mechanisms for the protection of same-sex unions, this protection does not necessarily derive from the recognition of same-sex marriages.

Under this framework, I fully agree that the margin available to the States in this regard concerns both the form of recognition and the content of the protection to be granted to same-sex couples, which cannot be translated into an absolute absence of protection.

Secondly, I would like to point out that there is no international instrument that establishes obligations of recognition regarding adoption for same-sex couples, so that the States have a wide margin of configuration in this matter. However, it is essential to establish that any decision taken in this regard must consider the best interests of the child or adolescent,<sup>452</sup> who are the persons protected by the figure of adoption.

<sup>450</sup> ECHR. Orlandi v Italy. "The Court reiterates that States are still free, under Article 12 of the Convention as well as under Article 14 taken in conjunction with Article 8, to restrict access to marriage to different sex. The same holds for Article 14 taken in conjunction with Article 12 (see Oliari and Others, cited above, § 193)." (Translation: The Court reiterates that States remain free under Article 12 of the Convention, as well as Article 14 in conjunction with Article 8, to restrict access to marriage to different sex couples. The same applies to Article 14 in conjunction with Article 12). Para. 192.

<sup>451</sup> In this case, the Court analyzed -only- the possible violation of Article 8 of the ECHR, which refers to the right of individuals not to be subjected to arbitrary interference by the State in their private life. In the case of same-sex couples, the Court established that the lack of a legal framework that allows same-sex couples to have their relationship recognized and protected under national law may generate significant obstacles in the daily life of these couples. Without prejudice to the foregoing, it established that the State may enjoy a margin of appreciation to determine the form of registration of same-sex unions, which implies that this registration should not necessarily be through the figure of marriage.

FOLLOW-UP OF RECOMMENDATIONS ISSUED BY THE IACHR IN ITS COUNTRY OR THEMATIC REPORTSTHIRD FOLLOW-UP REPORT ON THE RECOMMENDATIONS ISSUED BY THE IACHR IN THE 2021 REPORT ON THE SITUATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN BRAZIL<sup>1</sup>

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Background information: In loco visit and report on the human rights situation

1. The purpose of this document is to follow up on the recommendations issued in the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Brazil (Brazil Report, Report on Brazil, Country Report, or IACHR Report), approved by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR, Inter-American Commission on Commission) on February 12, 2021.<sup>2</sup> The IACHR Report was the result of the in loco visit conducted to Brazil between November 5 and 12, 2018, as part of its continuous monitoring of the human rights situation in the continent and in accordance with Article 106 of the Charter of the Organization of American States (OAS).

2. The purpose of the in loco visit to Brazil was to carry out a comprehensive diagnostic assessment of the human rights situation in the country. Taking into consideration its vast territory and the particularities of each region and federal state of Brazil, the Commission focused on specific issues and groups that are linked to historical processes of discrimination and structural inequality.

3. As a result of the visit, the Commission approved and released the Brazil Report, comprised of the following chapters: “Historical discrimination and socioeconomic discrimination as factors causing structural inequality;” “Other groups at special risk;” “Citizen security;” “Impunity;” “Democratic institutions and human rights;” and “Freedom of expression and information.” These chapters include a detailed analysis of the extreme inequality and vulnerability of certain specific population groups in Brazil, which is a consequence of the historical discrimination to which they have always been subjected.

4. In the aforementioned report, the Commission noted that, despite the existence of the Rule of Law and a democratic system and several human rights institutions in place, the country faces structural challenges in overcoming issues related to historically neglected discrimination. Furthermore, the Commission stated that these challenges have an exacerbated impact on specific groups, such as Afro-descendants, women, Quilombola communities, indigenous peoples, peasant and rural workers, homeless persons and persons living in slums or peripheral urban areas.<sup>3</sup>

5. The Commission also found that structural discrimination is intrinsically linked to social exclusion and access to land, which has thus built a cycle of inequality and extreme poverty. It further indicated that this situation exposes persons in vulnerable situations to violence perpetrated by criminal organizations such as militias and drug-trafficking groups, as well as by groups engaged in human trafficking and other modern forms of slavery.

6. The Commission considered that the identified challenges have a negative impact on citizen security. It has also expressed that, despite the fact that extreme inequality leads to an increase in violence that affects persons in vulnerable situations, the State has devised and implemented security policies that entail violent and punitive institutional action by a militarized police force, which has resulted in serious human rights violations. In this context, the Inter-American Commission also analyzed the role of judicial authorities in the implementation of such policies.

7. In addition, the Commission observed that the poverty and extreme poverty faced by some historically discriminated population groups makes it difficult for them to have full and effective access to justice, which thus hinders the enjoyment of their rights. These people are at a disadvantage compared to the rest of the population, as they are more frequently exposed to institutional violence.

8. In particular, the Commission noted that security policies entail racial profiling practices that increase the risk of Afro-descendants and residents of outlying districts to arbitrary detention and abuse. This issue especially is clearly seen in places housing persons deprived of liberty—which are often overcrowded and become institutional environments that condone torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment—, such as prison centers, socioeducational facilities and therapeutic communities.

9. In addition, the Commission took note of the high level of impunity in cases of institutional violence, which, for the most part, have not seen progress in terms of investigation, conviction or reparation for the victims by the justice system. It also pointed out that, despite clear differences, this state of impunity is comparable to that observed with respect to crimes committed during the civil-military dictatorship. While the Inter-American Commission acknowledged the progress made by truth commissions at the state and federal levels in relation to cases of torture and forced disappearance, it underscored that, for the most part, these remain unpunished.

10. In its Country Report, the Commission also observed the increase in the number of threats made by authorities against the lives of journalists and media workers, especially after the 2018 general election, as well as the rise in hate crimes against persons of diverse sexual orientation, gender identity and/or expression, and diverse sexual characteristics.

11. At the institutional level, the Commission conducted a diagnostic assessment of the measures taken to respect and guarantee human rights in the country, such as the implementation of mechanisms to prevent torture and the strengthening of prosecutor's offices and national human rights institutions. It also took note of important public policies that sought, at that time, to bridge the gap of structural inequality and make progress in the fight against racism and historical discrimination, such as the programs focused on income transfer and access to housing and land, and the policies to promote Afro-descendants' and indigenous persons' access to higher education.

12. In its Country Report, the Commission issued 89 recommendations with a view to consolidating a system to promote and protect human rights, in accordance with the commitments made by the State in the inter-American and international spheres. It also issued a series of warnings to Brazil about actions that tend to undermine and even dismantle this system, such as the weakening of democratic spaces.

B. Human rights situation in Brazil after the release of the Country Report

13. From the release of the Country Report in February 2021 to date, the Commission continued to follow up on the human rights situation in Brazil on an ongoing basis, through several different mechanisms, including monitoring, precautionary measures, Article 41 letters, press releases and hearings.

14. According to Chapter V of the 2022 Annual Report,<sup>4</sup> during that year, the Commission observed that the problems and challenges identified in its early 2021 Country Report persisted and had escalated in

Brazil and were mostly exacerbated during the October 2022 electoral process. In this context, the Commission noted with concern the acts of violence motivated by the political context, as well as hate and discriminatory speech against leaders, which deepened the existing polarization. On this account, the Commission called on the State to prevent violence by guaranteeing protection and security measures during the elections, and to properly investigate these facts.<sup>5</sup>

15. For its part, the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE) of the Commission called on electoral authorities, political parties and persons who held or aspired to hold elected office to protect the public debate and the observance of human rights, taking into account their special responsibilities in the exercise of their right to freedom of expression. The RELE further indicated that it had received reports of various stigmatizing statements and verbal attacks having been made against the press and human rights defenders by political leaders. Moreover, it stated that it had received information about speeches that had allegedly been aimed at jeopardizing the electoral process and democratic institutions, and that could exacerbate or encourage discrimination and violence, as well as information about demonstrations that had allegedly interfered with the enforcement of judicial rulings or could have encouraged the disregard of electoral results.<sup>6</sup>

16. In September 2022, the Commission welcomed the special measures adopted by state institutions to carry out free and fair elections on October 2. On that occasion, it exhorted the State to make every effort to prevent and combat any act of intolerance that could result in political violence.<sup>7</sup> The Commission recognizes that, despite the considerable tension experienced by the democratic system throughout the electoral process, the solid institutional framework of Brazil—based on the system of checks and balances and the Rule of Law—ensured the maintenance of democracy in the country.

17. However, in the post-election period, the Commission and the RELE condemned the rise in episodes of violence and intolerance associated with the elections and urged the State to ensure the safety of all persons, to diligently investigate said acts of violence and to foster full respect for democracy and public debate.<sup>8</sup> Particularly, on January 8, 2023, serious events took place in Brasília, when thousands of supporters of the former president of the Republic stormed broke into and took over the headquarters of Congress, the seat of the executive branch and the Federal Supreme Court (STF), demanding the intervention of military forces. The Commission recalls that these acts were widely rejected in the international arena as well as in Brazil.

18. The Commission notes that these serious acts were the result of the context it had described in its press releases of August and December 2022. On that occasion, the Commission condemned the attacks on institutions and the violence that had broken out in the capital city, since this constituted an assault on democracy. The Commission also emphasized that the right of assembly must be exercised peacefully, without the use of weapons and in strict observance of the Rule of Law, stressing that all those persons involved in and responsible for the acts of violence should be investigated and punished.<sup>9</sup> For its part, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights condemned the “attack on the heart of Brazilian democracy” and pointed out that this had been “the culmination of the sustained distortion of facts and incitement to violence and hatred by political, social and economic actors who have been fueling an atmosphere of distrust, division, and destruction by rejecting the result of democratic elections.”<sup>10</sup>

C. Report on follow-up of recommendations

19. After the release of its Country Report, the Commission issued two additional reports on the follow-up of the recommendations contained therein. These were incorporated into Chapter V of both the 2022<sup>11</sup> and 2023<sup>12</sup> Annual Reports, in which the Commission determined the levels of compliance with each recommendation on the basis of the information submitted by the State and civil society organizations.

20. This is the third report on the follow-up of the recommendations published in the Country Report. For its preparation, on September 4, 2024, the Inter-American Commission requested information from the State of Brazil on its compliance with said recommendations, and the State submitted its response on October 22, 2024. The Commission also requested civil society organizations to report on the progress made—to their knowledge—in terms of compliance and the challenges that persisted to the implementation of the recommendations.<sup>13</sup> The Commission appreciates the information submitted by both parties, which was incorporated into the instant follow-up report where appropriate.

21. To prepare this report, the Commission also took into account the information it had gathered when monitoring the overall human rights situation in the country and during public hearings, as well as inputs from the precautionary measure mechanism and the requests for information made pursuant to Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights, information produced by United Nations agencies, information available at other public sources and the decisions and recommendations made by specialized international entities.

22. On January 3rd, 2025, the Commission sent a copy of the preliminary draft of the instant report to the State, in pursuance of Article 59.10 of its Rules of Procedure, and requested it to submit its observations thereof. On February 7th, 2025, the Commission received the observations and comments from the State, which were incorporated herein where appropriate. The full version of the contributions is annexed hereto. The final report was approved by the Commission on March 7th, 2025.

23. This follow-up report is divided into three sections: i) Introduction; ii) Follow-up on the recommendations of the Country Report; and iii) Conclusions, progress and challenges in complying with the recommendations of the Country Report. The follow-up on the recommendations is organized around different thematic areas: the institutional underpinning of human rights; economic, social, cultural and environmental rights (ESCER); citizen security; access to justice; persons of African descent; indigenous peoples and traditional Quilombola communities; women; children and adolescents; lesbians, gays, bisexuals, trans and intersex persons (LGBTI); persons with disabilities; persons deprived of liberty; human rights defenders; human trafficking; forced internal displacement; human mobility migration, asylum and statelessness; and memory, truth and justice.

24. To analyze and determine the level of implementation of the recommendations, the Commission took into consideration the measures adopted by the State in 2024 and the current human rights context, in accordance with the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the

Furthermore, information was provided by the Public Defender's Office of the state of São Paulo (DPE/SP) and the National Human Rights Council (CNDH).

Inter-American Commission on Human Rights.<sup>14</sup> Each recommendation is included in the report followed by related information that the Commission learned while carrying out its follow-up in 2024. The report then presents an analysis of the level of compliance with the recommendation and outlines the main advances made and challenges encountered in implementing it. The analysis of each recommendation concludes with guidelines on the measures that are still needed to advance their implementation or with the information that needs to be reported to assess progress in their level of compliance.

II. FOLLOW-UP ON RECOMMENDATIONS

A. The institutional underpinning of human rights

Recommendation No. 1. Strengthen the State and autonomous bodies responsible for formulating, implementing, and appraising public policies with human rights focus and geared to guaranteeing the rights of the most vulnerable groups. In particular:

- a. Restore the comprehensive budget appropriation for the Ministry of Women, the Family, and Human Rights, giving priority to the portfolios for promoting the rights of at-risk and/or vulnerable groups and pay special heed to bolstering the structure and budget of the Program to Protect Human Rights Defenders, thereby guaranteeing implementation of effective and efficacious protection measures.
- b. Allocate a specific budget appropriation for both the Federal Public Defender's Office and state Public Defenders' Offices. Organizational and managerial autonomy is a key factor for guaranteeing institutional independence and enhancing full and free access to justice for vulnerable groups.
- c. Provide all the resources and functional independence needed to operate both the National Mechanism to Prevent and Combat Torture and the corresponding state mechanism, as established in the Optional Protocol to the United Nations Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

25. In the 2023 follow-up report, regarding section "a" of the recommendation, the State reported the creation of new ministries and a budget allocation for the protection of human rights. Although this implies that the recommendation progressed to a partial level of compliance, the Commission underscored the lack of information on the strengthening of the National Program to Protect Human Rights Defenders (PPDDH). Regarding section "b," the State highlighted an increase in the budget allocation and the number of positions for public defenders, but the Commission noted that this was not sufficient to ensure an effective protection of human rights, especially for the most vulnerable groups, and, therefore, considered that compliance with this part remained pending. With respect to section "c" of the recommendation, the State referred to the allocation of funds for the mechanisms to prevent and combat torture, but the Commission expressed its concern over the lack of specific information on their operation, and therefore considered that compliance with this portion of the recommendation was still pending.<sup>15</sup>

26. With regard to section "a," the Commission reiterated the importance of continuing to strengthen state bodies linked to the protection and defense of human rights, as well as the PPDDH. As regards section "b," it highlighted the importance of strengthening the Federal Public Defender's Office (DPU). Finally, regarding section "c," the Commission pointed to the importance of strengthening and ensuring the operation of the bodies that make up the National System to Prevent and Combat Torture (SNPCT), as well as of guaranteeing that all states have mechanisms in place for this purpose.<sup>16</sup>

27. In relation to section “a,” the State reported increases in budget allocations to the following entities in 2024 compared to 2023: from 466.26 million Brazilian reais to 528.99 million Brazilian reais to the Ministry of Human Rights and Citizenship (MDHC), which, according to the State, demonstrates the government has prioritized expanding public policies for the promotion and protection of human rights; from 149 million Brazilian reais to 480 million Brazilian reais to the Ministry of Women; from 91.8 million Brazilian reais to 180.4 million Brazilian reais to the Ministry of Racial Equality (MIR); and from 813.10 million Brazilian reais to 1.39 trillion Brazilian reais to the National Foundation of Indigenous Peoples, an agency under the Ministry of Indigenous Peoples (MPI).<sup>17</sup>

28. Regarding the PPDDH, the State informed that the Sales Pimenta Working Group (Sales Pimenta WG), set up in 2023 to engage in a dialogue with the civil society, is working on the drafting of a national plan for the protection of human rights defenders, communicators and environmentalists. Up to the time of reporting, this working group had held nine ordinary meetings and had scheduled an additional three for the remainder of 2024. According to the State, contributions from the civil society to the aforementioned national plan are currently being systematized prior to the drafting of the final document, which will be submitted to the National Congress.<sup>18</sup>

29. Regarding section “b,” on the strengthening of the Federal Public Defender’s Office, the State reported that its budget in 2024 was 710.4 million Brazilian reais, in addition to a sum of 14.8 million Brazilian reais allocated for reparations following the floods in the state of Rio Grande do Sul. The State pointed out that the Federal Public Defender’s Office has a specific constitutional mandate to protect human rights and is operational in all states of the country, and its work is complemented by that of one national human rights public defender and 28 regional defenders. It further indicated that the Federal Public Defender’s Office has 70 service desks in place covering all states, including in 26 state capitals and 44 other cities across the country, which, according to the State, reinforces its strategic presence in certain regions. Moreover, the State reported that the Federal Public Defender’s Office has set up working groups (WGs) that operate strategically to defend human rights.<sup>19</sup>

30. Finally, in relation to section “c,” the State indicated that 102.88 million Brazilian reais were allocated exclusively for the implementation of the activities comprised in the National Program to Prevent and Combat Torture. It added that 17 states have implemented local mechanisms to prevent and combat torture, namely Acre, Amazonas, Amapá, Pará, Rondônia, Mato Grosso, Mato Grosso do Sul, Tocantins, Maranhão, Piauí, Ceará, Pernambuco, Paraíba, Alagoas, Sergipe, Espírito Santo and Rio de Janeiro. Out of these, five are fully operational: Acre, Rio de Janeiro, Rondônia, Paraíba and Sergipe. The State also pointed out that the Pernambuco mechanism was suspended in January 2023, since its creation was established by decree, which contravenes the Optional Protocol to the United Nations Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (OPCAT).<sup>20</sup>

31. In addition, the Public Defender’s Office of the state of São Paulo informed the Commission that it is the entity with the largest number of prison units (182), in which one third of the persons deprived of liberty in the country are hosted (202,000). Nonetheless, the state of São Paulo has not yet created a state mechanism to prevent and combat torture. The State of Brazil also pointed out that, in 2024, the DPE/SP and the Public Prosecutor’s Office of the state of São Paulo filed a public civil action to ensure the creation of a mechanism of that sort, in response to which the court of first instance issued a preliminary decision directing both the state and the country to submit a plan to create the mechanism within six months, although the decision was reversed by the appellate court. The DPE/SP stated that, during visits to prison units in São Paulo,

National Mechanism authorities observed several human rights violations being perpetrated against persons deprived of liberty.<sup>21</sup>

32. Specifically on section “c,” civil society organizations stated that the report of the National Mechanism to Prevent and Combat Torture (MNPCT), in cooperation with the state mechanisms of Rio de Janeiro, Paraíba and Rondônia, allegedly indicates that Brazil is far from effectively complying with the OPCAT 16 years after its adoption. In addition, they pointed out that prevention mechanisms lack financial, institutional and structural independence, and that, out of the 23 states where prevention committees are in place, only three do not involve security forces or administrators of places of deprivation of liberty, which is a factor that negatively affects the committees’ autonomy. Other problems mentioned included the lack of resources, insufficient regulations, state control over the composition of said bodies, limited participation of the civil society and lack of inclusive measures in terms of gender, race and sexuality.<sup>22</sup>

33. The Commission also had access to the report published by the MNPCT on the prison and mental health system in São Paulo, which described a series of violations, such as beatings, inadequate use of weapons and unsanitary conditions in several units, as well as claims of inmates suffering hunger and poor healthcare. It highlighted that, in the sites that were inspected, there were dark and dirty cells, known as the “ghost train,” and that a differentiated disciplinary regime (RDD) was applied, under which persons deprived of liberty are guarded exclusively by emergency response teams (made up of prison officers trained to act in emergency cases) and are not engaged in a plan designed to reintegrate them into society. With regard to the mental health sector, the MNPCT underscored that the Experimental Health Unit (UES) has been holding individuals under involuntary commitment for over 17 years in an environment that is a combination of an asylum and a prison. The MNPCT recommended shutting down units such as the UES and the Alcohol and Drug Users Prolonged Care Service (SCP-AD) for failing to comply with the rules of the Psychosocial Care Network (RAPS). Finally, the report stressed the urgent need for a reform of the prison and mental health system in São Paulo to guarantee the respect for the human rights and dignity of persons deprived of liberty.<sup>23</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

34. Regarding section “a” of this recommendation, the Commission appreciates the increase in the budget allocation to all ministries, which demonstrates the State’s commitment to the human rights agenda. On the issue of human rights defenders, the Commission notes that the Sales Pimenta WG is an important space for dialogue with the civil society for the participatory development of a national plan to protect human rights defenders, communicators and environmentalists. Given that this national plan is still at the drafting stage, the Commission determines that the level of compliance with this recommendation continues to be partial.

35. With regard to section “b,” the Commission notes the importance of all States having Federal Public Defender’s Office offices in place, covering 26 capitals and 44 cities. However, in 2023, the Commission voiced its concern over information according to which the number of public defenders in the country remained very low for the effective guarantee and protection of the human rights of all persons. It did not receive information pointing to its increase this year. In view of the above, the Commission determines that compliance with this portion of the recommendation is still pending. Regarding section “c,” the Commission is concerned about the fact that only five mechanisms in Brazilian states are in operation, which, added to the reports from civil society organizations and the DPE/SP, led it to determine that the level of compliance with this component is still pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

36. To declare full compliance with section “a” of this recommendation, the Commission requires the State to continue strengthening the aforementioned ministries so as to consolidate the general human rights agenda in the country. Additionally, it underscores the importance of developing and implementing a national plan to protect human rights defenders, communicators and environmentalists. In relation to section “b,” it highlights the importance of increasing the budget and the number of public defenders with a view to serving the entire population, especially persons in situations of special vulnerability and who are located far away from the state capitals. Finally, in order for the State to achieve compliance with section “c,” the Commission underscores the importance of strengthening the MNPCT and ensuring that all states have local mechanisms in place. It also urges the State to guarantee the participation of the civil society in these processes.

Recommendation No. 2. Ratify the following Conventions:

- a. the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity;
- b. the Inter-American Convention against All Forms of Discrimination and Intolerance.

37. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide information on the ratification of the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, but it indicated that it was working to ratify the Inter-American Convention against All Forms of Discrimination and Intolerance. In this outlook, several ministries sent a note to the president of the Republic to be forwarded to the National Congress highlighting the importance of said ratification. For this reason, the Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation was pending and noted that, to move forward with its implementation, the ratification of the aforementioned international instruments was necessary.<sup>24</sup>

Information on compliance

38. In the 2024 report, the State informed that it is making efforts to ratify the Inter-American Convention against All Forms of Discrimination and Intolerance, which is soon to be submitted to the National Congress.<sup>25</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

39. Considering that the international instruments mentioned in the recommendation have not yet been ratified, the Commission concludes that compliance with the recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

40. The Commission emphasizes that compliance with this recommendation will be achieved only with the ratification of the aforementioned international instruments and, to assess progress in its implementation, it urges the State to report on the stages completed by both the executive and the legislative branches.

B. Economic, social, cultural and environmental rights

Recommendation No. 3. Establish a coordinated fiscal policy that can redistribute the wealth needed to overcome equality gaps, correct market shortcomings, and make the investments needed to fulfill human rights, especially economic, social, and cultural rights.

- a. Revise legislation and other legal provisions that withdraw or curtail funds for policies relating to economic, social, and cultural rights.
- b. Install technical committees to evaluate fiscal projections, drawing on objective analyses by fiscal and budget experts from the best schools in the country before drafting amendments in accordance with the principles of proactive transparency, timely information, and citizen participation.

c. Establish channels for social participation in the processes of drawing up and adopting fiscal laws and policies, especially when the adoption of those instruments could entail violating the principle that there must be no backsliding when it comes to human rights.

41. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported on several measures adopted to guarantee economic, social, cultural and environmental rights and reduce inequalities. Among these, it highlighted the implementation of the new Bolsa Família (Family allowance) program, the Single Registry for social programs and the Program to Urgently Reinforce the Single Registry in the Single Social Assistance System (PROCAD-SUAS), aimed at strengthening families' access to basic rights such as health, education and social assistance. In addition, the State promoted strategies against deforestation and re-established cultural policies through the Ministry of Culture. The Commission appreciated these initiatives, noting that, although they were at an initial stage, they constituted important steps forward. In view of the above, it considered that the level of compliance with section "a" of the recommendation progressed to partial, while sections "b" and "c" remained pending.<sup>26</sup>

42. To have this recommendation complied with, the Commission stressed the need for the State to revise regulations that restrict the allocation of resources for policies relating to ESCER, as well as to mobilize the maximum available resources to guarantee the progressiveness of these rights, avoiding any form of regression. It also exhorted the State to submit concrete and updated information on the fiscal policy measures adopted.<sup>27</sup>

43. In the 2024 report, with respect to section "a," the State highlighted the implementation of the direct income transfer program titled Bolsa Família, targeted at families living in poverty and extreme poverty. According to data recorded in September 2024, 14.1 billion Brazilian reais have been transferred to 20.7 million families, which translates into 54,305 million people receiving an average sum of 648.27 Brazilian reais. The top beneficiaries of this program are women and girls, who account for 58 percent of the total number of recipients, as well as families of African descent, which make up 72.9 percent of the beneficiaries. Priority was also given to assisting 233,000 indigenous families, which is equal to 705,000 persons. Moreover, the program has assisted 1.6 million families living in territories where an emergency or a public disaster has been declared.<sup>28</sup> Additionally, it was noted that in December 2024, 5,486,157 families benefited from the "Auxílio Gás dos Brasileiros" program.<sup>29</sup>

44. The State also reported on the Benefício de Prestação Continuada (Continuous salary benefit, BPC) program, which ensures the monthly payment of a minimum salary to older persons or persons with disabilities who cannot support themselves, or whose families cannot support them. In August 2024, the total number of beneficiaries reached 6.12 million, a 6.47 percent increase over the number served in January of the same year. In addition, the State reported that Law No. 14,809/2024 had been passed, which expanded the scope of allocation of the BPC, especially to persons living in regions affected by the collapse of dams. In December 2024, the number of beneficiaries reached 6,292,449, of whom 3,569,056 are persons with disabilities and 2,723,393 are older adults, with a total of nearly R$ 9 million paid that month alone, considering the value of a monthly minimum wage per beneficiary. From January to December 2024, more than R$ 102 million was paid. Regarding the BPC, the State emphasized that it is a benefit established in Article 203, Section V, of the Federal Constitution, which provides greater robustness to the policy. The budget has been sufficient to meet the demand of applicants, and there is evidence that this budget will be preserved and even increased, based on the Annual Budget Bill for 2025, proposed by the Executive Branch and currently under consideration in the National Congress, which allocates R$ 112.9 million.<sup>30</sup>

45. It also indicated that, once it had verified the need to maintain the program, at the end of 2023, the new PROCAD-SUAS was approved. The goals of this new edition are to improve the capacity of the municipalities and the federal district to register persons at the units of the Single Social Assistance System (SUAS), as well as at households, and to promote the active search for families who are in a situation of vulnerability, including households that are made up of older persons, persons with disabilities or families of children and adolescents engaged in child labor. According to the information reported, resources started to be allocated in July 2024; 1,138 municipalities were covered by the program with a minimum amount of 12,000 Brazilian reais each, plus additional varying sums based on the number of interviews conducted at households.<sup>31</sup> The State did not provide updated information on compliance with item “b”.<sup>32</sup>

46. Regarding item “c,” the State mentioned that the SUAS has established participation channels through the National Council of Social Assistance, which includes representation from the government, social assistance organizations, and workers, as well as through the Tripartite Inter-Manager Commission, which brings together the federal government, state governments, and municipal governments.<sup>33</sup>

47. Finally, the State explained that its current fiscal policy, regarding social assistance benefits and services, aims to ensure the sustainable care of users. The Ministry of Development and Social Assistance, Family, and the Fight Against Hunger (MDS) maintains constant dialogue with government fiscal bodies and relies on the National Council of Social Assistance (CNAS) to ensure better monitoring, evaluation, and deliberation on the fiscal and budgetary projections related to SUAS. Furthermore, social participation in the development of SUAS’s fiscal and tax aspects is ensured through the CNAS and other transparency mechanisms.<sup>34</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

48. The Commission welcomes the information submitted on the increase in resources allocated to the Bolsa Família program, which has benefited over 50 million families across the country. It also appreciates the results achieved by the BPC program as a way of ensuring a livelihood for older persons, persons with disabilities and persons living in regions affected by the collapse of dams. Furthermore, it welcomes the creation of PROCAD-SUAS, which expands the capacity of municipalities to carry out the registration of beneficiaries at SUAS units and households, and to intensify the active search for vulnerable families.

49. The IACHR also values the guarantee of social participation in the development and oversight of social assistance policies, particularly through the CNAS. Civil society participation is essential to ensuring that policies align with the needs of SUAS users at the grassroots level. However, it highlights the lack of sufficient information on the mechanisms that guarantee social participation in the formulation of tax policies, which ultimately impact other public policies related to human rights.

50. However, the Commission notes the lack of information as to how the new fiscal policy has contributed to the guarantee of economic, social and cultural rights, which is precisely at the core of this recommendation. Additionally, it highlights that no information was submitted on compliance with sections “b” and “c.” In view of the above, the Inter-American Commission determines that the level of compliance with section “a” continues to be partial and that compliance with sections “b” and “c” is pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

51. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission prompts the State to submit updated information on the impact of the new fiscal framework on the realization of ESCER in Brazil. In addition, it emphasizes that it is necessary for the State to make available and earmark the maximum available resources to guarantee the effective exercise of ESCERs and to reduce inequality. It also recalls that, when adopting policies, measures and legal standards on the matter, the State must comply with its duty of progressiveness and the prohibition of regressiveness of these rights. Moreover, the Commission urges the State to implement accountability mechanisms to monitor how the available resources have been allotted to progressively achieve the effective realization of ESCERs. It also exhorts the State to submit concrete and updated information on the fiscal policy measures adopted, as well as on those that seek to establish technical commissions to evaluate fiscal projections and channels for the participation of the society in the drafting and approval of the recommended tax laws and policies.

Recommendation No. 4. Develop a mechanism for coordination among the three federative branches of government to guarantee the effective incorporation into domestic law and practice of international human rights standards, in relation to both the adoption of positive measures by the State and the abstaining from actions aimed to protect human rights.

52. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported the creation of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights Decisions and Deliberations Follow-up and Supervision Unit, attached to the National Council of Justice (CNJ). In this regard, the Commission noted that although there was no clear methodology to assess the implementation of inter-American standards by this unit, the State reported the establishment of the National Judiciary Covenant for Human Rights, aimed at promoting a culture of adoption of standards. In addition, the State reported that it had created the Human Rights Litigation Division at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MRE) so as to coordinate state actions with a view to complying with international human rights standards. Also, the State reported on the cooperative effort made by the MDHC and the federated states to ensure compliance with decisions of international human rights bodies by means of the National Network for Implementing Decisions made by International Human Rights Systems (RNID/SIDH).<sup>35</sup>

53. The Commission observed that, although these were important mechanisms within their own scopes of action, based on the information provided, it could not verify how they ensured coordination among the three federative branches, as recommended, especially with the legislative branch. In view of that, the Inter-American Commission determined that the level of compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial.<sup>36</sup> Furthermore, it highlighted the need for the State to develop a coordination mechanism among the three federative branches of government to guarantee the effective incorporation of international human rights parameters into domestic law.<sup>37</sup>

54. In the 2024 report, the State indicated that it had created the General Coordination Office of Reports and Monitoring of International Recommendations under the MDHC. The purpose of this office is to develop a computer system to monitor international decisions on human rights and to simplify their follow-up, as well as the preparation of reports. Moreover, the State reported that Brazil and Paraguay had signed a technical cooperation agreement in May 2024 for the implementation of the SIMORE Brazil. This will be carried out in two stages: in the first phase, the system will replicate the goals set for Paraguay; in the second phase, an integrated system will be developed to incorporate and share data from other information platforms, such as ObservaDH and the Multiyear Plan (PPA). The SIMORE Brazil is scheduled to be launched in May 2026, and it is expected that it will allow for a faster dissemination of information among the three branches of government.<sup>38</sup>

55. The State reported on the active role of the General Coordination of International Human Rights Systems (CGSIDH), linked to the Special Advisory Office for International Affairs of the MDHC, in monitoring and implementing the decisions of the Inter-American and universal human rights systems. It added that this section has participated in technical meetings, negotiation tables, and several hearings before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and has played a central mediation role with federal government agencies, states, and civil society to ensure and accelerate compliance with rulings and precautionary measures. The CGSIDH has also coordinated efforts to regularize the payment of compensation ordered by the Inter-American Court in the Tavares Pereira and Honorato cases, totaling R$ 3,053,084, as well as the payment of costs and expenses to the petitioners in the Fábrica de Fogos Santo Antônio de Jesus case and the compensation owed in the Barbosa de Souza case.<sup>39</sup>

56. Nevertheless, according to civil society organizations, there is no information on the implementation of mechanisms of coordination between all branches of government to ensure the effective incorporation of international human rights standards.<sup>40</sup>

57. The Commission welcomes the information regarding the actions of the CGSIDH to ensure compliance with decisions and the payment of compensation ordered by the Inter-American Court, primarily through the coordination of the three branches of government. It also positively values the information on the creation of SIMORE Brasil and considers the implementation of this tool an important step forward in complying with international human rights recommendations, as well as in accountability, transparency, and participation.

58. Considering that the platform is still in the development phase and that there is insufficient information on the concrete actions of the CGSIDH in its role of promoting coordination between the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial branches to ensure the effective implementation of international human rights standards, the IACHR determines that the recommendation remains partially fulfilled.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

59. To advance compliance with the recommendation, the Commission prompts the State to report on the stages of implementation of the SIMORE Brazil, its features and how the three branches of government work in coordination to use the platform. It also invites the State to present more information on the performance of the CGSIDH in the process of inter-institutional coordination for the incorporation of international human rights standards.

Recommendation No. 5. Develop, implement, and finance state systems for gathering accurate and disaggregated data, and statistical and qualitative information regarding the human rights situation of persons of African descent and traditional Quilombola communities, indigenous peoples, LGBTI persons, as well as other at-risk and/or vulnerable groups, in order to create and implement appropriate laws and public policies for addressing needs and overcoming the specific hurdles those groups face. In particular, ensure that disaggregated data are collected from a variety of public and private institutions, especially those working in the following sectors: health, education, access to work, justice, social protection, and so on.

60. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that it had implemented differentiated registration processes for traditional and specific population groups (GPTE) in the Single Registry, so as to shed light on and address their needs. These groups included indigenous communities, homeless persons, waste pickers, Quilombolas, next of kin of persons deprived of liberty, among others. In addition, the State highlighted the inclusion of data from Quilombola and indigenous communities in the 2022 population census, although it regretted the exclusion of LGBTIQ+ persons, and committed to addressing this omission in future records. The Commission appreciated these efforts, recognizing their importance for the development of public policies that meet the specific needs of groups at risk. Therefore, it considered that the level of compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial.<sup>41</sup>

61. In order for this recommendation to be complied with, the Commission urged the State to report on the implementation of data collection systems to gather information on LGBTIQ+ persons, as well as to provide information on the use of the ObservaDH platform as a relevant tool for this purpose. It also requested the State to collect qualitative information on the human rights situation of at-risk and/or vulnerable communities and groups to contribute to the drafting of public policies that better address their demands and needs.<sup>42</sup>

Information on compliance

62. In the 2024 report, the State confirmed that the ObservaDH platform currently includes over 500 indicators, disaggregated by variables such as gender, age and race/color, and location. It also noted that 39 data submissions were made on the nine thematic areas available on the platform (children and adolescents; older persons; persons with disabilities; LGBTQIA+ persons; homeless persons; persons deprived of liberty; human rights defenders; institutional capacity; and fighting hate speech), with information obtained from over 40 databases. In addition, it reported that many of these indicators are new; that more than 100 news articles including information from the platform have already been published; and that, on average, the platform is accessed 4,000 times a month, adding up to a total of over 40,000 individual accesses up to September 2024. The State also indicated that an updated version of ObservaDH is under development, which will include new content such as educational resources and is scheduled to go live in December 2024.<sup>43</sup>

63. Furthermore, the State indicated that all variables involving at least one of the vulnerable populations prioritized by MDHC policies have been mapped and that this information was gathered from over 40 government databases, such as administrative records and surveys conducted by the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE), while new databases continue to be mapped. It also stated that it currently takes into account reports produced by training and research institutions, civil society organizations, public agencies and international bodies to develop the content that is fed into the ObservaDH platform. Moreover, in December 2023, the National Human Rights Evidence Network (ReneDH) was established to expand the State's data collection capacity and to organize, produce and disseminate strategic information aimed at formulating data-based human rights policies. According to the State, 75 institutions are currently members of the network, which are part of six working groups that conduct human rights surveys. Finally, the State reported that the MDHC has established partnerships with various bodies and organizations to conduct surveys and develop content for the ObservaDH platform.<sup>44</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

64. The Commission appreciates the information sent by the State on the ObservaDH platform, including that on its scope and the databases that comprise it. In this regard, it notes that the purpose of the recommendation being followed up on is to encourage the State to implement systems for the collection of accurate and disaggregated data and statistical and qualitative information on the human rights situation of vulnerable groups, with a view to drafting legislation and public policies. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that the ObservaDH platform meets this goal and, therefore, determines that the recommendation has reached full compliance. As a result, the Commission will cease its follow-up as of next year.

Recommendation No. 6. Design, implement, and finance comprehensive housing policies aimed at both reducing the current dire shortages and improving socioeconomic equality from an ethnic/racial and gender perspective. Such policies must take into account the physical characteristics of the territory, the infrastructure in place, and the availability of equipment and basic services, as well as the interests of economic agents and the organic ties that populations establish with the breeding ground where their daily lives play out.

65. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Inter-American Commission of its plans to change its approach to the homeless population by adopting the Housing First model—which prioritizes housing, work and emancipation—as a replacement for the welfare-based model currently in place in Brazil. It also referred to the formulation of government plans to expand access to housing, including the Minha Casa, Minha Vida (My house, my life) program to help vulnerable groups purchase homes. The Commission appreciated these projects but observed that they were at a preliminary stage and that compliance with the recommendation was still pending.<sup>45</sup>

66. To comply with the recommendation, the Commission urged the State to submit relevant, updated and accurate information on the financing and implementation of comprehensive housing policies, as well as to make sufficient budget allocations to be able to address the housing crisis in its entirety and to report thereon.<sup>46</sup>

67. In the 2024 report, the State informed the Commission about the Pró-Moradia (Prohousing) program, which is now part of the Minha Casa, Minha Vida program and is aimed at providing access to housing for vulnerable groups with a monthly family income of up to three minimum wages. It further pointed out that this is implemented through securities financing operations for states, municipalities, the federal district and public service bodies, with resources from the Service Time Guarantee Fund (FGTS) for the purchase or construction of housing units. To guarantee the right to housing, these public entities may use said funding to regularize land ownership, develop infrastructure projects, purchase construction materials, hire labor to carry out housing improvements or build new homes, among other actions.<sup>47</sup>

68. The State also indicated that, among the measures it had implemented to reduce the housing crisis, in 2023, it resumed the Minha Casa, Minha Vida program targeted at households with a monthly income of up to 8,000 Brazilian reais. This new version seeks to find better locations for housing developments to ensure their proximity to shops, services and public transportation; increase the supply of homes; offer financing for the purchase of used properties; and promote home refurbishments by providing assistance for existing housing units. According to the State, priority will be given to households where women are heads of family or to homes of persons with disabilities; older persons; children and adolescents; persons with cancer or rare, chronic and degenerative diseases; persons in vulnerable social situations; persons who have lost their homes due to natural disasters where a state of emergency or public disaster has been declared; persons who have been involuntarily displaced due to federal public works; homeless persons; women victims of domestic and family violence; persons living in risk areas; and members of traditional or Quilombola peoples.<sup>48</sup>

69. The Commission was also informed of a study conducted by the João Pinheiro Foundation (FJP), the institution responsible for calculating the housing deficit in Brazil, in cooperation with the National Housing Secretariat under the Ministry of Cities. According to this study, Brazil has a housing deficit of approximately 6 million homes. Most of this deficit lies with families with incomes of up to two minimum wages (approximately 75 percent), out of which 62.6 percent are headed by women.<sup>49</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

70. The Commission appreciates the information regarding the Minha Casa, Minha Vida program and the creation of the Pró-Moradia program, which are important to address the housing crisis unfolding in the country. Despite these plans, the country shows a significant housing deficit that must be tackled by the State through comprehensive policies, with a view to reducing precarious housing and achieving socioeconomic equity with an ethnic-racial and gender-based perspective. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that the level of compliance with this recommendation has progressed to partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

71. In order for this recommendation to be fully complied with, the Commission requests the State to provide information on the way the housing policies currently in force will be implemented to address the housing deficit observed in the country.

C. Citizen security

Recommendation No. 7. Amend the protocols and guidelines for local, state, and federal law enforcement agencies to ensure they meet international standards with regard to:

- a. Permissible use of force in accordance with the principles of legality, proportionality, and absolute necessity.
- b. Exceptions in which lethal force is authorized based on objective criteria.
- c. Tactics for reducing tensions and the use of non-lethal weapons.
- d. Prohibition of torture and of cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment.
- e. In protest situations, respect for, and facilitation of, exercise of the right of freedom of assembly, apart from containment protocols, techniques for handling situations, the use of non-lethal weapons.

72. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide specific information on the recommendation related to the use of force. However, the Commission expressed its concern over the excessive use of force in Brazil, especially against persons of African descent and during police operations. According to reports from the Public Defender's Office of the state of Rio de Janeiro, numerous cases of torture and ill-treatment were recorded, and the Federal Public Prosecutor's Office (MPF) recommended plans be devised to reduce the number of violent deaths during police operations, underscoring the need to comply with international guidelines. The Commission condemned police violence and considered it a reflection of systemic racial discrimination and noted that compliance with the recommendation remained pending.<sup>50</sup>

73. On that occasion, the Commission urged the State to update and adapt police protocols, ensuring that they were in line with the principles of legality, proportionality and absolute necessity of the use of force, and that they respected human rights, especially during protests.<sup>51</sup>

74. In the 2024 report, in relation to section “a” of this recommendation, the State indicated that the MDHC plays a key role in training public security personnel, focusing on the fight against structural racism, modern slavery and torture, as well as on the protection of victims and human rights defenders, journalists and environmentalists. In addition, it reported that the MDHC is part of a working group that discusses programs to reduce police lethality and victimization, and that seeks to implement guidelines on the use of force and enforce Law No. 13,060/2014, which regulates the use of less lethal weapons by public security agents. The State also underscored that said working group is divided into subgroups that address several aspects of the use of force, including training and regulatory control. In addition to the aforementioned law, the State pointed out that there are other domestic regulations governing the use of force in place: the Federal Constitution; the Criminal Code; Interministerial Regulation No. 4,226/2010, which provides guidelines on the use of force by public security agents; and Regulation No. 6,387/2016, which regulates the use of force and establishes internal commissions to control and monitor the use of force by the Federal Police.<sup>52</sup>

75. The State also reported that the MDHC collaborates with the Ministry of Justice and Public Security (MJSP) in updating the training curriculum for public security agents, highlighting diversity and the prohibition of discrimination. Moreover, the National Police Academy, through the Operational Teaching Service (SEOP), offers a course titled Selective Use of Force, which is mandatory for all Federal Police positions. This training addresses legal principles, that is, necessity, proportionality and moderation in the use of force, with a focus on respecting human rights and reducing police lethality. According to the State, it is currently developing specific courses on the use of chemical agents and less lethal devices, with a particular focus on conflicts related to indigenous lands and civil unrest.<sup>53</sup>

76. The State also reported that the MJSP, by means of the National Public Security Secretariat (SENASP), continues to support the ongoing training of security agents through the Unified Public Security System (SUSP). In addition, it noted that, in 2023, it had re-established the National Public Security and Citizenship Program (PRONASCI 2), which allocated funds for more than 100,000 educational grants to protect vulnerable groups and fundamental rights. Resources were also invested in graduate courses and continuing education, which reached over 210,000 professionals across the country. Training also included courses on key topics such as the defense of democracy, the fight against racism and gender inequality. According to the report of the State, over 800,000 professionals have been trained since 2005 by means of the National Network of Distance Learning in Public Security (EaD SENASP), which has offered courses that have attracted over 5 million enrollments. The State reported it has assessed the influence of this training on career development and its positive impact on public security institutions.<sup>54</sup>

77. The State indicated that the reported measures reaffirm Brazil’s commitment to the protection of human rights and the professionalization of its security forces, as the country works in line with national and international standards to guarantee that police action is based on the principles of legality, necessity and proportionality.<sup>55</sup>

78. In relation to section “b” of the recommendation, the State indicated that it has implemented a series of measures to reform its protocols and guidelines on the use of lethal force at the local, state and federal levels, in line with international standards. In this regard, it stated that one of its main initiatives was to revise and update its protocols on the use of force, which are based on instruments developed by the United Nations, namely the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials. The State pointed out that continuing education programs have been created for law enforcement agents, with a strong focus on the principles of proportionality, necessity and legality in the use of force, to prevent excessive or abusive practices, especially when lethal force is applied.

The State further noted that these trainings are targeted at both federal forces (the Federal Police and the Federal Highway Police) and state police, thus ensuring a consistent approach at all levels of law enforcement.<sup>56</sup>

79. The State also affirmed that specific protocols have been drafted to address critical situations, such as police operations in densely populated urban areas, during demonstrations or in indigenous territories. According to the State, these protocols reinforce its compliance with international standards and ensure that the use of lethal force is regulated and controlled, thus preventing abuse and protecting human rights. Additionally, the State has strengthened monitoring and transparency mechanisms, such as the ObservaDH platform, to collect data and oversee the use of force by the security agents, which has bolstered transparency and social control, and has allowed for an effective assessment of the actions of law enforcement authorities so that lethal force is always used as a measure of last resort.<sup>57</sup>

80. Furthermore, the State reported that the educational materials used in the programs delivered by the SEOP of the Federal Police, including the Selective Use of Force course, have been reviewed to ensure that the use of force observes the principles of legality, necessity, proportionality, moderation and convenience, with special emphasis on the protection of human rights. In this regard, these learning resources reiterate that the use of firearms is restricted to cases of self-defense whenever there is an impending risk of death or severe injury and prohibit the use of such weapons against unarmed persons or individuals who do not pose an immediate threat.<sup>58</sup>

81. Regarding section “c” of the recommendation, the State referred to the information provided for sections “a” and “b” and for Recommendation No. 13.<sup>59</sup>

82. In relation to section “d” of this recommendation, the State reported that the CNJ has implemented various initiatives to prevent and combat torture, especially in the context of custody hearings. Among these actions, the State highlighted the drafting of the Handbook to Prevent and Combat Torture and Ill-treatment for Custody Hearings, prepared with the support of the UNODC as part of the Justiça Presente (Present justice) program, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Program (UNDP) and the National Penitentiary Department. In addition, the CNJ released the Handbook on Handcuffs and Other Instruments of Restraint in Court Hearings, which provides guidelines for limiting the use of handcuffs, in line with the case law of the STF and with human rights principles. It further noted that CNJ’s Resolution No. 213/2015 limits the use of handcuffs, except where there is resistance or danger, inasmuch as it requires written justification and adherence to the principles of legality, necessity and proportionality; also, the annexed protocol sets forth that the unjustified use of handcuffs is indicative of torture or degrading treatment.<sup>60</sup>

83. Moreover, it was reported that states have created bodies especially focused on the prevention of torture.<sup>61</sup> The State also pointed out that the Federal Police, by means of its SEOP, offers training

<sup>61</sup> Acre: A criminal policy committee was created, which includes a WG focused on preventing and combating torture. Prison inspections were resumed, and administrative procedures were established to process and monitor reports of torture and ill-treatment. Alagoas: The WG on preventing and combating torture is underway. Amapá: There is a WG on preventing and combating torture in place. In 2023, 51 judicial inspections in prisons were carried out to identify any abuses in the enforcement of sentences and imprisonment conditions. Amazonas: The Inter-Institutional Working Group on Confronting Torture was created in 2022 and became operational in 2023. It seeks to improve procedures to prevent and combat torture in the penitentiary and socioeducational systems. Bahia: A WG was set up in 2022 to address challenges in the penitentiary system and streamline interinstitutional flows to prevent and combat torture. Ceará: Although there is no official WG in place, a subgroup was created under the Penitentiary System Structuring Committee to work on the prevention of torture. In 2023, a training course on torture prevention and penitentiary inspections was held. Espírito Santo: An interinstitutional WG was created to strengthen the flows and procedures to prevent and combat torture against adolescents in the socioeducational system. Also, a state commission was created to prevent torture. Goiás: A WG on torture prevention was created by the Court of Justice of Goiás in 2023 by way of a decree that regulates procedures for processing reports of torture at detention centers. Maranhão: There is a WG focused on combating torture in place. Mato Grosso: The WG on preventing and combating torture is underway. Minas Gerais: There is a WG on preventing and combating torture in place, in addition to a regulation that establishes procedures for processing and monitoring reports of torture in the prison system. Pará: There is a WG on preventing and combating torture in place, and aimed at ensuring that police action is based on legality, necessity, proportionality and moderation in the use of force. The courses include Operational Management, Navigation, Security for Dignitaries, Communication, Approach, Remotely Piloted Aircraft, Police Survival, Surveillance and Selective Use of Force. This training is aligned with international and domestic regulations, such as the Convention against Torture, the Federal Constitution of Brazil and the domestic laws regulating the use of force by public security agents. In addition, the State indicated that MJSP guidelines are followed and that control commissions have been established to supervise the use of force by the Federal Police.<sup>62</sup>

84. Finally, with regard to section “e,” the State reported that the SEOP of the Federal Police has updated the instructional booklet used in the Approach course and added a chapter on the procedures for approaching persons in vulnerable situations and sensitive groups, which include LGBTQIAP+ persons and persons with disabilities. A chapter on how to support and manage persons deprived of liberty was also added, with special focus on sensitive groups and minors. The State noted that this update was based on an extensive review of materials from diverse sources —such as handbooks and guidebooks on human rights, the protection of vulnerable groups and the police approach to mental health crises—, prepared by different institutions, including the MJSP, the Federal Highway Police and the Public Defender’s Office. These materials contribute to the development of a doctrine that advocates for the protection of human rights in police work.<sup>63</sup> Subsequently, the State informed the IACHR that Portaria No. 855/2025 of the MJSP establishes, in its Articles 14 and 15, guidelines for crisis management, recommending the documentation of actions through body cameras, in accordance with the guidelines of Portaria MJSP No. 648/2024.<sup>64</sup>

85. The State also informed that, on December 24, 2024, Decree No. 12.341 was published, which regulates the use of force and less-lethal instruments by public security professionals. According to the State, the regulation strengthens control and monitoring mechanisms for security forces through the reinforcement of the internal affairs and ombudsman offices within public security institutions. It regulates the use of firearms and non-lethal weapons, approaches, home searches, and the actions of penitentiary police in prisons. Furthermore, it assigns responsibility to the MJSP to create complementary regulations, train agents, disseminate the rules, and monitor their application. The decree also emphasizes that lethal force should only be used as a last resort, prioritizing the progressive use of force and avoiding any form of discrimination. It also stipulates that incidents resulting in injuries or deaths must be reported in detail. The National Committee for Monitoring the Use of Force (CNMUDF) was established through Portaria No. 856/2015 of the MJSP, with representation from various bodies and civil society, to oversee and assess the implementation of public security policies. Additionally, the transfer of funds for actions related to the use of force will be conditional upon compliance with these guidelines.<sup>65</sup>

86. The Commission had access to publicly available information on the progress made in the process of formulating a national policy on the use of police force, in which the MDHC, the MJSP and the MIR are involved. This policy discusses the use of less lethal mechanisms, i.e., weapons with less damage potential, in police intervention, as well as the adoption of protocols to guide police action. According to the State, these guidelines seek to provide the police with a legal basis for the use of said equipment and to govern their actions.<sup>66</sup>

87. According to the 2024 Brazilian Public Security Yearbook issued by the Brazilian Public Security Forum, the number of deaths following police actions at the national level has increased by 188.9 percent since 2013 —when the Forum began to monitor the indicator—, which amounts to 6,393 victims in 2023 alone. This means that the Brazilian police forces are responsible for the death of 17 persons a day, in contexts where it is presumed that an exclusion of liability applies, such as self-defense or strict compliance with legal duty and normal law enforcement. According to the forum, although not all Brazilian police forces present high rates of lethality, it can be stated that, in at least half of the states, deaths resulting from police action have been a concern in recent years. Furthermore, it noted that, in 2023, 13.8 percent of all intentional killings occurred as a result of police action, which constitutes a very high rate of use of force.<sup>67</sup>

88. The Commission also had access to another report released by the same organization on the public security policy of Rio de Janeiro. According to the data presented therein, the state police need to reduce police lethality in operations by 66 percent.<sup>68</sup> In addition, civil society organizations informed the Commission that the MJSP launched the Body Cameras National Project, which could help bring down police violence. However, according to them, since continuous recording is no longer mandatory, the use of this equipment may not be effective. It was also noted that this topic was the subject of the public hearing titled “Human rights violations in the context of police operations,” held during the 190th period of sessions.<sup>69</sup>

89. As regards body cameras, several organizations issued a technical note examining the use of such equipment in the state of São Paulo and its effectiveness in reducing police lethality and assault rates in more than 60 percent of cases. However, they emphasized that the purchase and installation of the equipment alone is not enough to guarantee results, inasmuch as it is necessary to meet technical specifications and to establish a protocol for its use. Different studies attribute the success achieved in São Paulo to the complete recording of the security agents' entire shifts, but the new equipment procurement process only provides for intentional recording, that is, from the moment when each security agent decides to start recording. According to the organizations, by making this change, the government of São Paulo is compromising the results of the program and wasting public resources, since they consider that the lesser the agents' discretionary power on the streets, the greater the impact of the cameras on the use of force.<sup>70</sup>

90. The organizations also indicate that the period of time set for storing recordings, which is currently 90 days for routine videos and 365 days for intentional videos, is an additional obstacle to their effectiveness. Following the planned change, this period would be shortened to 30 days, which would allow for deleting material before the justice system can verify the evidence. In addition, the organizations point out that the use of artificial intelligence tools in the analysis of the recordings may lead to serious errors in certain situations.<sup>71</sup>

91. Moreover, the civil society indicated that a draft National Protocol on the Use of Force is allegedly being prepared to update Interministerial Regulation No. 4,226/2010. It also stressed that it is essential that the civil society takes part in this process, that the final protocol observes international standards and that monitoring mechanisms are created for its implementation. Furthermore, a report by the Omega Research Foundation highlighted the abuse of non-lethal weapons in contexts of deprivation of liberty, which has led to numerous deaths and serious injuries.<sup>72</sup>

92. Regarding item “a” of this recommendation, the Commission appreciates the measures presented by the State, such as mandatory training in “Selective Use of Force,” specialized courses, and the updating of the Curriculum Matrix for public security agents to include topics such as diversity and human rights. It also highlights the implementation of the PRONASCI 2 Program, which funds scholarships for the professionalization and ongoing training of agents. More specifically, the Commission notes that the new Decree No. 12.341 establishes, in Article 2, the explicit inclusion of the principles of legality, proportionality, and necessity, and determines that i) the use of force is only permitted to achieve legal objectives within the limits of the law (Art. 2, Section I); and ii) force must be applied in a differentiated manner and adjusted to the level of threat presented, prioritizing less intense means (Art. 3, Sections I and III). Based on this analysis, the Commission understands that the measures indicated by the State, especially the publication of the Decree, fully comply with this item “a” of the recommendation by incorporating international standards into the regulation. For this reason, it determines that the item has been fully fulfilled and will cease monitoring it starting next year.

93. Regarding item “b,” the Commission positively values the initiatives adopted by the State, such as specific protocols for critical situations and operations in urban areas, protests, and indigenous territories. It highlights that the use of firearms is limited to cases of self-defense against imminent danger. Additionally, the Commission considers that Decree No. 12.341 defines that the use of lethal force is only authorized as a last resort and under strict conditions (Art. 3, § 2). It also specifies that the use of firearms against unarmed fleeing individuals is prohibited, unless they pose an immediate risk of death or serious injury (Art. 3, § 3, Sections I and II), and that the use of firearms must be restricted to authorized professionals (Art. 3, § 4). Since the item establishes that the State must reform its protocols to allow the use of lethal force exceptionally based on objective criteria, the Commission understands that item “b” of the recommendation has been fully fulfilled and will cease monitoring it starting next year.

94. Regarding item “c,” the Commission considers that the high number of deaths caused by public security agents demonstrates that the State has not yet been able to implement security policies that prioritize the use of non-lethal weapons. However, it takes note that the new regulation published on December 24, 2024, prioritizes communication, negotiation, and the implementation of techniques to prevent the escalation of violence (Art. 3, § 1). Furthermore, it includes the requirement to train agents annually on the differentiated use of force and non-lethal weapons (Art. 4, Section I) and the provision of non-lethal equipment for all agents on duty (Art. 6, Section III). Based on this, the Commission understands that the State complies with the item requiring the reformulation of protocols and guidelines so that security agents adopt tactics to reduce tension and the use of non-lethal weapons. Therefore, it determines that item “c” has been fully fulfilled and will cease monitoring it starting next year.

95. Regarding item “d,” the Commission acknowledges the initiatives implemented by the CNJ and at the state level to prevent and combat torture and recognizes the importance of establishing courses and training for security agents. On the other hand, it notes that the new Decree No. 12.341 does not explicitly address the prohibition of torture. However, it establishes as a general principle non-discrimination and respect for human rights (Art. 2, Section VII) and also mentions that force should be used with sound judgment and prudence (Art. 2, Section V). Although the State has not specifically mentioned torture, the text of the law aligns with the principles of respect for human rights. Therefore, the Commission considers that the compliance is progressing but remains partial.

96. Finally, regarding item “e,” the State reports that the Federal Police has updated educational materials with chapters on handling protests and protecting vulnerable groups, and also mentions specific protocols for operations during protests and civil disturbances. Regarding regulations related to the use of force in the context of social protests, although Decree No. 12.341 does not directly reference the handling of protests, its principles and general guidelines can be applied to such situations. This is because the decree aims to promote the minimization of harm and the differentiated use of force (Art. 2, Sections II and III), as well as to foster transparency and accountability through data recording and the publication of statistics on the use of force (Art. 7, Section I). In the same vein, the Commission values the publication of Portaria MJSP 855/2025 and the provisions regarding how public security authorities should act in crisis scenarios. Based on the above, the Commission determines that item “e” progresses to partial compliance.

97. Although the recommendation has progressed in terms of compliance, the IACHR expresses concern over the information provided by various organizations, which reflects an alarming public security context in Brazil. The high rates of police lethality, representing 13.8% of all intentional violent deaths, and the improper use of non-lethal weapons in detention contexts highlight structural failures in the implementation of rules governing the use of force. While progress is acknowledged in training and the creation of protocols, the lack of effective oversight, the discretionary handling of equipment such as body cameras, and ongoing abuses during police operations raise serious concerns about the effectiveness of these measures and their alignment with international human rights standards. The Commission urges the Brazilian State to redouble its efforts to ensure the protection of fundamental rights in its public security policies.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

98. To ensure full compliance with items “d” and “e” of the recommendation, the Commission urges the Brazilian State to strengthen oversight and sanction mechanisms in cases of torture and cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment, especially in detention contexts and custody hearings. It is essential to ensure the effective implementation of existing manuals and protocols, such as those developed by the National Justice Council, and to guarantee continuous training of agents on human rights and international standards. Regarding the handling of protests and gatherings, it is recommended to adopt a clear and binding national protocol for the differentiated use of force, ensuring the protection of the rights to assembly and freedom of expression, as well as the mandatory and supervised implementation of body cameras in police operations. These measures should be accompanied by continuous dialogue with civil society to ensure transparency and effectiveness.

Recommendation No. 8. Adopt whatever measures are needed to exhaustively examine and amend the protocols and guidelines used by local, state, and federal agencies, making sure that the use of racial profiling and other explicit or implicit discriminatory practices on grounds of ethnic/racial or national origin, or other grounds, are expressly punished.

99. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported on the creation of a working group linked to the CNJ that established guidelines for the identification of persons in criminal proceedings, with the purpose of avoiding misidentification and reducing structural racism. These guidelines include the mandatory recording of identification procedures and the collection of evidence before subjecting someone to this process, in addition to requiring self-declarations of race/color from victims, witnesses and persons under investigation. The State also highlighted the ongoing trial of Habeas Corpus No. 208,240 at the Federal Supreme Court, which addresses the unconstitutionality of racial profiling in a case of police racism. The Inter-American Commission welcomed these measures and noted that they constituted progress towards compliance with the recommendation. Due to the above, it determined that the level of compliance with the recommendation was partial.<sup>73</sup>

100. To consider that the recommendation has been complied with, the Commission indicated that it was necessary for the State to continue adopting measures to reform protocols and guidelines at all levels, ensuring that discriminatory practices, both implicit and explicit, were sanctioned.<sup>74</sup>

101. In its submission for the 2024 Annual Report, the State indicated that the MDHC has been working to combat structural racism in cooperation with the Fluminense Federal University (UFF) and the

Institute for the Defense of the Black Population (IDPN) to train Afro-descendant lawyers to assist Afro-descendant women deprived of liberty. The State has also been working with the Federal University of Ceará (UFC) and the Central Única das Favelas (CUFA) to promote qualification, education and training courses on leadership, employability, finance and access to technology, especially for young people, women and Afro-descendants.<sup>75</sup>

102. Furthermore, the State indicated that the MIR is currently working to develop the National Policy for Traditional Peoples and Communities of African Origin and Terreiros, the National Policy Plan for the Roma People and the National Plan for Quilombola Territorial and Environmental Management. It also referred to the Federal Plan of Affirmative Action, created in 2023 under the federal direct public administration,<sup>76</sup> and reported that, in 2023 and 2024, the CNJ had approved legislation to address discriminatory practices and promote diversity and inclusion in the judiciary.<sup>77</sup>

103. Regarding the enforceability of the guidelines for the identification of persons in criminal proceedings and processes, which are aimed at avoiding misidentification, the State reported that the CNJ had held an international seminar titled “Evidence and Criminal Justice: New Horizons for Identifying Persons” in October 2024. Its goal was to promote a deeper dialogue into the challenges of bringing specific charges in criminal investigations and assessing criminal evidence. Participants discussed topics such as racism in the criminal justice system and its impact on judicial rulings, the joint effort of criminal justice system actors to arrive at an indictment, the production of evidence and the consequences of convicting an innocent person. In addition to the seminar, a handbook on CNJ Resolution No. 484/2022 was published, which seeks to instruct judges on the application thereof. This regulation establishes guidelines on the identification of persons in criminal proceedings and processes, as well as on their assessment within the judiciary.<sup>78</sup>

104. Furthermore, in 2023, the State referred to Habeas Corpus No. 208,240, which was pending before the STF. Said remedy discusses the unconstitutionality of racial profiling and the concept of “well-founded suspicion” in a case involving an Afro-descendant victim of a racist police intervention. The State reported that the habeas corpus remedy had been heard by the Plenary of the STF on April 11, 2024, and that the request had been denied by a majority ruling, since the justices concluded that the body search of the defendant had not been performed on the basis of racial profiling. In addition, this case set a precedent, inasmuch as personal searches without a warrant must be based on objective indicia that the person is in possession of a prohibited weapon or criminal evidence, and cannot be conducted based on race, gender, sexual orientation, skin color or physical appearance.<sup>79</sup>

105. Notwithstanding the foregoing, civil society organizations stressed that the State has not taken effective measures to reform protocols and guidelines at the local, state and federal levels to sanction discriminatory practices, which has allowed for the common practice of state agencies to remain biased. According to the Institute for Applied Economic Research (IPEA), data show that defendants of African descent are allegedly approached by police more frequently and face searches without a warrant. In this regard, it was noted that the argument of “well-founded suspicion,” which underpins police action, is allegedly not challenged in the judicial system, which is thus perpetuating a structural bias. The Black Brazilian Population Security Project reports that very few allegations of police violence are brought to court; this is not for lack of cases, but because of the low chance of success, since the police version tends to be legitimized as “judicial truth,” which therefore reinforces systemic discrimination.<sup>80</sup>

106. The Commission appreciates the initiative undertaken by the MDHC to increase the capacity of the State to care for Afro-descendant women deprived of liberty, as well as the initiatives under development by the MIR, such as the National Policy for Traditional Peoples and Communities of African Origin and Terreiros. The Commission also welcomes the creation of the CNJ regulations reported by the State to address discriminatory practices and promote diversity and inclusion in the judiciary. Moreover, it appreciates the training delivered by the CNJ on the identification of persons, which made it possible to discuss, among other issues, racism in the criminal justice system and its impact on judicial rulings. In addition, the Inter-American Commission notes that the drafting of the handbook on the enforceability of CNJ Resolution No. 484/2022 is an important measure to guarantee the implementation of the guidelines for the identification of persons in criminal proceedings and processes.

107. However, the Commission also draws attention to the STF’s ruling overruling Habeas Corpus No. 208,240 and its impact on the fight against racism in Brazil, taking into account how complex this issue is in the country and that young men, Afro-descendants and persons living in peripheral areas are the main victims of police violence and deprivation of liberty, for which the criminal justice system is yet to find effective solutions. The Commission also notes with concern the information highlighted by the civil society regarding structural discrimination in state bodies, especially against Afro-descendants. Based on the foregoing, it considers that the level of compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

108. To consider that the recommendation has been fully complied with, the Commission underscores the need for the State to continue adopting measures to reform protocols, guidelines and practices thoroughly and at all levels, ensuring that discriminatory practices, both implicit and explicit, are sanctioned. Such reforms must guarantee that racial profiling is no longer a tool used by justice operators across the country to replicate racism.

Recommendation No. 9. Take all necessary measures to prevent violence against LGBTI persons, as well as to investigate and punish such violence with all due diligence, regardless of whether it is perpetrated in a family setting, within the community, or in the public sphere, including educational and health establishments.

109. In the 2023 follow-up report, the Commission did not receive information from the State on compliance with this recommendation related to the protection of LGBTI persons. However, it took note of the decision of the STF of August 2023 that equated acts of homophobia and transphobia with the crime of racial slur. The Court also acknowledged that the Congress had failed to criminalize discrimination based on gender identity and sexual orientation. Despite the progress made in case law, the Commission voiced its concern over the fact that Brazil continued to be the country with the highest rate of violent deaths of LGBTI persons, with one death every 34 hours. Since no specific information was submitted by the State, the Inter-American Commission considered that compliance with the recommendation remained pending.<sup>81</sup>

110. To have the State comply with the recommendation, the Commission indicated it needed to implement measures aimed at preventing and punishing violence against LGBTI persons. These measures included, for example, amending laws, creating support services for victims of violence, training law enforcement authorities on LGBTI issues or promoting zero tolerance of police violence against LGBTI persons.<sup>82</sup>

111. In 2024, the State reported on measures that seek to prevent and punish violence against LGBTI persons and highlighted some implemented by the MDHC. The State referred to a working group called Confronting Discrimination against LGBTQIA+ Persons in Digital Environments, which was set up to analyze discrimination on digital platforms and plan effective strategies to combat violence. Secondly, the State referred to the working group called LGBTQIA+ Memory and Truth, which was created to investigate human rights violations suffered by this group throughout the history of Brazil and develop public policies to eradicate violence against them.<sup>83</sup>

112. The State also reported on Technical Cooperation Agreement No. 134/2024, which sets forth the implementation of the Rogéria Form at the national level. This form serves as an instrument to record emergencies and situations of imminent risk affecting LGBTQIA+ persons, and was signed by the CNJ, the National Council of the Public Prosecutor's Office (CNMP), the MDHC and the MJSP. The purposes of this agreement are to strengthen risk assessment to prevent and address violence against LGBTQIA+ persons by simplifying coordination between public security agencies, justice bodies and protection networks, and to promote early and expert action to avoid repetition of acts of violence and discrimination based on sexual orientation, gender identity or sexual characteristics, with a focus on intersectionality. Also, this measure includes a virtual course to train the stakeholders that will make use of the form, an awareness-raising online seminar and the creation of a protocol to process cases of LGBTQIAphobia.<sup>84</sup>

113. Finally, the State indicated that, although the responsibility to investigate acts of violence against LGBTI individuals is concentrated in the state-level institutions, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security (MJSP) plays a role in formulating preventive policies and strengthening the investigative capacity of public security institutions, promoting a culture of respect for human rights. In this regard, the MJSP, through the National Secretariat of Public Security (SENASP), has been implementing prevention policies that impact the protection of LGBTI individuals. For example, the National Body Camera Project uses technology to monitor the actions of public security agents, promoting greater transparency and contributing to the reduction of abusive practices and discrimination. Furthermore, the Force Use Qualification Project, currently under development, aims to establish clear guidelines that ensure the actions of public security professionals align with international and national human rights standards, guaranteeing the protection of LGBTI individuals.<sup>85</sup>

114. The Commission acknowledges the initiatives presented by the State in the fight against violence against LGBTI individuals. In particular, it values the initiatives by the MJSP aimed at strengthening prevention and investigation mechanisms, which undoubtedly have an impact on the human rights of LGBTI individuals. However, it highlights that it lacks sufficient information to assess whether these measures have had a real impact on the prevention, investigation, and sanctioning of violence against this group of people in the country, reducing violence rates. In line with the above, the Commission considers that the recommendation remains pending compliance.

<sup>85</sup> State of Brazil, Note No. 30 of February 7, 2025. Comments on the draft report.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

115. To move forward with the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission urges the State to share information on the impact of the aforementioned policies or other additional policies for combating and reducing violence against LGBTI persons in the country.

Recommendation No. 10. Enforce federal legislation with a view to requiring proper training for law enforcement agents and agencies at the local level, as well as for justice operators (including judges, prosecutors, public defenders and other state and federal court personnel), in human rights obligations regarding non-discrimination and combating implicit prejudice, along with other kinds of training to get rid of discrimination.

116. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted the activities carried out by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights Decisions and Deliberations Follow-up and Supervision Unit under the CNJ to promote inter-American standards. It also referred to the National Judiciary Covenant for Human Rights — which promotes a culture of human rights in the judiciary— and reported on the incorporation of human rights law as a required area of expertise into public selection processes for positions in the judiciary, including the jurisprudence of the inter-American system and the STF’s case law. The Commission welcomed these initiatives as a commitment to the promotion and exercise of human rights in the judicial sphere and considered that the level of compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial.<sup>86</sup> Nonetheless, it recalled the importance of continuing to implement legislative measures at the federal level that entailed human rights training for all officials and law enforcement agencies, with a focus on nondiscrimination and the fight against prejudice.<sup>87</sup>

117. In 2024, the State reported that the National Judiciary Covenant for Human Rights seeks to strengthen the culture of human rights in the Brazilian judiciary, with an emphasis on conventionality control. This covenant was inspired by CNJ’s Recommendation No. 123 of 2022 and encourages the observance of international treaties and the jurisprudence of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. According to the State, the first phase of the covenant, completed in 2022, included five pillars: i) to carry out a selection process conducted nationwide to identify court rulings on human rights that promoted the conventionality control; ii) to incorporate human rights law as a required area of expertise into public selection processes for positions in the judiciary, with a focus on the inter-American jurisprudence; iii) to provide training in human rights and conventionality control for judges at the federal and state levels; iv) to publish the STF Jurisprudence Booklets, which address issues relating to women’s rights, LGBTI persons, indigenous peoples and freedom of expression; and v) to offer an international seminar on human rights and conventionality control.

118. In addition, the State indicated that, in 2024, it began the second phase of the national covenant with the release of new booklet volumes and the opening of a new selection process to review judicial rulings that involve different topics, including the rights of children and adolescents, women, persons deprived of liberty, the LGBTQIAP+ population, Afro-descendants and indigenous peoples, among other human rights and climate justice issues. According to the State, the covenant achieved 100 percent of its initial goals, so the second phase has started. Among other actions, this new stage involves measures to encourage the creation of Inter-American Court of Human Rights Decisions and Deliberations Follow-up and Supervision Units (UMFs) in Brazilian courts, to promote basic guidelines for institutional cooperation and to spotlight best practices related to national implementation mechanisms.<sup>88</sup>

119. In addition, the State reported that the MJSP, by means of the National Public Security Secretariat, has implemented training programs that address the differentiated impact of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and intolerance on women and girls, which exacerbates their vulnerability. Among these initiatives, the State underlined a course called “Anti-Racist Police,” which seeks to instill in public security personnel —especially police chiefs— an ethical approach based on respect for human rights and diversity, thus promoting changes in the organizational culture of public security.<sup>89</sup>

120. Moreover, according to the State, the Directorate of Education and Research (DEP) has expanded its courses on assisting vulnerable communities, including specific training on approaching Quilombola communities while respecting their cultural particularities. These courses are structured around the four pillars of the National Curriculum Framework: i) Subject and Interactions in Public Security, which covers awareness and values in the context of security; ii) Society, Power, State and Public Security, which analyzes security in the social, political and democratic context; iii) Ethics, Citizenship, Human Rights and Public Security, which promotes ethical and human rights practices in public security; iv) Ethnic-Socio-Cultural Diversity, Conflict and Public Security, which addresses the management of conflicts resulting from diversity and discrimination matters. According to the State, these initiatives promote constant reflection on the role of professionals in a diverse social and political context.<sup>90</sup>

121. Furthermore, the State reported that the General Coordinating Office of Research at the National Public Security Secretariat of the MJSP is offering specialist training programs and master’s degree courses. In addition, said office encourages thematic research, comparative studies and diagnoses that help guide public policies that seek improvement and innovation in public security, in close cooperation with the states. For the State, it is important to promote actions aimed at upskilling public security personnel (police chiefs in all states) and to develop a public security policy that validates and is governed by the National Guidelines on the Promotion and Defense of Human Rights of Public Security Authorities, as well as the democratic principles for the promotion of citizenship that structure the Rule of Law.<sup>91</sup> Finally, the State also indicated that, in April 2024, it launched the Interdisciplinary Master’s Degree in Human Rights, with a focus on public security, and the lato sensu graduate course titled “Protection of Persons in Situations of Vulnerability.”<sup>92</sup>

122. In turn, civil society organizations pointed out that the courses developed by the State are scattered initiatives that do not constitute mandatory and continuing training. They added that these courses are not a prerequisite to filling the positions and advancing the careers at issue. Therefore, although timely, these measures are considered limited and optional, which is not sufficient to meet the objective of the recommendation.<sup>93</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

123. The Commission welcomes the successful completion of the first phase of the National Judiciary Covenant for Human Rights and the beginning of its second phase, which is focused on the creation of UMFs in Brazilian courts and the promotion of basic guidelines for institutional cooperation and the dissemination of best practices regarding national implementation mechanisms. It also appreciates the training provided by the National Public Security Secretariat of the MJSP, such as the “Anti-Racist Police” course, and the specialist and master’s degree programs developed by the General Coordinating Office of Research under said secretariat.

124. Finally, the Commission commends the promotion of actions aimed at training public security personnel and structuring a policy in this regard which is governed by the National Guidelines on the Promotion and Defense of Human Rights of Public Security Authorities. However, the Commission notes that it does not have additional information on how the State is implementing training programs for other law enforcement agents, such as prosecutors and public defenders. In this regard, it stresses that adequate training in human rights and issues related to nondiscrimination is essential for public security agents and justice operators to be able to perform their duties in such a way that prejudice does not interfere with their actions and decision-making. The Commission has also taken note of the information provided by the civil society on the subject. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that the level of compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

125. To guide the implementation of the recommendation, the Inter-American Commission recalls the importance of continuing to adopt education and capacity-building measures to train all justice operators, law enforcement and public security agents in human rights and nondiscrimination.

Recommendation No. 11. Prioritize the allocation of funds to intelligence actions needed to fight organized crime, criminal gangs, and militias, rather than to armed clashes with them. In particular, strive to track down actions by organized criminal groups, identifying their agents, above all by monitoring capital flows, business and financial transactions, and movements of imports and exports triggered by them, and so on.

126. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide specific information on compliance with this recommendation. Therefore, the Commission determined that compliance remained pending. It also highlighted the need to prioritize the allocation of resources to the strengthening of intelligence operations to address organized crime, criminal gangs and militias.<sup>94</sup>

127. In 2024, the State reported that the MJSP, by means of the Directorate of Integrated Operations and Intelligence, had implemented the CIISP Network Program, an integrated system of public security intelligence centers aimed at contributing to the fight against organized crime, criminal gangs and militias. The network is comprised of a national center located in Brasília and five regional centers in Campo Grande, São Paulo, Curitiba, Fortaleza and Manaus, which engage public security representatives from different states and agencies. The objectives of this program are: i) to strengthen public security intelligence and restructure state agencies; ii) to share intelligence information to prevent and suppress crimes such as homicide, femicide, drug and arms trafficking, and cross-border crimes; and iii) to advise public security authorities on critical decisions and special operations. The cost of the program, which is covered by the MJSP, is approximately 4.1 million Brazilian reais per year; this figure is expected to increase to incorporate new expert agents in fields such as financial investigation and money laundering. In addition, according to information provided by the State, the network allows for an effective exchange of intelligence information to assist in coordinated actions between federal and state agencies, in response to the recommendation to step up the fight against organized crime in Brazil.<sup>95</sup>

128. Moreover, according to the State, the MJSP —by means of the National Public Security Secretariat— has implemented a policy to tackle organized crime through cooperation among states and intelligence work. In addition, several states have set up Integrated Forces to Combat Organized Crime (FICCOs), which are comprised of various public security agencies at the state and federal level and are coordinated by the Federal Police. The FICCOs seek to: i) coordinate intelligence and operation work at the regional and international level; ii) prevent transnational crimes and serious threats to public security, such as drug and arms trafficking, robbery and extortion; iii) simplify access to shared databases and intelligence tools; and iv) promote technical training and the exchange of knowledge and experiences. The State pointed out that these forces work on a mutual cooperation basis and do not receive direct fund transfers from other institutions; the costs are covered by each entity concerned.<sup>96</sup>

129. The State also reported on the Special Groups to Conduct Sensitive Investigations (GISEs), which were created by the Federal Police to investigate cases of drug and arms trafficking, and to combat criminal gangs and connected violent crimes. It indicated that there are currently 20 units in place across Brazil, with trained personnel and resources allocated by regional supervision offices and, occasionally, by the National Anti-Drug Fund (FUNAD).<sup>97</sup>

130. Finally, in the international arena, it was reported that the International Cooperation Directorate of the Federal Police has expanded its scope of action by setting up additional posts and appointing liaison officers in institutions such as Europol and Interpol, thus optimizing the exchange of intelligence information and reinforcing investigations on organized crime. The State considers that these measures demonstrate it has prioritized intelligence work to combat organized crime, criminal gangs and militias.<sup>98</sup>

131. The Commission commends the State for its intelligence system and its fight against organized crime, criminal gangs and militias in the country, as well as for having allocated resources to the aforementioned agencies, as requested in the recommendation subject to follow-up. In view of the foregoing, the Commission determines that the level of compliance with this recommendation has progressed to partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

132. To have the State fully comply with the recommendation, the Commission emphasizes the importance of continuing to prioritize the allocation of resources to intelligence operations in relation to organized crime, criminal gangs and militias.

Recommendation No. 12 Adopt measures to revert the militarization of police institutions, including:

- a. Canceling programs that allow the purchase or transfer of military equipment and weapons for local police authorities;
- b. Federal government monitoring of the military weapons delivered to local police stations, and other measures to control the distribution of military arms; and
- c. Police training in the proper use of institutional (police) equipment.

133. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide specific information on compliance with this recommendation. Therefore, the Commission determined that the level of compliance remained pending. It thus exhorted the State to adopt the necessary institutional strengthening measures to reverse the militarization of police departments, based on the parameters indicated in the recommendation subject to follow-up.<sup>99</sup>

Information on compliance

134. For the year 2024, the State reported that the 1988 Federal Constitution establishes that the Military Police are responsible for maintaining public order and the Military Fire Departments for civil defense, both serving as auxiliary forces and reserves of the Army, subordinated to the Governors of the States and the Federal District. These institutions have a military character for exceptional situations, ensuring rapid mobilization in support of the Armed Forces. Additionally, Law No. 14.751/2023 modernizes these institutions, replacing Decree-Law No. 667/1969, reinforcing hierarchy, discipline, and social control, integrating them into the Unified Public Security System (SUSP), and ensuring respect for fundamental rights. Law No. 14.735/2023 improves the structure of the Civil Police, ensuring greater independence for delegates, transparency in procedures, and enhanced training in human rights and ethics. For the State, these laws represent progress in public security, promoting modernization, efficiency, and respect for democratic principles.<sup>100</sup>

135. In turn, civil society organizations pointed out to the Commission that they were not aware of any actions being taken by the State to move forward with the implementation of this recommendation and highlighted that, on the contrary, they had observed actions that deepened the militarization of the society, as reflected in the implementation of civil-military schools in some states.<sup>101</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

136. The measures reported by the State and the comments provided by civil society organizations indicate that actions have yet to be taken to fulfill the recommendation regarding the demilitarization of the police forces. Considering this, the Commission determines that this recommendation remains pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

137. The Commission encourages the State to adopt the necessary institutional strengthening measures to reverse the militarization of police departments, based on the parameters indicated in the recommendation, especially with regard to the transfer of personnel and equipment, as well as the control of weapons for use by the military only.

D. Access to justice

Recommendation No. 13. Guarantee appropriate, quick, and comprehensive reparation for all victims of police violence and their family members, including financial support, medical and psychological care, and measures to avoid revictimization.

138. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State submitted information on the creation of the Citizen Security/Reduction of Lethal Police Violence Working Group (GT/SC) under the CNJ, which was comprised of security experts, magistrates, prosecutors and civil society representatives. This group, set up to study police lethality, issued a report on the situation of Rio de Janeiro in March 2023. In addition, the State referred to CNJ's Resolution No. 253/2018, which set forth an institutional policy to assist crime victims and guaranteed the allocation of resources for reparation and training. However, civil society organizations pointed out that, despite the progress made, serious obstacles to access to justice persisted, and the public policies to ensure psychosocial and financial support to victims of police violence were yet to be implemented. The Commission considered that, although institutional measures had been adopted, compliance with the recommendation remained pending due to the lack of specific information on the public policies established to provide support to victims and their families, as well as on the resources allocated thereto.<sup>102</sup>

Information on compliance

139. In 2024, the State indicated that the MDHC has worked on the creation of the National Program of Psychosocial Care for Victims of State Violence, focused on safeguarding the rights of victims, offering reparation and preventing revictimization, thus ensuring victims' physical and psychological well-being. The program seeks to strengthen psychosocial care for mothers, orphans and family members affected by institutional violence resulting from action or omission on the part of security forces. According to the State, the goal is to structure and improve the care provided at the Unified Health System (SUS) and the Single Social Assistance System (SUAS), expanding access to justice and training professionals in the prevention of institutional violence. This entails the following: i) shelters and psychosocial care spaces; ii) enhanced channels for reporting and addressing cases of violence; iii) interinstitutional collaboration among the judiciary, the Public Prosecutor's Office, public defenders' offices and civil society organizations; and iv) campaigns against revictimization and training courses for public officials.<sup>103</sup>

140. The State added that it plans to launch the National Program of Psychosocial Care for Victims of State Violence next, which will focus on monitoring shelters linked to the SUAS and SUS networks and on training their staff. It further reported that federal and interinstitutional actions will be promoted to strengthen these networks, and that it will ensure that civil society organizations take part in the evaluation of the program. Moreover, the State indicated that a National Campaign against Secondary Victimization and Revictimization will be implemented, which will include educational activities related to health and public safety, in collaboration with the judiciary and the Public Prosecutor's Office. Also, training courses in human rights will be offered to public officials and law enforcement authorities.<sup>104</sup>

141. The State also highlighted that the MDHC has launched two public calls for bids for the creation of Memory Centers for Victims of State Violence in Santos (São Paulo) and Rio de Janeiro, focused on education, data collection and the construction of historical narratives on state violence. These centers will work alongside state entities and civil society organizations to strengthen the role of mothers and families of victims of institutional violence in sharing knowledge. Their goals include collecting and recording data, designing and carrying out educational activities, constructing narratives and reconstructing historical versions of contemporary state violence.<sup>105</sup>

142. Moreover, the State indicated that it has engaged in dialogue with the CNMP to support public prosecutors' offices in their actions related to victims of violence. The State reported that, in 2021, the CNMP has implemented a policy to protect and promote rights and support victims. In this context, the MDHC signed a technical cooperation agreement with the CNMP in 2023 to support the creation of centers of assistance to victims of violence by providing training and education to agents and public officials.<sup>106</sup>

143. The State also reported on the activities carried out by the Citizen Police/Reduction of Lethal Police Violence Working Group, created by the CNJ in view of the Motion for Non-Compliance with Fundamental Principles (ADPF) No. 635 that is currently being reviewed by the Federal Supreme Court. This action addresses the use of force by public security agents, focusing on the reduction of lethal police violence in Rio de Janeiro, in line with the judgment of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Favela Nova Brasília v. Brazil.<sup>107</sup>

144. In this regard, the State reiterated that, in 2023, the working group had submitted a detailed report to the CNJ on the situation in Rio de Janeiro, which included an assessment of the Police Lethality Reduction Plan launched by the state and recommendations for complying with the rulings of the STF and the guidelines issued by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, after conducting visits and analyzing the complex security situation in the state. The State also noted that, according to ADPF No. 635, in November 2023, the judge-rapporteur ordered the state of Rio de Janeiro to submit a lethality reduction plan that includes the input of the WG. The measures agreed upon include an effective commitment to combat structural racism; 70 percent reduction in deaths caused by state intervention; arms control; clear procedures to communicate operations; participation of victims in investigations; mandatory use of ambulances; and collaboration with federal forces in operations and social development.<sup>108</sup>

145. The State reported that the state of Rio de Janeiro submitted preliminary figures and that, following a review by the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic (PGR), a settlement hearing was scheduled for May 7, 2024, which was attended by all the parties involved, including the MJSP and the CNJ. Following the hearing, the judge-rapporteur noted that the state of Rio de Janeiro had presented resolutions on school safety, training in tactical pre-hospital care, psychological support for police officers, arms control and the reduction of police lethality. However, the state did not specifically comment on the final report of the CNJ WG, so it was urged to do so, and a new settlement hearing was scheduled for June 18, 2024. The working group examined judicial on-duty shifts (plantões judiciais) and the system for monitoring warrants in Rio de Janeiro. Its investigation was divided into four areas: justice, the Public Prosecutor's Office, expert reports and the Civil Police. The CNJ's report showed a general downward trend in police lethality since the implementation of the decisions set forth in ADPF No. 635 but stressed the need to clarify the concept of "exceptionality" in police operations carried out in communities.<sup>109</sup>

146. Finally, the State indicated that, in July 2024, a technical note was submitted summarizing the work of the STF, which underscored the participation of the Public Prosecutor's Office and the Public Defender's Office. The state of Rio de Janeiro requested the approval of its Police Lethality Reduction Plan, which it considers equivalent to several of its resolutions on school safety, tactical training, psychological care for police officers, arms control and the procedures for preserving incident scenes. According to the State, the final ruling regarding ADPF No. 635 was scheduled for September 2024.<sup>110</sup>

147. Civil society organizations reported to the Commission that, on January 1, 2023, the Access to Justice Secretariat (SAJU) was created with a view to expanding access to rights, by bringing vulnerable groups—such as Afro-descendants, indigenous peoples, women and LGBTQIA+ persons—center stage. The SAJU is responsible for upgrading and democratizing access to justice and citizenship, as well as for improving the judicial services offered to society. The work of this entity in collaboration with other government agencies and civil society organizations is aimed at streamlining the justice system by promoting actions to develop justice policies. In addition, the organizations highlighted three initiatives: i) the Support Network for Persons Affected by Institutional Violence, in partnership with the Public Defender's Office of Rio de Janeiro; ii) the diagnosis of Memories of Massacres in the Countryside (Memória dos Massacres no Campo), in partnership with the University of Brasília (UnB) and the Pastoral Land Commission (CPT); and iii) the Shelter Network for Mothers and Orphans Victims of Violence, in partnership with the Federal University of São Paulo (UNIFESP) and the DPE/SP.<sup>111</sup>

148. Other organizations reported to the Commission that they observed a persistent failure by the State to promote effective policies of full reparation for victims of police violence. They indicated that, in many cases of police violence, fatal victims are not even treated as such since the rationale of autos de resistência (shooting by officers is justified as an act of resistance) continues to allegedly govern public institutions, even though this classification is no longer applicable. They also stated that these deaths are reportedly not adequately recorded and investigated by the State, and that national-level information on deaths that took place during police operations is not published annually, in violation of the judgment of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Favela Nova Brasília v. Brazil. In addition, civil society organizations and universities allegedly question the quality of the data submitted by states. According to the report titled A Cor da Violência Policial: A Bala Não Erra o Alvo (The Color of Police Violence: The Bullet Does Not Miss the Target), released by the Center for Security and Citizenship Studies, in states such as Ceará, Bahia and Rio de Janeiro, the data available on victims disaggregated by race indicates there is an unacceptable amount of missing or incomplete information, which allegedly evidences an intentional concealment of the racial dimension of the problem. The organizations state that such omission of data is an expression of institutional racism that seeks to conceal, rather than confront, the genocide of the black population in Brazil.<sup>112</sup>

149. Moreover, the civil society pointed out that, even though the classification autos de resistência was modified, no substantial change has been made to the recording of deaths due to state intervention, and no term has been consistently adopted across the country. The civil society also indicated that Regulation No. 229/2018 establishes the term “deaths due to a state agent intervention,” thus eliminating expressions such as “standing in the way” or “resisting authority,” but that the concept used for statistical purposes is still limited to deaths following alleged police self-defense. This way, for example, the deaths of children and adolescents in crossfire during operations in favelas in Rio de Janeiro are excluded from these records, and therefore do not appear in the official statistics of deaths perpetrated by state agents.<sup>113</sup>

150. The organizations added that the alleged lack of independent investigation mechanisms in cases of deaths in the context of police operations hinders access to justice and reparations. They claimed that the failure of the State to carry out impartial investigations, along with the backlog of cases in the phase of investigation, aggravated this problem. An example of this is the case of Johnatha de Oliveira, who was killed in 2014 by a police officer in Rio de Janeiro and whose trial, after almost ten years, has not been resolved yet. The civil society also reported that there are neither national policies offering financial support and medical and psychological assistance nor plans to prevent the revictimization targeted at the families of victims of police violence. Recently, the MIR launched a pilot project for providing psychosocial care, but its scope is allegedly limited and only covers two states. According to the organizations, these types of initiatives should receive more funding, be prioritized by the Federal Government and be expanded to the whole country; also, their effectiveness should be properly monitored.<sup>114</sup>

151. Finally, these organizations stated that, with regard to the compensations ordered under international sentences against the Brazilian State, there is no efficient process to ensure compliance and victims are often forced to undergo arduous negotiations to receive reparations. In addition, they pointed out that the recommendations issued by the Commission have not been allocated a budget, which contributes to the obstacles faced by the victims and their families.<sup>115</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

152. The Commission welcomes the creation of the National Program of Psychosocial Care for Victims of State Violence by the MDHC as a public policy to guarantee the rights of victims, offer reparation and prevent their revictimization. In this regard, it considers it essential that the program seeks to structure and improve the care provided to victims and their families at the SUS and the SUAS while expanding their access to justice, since these services are universal and serve people across the country. The Commission also welcomes the National Campaign against Secondary Victimization and Revictimization, the initiative to create Memory Centers for Victims of State Violence and the promotion of training in human rights for public officials and law enforcement authorities.

153. Regarding the measures related to the working group on police lethality and ADPF No. 635, the Commission welcomes the information contained in the CNJ's report, according to which a general downward trend in police lethality was observed in Rio de Janeiro since the implementation of the ADPF. However, it also notes the concerning landscape of public security, especially in terms of institutional violence by security agents in Rio de Janeiro and the need to adopt effective measures to contribute to the downward trend in police lethality, in compliance with said ADPF and the judgment of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Favela Nova Brasília v. Brazil. Furthermore, the Commission voices its concern over the information submitted by the civil society, especially that indicating the lack of effective reparation policies for victims of police violence; the failure to record and disclose data on deaths during police operations, in violation of the aforementioned judgment of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights; the absence of independent investigations, which hinders access to justice; the limited support offered to the families of victims, who are not protected by any national policy; and the obstacles to receiving compensation following international sentences.

154. Based on the information submitted by the State and civil society organizations, the Commission considers that the State has played a positive role, inasmuch as it has implemented public policies that assist the victims of state violence. The Commission highlights, in particular, the fact that the State has adopted a broad approach and included the SUS and the SUAS in its reparation measures. Nevertheless, the Commission underscores the importance of victims having access to comprehensive reparation, including economic redress. On the reduction of police lethality, the Commission welcomes the actions taken within the scope of ADPF No. 635 to achieve this goal in Rio de Janeiro but takes note of information according to which security forces continue to act under the logic of self-defense and data that indicates that no independent and impartial investigations are being conducted, which restricts access to justice.

155. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that the State has taken relevant steps to guarantee reparations to the victims of police violence but observes that significant challenges persist in bringing down the rates of police violence and lethality. Thus, it determines that the recommendation is moving forward in partial compliance, while recognizing the challenges that persist in access to justice.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

156. To consider that the recommendation is fully complied with, the Commission expects the State to report on the implementation of the National Program of Psychosocial Care for Victims of State Violence and its outcomes, as well as on the creation of the Memory Centers for Victims of State Violence. It also requests that the State confirm whether financial reparations are envisaged for the victims and their families, as established in the recommendation. Finally, the Commission urges the State to continue implementing effective measures to bring down the rates of police violence and to provide data on police violence and its victims across the country.

Recommendation No. 14. Establish independent mechanisms in cases involving police violence, which include participation by victims' next of kin, civil society representatives, offices of public defenders and other interested parties, in such a way as to ensure transparency in investigative and processing procedures, identification of potential obstacles to clarification of the facts, and the prosecution of perpetrators.

157. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide information on compliance with this recommendation. According to civil society organizations, external control of police activity in Brazil falls within the competence of the Public Prosecutor's Office, but investigations continue to be carried out by the police, which undermines the transparency and effectiveness of the control. In addition, they reported a lack of effective and successful operational protocols to investigate torture; racial discrimination; delays in forensic examinations; and acts of intimidation, excessive use of force and gender- and racial-based violence, including the violation of maternity rights and acts of sexual harassment against women and girls in detention. The Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation remained pending, since it did not receive information from the State on the matter. Therefore, it recommended establishing independent mechanisms to ensure transparent and effective investigations in cases of police violence.<sup>116</sup>

158. For the 2024 report, the State underscored that, in accordance with Joint Resolution No. 2 of 2015 of the Superior Police Council, whenever the use of force in a police operation results in a crime against the physical integrity or life of a person who is offering resistance, a police investigation must be opened immediately by the relevant unit of the Federal Police to clarify the facts, and priority must be given to the processing of the case file. In addition, the State indicated that, according to Law No. 12,830/2013, the judicial police functions and the investigation of crimes carried out by the chief of police are essential and exclusive to the State. In this regard, the State argued that the charging of a crime is the exclusive responsibility of the police authority, and that it must be based on a grounded technical-legal analysis which describes the factual elements, the circumstances in which the act took place and who took part in it. The State added that the relevant criminal investigation must be led by the chief of police, who shall be impartial and proceed under free technical-legal criteria.<sup>117</sup>

159. The State also referred to the SINDCRIM, a recently created system to consolidate the criminal record of officers of the Federal Police, including data from confidential investigations and state police. According to what was reported, thanks to this tool, it is possible to quickly obtain the criminal record of any officer, and information can be filtered by name, position, status of proceedings and legal details, among others. Its goal is to improve the efficiency and speed of internal investigations in the Federal Police. Moreover, the State referred to the Federal Police' COMUNICA channel, a public platform that allows for the online reporting of crimes under the jurisdiction of the Federal Police and includes a specific field for reporting crimes committed by its officers, which helps to ensure that these reports are sent to the relevant unit for verification and allows any person to report abusive conduct by officers of the Federal Police.<sup>118</sup>

160. Additionally, the State reported that the MDHC is currently coordinating actions to strengthen police complaints desks across the Brazilian states and to promote human rights among public security agents. Reportedly, since 2023, the MDHC has been working with the National Forum of Defenders of the Unified Public Security System (FNOSP) to improve the performance of said forum. The MDHC also supports the external control of the police forces, which is conducted by the Public Prosecutor's Office, and highlights Resolution No. 279 of the CNMP in relation thereto. Moreover, the State indicated that the National Office for the Defense of Human Rights (ONDH) encourages the Public Prosecutor's Office to exercise rigorous control over cases involving human rights violations committed by security agents.<sup>119</sup> As regards the work of the CNJ, the State reported that the Department for the Monitoring and Oversight of the Prison System and the Enforcement System of Socioeducational Measures (DMF/CNJ) reviewed the information related to the CNJ's Resolution No. 253/2018, which introduces the judicial policy for providing support to victims of crimes and other violations. The resolution requires courts to set up Specialized Victim Assistance Centers, which are currently in place in 16 courts.<sup>120</sup>

161. Finally, the State stated that the control of public security institutions in Brazil occurs in two areas: internal, managed by corregidurías, defensorías, and other oversight mechanisms, and external, primarily exercised by the Public Prosecutor's Offices of the states, according to domestic legislation. The MJSP seeks to strengthen these mechanisms, promoting greater independence, transparency, and social participation. An example is Decree No. 12.341/2024, which reinforces accountability through the strengthening of corregidurías, defensorías, and the inclusion of civil society representatives.<sup>121</sup>

162. Notwithstanding the foregoing, civil society organizations pointed out that, although the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has ruled on the responsibility of Brazil in cases involving police violence, police homicides continue to be investigated by the civilian police, and forensic experts are often members thereof and thus their independence is not guaranteed. In addition, it was noted that the CNMP was allegedly considering approving a resolution for prosecutors to lead all the investigations of murders committed by security forces, thus ensuring that victims and their families have access to updated information on investigations, except for confidential documents.<sup>122</sup>

163. Other organizations indicated that the State has not yet implemented a policy that ensures the investigation of cases of police violence by an autonomous, impartial and independent body, even though the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the STF have recognized the authority of the Public Prosecutor's Office to conduct autonomous investigations in these cases. They further noted that the CNMP was evaluating a draft resolution ordering the Public Prosecutor's Office to investigate crimes such as murders, sexual violence, torture and forced disappearances in the context of public security operations. However, this draft does not include monitoring and oversight mechanisms, which could limit its effectiveness, as is already the case with CNMP Resolution No. 201/2019, which has not been consistently complied with, even in emblematic cases such as Favela Nova Brasília v. Brazil.<sup>123</sup>

164. In light of this context, in July 2024, the Commission sent an Article 41 letter to the State requesting information on the acts of police violence perpetrated by the Military Police of the state of São Paulo in the Baixada Santista region, which resulted in the death of almost 40 people. The Commission also recalls the press release on the subject issued in August 2023, where it noted that such actions might constitute a pattern of extrajudicial executions by security forces in Brazil.<sup>124</sup>

165. The Commission welcomes the information sent by the State on the mechanisms available to investigate crimes related to life and personal integrity committed by agents of the Federal Police. It also commends the actions undertaken by the MDHC to strengthen police complaints desks across the states in Brazil and to promote human rights among public security agents, as well as its cooperation with the FNOSP and its support to the Public Prosecutor's Office in the external control of police operations. The IACHR also values the efforts of the MJSP to institutionalize measures that encourage greater accountability and mechanisms that expand the participation of civil society representatives.

166. Although the initiatives pointed out by the State are positive, inasmuch as it has established external control over the actions of security agents, the Commission takes note of the information provided by the civil society and also points to its own initiatives on the subject, such as Article 41 letters and press releases, and highlights the importance of ensuring transparency and independence in the investigation, prosecution and punishment of crimes committed against civilians by security agents of any police body, whether federal, civilian or military.

167. The Commission reaffirms that, as indicated in its country report, police violence in Brazil results from a context of systemic racial discrimination, in which law enforcement agents carry out operations in areas exposed to socioeconomic vulnerability and with high rates of Afro-descendants and youth, failing to observe international human rights standards.

168. In this regard, it is not clear how external control is guaranteed during investigations, in as much as this procedural stage is led by the police itself, nor is it clear how the State ensures the participation of victims, representatives of the civil society and representatives of the Public Defender's Office in said processes. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

169. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Inter-American Commission exhorts the State to submit information on how it ensures independence and transparency in the proceedings brought against public security agents for their actions related to civilians. In particular, it urges the State to indicate how these two principles are guaranteed, especially during investigations, given that these are carried out by the police. Therefore, it requests the State to provide information on the actions of the Public Prosecutor's Office in said investigations, in accordance with the judgment issued by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. In addition, the Commission considers it important that the State report on the participation of victims' family members, representatives of the civil society, representatives of the Public Defender's Office and other stakeholders in said processes.

<sup>124</sup> IACHR, Press Release No. 177/23, IACHR Condemns the Violent Deaths of at Least 16 People in Police Operations in Brazil, August 8, 2023.

Recommendation No. 15. Adopt resolute measures to guarantee all women victims of violence and discrimination access to justice at every stage (reporting, investigation, and judicial proceedings), including access to information in a language and socio-cultural presentation they can understand, with trained personnel to assist them, and appropriate legal counseling.

170. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide specific information on compliance with this recommendation. However, data from other sources showed a significant rise in the number of protection measures granted nationally, with an increase of 17.4 percent in São Paulo and 11.7 percent in Rio de Janeiro. The amendment of Article 19 of the Maria da Penha Law, which strengthens emergency protection measures, was also considered a positive development. Despite this progress, the Commission expressed its concern over impunity in emblematic cases, such as the murders of Marielle Franco and Bernadete Pacífico, which showed that the protection of women remained a challenge. In addition, the Commission highlighted the increase in protection measures and underscored the legislative reform, but considered that compliance with this recommendation remained pending due to the lack of detailed information from the State.<sup>125</sup> To have the State fully comply with this recommendation, the Commission suggested establishing and strengthening specialized units within police forces, prosecutors' offices and the judiciary for handling cases of violence against women, ensuring personnel was trained in gender and human rights, and requested specific and disaggregated data on complaints and their resolution.<sup>126</sup>

Information on compliance

171. In the 2024 report, the State indicated that the National Secretariat for Combating Violence against Women (SENEV), under the Ministry of Women, is currently operating based on the Mulher, Viver sem Violência (Women living without violence) program, which was resumed by way of Decree No. 11,431 in 2023. The main goal of this program is to consolidate and improve public services for women in situations of violence, thus offering a coordinated and effective response through strategic collaboration with other ministries and state governments. According to the State, the program is part of the National Policy to Combat Violence against Women and provides for several key initiatives, such as:

- i. Building Homes for Brazilian Women (CMBs): These are public spaces that offer specialized multidisciplinary services, such as psychological support, legal assistance and health and justice services, thus ensuring that women in situations of violence receive comprehensive care.
- ii. Restructuring Ligue 180 (Call 180): This women assistance helpline is enhanced to offer a faster and more effective response to women seeking help, thus expanding its capacity to provide guidance and assistance in crisis.
- iii. Organizing and humanizing the way victims of sexual violence are treated: An approach that avoids revictimization is promoted, thus guaranteeing that the women affected are treated with dignity and respect.
- iv. Creating mobile care units: These units provide assistance in areas where specialized services are limited or of difficult access, thus offering guidance and support directly to the communities.
- v. Adopting measures to prevent and tackle femicides: Actions are developed with a preventive and protective approach to impede gender-based murders of women.
- vi. Continuing educational and awareness-raising campaigns: Initiatives are carried out to raise awareness in society regarding the various forms of violence against women and to foster a culture of respect and equality.<sup>127</sup>

172. The State also reported that said program's guidelines include integrating services, mainstreaming a gender-, race- and ethnicity-based approach in public policies, sharing responsibilities among federal entities and promoting autonomy and equal rights for women. In addition, priority is given to the provision of humane assistance, the respect for the dignity of individuals and the guarantee of non-revictimization. The State added that the program ensures the availability of means of transport for women to access specialized services and promotes actions to protect and guarantee women's rights, including their right to truth, memory and justice. According to the State, this comprehensive approach seeks both to provide assistance and to prevent the aforementioned situations and promote gender equality through education and the strengthening of effective public policies.<sup>128</sup>

173. Data from the 2024 Brazilian Public Security Yearbook, which was released by the Brazilian Public Security Forum, shows that violence against women saw an increase in 2023 as compared to the previous year, since all cases of violence against women, including all different types of violence, amounted to 1,238,208 women victims over that period. According to the report, 1,467 femicides were recorded, the highest figure on record since the entry into force of Law No. 13,104/2015. The document reveals that the emergency protection measures (MPUs) created under the Maria da Penha Law seek to ensure the immediate safety of victims of domestic violence, thus preventing new attacks and promoting their physical, psychological and social protection. Furthermore, it indicates that, although MPUs can be effective in preventing violence, they are not sufficient on their own to combat violence against women, so they need to be combined with other strategies to successfully address the problem. The document also notes that the authorities' delay in responding to the requests for protection measures continues to be a challenge. And it further notes that, in 2023, there was a 21.3 percent increase in requests for protection measures, amounting to a total of 663,704 cases, plus 848,036 calls to the military police related to acts of violence against women, which works out to over 2,300 calls a day, or two calls per minute.<sup>129</sup>

174. The Commission also learned that the 2024 yearbook made reference to Bill No. 1,904/2024, currently under review by the National Congress. This instrument determines that women who terminate their pregnancy after week 22 shall be sentenced to 6 to 20 years in prison, equating their penalty to that of a murderer, even in circumstances in which abortion is allowed by law, such as in the case of rape. However, the maximum prison sentence prescribed for rapists is 15 years —applied when the victim is under 14 years of age—, which shows that the sentences for women who have been raped and decide to terminate their pregnancy are higher than those prescribed for their aggressors. In addition, Brazil reached a record number of rape cases: 89,988 cases were reported in 2023 according to police records, which is equivalent to a rape every six minutes.<sup>130</sup>

175. Civil society organizations also indicated that the State has not yet granted full access to justice for women victims of violence and discrimination and that victims face obstacles when trying to follow up on investigations, as observed by the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) in 2024. These organizations noted that, although the implementation of the hybrid special trials provided for under the Maria da Penha Law could improve access to justice, the State has not moved forward with this policy. Moreover, they voiced their concern over the use of restorative justice and family constellations techniques in cases of gender-based violence, which has allegedly not been resolved by the CNJ thus far. Although the Protocol for Gender-Responsive Trials was created, there are no monitoring mechanisms in place for its implementation, which requires mandatory and continuous supervision and training to effectively improve access to justice for women and girls.<sup>131</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

176. The Commission commends the measures reported by the State to address violence against women in the country and to guarantee access to justice, especially the Mulher, Viver sem Violência program, launched in 2023. However, it observes that there has been an increase in rates related to violence against women, such as the number of reports and requests for protection measures. The Commission notes that this increase could mean that women have more access to information on means of reporting, although there is insufficient data to assert this fact. It further notes the considerable time taken by the justice system to grant the requested protection measures to women, which is a decisive factor that determines whether they will again be victims of violence, especially domestic violence.

177. Additionally, the Commission is deeply concerned over the processing of Bill No. 1904/2024 because of its impact on access to justice for women and girls who are victims of sexual violence in Brazil. In this regard, the Commission notes that criminalizing women or girls who are victims of rape and want to legally terminate their pregnancy is a form of institutional violence against those who are already in a situation of extreme vulnerability, and it hinders access to a fundamental right. Due to the foregoing, the Commission considers that progress has been achieved by the State, inasmuch as it has devised and implemented measures aimed at tackling violence against women and ensuring their access to justice. Notwithstanding that, the Commission is aware of the challenges faced by women and girls, as well as of the threats posed by the legislative branch to the guarantee of their access to justice. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

178. To guide compliance with the recommendation, the Commission urges the State to submit information on the impact of the measures undertaken to combat violence against women and ensure access to justice, focusing on how these measures are effective in reducing violence rates across the country. It also highlights the importance of guaranteeing the human right of access to legal abortion for all women and girls in cases of rape.

Recommendation No. 16. Decriminalize offenses against honor/reputation —contempt, calumny, defamation, and insult— and convert them in the case of government officials or cases involving the public interest into civil suits, in accordance with international standards and best practices in this field.

179. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide information on compliance with this recommendation. However, the Commission learned of various bills aimed at decriminalizing contempt, calumny, insult and defamation. Moreover, the Commission warned about the use of the judicial system to threaten journalism and prohibit or suspend the dissemination of certain information of public interest, even prior to its publication. Therefore, it determined that compliance with this recommendation remained pending and requested the State to move forward with legislative initiatives on the decriminalization of the aforementioned criminal offenses.<sup>132</sup>

180. In the 2024 report, the State indicated that, in 2020, the STF had recognized the constitutionality of the crime of contempt in ADPF No. 496. Although in previous judgments the STJ had established the decriminalization of contempt, the State notes that, in accordance with Article 13 of the American Convention on Human Rights, the most recent interpretation of the STF prevails.<sup>133</sup>

181. On this issue, the DPE/SP reported that Brazil did not take any measures to ensure the decriminalization of offenses against honor/reputation.<sup>134</sup>

<sup>134</sup> DPE/SP, Specialized Center for Prison Conditions, Response to de request for information, October 4, 2024.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

182. In view of the absence of concrete initiatives to decriminalize offenses against honor/reputation, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

183. To have the State comply with this recommendation, it is essential that it revise criminal legislation to eliminate or decriminalize offenses against honor/reputation. Additionally, the Commission highlights the importance of implementing education and training programs for judges, prosecutors and law enforcement officials on the importance of freedom of expression and the inter-American standards on the matter.

E. Persons of African descent

Recommendation No. 17. Design, implement, and finance state systems for gathering accurate and disaggregated data, and statistical and qualitative information, regarding the human rights situation of persons of African descent at the various levels of the federation and in areas such as health, education, judicial institutions, and others, in order to create and implement intersectional laws and appropriate public policies for addressing needs and overcoming the specific hurdles those persons face.

184. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted several measures it had undertaken to fight racism and promote racial equity, especially within the judiciary. A working group composed mainly of judges of African descent was created to propose actions against structural racism and to establish the National Judiciary Forum for Racial Equity (FONAER), which seeks to ensure racial equality in judicial proceedings. Also, the State underscored that it had launched the National Judiciary Covenant for Racial Equity, as well as a report showing an increase in the number of Afro-descendant judges in office. It also worked towards a commitment to transparency and the creation of a national database on affirmative-action policies, in collaboration with the Office of the Comptroller General of the Union (CGU). For this follow-up report, the State referred to the Open Government Partnership, focused on transparency and social participation, and the Juventude Negra Viva (Black Youth Alive, PJNV) plan aimed at bringing down violence against young Afro-descendants and reducing their vulnerability.

185. For their part, civil society organizations expressed that the budget allocated to the MIR is insufficient to address the serious problem of violence and racism faced by the Afro-descendant population in Brazil. Despite the efforts made, significant gaps persist in the implementation of public policies, which is why the Commission considered that the level of compliance with this recommendation had only progressed to partial.<sup>135</sup>

186. To move forward with the implementation of the recommendation, the Commission highlighted the importance of extending the collection of data and disaggregated statistics to all relevant areas, not only to the Public Prosecutor's Office and the judiciary. In addition, it indicated that it was paramount to ensure adequate funding for the MIR and other entities responsible for tackling racism and promoting racial equality.<sup>136</sup>

187. In 2024, the State indicated that the MIR had been working on the collection of specific data from several ministries, based on information from the 2022 IBGE Census and the Single Registry of the Federal Government. In the field of education, the INEP has been collecting data disaggregated by race/color by means of the School Census and the Higher Education Census of 2007 and 2009, respectively, with the aim of continuously improving the quality of the information. In the field of health, race-sensitive policies have been implemented, such as the inclusion of data on HIV/AIDS, viral hepatitis and syphilis in epidemiological bulletins, in addition to the creation of online courses to address stigma and discrimination within healthcare services.<sup>137</sup>

188. The State also reported that the FONAER had undertaken various initiatives, such as a draft National Racial Equity Policy, which would be soon assessed by the Plenary of the CNJ. It added that it regulated the indicator of performance in the promotion of racial equity (IPER) and created the 2024 Racial Equity Award to encourage innovative practices to combat racism. In addition, a scholarship program for persons of African descent was developed. Finally, the State established a working group to design a Protocol for Racial Responsive Trials as well as a working group to study and improve the judicial handling of cases related to the Quilombola land and communities.<sup>138</sup>

189. The State further indicated that the National Judiciary Covenant for Racial Equity enjoys the full support of courts across the country. Within this framework, the State celebrated the Racial Justice and Equity Day, an initiative undertaken by the CNJ and other judicial bodies to discuss and promote measures to improve access to justice for persons of African descent, increase their representation in the judicial system and combat structural racism. Moreover, according to the State, a new Ethnic-Racial Data Registry is being compiled to update information on the judiciary workforce and improve the formulation of policies against racial inequality.<sup>139</sup>

190. Furthermore, the State provided information on its commitment to creating a national computer system to build a database on racial-affirmative action policies in Brazil, which was included in the Sixth National Action Plan led by the Open Government Partnership. This initiative is being coordinated by the MIR and monitored by the CGU and seeks to establish collaborative and interdependent governance of ethno-racial data. It also sets forth 20 milestones to be implemented by 2027 to produce, process and show quality data in a single catalog. The catalog is currently being developed and standardized; the disclosure of the data is expected in future stages.<sup>140</sup>

191. In addition, the State reported that the PJNV seeks to reduce the vulnerability and lethal violence affecting young Afro-descendants in Brazil by confronting structural racism through 11 lines of action and 217 measures agreed upon with 18 ministries. This plan was devised by an interministerial working group coordinated by the MIR and supported by the General Secretariat of the Office of the President of the Republic, and 6,000 young Afro-descendants were involved in its drafting, by means of “participative motorcades” across the country. In June 2024, the state of Ceará was the first to formally adhere to the PJNV, thus consolidating a partnership with the federal government to implement this policy. Finally, the State highlighted that the budget allocated to the MIR increased from 91.8 million Brazilian reais in 2023 to 180.4 million Brazilian reais in 2024.<sup>141</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

192. Based on the submitted information, the Commission considers that the State has made progress in complying with this recommendation. In particular, it highlighted the collection of disaggregated data, fed by information from different ministries, the 2022 IBGE Census and the Single Registry; the implementation of policies that address the health of the Afro-descendant population, such as the inclusion of data on several diseases in epidemiological bulletins and the creation of training programs to combat stigma within healthcare services; the implementation of projects such as the National Racial Equity Policy and the IPER by the FONAER; the development of a national computer system to gather data on affirmative action policies, which is part of the Sixth National Action Plan of the Open Government Partnership and seeks collaborative governance over accessible quality data. The Commission welcomes these measures and notes that the level of compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

193. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission prompts the State to submit more concrete information on the effectiveness of the aforementioned actions, including the successful and sustainable implementation of the above-mentioned policies, the achievement of tangible results in relation to the reduction of inequality and discrimination, and an assessment of the impact of these measures on Afro-descendant communities.

Recommendation No. 18. Adopt special policies and affirmative actions to guarantee the enjoyment and exercise of the rights and fundamental freedoms of the persons or groups who are victims of racism, racial discrimination, and related intolerance, with a view to promoting equitable conditions for equal opportunities, and actions that foster the inclusion and advancement of those persons or groups. Affirmative actions should have a special focus on education and the labor market and be conducive not only to those persons' entry into the job market, but to their staying in it, as well.

194. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported on the creation of the interministerial working group to develop the National Affirmative Action Program (GTI/PNAA), which was coordinated by the MIR, with the purpose of promoting equity for Afro-descendants, indigenous persons, persons with disabilities and women. In addition, the State launched the Beatriz Nascimento Women in Science Program, which offered scholarships to women from marginalized groups, and introduced a bill to increase admission quotas to public universities. In the field of labor, it reported on the enforcement of several ordinances and laws to ensure greater inclusion of persons of African descent and promote diversity in the workplace. The Commission commended the efforts made by the State to address racial inequality and determined that the level of compliance with this recommendation had progressed to substantial partial. Therefore, it urged it to continue strengthening affirmative actions and to report on the progress achieved in educational and labor inclusion, as well as in the monitoring and evaluation of these policies.<sup>142</sup>

195. In the 2024 report, the State indicated that the interministerial working group for the creation of the Federal Affirmative Action Program (PFAA) had met monthly in 2023 and had concluded its work with the publication of Decree No. 11,785 on November 20, 2023, on Black Awareness Day. It further noted that said program is fully operational, with a steering committee in charge of its management and monitoring, and that, since its launching, three documents have been published: the interministerial working group report on the creation of the PFAA, a draft action plan and a preliminary results report. Reportedly, the steering committee is working with federal public administration bodies to develop action plans with affirmative actions.<sup>143</sup>

196. Moreover, the State reported that, by means of Decree No. 11,446 of March 2023, the MIR created an interministerial working group to develop the Program to Combat Religious Racism and Reduce Violence and Discrimination against Traditional Peoples and Communities of African Origin and Terreiros. This proposal, which arose from discussions with the civil society, was transformed into a national policy that is currently under consideration by the government. In 2023, the MIR held five meetings about the Abre Caminhos (Open paths) project, touring all regions of Brazil to assess living conditions and promote debates on rights and territorial strengthening, which concluded in a national meeting of the aforementioned peoples in March 2024.<sup>144</sup>

197. The State also indicated that the MIR has played a key role in updating the Quota Law by achieving the passing of Law No. 14,723/2023, which extends the implementation of this law for another ten years and improves access to the educational system for students with disabilities and students of African, Quilombola and indigenous descent. In addition, the State reported that state meetings have been held to implement antiracist education and combat discrimination within educational institutions, and that the MIR has granted scholarships to Candomblé students for graduate courses and has launched programs such as the National Terreiro Childhood Week.

198. In the field of labor, the State indicated that the MIR is promoting the expansion of quotas in the public administration and has undertaken initiatives to increase the representation of Afro-descendants in diplomatic and leadership careers. The State also reported that, under Decree No. 11,443 of 2024, it seeks to have Afro-descendants appointed to 30 percent of positions of trust within the federal public administration by 2025, which evidences an ongoing commitment to racial equality; that it is collaborating with the CGU in the creation of monitoring and evaluation systems for affirmative actions within the framework of the Open Government Partnership; that the MIR produces periodic reports to measure the effectiveness of its policies, thus ensuring results in the promotion of racial equality; and that the MIR plays a strategic role in the implementation and supervision of affirmative actions, which have a positive impact on racial equity in the Brazilian society.<sup>145</sup>

199. The Commission welcomes the information provided by the State, especially as regards the creation of the PFAA as a way to promote the rights of and equal opportunities for the Afro-descendant population, among other groups in vulnerable situations; the drafting the National Policy for Traditional Peoples and Communities of African Origin and Terreiros, which is under consideration by the government; the work led by the MIR in updating the Quota Law and extending these policies for a decade, thus improving the access of students with disabilities and students of African, Quilombola and indigenous origin to the educational system; the role of the MIR in expanding quotas in the public administration and undertaking initiatives to increase the representation of Afro-descendant persons in diplomatic and leadership careers; and, finally, the development of monitoring and evaluation systems for affirmative actions, in addition to the periodic reports issued by the MIR to measure the effectiveness of these policies.

200. The Commission highlights the importance of the above-mentioned measures but stresses the need for specific information and results as regards their implementation and how they contribute to the reduction of racism, racial discrimination and related intolerance in Brazil. Based on the foregoing, it considers that the level of compliance with this recommendation remains substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

201. To guide compliance with the recommendation, the Commission suggests that the State submit information on the impact of the creation and implementation of these measures on the reduction of racism, racial discrimination and related intolerance.

Recommendation No. 19. Bolster policies to reduce crime that pursue a comprehensive and intersectional approach, addressing factors associated with ethnic/racial origin and which heighten the risk of violent death, including poverty, sexual orientation and identity, and/or gender expression.

202. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about the Juventude Negra Viva plan, designed to bring down violence against young Afro-descendants in the most vulnerable areas of Brazil. The plan was reportedly being developed with input from the community through the “participative motorcades” and was backed by Ordinance No. 11,444/2023. However, the Commission learned that the annual report of the Brazilian Public Security Forum revealed that 76.5 percent of the victims of violent deaths and 83.1 percent of the victims of police violence in Brazil were of African descent. The Commission noted that, despite the aforementioned initiatives, serious problems related to violence and racial discrimination persisted. In addition, it observed that the lack of specific data on the effectiveness of policies in relation to intersectional factors, such as poverty and gender identity, indicated that compliance with this recommendation remained pending. The Commission urged the State to report on comprehensive policies that addressed these factors and had a positive impact on reducing violence.<sup>146</sup>

Information on compliance

203. For the instant report, the State informed the Commission that, in 2024, the Federal Police, by means of the General Coordinating Office for Repression of Crimes against Human Rights and in collaboration with the National Police Academy, implemented several training initiatives focused on human rights. It further also carried out courses such as one on the promotion of human rights in police activity," which was mandatory for advancing police careers and was available to all personnel; an on-site course on anti-racist action sharing in the police, which addressed racial inequality; and other practical courses on human rights and the appropriate use of force. In addition, the State reported on the III International Congress on Human Rights, which was held in Brazil and focused on humane assistance to vulnerable victims. It also stated that it expects that these programs will continue in 2025 to reinforce the Federal Police' commitment to the promotion of and respect for human rights.<sup>147</sup>

204. Subsequently, the State reported that, although the Federal Government does not have direct operational control over the public security institutions of the states, it seeks to strengthen policies with a comprehensive and intersectional approach, addressing factors such as inequality, structural racism, and discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity. PRONASCI has been restructured to prioritize areas with high violence, considering socioeconomic indicators and vulnerable populations. Additionally, the Plano Juventude Negra Viva (PJNV) aims to reduce lethal violence against black youth, articulating 11 action areas with 217 initiatives in collaboration with 18 ministries. Within this framework, the National Secretariat of Public Security (SENASP) implements measures aligned with violence prevention, such as: i) PRONASCI Juventude/Tô de Boa Project to prevent homicides; ii) CONVIVE Community Centers, with a new regulation approved; iii) Construction of 17 Casas da Mulher Brasileira to support women experiencing violence; iv) Disarmament Campaign, promoting the reduction of weapons and ammunition.<sup>148</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

205. The Commission appreciates the information regarding the training of Federal Police agents and especially acknowledges the measures adopted by the Federal Government aimed at strengthening public security policies. However, it highlights the persistent and high rates of violence against Afro-descendant individuals in the context of combating crime, considering the structural racism present in the country and its consequent impact on the actions of security forces, whether civilian or military. Without disregarding the context but taking into account the measures adopted to comply with the recommendation, the Commission concludes that the recommendation progresses to partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

206. To promote compliance with this recommendation, the Commission calls on the State to continue to report on the policies implemented to reduce crime rates by adopting a comprehensive and intersectional approach that addresses factors associated with ethnicity and race, which heighten the risk of violent deaths. The factors that should be considered in these policies include poverty and sexual orientation and gender identity, among others. In addition, the State must guarantee these measures are developed under a comprehensive and intersectional approach that allows for a positive impact on crime reduction considering the structural racism in Brazil.

F. Indigenous peoples and traditional Quilombola communities

Recommendation No. 20. Build the institutional capacities of the bodies responsible for drawing up social and territorial policies relating to indigenous and Quilombola peoples, including the National Colonization and Agrarian Reform Institute (INCRA) and the National Foundation for the Indigenous (FUNAI), and endow them with both resources and financial execution capacity.

207. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State indicated that, to strengthen the FUNAI, a dialogue was initiated with the MPI and other entities, which gave rise to a public selection process for 502 new positions and resulted in the allocation of an extraordinary sum of 146.7 million Brazilian reais to the budget of the ministry. The State also reported that 742 people were expected to be hired at the INCRA. Regarding the regularization of Quilombola lands, it reported on the launching of the Aquilomba Brasil (Turning Brazil into a quilombo) program, coordinated by the MIR and the Ministry of Agrarian Development and Family Farming (MDAAF), together with the National Plan for Quilombola Land Titling, with a view to expediting land titling processes. The State also referred to the creation of the Procurement Alternatives Group (GAO) under the MDAAF/INCRA, which is aimed at expanding the capacity of communities to procure land through debt enforcement, the regularization of public lands and judgments related to slave labor.<sup>149</sup>

208. Also, in the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted Ordinance No. 11,688/2023, which re-established the Technical Chamber for the Allocation of Federal Public Lands (CTD), which works towards recognizing the rights of indigenous and Quilombola peoples, as well as promoting the sustainable use of natural resources. The State reported that, after years of stagnation (2019–2022), a task force was created, which managed to benefit 3,723 families in different states in 2023 and ensured the participation of Quilombola communities.<sup>150</sup> The Commission considered that the measures adopted sought to reinforce the institutional capacity of the FUNAI and the INCRA, acknowledged the progress achieved in relation to the titling of indigenous and Quilombola lands and stated that the level of compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial. Finally, it directed the State to continue implementing measures to strengthen the two aforementioned bodies.<sup>151</sup>

209. In the 2024 report, the State indicated that, for the current reporting period, the budget of the FUNAI was raised from 813.1 million Brazilian reais in 2023 to 1.07 trillion Brazilian reais, while the budget of the INCRA was raised from 2.85 million Brazilian reais in 2023 to 3.05 trillion Brazilian reais. Also, it noted that the MIR has been working together with the INCRA to finance an interoperable system that will aggregate data on Quilombola land regularization and serve as a basis for the incorporation of information produced by the institute's technical teams. According to the State, this will allow for interoperability with other information systems on Quilombola policies, so as to be accessible to the bodies that draft policies on this matter. Regarding the growth of the personnel of the FUNAI, the State stressed that 502 new positions have been created through the Single National Public Selection Process (CNPU) and that the relevant exams were taken in August 2024, the results of which were to be published in November 2024.<sup>152</sup>

210. Moreover, the State reported that the Aquilomba Brasil program, established in March 2023, is structured around four thematic areas and 24 objectives, the first of which is the regularization of the Quilombola lands, mainly through an action plan to draft a national titling agenda. In this regard, the National Titling Agenda Working Group has held multiple meetings since April 2023, and therefore the preparation of the National Titling Plan is at an advanced stage. The State pointed out that the process of drafting the plan consisted of three stages: i) a diagnosis of the current titling procedures before the INCRA, which currently amount to over 1,800 cases; ii) a survey to gather data on titling procedures before state land institutes, with the purpose of taking joint action; and iii) a survey on overlapping territories in federal, state and municipal public areas, with a view to building a special resource allocation strategy.<sup>153</sup>

211. The State also indicated that the budget for the regularization of the Quilombola lands for 2024 rose to 137 million Brazilian reais, the largest amount in the history of the country. Moreover, it reported that the Action Plan for the National Titling Agenda, which is in its final phase, will provide for the development of an interoperable information system, in addition to an increase in human and financial resources. Finally, the State added that, in 2023, the MIR enabled the preparation of identification and delimitation technical reports (RTIDs) in multiple states and reassessed the available resources to pay Quilombola land-related compensations in the state of Bahia.<sup>154</sup>

212. The Commission welcomes the significant budget increase allocated to the FUNAI and the INCRA in 2024, as well as the public selection process to hire additional staff for the FUNAI, which demonstrates the commitment of the State to strengthening both bodies, in accordance with the recommendation under follow-up. In the same regard, the Commission commends the creation of an interoperable land regularization system, given that it will make information accessible to the bodies in charge of formulating policies related to the subject-matter, thus optimizing management and planning.

213. The Commission also welcomes the progress made in the implementation of the Aquilomba Brasil program, especially in relation to the drafting of the National Land Titling Plan, which, according to the State, is at an advanced stage of development. In the same vein, it applauds the allocation of the largest budget in the history of Brazil for the regularization of the Quilombola lands in 2024. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that the level of compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

214. To guide full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission prompts the State to share information on the measures taken to continue strengthening the bodies in charge of indigenous and Quilombola land titling and regularization, specifying whether the amounts allocated are sufficient for them to be fully operational. In addition, the Commission urges the State to report on the progress made in the preparation and first steps of implementation of the National Titling Plan.

Recommendation No. 21. Mainstream an intercultural approach in government development policies that includes recognition and incorporation of the economic and social development plans pursued by indigenous peoples in their respective ancestral territories.

215. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted the creation of the MPI as a significant step forward to incorporate the perspective of indigenous peoples into social and development policies, as well as the setting up of the National Council of Indigenous Policies, aimed at overseeing and formulating public policies on the subject. The State also submitted a project to monitor mercury contamination on the Yanomami indigenous land at the Yanomami and Yekuana Leadership Forum in July 2023. Finally, it underscored the drafting of policies related to the improvement of indigenous school infrastructure. The Inter-American Commission commended all this progress, especially the creation of the MPI and the consultative body for indigenous affairs and determined that the level of compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial. In addition, it called on the State to continue strengthening human rights institutions under an intercultural approach that incorporated the priorities of indigenous peoples into the formulation and implementation of public policies.<sup>155</sup>

Information on compliance

216. In the 2024 report, the State highlighted some public policies for the development of indigenous peoples, such as the National Policy for the Territorial Management of Indigenous Lands (PNGATI), aimed at ensuring the sustainable use of natural resources in indigenous territories; the National Indigenous School Food Program (PNAE); the Mosarambihára: Semeadores do Bem Viver para Cura da Terra (Mosarambihára: Sowers of Good Living for the Healing of the Earth) program; the Indigenous Food Purchase Program (PAA); and the Bolsa Família program.<sup>156</sup> Moreover, the State reported that, in 2023, it had resumed the processes of demarcation of indigenous lands. It also pointed out that, after the homologation by means of a presidential decree, the MPI continued working on the demarcation of the lands of Avá-Canoeiro, Rio dos Índios, Tremembé Barra do Mumbau, Arara do Rio Amônia, Uneiuxi, Kariri Xocó, Rio Gregório and Acapuri de Cima, and that it followed a procedure to homologate the demarcation of Aldeia Velha and Cacique Fontoura. In this regard, the State indicated that a total of 852,684.74 hectares of protected land were demarcated across the country and that an additional 25 demarcation processes were submitted to the MJSP for it to issue declaratory orders that delimit the territories of the indigenous lands.<sup>157</sup>

217. In 2023, the FUNAI established or resumed the activities of 37 working groups for the demarcation of indigenous lands and, in that same year, the Interministerial Committee for the Coordination, Planning and Follow-up of Actions for the Removal of Trespassers on Indigenous Lands was set up to work on actions to remove trespassers, thus guaranteeing the security and physical, social and cultural integrity of indigenous communities and their leaders. The State reported that, so far, concrete steps have been taken in several regions, such as in the Alto Rio Guamá, Apyterewa and Trincheira Bacajá indigenous lands; also, the process of removal of trespassers is under way at the Yanomami indigenous land, and the Karipuna land is currently in the postremoval stage.<sup>158</sup>

218. In particular, the State indicated that it took urgent measures in 2023, both in response to the public health crisis and to combat illegal mining on the Yanomami indigenous land. Among these, it highlighted the following: i) consultations with indigenous leaders; ii) technical visits to the most vulnerable areas; iii) the preparation of plans to remove trespassers and promote food security; iv) the reconstruction of protection centers; v) the distribution of food packages and agricultural tools; vi) investments in education and the local economy; vii) the expansion of the healthcare system by improving infrastructure and increasing in human resources to provide care to the indigenous population; viii) actions to improve the nutritional condition of children. The State also indicated that, to address the unfolding humanitarian crisis, a provisional measure was approved to allocate 210 million Brazilian reais to the MPI.<sup>159</sup>

219. The State also referred to the protection of the Vale do Javari indigenous land, where a Territorial Protection Plan has been in place since 2024 to combat deforestation and illegal fishing, as well as to ensure the security of isolated indigenous peoples in the region. It further noted that, since January 2023, over 30 audits were conducted by the Vale do Javari Ethno-environmental Protection Front under the FUNAI (FPEV)/FUNAI; 154 operations were undertaken by the Federal Police with the support of the National Public Security Forces and the Brazilian Army; and four major operations were carried out by the Brazilian Institute of the Environment and Renewable Natural Resources (IBAMA).<sup>160</sup>

220. The State also indicated that, in the context of the Plan for the Prevention and Control of Deforestation in the Legal Amazon (PPCDAM), the CTD was re-established, and that FUNAI and the MPI contribute to its operation. The CTD issued two resolutions in 2024 ordering the allocation of federal public lands to indigenous peoples who were claiming them. Moreover, the State reported that the MPI is currently working on the sustainable use of natural resources and on productive indigenous initiatives, according to the guidelines issued by the PNGATI, which supports the development of 13 territorial and environmental management plans (PGTAs) and is working on the implementation of 15 additional plans. Furthermore, the MPI collaborates with state secretariats on indigenous peoples to promote the incorporation of the PNGATI and is currently incorporating an intercultural approach into all its policies and programs through consultations with indigenous peoples.<sup>161</sup>

221. The State also informed that the STF is currently hearing on reviewing several ADPFs on issues such as the continuation of the process of demarcation of indigenous lands; the ongoing and proposed actions to remove trespassers; the Interministerial Committee for the Coordination, Planning and Follow-up of Actions for the Removal of Trespassers on Indigenous Lands; the Vale do Javari Territorial Protection Plan; and the CTD, especially in relation to administrative contracts, budget decentralization and workforce restoration.<sup>162</sup>

222. Finally, the State stressed that all these actions carried out by the MPI favor indigenous methodologies, engage the main stakeholders, adopt a gender-responsive approach and respect the specificities of each person. As examples of this, the State referred to the participation of indigenous peoples in the development of the PNGATI and the drafting of the agenda for the Coordinating Office for Policies for LGBTQIA+ Indigenous Persons under the National Secretariat for the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons —which is attached to the MDHC—, carried out in cooperation with LGBTQIA+ indigenous movements.<sup>163</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

223. The Commission welcomes the information provided by the State on the measures taken to guarantee the rights of indigenous peoples in Brazil. In particular, it highlights the following measures: the significant budget increase for the FUNAI and the INCRA to strengthen land management and the policies to support indigenous peoples; the progress achieved in the demarcation of indigenous lands, which resulted in the protection of over 850,000 hectares and the continuation of pending demarcation processes; the implementation of concrete actions to remove trespassers from different territories; the Territorial Protection Plan to combat deforestation and ensure the security of isolated peoples; the re-establishment of the Technical Chamber for the Allocation of Federal Public Lands, which issued resolutions to allot lands to indigenous peoples; the development and adoption of territorial and environmental management plans shaped by the input of indigenous peoples through their participation and under an intercultural approach; and the promotion of the inclusion and active participation of indigenous peoples in the formulation and implementation of public policies, including those related to gender issues and the rights of LGBTQIA+ indigenous persons. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that the State is committed to strengthening the protection of the right to land, improving security and supporting the sustainable development of indigenous communities. Consequently, it determines that the level of compliance with the recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

224. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission recalls the importance of continuing to bolster human rights institutions, specifically in relation to safeguarding the rights of indigenous peoples in Brazil by adopting an intercultural approach; also, it underscores that it is paramount that the State prioritizes formulating and implementing public policies on the matter.

Recommendation No. 22. Adopt legislative, administrative, or other necessary measures to carry out, within a reasonable time, consultation with indigenous peoples and Quilombola tribal communities to obtain their free, prior, and informed consent to policies, projects, and actions, including projects for the exploitation of natural resources that affect them, in accordance with international human rights standards and with the full participation of those peoples and communities. Accordingly, take measures to reconcile the consultation and consent protocols executed by the indigenous and Quilombola peoples.

225. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that the PNGATI Management Committee, created in 2012, had been re-established. The State specified that this was a governance body with social participation in which the demands and proposals were discussed in light of the new indigenous policy implemented by the government, under the leadership of indigenous peoples' representatives. Although the Commission appreciated the reinstatement of the PNGATI, it noted the lack of specific information on the measures adopted to guarantee the right to prior and informed consultation in environmental licensing processes. Therefore, it considered that compliance with this recommendation remained pending and emphasized the need to receive information on the implementation of this recommendation in line with the consultation protocols developed by indigenous peoples.<sup>164</sup>

Information on compliance

226. In 2024, the State reported that it plans to develop new consultation protocols, in addition to the 41 protocols already established by indigenous peoples, so as to adapt to the needs of the 300 indigenous peoples and 700 indigenous lands in the country. The State reported that the MPI will support the drafting of more than 20 consultation protocols with indigenous peoples.<sup>165</sup> Furthermore, Brazil reported that the MIR had expressed its intention to assist the public defenders' offices, the Public Prosecutor's Office and the Quilombola communities in the drafting of consultation protocols. The State indicated that the MIR had also voiced its opinion on these communities in the processes requiring consultation.<sup>166</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

227. The Commission welcomes the drafting of 20 consultation protocols in addition to the 41 protocols already in place. Nevertheless, it considers that it does not have any specific information on the mechanisms that guarantee that these consultation processes are aligned with international human rights standards and ensure the full participation of indigenous peoples and communities. Due to the foregoing, it concludes that compliance with the recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

228. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission reiterates that it is necessary to have information on the measures adopted by the State to implement the right to consultation and for the consultation and consent protocols developed by the indigenous peoples and Quilombola communities to be standardized and aligned with inter-American standards on the matter. The Commission underscores that the development of these consultation protocols and other similar initiatives is based on the right of indigenous and tribal peoples to decide how they wish to exercise their rights, in connection with their right to free self-determination. Accordingly, the Commission invites the State to take these proposals and initiatives into consideration as part of a broad, inclusive dialogue with these groups focused on the guarantee of their rights to consultation and to free, prior, and informed consent.

Recommendation No. 23. Revise the regulations governing the granting of environmental permits or licenses, in such a way as to guarantee that the State complies with its international obligations to consult indigenous and Quilombola peoples to obtain their free, prior, and informed consent before taking steps that may impair their rights.

229. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that the MPI had contacted indigenous peoples to consult them and obtain their free, prior and informed consent on several projects, including the renewal of operating licenses and infrastructure projects such as the Belo Monte Hydroelectric Plant and the BR 319 highway. However, civil society organizations warned that, in spite of these measures, the State continued to implement policies which prevented adequate consultation and fostered development projects with negative impacts. They noted that the Belo Monte and Belo Sun cases evidenced the absence of protection and consultation measures during the licensing process. Furthermore, the Federal Senate was reportedly examining a bill which would allow for the approval of environmental licenses with no adequate prior consultation. The Commission considered that compliance with the recommendation remained pending and urged the State to provide information on how environmental licensing regulations adhere to international standards on consultation and consent.<sup>167</sup>

Information on compliance

230. In 2024, the State reported that the regulations governing the issuance of environmental licenses had not been revised. It further indicated that the MIR ensures that free, prior and informed consultation processes are conducted and respected.<sup>168</sup> Additionally, the State emphasized that the right to free, prior and informed consultation is recognized as a fundamental right of the indigenous peoples in accordance with Convention 169 of the International Labor Organization (ILO), which was incorporated into the Brazilian legal system through Decree No. 5051/2024. The State added that the organizations tasked with preparing the consultation protocols cannot participate in decision-making processes, must be independent and autonomous, and cannot have vested interest in the decisions made by indigenous peoples. Moreover, the State informed that the social and cultural organization of each group is engaged during the drafting process of each consultation protocol and that, once discussions are held, the final document must be approved at a general assembly of the indigenous land. The MPI reported that it is making efforts to protect the rights of indigenous peoples and ensure their participation in the decisions which impact their territories.<sup>169</sup>

231. Thanks to information from civil society organizations, the Commission learned about cases involving the use of indigenous lands by companies in which the free, prior and informed consultation process had not taken place. For instance, at a side event organized by indigenous organizations during the 167th regular session of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights held in Manaus, Brazil, in May 2024, it was reported that the Mura people had not been consulted before the issuance of an environmental license to the company Potássio do Brasil.<sup>170</sup> In the same vein, the Federal Public Prosecutor's Office recommended suspending the license granted to Castelo dos Sonhos, a gold mining project in Altamira, so that the necessary measures can be adopted to comply with the legal provisions breached, including the failure to conduct a prior, free and informed consultation with the Baú and Menkragnoti peoples.<sup>171</sup> The Federal Public Prosecutor's Office also requested a judicial body to order the suspension of mining activities in areas that are of special interest to the Katukina/Kaxinawá, Nukini and Puyanawa peoples, as well as to other communities living in the Acre state, due to the absence of prior consultation.<sup>172</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

232. The Commission notes the importance of incorporating Convention 169 of the ILO into the domestic legal system. However, it voices its concern over the issuance of environmental licenses to companies, which enables the use of indigenous lands without prior, free and informed consultation, a mechanism designed to guarantee the rights of indigenous peoples. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

233. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission emphasizes the need to guarantee that the State complies with its international obligations to consult indigenous and Quilombola peoples to obtain their free, prior, and informed consent before taking steps that may impair their rights.

Recommendation No. 24. Adopt all necessary measures to implement or strengthen systems for oversight and control over exploration, extractive, and development activities in a manner consistent with international human rights obligations.

234. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission that IBAMA had intensified its work in indigenous lands, having conducted 458 inspections, having issued 223 notifications and having levied over 66 million Brazilian reais in fines. The State also reported eviction proceedings and the fight against mining in the Yanomami indigenous land, as well as an environmental diagnostic assessment carried out in seven indigenous lands. The State highlighted the creation of Interministerial Committee for the Coordination, Planning and Follow-up of Actions for the Removal of Trespassers on Indigenous Lands to improve coordination in the defense of indigenous territorial and environmental rights. In spite of this progress, the Commission received complaints from civil society organizations concerning the absence of effective measures in projects such as Belo Monte and Belo Sun and alleging that the State had neither implemented measures to strengthen oversight procedures nor ensured respect for human rights in extractive activities. The Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial and urged the State to continue enhancing supervision and control measures, and to provide detailed information on their effectiveness in safeguarding the human rights of indigenous peoples.<sup>173</sup>

235. In 2024, the State informed that the MPI had been included in the PPCDAM, where it became a key stakeholder in the pursuit of various objectives and goals. In this regard, Brazil indicated that PPCDAM Goal No. 9 seeks to ensure that “not allocated federal public lands shall be protected and used sustainably, especially for indigenous peoples and traditional communities.” In addition, the State indicated that the MPI took part in the reinstatement of the CTD, where it served as a member alongside FUNAI, and that the CTD created a working group to draft proposals and lay down criteria aimed at simplifying the effective allocation of lands, with a view to reaching a total of 29.5 million hectares of federal public forests. The MPI also advanced on two resolutions enabling the allocation of federal public lands to indigenous peoples who claim them, thus securing 855,000 hectares of protected lands.<sup>174</sup>

236. The State informed that the Interministerial Committee for the Coordination, Planning and Follow-up of Actions for the Removal of Trespassers on Indigenous Lands operates in the Yanomami, Karipuna, Uru-Eu-Wau-Wau, Kayapó, Araribóia, Munduruku, Trincadeira Bacajá and Apyterewa lands, and that its work reached the Alto Rio Guamá, Urubu Branco and Cachoeira Seca lands.<sup>175</sup>

237. The State also reported that the non-indigenous population that was illegally occupying the Alto Rio Guamá indigenous lands had withdrawn peacefully and voluntarily from the territory. This operation also triggered a process to convert grazing areas into zones for sustainable economic activities consistent with the indigenous way of living and with environmental protection measures, leading to a reduction in deforestation rates in the area in 2023. In addition, the operation conducted in the Apyterewa and Trincadeira Bacajá lands dismantled an illegal land appropriation network that allowed trespassers to deforest the area and establish grazing areas. It also uncovered multiple illegal ranches and an illicit urban agglomeration, as well as illegal logging centers. The State informed that the operation led to important results, such as the complete withdrawal of non-indigenous trespassers from the Trincadeira Bacajá indigenous land and the identification of environmental crimes, the removal of cattle and the destruction of infrastructure that facilitated illegal occupation. Additionally, the State indicated that it is carrying out continuous monitoring actions in the area.<sup>176</sup>

238. With regard to the Yanomami lands, the State emphasized that illegal mining has led to a humanitarian crisis in local indigenous populations and that the actions taken to remove trespassers have resulted in an 80 percent reduction in deforestation rates and a significant decline in illegal mining activities. According to the State, one of the goals of said actions was to move indigenous persons away from areas where illegal mining had caused conflict and to integrate them into the surveillance and monitoring actions of the federal government, with enhanced security.<sup>177</sup>

239. The State also indicated that the Government House was established in the state of Roraima in 2024 and that it will have staff on the ground until December 31, 2026, to coordinate the plans to remove trespassers and fight the crisis in the Yanomami lands. Additionally, the State informed that, as of June 2024, it had carried out 952 actions to combat illegal mining. Furthermore, Brazil stated that trespassers were removed from the Karipuna territory and that a plan structured around seven stages, carried out by the federal government with the support of multiple state agencies, was implemented to ensure the protection of the territory and its inhabitants. According to the State, the Trespasser Removal Operation was officially launched in June 2024 and, by the next month, 139 ground, air and river actions had been undertaken with the participation of approximately 159 agents from various state agencies.<sup>178</sup>

240. Finally, the State emphasized that the interministerial committee also coordinates public policies to promote sustainability, support the development of indigenous communities and strengthen the presence of state officials to avoid new cases of trespassing.<sup>179</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

241. The Commission applauds the measures reported by the State aimed at complying with this recommendation, especially the inclusion of the MIP in PPCDAM, which contributes to the guarantee of the rights of indigenous peoples in the prevention and control of deforestation; the reinstatement of the CTD, which has advanced in the drafting of proposals and the establishment of criteria for the allocation of lands; the removal of trespassers and the protection of indigenous lands, with a special focus on the Yanomami people; and the coordination of sustainability and development policies, with the assistance of the interministerial committee in the promotion of public policies to ensure the sustainability and development of indigenous communities, thus strengthening state presence and preventing new cases of trespassing.

242. The Commission considers that these measures are relevant inasmuch as they tighten the supervision and control of extractive activities and promote the protection and sustainable use of indigenous territories, in line with international human rights obligations. Consequently, it concludes that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

243. With a view to guiding compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to continue taking steps to implement measures aimed at strengthening systems for the supervision and control of extractive, exploration or development activities, in a manner consistent with its international human rights obligations. It is important that these measures evidence an effective protection of indigenous territories through the allocation of land, the removal of trespassers and the control of extractive and exploration activities, and that they are instruments to promote public policies that ensure sustainability.

Recommendation No. 25. Guarantee access to justice and reparation for violations of the human rights of indigenous and Quilombola peoples committed in connection with natural resource mining (extractive), exploration, and exploitation activities.

244. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission that the specialized forum tasked with following up on indigenous cases in the judiciary had been updated through Resolution No. 489 issued by the CNJ and that it had been renamed to National Forum of the Judiciary on Monitoring and Effectiveness of the Complaints Related to Indigenous Peoples (FONEPI). Additionally, the federal government sent Message No. 209/2023 to Congress to ratify the Escazú Agreement and highlighted the creation of the Sales Pimenta WG for the protection of human rights defenders. For its part, the Commission noted the lack of specific information on access to justice and reparation for indigenous and Quilombola peoples affected by extractive activities. Therefore, it considered that compliance with the recommendation remained pending and urged the State to submit detailed information on the measures adopted to guarantee these rights, including institutional actions and public policies related to justice and reparations.<sup>180</sup>

Information on compliance

245. In 2024, the State reported measures adopted to ensure access to justice for indigenous and Quilombola peoples, such as the resumption of the demarcation process to establish the boundaries of indigenous lands, together with the creation of the Interministerial Committee for the Coordination, Planning and Follow-up of Actions for the Removal of Trespassers on Indigenous Lands. The State indicated that, in particular, the Vale do Javari Territorial Protection Plan seeks to combat deforestation and illegal fishing, and to ensure the safety of isolated indigenous peoples in the region. In addition, the CTD facilitates the allocation of federal public lands to indigenous peoples who claim them. Likewise, the State reported that it carried out emergency actions in the Yanomami indigenous land to face the humanitarian crisis caused by illegal mining, which include the distribution of food baskets, the mobilization of health professionals and the reopening of basic healthcare areas.<sup>181</sup>

246. The Department for Mediation in Agrarian Conflicts of the Ministry of Agrarian Development and Family Farming (DEMCA/MDA) reported the creation of the National Commission for Confronting Violence in Rural Areas (CNEVC) in 2023. This commission encompasses 15 federal entities and is responsible for mediating and settling socioenvironmental conflicts in rural areas, including those related to extractive activities. The State informed that, during 2024, it conducted on-site visits, public hearings and active listening sessions, and received complaints from more than 100 communities. The State added that, in cases involving indigenous, traditional and Quilombola peoples facing violence or threats of human rights violations, said commission adopts measures within its authority and submits requests to other institutions, such as the judiciary, the Public Prosecutor's Office or the offices of public defenders.<sup>182</sup> The State reported that the MIR identified the lack of information on marginalized social groups as a major challenge and, to address this, is developing the Mapping of Routes and Roma Families in Brazil and the National Policy Plan for the Roma People. Additionally, it has expressed its intention to assist the offices of public defenders and the Public Prosecutor's Office in the joint drafting of consultation protocols with Quilombola communities. Likewise, the Secretariat for Policies involving Quilombola and Afro-descendant Traditional Peoples and Communities, Terreiros and Roma Peoples under the MIR is a member of the General Coordinating Office for Conflict Mediation, which works to settle conflicts involving Quilombola communities.<sup>183</sup>

247. Furthermore, the State indicated that the judiciary had added Goal No. 10, “Expedite the proceedings involving environmental claims and the rights of indigenous and Quilombola communities,” to the National Goals for the Judiciary in 2024. Meanwhile, the UMF/CNJ is supporting the proceedings under the ADPF No. 709 before the STF. This claim concerns acts and omissions committed by the public authorities during the management of the Covid-19 pandemic, which allegedly resulted in a high risk of contagion and the potential extermination of multiple indigenous peoples, and the violation of their right to live in their territories, in accordance with their cultures and traditions, including their need to develop plans to remove trespassers. The State also highlighted ADPF No. 991, addressing the protection of the human rights of indigenous peoples living in voluntary isolation and in initial contact, and ADPF No. 742, which determined the National Plan to Combat the Effects of the Covid-19 Pandemic in the Quilombola Communities.<sup>184</sup>

248. Furthermore, the State explained that one of the duties assigned to FONEPI is to receive reports on conflicts related to indigenous interests. In this regard, it indicated that there are no records available of the number of cases received, and that FONEPI merely forwards the cases to the competent bodies. However, the State noted these initiatives carried out by FONEPI: i) monitoring and executing actions with indigenous communities, particularly in conflict areas, such as the recent visit to the Guarani Kaiowá indigenous community in the Nhaderu Marangatu indigenous land; ii) engaging in dialogue within the judiciary on a proposed resolution aimed at establishing parameters for ensuring the free, prior, and informed consent of indigenous, Quilombola and traditional peoples with regard to undertakings or activities that may affect them; and iii) monitoring effective compliance with CNJ’s Resolution No. 454/2022, aimed at ensuring the access of indigenous persons to the judiciary.<sup>185</sup>

249. According to information provided by the State, two editions of the Itinerant Cooperative Justice Program were run in the Amazônia Legal region. The first took place in July 2023, in São Félix do Xingu, Pará state, and assistance was provided to approximately 3,800 individuals. The second edition was held in June 2024 and its report has not been concluded.<sup>186</sup> Finally, the State informed that the President of Brazil submitted the Escazú Agreement to the National Congress in May 2024, where it remains under consideration. The State noted that this agreement had been signed by Brazil in 2018, following consultations with the society.<sup>187</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

250. The Commission welcomes the initiatives undertaken by the State to ensure access to justice for indigenous and Quilombola peoples, such as the adoption of Goal No. 10 for the judiciary, which involves a mechanism to expedite the proceedings involving environmental claims and the rights of indigenous peoples, as well as the steps taken in the framework of the Itinerant Cooperative Justice Program in the Amazônia Legal region, which facilitates access to justice for Amazonian communities by offering local legal services.

251. However, although the measures mentioned by the State are relevant and positive, the Commission stresses the need for specific information on the impact of the creation and strengthening of these bodies on the effective access to justice of indigenous and Quilombola peoples. In the same vein, it underscores the need to receive information on the impact of the implementation of Goal No. 10 for the judiciary and on decisions arising from claims related to the rights of these groups. Likewise, the Commission notes that it has not received any information on reparations to indigenous and Quilombola peoples who have been victims of extractive activities and natural resource exploitation. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

252. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to report on how the measures implemented effectively guarantee access to justice and reparations for indigenous and Quilombola peoples who have suffered human rights violations, particularly in the context of extractive activities and natural resource exploitation.

Recommendation No. 26. Investigate, punish, and make reparations for threats, attacks, and violence against members of the indigenous and Quilombola peoples perpetrated by State or private sector agents in connection with actions to defend the environment or in other contexts, including the “Caarapó Massacre” case and other cases mentioned in this report.

253. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State clarified that the MPI neither had the authority to investigate, prosecute or punish acts of violence against indigenous peoples, nor to award compensation to the victims. However, the State reported on the creation of a Coordinating Office for Promoting Indigenous Transitional Justice within the MPI, with a view to discussing a proposal for the establishment of a national commission of indigenous truth in Brazil, which would focus on investigating human rights violations against indigenous peoples and on ordering reparations. The Inter-American Commission welcomed this initiative but noted that it had not received specific information on the measures adopted to investigate, punish and repair human rights violations against indigenous and Quilombola peoples. Therefore, it considered that compliance with the recommendation remained pending. The Commission requested additional information on the actions undertaken by the State and the results obtained over time.<sup>188</sup>

254. In 2024, the State reported on the establishment of the Amazon and Environment Directorate within the Federal Police and the transfer of the Service for the Punishment of Crimes against Indigenous Peoples and Traditional Communities to said directorate. This service collaborates with Police Stations for the Environment to improve and standardize investigations, in accordance with the Minnesota Protocol, inasmuch as a significant portion of the crimes against indigenous, traditional or Quilombola peoples are related to land disputes. Additionally, the State noted that this service supports police investigations to oversee their proper conduct. Similarly, the Intelligence Coordination of the MJSP receives information on threats and violence against indigenous and Quilombola peoples, and forwards it to state and federal agencies so that they can take appropriate action.<sup>189</sup>

255. The State further reported that the Department of Mediation and Settlement of Indigenous Land Conflicts (DEMED/MPI) was created under the MPI. It addresses cases involving indigenous peoples and their territories, provides support through on-site monitoring of situations of violence and organizes meetings with the affected communities and relevant authorities to resolve these issues. Furthermore, the MPI collaborates with the MJSP to facilitate the deployment of agents of the National Security Force in conflict areas.<sup>190</sup>

256. The State added that the DEMCA/MDA provides support and monitoring in cases involving indigenous land conflicts, in cooperation with the DEMED/MPI, and that it has addressed conflicts relating to Quilombola, traditional and peasant communities. The DEMCA recorded 410 land conflicts in which human rights were threatened. The State further informed that the DEMCA supports and monitors police compliance with investigation protocols, requests the inclusion of leaders in the Program to Protect Human Rights Defenders, engages in dialogue with the Public Prosecutor’s Office and the judiciary to prevent impunity, conducts on-site visits to document threats, violence and attacks, and advocates for the allocation of additional resources to resolve conflicts. According to the DEMCA, 31 murders resulting from land conflicts were recorded in rural areas in 2023, marking a 27.9 percent decrease compared to 2022.<sup>191</sup> The State also noted that the MPI has monitored the claims filed by indigenous communities alongside the responsible agencies and has provided support in judicial proceedings focused on reparations and compensation for the communities impacted by violence.<sup>192</sup>

257. The Commission recalls that, pursuant to Resolution No. 28/2024, it granted precautionary measures to members of the Tapeba de Caucaia indigenous people in May 2024, after concluding that they were in a serious and urgent situation, as their rights to life and personal integrity were at risk of irreparable harm. The Commission noted that the beneficiaries had been exposed to risk for a considerable time and warned of the seriousness of the lack of information provided by the State on the protection measures being implemented in the villages, given the alleged involvement of the police in some of the cases in question, and on measures specifically aimed at confronting the criminal groups operating in the area.<sup>193</sup>

258. By means of Resolution No. 38/2024, the Commission also extended the precautionary measures granted to members of the Pataxó indigenous people of the Barra Velha and Comexatibá indigenous lands to members of the Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe indigenous people, all from the south of the state of Bahia, Brazil, considering that they were in a serious and urgent situation, since their rights to life and personal integrity were at risk of suffering irreparable harm. The Commission determined that the beneficiaries were suffering episodes of violence and threats due to disputes over the demarcation of their territory and the presence of organized crime groups in the area. At the time, the Commission, while appreciating the measures adopted by the State, noted that these had not been sufficient to mitigate the risk faced by the members of the Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe people.<sup>194</sup>

259. Similarly, in October 2024, the Commission and the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) Regional Office for South America expressed their deep concern over the surge of violence against indigenous peoples in Brazil, particularly in the states of Bahia, Paraná and Mato Grosso do Sul, amid efforts to defend their territorial rights. In the previous months, there had been violent attacks against indigenous communities, including assaults by private actors and police forces, resulting in the forced displacement of communities and the tragic deaths of several community members that were defending their lands.<sup>195</sup>

260. For their part, civil society organizations have reported that, to date, the State has not taken the necessary measures to guarantee the protection of the population of Vale do Javari, the second largest indigenous land in the country and the place where journalist Dom Philips and indigenous activist Bruno Pereira were murdered in 2022. They stated that, based on reports from people who live in Vale do Javari, the authorities are aware that threats and episodes of violence similar to those that led to the 2022 crimes persist in the territory.<sup>196</sup> The organizations also highlighted that the persons who commit acts of violence against indigenous people, small farmers and other land defenders are rarely brought to justice in Brazil. In this regard, it was recalled that, in 2019, Human Rights Watch (HRW) had reportedly documented 28 murders in the Amazon, four attempted murders and 40 death threats. According to HRW, the lack of accountability was allegedly linked to the failure to carry out an adequate investigation, in addition to the police refusal to formally record these crimes. HRW stressed the importance of the ratification of the Escazú Agreement by Brazil, which remains under consideration in the Chamber of Deputies, as far as the instrument ensures measures to investigate and punish attacks, threats and intimidation against environmental and land defenders.<sup>197</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

261. The Commission appreciates the information provided by the State and civil society organizations. Among the important measures reported by the State, the Commission highlights the establishment of the Amazon and Environment Directorate within the Federal Police and the addition of the Service for the Punishment of Crimes against Indigenous Peoples and Traditional Communities as mechanisms for strengthening the institutional capacity of the police to investigate crimes against indigenous, traditional or Quilombola peoples; the creation of the DEMED/MPI, which represents an important step in the resolution of land-related conflicts and the promotion of cooperation between communities and authorities; and the actions undertaken by the DEMCA/MDA, which monitors and settles land conflicts, oversees investigation protocols, advocates for the allocation of additional resources and the inclusion of leaders in protection programs, and engages in dialogue with the judiciary to prevent impunity.

262. However, the Commission is concerned over the current situation of violence, as reported by organizations and highlighted in its own press releases. The measures described by the State are important for the investigation of acts of violence against indigenous and Quilombola peoples. Notwithstanding that, it is necessary that these measures be implemented across the country and ensure that perpetrators are duly held accountable. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

263. To guide compliance with the recommendation, the Commission invites the State to provide information on the progress achieved in investigating and punishing human rights violations committed against communities, as well as on reparations granted for said crimes. The State should also report on the impact of the measures adopted on reducing violence and protecting these communities.

Recommendation No. 27. Take resolute steps to put an end to the impunity surrounding human rights violations committed in connection with illegal businesses or activities against indigenous and Quilombola peoples, by conducting exhaustive and independent investigations, ensuring that the perpetrators and instigators are punished, and making reparations to the individual and collective victims.

264. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that Bill No. 3025/2023, which contained new regulations to control the origin, purchase, sale and transportation of gold across the country, had been submitted. This bill aimed to reform the rules governing the trade and transportation of gold by proposing to eliminate the presumption of good faith in the verification of the origin of the metal and to make electronic invoices mandatory in transactions. Additionally, the Commission took note of the creation of a joint working group on the implementation of Precautionary Measure MC-449-22 in favor of Bruno Araújo Pereira, Dom Phillips and 11 members of the Union of Indigenous Peoples of the Javari Valley (UNIVAJA). In view of the foregoing, the Commission determined that the State was in partial compliance with this recommendation and requested information on the measures adopted, the results obtained from the investigations and the sanctions imposed for the violations of the rights of indigenous and Quilombola peoples.<sup>198</sup>

265. In 2024, the State informed that the MPI had requested the intervention of the National Public Security Force (FNSP) in more than 28 operations in the previous year, and that over 51 percent of the allocated resources had been directed toward indigenous lands, with the aim of strengthening the protection of people living in those areas. This collaboration has continued in 2024, with the enactment of 20 ordinances providing for FNSP support in operations to remove trespassers and ensure the safety of indigenous peoples, as well as of MPI and FUNAI officers. Likewise, the State reported that it had allocated resources to the National Civil Aviation Agency (ANAC) to ensure cooperation in controlling airfields, aircrafts, crew members, mechanics, maintenance organizations and aviation schools which could be used for the illegal transport of supplies and products for illegal mining. In addition, the ANAC has endeavored to identify clandestine airfields that may serve as landing points for aircrafts involved in environmental crimes.<sup>199</sup>

266. In addition, the Brazilian Intelligence Agency (ABIN) will assist in official actions against illegal mining in the Yanomami indigenous land until December 2024. The agency will provide strategic support, coordinate the flow of information, contribute to the security of operations to remove trespassers, work as part of the Brazilian Intelligence System (SISBIN), identify risks and threats, map illegal mining supply chains and disseminate knowledge to prevent and mitigate risks. In addition, the National Oil Agency (ANP) will oversee the distribution of oil across the roads of the Roraima state until December 2024. Similarly, the State informed that it had allocated approximately 28 million Brazilian reais to enable the MPI and FUNAI to implement policies targeting isolated and recently contacted peoples in the Yanomami indigenous land region, as well as to conduct technical monitoring visits, deliver food baskets and support the health, education and protection of women and children in the territory. The State also highlighted the collaborative efforts of the MJSP, the Federal Police (PF) and the MPI to ensure that cases are diligently studied.<sup>200</sup>

267. Based on the information reported by the State, the Commission considers that the measures adopted are important to combat impunity for human rights violations committed against indigenous and Quilombola peoples due to illegal activities. In particular, the Commission highlights the operations conducted by the FNSP, the actions taken by the ANAC against infrastructures supporting illegal mining, the measures implemented by the ABIN to combat illegal mining in the Yanomami land and the MJSP-PF-MPI joint cooperation to resolve cases.

268. Although these measures are important, the Commission emphasizes that this recommendation is aimed at conducting thorough and independent investigations, punishing the perpetrators of the human rights violations resulting from unlawful activities and providing reparations to the victims. Based on the information provided by the State, the Commission considers that it needs additional details on the implementation of effective measures to combat impunity, punish those responsible and provide reparations for the victims. In view of the foregoing, the Commission determines that compliance with this recommendation continues to be partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

269. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission stresses that the State should provide information on the systematic measures adopted to end impunity for human rights violations committed against indigenous peoples. In this regard, the Commission invites the State to report on the results of these investigations and the sanctions imposed, both individually and collectively.

Recommendation No. 28. Adopt whatever measures are needed to revise and amend provisions, court orders, and guidelines (including the “timeframe and suspension of security” [marco temporal e suspensão da segurança] thesis) that are incompatible with international standards and obligations regarding the rights of indigenous peoples to their lands, territories, and natural resources, as well as other human rights of indigenous peoples.

270. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about Bill No. 2903/2023, aimed at regulating the recognition, demarcation, use and management of indigenous lands in the country. However, Brazil reported that this bill was not expected to be passed. Additionally, in September 2023, the Commission learned that the STF, sitting en banc, had ruled that the demarcation of indigenous lands did not depend on whether the communities were occupying the area in 1988, thereby rejecting the “timeframe” thesis.

Despite this positive development, the Commission voiced its concern over the fact that the Senate had passed Bill No. 2903/2023, which would restrict the rights of indigenous peoples by stating that indigenous lands which had not been traditionally and productively occupied would no longer qualify as demarcated. Consequently, the Commission considered that compliance with the recommendation remained pending in view of this legislative setback and reiterated its call on the State to adopt measures that provided for the review and amendment of provisions in judicial rulings, such as the “suspension of security,” which threatened the human rights of indigenous peoples.<sup>201</sup>

Information on compliance

271. The State reported that, in September 2023, the STF had issued a binding judgment applicable to all proceedings when ruling on Extraordinary Appeal No. 1017365, according to which the enactment date of the Federal Constitution of 1988 could be considered a cutoff date for determining which lands had been occupied by the indigenous communities. However, five actions challenging the constitutionality of the Timeframe Law (Law No. 14,701/2023) remain pending before the STF. In this context, several settlement hearings were held beginning in August 2024, with a view to reaching agreements on proposed measures to guarantee the rights of indigenous peoples and the non-indigenous populations, in which state representatives, the civil society and the indigenous communities took part. The State reported that information based on the topics discussed during the hearings had been collected and that it would be submitted to the STF justices for their consideration when ruling on the five claims.<sup>202</sup>

272. Additionally, the Commission recalls that, in a joint press release with the OHCHR’s Regional Office for South America published in October 2024, it emphasized that the surge in violence had been exacerbated by the slow progress in demarcating indigenous lands and ongoing legal uncertainty. It further stated that this situation had deteriorated even further since the Chamber of Deputies passed Law No. 14,701 in October 2023. The press release notes with alarm that the legislation was enacted despite a veto from the executive branch and a prior ruling from the STF declaring the timeframe thesis unconstitutional.<sup>203</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

273. The Commission voices its concern over the passage of Bill No. 2903/2023 and the enactment of Law No. 14,701/2023, whose Article 4 states that the lands traditionally occupied by Brazilian indigenous peoples are those which were occupied by the enactment date of the Federal Constitution, thus confirming the application of the timeframe thesis. Consequently, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

274. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission reiterates its call on the State to adopt the measures that are necessary to revise and amend provisions in court orders and guidelines, such as the timeframe and suspension of security thesis, which threaten the human rights of indigenous peoples.

Recommendation No. 29. Expedite finalization of the application for delimitation, demarcation, and titling of the traditional lands and territories of indigenous and tribal peoples in accordance with applicable international human rights standards.

275. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that the prevailing interpretation was that the MPI was responsible for monitoring the indigenous land demarcation process, although such monitoring was not explicitly regulated. In the same year, the Commission issued resolutions granting precautionary measures for members of the Afro-descendant Quilombola people and the Pataxó indigenous people, acknowledging the risks they faced in land disputes while recognizing that they remained vulnerable and at risk despite these measures. In light of the foregoing, the Commission voiced its concern over the lack of specific information from the State regarding the indigenous land demarcation processes, as well as the risk situations identified in its resolutions, and therefore it concluded that compliance with this recommendation remained pending. To move forward, the Commission urged the State to present updated and accurate information on the actions taken to expedite the demarcation processes and resolve the territorial disputes reported.<sup>204</sup>

276. In 2024, the State reported that, since the beginning of 2023, the decrees recognizing 10 indigenous lands had been successfully approved, two of which were completed in 2024. It also noted that the declaratory ordinances establishing the boundaries of 11 indigenous lands had been published in 2024. In addition, the MPI is part of the Technical Chamber on Land Use, which works on the regularization of undesigned federal property to enable indigenous peoples to inhabit them.<sup>205</sup>

277. Other actions carried out by the MPI include the establishment of the Ancestral Territories Forum, aimed at fostering dialogue with indigenous peoples and organizations on the regularization of territories, and the signing of a cooperation agreement with the state of Rio Grande do Sul for the regularization of properties in areas occupied by indigenous peoples, as well as the enforcement of rights and public policies concerning these communities. Finally, the State reported on the actions of the Working Group of the National Titling Agenda, which is collecting information on the Quilombola communities that need to be regularized.<sup>206</sup>

278. In October 2024, the Commission and the OHCHR's Regional Office for South America expressed their concern over the surge of violence against indigenous peoples in the country and emphasized that it had been exacerbated by the slow progress in demarcating indigenous lands and ongoing legal uncertainty.<sup>207</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

279. The Commission acknowledges the importance of the information shared by the State. However, it emphasizes that the progress made in the demarcation of indigenous lands is insufficient to guarantee the protection of their right to territory, especially in light of the passage of the timeframe law, as outlined previously in this report. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

280. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to present relevant, updated and accurate information on the actions taken to expedite the proceedings related to requests for the delimitation, demarcation and titling of lands and traditional territories of indigenous and tribal peoples, refraining from enforcing the timeframe thesis.

Recommendation No. 30. In consultation and coordination with indigenous and tribal peoples, guarantee their right to health, based on an inter-cultural, gender, and intergenerational solidarity approach, taking into consideration traditional healing practices and medicines.

281. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that the Indigenous Health Policy Coordinating Office had been established along with the creation of the MPI to support and oversee the indigenous health policy implemented by the Indigenous Healthcare Subsystem. In this context, the State reported ongoing discussions on the creation of an interministerial committee to ensure differentiated psychological care for indigenous peoples, aimed at reducing the high rates of suicide and other mental health issues afflicting these communities. The State also reported that the MPI had collaborated in the organization of the Special Indigenous Health Districts (DSEI) and in the design of a program for indigenous community pharmacies. The Commission acknowledged the progress made by the State, emphasized the importance of public policies focused on the mental health of indigenous peoples due to the high rates of suicide and other mental health issues, and considered that the State had progressed to partial compliance with this recommendation. Moreover, the Commission requested additional information on how government health programs had closed gaps in healthcare coverage for indigenous peoples and how these policies had been consulted and coordinated with indigenous communities.<sup>208</sup>

Information on compliance

282. In 2024, the State highlighted the creation of the MPI in the previous year and the work of the Secretariat for Indigenous Health (SESAI) within the Ministry of Health (MS), which coordinates and implements the National Indigenous Healthcare Policy and manages the Indigenous Healthcare Subsystem (SasiSUS). According to the information provided, the SESAI serves more than 762,000 persons, with the help of 22,000 health professionals, 52 percent of whom are indigenous, and carries out its activities while respecting the specific cultural and epidemiological characteristics of each group. Likewise, according to the State, the SESAI is responsible for ensuring an intercultural, solidarity-based and gender-sensitive approach in healthcare policies targeted at the indigenous population. For instance, the fight against tuberculosis in the Yanomami territory received special attention, with the participation of specialized MS staff in 2023; the authorities endeavored to ensure that professionals working in DSEIs participated in training sessions; and discussions on the fight against tuberculosis were held in working groups linked to the Amazon Health Plan.<sup>209</sup>

283. Furthermore, the State indicated that the Strategy Against Racism in Healthcare was established in December 2023, with the aim of promoting ethnic and racial equity, designing healthcare policies to combat racism and providing comprehensive care focused on the health complexities of black, indigenous, Quilombola and Roma communities, alongside other minorities. This strategy also seeks to encourage equity within the Unified Healthcare System (SUS) and to fight against structural racism.<sup>210</sup> The State added that, with the purpose of achieving these goals, it is developing an action plan that prioritizes the promotion of holistic health for black women; maternal and infant health, in particular by reducing maternal, infant and fetal mortality; the development of mental health public policies tailored to the specific needs of each ethnic group; education focused on health issues from an anti-racist perspective; the promotion of sexual health based on diversity; comprehensive care for individuals affected by sickle-cell anemia; ethnic and racial representativeness among collaborators and respect for cultural and religious diversity, integrating these health policies with indigenous and African religious practices. In this regard, the State reported that it will take affirmative action and provide training to the workforce involved in the action plan at all levels, and that it will design and monitor racial indicators in healthcare activities, with resources allocated for their updating. Finally, the plan will be executed with the cooperation of the Interministerial Technical Committee on the Health of the Black Population (CTSPN).<sup>211</sup>

284. The Commission reviewed the report titled Inequalities in the Healthcare of Indigenous Children, published by Núcleo Ciência pela Infância, which concluded that the main challenges in indigenous healthcare in Brazil are as follows: i) the difficulty in accessing indigenous territories, either due to long distances or the absence of adequate transportation; ii) the lack of continuing training for professionals on the culture and lifestyles of ethnic groups, in addition to high turnover and insufficient staff; iii) the absence of bonds between health professionals and the community, as well as the conflicts arising from differing perspectives on healthcare; iv) the unavailability of health data on indigenous peoples for those operating in the territory, along with the lack of integration of the Indigenous Healthcare Information System with the SUS; and v) the increased exposure to diseases due to environmental damage, coupled with the absence of income for communities that lack regular access to hunting, fishing or agricultural areas.<sup>212</sup>

285. In addition, the Associação Brasileira de Saúde Coletiva (Abrasco) underscored three challenges faced by indigenous peoples in relation to the right to health:

- i) Invisibility and lack of data: In this regard, it emphasized that the absence of specific epidemiological data on indigenous peoples hampers the development of effective public policies. This results in decontextualized and generic health policies that fail to address the unique needs of indigenous communities, particularly those residing outside DSEIs.
- ii) Absence of differentiated healthcare: Abrasco indicated that, although the National Policy on Healthcare for Indigenous Peoples (PNASPI) promotes differentiated care, it has not been implemented effectively. In this regard, the organization stated that the current healthcare model does not integrate the indigenous conception of health, which views the body and the territory as inseparable, and that the inclusion of indigenous communities in the planning, management and evaluation of health policies is crucial.
- iii) Insufficient financial and human resources: Abrasco stated that the healthcare system for indigenous persons faces significant institutional challenges, such as the lack of stable funding, high staff turnover and lack of adequate and ongoing training for health workers. These issues hinder the implementation of a health model in line with the specific cultural and social characteristics of indigenous peoples.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

286. The Commission commends the State for the care provided by the SESAI to 762,000 indigenous persons, with the support of a team of health professionals, 52 percent of whom are indigenous, which shows respect for the specific cultural and epidemiological characteristics of each group. In addition, the Commission welcomes the creation of the Strategy Against Racism in Healthcare, which addresses structural racism in healthcare policies and promotes ethnic and racial equity, benefiting indigenous, Afro-descendant and Quilombola communities, as well as other minorities. The inclusion of a gender perspective and the respect for cultural and religious diversity are also significant elements.

287. The Commission also appreciates the Healthcare Action Plan, since it promotes the holistic healthcare of Afro-descendant women, the reduction of maternal and infant mortality, mental health policies tailored to each ethnic group, education from an anti-racist perspective and the care of specific conditions, such as sickle-cell anemia. It also provides for healthcare training for the workforce and the monitoring of racial indicators. The Commission considers that these measures represent an effort by the State to comply with this recommendation, particularly with regard to the development of a multicultural and racial approach to healthcare policies. However, it also notes that challenges remain to the broad guarantee of the right to health for indigenous and Quilombola peoples in Brazil. Consequently, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation continues to be partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

288. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission highlights the need to strengthen indigenous participation in decision-making, ensure ongoing training for indigenous health workers and develop evidence-based policies gathered directly from communities. Additionally, it emphasizes the importance of establishing monitoring and evaluation mechanisms to continually adjust and improve healthcare policies.

Recommendation No. 31. Strengthen measures to protect indigenous peoples living in voluntary isolation and in initial contact, while striving to protect their health, lifestyles, and territories. Based on the precaution principle, develop public policies and actions to guarantee the survival of these peoples.

289. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission that it had created the Department for the Protection for Isolated and Recently Contacted Indigenous Peoples within the MPI. This department aimed to develop and coordinate public policies to protect the health, ways of life and territories of said groups. Furthermore, the State reported that the National Situation Division held biweekly meetings coordinated by the MPI to look for interagency solutions to the challenges faced by these peoples. For its part, the Commission appreciated the efforts made by the State to protect indigenous peoples in isolation and initial contact; however, it underscored the lack of specific information on the measures being adopted and therefore considered that compliance with this recommendation remained pending. To move forward with its implementation, the Commission invited the State to provide updated information on the protection measures adopted, focusing on the health, ways of life and territories of these peoples, as well as on public policies to ensure their physical and cultural survival.<sup>213</sup>

Information on compliance

290. In 2024, the State informed that the FUNAI had identified 114 records of isolated indigenous peoples, 28 of which were confirmed references. The vast majority of these populations are located in the Amazon region. The populations considered in recent contact amount to 22 different ethnic groups and are served by 13 DSEIs. In this regard, the State indicated that the DSEIs follow the guidelines established by the Office of the Special Secretary for Indigenous Health, which is attached to the Ministry of Health (SESAI/MS), and are responsible for implementing special healthcare protocols for isolated and recently contacted indigenous peoples (PIIRC). The State added that all possible measures to protect the health of these groups and avoid epidemiological outbreaks are taken before, during and after contact. In this regard, Brazil reported that the protocol for accessing indigenous territories inhabited by isolated or recently contacted peoples was updated. Additionally, a schedule was arranged to update contingency plans for contact situations and to deliver ongoing training to health professionals.<sup>214</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

291. The Commission appreciates the information provided by the State with regard to the efforts made to protect indigenous peoples in isolation and initial contact. In particular, it welcomes the actions of the DSEIs and the updating of the protocol for accessing these groups' indigenous territories. Nevertheless, the Commission emphasized that the purpose of the recommendation is to strengthen protection measures for indigenous peoples in isolation and initial contact, while safeguarding their health, ways of life and territories. Consequently, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

292. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission calls on the State to submit updated information on the compliance measures it has undertaken with regard to the two components of this recommendation: the protection measures aimed at these peoples, with a focus on the protection of their health, ways of life and territories, and the development of public policies and actions to guarantee their physical and cultural survival, based on the principle of precaution.

G. Women

Recommendation No. 32. Prevent and condemn all forms of violence and discrimination against women and girls, including refraining from any gender-based violent or discriminatory act or practice, and guaranteeing that all public servants, including authorities, agents, and institutions abide by this obligation.

293. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that it had implemented important measures aimed at protecting and promoting the rights of women, including the creation of the Ministry of Women (MM) and the adoption of a multiyear plan focused on advancing gender equality in political participation, combating gender-based violence and ensuring wage parity. Furthermore, Brazil reported the implementation of the National Care Policy to relieve the burden of unpaid work on women, along with the adoption of a law ensuring wage parity, a national program against sexual harassment with enhanced reporting mechanisms and the Mulher, Viver sem Violência program, which included care centers and the expansion of the Ligue 180 helpline. In addition, the State explained that the National System of Services for Women in Situations of Violence (the ELA system) facilitated the monitoring of cases involving violence, strengthened specialized services and enhanced data collection to improve public policies supporting women. At the time, the Commission welcomed the numerous actions reported by the State, recognized that it had taken significant steps forward during the year to guarantee the rights of women and concluded that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to substantial partial. Finally, the Commission invited the State to continue to implement, strengthen and report on measures to prevent and combat violence against women.<sup>215</sup>

Information on compliance

294. As in the previous year, the State reported several measures focused on women in 2024. Brazil informed that it had implemented the National Femicide Prevention Pact and the Mulher, Viver sem Violência program in 2023 to combat gender-based violence. With an allocated budget of 2.5 trillion Brazilian reais, the National Femicide Prevention Pact includes an action plan centered around two pillars: a structural approach aimed at preventing violence at different levels and a cross-cutting perspective focused on enhancing data collection and policy development. In addition, the State created the CMBs and the Reference Centers for Brazilian Women (CRMBs) to provide comprehensive care to women victims of violence, including legal, social and psychological services. In this regard, Brazil noted that the Mulher, Viver sem Violência program is operating 12 CMBs, is building additional units and is planning to expand with more units in 2026. In addition, the State held national meetings and training sessions to strengthen the support network and is currently implementing a case management data system to follow up on the cases in which it intervened.<sup>216</sup>

295. Furthermore, the State reported that the Ligue 180 helpline was restructured in 2023 by the Ministry of Women, with an investment surpassing 16 million Brazilian reais and the recruitment of 222 specialized operators. The new helpline, launched in 2024, will serve as a platform for reporting cases/acts of violence, providing guidance and educating users on their rights and on gender-based violence, with an updated database on legislation and procedures. In addition, Brazil entered into agreements with states to establish local channels and created a new WhatsApp helpline. The State also reported that the evaluation of Ligue 180 helpline was resumed, the Care and Capabilities Protocol was relaunched in cooperation with the UnB, and protection officials received ongoing training. Brazil noted that the joint work with the UnB also focused on developing content for the new helpline, including research on the assistance provided and the classification of cases of violence reported.<sup>217</sup>

296. The Ministry of Women signed several cooperation agreements to prevent violence against girls and women, including the Biome Dialogues with the MPI, the Marajó Community Plan in cooperation with the MDHC and the identification of areas affected by sexual exploitation in Pará in partnership with the Federal Roads Police. It also contributed to the creation of national forums aimed at addressing violence against women in rural areas and improving the implementation of the Maria da Penha Law. In 2024, together with the National Council on Criminal and Penitentiary Policy, it recommended the electronic monitoring of aggressors involved in domestic violence cases, which includes risk assessments and portable tracking units for victims, to prevent further assaults.<sup>218</sup>

297. The State also noted that a seminar was held in August 2024 to commemorate the 18th anniversary of the Maria da Penha Law, during which the Maria da Penha Award for Education in Human Rights was announced. With a fund of 2.5 million Brazilian reais, this award will be given to educational networks that promote women's rights. In addition, the Ministry of Education (MEC) will invest 2.5 million Brazilian reais in gender research and 7.1 million Brazilian reais in educational resources, as well as teacher training on human rights and gender. Moreover, the State reported on the development of new legislative initiatives focused on supporting victims of gender-based violence, granting pensions to orphaned children and adolescents who relied on femicide victims, and creating the Não É Não (No means "no") protocol to promote safety in nighttime commercial establishments.<sup>219</sup>

298. In terms of legislation, the State reported that, as of September 2024, several laws and regulations had been implemented to enhance support for victims of violence, including Law No. 14,847 of 2024, which guarantees individualized care for victims at SUS healthcare centers; Law No. 14,857 of 2024, which ensures the confidentiality of the victims' identity in domestic violence proceedings; and Law No. 14,887 of 2024, which prioritizes reconstructive plastic surgery for women victims of violence. Other relevant pieces of legislation include Law No. 14,899 of 2024, which establishes a care network and a targeted plan to combat domestic violence; Law No. 14,942 of 2024, which supports awareness-raising initiatives; Law No. 14,986 of 2024, which mandates the inclusion of women's experiences in school curricula; and Law No. 14,987 of 2024, which extends the right to psychosocial care to children of victims of serious violence or incarcerated persons.<sup>220</sup>

299. The State also referred to the implementation of the National Program to Prevent and Combat Sexual Harassment, Other Crimes against Sexual Dignity and Sexual Violence, pursuant to Law No. 14,540 of 2023. This program includes actions to prevent and address these crimes, such as developing training materials, encouraging good practices in state agencies, raising awareness on related legislation and policies, and conducting campaigns focused on reporting channels and the features of these crimes. It also establishes procedures for the processing of claims and training programs.<sup>221</sup>

300. The State added that the National Forum of Women's Policy Organizations held a meeting in April 2023 between municipal and state women policy managers and the federal government, in an attempt to strengthen women's rights policies through dialogue and support for Women's Policy Organizations (OPMs). In June 2024, over 300 women policy managers attended the Second National Forum of Women's Policy Organizations, where the Mais Mulheres no Poder, Mais Democracia (More women in power, more democracy) campaign was launched to combat political violence and promote women's participation. Additionally, two virtual courses on policy management for women were presented and a study on the diagnosis and monitoring of OPMs was published.<sup>222</sup>

301. The State also reported the creation of the Women's Working Group, alongside the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MTE), with the goal of preventing and combating violence, harassment, and gender discrimination in the workplace, as well as promoting the generation of employment, work, and income for women experiencing violence. Some of the main actions highlighted by the Group include the analysis of public records to identify women in situations of violence, the development of Professional Qualification and Development Policies for women experiencing violence, the Diagnosis of Flows and Reception Channels, the training and sensitization of MTE staff and workers, the training and sensitization of trade union organizations, the request for reports, studies, and expert opinions, the drafting of proposals for regulatory changes, the improvement of internal processes, and the preparation of follow-up and evaluation reports on the impact of the measures adopted within the MTE.<sup>223</sup>

302. Additionally, information was provided regarding the establishment of the Reception Room for Women Victims of Discrimination and Harassment, which ensures appropriate first aid to women seeking support and provides guidance on how to file complaints, as well as the Training Program for the Reception Team, which trains staff to provide this service. Also, within the MTE, a Cycle of Conferences was organized for officials, managers, and employees to raise awareness about the importance of structural changes to eradicate discriminatory practices. A Guide for Preventing Harassment and Violence was launched, and an Advertising and Awareness Campaign was carried out to engage staff in the fight against discrimination and harassment.<sup>224</sup>

303. Finally, the State reported that the process for ratifying ILO's Convention 190 began in March 2023 and that the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations and National Defense of the Chamber of Deputies on this matter is under way. Brazil also noted that an interministerial working group was created in April 2023 to develop the National Policy to Combat Political Violence Against Women under the coordination of the SENEV and the Office of the National Secretary for Institutional Cooperation, Thematic Activities and Political Participation (SENATP). Consultations were held with various stakeholders as part of this process and the final report was published in August 2024.<sup>225</sup>

304. In turn, civil society organizations claimed that, while Brazil has taken important legislative steps to combat violence against women and girls, such as the Maria da Penha Law (Law No. 11,340 of 2006), which incorporates prevention and reparation measures from a human rights and gender approach, since 2016, the State has allegedly prioritized criminal laws and neglected the implementation of adequate policies to ensure the safety of all women, especially Afro-descendant women. These organizations also claimed that, although the National Femicide Prevention Pact and its action plan were launched in 2023 and 2024, respectively, the Levante Feminista Contra o Femicídio (Feminist rise against femicide) campaign contends that said plan is allegedly deficient and is based on a superficial analysis of racism, disability and other key intersectional issues, such as the needs of girls, adolescents, trans women, lesbians and the older women.<sup>226</sup>

305. Civil society organizations also held that Law No. 14,994 of 2024, which significantly increases penalties for femicides and other gender-based violence crimes and was recently passed by Congress and enacted by the President, has been criticized by feminist organizations for focusing on punishment rather than on preventive policies or adequate resources for justice and public safety. According to the Maria da Penha Law Consortium, this approach might exacerbate the situation of women at risk and is not in line with the State's duty to protect women against structural violence. In addition, civil society organizations highlighted the progressive dismantling of policies focused on the protection of women between 2016 and 2022, which reportedly continues to impact on the implementation of essential programs such as the Ligue 180 helpline and the CMBs, which operate with limited resources and insufficient funding.<sup>227</sup>

306. Likewise, civil society organizations reported that the CEDAW Committee has allegedly acknowledged Brazil's efforts to eradicate gender-based violence, which include the establishment of the National Policy to Combat Violence Against Women and the Mulher, Viver sem Violência program, under which the Ligue 180 helpline and new CMBs were created. However, civil society organizations added that the CEDAW Committee also voiced its concern over the rise in femicides, rapes and disappearances, particularly among Afro-Brazilian women; the lack of resources in shelters and support units for victims; the limited presence of police stations for women in rural areas; and the increase in murders of indigenous women and in violence against LGBTI women, along with the fact that Brazil has the highest rate of murder of transgender persons in the world. They stated that the CEDAW Committee has urged the State to reinforce prevention and prosecution measures, to increase resources for shelters and the CMBs, to expand specialized agencies and services in indigenous areas and to create a database on violence against LGBTI women.<sup>228</sup>

307. Finally, civil society organizations highlighted that, according to the Maria da Penha Law Consortium, the number of cases involving violence against women in Brazil continues on the rise. In 2023, 1,238,208 cases of violence against women were recorded, including homicides, femicides, assaults involving domestic violence, threats, acts of harassment, psychological violence and rape. Additionally, they noted that 8,372 attempted homicides of women were reportedly recorded, which accounts for a 9.2 percent increase compared to the previous year. Out of the 8,372 attempted homicides, 33.4 percent were attempted femicides, marking a 7.1 percent rise. In total, 1,467 women were reportedly murdered for gender-based reasons, the highest number since 2015. Sixty-eight percent of the victims were Afro-descendant women, which evidences the existence of structural racism and its disproportionate impact on this population.<sup>229</sup>

308. The Commission welcomes the numerous measures reported by the State to prevent and condemn violence and discrimination against women and girls in Brazil. In particular, it highlights the adoption of the National Femicide Prevention Pact and the preparation of its action plan; the development of the Mulher, Viver sem Violência program with its CMBs and CRMBs; the restructuring and strengthening of the Ligue 180 helpline; the signing of cooperation agreements such as the Biome Dialogues and the Marajó Community Plan, among others; the creation of the Maria da Penha Award for Education in Human Rights; the implementation of the National Program to Prevent and Combat Sexual Harassment, Other Crimes against Sexual Dignity and Sexual Violence; the establishment of the National Forum of Women's Policy Organizations; the ratification of ILO's Convention 190; the setting up of the Interministerial Working Group for the National Policy to Combat Political Violence Against Women; and the enactment of laws that guarantee individualized care for victims at SUS healthcare centers, ensure the confidentiality of the victims' identity in domestic violence proceedings and extend the right to psychosocial care to the children of victims of serious violence.

309. However, the Commission also takes note of the challenges reported by civil society organizations, such as the focus on punishment and the lack of preventive policies in spite of the legislative steps taken, which include those related to the Maria da Penha Law; the shortcomings of the National Femicide Prevention Plan in addressing racism, disability and other intersectional issues; the dismantling of and lack of funding for support programs in previous years, which currently operate with limited resources; the concerns expressed by the CEDAW Committee over the rise in femicides, rapes and disappearances; the insufficient resources at victims' shelters; the limited presence of specialized police stations for women; the rise in violence against indigenous and LGBTI women; and the escalating rates of violence and structural racism.

310. The Commission considers that the State has stepped up its efforts in terms of legislation, programs, support infrastructure and partnership building to combat gender-based violence, which evidences a clear commitment, as well as significant progress towards compliance with this recommendation. However, in their observations, civil society organizations highlight limitations in program implementation, gaps in coverage in specific areas and an approach focused on punishment which might not be effective in mitigating structural violence against women. Moreover, the continued rise in femicide rates and other forms of violence, along with the disproportionate impact on Afro-descendant women and other vulnerable groups, suggests that the State has not fully addressed persistent structural challenges. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

311. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission calls on the State to increase funding as well as the number of shelters and specialized police stations in rural areas, for indigenous communities and for the LBTI population. The Commission also encourages the State to enhance the National Femicide Prevention Pact by addressing specific racial, gender and disability concerns. Furthermore, and in addition to the punitive approach of the aforementioned plan, the Commission emphasizes the need for increased prevention efforts, including educational campaigns, adequate resources for justice and public safety, and reparation measures for vulnerable groups.

Recommendation No. 33. Implement and reinforce measures with a gender perspective to comply with the duty to act with due diligence to prevent, punish, and eradicate violence and discrimination against women, including concrete efforts to comply with the obligations to prevent, investigate, punish, and make reparation for violations of the human rights of women and girls. This includes training and monitoring the authorities responsible for the investigation, including health services and judicial bodies.

312. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Inter-American Commission that the CNJ had adopted Resolution No. 492/2023, which established a protocol for prosecuting and adjudicating cases with a gender perspective. In addition, a permanent policy was implemented to address all forms of violence against women, which included a specific protocol for assisting victims and receiving complaints of violence against women involving judges and judiciary employees. The Commission welcomed the initiatives undertaken by the CNJ and recognized their importance in the training of the members of the judiciary so that cases were investigated, prosecuted and ruled on with a gender perspective. However, it emphasized the need for these protocols to extend to other justice system actors, such as employees of the Public Prosecutor's Office and police officers involved in criminal investigation and prosecution. Consequently, the Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation remained partial.<sup>230</sup>

Information on compliance

313. In 2024, the State highlighted the commitment of the Federal Public Defender's Office to providing human rights education to its staff and the public by means of activities such as webinars, roundtables, courses, workshops, conferences and training sessions. The Federal Public Defender's Office held 60 training events covering a wide range of human rights issues, such as assistance for victims of human trafficking, women's rights, over-indebtedness among the elderly, sexual and reproductive rights, combating LGBTIphobia, access to land, the inter-American human rights system and contemporary slave labor, among others.<sup>231</sup>

314. Notwithstanding the foregoing, civil society organizations argued that training sessions on human rights for justice operators and police officers were isolated initiatives which were neither mandatory nor continuous, and that attendance to said sessions was not required for admission to or promotion in public service careers. They acknowledged the relevance of these activities but noted that their sporadic and optional nature failed to adequately comply with the recommendation.<sup>232</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

315. The Commission welcomes the training measures promoted by the Federal Public Defender's Office. However, it emphasizes that all entities involved in the investigation and punishment of acts of violence against women must act with due diligence and with a gender perspective, especially in light of the situation of violence faced by women and girls in Brazil. Based on the information provided, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

<sup>232</sup> CEJIL, Response to the request for information questionnaire, November 4, 2024.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

316. The Commission appreciates the measures adopted by the CNJ to ensure that members of the judiciary are prepared to prosecute and adjudicate cases with a gender perspective. However, it underscores that such measures must be implemented across all state entities, including the Public Prosecutor's Office and the police, which are involved in the submission and processing of complaints, and in the investigation of cases.

Recommendation No. 34. Investigate, try, and punish, with a gender perspective and as a priority, violations of the human rights of women and girls, especially femicides of trans women. Likewise, investigate with due diligence acts of violence against women human rights defenders and other groups at special risk mentioned in this report.

317. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide specific information on the priority prosecution of human rights violations against women, girls and trans women, particularly in cases of femicide, with a gender perspective. Since the Commission did not receive any information in this regard, it considered that compliance with this recommendation remained partial and urged the State to provide detailed information on the investigation and prosecution of these cases, stressing the need for an institutional strategy to ensure due diligence and the effective punishment of perpetrators.<sup>233</sup>

318. In 2024, the State reported that the MDHC implemented several measures to investigate and punish human rights violations against women and girls, including contributions to the development of the National Policy to Combat Political Violence against Women and the action plan of the National Femicide Prevention Pact. In addition, the CNJ published Resolution No. 492/2023, which mandates the application of the Protocol for Prosecuting and Adjudicating Cases with a Gender Perspective to guide judges in its implementation. To prevent femicides of trans women, the MDHC supported the Second National Action Plan on Women, Peace and Security, focused on LBT women. The MDHC also designed the Combating Violence Against LBT Women brochure and trained the staff of the Ligue 180 helpline to provide ethical support to LBT women in cases of violence.<sup>234</sup>

319. Civil society organizations acknowledged the creation of the Protocol for Prosecuting and Adjudicating Cases with a Gender Perspective as a positive step. However, they noted the absence of mechanisms to monitor its implementation. They argued that for this policy to constitute a genuine progress in access to justice for women and girls, it would be essential to establish oversight and continuing training mechanisms targeted at judiciary officials to ensure its adequate application.<sup>235</sup>

320. The Commission commends the measures reported by the State to ensure that cases involving violence against women are prosecuted from a gender perspective. The Commission also applauds the measures implemented by the MDHC. However, in line with the information provided by the civil society, it emphasizes that the State should develop a monitoring mechanism to assess the impact of the protocol on the daily work of the courts. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

321. To follow up on this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to provide information on the monitoring mechanism to oversee the implementation of the Protocol for Prosecuting and Adjudicating Cases with a Gender Perspective and underscores that having a database of the rulings that adopt this perspective in place is not sufficient since the State must assess whether judges are actually applying the protocol and if the training provided is contributing to increasing its use.

Recommendation No. 35. Strengthen the institutional capacity of judicial bodies, such as the Public Prosecutor's Office (Ministério Público), police agencies, courts, and legal and forensic medicine units, by endowing them with financial, human, and training resources to enable them to fight the pattern of impunity surrounding proceedings relating to violence against women. In addition, step up enforcement of punishments and make headway with reparation projects through effective criminal investigations that avoid re-victimization and are subject to proper judicial monitoring.

322. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about a series of measures adopted by the CNJ to promote gender equality in the judiciary, including affirmative actions and the implementation of gender parity in the selection committees that evaluated candidates for judicial careers. The State also highlighted the establishment of the National Public Defender's Office for Women, which was responsible for processing complaints related to legal proceedings involving acts of violence against women. The Commission welcomed this progress but emphasized the importance of introducing similar measures across all state agencies, including the Public Prosecutor's Office and the offices of public defenders. The Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial and stressed the importance of adopting institution-building measures for all the authorities involved, which included allocating resources and training technical teams to improve investigations in these cases.<sup>236</sup>

323. In 2024, the State reported that the Federal Public Defender's Office undertook several initiatives to protect women's rights and address gender-based violence. It established the Observatory of Violence Against Women (OVM) to enhance complaint management, provide training to staff and create partnerships with public and private entities. The Federal Public Defender's Office joined the Support Committee for Prosecuting and Adjudicating Cases with a Gender Perspective and the Working Group against Gender-Based Political Violence and collaborates with the Ministry of Women in the Femicídio Zero (No femicides) campaign. It also launched the National Program against Gender-Based Political Violence for the 2024 elections, which provided for legal assistance, a complaint mechanism and staff training.<sup>237</sup>

324. In addition, the State reported that the judiciary, through the CNJ, provided training options for judges with a focus on the Maria da Penha Law (Law No. 11,340/2006) and human rights issues. CNJ's Recommendation No. 79/2020 and Resolution No. 492/2023 mandate continuing training for judges on gender, race and ethnicity issues. In addition, Resolution No. 492/2023 creates the Support and Training Committee for Prosecuting and Adjudicating Cases with a Gender Perspective and requires all judges to take annual training courses on the matter.<sup>238</sup>

325. The civil society noted that the State had made no progress in the institutional strengthening of the judiciary to combat impunity in cases of violence against women. It indicated that specialized police stations that assist women victims of violence are concentrated mainly in the capital cities and that they cover less than 10 percent of all cities. Most of them operate in the southeast, particularly in São Paulo, where 40 percent of these stations are located. According to civil society organizations, the absence of a policy to expand these units has an impact on the judiciary, inasmuch as investigations advance more slowly, which could lead to the application of the statute of limitations and hinder access to justice. In addition, although Law No. 14,541—which mandates that these police stations should provide psychological and legal assistance

24/7— was enacted recently, its application is challenging due to resource and staff shortages across the states. Civil society organizations also claimed that only 10.2 percent of the stations currently are operational 24/7.<sup>239</sup>

326. The Commission welcomes the measures adopted by the Federal Public Defender's Office — such as the OVM to enhance complaint management, provide training to staff and create partnerships with public and private entities— as well as its work to promote the prosecution and adjudication of cases with a gender perspective and to advance a policy to combat gender-based political violence. In this regard, it commends the specific training delivered to judiciary staff on gender issues and the prosecution and adjudication of cases of violence with a gender perspective. However, the Commission takes note of the need to strengthen and expand the network of specialized police stations for women. This issue was analyzed by the Inter-American Commission in the Maria da Penha case, where it highlighted the need for these entities that receive and investigate complaints to operate all across the country. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

327. For this recommendation to be fully complied with, the Commission underscores the importance of strengthening the Civil Police structure linked to the network of specialized police stations for women and ensuring their operation in the five regions of the country. It also invites the State to continue providing information on any measures adopted to enhance the institutional capacity of the judicial and forensic medicine agencies involved in combating violence against women.

Recommendation No. 36. Implement protocols with a gender perspective for crimes involving violence against women and develop transparent processes for overseeing their correct implementation.

328. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission that the CNJ had adopted Resolution No. 492/2023, which established a protocol for adjudicating cases with a gender perspective. The Commission welcomed this measure but emphasized that the information submitted regarding approved and updated protocols for investigating and prosecuting cases of violence against women was insufficient and that it had not received information on their effective implementation and oversight mechanisms. The Commission considered that there had been limited progress towards compliance with this recommendation and highlighted the need for the State to provide further details on the implementation and oversight of these protocols, including specific information about the CNJ protocols and their application by judicial authorities.<sup>240</sup>

Information on compliance

329. For 2024, the State reported that in 2023, the National Protocol for the Investigation and Forensic Examination of Femicide Crimes was published, originally created in 2020 and updated in January 2024. Its goal is to standardize the investigation procedures for femicides in state civil police forces and forensic agencies, as well as in the Federal District. In March 2024, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security (MJSP) gathered female professionals from various security forces to discuss the update of three key regulations: i) National Guidelines for Military Police Attention to Women Victims of Domestic Violence; ii) Technical Standard for Specialized Women's Police Stations (DEAM); iii) National Protocol for the Investigation and Forensic Examination of Femicide Crimes. The discussions aimed to review and update these regulations, which are now awaiting publication. The monitoring of their implementation is considered advisory, as the execution of investigations and measures against gender-based violence is the responsibility of state governments, which have autonomy in their implementation.<sup>241</sup>

<sup>241</sup> State of Brazil, Note No. 30 of February 7, 2025. Comments on the draft report.

330. In addition, the State created the Database of Judgments and Decisions Issued under the Protocol for Prosecuting and Adjudicating Cases with a Gender Perspective, which is available on the CNJ website and included 2,948 rulings as of September 2024. It also indicated that the National Support and Training Committee for the Prosecution and Adjudication of Cases with a Gender Perspective promotes campaigns to encourage the use of this database in the courts.<sup>242</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

331. The Commission appreciates the measures reported by the State, in particular, the creation of the National Protocol for Investigations and Expert Examinations Related to Femicides and considers that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

332. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission calls on the State to provide information on the application of the National Protocol for Investigations and Expert Examinations Related to Femicides and its results. Moreover, it invites the State to share other judicial or forensic documents used to address issues related to violence against women.

Recommendation No. 37. Plan, develop, and implement educational initiatives, programs, and policies, from the formative, initial stages onwards, for all citizens, including children, addressing gender-based discrimination, with a view to getting rid of stereotypes about the inferiority of women and girls, promoting their rights to be free from violence and discrimination, advancing gender equality, and guaranteeing respect for the rights of all persons.

333. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not provide specific information on compliance with this recommendation; therefore, the Commission determined that compliance remained partial. To move forward with its implementation, the Commission urged the State to adopt additional measures, such as public policies, actions to promote a culture of human rights and educational campaigns aimed at eradicating subordination stereotypes and fostering equality for women and girls. The Commission also recommended that the State consolidate information on the scope, reach and outcomes of these measures and provide detailed information on any initiatives involving children.<sup>243</sup>

334. In 2024, the State emphasized that the Anísio Teixeira National Institute of Educational Studies and Research (INEP), which oversees the National High School Examination (ENEM) and the National Examination for the Certification of Youth and Adult Competences (ENCCEJA), is responsible for ensuring that individuals are able to use their chosen name in the exams upon request. Brazil indicated that submitting supporting documents is not required and that persons only need to register their chosen name with the Federal Revenue Service and indicate their preference when registering for the exams.<sup>244</sup>

335. For their part, civil society organizations reported that a strong antigender movement has been allegedly developing in Brazil since 2014, which seeks to ban discussions about gender equality in schools, supported by initiatives in the legislative and executive branches at all levels of government. Although this movement reportedly does not hinder access to education, it causes school desertion and reinforces prejudice and discrimination. This context is allegedly linked to the Escola Sem Partido (School without party) project and to antigender laws that go against the constitutional principles of equality and nondiscrimination. Although the STF has reportedly rendered some of these laws unconstitutional, new bills have been introduced to promote homeschooling, the militarization of schools, gender segregation and the criminalization of gender education. In this regard, civil society organizations noted that resistance to these issues persists in schools, affecting teachers who aim to incorporate gender approaches into their courses.<sup>245</sup>

336. Furthermore, the civil society claimed that Law No. 14,161 of 2021 amends the Law on Guidelines and Foundations of National Education to introduce content on the prevention of violence against women into the basic education curriculum and creates a School Week to Combat Violence against Women in March, in which all schools participate. However, they noted that the term “gender” was removed under pressure before its approval, limiting the scope of the measure. While they acknowledged that this initiative helps to raise awareness of domestic violence, civil society organizations argued that an awareness-raising week alone would not meet the standards set forth by the Commission or the Convention of Belém do Pará for eradicating gender stereotypes. According to them, the CEDAW Committee recommends implementing mandatory gender equality education and age-appropriate sex education focused on preventing teenage pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases.<sup>246</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

337. The Commission regrets the lack of specific information on the implementation of this recommendation. It also voices its concern over the reports from the civil society in relation to the adoption of several measures that ban the promotion of discussions on gender issues in schools. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

338. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission urges the State to adopt additional compliance measures, such as public policies, actions to promote a culture of human rights and educational outreach campaigns aimed at eradicating subordination stereotypes and advancing gender equality. Moreover, the Commission encourages the State to refrain from adopting measures that ban discussions about gender issues in schools, as such measures perpetuate gender stereotypes in society and fail to contribute to prevent violence and discrimination.

Recommendation No. 38. Draft and implement culturally appropriate policies, with the participation of indigenous, Quilombola, and traditional community women and girls, and applying an integral and holistic approach, for preventing, investigating, prosecuting, and making reparation for acts of violence and discrimination against them.

339. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that the Office for Coordinating Women’s Policies had been created within the MPI to promote the rights of indigenous women by focusing on access to justice, empowerment and respect for their sociocultural diversity. Brazil also stated that this office worked alongside other ministries and organizations, including UN Women, and led initiatives such as the Women Guardians project to empower indigenous women leaders and address gender-based violence. While the Commission welcomed these initiatives, it noted the lack of information on similar measures for women and girls from Quilombola and traditional communities. The Commission invited the State to report on public policies aimed at preventing, investigating, punishing and ensuring reparation for acts of violence and discrimination against indigenous, Quilombola and traditional community women and girls, while guaranteeing that these policies and actions were culturally appropriate and effectively implemented.<sup>247</sup>

340. In 2024, the State reported that the Office for Coordinating Women’s Policies (COPM) of the MPI would develop the Women Guardians project, aimed at preventing and eradicating violence against indigenous women. This project will establish a support network of women guardians and coordinators to train indigenous women, promote bioeconomics and contribute to the creation of a national plan to combat violence against indigenous women. Furthermore, it will organize conferences focused on gender, health and education issues. The State also reported that the COPM launched a call for projects on indigenous women's rights and that, together with the Child and Youth Psychosocial Care Center (CAPSI), it coordinates research on violence and health to carry out actions to protect this group, support complaints and work on preventing suicide within the indigenous community. The State also emphasized that the MPI is a member of the No Femicides Committee and that it has made a formal commitment to eradicating gender-based violence in August 2024.<sup>248</sup>

341. For its part, the MIR undertook actions to strengthen the autonomy and societal role of women, which contributed to reducing violence as a result of their socioeconomic empowerment. Its programs include Sabores e Saberes (Flavors and knowledge), which evaluates projects based on their respect for women's dignity, and Atlânticas (a scholarships program), which promotes the participation of women from Afro-descendant, Quilombola, Roma and indigenous communities in science. In addition, the State highlighted initiatives such as Aquilomba Brasil and the National Plan for Quilombola Territorial and Environmental Management (PNGTAQ), which promotes gender equity in environmental and territorial management.<sup>249</sup>

342. The Commission applauds the measures reported by the State to prevent acts of violence and discrimination against indigenous, Quilombola and traditional community women and girls and to promote their right to live a life free of violence. However, it underscores the importance of implementing measures aimed at investigating, punishing and ensuring reparation for these violations, which must be culturally appropriate. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

343. To advance compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to provide information on the culturally appropriate measures adopted or planned for investigating acts of violence and discrimination, punishing those responsible and ensuring reparation for the victims, guaranteeing the participation of indigenous women and girls, quilombolas and traditional communities in the process.

Recommendation No. 39. Adopt comprehensive measures to respect and guarantee women's rights to sexual and reproductive health by, inter alia, reinforcing the availability and ongoing supply of essential services. In particular, guarantee access to high-quality maternal healthcare; safe access to contraception methods, including emergency contraception; voluntary interruption of pregnancy, when applicable, and access to true, uncensored information, in addition to the comprehensive education needed for women and girls to be able to take free and autonomous decisions.

344. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted the commitment of the Ministry of Health to providing comprehensive healthcare under the SUS, which included actions to promote reproductive and family planning under the National Policy on Comprehensive Women Healthcare (PNAISM), which sought to reduce maternal deaths and guarantee the right to legal abortion in the cases provided for by law. However, civil society organizations reported that women encountered obstacles to access to legal abortion procedures, especially in cases of sexual violence, and referred to the disparities that affect Afro-descendant women and women living in poverty. The Commission welcomed the measures adopted and considered that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial, although there were still challenges ahead. To move forward, the Commission urged the State to adopt a comprehensive strategy that ensured access to high-quality maternal healthcare, contraception, legal abortion procedures and sexual education, especially for vulnerable women and girls.<sup>250</sup>

345. In 2024, the State informed that the Ministry of Health seeks to guarantee the provision of health services by offering both conception and contraception methods at all levels of care. The PNAISM, established in 2004, promotes sexual and reproductive rights, female autonomy and assistance to victims of violence. Furthermore, the Menstrual Dignity Program was launched in 2024 and distributes free sanitary pads to low-income individuals enrolled in public schools and to persons in situation of homelessness or extreme vulnerability, thus benefiting approximately 24 million people while raising awareness on the menstrual cycle.<sup>251</sup>

346. Moreover, the State reported the creation of the National Plan against HIV/AIDS and other STIs in Women, which lays down guidelines and provides for specific actions on this issue. In addition, access to tubal ligation for family planning was expanded pursuant to Law No. 14,443 of 2022 and the right of women to have an adult companion during their stay in health centers was guaranteed under Law No. 14,737 of 2023. This law allows patients to decline a companion designated by the health unit and requires written consent for this purpose. However, health professionals may provide medical care in the absence of a companion in emergency situations to protect the patient's life.<sup>252</sup>

347. The State added that access to legal abortion in cases of rape is guaranteed by the SUS in accordance with Article 196 of the Constitution and Law No. 8,080 of 1990, which ensures universal and unrestricted access to this procedure. According to the Ministry of Health, victims have the right to free and adequate care, preserving their privacy and refraining from any discrimination on moral grounds. The State also recalled that Law No. 12,845 of 2013 requires mandatory comprehensive care tailored to the needs of sexual violence victims and has established prophylactic protocols to prevent infections following sexual assault.<sup>253</sup>

348. Finally, the State indicated that the Alyne Network was launched in September 2024 with the goal of reducing maternal mortality by 25 percent overall and specifically by 50 percent among Afro-descendant women by 2027. A total of 400 million Brazilian reais were invested in this project in 2024 to enhance maternal and infant health services, and 1 trillion Brazilian reais have already been appropriated for 2025. This program restructured emergency services, granted funding for ambulances, provided specialized teams available 24/7, promoted breastfeeding, increased resources for Neonatal Care Units and introduced new prenatal testing. The Alyne Network continues the work of the former Stork Network and honors Alyne Pimentel, a young Afro-descendant woman who died due to medical malpractice. Additional initiatives to reduce maternal mortality include the National Plan against HIV/AIDS and other STIs, along with efforts to improve malaria diagnosis in the Amazon region.<sup>254</sup>

349. Nevertheless, the Commission was deeply concerned over the processing of Bill No. 1904 of 2024, which criminalizes women who terminate their pregnancy after week 22 shall be sentenced to 6 to 20 years in prison, equating their penalty to that of a murderer, even in circumstances in which abortion is allowed by law, such as in the case of rape.<sup>255</sup> In this context, more than 20 civil society organizations informed the Commission and the United Nations that this legislative initiative violates women's sexual and reproductive

350. The Commission welcomes the measures reported by the State, in particular the Menstrual Dignity Program, the National Plan against HIV/AIDS and other STIs in Women, the expansion of access to tubal ligation for family planning, and the Alyne Network, which are significant policies for guaranteeing women's sexual and reproductive rights in Brazil. However, the Commission expresses its deep concern over the proposed legislation seeking to criminalize women who legally terminate a pregnancy in the country. This bill marks a significant step backwards in the protection of women's rights and imposes a disproportionate burden on victims. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

351. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to adopt progressive measures through the executive, legislative or judicial branches to protect and advance the sexual and reproductive rights of women in Brazil. The Commission also underscores the need to ensure that all women have access to pregnancy termination procedures in the healthcare system and that immediate care is guaranteed as required by law and free of any restrictions imposed by healthcare providers or the judiciary.

H. Boys, girls, and adolescents

Recommendation No. 40. Take all necessary steps to ensure that the exceptionality principle is applied to measures aimed at adolescents at odds with the law, particularly so that deprivation of liberty is used as a last resort only, giving preference to open environment options for property-related and non-violent offenses. Accordingly, alternatives must be envisaged in proceedings so that their cases can be resolved through actions that promote the development of their personality and constructive reintegration into society.

352. The State did not provide information on the measures adopted to comply with this recommendation in its 2023 follow-up report. However, the civil society informed that the National System for Socioeducational Services (SINASE) and certain state initiatives, such as conflict-mediation and restorative justice programs in Ceará, had proved successful in implementing alternatives to criminal prosecution. In view of the lack of updated information from the State, the Commission concluded that compliance with this recommendation remained pending. To guide progress, the Commission urged the State to adopt institution-building measures aimed at reducing incarceration rates for adolescents and to provide specific details on the implementation of alternatives to prosecution.<sup>257</sup>

355. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission calls on the State to adopt the necessary institution-building measures to reduce incarceration rates among adolescents at odds with the law and to take steps to ensure that detention is used as a last resort and for the shortest time possible. Moreover, the Commission invites the State to provide information and specific data on the implementation of alternatives to prosecution.

Recommendation No. 41. Bring all “socioeducational” (correctional) facilities into line with international criteria and standards, particularly as regards architectural parameters that should serve the underlying purpose, as well as comply with the highest safety, accommodation, educational, health, and social reinsertion standards.

356. The State did not provide updated information on its New Socioeducational Program in its 2023 follow-up report. However, it reported that the latest version of the Technical Guidance Manual for the National Registry of Inspections in Socioeducational Units and Programs (CNIUPS) had been published in January 2023 and that the CNIUPS Open Environment had been launched in September of the same year. These documents were aimed at enhancing judicial inspections and strengthening the monitoring of the rights of adolescents deprived of liberty. While the Commission acknowledged this progress, it considered that compliance with this recommendation remained pending since it had not received specific information on the actual conditions of detention facilities or the actions taken to align them with international standards. The Commission encouraged the State to continue its comprehensive efforts to improve the juvenile justice system, ensuring that detention facilities meet adequate standards for security, lodging, education, healthcare and social reinsertion.<sup>259</sup>

358. Considering that the State did not provide any information, the Commission concludes that compliance with the recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

359. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission calls on the State to continue pursuing comprehensive, prompt and timely improvements in the juvenile criminal justice system. In this regard, the Commission has previously encouraged the State to adopt a socioeducational approach to ensure that juvenile detention centers meet adequate standards for security, lodging, education, healthcare and social reinsertion. Furthermore, the Commission invites the State to implement the measures that are necessary to ensure the effective incorporation of this approach.

Recommendation No. 42. Adopt measures to allow and foster contact between the adolescents in those centers and their families and communities, by promoting geographical decentralization of the centers in such a way that those adolescents can serve their time in the same place or at the center closest to their home or that of their parents or guardian, and friends.

360. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted the progress made in adopting the State System for Socioeducational Assistance Vacancy Centers under CNJ’s Resolution No. 367/2021. These centers, designed to identify and distribute vacancies in socioeducational units, had already been set up in 19 states, and implementation was underway in the remaining states. The CNJ also promoted specialized hearings to ensure that judges could hear the input from adolescents and their families when making legal decisions. Notwithstanding that, the Commission noted that the State had not provided specific information on how these measures facilitated contact between adolescents and their families or on how decentralization ensured that adolescents served their sentences close to home. The Commission concluded that compliance with this recommendation remained partial and urged the State to devise concrete measures to finalize the territorial decentralization process and eliminate all barriers to family contact, as well as to report on the progress achieved in these areas.<sup>261</sup>

361. In 2024, the State did not provide information on the measures adopted to comply with this recommendation.<sup>262</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

362. Considering that the State did not provide any information, the Commission concludes that compliance with the recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

363. With a view to guiding compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to take steps to complete the process on the territorial decentralization of detention centers to ensure that adolescents serve their time at a center that is located in the same district as their home, parents, guardian or friends, or at the closest one.

Recommendation No. 43. Keep a record and conduct a serious, impartial, effective and expeditious investigation of all complaints received regarding the way the juvenile justice system operates and reply to all such complaints. In cases in which violations of the rights of the child in such centers are confirmed, adopt measures in administrative, civil and/or criminal proceedings to punish those responsible; avoid a recurrence of what happened; and proceed to make appropriate reparation to the victims and their family members.

364. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about the operation of the Prison and Socioeducational System Monitoring and Inspection Groups (GMFs), created under CNJ Resolution No. 214/2015 to address deficiencies and irregularities in the socioeducational system. In addition, the civil society reported that, along with the mechanisms set up by the CNJ, the Public Prosecutor's Office, public defenders' offices and the Ligue 100 helpline, some states, including Minas Gerais, had created ombudsperson's offices to receive complaints in relation to the juvenile justice system. However, the Commission noted that the State had not provided specific information on the measures adopted in 2023 or on their outcomes. Consequently, it decided that compliance with this recommendation remained pending. The Commission invited the State to provide updated information and specific data on the implementation and results of the mechanisms reported, and to ensure that they were accessible, simple, familiar to adolescents and aligned with their needs.<sup>263</sup>

366. Considering that the State did not provide any information, the Commission concludes that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

367. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to provide relevant, updated and specific information that will make it possible to verify the implementation thereof. In particular, it requests information on the implementation and outcomes of the mechanisms reported, including the GMFs and reports arising from judicial inspections. It is crucial that the State ensures these mechanisms are indeed accessible, simple, widely known to adolescents and tailored to their needs and specific conditions. Therefore, the Commission calls on the State to provide information on the actions taken to achieve these objectives.

Recommendation No. 44. Establish a juvenile justice indicators system based on international models, designed to be periodically updated, and ensure public access to that information, which needs to contain, at a minimum, data on: i) the total number of adolescents in “socioeducational” correctional facilities; ii) a breakdown of data by gender, ethnic/racial origin, migratory status, age, sexual orientation, identity and/or gender expression, and sexual characteristics, as well as any other characteristics that could trigger intersectional risks for adolescents; and iii) the number of adolescents per type of correctional regime, including the different forms of internment.

368. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about the creation of a database that incorporated input from the State System for Socioeducational Assistance Vacancy Centers and the Prison System Inspection and Monitoring Department. The State reported that the data obtained from the CNIUPS forms regarding closed socioeducational units was being organized into a public, online database known as the Socioeducational Platform and that additional information was expected as of the following year once the data from the CNIUPS forms regarding open socioeducational programs had been incorporated. The platform, which was under implementation, sought to enable real-time access to data on socioeducational measures and adolescents’ profiles, including age, gender, race and ethnicity. The Commission acknowledged this progress but noted that it had not received information to verify the availability and update of this data, as well as public access thereto. Therefore, it considered that compliance with this recommendation remained partial and urged the State to provide updated and accessible information on juvenile justice indicators, and to ensure the regular update and quality of data to minimize the risks of erroneous information and duplicated records.<sup>265</sup>

369. In 2024, the State informed that the Socioeducational Platform (PSE), developed by the CNJ in 2021 to automatize the management of processes in the socioeducational system, had begun to operate in October 2023. The Court of Justice of Rio Grande do Norte was the first to implement the platform, which replaced the previous system and enabled the input of follow-up guides for adolescents in conflict with the law, issued alerts for procedural deadlines and facilitated the creation of a reliable database on the sociodemographic profile of these adolescents. On August 27, 2024, the CNJ took the first steps to expand the platform.<sup>266</sup>

370. Moreover, the State reported that, as of January 2024, judges with jurisdiction over children and adolescent matters are required to conduct biannual inspections of the open socioeducational measure programs. A panel monitored by the CNJ facilitated the collection of data on judicial inspections carried out across federal states from January to July 2024. The State also submitted information on the number of inspections conducted in 12 months divided by the number of facilities, which resulted in state-specific percentages: 100 percent (Acre, Amazonas, Federal District, Goiás, Mato Grosso, Rio de Janeiro, Rondônia, Tocantins, Alagoas, Amapá, Espírito Santo, Mato Grosso do Sul, Pará, Roraima); approximately 90 percent (Santa Catarina, Ceará, Maranhão, Piauí, Paraíba, Sergipe, Pernambuco, Paraná, Bahia, Rio Grande do Sul); approximately 70 percent (Rio Grande do Norte and São Paulo) and approximately 60 percent (Minas Gerais).<sup>267</sup>

371. In addition, after a six-year hiatus, the MDHC resumed the gathering and publishing of national data on the National Socioeducational Attention Policy by launching the 2023 National Data Survey of the SINASE. This survey included information on adolescents and young people subject to restrictive and custodial measures during the first half of 2023.<sup>268</sup> Based on this survey, the Commission learned that the State had successfully published disaggregated data on the socioeducational system in Brazil. Key data included the number of socioeducational care units by modality and gender; the total number of units by state; information on adolescents subject to socioeducational measures, such as their gender, race, social condition and age; the type of crime committed; the number of adolescents that participated in vocational training activities; the number of adolescents that used the public psychosocial/mental healthcare network; and the number of adolescents with disabilities or children, among other details.<sup>269</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

372. The Commission commends the compliance measures reported by the State. In particular, it highlights the implementation of the PSE, which enables the recording of sociodemographic information in the socioeducational system, as well as the management of procedural deadlines, thus promoting a more automated and up-to-date process management; the mandatory biannual inspections of the open socioeducational programs, thus ensuring a more frequent monitoring of these programs and facilitating the periodic and state-specific collection of data; and the resumption of the publication of national data of the SINASE, thus providing access to detailed information on adolescents in the socioeducational system across the country, disaggregated by gender, race and type of measure, among other indicators, which is crucial for evaluating and adjusting policies. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that these measures constitute significant steps towards compliance with this recommendation, since they evidence the State's efforts to establish a system of updated and accessible juvenile justice indicators. Consequently, the Commission determines that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

373. To guide full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to expand public access to the Socioeducational Platform and to ensure that this platform is continuously updated and that disaggregated data is accessible. Additionally, the Commission encourages the State to develop mechanisms to allow for the participation of the civil society in the analysis and evaluation of juvenile justice data, thus fostering greater transparency and the enhancement of socioeducational policies.

I. Lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and intersex (LGBTI) persons

Recommendation No. 45. Make —and properly fund— efforts to systematically compile and analyze official statistical data on the prevalence and nature of violence and bias-based discrimination against LGBTI people.

374. In the 2023 follow-up report, the Commission took note of the creation of the National Secretariat for the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons under the MDCH, as a response to the historical demands from LGBTQIA+ social movements. In addition, under said secretariat, the Office for Promoting and Defending the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons was established, which is responsible for coordinating actions to combat violence and for promoting research on public policies impacting LGBTQIA+ persons. Furthermore, the National Council for the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons was set up to ensure social participation in the development and monitoring of government policies. The Commission welcomed this progress and commended the inclusion of measures to protect the rights of LGBTQIA+ persons in the 2024-2027 Multiyear Plan of the MDHC, as well as the creation of the national council as a key mechanism for social participation. However, the Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation remained partial and invited the State to continue gathering and processing data to enhance public policies and legislation aimed at protecting the rights of LGBTQIA+ persons and ensuring their social inclusion.<sup>270</sup>

Information on compliance

375. In 2024, the State reported that it took significant steps to compile official data on violence and discrimination against LGBTQIA+ persons and underscored Technical Cooperation Agreement No. 09 of 2023 between the MDHC and the CNJ. This agreement aims to protect LGBTQIA+ rights against violence by promoting cooperation on studies, research and data collection to develop indicators on LGBTQIAphobic violence. The agreement outlines actions, such as the creation of institutional mechanisms and standardized procedures to assist victims, investigate crimes and prevent violence targeting LGBTQIA+ individuals, as well as the preparation of an analytical report on the “Rogéria Form” concerning the efforts to combat LGBTQIAphobic violence. Additionally, it provides for the elaboration of a unified diagnosis on the measures adopted against such violence in Brazil, which should take into consideration legal frameworks, claims on LGBTQIAphobia, academic research and justice and public safety infrastructure, in the context of the judicial decision on Direct Action of Unconstitutionality due to Omission (ADO) No. 26/DF that criminalizes LGBTQIAphobia.<sup>271</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

376. The Commission welcomes the signing of Technical Cooperation Agreement No. 09/2023 between the MDHC and the CNJ. Nevertheless, it underscores that this document contains general provisions concerning studies, research, the exchange of information and access to data on human rights, including LGBTQIA+ persons. While the Commission acknowledges the importance of this initiative, it considers that it does not constitute sufficient progress towards compliance with this recommendation. Based on the foregoing, the Commission concludes that compliance with the recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

377. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to implement the measures outlined in Technical Cooperation Agreement No. 09/2023 and to provide updates on the analytical report concerning the Rogéria Form, as well as on the unified diagnosis on the measures adopted against violence. Furthermore, the Commission urges the State to continue taking steps and allocating resources to ensure a comprehensive collection and analysis of LGBTQIAphobia data across all Brazilian states.

Recommendation No. 46. Adopt such legislative measures and public policies as are needed to prevent violence, discrimination, and prejudice against persons based on their sexual orientation, identity, and/or gender expression, or whose sexual characteristics vary in accordance with masculine and feminine models. Those measures need to take into account the intersection of factors that may heighten the violence, such as ethnic/racial origin.

378. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about the signing of a technical cooperation agreement between the MDHC and the CNJ. This agreement was aimed at facilitating studies, research and the exchange of information to develop indicators and produce evidence, disseminate information on human rights and combat violence against LGBTQIA+ persons. The Commission welcomed this initiative along with the aforementioned measures and acknowledged that the State had taken several steps to prevent violence and discrimination against the LGBTQIA+ community. Accordingly, the Commission determined that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to substantial partial and urged the State to continue implementing public policies, institutional strengthening actions and human rights awareness measures, including evaluation mechanisms to measure the true impact of these initiatives to prevent violence towards this group, with a special focus on violent acts against Afro-descendant trans women.<sup>272</sup>

Information on compliance

379. In 2024, the State reported that it adopted legislative and policy measures to prevent violence and discrimination against LGBTQIA+ persons, considering intersectional factors such as ethnicity and racial origin. A key development was the establishment of the National Strategy to Combat Violence against LGBTQIA+ Persons by means of Regulation No. 756 of December 2023, which focuses on safeguarding LGBTQIA+ persons in situations of vulnerability and social risk, particularly those facing discrimination due to their gender identity and expression, sexual orientation or sexual features. As part of this strategy, the National Program for the Strengthening of LGBTQIA+ Shelters or Acolher+ (Shelter+) program was created by means of Regulation No. 755, which seeks to protect the rights of LGBTQIA+ persons at social risk or with severed family ties, thus promoting the full enjoyment of their rights.<sup>273</sup>

380. In addition, the State indicated that the Aquilomba Brasil program and the PNGTAQ include specific goals to foster the participation of LGBTQIA+ persons in Quilombola communities by promoting gender and generational equity while safeguarding the physical integrity of these groups —especially women, young persons and LGBTQIA+ leaders— in territories in conflict.<sup>274</sup>

381. Finally, the State added that it devised measures specifically aimed at addressing violence against Afro-descendant trans women and other LGBTQIA+ persons who are in a vulnerable situation due to their gender identity and ethno-racial origin. These efforts included the diagnosis of risk factors for violence conducted by the MDHC under Technical Cooperation Agreement No. 134 of 2024, which sought to strengthen public services specialized in health, public safety, justice and social assistance for LGBTQIA+ persons suffering violence. In addition, the Empodera+ (Empower+) program, which was created in 2024 with the purpose of fostering the social and economic inclusion of LGBTQIA+ persons, is aimed at increasing employment and income generation opportunities for Afro-descendant and transgender persons in a vulnerable situation by addressing the barriers to access and stay in the formal labor market.<sup>275</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

382. The Commission welcomes the policies implemented to address violence towards LGBTQIA+ persons, including the National Strategy to Combat Violence against LGBTQIA+ Persons, the Acolher+ program, the technical cooperation agreement and the Empodera+ program. Nevertheless, it observes that these measures were introduced in 2023 or 2024 and that they are still in the early implementation stages. With regard to the intersectional violence experienced by Afro-descendant LGBTQIA+ individuals, especially Afro-descendant trans women, the Commission emphasizes that the measures outlined by the State require further reinforcement. Finally, the Commission expresses its concern over the existence of nearly a hundred laws across different domains that, while claiming to protect rights, ultimately violate the rights of cross-dressing and trans persons in the country. Consequently, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

383. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to submit detailed information on the implementation of the National Strategy to Combat Violence against LGBTQIA+ Persons, the Acolher+ program, the technical cooperation agreement and the Empodera+ program, as well as on their outcomes, to assess whether these initiatives are sufficient to reduce violence against LGBTQIA+ persons in Brazil. The Commission requests additional information on the measures adopted to address violence against LGBTQIA+ individuals under an ethnic-racial approach with a special focus on Afro-descendant trans women.

Recommendation No. 47. Adopt comprehensive public policies that consolidate progress made as regards civic status (cidadania), equality, and dignity for the trans and diverse gender population, including guaranteeing the right to gender identity.

384. The State did not submit specific information on compliance with this recommendation in its 2023 follow-up report. However, the Commission acknowledged the State's expressed commitment to advancing the protection of the rights of LGBTI persons, as evidenced in the information provided regarding previously addressed recommendations and concluded that compliance with this recommendation remained partial. Furthermore, the Commission urged the State to develop inclusive public policies targeted at trans and gender-diverse persons, as well as to adopt a comprehensive approach that spanned from policy design to evaluation, and that included the active participation of the civil society and the development of indicators to assess their effectiveness.<sup>276</sup>

385. The State reported that it adopted several measures to strengthen and evaluate inclusive public policies for the trans and gender-diverse population. The State referred to the National Strategy for Dignified Work, Education and Income Generation for LGBTQIA+ Persons, which was implemented in February 2024 to promote the social and economic inclusion of this community, with a particular focus on Afro-descendant and trans individuals in a vulnerable situation. The State also reported on the Empodera+ program, currently in its pilot phase in four states, which seeks to foster the employability and professional development of LGBTQIA+ persons, thus supporting their autonomy and dignity.<sup>277</sup>

386. In turn, the Acolher+ program, launched in December 2023, aims to protect and promote the rights of LGBTQIA+ individuals in a situation of social vulnerability, including those with severed family ties. This program, which selected 12 LGBTQIA+ Shelter Houses across five regions of the country in 2024, operates with the support of the civil society to provide shelter and access to social and cultural services, and to integrate these facilities into the state structure. The State reported that it entered into agreements to foster model shelter projects which also operate as cultural spaces, thus ensuring access to health services, decent employment and citizen engagement activities. The first public LGBTQIA+ Shelter House was established in Belém during 2023, and the network is expected to expand to other regions in 2025 under additional agreements with states and municipalities.<sup>278</sup> The State highlighted that both initiatives incorporate training on human rights and citizen participation under a cross-cutting approach using public technologies to foster the autonomy and dignity of the LGBTQIA+ community.<sup>279</sup>

387. Based on publicly available information, the Commission takes note of the existence of 77 anti-trans laws in both municipalities and 18 states and observes that more than a third of these have entered into force in the past year. The justification for these laws is to protect the rights of children, adolescents, and women and guarantee religious freedom. The IACHR also learned that some of these norms prohibit the use of neutral language and, in addition, would prevent the discussion of gender issues in schools, which would disagree with the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court (STF). At least 11 of these laws have already been declared unconstitutional by the courts<sup>280</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

388. The Commission highly appreciates the compliance measures reported by the State, particularly the National Strategy for Dignified Work, Education and Income Generation for LGBTQIA+ Persons, the Empodera+ program and the Acolher+ program. Based on the information submitted by the State, the Commission acknowledges that these policies constitute progress towards advancing rights, equality and dignity for the trans and gender-diverse population. However, these are all recent measures introduced in 2023 or 2024 and there is no information available on their impact. Consequently, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

389. To guide full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to provide information on the implementation of the reported measures to ensure the development of comprehensive public policies that consolidate progress in terms of rights, equality and dignity for the trans and gender-diverse population, including safeguarding the right to gender identity. Finally, it highlights the need to review the aforementioned laws that would have the capacity to violate the rights of transvestites and transsexuals.

Recommendation No. 48. Create and implement policies that guarantee the right of LGBTI persons, especially trans and diverse gender persons, to access healthcare services without being subjected to discrimination and violence.

390. In the 2023 follow-up report, the Commission took note of the initiatives undertaken by the Ministry of Health and the MDHC aimed at guaranteeing the right to health of LGBTQIA+ persons and highlighted the strengthening and expansion of the Transsexualization Process policy as a crucial step forward for the trans community in Brazil. In view of these measures, the Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial and encouraged the State to continue reinforcing this policy, including through the implementation of monitoring and evaluation mechanisms. The Commission also invited the State to provide information on the policies adopted to ensure that other LGBTI persons could access their right to health without discrimination.<sup>281</sup>

391. In 2024, the State reported on the implementation of specific policies to ensure access to health services for LGBTQIA+ individuals. In this regard, it noted that the National Comprehensive Health Policy for the LGBTQIA+ Community, established in 2011, seeks to ensure adequate care at SUS centers by addressing barriers to access and promoting equity. The State also referred to the Specialized Healthcare Program for the Trans Community (PAESPopTrans) of 2024, designed to expand specialized SUS services for trans persons.

This program complements the LGBTQIA+ comprehensive health policy and is focused on expanding services and training professionals to deliver equitable and inclusive care.<sup>282</sup>

392. Regarding the Transsexualization Process policy, the State reported that it provides access to health services for gender transition, including hormone therapies and sex reassignment surgeries, funded by the Strategic Actions and Compensation Fund (FAEC). The policy is currently under review by an interministerial working group established in 2023, which issued a final report suggesting improvements to expand services and address the shortage of qualified hospitals and the high demand for specialized care. The State further noted that there are 10 hospital services and 12 outpatient clinics within the SUS network to treat the trans community, along with 104 local services, although not all of them are officially authorized. The government aims to expand these services in the coming years, prioritizing regional coverage and reducing waiting lists.<sup>283</sup>

393. The State informed that the impact of the Transsexualization Process policy is constantly monitored through periodic reports that evaluate the number of services provided, the expansion of the services and the procedures performed. The State also referred to the use of remote consultation and treatment services as a mechanism to enhance process management and monitoring. Additionally, the Office for Regulatory Impact Analysis prepares annual reports on performance and budget impact analysis to ensure the efficient use of resources and the continuous expansion of the services, and the interministerial working group recommends monitoring improvements to increase accessibility and efficiency within the SUS for trans persons.<sup>284</sup>

394. The Commission welcomes the measures reported by the State to implement policies that guarantee the right to health for LGBTQIA+ individuals, in particular, the PAESPopTrans program, introduced in 2024 as a mechanism to strengthen the National Comprehensive Health Policy for the LGBTQIA+ Community with regard to trans persons. The Commission also commends the efforts to expand the services offered under the Transsexualization Process policy and address shortages in authorized hospitals, as well as meet the high demand for specialized care. However, it regrets that no additional health centers were authorized to provide services to trans persons. Considering that the PAESPopTrans was established in 2024, the Commission notes that an evaluation of its outcomes and effectiveness in guaranteeing the right to health for LGBTQIA+ individuals is not yet available. Moreover, it notes that the interministerial working group tasked with evaluating the Transsexualization Process policy recommended strengthening its monitoring to increase the accessibility and efficiency of the services offered by the SUS to trans persons, which is likely already underway. Based on the foregoing, the Commission determines that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

395. To advance towards full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission encourages the State to continue enhancing its public health policies targeted at LGBTQIA+ individuals, with a special focus on trans persons, and underscores the importance of receiving additional information on the implementation of the PAESPopTrans and the authorization of new health centers to provide treatment under the Transsexualization Process policy.

Recommendation No. 49. Adopt any legislative and public policy measures needed to promote the rights of LGBTI persons, including those conducive to cultural changes via an inclusive education with a diversified gender perspective.

396. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about the participation of the MEC in the National Council for the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons and the creation of a working group to shed light on historic human rights violations against LGBTQIA+ individuals to guarantee their rights to truth, memory and dignity, as well as to foster inclusion and nondiscrimination. The Commission welcomed this progress towards compliance with this recommendation and emphasized the importance of adopting educational and cultural measures to promote the rights of LGBTQIA+ persons.<sup>285</sup>

Information on compliance

397. In 2024, the State reported that, to promote inclusive education on gender diversity, the MEC issued Regulation No. 614 in July 2024 to implement policies against harassment, prejudice and discrimination in schools. Under said regulation, a technical working group (GTT) was created, which is tasked with investigating these issues, organizing conferences and seminars and offering recommendations to the MEC on programs and policies for monitoring and evaluation. The State added that it implemented quotas for trans individuals in several Brazilian universities, such as the Federal University of the ABC Region and the University of Bahia State, with a view to improving access to higher education for this population.<sup>286</sup>

398. Furthermore, the State informed that, in addition to the initiatives undertaken in universities, the federal government announced in 2023 that 2 percent of the positions in the upcoming labor auditor selection process will be reserved for trans persons, in an attempt to reduce marginalization and offer education and employment opportunities to a population that has historically faced barriers. These measures seek to correct the historical exclusion of trans people from educational and professional environments. In addition, the INEP ensures that individuals are able to use their chosen name in national exams such as the ENEM and ENCCEJA, thus allowing participants to identify themselves according to their gender identity.<sup>287</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

399. The Commission welcomes the issuance of Regulation No. 614, which established a technical working group tasked with conducting research to help with the implementation of policies against harassment, prejudice and discrimination in schools. It also commends the introduction of quotas for trans individuals into public universities and public service selection processes. While these measures constitute positive steps towards compliance with this recommendation, the Commission considers them insufficient to ensure a cultural shift with regard to the rights of LGBTQIA+ persons through education. Consequently, the Commission determines that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

400. To guide the State towards full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission underscores the importance of implementing public education policies aimed at fostering meaningful cultural change and highlights the potential of the technical working group to develop a robust antidiscrimination policy in schools that upholds the rights of LGBTQIA+ persons.

Recommendation No. 50. Continue making headway with the institutional framework for the human rights agenda of LGBTI persons and ensuring its consolidation by endowing it with adequate budget and trained personnel who will work effectively to uphold it.

401. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed about the allocation of resources to the National Secretariat for the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons as part of the 2024-2027 Multiyear Plan, as well as the issuance of a public call for training defenders focused on LGBTQIA+ rights. The Commission acknowledged the establishment of said secretariat as a step towards institutional strengthening, determined that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial and invited the State to continue reinforcing these institutions by ensuring adequate resources and personnel.<sup>288</sup>

Information on compliance

402. In 2024, the State reported that it earmarked resources for policies and programs focused on the human rights of LGBTQIA+ persons. The State highlighted that it has signed a decentralized execution agreement with FUNDACENTRO with the purpose of supporting the implementation of the Empodera+ program, under which 3 million Brazilian reais will be invested. The State also allocated 1,633,333 Brazilian reais to the Human Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons: Social Participation and the Right to Health program under the Bem Viver+ (Quality of life+) program. In addition, the State channeled funds into hiring personnel to organize the Fourth National Conference on the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons. The resources provided in 2024 amounted to 20 million Brazilian reais and were aimed at supporting the implementation of policies and programs targeting this population.<sup>289</sup>

403. Furthermore, the State reported on the implementation of various measures aimed at training personnel on LGBTQIA+ rights. In this regard, the State indicated that it offers the Course on the Promotion and Defense of the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons in collaboration with the School of Public Administration (ENAP), a certified, 30-hour public course which had been completed by 25,690 people as of the date of this report. The State added that it provides weekly training to personnel involved in the Empodera+ program and quarterly training to the assistance network. It also runs a course for users focused on rights, health and occupational safety. Moreover, the Acolher+ program kicked off with a seminar on methodology, and meetings are held every two weeks to discuss and evaluate topics related to care and service enhancement by means of both qualitative and quantitative analysis methods.<sup>290</sup>

404. Finally, the State reported on the key initiatives undertaken by the National Council for the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons including: i) issuing Joint Resolution No. 1 of March 26, 2024, which outlines standards for the treatment towards LGBTQIA+ persons deprived of liberty; ii) participating in the Intercouncil Forum, where it submitted proposals for the Participatory Climate Plan within the framework of the national mitigation and adaptation strategies; iii) collaborating with All Out, a nongovernmental organization, on a joint fundraising campaign between June and August 2024 to support LGBTQIA+ individuals impacted by the climate crisis in Rio Grande do Sul; and iv) planning the Fourth National Conference on the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons, to be held in October 2025 in Brasilia.<sup>291</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

405. The Commission welcomes the measures reported by the State to continue making progress in establishing an institutional framework for the human rights agenda of LGBTQIA+ persons. It highlights initiatives such as the Empodera+ program, aimed at promoting the inclusion of LGBTQIA+ persons in the labor market; the organization of the Fourth National Conference on the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons; the course offered by the ENAP, which has already been completed by 25,000 participants; and the creation of the National Council for the Rights of LGBTQIA+ Persons. Based on the information provided, the Commission considers that the State has invested resources to set an institutional framework for LGBTQIA+ persons and therefore concludes that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

406. To guide the State towards full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission emphasizes the importance of guaranteeing, for instance, the allocation of resources to the Empodera+ program, so that it can evolve into an internalized and permanent social public policy guaranteed by the State. In addition, funds should be secured to hold future editions of the National Conference and to ensure the operation and structure of the National Council. Moreover, the Commission urges the State to continue reinforcing institutions and policies aimed at LGBTQIA+ persons.

J. Persons with disabilities

Recommendation No. 51. Adopt measures designed to guarantee equality before the law for persons with disabilities, safeguarding their legal capacity on an equal footing with other people.

407. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted its commitment to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the progress made by means of the Viver sem Limite II (Living without limits II) plan, which seeks to promote the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of persons with disabilities. The Commission welcomed the strengthening of the legal framework and the implementation of this comprehensive plan, considered that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial thanks to these initiatives and encouraged the State to continue adopting comprehensive measures and reporting on their design and implementation to guarantee the equality of persons with disabilities.<sup>292</sup>

Information on compliance

408. In 2024, the State reported that the Novo Viver Sem Limite (New living without limits, NVSL) plan, which is the national plan on the rights of persons with disabilities, had been launched in November 2023. The State informed that the NVSL, which was made up of 95 measures and was backed by an investment of 6.5 trillion Brazilian reais, has taken considerable steps forward, such as the adoption of new health regulations for persons with disabilities, the setting up of laboratories in the National Network for Research, Technological Development and Certification of Technical Assistance, and the creation of an observatory to ensure transparency and the social oversight of the NVSL activities. The observatory provides updates on the progress of the NVSL initiatives and shares news on states that have adhered to the plan, as well as other information resources.<sup>293</sup>

409. In addition, the State reported that the NVSL is managed by means of a joint effort between the Managing Committee and the Executive Group of the Interministerial Chamber for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CIDPD), under the MDHC. The State noted that this is the first time that a national plan for persons with disabilities has an interministerial governance structure, which includes technical chambers dedicated to areas such as public policies and psychosocial disabilities, education and employment, and technological assistance and innovation. The first chamber is about to be set up. Getting states, municipalities and the federal district to voluntarily adhere to the NVSL is a priority for 2024, as it facilitates access to earmarked resources. Furthermore, according to the State, as of September 2024, six states (Alagoas, Bahia, Ceará, Maranhão, Paraíba and Piauí) have joined the plan and, due to the October 2024 election, interested municipalities will be able to join in 2025.<sup>294</sup>

410. To ensure that persons with disabilities fully enjoy their legal capacity, the State reported that it adopted measures to adapt its legislation to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, which holds constitutional status and prevails over ordinary laws, and it informed that this convention tacitly repealed prior conflicting norms and serves as a guiding framework for new laws and judicial and administrative decisions. With regard to the Brazilian Inclusion Law (LBI), which has been in force since 2015, the State noted that said law amended Civil Code provisions concerning the civil capacity of persons with disabilities and that Article 6 of the LBI sets forth that disability does not affect the full civil capacity of persons with disabilities, thus enabling them to exercise rights such as the right to marriage, sexual and reproductive autonomy, family decisions and equal opportunities in adoption on an equal footing with other people. The LBI

further ensures equal access to justice for persons with disabilities and mandates the State to provide training on the rights of persons with disabilities to judicial personnel. To implement these protections, the CNJ issued Resolution No. 401 of 2021, which governs accessibility within the judiciary and the availability of assistive technology.<sup>295</sup>

411. The Commission commends the public policies implemented by the State, which encompass a series of actions aimed at guaranteeing equality before the law for persons with disabilities, as well as acknowledging the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities as an instrument with constitutional status. Based on the foregoing and on the information reported on the LBI and its implementation, the Commission concludes that the recommendation has reached full compliance. As a result, the Commission will cease its follow-up as of next year.

Recommendation No. 52. Eliminate laws, regulations, and practices that discriminate against persons with disabilities, including in connection with healthcare and, in particular, with respect to medical treatment.

412. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that it had reviewed and enhanced the Care Network for Persons with Disabilities (RCPD), and that it had updated the National Health Policy on Persons with Disabilities to incorporate an intersectional approach. The State also highlighted the 2015 Statute on Persons with Disabilities, which defines discrimination based on disability and classifies discriminatory acts as criminal offenses. The Commission welcomed this progress, considered that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial and suggested that the State should continue revising and updating legislation to eliminate discriminatory provisions and fully guarantee the rights of persons with disabilities.<sup>296</sup>

413. In 2024, the State reported that the RCPD, established by the Ministry of Health in 2012, seeks to create and expand SUS care facilities for persons with disabilities. This network operates in coordination with Basic Care, the Psychosocial Care Network and the SUAS to offer outpatient services nationwide. In 2023, GM/MS Regulation No. 1526 introduced updates and increased federal financial incentives by 25- 35 percent for the funding of Specialized Rehabilitation Centers (CERs) and Orthopedic Offices and Dental Specialty Centers (CEOs). Furthermore, additional resources were allocated to adapted medical transportation, and the budget for CERs serving individuals with autism spectrum disorder (ASD) was increased by 20 percent. The network comprises 309 CERs and 51 orthopedic offices, and 30 new CERs and 23 additional orthopedic offices are expected to be set up across 24 states, the progress of which can be monitored through the government portal.<sup>297</sup>

414. The State added that the National Policy on Comprehensive Healthcare for Persons with Disabilities (PNAISPD), updated in October 2023, seeks to improve the health and quality of life of persons with disabilities through the SUS. This policy focuses on expanding access to comprehensive care and fostering social inclusion under a biopsychosocial approach. It is implemented under the coordination of care networks, particularly in primary care, and includes the provision of assistive technologies and rehabilitation services to promote accessibility and community participation. The expansion of the RCPD is facilitating the gradual implementation of this policy nationwide, thus strengthening cross-sectoral coordination and integrating actions at the territorial level.<sup>298</sup>

415. In turn, civil society organizations claimed that thousands of persons with disabilities in Brazil spend their lives in institutional settings, such as hospitals or inclusive residences. While these environments vary, they are reportedly detrimental to individuals, inasmuch as these facilities keep them apart from their families, thus limiting personal autonomy and confining them to depersonalized and overcrowded centers. Civil society organizations claimed that the Viver sem Limite II plan, launched in 2023, fails to address pathways for deinstitutionalization or provide alternatives for independent living within the community. Although inclusive residences are reportedly in better conditions than large institutions, they still impose restrictions on the autonomy of residents. Furthermore, civil society organizations called on the State to evaluate existing institutional arrangements and to develop community-based services aimed at promoting the independence of persons with disabilities, in line with the recommendations of the United Nations Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.<sup>299</sup>

416. Based on the information submitted by the State, the current legislation aims to adopt a differentiated approach by means of affirmative measures even within the health sector. However, the Commission observes that, according to civil society organizations, persons with disabilities continue to face institutionalization processes, even though international standards call for mechanisms that guarantee a social model of inclusion for these individuals.

417. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that the laws in place seek to prevent discrimination and provide for significant affirmative actions targeted at this group. Accordingly, it concludes that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

418. To guide full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to provide information on any laws or policies implemented to ensure institutional reception models and guarantee non-discrimination and the full exercise of the rights of institutionalized persons with disabilities.

Recommendation No. 53. Adopt measures designed to guarantee the right of persons with disabilities to the highest possible state of health, on an equal footing with other people, eliminating any barriers that prevent or obstruct access to health information, services, and assets.

419. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about the creation of a working group to implement the Standardized Biopsychosocial Disability Assessment under a comprehensive and participatory approach. The State also highlighted the training of health professionals, the expansion of SUS services, the improvement of regulatory aspects associated with the RCPD, the revision of the National Health Policy and the joint efforts under the Viver sem Limite II plan. The Commission acknowledged this progress, considered that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial and suggested that the State should continue adopting specific measures to ensure that persons with disabilities can access health services on an equal footing with other people.<sup>300</sup>

420. In 2024, the State reported that the interministerial working group established in 2023 was tasked with developing a proposal for a standardized biopsychosocial disability assessment in Brazil. This model moves beyond the traditional medical approach by understanding disability as the result of the interaction between individual limitations and social and environmental barriers, in line with the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the LBI. The working group's final report outlines a detailed methodology for implementing this unified assessment, with recommendations for an inclusive, accessible and transparent process. The working group was made of representatives from various ministries, specialists and members of the civil society, and its discussions were open and broadcasted live to ensure transparency and foster broad social participation.<sup>301</sup>

421. In addition, the State informed that the aforementioned final report underscored the importance of the standardized biopsychosocial assessment in ensuring equal access to public policies for persons with disabilities in Brazil by acknowledging disability as the interaction between health conditions, personal factors and social barriers. The report suggests that the Modified Brazilian Functionality Instrument (IFBrM) should be used as the official evaluation tool and that the National Disability Evaluation System (SISNADEF) should be created to manage the evaluation process at the national level. The report also recommends training interdisciplinary teams, revising regulations, developing monitoring indicators, implementing an accessible communication plan and creating a National Managing Committee to oversee and coordinate the SISNADEF.<sup>302</sup>

422. Furthermore, the State indicated that the adoption of the Standardized Biopsychosocial Disability Assessment was still under study so as to determine its financial and social impact. In addition, a technical cooperation agreement was entered into between various ministries, and a protocol of intentions was signed with the IPEA to analyze the budgetary impact and to design an implementation strategy. An agreement with the MDA was also reached to coordinate cross-sectoral actions within the National Care Policy. Finally, a series of collaborations were established with the states of Bahia and Piauí to conduct implementation studies and train evaluators.<sup>303</sup>

423. The State added that it continues to provide training to RCPD managers and health professionals by means of on-site monitoring and free courses available on the UMA-SUS and AVA-SUS educational platforms. The State is also developing a specialist course in cooperation with Fiocruz, as well as a prosthetics and orthotics technician course. As for the services available, 86 new construction projects have been approved since 2023, which require an investment of over 421 million Brazilian reais and significant budget increases compared to previous years. The State finally reported that the revision of the National Health Policy for Persons with Disabilities had been completed with the updates on regulations issued in 2023.<sup>304</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

424. The Commission notes that some of the measures reported by the State are in the development and implementation phases. While the information submitted by the State demonstrates progress in adopting measures to guarantee the right to health of persons with disabilities, certain actions have yet to be developed. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

425. The Commission invites the State to continue taking steps to adopt and strengthen the reported measures and to provide information that shows their full implementation.

Recommendation No. 54. Put a stop to all coercive practices, guaranteeing the free and informed consent of persons with disabilities to the medical care they receive, and provide them with any support they need to make decisions, including mental healthcare.

426. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted its commitment to the reparation measures ordered by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Ximenes-Lopes v. Brazil and underscored the allocation of resources to strengthen the Psychosocial Care Network and resume the National Health Conferences. The State reported on the implementation of the Human Rights and Mental Health Training Program and the establishment of policies against institutional settings for persons with disabilities, as required by CNJ's Resolution No. 487 of 2023. The Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial and suggested that the State should continue implementing measures to ensure informed consent and tailored support in medical and mental healthcare.

427. In 2024, the State reported that it ensured free and informed consent in medical services for persons with disabilities within the framework of the LBI of 2015, based on the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. In addition, according to the State, the MDHC operates the Disque 100 helpline to receive complaints of human rights violations. Regarding the Psychosocial Care Network, the State informed that services had been expanded and funding had been increased from 1.567 billion Brazilian reais in 2021 to 2.117 billion Brazilian reais in 2024. The State also extended the scope of the De Volta pra Casa (Return home) program, which supports the psychosocial rehabilitation of individuals with a history of prolonged hospitalization, thus fostering personal autonomy and the right to live in freedom. Furthermore, the Ministry of Health established the Mental Health Department to strengthen human rights in this area, and the SESAI/MS provides psychosocial care to indigenous populations by introducing traditional practices to address issues such as suicide and substance abuse in these communities.<sup>305</sup>

428. Moreover, the State emphasized that the working group tasked with revising the Standardized Biopsychosocial Disability Assessment completed its work in May 2024, and that this revision will have an impact on the mental health assessment model, which will shift away from the predominant biomedical/psychiatric model. The MDHC is holding a technical roundtable on public policies and psychosocial disability to build consensus on mental health policies that address the emerging needs of recent years, particularly those concerning people with ASD and deinstitutionalization, in accordance with CNJ's Resolution No. 487.<sup>306</sup>

429. The Commission commends the actions reported by the State but notes that these are focused on rehabilitation, budget increases and evaluation mechanisms for existing measures. The State did not provide information on any specific actions to ensure the free and informed consent of persons with disabilities in medical care by means of decision-making support systems, including mental healthcare services. While the reported measures have a positive impact on the rights of persons with disabilities, the Commission does not have sufficient information to confirm the implementation of support systems for this population. Therefore, compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

430. To advance compliance with this recommendation, the State should provide information on the actions implemented to ensure the availability of support systems for persons with disabilities. In this regard, the Commission encourages the State to explain how the operation of these systems is guaranteed in practice, beyond the scope of the LBI.

Recommendation No. 55. Guarantee the rights of persons with disabilities to sexual and reproductive healthcare, especially as regards consent, privacy, and protection against cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment.

431. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State made reference to the Viver sem Limite II plan, which provides for the installation of accessible equipment in primary and specialized care, such as gynecological examination tables and breast examination equipment. The State also focused on reducing barriers and violence against persons with disabilities through training targeted at healthcare professionals. However, the Commission considered that it had not received sufficient information on measures to ensure informed consent in sexual and reproductive health services, the right to privacy and protection against cruel treatment. Therefore, it found that compliance with this recommendation remained pending and requested additional information on these specific issues.<sup>307</sup>

Information on compliance

432. In 2024, the State reported that the Brazilian Law on the Inclusion of Persons with Disabilities (Law No. 13,146 of 2015) guarantees the full exercise of the rights of persons with disabilities as regards access to sexual and reproductive healthcare. This law also protects persons with disabilities from cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment in these contexts and establishes that cases involving violence must be reported to the competent authorities. The State also informed that the right of persons with disabilities to privacy and confidentiality in sexual and reproductive health services is protected by both this law and the General Law on the Protection of Personal Data (LGPD, Law No. 13,709 of 2018).<sup>308</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

433. The Commission considers that the enactment of the Brazilian Law on the Inclusion of Persons with Disabilities represents a significant step towards ensuring the rights of this population in Brazil. However, it emphasizes that the mere enactment of a specialized law does not necessarily guarantee the protection of and respect for the human rights enshrined therein. In this regard, the Commission notes that, while the State reported on the content of this law, it did not detail how its application is ensured in practice through specific measures, particularly with regard to sexual and reproductive rights. Consequently, the Commission determines that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

434. The Commission invites the State to report on the enforcement of the Brazilian Law on the Inclusion of Persons with Disabilities and on the measures adopted to ensure its effective application, particularly as regards the guarantee of sexual and reproductive healthcare for persons with disabilities, protecting their privacy and contemplating consent.

Recommendation No. 56. Take steps to ensure that persons with disabilities have access to justice on an equal footing with others, by eliminating discriminatory practices, removing obstacles of any kind, and making reasonable adjustments to facilitate access.

435. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State announced the resumption of municipal, state and national conferences on the rights of persons with disabilities after a seven-year hiatus. It also highlighted CNJ's Resolution No. 401 of 2021, which establishes guidelines on access to justice, and Resolution No. 487 of 2023, which introduces a policy against institutionalization measures for detained persons with psychosocial disabilities, in line with the jurisprudence of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and international conventions. The Commission welcomed these measures as a step towards inclusive justice and requested additional information regarding the implementation of these resolutions and the Committee for Persons with Disabilities.<sup>309</sup>

436. In 2024, the State reported that Articles 79 to 87 of the Brazilian Law on the Inclusion of Persons with Disabilities (Law No. 13,146 of 2015) ensure effective and equal access to justice for persons with disabilities. In addition, following municipal, state and district conferences, the Fifth National Conference on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities was held between July 14 and July 17, 2024, whose central theme was “Current and Future Scenarios in the Implementation of the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.”<sup>310</sup>

437. Furthermore, the State referred to the significant progress made in the implementation of the Judiciary Policy Against Institutionalization Measures following the issuance of CNJ’s Resolution No. 487/2023. Achievements under this policy include the signing of a protocol of intent with the Ministry of Health for interinstitutional cooperation, the publication of an explanatory manual to guide its application and the creation of an informative page on the CNJ’s website. In addition, 29 committees or working groups have been established across 25 states to monitor implementation, and 15 states have prohibited new admissions to custodial psychiatric hospitals. Since the resolution was passed, 1,410 persons have been released from institutional settings, reintegrated into their family environment or granted access to housing and social support services. Moreover, the number of Therapeutic Measures Evaluation and Monitoring Teams (EAP) has increased from 9 to 22 in 16 states. At the federal level, the National Interinstitutional Committee (CONIMPA) developed a protocol to coordinate cross-sectoral actions and services to strengthen policy implementation in collaboration with the executive branch.<sup>311</sup>

438. Finally, the State reported that CNJ’s Resolution No. 401 of 2021 sets out guidelines to ensure accessibility and inclusion for persons with disabilities in the judiciary and regulates the operation of accessibility and inclusion units. According to the CUMPRIDEC’s monitoring procedure, in 2022, 75 out of the 91 national courts (approximately 80 percent) partially complied with the resolution. However, the report noted that 13 courts failed to provide information and that three submitted insufficient data.<sup>312</sup>

439. The Commission commends the public policies designed to guarantee equality before the law for persons with disabilities. Similarly, it considers that encouraging the discontinuation of institutionalization processes is a positive step towards ensuring the rights of persons with disabilities under a social model approach. Notwithstanding that, this recommendation specifically addresses the need to provide reasonable accommodations to ensure access to justice. In this regard, even though the State reported on CNJ’s Resolution No. 401 of 2021, which lays down guidelines to ensure accessibility and inclusion for persons with disabilities in the judiciary, it did not provide information on any specific measures and/or reasonable accommodations implemented in compliance with these guidelines. Therefore, the Commission concludes that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

440. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission reiterates its invitation to the State to continue providing information on the measures adopted to guarantee and strengthen access to justice for persons with disabilities in Brazil. In this regard, the Commission encourages the State to specify the measures effectively implemented under the aforementioned resolutions and to report on the progress achieved in creating the committee.

K. Persons deprived of liberty

Recommendation No. 57. Adopt judicial, legislative, and administrative measures to reduce overcrowding and use pretrial detention in accordance with the principles of exceptionality, legality, proportionality, and necessity. Above all, promote the application of alternatives to incarceration, by embracing a gender perspective and differentiated approaches. In particular, the State must do whatever it takes to ensure that the Federal Supreme Court's decision on house arrest with a gender perspective is actually implemented in all states.

441. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported several initiatives to improve the prison system, including the Fazendo Justiça (Administering justice) program, aimed at streamlining the process of entry to and exit from the prison system and holding custody hearings within 24 hours. Also, a methodology was developed to manage prison occupation and promote alternative measures to incarceration based on restorative justice. Despite these efforts, the Commission found that the prison population remained on the rise, with an insufficient number of vacancies and high imprisonment rates for Afro-descendants, and it expressed its concern over outdated and disaggregated data on vulnerable groups. Consequently, the Commission considered that compliance with this recommendation was partial and urged the State to take alternative measures to prison, improve overcrowding management and collect more accurate data on -prison population.<sup>313</sup>

Information on compliance

442. In 2024, as part of the measures to reduce overcrowding in Brazilian prisons, the State informed that the General Directorate of Citizenship and Alternative Measures to Prison, under the MJSP, invested over 36 million Brazilian reais in several states to implement policies related to alternative measures to incarceration, assist people leaving the prison system and electronically monitor them, and provide the service of Assistance to Persons under Custody (APEC). Furthermore, the State emphasized that the above-mentioned office published a public call for proposals to secure financial support, through the National Penitentiary Fund, to hire or expand multidisciplinary teams working on the Electronic Monitoring of People Policy in the states of Amazonas, Bahía, Ceará, Paraíba, Roraima, Santa Catarina and Sergipe in 2024.<sup>314</sup>

443. The National Coordination of Penal Alternatives works on reducing mass incarceration through the APEC (Penal Alternatives and Social Reintegration Support) and the Integrated Penal Alternatives Centers (CIAP). APEC operates during the entry phase into the penitentiary system, with a multidisciplinary team that assists individuals before and after the custody hearing, ensuring emergency care, guidance, and referral for those presenting vulnerabilities. Additionally, it provides reports to support the judiciary's decisions regarding pretrial detention or provisional release. In this context, custody hearings, implemented in 2015, aim to guarantee fundamental rights and judicial oversight of the legality of detention, ensuring that the detained individual is presented before a judge within 24 hours. APEC strengthens this protection by offering assistance throughout the process, contributing to the reduction of mass incarceration and promoting the application of alternative precautionary measures. Furthermore, in response to overcrowding in Brazilian prisons (642,491 prisoners in the second half of 2023), CIAP monitors the implementation of alternatives to imprisonment, promoting accountability and addressing the social vulnerabilities of those under such measures. Following the ADPF 347 of the Supreme Federal Court (STF), which recognized the structural crisis in the penitentiary system, these initiatives seek to consolidate the custody hearing as an essential mechanism to assess the real need for incarceration, ensuring proportional decisions while considering the social circumstances of the detained individual.<sup>315</sup>

444. In addition, the State pointed out that it took measures to avoid discrimination and ensure equal treatment, adopting a gender-sensitive approach to alternative measures to prison. The State explained that the Code of Criminal Procedure provides for house arrest in specific cases, such as those involving people older than 80 years of age, people with a serious illness, pregnant women, or people responsible for taking care of children under 6 years of age or people with disabilities. The State added that the pretrial detention of pregnant women or mothers of children or people with disabilities may turn into a house arrest, provided they have not committed violent crimes or crimes against their children. These provisions are backed by a collective habeas corpus granted by the STF of 2018, which allows for exceptions in “extraordinary” cases.<sup>316</sup>

445. The State also reported that, in 2024, the Fazenda Justiça program, a collaboration between the CNJ and the UNDP, moved forward in several areas to transform the criminal justice system and the socioeducational system. As for proportionality in the criminal justice system, the State launched the Vacancy Control Center in Maranhão and took significant steps forward in other states. Custody services were put in place in 24 states and an international conference on electronic monitoring was held with 1,400 attendees. In terms of citizenship, the State reported that community councils were strengthened and that 30 new social offices were opened, providing assistance to over 27,000 people that have left the prison system and to their families. Also, 17,000 persons deprived of liberty were identified, and over 10,000 IDs were issued.<sup>317</sup>

446. As for the socioeducational system, the State explained that inspection methodologies were implemented, manuals were prepared and vacancy centers were set up in seven states, with 400 inspections every two months and 450 registered units in the national system. The program undertook cross-cutting actions, such as a joint effort in the criminal justice field, resulting in 21,000 releases, and a mental health seminar with 1,900 registrations and 12,300 views. Furthermore, the State reported that 10 states now provide institutional support to victims in the judiciary.<sup>318</sup>

447. Finally, the State indicated that the penitentiary system uses the Information System of the National Penitentiary Department (SISDEPEN) to collect detailed and updated data on prison population, thus observing Law No. 12,714 of 2012. This tool gathers information every six months on penitentiary facilities and the situation of prisoners, and classifies data using an intersectional approach, considering factors such as race, nationality and marital status. In 2023, specific variables were mapped, for example, of women who were pregnant or had children in prison, and of LGBTQIA+ persons deprived of liberty. In addition, penitentiary units keep records of women with children, pregnant women, elder women, women with chronic diseases and persons with disabilities. This information is vital to design more effective public policies tailored to the needs of vulnerable groups.<sup>319</sup>

448. In turn, the DPE/SP emphasized that no measures were reportedly adopted to reduce overcrowding in Brazilian prisons. In this regard, it stated that the prison population in Brazil has allegedly reached 850,000 people, which translates into a deficit of over 155,000 vacancies in the penitentiary system. According to said office, in São Paulo, the number of incarcerated people soared between 2023 and 2024, and the prison population rose by 5,170 as of October 2024, which represents an increase nearly three times higher than the previous year. Furthermore, the DPE/SP reported that the new Law No. 14,843 of 2024 requires mandatory criminological examinations for the application of a progressive prison regime, which results in more delays and an overburden of the technical staff, thus restricting their ability to offer psychosocial support and hindering the reintegration of persons deprived of liberty. Furthermore, São Paulo has yet to implement a vacancy regulation center to manage occupation in the penitentiary system.<sup>320</sup>

449. The DPE/SP added that, while the law sets out that pretrial detention should be an exceptional measure, it is a widespread practice in the Brazilian penitentiary system. About 30 percent of incarcerated persons are subject to pretrial detention, that is, without a final sentence. In addition, it stated that the judiciary tends to justify the use of pretrial detention using generic arguments, such as the seriousness of the crime and the risk to public order, without considering the actual case at hand.<sup>321</sup>

450. According to the DPE/SP, 55 percent of incarcerated persons are allegedly detained for crimes that do not involve violence or constitute a serious threat, which suggests a limited use of alternative measures to prison. While other options are provided by law, such as restrictive punishment, house arrest or early release, they are not effectively applied due to resistance from the judiciary and the absence of regulations. The wider use of electronic ankle bracelets, as provided for by Law No. 14,843/2024, has allegedly increased control over individuals serving time outside of prison facilities, hindering their reintegration into society and the labor market, and turning such device into an extension of prison, rather than an alternative to it.<sup>322</sup>

451. Finally, the Public Defender's Office of the state of São Paulo indicated that, despite the order issued by the STF in 2018 and the provisions of Law No. 13,769 of 2018 —which provides for house arrest for pregnant women or women with children under 12 years old in the case of nonviolent crimes—, the women's prison population continues to grow. In São Paulo, the 2022/2023 annual report on the Policy for Assistance to Mothers in Prison shows that 70.3 percent of assisted women have children under 12 years of age. The absence of national regulations on the flow of information about maternity among inmates makes it difficult to apply these measures. In this regard, the Public Defender's Office of the state of São Paulo considers it essential to issue a resolution that formalizes communication between prisons, offices of public defenders and the judiciary.<sup>323</sup>

452. Furthermore, civil society organizations explained to the Commission that the Brazilian State has yet to take effective measures that reduce overcrowding in penitentiaries and improve conditions in the units to guarantee basic rights. Pretrial detention is still applied indiscriminately and, while the percentage of pretrial detainees slightly decreased from 25.3 percent in 2022 to 24.5 percent in 2023, it is still alarmingly high, amounting to 208,882 people. In addition, according to these organizations, the framework for early childhood protection remains allegedly ignored, with pregnant women and mothers subject to pretrial detention. Currently, there are 26,876 women deprived of liberty, out of which 16,359 are Afro-descendants and 82 are indigenous. Among them, 230 are pregnant or in labor and 103 are breastfeeding, with 99 children living with their mothers in prison. Civil society organizations stated, however, that the CNJ allegedly recognizes that, since 2015, the number of prisons that have failed to report data on pregnant and breastfeeding mothers has increased, which shows that no assistance is provided to this group and which restricts the effective monitoring of the application of the framework for early childhood protection.<sup>324</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

453. The Commission appreciates the information provided by the State and notes that the actions reported indicate that the issues related to the justice system and measures alternative to deprivation of liberty are being addressed. These measures, overall, may represent a step forward in the reduction of overcrowding in Brazilian penitentiaries. In particular, the IACHR highlights measures to reduce overcrowding in prisons, through the allocation of over R$ 36 million to policies for alternative penalties, electronic monitoring, and care for detainees through the APEC program. It also emphasizes the push for the hiring of multidisciplinary teams to strengthen electronic monitoring in various states and has promoted the application of alternative sanctions through the CIAP. Furthermore, it values the State's implementation of house arrest measures for individuals in vulnerable situations, such as pregnant women and seriously ill persons. In the same vein, it commends the collaboration between the CNJ and the UNDP to advance the Fazendo Justiça Program, strengthening the social reintegration of former inmates and improving access to documentation and legal assistance. Additionally, the use of SISDEPEN enables more detailed data collection to design effective public policies tailored to the needs of the penitentiary population.

454. However, the Commission places on record that the information reported by the DPE/SP and civil society organizations suggests that, based on hard data on this topic, overcrowding is still on the rise. In this regard, the Inter-American Commission believes the State needs to reinforce these measures and step up its efforts so that they translate into a decrease in overcrowding in practice. In the meantime, the Commission considers that the level of compliance with this recommendation continues to be partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

455. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission prompts the State to reinforce the application of measures other than prison, comprehensively incorporating a gender perspective and differentiated approaches, as well as to take effective measures to reduce prison overcrowding, including a revision of incarceration policies and the promotion of restorative justice. The Commission would like to recall that putting mechanisms in place to gather accurate, updated and disaggregated data on prison population is of the essence, with a particular focus on intersectionality, ensuring reliability and consistency across the country. In addition, the Commission observes the need to revise and reform policies and practices that result in discrimination based on race, as well as other forms of discrimination, in the criminal justice system. Finally, the Commission reminds the State of the importance of ensuring the effective enforcement of the STF ruling on house arrest with a gender perspective across Brazilian states.

Recommendation No. 58. Devise a drug policy with a social reintegration and public health approach, in such a way as to eschew repressive and criminalizing treatment of persons arrested for using or carrying drugs, or who have committed minor offenses due to their problematic use of, or addiction to, drugs.

456. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State failed to provide specific information on compliance with this recommendation concerning its drug policy. However, according to reports by the State Mechanism to Prevent and Combat Torture in Rio de Janeiro (MECPT/RJ), in that region, over 30 percent of cases involving women detained at custody hearings were related to the Law on Drugs, while 40 percent of pretrial detentions derived from this policy. Despite the creation of the National Plan on Drug Policies (PLANAD), which constitutes a positive step towards a more comprehensive drug policy, the lack of specific information led the Commission to determine that this recommendation had been partially complied with. Furthermore, the Commission urged the State to fully implement the PLANAD, with a focus on the social reinsertion of drug users, and to provide up-to-date, transparent information on all measures taken and their impact.<sup>325</sup>

457. In 2024, the State informed that the PLANAD sought to implement comprehensive policies for drug prevention and treatment, covering both legal and illegal drugs, within a five-year framework of action. Its main purpose is to effectively enforce the National Drug Policy (PNAD) by designing an interdisciplinary plan to address demand, supply and policy management. Since its inception in 2020, the PLANAD has taken some steps forward, which include making a national diagnosis and holding public consultations to adjust its proposal. The plan centers around prevention, treatment, social reinsertion and supply reduction, supported by research and assessment, as well as governance integration. The plan was approved in 2021 and submitted to public consultation to ensure social participation in its development. The contributions, suggestions and criticism made to the first draft of the PLANAD, as well as its diagnosis, were analyzed by the Executive Secretariat of the National Council on Drug Policy (CONAD), giving rise to a second version.<sup>326</sup>

458. The State added that the 2022-2027 PLANAD was approved in September 2022 by the CONAD and that it sets 10 strategic goals with specific objectives, initiatives and commitments. These objectives include prevention in the use of alcohol, tobacco and other drugs; integration of care and reinsertion policies; the strengthening of law enforcement institutions and the promotion of innovation projects; and better regulations, statistics and governance in connection with drugs. In 2024, the PLANAD is under review, with a new methodology for its updating that has already been approved by the Drug Policy Commission of the CONAD.<sup>327</sup>

459. Finally, the State emphasized that Chapter 3 and the Methodology Guide of the PLANAD provide for enforcement, monitoring and assessment mechanisms designed to measure the scope of objectives, compliance with instructions and implementation of initiatives, as well as to analyze government action in terms of economy, efficiency, efficacy and effectiveness. However, as the plan is still under review, no specific results have been identified so far.<sup>328</sup>

460. In addition to the PLANAD, the Federal Government has adopted a multifaceted approach to address issues related to alcohol and other drugs. Through strategic partnerships, professional training, prevention policies, harm reduction, and participation in international forums, the goal is to mitigate the effects of substance use and promote a culture of prevention and social responsibility. The National Secretariat for Drug Policies (SENAD) has implemented three priority strategies: ensuring access to rights for women, mitigating the impacts of drug trafficking in Indigenous territories, and securing rights for the Black and peripheral populations. In 2024, the CRIA Program was launched, focusing on preventing problematic drug use in children and adolescents, as well as the GENTE project, which promotes territorial prevention actions. Additionally, programs such as ATITUDE in Pernambuco and Corra pro Abraço in Bahia have been implemented to promote the social reintegration of individuals with substance use issues. With an investment of R$ 22 million in 2024, the PRONASCI Youth Project works on preventing violence linked to the illegal drug market, focusing on young people in Rio de Janeiro and Salvador.<sup>329</sup>

461. At the international level, the State has formed an alliance with the UN to develop protection strategies for children and adolescents against violence, drugs, and crime. In the environmental policy sphere, the Center for Studies on Drugs and Community Social Development (Cdesc) was launched to research drug trafficking and its impacts on the Amazon region. Furthermore, the Brazilian Observatory for Drug Information (OBID) was restructured in 2024 to collect essential data on drug use and improve monitoring of public policies. In 2025, efforts are planned to expand with new prevention projects, expanded access to rights centers, and social inclusion actions for vulnerable populations.<sup>330</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

462. The Commission appreciates the progress made in implementing the PLANAD, which is a step forward in the redirection of the drug abuse strategy towards a public health approach. However, the information available suggests that the PLANAD is still under review. Also, launching a plan on the subject does not in itself ensure that the goals under the PLANAD and the recommendation addressed herein are met. Therefore, the State needs to supplement the plan with other measures that ensure its effectiveness and durability. The Commission also commends the priority strategies implemented by SENAD regarding the impact of drugs on women, Indigenous peoples, and Black and peripheral populations. Additionally, the CRIA Program and the GENTE Project, which focus on preventing problematic drug use, are also deemed very important.

463. All the reported measures are relevant for fulfilling the recommendation; however, since the review of PLANAD has not yet been completed and the indicated strategies and policies are in the initial stages of implementation, the IACHR maintains the recommendation with partial compliance.

<sup>330</sup> State of Brazil, Note No. 30 of February 7, 2025. Comments on the draft report.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

464. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission urges the State to guarantee the full implementation of the PLANAD, with a special focus on the social reinsertion of users of alcohol and other drugs. In addition, the Commission highlights the importance of providing transparent, up-to-date information on the actions and measures taken under such public policy, as well as on their impact on the affected population.

Recommendation No. 59. Guarantee dignified treatment of persons in State custody, in accordance with deprivation of liberty standards and bearing in mind the special risks associated with gender or other characteristics of the detained population. In particular, the State must incorporate a gender perspective to ensure prison treatment meets women’s specific health, gender identity, and social reinsertion needs.

465. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported that the CNJ regulates penitentiary inspections through the Fazenda Justiça program, in accordance with Resolution No. 414 of 2021, which sets guidelines for the investigation of torture following the Istanbul Protocol. The State added that inspection results are consolidated in the National Registry of Prison Facility Inspections (CNIEP). Furthermore, the State informed about a policy designed to reinforce citizen participation in the criminal system and protect the rights of inmates, although it did not provide updated data on the implementation of these policies. The Commission acknowledged the progress achieved in terms of supervision and prevention of torture, but it also pointed to the lack of detailed information on the enforcement and effectiveness of such policies. In addition, the Commission considered that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with and required the State to strengthen CNIEP capacities, provide specific data on detention policies and consolidate the Mandela Project to address unconstitutional conditions in penitentiary facilities.<sup>331</sup>

466. In 2024, the State reported that it has implemented actions to ensure dignified treatment for people in custody, including the adoption of the RNR methodology (risk, need, and responsiveness) for classification and individualization of sentences. This approach, recommended by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and used in various countries, is being applied in four states (Rondônia, Rio Grande do Norte, Paraíba, Pernambuco, and Amapá) and will be expanded to eight more states by 2026. The Classification Technical Committee plays a key role in this process, developing personalized reintegration programs and evaluating the adaptation of individuals deprived of liberty to the limitations of the prison system.<sup>332</sup>

467. The State also reported that it undertook several actions to guarantee a dignified treatment towards persons in custody, in accordance with international standards. Those actions included the creation of the MNPCT in 2013, under which regular visits to detention centers are conducted to prevent torture and ill-treatment. Together with the National Committee to Prevent and Combat Torture (CNPCT), these agencies make up a national system in charge of monitoring and improving conditions in places of deprivation of liberty.<sup>333</sup>

468. The State added that reforms were introduced into the penitentiary system, such as the construction of new prison facilities, a wider use of alternative measures like electronic ankle bracelets and the holding of custody hearings, which allow detainees to appear before court within 24 hours. Other initiatives include the National Pact against Human Rights Violations in the Prison System and the National Plan of Criminal Justice and Penitentiary Policy, which seek to humanize the treatment afforded to persons deprived of liberty. Furthermore, a public call by the MJSP has been recently released to improve APEC across several states, which will be funded with resources from the National Penitentiary Fund.<sup>334</sup>

469. Moreover, the State emphasized that it took several measures to incorporate a gender perspective into the penitentiary system by addressing the specific needs of women in terms of health, gender identity and social reintegration, in line with the Bangkok Rules. The 2014 National Policy of Attention to Women Deprived of Liberty and Released from the Prison System (PNAMPE) guarantees access to healthcare, education programs, professional training and social reintegration. For pregnant women, Law No. 13,769 of 2018 allows pregnant and breastfeeding women, as well as mothers of children under 12 years of age, to be under house arrest, thus preserving the family bond and preventing newborns from growing up in jail. Also, mother-child units have been created in some penitentiaries, providing adequate healthcare conditions for both the mother and the child. Resolution No. 3 of 2019 by the CNJ ensures that trans women are placed in prison considering their gender identity, and training programs have been put in place to contribute to women's reintegration into the labor market, in which the specific context of women's criminal activities is addressed.<sup>335</sup>

470. The State added that a digital collection titled Vulnerabilidade em Pauta was published, with guides on custody procedures involving vulnerable groups deprived of liberty, such as women, indigenous persons, foreign people, persons with disabilities and the LGBTQIA+ population. The guide includes recommendations for the custody of trans women and trans men, and covers issues like health, gender identity and social reintegration into the prison system. In addition, a project on menstrual health was implemented in prisons across Brazil after the enactment of Law No. 14,214 of 2021, ensuring access to menstrual hygiene products. This program includes the setting up of factories to manufacture pads and diapers within the framework of the project Menstrual Dignity for Persons in a Situation of Vulnerability (PROCAP). The products are subsequently distributed among individuals deprived of liberty, their families and penitentiary personnel. All states have received equipment to produce these items, prioritizing installation in women's prisons to foster employment among incarcerated women.<sup>336</sup>

471. The State also informed that, in connection with maternity experiences in penitentiaries, Law No. 13,257 of 2016 —the Early Childhood Legal Framework— provides that policies and services to protect the comprehensive development of children up to 6 years of age should be guaranteed. In situations where pretrial detention is not replaced with house arrest, prison management must facilitate coexistence between mothers and their children in a specific space, isolated from other inmates, preferably near social or psychosocial services. The State added that it pays special attention to the strengthening of the mother-child bond, the duration of the child's stay in the unit and the preparation for transition to foster care. In addition, the State advises prison management to guarantee incarcerated women's right to breastfeed their child for at least six months and to keep social or psychosocial assistance available in cooperation with the Court of Childhood and Youth, the Guardianship Council, the Court of Criminal Enforcement and the relevant state's Public Defender's Office. The State pointed out that, during this six-month period, breastfeeding should not be interrupted. According to the State, this information is included in the procedure booklet on the custody of trans women and trans men in the prison system, and its observance is monitored by the National Secretariat of Criminal Policy.<sup>337</sup>

472. The State reported that the Mandela Project, which was announced in 2023 by the MDHC, was interrupted after an internal assessment revealed overlapping objectives with the National Plan to Combat the Unconstitutional State of Affairs in Brazilian Prisons, known as Pena Justa (Fair Punishment). In this regard, the State determined that the guidelines and goals included in the Mandela Project would be better addressed under the Pena Justa plan, whose purpose is to examine and improve the criminal justice system as well as the conditions under which sentences are enforced in Brazil. Thus, the State decided to focus all efforts and resources on the development and implementation of the latter plan.<sup>338</sup>

473. The State also reported that the National Health Coordination (COS) is responsible for the Citizenship Action, a project implemented since 2017 in penitentiary units to strengthen the health policy in the prison system. Its main objective is intersectoral coordination between federal, state, and municipal agencies, ensuring medical care for people deprived of liberty, with an emphasis on preventing prevalent diseases in the system, such as tuberculosis, viral hepatitis, and sexually transmitted infections. It also seeks to improve internal health flows in prisons and strengthen coordination between responsible entities, in line with the National Policy for Comprehensive Health Care for People Deprived of Liberty (PNAISP). To date, more than 15,000 medical consultations have been conducted in eight Brazilian states.<sup>339</sup>

474. The COS is part of the Healthy Brazil Program and is responsible for executing the Technical Cooperation Agreement with the Ministry of Health (MS) for the prevention and control of diseases such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and syphilis in prisons. Technical meetings are being held with states and municipalities to define strategies and ensure the adoption of prevention and control measures in the penitentiary system. Additionally, the COS is part of the National Interinstitutional Committee for the Implementation and Monitoring of the Judiciary's Anti-Institutionalization Policy, initially focusing on the deinstitutionalization of people in custodial hospitals. Its work includes evaluating the reintegration process of people with mental disorders in the judicial system and supporting the implementation of the policy in the states. The COS has developed technical notes on medical care in prisons, such as Technical Note No. 4/2024, which provides guidelines for the treatment of common dermatological conditions in the penitentiary population, aiming to improve the quality of care and prevent recurrent outbreaks.<sup>340</sup>

475. Furthermore, the COS promotes and oversees the transfer of resources to state penitentiary administrations through agreements and direct funds to improve healthcare for people deprived of liberty, including women in prison. Existing agreements amount to nearly R$ 12 million, of which nearly R$ 6 million have already been executed, benefiting approximately 157 penitentiary units with equipment, medical supplies, and the hiring of multidisciplinary teams.<sup>341</sup>

476. Finally, the State reported that the National Penitentiary Policies Secretariat (SENAPPEN), through the General Coordination (CGCAP) of the Penitentiary Policies Department (DIRPP), manages various policies for the population deprived of liberty in areas such as work, health, education, legal and religious assistance, and support for women and minorities. The National Coordination of Work (CONAT) promotes employment and income generation policies through the financing of the National Penitentiary Fund (FUNPEN). It has invested in productive workshops such as the manufacturing of concrete blocks and hygiene products. It also organized the VI National Seminar on Work in the Penitentiary System and developed the Resgata Seal, which encourages the hiring of people deprived of liberty and those released. Furthermore, it collaborates with the United Nations Development Program (PNUD) on labor inclusion strategies and professional training. Additionally, the National Coordination of Education, Culture, and Sports (COECE) promotes education in prison with state plans for 2025-2028, promoting literacy, education for youth and adults, vocational training, and access to libraries and cultural activities. It also finances sports materials and has donated technological equipment to strengthen teaching in penitentiary units.<sup>342</sup>

477. In turn, the DPE/SP pointed out that no measures were reportedly taken to ensure dignified treatment to persons under state custody, in accordance with international standards governing deprivation of liberty. Prisons are still overcrowded and in bad structural shape, with poor quality and insufficient food, water rationing, lack of basic supplies and inadequate healthcare. According to the DPE/SP, in a study, the CNJ classified deaths in prison that had derived from conditions of torture as "natural." The DPE/SP also stated that, in October 2023, the STF acknowledged the existence of massive violations of rights in the prison system and ordered the authorities to produce a plan to improve conditions within six months.<sup>343</sup>

478. Additionally, the DPE/SP emphasized that there were no specific guidelines governing the conditions of incarceration of women. Inspections conducted by the DPE/SP itself in state prisons revealed that women faced similar conditions to men's, with poor-quality food, lack of basic items and inadequate medical care. Plus, it reported that basic products such as shampoo and conditioner were not supplied, and that sanitary pads were insufficient, which resulted in an urgent appeal to the Commission.<sup>344</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

479. The Commission finds that the State implemented important measures whose primary objective was to ensure a dignified treatment towards persons deprived of liberty, including those that belong to a vulnerable group, such as women, trans persons, among others. However, the Commission highlights that some of these measures were already being implemented when the Country Report was published, where the problems that triggered this recommendation were recognized. Furthermore, the Commission notes with concern the information provided by the DPE/SP, an agency that inspects prisons in São Paulo, the state with the highest concentration of prisons in Brazil and, consequently, with the largest prison population. Based on the foregoing, the Commission determines that compliance with this recommendation continues to be partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

480. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission urges the State to continue reinforcing measures to ensure a dignified treatment towards people under its custody, with a special focus on people in vulnerable situations. This involves guaranteeing dignified access to food, water, sanitary products, medical care and safe spaces to receive visitors, among others. In addition, it is extremely urgent for the adopted measures to address overcrowding in prisons across the country, as this situation in itself constitutes a violation of international standards on human rights. The Commission invites the State to submit data related to these improvements, especially to the reduction of the prison population.

Recommendation No. 60. Facilitate channels through which persons deprived of liberty—including adolescents— can file complaints and reports on how they are treated in the centers without suffering reprisals for doing so. The complaints must be taken seriously and addressed quickly and effectively, making it possible to punish the parties responsible.

481. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that persons deprived of liberty had the right to request hearings with the prison warden to submit petitions or claims, and that courts were under a duty to inspect prisons on a monthly basis. The State added that the CNJ managed a public panel on inspections, consolidating all the information in a single database. The Commission acknowledged the efforts made by the State to ensure the submission of complaints, as well as the role of the CNJ in the consolidation of inspections. However, it emphasized the absence of concrete data on the implementation of and effective compliance with this recommendation. Therefore, the Commission considered that this recommendation was partially complied with and urged the State to improve access to these mechanisms and protection from retaliation for those who filed complaints, ensuring transparent and timely answers.<sup>345</sup>

Information on compliance

482. The State reported that it responded to complaints of torture and ill-treatment against persons deprived of liberty, including adolescents, under Resolution CNJ No. 414 of 2021, which provides guidelines on how to perform forensic examinations in cases that involve indicia of torture and other inhuman treatment, following the Istanbul Protocol. During hearings and other judicial proceedings in the criminal and juvenile jurisdictions, judges have a duty to investigate the conditions of detention and address possible signs of abuse. In addition, a channel to process complaints has been implemented through proceeding SEI 02345 of 2024 and compliance with the resolution is monitored. To protect complainants from retaliation, Protocol II of Resolution CNJ No. 213 of 2015 provides for security measures such as the transfer of custody and provisional release if the complainant's integrity is at risk. At socioeducational centers of custody, Resolution CNJ No. 77 of 2009 governs inspections in units for adolescents in conflict with the law and enables the recording of any indicia of abuse and violence by means of electronic forms.<sup>346</sup>

483. The State also indicated that the National Penitentiary Policies Secretariat (SENAPPEN) is developing strategies to address torture in the Brazilian penitentiary system. Recently, through the public call UNDP-BRA-00317, a diagnosis was conducted on the prevention of torture and degrading treatment in prisons, with the assistance of a specialized consultancy. The study resulted in the proposal of a pilot project in a specific penitentiary unit, aiming to implement concrete actions for the prevention and combating of torture. This project will serve as a model to assess the effectiveness of a collaborative strategy between penitentiary system institutions and civil society. The actions include the establishment of an interinstitutional network, training of staff in human rights, the creation of reporting protocols, and monitoring prison conditions, promoting a comprehensive approach for the protection of human rights in prisons.<sup>347</sup>

484. The State also highlighted that the National Council of the Public Ministry (CNMP) operates through the Prison System Commission, External Control of Police Activity and Public Security (CSP), a permanent commission that monitors the inspections carried out by the Public Ministry agents to identify human rights violations within penitentiary centers.<sup>348</sup>

485. According to the DPE/SP, there is no such specific channel to process claims and complaints made by persons deprived of liberty. While they are allowed to send letters, they often lack basic supplies and information on the recipient agencies. In addition, letters can be read and censored by state agents who are often the authorities against whom the complaints are filed. The DPE/SP explained that it is necessary to establish a safe, confidential channel for complaints and to protect their content from prison agents to avoid retaliation.<sup>349</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

486. The Commission values the information about the creation of a pilot project, resulting from a public call in collaboration with UNDP, aimed at preventing and combating torture through the establishment of collaborative strategies with civil society. This type of initiative has great potential to address structural issues related to torture and human rights violations in places of detention in the country. On the other hand, the Commission notes that the State reported information regarding ordinary mechanisms that are applied in the generality of cases, without making a distinction for those incidents where torture is alleged, which, in most cases, would point to a state authority as the probable perpetrator. In this sense, conducting judicial inspections and/or receiving complaints about events that may constitute torture would not guarantee a safe space for victims to file complaints without fear of reprisals.

487. Without overlooking the potential progress on the issue through new strategies for addressing it, the IACHR considers that this recommendation remains pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

488. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission urges the State to go further than merely pointing to the mechanisms available to file claims and complaints and to take measures that ease access to them by persons deprived of liberty, ensuring that these persons are protected from retaliation. In this regard, the Commission emphasizes the importance of having concrete data on these complaints and their processing. Furthermore, the Commission highlights the importance of giving a clear and timely response to the complaints filed, sanctioning those responsible and taking preventive measures to avoid future violations. Finally, the Inter-American Commission considers that the State needs to take into account the specific conditions of vulnerability faced by persons deprived of liberty and, based on that, design mechanisms that guarantee the reception of complaints in safe spaces, so that such complaints do not have a negative impact on the persons who file them. Finally, it invites the State to provide information on the results of the implementation of the pilot project for the prevention and combat of torture.

Recommendation No. 61. Immediately initiate, ex officio, effective investigations in accordance with the rules, so as to be able to identify, prosecute and punish those responsible.

489. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted the powers and duties of the DMF/CNJ, stating that these agencies had received complaints of irregularities in prison and socioeducational units, including complaints filed by victims and civil society organizations. The Commission, based on the Decarceration Platform, verified that 3,180 complaints had been filed in 236 prisons and 38 socioeducational units. In addition, the Commission recognized the efforts made by the State, considered that compliance with the recommendation was still pending in the absence of specific data, and urged the State to conduct further investigations and create a transparent system to follow up on complaints, with a special focus on vulnerable groups.<sup>350</sup>

490. In 2024, the State reported that it implemented a structured process to start ex officio investigations into acts of violence at detention centers. The State added that the DMF/CNJ receives complaints of torture and other forms of abuse in prison and socioeducational units, which can be submitted by persons deprived of liberty, their families, public defender's offices, the civil society and other actors.<sup>351</sup>

491. Based on the information provided, the process includes the reception, classification, analysis and distribution of complaints, the drafting of a specific record and a detailed follow-up by the advisory board of the CNJ. The State added that potential actions are decided on, and cases are assigned to auxiliary courts that issue the relevant decisions and recommendations. If local authorities fail to act properly, notices are sent to the judiciary and recommendations are shared with other institutions, while copies are forwarded to courts' internal auditing offices (corregedorias) for follow-up.<sup>352</sup>

492. Moreover, the DPE/SP informed that no specific actions were taken to start ex officio investigations into acts of violence at detention centers. Complaints normally reach the Public Defender's Office through families, persons released from prison and inspections. According to the DPE/SP, the Secretariat of Prison Administration does not show commitment to investigating these acts of violence. A significant factor is the regular operation and use of the Rapid Intervention Group (GIR), which, despite having been created to intervene during riots, has become a constant presence in penitentiaries and is frequently accused of committing acts of violence and torture. In 2018, the Public Prosecutor's Office filed a public civil action to regulate the GIR and, in 2022, a court ordered basic control measures, including the identification of agents, body cameras and human rights training. However, according to the DPE/SP, the state of São Paulo failed to implement these measures and filed an appeal against said court ruling.<sup>353</sup>

493. The DPE/SP added that, in 2023, the United Nations Committee against Torture conducted an examination to assess Brazil's level of compliance with the Convention against Torture. The DPE/SP submitted an alternative report (called "shadow report"), in which recurring episodes of torture in the state of São Paulo were revealed. In its recommendations, the DPE/SP reportedly expressed its concern over the frequent acts of torture perpetrated by Brazilian security forces, specifically referring to "rapid intervention groups" (such as the GIR), and suggested measures to prevent these cases of abuse.<sup>354</sup>

494. Finally, the UN Committee recommended that the following measures be adopted, especially by the state of São Paulo: i) record in full all GIR interventions with body cameras, which should be accessible to the Secretariat of Prison Administration, the Public Defender's Office, the Public Prosecutor's Office and the relevant court; ii) have GIR agents wear visible IDs and use transparent masks; iii) forbid the use of pepper gas and elastomer bullets; iv) forbid the use of gas indoors; v) use dogs for drug detection only; vi) specifically select GIR agents and train them in human rights; vii) prevent GIR agents from patting down detainees' relatives or carrying weapons in an intimidating way during visits; viii) have the GIR notify its interventions at least 24 hours in advance or, in case of emergency, within the following 24 hours with a detailed report of all actions performed.<sup>355</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

495. The Commission observes that the Public Defender's Office and the United Nations Committee against Torture have identified that no ex officio investigations into acts of violence at detention centers were carried out and that complaints about these acts were reportedly filed by families, and not by the authorities responsible for the protection of the integrity of the detainees. Thus, the Commission is concerned over the distrust the Public Defender's Office and other organizations have voiced with regard to the agency in charge of investigating said acts, and considers that this might represent a setback caused by the lack of coordination among all parties involved. Likewise, this recommendation should be construed in light of the previous recommendation, since investigations will not start—including those ex officio— as far as safe spaces are not guaranteed for persons to file complaints without fear of retaliation. Based on the foregoing, compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

496. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to continue strengthening the human and technical resources allocated to the investigation of allegations of torture and ill-treatment at detention centers, ensuring that they are treated with the urgency and seriousness required. The Commission also calls on the State to implement a transparent system that can be accessed by the public to follow up on these complaints, so that it is possible to learn about the progress made, as well as about the results achieved in each case. The Commission reiterates the importance of establishing specific and effective protocols to respond to the complaints filed by groups in a special situation of vulnerability in prison and socioeducational units. Finally, the Commission emphasizes the importance of ensuring that investigations are not limited to merely punishing those directly responsible; investigations should also aim to identify and address the structural, systemic causes of such violations.

Recommendation No. 62. Take the necessary steps to increase financial and human resources for the mechanisms in place for preventing and combating torture, to boost their effectiveness. Likewise, promote the establishment, installation, and workings of these kinds of mechanisms in the federative states that still lack them, in accordance with the standards contemplated in the Optional Protocol to the United Nations Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

497. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reiterated the existence of agencies that made up the SNPCT and listed the state mechanisms and committees that served the same purpose, emphasizing their importance in the fight against human right violations in prisons. However, the State failed to provide any updated information on the actions undertaken by these agencies. Faced with this lack of specific data, the Commission determined that compliance with this recommendation was still pending and underscored the need to strengthen the autonomy, structure and resources of the SNPCT, as well as to put mechanisms against torture in place across Brazilian states and to report on the progress made.<sup>356</sup>

498. This year, the State reported that the MDHC was taking measures to follow up on and promote the structuring of the above-mentioned mechanisms across Brazilian states and the federal district. These measures included:

- i) Monitoring the creation and operation of committees and mechanisms across states: In May 2024, the National Observatory of Human Rights used its platform (ObservaDH) to publish an overview of the existing state systems, committees and mechanisms to prevent and combat torture. In addition, in June 2023, an extraordinary meeting between ministries, judicial entities, academic experts and the civil society was held to restore the National System to Prevent and Combat Torture. Four goals were set in that meeting: defining methodologies for inspections; reducing prison population; promoting collective, multidisciplinary action; and performing a census of the persons deprived of liberty.
- ii) Organizing human right caravans: Launched in August 2023 by the MDHC, this initiative seeks to identify and mitigate human right violations in prison and socioeducational units where precautionary measures and provisional measures have been granted by the Inter-American Commission and the Inter-American Court, respectively. Caravans visited units in Espírito Santo, Pernambuco and Ceará, and addressed issues such as overpopulation, violence and lack of hygiene. Some of the milestones achieved include the implementation of state mechanisms against torture in Ceará, progress in the monitoring of precautionary measures and the signing of agreements for humanized transportation and support to families of homicide victims.
- iii) Holding the Fourth National Meeting of Committees and Mechanisms to Prevent and Combat Torture: This event was attended by 70 representatives of state and national committees and mechanisms, as well as by civil society organizations. During the meeting, Recommendation No. 13 of the National Committee to Prevent and Combat Torture was issued, which establishes guidelines for the creation and strengthening of committees and mechanisms against torture across states.
- iv) Drafting of the Plan to Monitor Precautionary Measures and Provisional Measures Granted by the Inter-American Commission and the Inter-American Court, respectively: This plan's main objectives are to monitor and support states in their compliance with such measures, as well as to earmark state resources to solve problems and foster the implementation of state systems to prevent and combat torture. The creation of new prevention committees and mechanisms is expected, as well as a commitment by the judiciary to reducing prison population as part of the fight against torture and effective compliance with inter-American standards.

- v) Participating in the preparation of the Pena Justa plan: The MDHC is actively involved in the preparation of this plan to address the unconstitutional status of Brazilian prisons, in accordance with the STF's ruling.<sup>357</sup>

499. Lastly, the State reported that, currently, 17 states have passed legislation to create a MEPCT, but only five are fully operational in the following states: Acre, Rio de Janeiro, Rondônia, Paraíba and Sergipe. The states that have yet to implement these mechanisms are Roraima, São Paulo, Bahia, Goiás, Rio Grande do Norte, Santa Catarina, Rio Grande do Sul, Paraná, Minas Gerais and the federal district.<sup>358</sup>

500. Regarding the National Mechanism for the Prevention and Combat of Torture (MNPCT), the State reported that it is a key tool against torture in Brazil, coordinated by the MDHC. Its actions are based on key principles to ensure effectiveness in the prevention and combat of this human rights violation. Under the coordination of the MDHC, efforts have been made to strengthen the MNPCT, with investments in expanding its infrastructure, replenishing human resources, and providing technical and financial support for the implementation of local mechanisms for the prevention and combat of torture.<sup>359</sup>

501. Finally, the State indicated that, to strengthen the MNPCT, a specialized consultancy was hired to develop a diagnostic and prevention strategy in the penitentiary system. This study included mapping the network for combating torture in all states, covering governmental sectors and civil society. The project was divided into four key components: i) mapping and analysis of the network: identification of entities, their competences, and interaction flows; ii) evaluation of public policies: analysis of federal programs that could be adapted to the penitentiary system and improvements in interministerial coordination; iii) analysis of complaints and perceptions: evaluation of torture complaints, surveys of officials, and conditions for access to water and food; iv) legal evaluation and awareness: impact of Law 9.455/1997, torture diagnosis in prisons, and awareness strategies for governments and society.<sup>360</sup>

502. The DPE/SP reported that the MNPCT is made up of 11 experts only, which is far from enough to conduct inspections across Brazilian places of deprivation of liberty, such as prisons, adolescent detention centers, long-stay institutions and therapeutic communities. The DPE/SP stressed the need to strengthen and expand this mechanism so as to meet the standards of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture.<sup>361</sup>

503. The Commission welcomes the measures presented by the State and recognizes their importance for the prevention and combat of torture in places of deprivation of liberty in the country. In particular, it values the information regarding the hiring of a specialized consultancy to develop a strategy for diagnosing and preventing torture in the penitentiary system, including a mapping of the available network in the states.

504. On the other hand, the Commission highlights that, at this time, it lacks information on the strengthening and sufficient allocation of resources to state-level mechanisms for the prevention and combat of torture that are currently in operation. In particular, it emphasizes that the State itself mentions that only five states would have these mechanisms. The Commission is also concerned by the information presented by the DPE/SP regarding the insufficient resources available to the National Mechanism for carrying out its functions.

505. Considering that the new measure adopted by the State is still in its initial phase, all the available information, and the contribution from the DPE/SP, the IACHR understands that the recommendation remains pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

506. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission reiterates the importance of reinforcing the structure, autonomy and financial and human resources of the National Mechanism, as well as the need to create mechanisms to prevent and combat torture in the states where they are still pending and to report on the progress made to this end. The IACHR also invites the State to share information on the development and results of the diagnosis being prepared by the specialized consultancy, as well as the proposed strategies and how the State plans to implement them.

Recommendation No. 63. Adopt such measures as are needed to ensure that all persons detained in flagrante have access to custody hearings, especially people detained in small towns far from the capitals and those wounded during police operations and subsequently transferred to hospitals.

507. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that the STF had reinforced the mandatory nature of custody hearings for all prison types. It also highlighted that the CNJ had determined that, considering that the Covid-19 pandemic was over, all custody hearings should be held in person. The State also referred to a bill aimed at doing away with these hearings in some cases. However, the data reported by the Mechanism to Prevent and Combat Torture in the state of Rio de Janeiro (MEPCT/RJ) showed that said hearings, as well as the conditions in which they were held, varied across the country. Despite the progress made, the Commission determined that this recommendation had been partially complied with and urged the State to ensure physical presence of detainees at all hearings and to avoid measures restricting their effectiveness.<sup>362</sup>

508. In 2024, the State reported that the above-mentioned bill was stalled in the Senate.<sup>363</sup> On the other hand, it was noted that Resolution No. 562, of June 3, 2024, established guidelines for the implementation and operation of the Guarantee Judge, requiring all states to adapt to this regulation and create the corresponding courts. The Custody Person Assistance Service (APEC) is already present in 24 out of 26 federative units and the Federal District. In 2023, the National Coordination of Alternative Penalties approved 12 projects to hire multidisciplinary teams for APEC, allocating more than R$ 730 million through the Voluntary Fund-to-Fund. In 2024, a new public call was launched with R$ 800 million for 11 states that had not received funding previously. The goal is to ensure that all states have multidisciplinary teams working before and after the custody hearing, even on weekends and holidays. According to Resolution No. 213/2015, the custody hearing must be held in person within 24 hours after detention, allowing the intervention of the judge, the Public Ministry, the defense, and the APEC team. Resolution No. 562/2024 reinforces this obligation, allowing videoconferences only in exceptional and justified cases.<sup>364</sup>

509. For its part, the DPE/SP highlighted that, in the state of São Paulo, no measures have been adopted to ensure the physical presence of detainees at custody hearings. The DPE/SP stated that, on business days, only three out of the 21 judicial districts hold in-person hearings, while the remaining 18 conduct them online. In addition, the DPE/SP explained that, on weekends, all custody hearings across judicial districts are held online, except for those in the city of São Paulo.<sup>365</sup>

510. In turn, civil society organizations informed that there is a legislative proposal on the table to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure to allow online custody hearings. This proposal has been approved by the Chamber of Deputies and could be sent to the Senate for consideration. Since the pandemic, hearings have been held online, in person and in a hybrid format, with in-person hearings not being the norm anymore. Such amendment would consolidate online hearings, thus altering the very nature of custody hearings.<sup>366</sup>

511. The Commission appreciates the information regarding the implementation of the figure of the Guarantee Judge and the APEC service, with multidisciplinary teams working before and after the custody hearing, which must be available to all individuals detained in flagrante. These types of measures are essential to ensure that all individuals brought before the criminal justice system have their human rights guaranteed. However, the information shared by the DPE/SP, an entity that actively participates in the custody hearings, and by civil society must also be taken into account.

512. Considering that the measures indicated by the State are in the initial implementation phase, the Commission determines that the recommendation remains partially fulfilled.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

513. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR calls on the State to increase its efforts to ensure the physical presence of all persons detained in custody hearings, especially for those detained in locations far from the capital cities and those who have been transferred to hospitals because they have been injured in police operations. The Commission invites the State to share information on the scope of the implementation of the Judge of Guarantee and the APEC as a way of guaranteeing adequate attention to all persons detained in flagrante delicto in the country.

Recommendation No. 64. Take the necessary measures to ensure that, within the scope of custody hearings, the determination of pretrial detention is carried out exceptionally and in accordance with the principles of legality, necessity and proportionality.

514. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported on the creation of the Fazendo Justiça program, which, under the coordination of the CNJ and the UNDP, was being run for the third time. The State underscored the importance of custody hearings and explained that, since 2015, over one million hearings had taken place, resulting in the release of the detainee in over 40 percent of the cases, and that the number of pretrial detentions had dropped to 12 percent. The State added that a Vacancy Control Center had been created to streamline vacancy management at detention centers. While recognizing the efforts made by the State, the Commission determined that compliance with this recommendation was partial based on the lack of specific information and urged the State to strengthen institutionality to ensure that pretrial detention was applied in accordance with inter-American principles, including the training of judges and magistrates.<sup>367</sup>

515. In 2024, the State failed to submit information on compliance with this recommendation.<sup>368</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

516. Based on the absence of updated information, compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

517. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Inter-American Commission prompts the State to adopt institutional strengthening measures so that, in the context of custody hearings, decisions on pretrial detentions are made in accordance with inter-American principles. These measures may include training sessions for judges and magistrates to ensure that pretrial detention is truly exceptional.

Recommendation No. 65. Guarantee detention conditions adapted to the particular needs of especially vulnerable groups. For women deprived of liberty, the State must ensure that the measures applied adhere to a gender approach. For persons with disabilities deprived of liberty, the State must make reasonable accommodations to remove the environmental barriers that make it difficult for them to exercise their rights.

518. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed that persons with disabilities accounted for 0.9 percent of the prison population in Brazil and referred to policies targeted at this group and incarcerated women. However, the State failed to provide specific information on the implementation of these measures at detention centers. Faced with the absence of specific data, the Commission determined that compliance with this recommendation was pending and urged the State to take steps to ensure adequate detention conditions for vulnerable groups, including women and persons with disabilities, and to provide up-to-date, disaggregated information about any action taken in that direction.<sup>369</sup>

519. For 2024, the State reported that it has implemented measures to adapt detention center infrastructure to address the needs of people with disabilities. It stated that, with support from the Brazilian Inclusion Law (LBI) of 2015, physical adaptations have been made, such as ramps, handrails, and the adjustment of cells and bathrooms according to ABNT standards. Additionally, it noted that penitentiary agents are being trained to respect the rights of people with disabilities, and medical and psychosocial assistance is being expanded, including the provision of auxiliary equipment such as wheelchairs. According to the State, the National Mechanism for Prevention and Combating Torture (MNPCT) oversees the implementation of these accessibility standards.<sup>370</sup>

520. To ensure accessibility in detention centers for people with disabilities, the National Secretariat for Penal Policies developed the Accessibility Kit, which includes walkers, support bars, wheelchairs, crutches, ramps, and adapted restrooms. This kit will be distributed to all states to ensure at least one accessible space in the penitentiary system. Additionally, Technical Note 7 was created to guide the adaptation of prison spaces according to accessibility architectural standards. The collection of guidelines "Vulnerabilidad en Pauta" was also published, offering guidelines for the custody of vulnerable groups, including people with disabilities, based on Technical Note 83/2020 on their treatment in the penitentiary system.<sup>371</sup>

521. To ensure a gender-sensitive approach in the penitentiary system, the Division for the Care of Women and Vulnerable Groups has implemented several actions within the National Policy for the Care of Incarcerated Women and Female Ex-Offenders (PNAMPE). Among the key measures are:

- i) Donation of 99 adapted vehicles for the transport of pregnant women, mothers with children, elderly individuals, and those with disabilities.
- ii) Events and training: Webinars on the situation of women in prison, gender and sexuality, and the screening of the documentary "Olha pra Elas," which highlights the feminization of poverty and the abandonment of women in prison.

- iii) Menstrual Dignity Project: Implementation of sanitary pad and diaper factories in penitentiary units, with agreements in 11 states and over 3.9 million reais invested in machinery.
- iv) Free Women Program: In collaboration with the Santa Catarina Court of Justice, it aims to reduce the incarceration of pregnant women and those with young children, promoting their social reintegration.
- v) Participation in the National Pact for Early Childhood, to ensure the rights of children of incarcerated women.
- vi) Publication of the "Vulnerabilidad en Pauta" collection, with guidelines on the custody of vulnerable groups.
- vii) State-level plans for the care of incarcerated women, developed in cycles (2021-2023 and 2024-2027), with semi-annual monitoring and regional workshops to adapt penitentiary policies to local realities.<sup>372</sup>

522. Additionally, technical visits to women's prisons were conducted to exchange experiences and improve the living conditions of incarcerated and released women.<sup>373</sup>

523. Moreover, the DPE/SP informed that incarcerated persons with disabilities who are in pretrial detention or serving prison sentences allegedly face the same conditions as other inmates, with no infrastructure adapted to their special needs. This situation is exacerbated by the absence of adequate medical care at prison facilities, which lack minimum health equipment as required by the PNAISP.<sup>374</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

524. The Commission expresses concern that, despite the State's report on strengthening the infrastructure of detention centers, these modifications do not address the specific needs of vulnerable population groups. Despite the State's efforts, significant barriers persist, such as those indicated by DPE/SP regarding incarcerated individuals with disabilities who continue to serve prison sentences without adequate infrastructure. There is also a lack of guaranteed access to proper medical care for people with disabilities in penitentiary units, with healthcare teams not compliant with the PNAISP. Actions for women deprived of liberty do not effectively cover all penitentiary units in the country, and although measures have been implemented to improve infrastructure and train staff, oversight of the effective implementation of these adjustments remains insufficient.

525. The Commission once again emphasizes that the contexts and conditions in society in general, and naturally for individuals deprived of liberty, are dynamic. Therefore, the effectiveness of any program, public policy, or measure related to human rights should be assessed periodically to avoid becoming obsolete and ineffective. In this sense, the IACHR considers that the recommendation remains pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

526. To comply with the recommendation regarding individuals with disabilities, the IACHR invites the State to accelerate the implementation of adapted cells in all penitentiary units, ensure that the Accessibility Kits are distributed and effectively used in all states, monitor the adequacy of penitentiary infrastructure through regular inspections, and expand specialized medical care coverage in accordance with the PNAISP. Regarding women deprived of liberty, the IACHR invites the State to extend the actions of the PNEMPE to all correctional facilities in the country, ensure the constant provision of hygiene products within the framework of the Menstrual Dignity Project, and expand the Free Women Program to more states.

L. Human rights defenders

Recommendation No. 66. Strengthen and endow the Human Rights Defenders Protection Program with the structural facilities it needs to guarantee effective and comprehensive protection for human rights defenders, including the signing of state agreements to ensure the actual implementation of that program nationwide. Similarly, ensure effective coordination with the security agencies responsible for implementing the protection measures, so as to guarantee full compliance with the program.

527. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State failed to submit information on the measures adopted to comply with this recommendation. However, civil society organizations reported that conversations and activities under the PPDDH had been resumed after the change in the national administration. This included the release of a presentation booklet and the creation of the Sales Pimenta WG to draft a national plan and a bill for the protection of human rights defenders. Despite the progress achieved, the Commission concluded that compliance with this recommendation remained partial and urged the State to provide updated information, earmark sufficient resources for the PPDDH and take steps to include the civil society in the Deliberative Council, as well as to implement the program across the country.<sup>375</sup>

528. In 2024, the State informed that the PPDDH is operational across Brazil, either through the Federal Technical Team or as a result of agreements with state governments. There are teams currently working in the following states: Paraíba, Pará, Bahia, Pernambuco, Ceará, Maranhão, Mato Grosso, Minas Gerais, Espírito Santo and Rio Grande do Sul. There are also regionalized federal teams in Amazonas, Roraima, Rondônia, Mato Grosso do Sul and Rio de Janeiro, which assist human rights defenders who have suffered some kind of threat because of their activity. All other states are monitored by the Federal Technical Team. In addition, the State reported that some progress was achieved in implementing the PPDDH in 2024, especially thanks to larger investments, which rose from 17 million Brazilian reais in 2023 to 32 million Brazilian reais in 2024. An additional investment of nearly 5 million Brazilian reais was made to address the Yanomami people crisis.<sup>376</sup>

529. Furthermore, the State explained that more resources were allocated to the PPDDH as a result of an expansion of the Federal Technical Team, which now includes five regional teams, and the setting up of a program office in Porto Seguro to expand its operations in the south of the state. Proximity is key to listen to and support defenders at risk directly, and increases program visibility, which helps to prevent threats. Furthermore, the new agreements provide for the inclusion of a risk analyst, who helps to identify threats and vulnerabilities and supports the adoption of protection measures through internal and external risk assessment.<sup>377</sup>

530. As for the Sales Pimenta WG, the State recalled the information provided the year before regarding its structure, duties and organization. The State added that, so far, the Sales Pimenta WG has held nine ordinary meetings, six public hearings and 42 public consultations to strengthen and expand existing protection measures for these vulnerable population in Brazil.<sup>378</sup>

531. Finally, the State mentioned that the MDHC hired special consulting services to formulate the National Plan to Protect Human Rights Defenders and the National Protection Policy. So far, the State has received comparative technical reports on protection programs from the European Union, Spain, France, Mexico and Colombia, in addition to an analysis of Brazilian bills and court decisions concerning the protection policy. Also, reports have been prepared which analyze meetings and public consultations on issues involving indigenous and Quilombola peoples, media workers and environmentalists. By December 2024, when the work of the Sales Pimenta WG is to be concluded, the following outcomes are expected: a technical document with proposed thematic axes for the national plan, a draft bill on the National Protection Policy and a detailed draft for the national protection plan.<sup>379</sup>

532. Moreover, a civil society organization that is a deputy member of the Sales Pimenta WG reported that the PPDDH has allegedly taken considerable steps to restructure its program and policies by devising a new national policy to protect human rights defenders, media workers and environmentalists. In this regard, this organization highlighted the creation and implementation of a policy for the protection of defenders and the actions undertaken by the Sales Pimenta WG, which reportedly enjoys broad social participation and has achieved progress in helping the State of Brazil guarantee the rights of human rights defenders.<sup>380</sup>

533. Conversely, civil society organizations have stated that challenges to the implementation of the PPDDH persist across Brazil. After the rulings issued by the Regional Federal Court of the Fourth Region and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the Gabriel Sales Pimenta case, in June 2023, a technical working group was created to design a new protection policy together with a connected bill. This group started to work in December 2023. In this regard, several requests were made by the civil society, including a request for support to streamline discussions, a request to hold in-person meetings to ensure equal participation and a request for an adequate budget for national hearings and meetings. However, the delay in hiring consulting services and organizing activities also delayed results, so this process is expected to end in late 2024. Meanwhile, the protection program remains operational.<sup>381</sup>

534. In its 2024 annual report, Amnesty International concluded that the authorities had failed to adequately protect human rights defenders. According to Justiça Global, in average, three defenders were allegedly killed each month in Brazil in the past four years. The PPDDH still lacks legal support and specific approaches in terms of race, ethnicity, sexual diversity and territory. In addition, 16 states do not have their own programs, which compromises the effectiveness of protection measures.<sup>382</sup>

535. Furthermore, the Commission learned that the Brazilian Committee of Human Rights Defenders, made up of 48 civil society organizations, sent a letter to the UN Special Rapporteur on human rights defenders, Mary Lawlor, during her visit to Brazil last April. The letter denounces the systemic weakening of the protection policy, which was implemented in 2004 thanks to the civil society, and summarizes the primary issues that are currently affecting the civil society at large: low budget execution; the lack of transparency and social participation; low institutionalization; the absence of structure and staff; the reduction of cases heard by federal courts; political instability in management; the nonexistence of gender, race and class perspectives; and deficiencies in the effectiveness of protection measures.<sup>383</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

536. The Commission welcomes the information on the institutional reinforcement of the PPDDH through the investment of more resources, including additional funds to ensure its operation in the Yanomami territory, as well as the expansion of its technical team and physical structure. The Commission also appreciates the steps taken by the PPDDH to restructure its program and policies and to ensure its presence in more states across the country. Finally, the Commission considers that the work of the Sales Pimenta WG is important in that it guarantees and strengthens protection measures and helps to create the National Plan to Protect Human Rights Defenders and the National Protection Policy.

<sup>383</sup> Brazilian Committee of Human Rights Defenders, "Carta aberta da sociedade civil para Relatoria da ONU sobre a Proteção de DDHs," April 10, 2024.

537. However, the Commission cannot overlook the issues put forward by the civil society with regard to the insufficiency of financial and human resources for the PPDDH, the lack of transparency and social participation, the limitation of its activity, among others.

538. The Commission considers that the State has succeeded in taking measures to reinforce its policies for the protection of human rights defenders. Nevertheless, the Commission underscores that the State has yet to create instruments that are necessary to strengthen the public policy for the protection of defenders in Brazil, such as the National Protection Policy and the National Plan to Protect Human Rights Defenders. Based on the foregoing, the Commission understands that compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

539. To guide implementation, the Commission highlights how important it is for the State to step up efforts to institutionally reinforce the PPDDH and to finish the National Plan to Protect Human Rights Defenders, as well as the National Protection Policy, ensuring broad social participation and transparency.

Recommendation No. 67. Guarantee the effective and comprehensive implementation of the measures to protect human rights defenders, especially those located in rural areas far from urban centers.

540. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State failed to share information with the Commission on the measures taken to implement this recommendation. However, civil society organizations reported a persistent lack of active transparency across state and federal programs, as well as difficulties in accessing information about the PPDDH. They added that protection measures were still homogeneous and that they failed to address the specific needs of human rights defenders in rural areas, and that state teams had insufficient resources to meet the existing demands. The Commission concluded that compliance with this recommendation remained pending and urged the State to provide up-to-date information and enhance the enforcement of protection measures, especially for people in rural areas, and to guarantee active transparency in federal and state programs.<sup>384</sup>

541. In 2024, the State informed that the process of granting protection measures to human rights defenders started with the request for registration to the program, which could be filed by civil society organizations, defenders themselves or other public agencies. To ensure transparency, the MDHC keeps the PPDDH web page updated within its site, providing guidance on the request for registration, information about applicable rules, program operation and a list of contacts across Brazil. In addition, the Communications Advisory Unit of the MDHC has a communications plan in place to share information on the activities carried out by the Sales Pimenta WG and on public hearings, which is intended to disseminate the initiatives undertaken and meet international and domestic guidelines on the subject.<sup>385</sup>

542. Furthermore, the State mentioned that most PPDDH beneficiaries reside in rural areas, including indigenous peoples and traditional communities. Once included in the program, human rights defenders have access to protection measures adapted to their rural context, including on-site visits and other specific actions. As for transparency, measures are granted in agreement with human right defenders, who are actively involved in the protection process. In addition, thanks to an increase in their federal budget, protection programs have been reinforced in the states of Pará, Paraíba, Bahia, Ceará, Maranhão, Mato Grosso, Minas Gerais, Pernambuco, Rio Grande do Sul and Espírito Santo, thus expanding human resources and program coverage.<sup>386</sup>

543. Notwithstanding the foregoing, civil society organizations claimed that the process of granting protection measures to human rights defenders still lacks transparency and that the reinforcement of state protection programs has only been limited. According to these organizations, the PPDDH shows signs of precariousness, as evidenced by the agreements signed for its operation. Out of the 10 state programs currently in operation (Bahía, Ceará, Maranhão, Mato Grosso, Paraíba, Minas Gerais, Pará, Pernambuco, Rio de Janeiro and Rio Grande do Sul), at least three are allegedly experiencing delays in the allocation of resources or in the public call for a new agreement to be signed so that measures can be later implemented.<sup>387</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

544. The Commission welcomes the information furnished by the State but emphasizes that there is no specific data as to how an effective, comprehensive implementation of protection measures for the people included in the program is guaranteed, especially for those who reside far from urban centers and in rural areas. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation is still pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

545. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission urges the State to submit relevant and updated information on the effective implementation of protection measures for human rights defenders. Furthermore, the Commission invites the State to provide data related to the effective application of protection measures, such as the number of persons served by the program, the regions where they are assisted, the type of violations suffered, the number of deaths, among others.

Recommendation No. 68. Investigate, with due diligence, all acts of violence against human rights defenders, bearing in mind any intersection with other especially at-risk groups mentioned in this report, assuming as an investigative hypothesis that those acts were committed in retaliation for their activities in defense of human rights.

546. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State failed to provide information to the Commission on any steps taken to implement this recommendation. Conversely, civil society organizations reported that no significant initiatives had been undertaken by the State and that inaction and impunity were still serious obstacles to the protection of human rights defenders. These organizations highlighted emblematic cases such as the murder of Marielle Franco and the Pau D'Arco massacre. Faced with this situation and the lack of information from the State, the Commission concluded that compliance with this recommendation remained pending.<sup>388</sup>

547. In 2024, the State reported that it has adopted measures to ensure the diligent investigation of acts of violence against human rights defenders and the punishment of those responsible. The State explained that the PPDDH carries out regular follow-up work together with public security agencies to monitor progress in the investigation of each case. Furthermore, in situations of threat and violence related to territorial conflicts, the DEMCA/MDA collaborates with other federal institutions to i) oversee compliance with investigation protocols; ii) request the inclusion of leaders in the protection program if necessary; and iii) talk with authorities from the Public Prosecutor's Office and the judiciary to avoid impunity in these cases.<sup>389</sup>

548. The Commission learned of the visit of the UN Special Rapporteur on human rights defenders, Mary Lawlor, and her evaluation of the country's situation. With regard to the investigation of acts of violence, she stated that, in many cases, perpetrators are known but impunity prevails.<sup>390</sup>

549. In addition, civil society organizations indicated that, between 2019 and 2022, 1,171 cases of violence against human rights defenders were recorded in Brazil, including 169 murders, with an average of three murders per month. In 2023, the Conselho Indigenista Missionário reported 411 cases of violence against indigenous people, including 208 murders and other attacks. The policy for the protection of defenders, created in 2004, has allegedly weakened due to a number of problems such as low budget execution; the lack of transparency and social engagement; insufficient structure and equipment; a decrease in the number of cases heard by federal courts; and the absence of gender, race and class perspectives.<sup>391</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

550. The Commission appreciates the response sent by the State, in which it reported on the conversations held by the PPDDH with public security agencies, as well as on the actions undertaken by the DEMCA/MDA. Nevertheless, the Commission notes with concern the evaluation carried out by the UN Special Rapporteur and the information provided by the civil society. Furthermore, the Commission believes that there is still insufficient information as regards the measures adopted to investigate with due diligence acts of violence against human rights defenders. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

551. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to share information on how it guarantees that these acts of violence are investigated effectively and with due diligence, and on how it prevents them from going unpunished.

Recommendation No. 69. Promote dissemination of the legal provision seeking to federalize crimes committed against human rights defenders.

552. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State failed to submit information regarding compliance with this recommendation. Nevertheless, civil society organizations reported that, up to that moment, no measures had been taken to federalize crimes committed against human rights defenders in Brazil. Since the State did not share information neither in 2022 nor 2023, the Commission determined that compliance with the recommendation was still pending and urged the State to provide updated information on any steps taken to ensure these crimes are federalized and to present data that show the increased use of this classification.<sup>392</sup>

553. In 2024, the State once again failed to submit information on compliance with this recommendation.<sup>393</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

554. Faced with the lack of information concerning this recommendation, the Commission determines that compliance is still pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

555. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission urges the State to submit relevant and updated information on the initiatives undertaken and the measures adopted by the State to ensure that crimes committed against human rights defenders are federalized, and to provide data that show the increased use of this classification.

Recommendation No. 70. Adopt proactive measures to foster a human rights culture and an environment free of violence and threats, recognizing the value and importance of the work done by human rights defenders in reaffirming the validity of democratic institutions and of a State governed by the Rule of Law.

556. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State did not submit any information to the Commission concerning compliance with this recommendation. The civil society, however, reported that the government had shown more initiative to raise awareness among the population of the work done by human rights defenders and highlighted the release of the PPDDH booklet. Despite these efforts, the Commission determined that compliance with this recommendation remained pending, considering the lack of official information from the State in 2022 and 2023. The Commission prompted the State to submit up-to-date information about any initiatives undertaken and measures adopted to promote the recognition and protection of the activities carried out by human rights defenders.<sup>394</sup>

557. In 2024, the State reported that the protection measures implemented under the PPDDH include actions to showcase the actions taken by defenders who promote and advocate for human rights against companies and authorities across all areas of government, provided such measures do not increase the level of risk or threat to defenders. In each case, strategies are adopted to highlight the importance of their work and to help to ensure that it is carried out free of risk. Said strategies include support for events or the safe transfer of defenders so they can participate in activities related to their role.<sup>395</sup>

558. The State added that showcasing the work performed by human rights defenders not only recognizes the importance of what they do but also educates and engages society at large in terms of how relevant it is to protect and promote human rights. By making their work and the challenges they face public, society is invited to reflect on and appreciate the guarantee of rights, especially for the most vulnerable groups. These strategies also create a support and solidarity network, thus driving a culture of empathy and respect for fundamental rights and freedoms and helping to remove the prejudice and stigma associated with human rights.<sup>396</sup>

559. The Commission welcomes the information shared by the State as regards the promotion of a human rights culture and the recognition of the importance of the work done by defenders in preserving democratic institutions and the Rule of Law. Consequently, the Commission considers that the level of compliance with this recommendation has progressed to partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

560. To comply with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to share all the actions undertaken to foster a culture of human rights.

M. Human trafficking

Recommendation No. 71. Step up actions to prevent, protect, and assist victims of trafficking in persons by implementing the Third National Plan to Address Trafficking in Persons (2018-2022), fostering cooperation with states, municipalities, civil society organizations, academia, and international organizations specializing in all facets of public policies.

561. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State submitted information on the Third National Plan to Address Trafficking in Persons, effective until July 2022, which is structured around 58 goals within six thematic axes. The State reported that an Interministerial Monitoring and Evaluation Group (CGETP) had been created to monitor this plan, as was a public platform where compliance with such goals could be verified. The State added that steps had been taken to strengthen coordination among different agencies, such as the expansion of the Network to Combat Human Trafficking and the signing of technical cooperation agreements. While significant progress had been made in terms of prevention and assistance to victims, the Commission concluded that the recommendation had only been partially complied with and highlighted the need to continue reinforcing policies, as well as to provide updated information on the Fourth National Plan to Address Trafficking in Persons.<sup>397</sup>

Information on compliance

562. In 2024, the State explained that the evaluation of the Third National Plan to Address Trafficking in Persons, approved by Decree No. 9,440 of 2018, had concluded. The civil society as well as national and international agencies were involved in said evaluation. The plan included 58 goals structured around six thematic axes and was monitored using the Monitora 8.7 platform, developed by the Labor Public Prosecutor's Office (MPT) and the ILO. The final assessment, carried out in cooperation with the Observatory of International Migration in Brazil (OBMigra) of the UnB, applied certain criteria such as participation, effectiveness and available resources, and served as the basis for the fourth national plan, released on July 30, 2024, which will guide actions against human trafficking until 2028.<sup>398</sup>

563. According to the State, the Fourth National Plan to Address Trafficking in Persons (2024-2028) was led by the General Coordination of the Fight Against Human Trafficking and Migrant Smuggling of the Ministry of Justice and Public Security, with technical support from the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and the collaboration of the National Committee to Combat Human Trafficking (CONATRAP). The process was structured in three phases: i) comprehensive evaluation; ii) preparation and review of the preliminary version with roundtables; and iii) technical validation and formal approval. The IV National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (IV PNETP) aims to address the emerging needs of the country and will be implemented from 2024 to 2028, with the general objective of strengthening the National Policy on Combating Human Trafficking through structuring actions and coordination. Its specific objectives include the prevention of trafficking, protection of victims, and accountability for perpetrators. The plan is structured around five key areas: i) policy structuring; ii) coordination and partnerships; iii) prevention; iv) protection and assistance to victims; and v) repression and accountability.<sup>399</sup>

564. The new plan is divided into five strategic axes, with priority actions and specific activities for each. First, the policy seeks to strengthen institutions involved in the fight against human trafficking by restructuring the legal framework and drafting a National Anti-Human Trafficking Training Plan. Next, the policy provides for coordination and association to foster national and international cooperation, thus improving data collection and connecting issues such as forced labor and the protection of vulnerable groups. Under the prevention axis, the State seeks to mitigate vulnerability factors to prevent human trafficking. In addition, the victim protection and assistance axis promotes support and training programs for people who serve victims. Finally, the enforcement and accountability axis contributes to the fight against human trafficking with a focus on avoiding victim criminalization and revictimization, thus facilitating the adoption of a comprehensive approach to combat this crime.<sup>400</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

565. The Commission applauds the creation of the Fourth National Plan to Address Trafficking in Persons and commends the State for having relied on the evaluation of the effectiveness of the previous plan for that purpose. The Commission notes the importance of ensuring the participation of the civil society in the drafting, the implementation and the assessment of public policies.

566. In its previous follow-up report, the Commission stated that, since the recommendation referred to a policy that ended in 2022, it would no longer follow up on compliance therewith. Based on the information provided by the State on the preparation of the fourth national plan, the Commission determines that this recommendation has been fully complied with, and, starting next year, the Commission will stop monitoring its implementation.

N. Forced internal displacement

Recommendation No. 72. Draft and implement public policies for repressing violence and other factors that trigger internal displacement, specifically among peasant (campesino) populations and rural workers who are forced to abandon the territories they originally came from due to the violence in rural areas.

567. In the 2023 follow-up, the State failed to provide substantial information on compliance. Therefore, the Commission concluded that compliance with this recommendation remained pending and urged the State to adopt public policies to prevent forced internal displacement, with a special focus on peasant populations and rural workers.<sup>401</sup>

568. In 2024, the State informed that it took measures to eradicate violence and factors that drive internal displacement, especially in rural and agricultural areas affected by land conflicts. Faced with the resumption of eviction proceedings that had been suspended by the STF previously (during the pandemic), the government has prioritized mediation as a key strategy to address these conflicts and avoid violence. To do so, the State has created agencies specialized in conflict mediation across several ministries, including the Secretariat of Access to Justice under the MJSP, the Department of Mediation of Conflicts Involving Indigenous Land under the MPI and the DEMCA/MDA.<sup>402</sup>

569. In addition, the State reported that the purpose of the DEMCA/MDA, created under Decree No. 11,396 of 2023, is to find peaceful solutions to agricultural conflicts, especially those related to the eviction of consolidated peasant communities. The DEMCA/MDA receives complaints from various sources, such as individuals, social movements, trade unions, companies and other government agencies. After an initial assessment, it collects data and contacts the authorities that are responsible for mediating the conflict, which will document visits in technical reports that include visual evidence and testimonies. Situations of violence as well as threats and the lack of public services are recorded in these reports, which are subsequently sent to the relevant authorities and the INCRA, thus contributing to decision-making and the allocation of resources to purchase land and perform on-site supervision activities.<sup>403</sup>

570. The State added that the DEMCA/MDA acts in land disputes related not only to agrarian reform claims from social movements and trade unions but also to territorial disputes involving Quilombola communities and traditional peoples. Intervention by the DEMCA/MDA may be requested by NGOs, unions and other government agencies or the Public Prosecutor's Office, or it can be directly ordered based on the seriousness of the conflict. In prosecuted cases, the reports prepared by the DEMCA/MDA are sent to the Federal Prosecutor's Office under the INCRA to prioritize the defense of autarchy in the proceedings. The DEMCA/MDA collaborates at mediation hearings and technical visits, and forwards to the CNJ the cases of reintegration of possession, where some judges fail to observe the requirements under Resolution No. 510 of 2023, which establishes mediation mechanisms for these conflicts.<sup>404</sup>

571. Finally, the State reported that the Division to Combat Human Trafficking and Migrant Smuggling of the Federal Police took several actions against human trafficking, including preventive measures and information monitoring to address the root causes of crimes before they are even committed. In addition, the division collaborates with Interpol's international operations and reinforces migration control at borders and airports. It also participates in the CONATRAP, where it designs strategies to enhance the implementation of the National Policy to Combat Human Trafficking, with a focus on victim protection and the prosecution of perpetrators. Furthermore, with the development of victim-recruiting technologies, the Federal Police conducts regular training to effectively combat human trafficking and provide broader protection to victims, thus contributing to the defense of human rights.<sup>405</sup>

572. The Commission welcomes the measures reported by the State. These measures included creating agencies specialized in agrarian conflict mediation in several ministries (the MJSP, the MPI and the MDA) to avoid violence and internal displacement in rural areas, especially after the resumption of eviction proceedings; establishing the DEMCA/MDA, which focuses on agrarian conflict mediation, prioritizes peaceful solutions and documents situations of violence and threats; and addressing territorial conflicts that involve Quilombola communities and traditional peoples through the DEMCA/MDA, which also collaborates at hearings and technical visits.

573. The actions reported, especially those targeted at mediating agrarian conflicts and strengthening institutions, constitute a step forward that has a positive impact on the protection of rural communities and traditional peoples. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

574. To guide compliance with this recommendation, in addition to conflict mediation and resolution, the Commission invites the State to report on the measures being adopted to suppress violence and other factors that result in internal displacement, especially among peasant communities and rural workers.

Recommendation No. 73. Draw up and implement a regulatory framework with specific laws on identifying and protecting persons and protecting the victims of forced internal displacement in Brazil.

575. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State failed to submit substantial information on compliance. Consequently, the Commission determined that compliance with this recommendation was pending and urged the State to adopt a regulatory framework based on updated information about internal displacement in Brazil and to reach a broad understanding of the issue by identifying new sources of displacement, negative impacts and relevant responses. According to the Commission, these elements are essential for the development of an adequate regulatory framework that fits the current reality of this phenomenon.<sup>406</sup>

Information on compliance

576. In 2024, the State failed to submit information on compliance with this recommendation.<sup>407</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

577. Based on the absence of updated information, compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

578. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission emphasizes the importance of adopting a regulatory framework based on updated information on internal displacement in Brazil. In this regard, the Commission once again highlights how important it is for the State to broadly understand this phenomenon by identifying new sources of displacement, negative impacts and relevant responses, which are essential for developing an adequate regulatory framework, tailored to the reality and current features of this problem.

O. Human mobility, asylum and statelessness

Recommendation No. 74. Fully implement Law No. 13,445/2017 (New Migration Law) in a transparent process, with civil society participation and in accordance with the inter-American human rights, principles, norms, and standards; establishing, in particular, the National Migration, Refugees, and Statelessness Policy, envisaged in Article 120 of that Law.

579. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State explained that MJSP 's Resolution No. 290 of 2023, which regulates Article 120 of the Migration Law, provided for the creation of a working group in charge of developing the National Migration, Refugees and Statelessness Policy. The State explained that said group had received over 1,800 contributions and was conducting an internal evaluation of the regulatory project. However, civil society organizations claimed that the public consultation process and the hearings had yet to take place, and that the date to complete this stage had not been updated. The Commission determined that compliance with this recommendation was partial and prompted the State to move forward with the working group's agenda, ensuring social participation, and to report on the development of the policy.<sup>408</sup>

580. In 2024, the State reported that, in 2023, the MJSP had taken the first steps in the design of the National Policy on Migration, Refugees and Statelessness (PNMRA) through a working group that included representatives from the civil society, international agencies and academia. This group organized discussions that revolved around five thematic axes: the regularization of migrants; local integration; the promotion of rights and the fight against xenophobia; social engagement; and international relations. The process entailed national consultations and the analysis of over 1,400 contributions, which emphasized the need to improve migrants' access to public services, combat xenophobia and foster intergovernmental cooperation. As a result, a decree proposal was drafted to formalize the PNMRA, and the information gathered will be useful for other initiatives undertaken by the Migration Department of the MJSP.<sup>409</sup>

581. Furthermore, the State highlighted that the proposed decree seeks to structure and coordinate the PNMRA in a decentralized, participatory manner, by means of initiatives such as the National Plan on Migration, the National Migration Council, the Interministerial Committee, the National Network of Welcoming Cities (RNCA), and national support centers. The draft decree is currently being discussed with other ministries to ensure its integration into the executive branch's policies. Then, the proposal will be submitted to public consultation to receive feedback from the civil society, so as to tailor the policy to the needs of migrants, refugees and stateless people. The purpose of the PNMRA is to consolidate a structural, ongoing policy that connects intersectional services and ensures the rights of these groups beyond regularization and emergency assistance.<sup>410</sup>

582. Moreover, in addition to this regulatory process, the State is carrying out key actions to protect the rights of migrants and refugees, and to promote their integration in Brazil. The State referred mainly to the National Conference on Migration, Refugees and Statelessness (COMIGRAR) and the RNCA. The second COMIGRAR, held in September 2023, sought to explore the debate on migration and build the foundations for the first National Plan on Migration, Refugees and Statelessness, thus promoting the participation of migrants and refugees, as well as collaboration among governments, civil organizations and associations. At the preparation stage, 138 local and state conferences were held. The national COMIGRAR will be held in November 2024 in Brasilia. There is updated information available on the DEMIG/SENAJUS' website.<sup>411</sup>

583. Finally, the State explained that the RNCA was launched in November 2023 as a collaboration forum to promote the shelter and integration of migrants, refugees and stateless people in urban areas. This forum, which municipalities may join freely, seeks to strengthen participatory and decentralized governance in migration matters. At the launch event in Brasilia, in which 252 attendees participated, SENAJUS/MJSP Ordinance No. 84 and the Charter of Brasilia were signed, setting the network's objectives and guidelines. So far, 26 cities from different regions of the country have joined the RNCA, including capitals and cities at Brazilian borders. In addition, the network fosters the development of institutional capacities, the exchange of experiences and the reinforcement of municipal migration policies in Brazil, in collaboration with public and international agencies and the civil society.<sup>412</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

584. The Commission considers that the measures reported by the State constitute significant steps towards compliance with this recommendation. Especially, the Commission highlights the participatory consultation process and the drafting of the PNMRA. The decree proposal that will allegedly formalize the PNMRA and structure initiatives such as the National Migration Plan, the COMIGRAR and the RNCA, is proof of a coordinated, multisectoral approach. Furthermore, the RNCA promotes cooperation among municipalities and relevant actors to create inclusive welcoming environments, while the second COMIGRAR intends to spark off a deep, ongoing debate on migration and develop the first National Migration Plan. Based on the above, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

585. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to report on the progress made to conclude and implement the PNMRA, as well as to share further details on the steps it will take to ensure that said policy is adequately funded to put all the proposed measures into practice. Furthermore, the Commission prompts the State to provide updated information on the expansion of the RNCA to additional municipalities—in particular, regions with high migration and shelter rates—and on its integration into local service systems.

Recommendation No. 75. Define national plans for the comprehensive protection of human rights and social inclusion of all persons in a situation of human mobility residing in the country, taking into account factors such as race, gender, diversity, age, childhood, disability, as well as intersectional treatments.

586. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State referred to several initiatives intended to promote the social inclusion of migrants, such as the Program to Attend to and Accelerate Asylum Policies for Afro-descendants and streamlined procedures for specific cases involving women and the LGBTQIA+ population. The State also mentioned Interministerial Ordinances Nos. 24, 37 and 38 issued by the MJSP/MRE, which addressed visas and residence permits for vulnerable groups. However, the civil society pointed out that a national conference on migration, scheduled for the second half of 2023, could be postponed. The Commission welcomed those initiatives and determined that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to partial. Nevertheless, the Commission highlighted the lack of specific data on their implementation and on results and urged the State to continue designing policies and to hold said conference to draft and adopt a comprehensive national plan.<sup>413</sup>

587. In 2024, the State failed to submit information on compliance with this recommendation.<sup>414</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

588. In view of the absence of updated information, compliance with this recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

589. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission urges the State to report specific data on the implementation of the public policies mentioned in 2023. Furthermore, the Commission prompts the State to timely move forward with the approval and implementation of a National Policy on Migration, Refugees and Statelessness, ensuring transparency and social engagement throughout the process. Said policy must promote the inclusion of persons in situation of human mobility living in Brazil, taking into account such factors as race, gender, diversity, age, childhood and disability, as well as any other characteristics capable of triggering intersectional risks.

Recommendation No. 76. Step up humanitarian welcome actions, provided for in the Migration Law, Law No. 13,445/2017 and supplemented by the measures established in Law No. 13,684/2018 for persons who find themselves in vulnerable circumstances arising out of the migration flow caused by a humanitarian crisis, particularly with regard to maintaining and bolstering actions to receive persons displaced from Venezuela by the current humanitarian crisis.

590. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about the granting of visas and humanitarian residence permits, including those under MJSP/MRE's Interministerial Ordinances Nos. 36, 37 and 38, to migrants from Ukraine and Haiti, and to persons with family links in Brazil. In addition, the State created an emergency shelter in Praia Grande (SP) for Afghan refugees. The civil society, however, reported delays in the processing of requests for visas and accessibility issues at embassies, such as that of Haiti. Civil society organizations also referred to the creation of a working group that would design a national policy to integrate migrants, but which showed varying levels of progress. The Commission considered that the measures adopted were a significant step forward but determined that additional efforts had to be made for the efficient processing of visas and provision of consular services, as well as for the continuation of programs for persons displaced from Venezuela. Therefore, the Commission concluded that compliance with this recommendation had progressed to substantial partial.<sup>415</sup>

591. In 2024, the State highlighted Brazil's international commitment to refugees and migrants through its migration and refugee policies, based on laws No. 13,445/2017 and No. 9,474/1997. The 1997 Refugee Law expanded the definition of refugee to include those fleeing their country due to serious human rights violations. Later, the 2017 Migration Law established the possibility of granting residence permits for humanitarian reasons, which is applicable, for example, to Venezuelan migrants. One of the key initiatives is the "Operação Acolhida" (Operation Welcome), launched in 2018 to assist Venezuelan refugees and migrants, facilitating their voluntary relocation from municipalities in Roraima to other cities in Brazil. This action aims to improve the social, economic, and cultural integration of the beneficiaries, as well as to alleviate the pressure on public services in Roraima. The operation involves the Federal Government, states, municipalities, Armed Forces, the Judiciary, international organizations, and over 100 civil society organizations.<sup>416</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

592. In view of the absence of updated information, compliance with this recommendation remains substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

593. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission considers the State should guarantee the continuation of the reported programs and urges the State to send updated information on the actions taken to receive persons displaced from Venezuela. In particular, the Commission notes that the State needs to timely and effectively process requests for visas and provide consular services at Brazilian consulates and embassies in countries where the demand for visas is higher, so as to prevent asylum-seekers from staying in the situation of risk in which they are.

Recommendation No. 77. Maintain and strengthen public policies, programs, and actions to welcome, bring in, include, and provide social welfare for migrants, asylum-seekers, and refugees, undertaken directly by the State or with the support of civil society organizations.

594. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State informed the Commission about the progress achieved by the working group created under MSJP's Ordinance No. 290 of 2023 in regulating the PNMRA. The initiatives under development included the organization of the second COMIGRAR the implementation of support centers for migrants, refugees and stateless persons, and the creation of the RNCA. In addition, the State reported that the follow-up process of migrants in border cities had intensified to ensure their integration and prevent human trafficking. The Commission welcomed these measures but pointed to the lack of specific data on their implementation and outcomes. Therefore, the Commission determined that the recommendation had been partially complied with and called on the State to provide detailed information and to step up efforts to welcome and integrate migrants.<sup>417</sup>

595. In 2024, the State failed to submit information on compliance with this recommendation.<sup>418</sup>

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

597. With a view to complying with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to continue making efforts to welcome and integrate migrants, asylum-seekers and refugees, especially by restructuring a comprehensive national policy that includes and supplements the progress reported. The Commission invites the State to provide specific data on the implementation of the public initiatives reported, as well as on their outcomes.

Recommendation No. 78. Implement and strengthen actions to protect and shelter migrants living in the streets in both border areas and in cities in Brazil.

598. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State indicated that, to address the situation of Afghan refugees at the Guarulhos International Airport, an emergency shelter had been set up in Praia Grande (SP), which housed 200 individuals in a situation of vulnerability. This shelter, supported by several civil institutions, provided medical care, migration status regularization assistance and Portuguese lessons. Furthermore, Afghan individuals had been transferred to local shelters where they had received legal counsel, food and other resources. While the creation of the shelter and the relocation of refugees constituted a significant step forward, the Commission considered that this recommendation had been partially complied with and requested updated information on public policies intended to welcome migrants living in the streets and in border areas, as well as on the implementation of mechanisms to identify and protect their rights.<sup>419</sup>

599. In 2024, the State reported that migrants in Brazil are identified by means of the Specialized Reference Center of Social Assistance (CREAS) under the SUAS. Migrants can access institutional welcome services, such as shelters and temporary accommodation, with a focus on personal development. In cases of large migratory flows, the Ministry of Social Development and Assistance, Family, and the Fight against Hunger (MDS) technically and financially supports states and municipalities to build emergency shelters if local capacity is exceeded, as was the case of Operação Acolhida (Operation “Welcome”) for Venezuelan migrants in Roraima. Migrants are included in the social assistance system through registration in the municipality-managed Single Registry of Social Programs, which helps to identify whether families belong to GPTE. This Single Registry includes all low-income families, irrespective of their nationality, and allows for the identification of their nationality in the form.<sup>420</sup>

600. Furthermore, the MDS is actively involved in the Interministerial Working Group and the Action Plan for Persons Living in the Streets and has been holding weekly meetings since June 2023 to prepare the working group’s first study, which will lay the foundations for a future census of this population. A pilot study was conducted in December in Niterói (RJ), where the MDS participated as an observer and evaluator. This working group is also preparing methodological research guidelines that can be replicated across states and municipalities, as well as reviewing relevant federal administrative records. The MDS also participates in the current diagnosis of homeless people in Brazil to ground measures under said action plan.<sup>421</sup>

601. The State added that it strictly monitors the implementation of the Guidelines for Serving International Migrants under the SUAS. All social assistance services, benefits, programs and projects are available to migrant individuals and families in a situation of vulnerability and at risk, provided that they are eligible. To guarantee access, migrants learn about the SUAS during information sessions and in materials available to them.<sup>422</sup>

602. Finally, the State reported that it has established cofinancing procedures for the support and protection of homeless migrants, so that they can have access to a safe environment, and social work services. An example of these efforts is Operação Acolhida, conducted at the Venezuelan border in Roraima, through which assistance is provided to Venezuelan refugees and migrants in six federal shelters, out of which three are targeted at Venezuelan indigenous people. In addition, the MDS, in partnership with UNICEF, has set up two registration posts in Boa Vista and Pacaraima to provide social protection and assistance services to migrant families. Since 2023, both the MDS and UNICEF have carried out missions to support local management in the recording and updating of data concerning these families, thus implementing a support plan focused on the efficiency and sustainability of registration posts and assistance provided to migrants.<sup>423</sup>

603. Regarding measures adopted in other urban centers, the State explained that the high impact of migration is measured by the flow of migrants either passing through or settling in the country. This measure is justified by the impact of these flows on the administrative organization of urban centers, whose effects directly affect the public policies available to the general population and to migrants, who need to be properly assisted. In this regard, the State has adopted regular or emergency measures to assist migrants, refugees, and stateless individuals, ensuring that their full human and social rights are guaranteed on equal terms with nationals. Among the measures adopted, the State mentioned federal co-financing for the assistance of migrants and refugees within the Unified Social Assistance System (SUAS), technical assistance provided by the Ministry of Social Development (MDS) to subnational entities, the collection and dissemination of national and international good practices in social services provided to this population, cross-sectoral coordination to expand access to various sectorial public policies, training for market integration, and institutional reception.<sup>424</sup>

604. The Commission welcomes the measures reported by the State to shelter migrants living in the streets or in other situations of vulnerability, which included the implementation of social assistance policies under the SUAS. In particular, the Commission highlights the Operação Acolhida, which assists Venezuelan migrants in Roraima, and commends the creation of emergency shelters, as well as the protection provided under the SUAS network and the Single Registry. The Commission also underscores the importance of the Action Plan for Persons Living in the Streets, which has an impact on the policies targeting homeless migrants in the country.

605. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that the measures adopted by the State to guarantee the shelter of migrants living in the streets are relevant for compliance with this recommendation. Therefore, the Commission determines that compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

606. To achieve full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to submit information on the measures adopted in other urban centers with high migration levels, for example, the city of São Paulo (SP).

Recommendation No. 79. Prevent, raise awareness of, and combat xenophobia and all forms of violence against persons in human mobility situations, including migrants, refugees, those applying for refugee status, stateless persons, and victims of human trafficking.

607. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State referred to the creation of the Moïse Kabagambe Observatory to monitor and combat violence and xenophobia against migrants and refugees, with a focus on gender violence, racism and workplace violence. The purpose of this observatory was to collect data, conduct studies and collaborate with several entities to support the design of public policies. While this was a positive initiative, the Commission observed that there was no public data on its results. Therefore, the Commission considered that this recommendation had been partially complied with and urged the State to move forward with its efforts in relation to the Moise Kabagambe Observatory, ensuring that all related information was publicly available and updated.<sup>425</sup>

608. In 2024, the State reported various activities focused on the prevention, awareness, and fight against human trafficking, highlighting the 10th National Mobilization Week, which takes place every July in commemoration of World and National Day Against Human Trafficking (July 30). As part of Brazil's participation in the Blue Heart Campaign, the National Mobilization Week is held annually during the week including July 30, with actions aimed at raising awareness about human trafficking nationwide through a broad network of stakeholders. The objectives of this week are to increase knowledge and mobilize society and institutions, enhance the involvement of civil society, publicize national actions against human trafficking, and promote the UN's Blue Heart Campaign as a global prevention platform. High-visibility activities are carried out, such as the lighting of public buildings in blue, seminars, dialogues, distribution of materials, and educational blitzes, with the support of the National Policy for Combating Human Trafficking, including networks of combating cells, the National Committee for Combating Human Trafficking (CONATRAP), public agencies, and civil society organizations.<sup>426</sup>

609. In 2024, various informational materials focused on human trafficking, slave labor, and the protection of women and children were developed. Among the most notable resources is the "Turma da Mônica Jovem - Sonho Perigoso" comic, designed to raise awareness among children and adolescents about the dangers of human trafficking. The story revolves around a young person who, tempted by an online offer, almost falls into a human trafficking trap. The goal of this publication is to educate young people, as well as parents and educators, about the risks associated with this crime. Another key material is the Guide to Identifying and Assisting Child and Adolescent Victims of Human Trafficking, which provides practical tools for institutions working with victims, promoting access to rights and preventing further violations. Additionally, several informational pamphlets were created, such as one guiding on Human Trafficking and Work Abroad, aimed at providing information and recommendations to Brazilians wishing to work abroad, ensuring safe migration and respect for their rights. Another pamphlet on Human Trafficking in the Context of Environmental Degradation in Brazil aims to raise awareness and train stakeholders involved in the prevention of trafficking and environmental protection, improving the identification and assistance of victims of this crime.<sup>427</sup>

610. On the other hand, the State reported that the Standard Operating Protocol (POP/TIP) aims to strengthen Brazil's policies and efforts in the fight against human trafficking by organizing a set of institutional interventions, from identifying victims to their return to the country. This protocol coordinates the actions of various institutional actors involved in the process. Furthermore, free courses were launched on the Virtual Government School platform (EV.G), in collaboration with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), to promote training on qualified listening to vulnerable groups and combating migrant smuggling. Also, the Interministerial Ordinance MJSP/MTE No. 46 was published, which modifies the procedures for granting residence to victims of trafficking or slave labor, facilitating the necessary documentation and prioritizing the processing of applications. Additionally, the National Report on Human Trafficking (2021-2023) was presented, which gathers data and analysis on human trafficking in Brazil, obtained from reports by national authorities and experts on the matter.<sup>428</sup>

611. Finally, the Migrant Smuggling Action Plan was launched, developed by the National Secretariat of Justice (SENAJUS) and the IOM, with the aim of strengthening prevention, response, and cooperation in the fight against this transnational crime. As part of this effort, the MJSP is conducting a study in collaboration with the Federal University of Minas Gerais (UFMG) to collect data on judicial processes related to human trafficking and analogous to slavery, which will allow for a detailed diagnosis and the establishment of a database to improve the judicial response in these cases.<sup>429</sup>

612. The Commission positively highlights the measures reported by the State to fulfill the recommendation. In particular, it recognizes the importance of the National Week of Mobilization Against Human Trafficking, the publication of informational and educational materials, the training sessions on the subject, the development of the Standard Operating Protocol (POP/TIP), the facilitation of residency for victims, as well as the research and data collection on human trafficking and the launch of the Action Plan Against Migrant Smuggling. Based on these actions, the Commission concludes that the recommendation is making substantial progress toward partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

613. In order to guide the full implementation of this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to share information on the development and impact of the reported measures.

Recommendation No. 80. Strengthen government structures relating to the protection of the human rights of migrants, refugees, and stateless persons, especially Brazil's National Committee for Refugees (CONARE).

614. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State provided information about the Program to Attend to and Accelerate Asylum Policies for Afro-descendants, aimed at proposing migration solutions and public policies. It also promoted a simplified procedure for the submission of asylum applications for women and girls at risk of genital mutilation or ablation and LGBTIA+ persons. Furthermore, financial literacy courses were offered to immigrants and refugees. Even though these initiatives contributed to complying with the recommendation, the civil society highlighted the need to set up more decentralized CONARE units and to increase the participation of the civil society in the committee. The Commission considered that the level of compliance with this recommendation had advanced to partial and requested additional information on the new measures and on the restructuring of the National Immigration Council (CNIg), as well as on the creation of more CONARE units and on the improvement of civil society participation.<sup>430</sup>

615. In 2024, the State reported that the CONARE had analyzed 138,359 asylum applications, which accounted for a 235 percent increase against the previous year. The same year, 77,193 individuals were granted refugee status, the highest number in the history of the refugee system in Brazil, which represented a 1,232 percent increase against 2022. This significant increase caused the total number of individuals granted refugee status in Brazil to rise by 117.2 percent, thus reaching 143,033 individuals. In addition, the CONARE grew the number of observer members by including several ministries, such as the Ministry of Social Development, the Ministry of Human Rights, the MIR, the Ministry of Ports and Airports, and the MPI.<sup>431</sup>

616. Furthermore, in 2023, the State, in collaboration with the UNHCR, began to implement the Action Plan to Strengthen the Protection and Local Integration of the Haitian Population in Brazil," which is part of the Program to Attend to and Accelerate Asylum Policies for Afro-descendants. This plan, whose structuring is still underway in 2024, centers around four axes: mapping needs and making a diagnosis on the access to rights; expanding access to humanitarian responses and mechanisms for reception; strengthening socioeconomic integration strategies; and supporting Haitian community structures.<sup>432</sup>

617. The State considers that reforms are needed to improve the actions of the CNIg and to reshape its role in the Brazilian migration policy. Technical studies into its composition, organization and competence were conducted, which translated into a proposal that is expected to be submitted along with the PNMRA.<sup>433</sup>

618. The Commission welcomes the fact that the CONARE had the capacity to analyze almost 140,000 asylum applications and to grant refugee status to 77,000 individuals. The Commission also appreciates the fact that the CONARE increased the number of observer members by including several ministries and that the Action Plan to Strengthen the Protection and Local Integration of the Haitian Population in Brazil was developed and structured. Finally, the Commission is thankful for the information provided by the State on the need to reform the CNIg to reshape its role in the Brazilian migration policy.

619. Based on the measures that were reported as to the strengthening of government structures relating to the protection of the human rights of migrants, refugees and stateless persons, the Commission considers that the level of compliance with this recommendation has progressed to substantial partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

620. The Commission invites the State to continue providing updates on the actions of the CONARE, as well as on the development of the Action Plan to Strengthen the Protection and Local Integration of the Haitian Population in Brazil, and on the measures adopted to reform the CNIg.

Recommendation No. 81. Ensure effective access and due process guarantees in connection with administrative procedures regarding immigration and refugee documents.

621. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported that over 80,000 refugee status applications had been analyzed, double the amount reviewed in 2022, thanks to the improvements made in process management and IT tools, including the strengthening of the studies on the country of origin and the development of the SISCONARE system. The State added that 10,671 applications for naturalization had been decided on. Moreover, the civil society reported a return to democratic actions and an increase in its participation, even though there had been issues relating to expulsions without due process. The Commission appreciated the measures adopted to speed up immigration processes and to ensure a reasonable time for their completion. It concluded that the recommendation had progressed to substantial partial compliance and invited the State to continue ensuring said reasonable time and to provide up-to-date data on refugee and asylum processes.<sup>434</sup>

622. In 2024, the State underscored that it is simplifying the issuance of free identity documents for immigrants facing a situation of economic vulnerability, as required by Law No. 13,445 of 2017. The State added that, even though the issuance process is complex for immigrants, it is completed promptly when they submit all the required documentation. Furthermore, according to the State, the Federal Police has approximately 120 attention units across the country. For asylum applications, the process begins in the SISCONARE system and is followed by the biometric identification team at the Federal Police before being sent for its analysis to the CONARE. Refugee applicants receive a Provisional National Migration Registration

Document (DPRNM), and detailed information is made available on the website of the MJSP. On average, documents for immigrants are issued 15 days after the identification at the PF's attention units.<sup>435</sup>

623. Moreover, the State reported that the PF, through the National Migration Registration System (SISMIGRA), has granted refugee status to 59,362 individuals, has received 65,152 refugee status applications and has provided asylum to 500 individuals. To promote transparency in migration data, in 2013, the OBMigra was created in cooperation with the UnB. Recently, the observatory has launched "DataMigra BI," an easy-to-use tool that enables public access to up-to-date migration data.<sup>436</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

624. The Commission welcomes the measures reported by the State to promote effective access and due process guarantees in connection with administrative procedures regarding immigration and refugee documents. Based on the information sent and requested for the previous report, the Commission considers that this recommendation has reached full compliance and therefore will cease to follow up on it as of next year.

Recommendation No. 82. Issue affordable and non-stigmatizing provisional IDs for all asylum-seekers, stateless persons, and migrants, while taking additional measures to train public servants and raise awareness among the general population so as to ensure effective access to rights and services.

625. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State indicated that, as provided by Ordinance No. 9,277 of 2018, the DPRNM had been created to replace the Refugee Protocol, and that DPRNMs were issued as soon as asylum applications were received by the CONARE and the Federal Police systems, which had been integrated in 2020. However, no information was provided on any measures taken in 2023. For its part, the civil society pointed out that there were many undocumented immigrants living in Brazil due to the lack of regularization opportunities and to the delays resulting from border closures during the pandemic. The Commission noted that no information on the measures adopted in 2023 had been submitted and therefore it considered that the recommendation was still pending compliance. The Commission urged the State to provide up-to-date information on regularization measures and to take steps to ensure access to documentation, rights and services for vulnerable migrants.<sup>437</sup>

Information on compliance

626. In 2024, the State reported that, to ensure a decent, accessible and fast service, the Federal Police offers services at a number of units that meet the demand for such services, cooperate with civil society organizations and international bodies to assist immigrants, and organize special days of mass assistance in high-demand areas. The State claims that these actions reflect its awareness of how important identity documents are for immigrants to access public services and to be integrated into the labor market.<sup>438</sup>

627. In addition, the State held that it has taken steps to train agents on migration issues, as well as to raise awareness among them. The ENAP offers courses on this topic in its Escuela Virtual (Virtual School) platform, which is accessible to the public, along with specific courses for the Federal Police in the EAD platform of the National Police Academy. Furthermore, it was pointed out that the Federal Police provides constant internal training and collaborates with the civil society to increase the number of agents that are familiar with migration issues and to expand access to migration documents.<sup>439</sup>

628. Finally, the State highlighted the implementation of the SISCONARE platform since 2019, which records applications for refugee status recognition and manages asylum processes at all stages. Asylum seekers complete an online form and then present themselves at a Federal Police post for biometric and biographical identification. The integration of SISCONARE with the Federal Police's Sismigra system enables a unified service, streamlining administrative procedures and improving efficiency. In 2024, SISCONARE incorporated new functionalities, such as issuing certificates for applicants or recognized refugees and processing requests for reopening archived cases. Additionally, CG-Conare regularly issues documents, including corrections to recognition notifications or certificates.<sup>440</sup>

629. The Commission considers that the reported measures represent important steps towards compliance with the recommendation, especially the capacity of the Federal Police to provide services at appropriate units and its cooperation with civil society organizations and international bodies to assist immigrants, as well as its adjustments in high-demand areas. The Commission also acknowledges that the training measures on the matter targeted at Federal Police agents are appropriate. As a result, the Commission determines that the level of compliance with this recommendation has progressed to partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

630. To guide compliance with the recommendation, the Commission invites the State to share information on the measures adopted to ensure that vulnerable immigrants have easy access to identity documents.

Recommendation No. 83. Strengthen integrated steps to protect migrants from slave labor and guarantee prompt investigation, with all due diligence of any such cases, as well as punishment of those responsible.

631. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported that the General Coordinating Office on Labor Immigration (CGIL) of the MJSP granted residence permits for work-related reasons and that workplace inspections, which were carried out by the Labor Secretariat (SIT) of the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MTE), were aimed at monitoring the working conditions and guaranteeing the human rights of both Brazilian and immigrant workers. The State also submitted information on the Labor Inspectorate Statistics and Information Dashboard available on the Labor Inspectorate portal, which published data on slavery-like work, child work and infringement records. The MTE also worked on the promotion of labor rights and the fight against slave labor. However, the civil society voiced concerns over the State's failure to follow up on the Operação Acolhida relocation program and over the risk faced by many immigrants of becoming victims of slave-like work. The Commission appreciated the steps taken and noted that compliance with the recommendation was partial. It also urged the State to provide information on the specific measures adopted to investigate and punish labor exploitation, to ensure access to justice for immigrants and to report on the results achieved by the MPT.<sup>441</sup>

632. In 2024, the State reported that it continued to strengthen its policy for the eradication of slave labor, in which the SIT had a central role. Labor inspectors identify cases of slave-like work, hold employers responsible and rescue the victims, thus ensuring their labor rights. The SIT prepares technical reports that support legal action in the administrative, civil and criminal fields, which call for a comprehensive approach in cooperation with other institutions, such as the MPT, the Federal Public Defender's Office and the Federal Public Prosecutor's Office.<sup>442</sup> The State added that, in December 2024, the Inspection joined Alliance 8.7, making the country recognized as one of the pioneers in promoting international commitments to eradicate forced labor, modern slavery, human trafficking, and child labor.<sup>443</sup>

633. In addition, it was pointed out that the Office of Labor Inspectors has ample power to inspect workplaces without prior notice, review documents and impose sanctions. In 1995, Brazil created the Special Mobile Inspection Group (GEFM) to carry out actions in rural areas and rescue victims of slave labor. This strategy was replicated in the region to achieve a faster and better distributed response. The SIT also ensures that rescued workers are compensated for and, if employers fail to cooperate, the SIT removes the victims and guarantees temporary accommodation for them, as well as their return to their place of origin and their access to social benefits.<sup>444</sup>

634. The State added that over 63,000 workers had been rescued since 1995 and that employers had to pay over 148 million Brazilian reais in compensation. In 2023 the State informed that 3,292 workers were rescued and, in 2024, as of August, another 1,142 victims were rescued. Stronger actions are expected in 2025 with the incorporation of new inspectors. Also, the SIT has created an emergency assistance program to cover transport and basic needs in cases where the employer refuses to stop engaging in exploitative practices. The SIT also works in coordination with other institutions, such as the MPT and the Federal Public Defender's Office to ensure immediate judicial and administrative support.<sup>445</sup>

635. Furthermore, the State reported that it has implemented measures, such as the Registry of Employers, known as the "dirty list," and the National Treatment Protocol for Victims of Slave Labor, which was created in 2021 to coordinate the reporting, rescue and post-rescue assistance process. In 2020, the Ipê System, a multilingual digital platform for the reporting of slave labor, was launched, which has optimized the response to said reports. This year, as of October, 2,444 reports had been received through this efficient system that is available to all citizens.<sup>446</sup>

636. In 2003, Brazil developed its first National Plan for the Eradication of Slave Labor (PNETE) and created the National Commission for the Eradication of Slave Labor (CONATRAE) to coordinate actions between public bodies and society. Its second plan, which was released in 2008, added training and labor reintegration measures for rescued workers. Its third plan is currently underway and expected to be released in 2025 with new slave labor eradication goals.<sup>447</sup> The State explained that the Plan is under the coordination of the Ministry of Human Rights and Citizenship (MDHC), through CONATRAE, and is already in an advanced stage of development.<sup>448</sup>

637. In particular, as regards immigrants, the State held that assistance, protection and integral compensation measures apply to all victims of slave labor in Brazil, regardless of their nationality or migration status. For rescued irregular immigrant workers, Interministerial Ordinance MJSP/MTE No. 46 of 2024 guarantees a permanent residence authorization for those who want it and establishes the procedures for the Office of Labor Inspectors and other public agents to provide support to the victims of human trafficking, slave labor or rights violations. This ordinance, which is in line with the Palermo Protocol, also coordinates the second PNETE with the fourth National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking.<sup>449</sup>

638. Furthermore, in June 2024, by means of an Article 41 letter, the Commission requested information from the State on the increase in slave labor cases. According to official information in the public domain, in 2023, the MTE rescued almost 3,200 individuals working in slave-like conditions and, in 2024, the largest operation to combat slave labor was launched, and 593 workers were rescued.<sup>450</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

639. The Commission welcomes the measures adopted by the State to combat slave labor in the country and acknowledges the efforts that have been made for decades in this regard. The Commission highlights the drafting process of the third PNETE, as well the strengthening of existing policies among the new measures implemented in 2024. In particular, in relation to rescued immigrant workers, the Commission applauds Interministerial Ordinance MJSP/MTE No. 46 of 2024, which guarantees a permanent residence authorization and establishes the procedures for public agents to provide support to the victims of human trafficking, slave labor or rights violations.

640. However, the Commission also notes that the referred measures to combat slave labor are recent, so it is too soon to assess their impact on the actions already in course for that purpose. This has been a recurring issue in the inter-American system in relation to Brazil—from the case of the Hacienda Vale do Rio Cristalino, of 1995, to the case of the Hacienda Brasil Verde workers, of 2016—but it is not limited to rural areas: slave labor is also present in urban areas, where Brazilians and immigrants are exploited. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation continues to be partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

641. To achieve full compliance with the recommendation, the Commission invites the State to report on the completion and implementation of the third PNETE, detailing if said plan also addresses immigrant workers, and to submit information on any new measures designed to protect this group.

P. Memory, truth and justice

Recommendation No. 84. Establish a body to oversee compliance with the recommendations of the National Truth Commission.

642. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported that it was working on the creation of a deliberative instrument to monitor compliance with the 29 recommendations issued by the National Truth Commission (CNV). The State acknowledged that it had not paid these recommendations the attention they deserved over the past few years and underscored that the three branches of the Republic had to share the efforts towards compliance. According to a report drawn up by the Vladimir Herzog Institute, by the end of 2022, only two recommendations had been fully implemented, six had been partially implemented, 14 had not been implemented, and seven had experienced setbacks. In view of that, the Commission determined that compliance with the recommendation had progressed to partial, but it noted that, despite the efforts to create the new instrument, most recommendations had not been implemented and some had even suffered setbacks. The Commission highlighted the importance of completing the creation of said instrument, ensuring its autonomy, transparency and efficacy, and guaranteeing the participation of victims and the civil society, as well as the need to implement an action plan with its own accountability mechanisms.<sup>451</sup>

Information on compliance

643. For 2024, the State highlighted that the CNV had completed its work in 2014, having fulfilled its legal mandate to investigate human rights violations perpetrated between 1946 and 1988. All three branches of government, as well as some local governments, have the shared responsibility of implementing the recommendations included in the final report of the CNV. The MDHC has been monitoring compliance with a number of these recommendations, such as the correction of causes of death in death certificates, the modification of Infoseg Network records and other public records, the creation of mechanisms against torture, the improvement of the conditions of the penitentiary system, the provision of medical and psychological assistance to the victims, the promotion of human rights in education and the search and identification of the remains of individuals who disappeared for political reasons so that they could be returned to their families.<sup>452</sup>

644. In addition, the State reported that the MDHC was working on the creation of a permanent committee to monitor compliance with the recommendations issued by the CNV. Within the structure of the ministry, there is a Special Committee on Political Disappearances and Deaths (CEMDP), whose function is to officially acknowledge the death of persons who were detained for political reasons between 1961 and 1988, and who remain disappeared. The CEMDP also manages the search and identification of victims, as well as the compensation of their families. Furthermore, the MDHC and the CEMDP have requested a resolution from the CNJ to rectify the death records of the victims of the dictatorship included in the final report of the CNV.<sup>453</sup>

645. Notwithstanding that, civil society organizations have claimed that the State has been negligent in complying with the recommendations issued by the CNV. In this regard, organizations and the Federal Public Prosecutor's Office were allegedly working together to demand answers from the State. It was also pointed out that, according to the report prepared by the Vladimir Herzog Institute, out of the 29 recommendations, barely two were complied with (7 percent) and six were partially complied with (21 percent).<sup>454</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

646. The Commission welcomes the fact that the MDHC is in the process of creating a committee to monitor compliance with the recommendations issued by the CNV, as well as the fact that the MDHC and the CEMDP have requested a resolution from the CNJ to rectify the death records of the victims of the dictatorship. However, the Commission also draws attention to the information provided by civil society organizations on the level of compliance with the report of the CNV. Considering that the measures reported by the State are still under development, the Commission determines that the level of compliance with the recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

647. The Commission commends the initiative and highlights the importance of completing the creation of the deliberative instrument, ensuring the resources for its autonomy, transparency and efficacy, and guaranteeing the participation of victims and civil society representatives. The Commission also emphasizes the need to implement an action plan with accountability mechanisms.

Recommendation No. 85. Strengthen mechanisms and actions for making comprehensive reparation to the victims of human rights violations perpetrated during the civil-military dictatorship, including the deployment of physical and psychological rehabilitation measures for the victims and their next of kin, and continuation and strengthening of historical memory policies.

648. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State submitted information on the reorganization of the Amnesty Commission (CA), which had also appointed new directors and adopted new internal rules of procedure, which enabled a more expedited review of amnesty applications. Despite the major changes that it had undergone since 2016, which resulted in the rejection of most declarations of amnesty and compensation, the CA had received 79,389 applications as of August 2023. Out of these, 3,400 were still pending review. Civil society organizations had confirmed the resumption of the activities of the CA in accordance with the Rule of Law, although few reparations had been awarded in 2023. The Commission considered that compliance with the recommendation had progressed to partial and called on the State to continue reviewing applications and to guarantee comprehensive reparation measures for the victims of the dictatorship, as well as to preserve the archives relating to the dictatorial regime.<sup>455</sup>

649. For 2024, the State reported that the CEMDP is the body responsible for acknowledging and compensating the victims of the dictatorship. In this regard, the State held that money was transferred to the families of dead or disappeared persons who had their applications reviewed and approved in accordance with the law regulating the CEMDP. The State added that the CA is tasked with the promotion of political compensation for victims. During 2024, the CA reviewed 1,033 political amnesty applications. Out of these, seven were collective amnesty applications. The CA has already resolved 80,000 processes and intends to resolve all pending 7,000 processes by 2026, when it is expected to cease to operate.<sup>456</sup>

650. At the same time, the CEMDP had suspended its operation in December 2022, despite having pending applications. When Brazil's administration changed in 2023, the MDHC advanced the restoration of the CEMDP, which resumed its work in July 2024 thanks to a decision by the President confirming the continuation of the CEMDP and appointing new members. The reopening ceremony was held on August 30, 2024, when the new internal rules of procedure were presented and the CNJ was requested to rectify the death certificates of the victims of the dictatorship. In addition, feedback was collected from family members and implemented in the plan of activities of the CEMDP.<sup>457</sup>

651. Notwithstanding the foregoing, civil society organizations informed the Commission that, in spite of the resumption of its activities, the CA was working with little resources and resolving a small number of cases. They added that the amnesty application submitted by Vladimir Herzog and his children, for example, despite having been ruled on by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, had not yet been resolved, unlike the application submitted by his wife.<sup>458</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

652. The Commission applauds the information relating to the activities of the CA and the CEMDP as a way of ensuring integral compensation to the victims of human rights violations perpetrated in the context of the dictatorship in Brazil. In particular, the Commission commends the resolution of over 1,000 cases by the CA and takes note of the adoption of the new internal rules of procedure of the CEMDP, the adoption of a plan of activities and the request submitted to the CNJ to rectify the death certificates of the victims of the dictatorship.

653. Based on the foregoing, the Commission considers that the State has taken important steps towards compliance with the recommendation, but it underscores that the CA still has several unresolved processes and that the CEMDP has just resumed its work, so compliance with the recommendation remains partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

654. As a way to guide compliance with the recommendation, the Commission calls on the State to ensure that the CA is able to meet its goal of resolving all pending processes by 2026 and that the CEMDP resumes its work shortly. In this regard, the Commission underscores the importance of allocating sufficient human and financial resources to both institutions for that purpose.

Recommendation No. 86. Take, ex officio, all steps needed to determine the fate or whereabouts of the victims of forced disappearance, identify their mortal remains, and deliver them to their family members. Search operations should be part of a comprehensive public policy regarding disappearances, and they should be conducted, systematically and rigorously, by independent and impartial entities, using adequate human and technical resources and guaranteeing communication and coordination with the victims' next of kin.

655. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported that, even though the CEMDP had historically been the main body responsible for the search of persons who had disappeared during the dictatorship, it paused its activities in 2019 and ceased its work altogether in 2022. The State added that it was looking to restore the CEMDP to full operation and that it was negotiating agreements to continue identifying bone remains at the Perus clandestine mass grave. The Commission voiced its concern over the fact that the work of the CEMDP was interrupted and later brought to an end, considering that compliance with the recommendation was still pending, and it urged the State to resume the operation of the institution, as well as to ensure resources to search for and identify victims, and to return their remains with dignity to their next of kin.<sup>459</sup>

Information on compliance

656. For 2024, the State reported that, since early 2023, the MDHC has worked on the restoration of the CEMDP, which was formally reopened in July 2024 by means of a presidential decision.<sup>460</sup>

657. The State added that the MDHC, through the new Special Advisory for the Defense of Democracy, Memory and Truth, has promoted policies and collaborations to advance the identification of the victims of forced disappearances perpetrated during the dictatorship. Among other efforts, 46 human remains samples found in the Perus clandestine mass grave (SP) were sent to the International Commission on Missing Persons at The Hague for their genetic testing. Furthermore, a work plan is being developed to resume the investigations relating to the Araguaia Guerrilla in collaboration with the Federal University of South and Southwest Pará (UNIFESSPA). The CEMDP is also drafting a plan of activities, with a special emphasis on the search and identification of the victims of forced disappearance for political reasons.<sup>461</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

658. The Commission welcomes the creation of a body responsible for the defense of democracy, memory and truth within the federal administration. The Commission also commends the State for achieving progress in the work at the Perus clandestine mass grave, as well as for the development of a work plan to resume the investigations relating to the Araguaia Guerrilla. However, even though these measures represent important steps towards compliance with the recommendation, the Commission considers that they are still at an early stage or under development. In view of that, the Commission determines that compliance with the recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

659. To guide the State in the implementation of the recommendation, the Commission reaffirms the need to undertake efforts to search for the victims of forced disappearances perpetrated during the dictatorship. In this regard, the Commission highlights the need to ensure the availability of the resources that are needed to advance the process of determining the total number of victims of the dictatorship and to clarify the fate of said victims and ensure their search and identification, as well as the return of their remains to their families, if applicable. In this regard, the Commission recalls the importance of implementing a comprehensive public policy on disappearances.

Recommendation No. 87. Investigate, prosecute, and wherever criminal liability is determined, punish the perpetrators and instigators of gross human rights violations, while refraining from having recourse to such notions as amnesty, pardon, or prescription due to any statute of limitations, or any other provisions precluding responsibility, and measures intended to prevent criminal prosecution or annul the effects of a conviction.

660. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported that the prosecution of human rights violations committed during the dictatorship in Brazil was still limited by the Amnesty Law, which protected state agents involved in them from criminal punishment. Although the Federal Public Prosecutor's Office took steps to allow for the possibility of holding state agents criminally liable, the application of this law continued to represent an obstacle to justice. At that time, the Commission acknowledged the efforts undertaken by the Federal Public Prosecutor's Office, but it also underscored that the Amnesty Law prevented the State from complying with the recommendation and considered that it remained pending. The Commission urged the State to intensify justice efforts in line with inter-American standards.<sup>462</sup>

661. In 2024, the State did not submit information on compliance with this recommendation.<sup>463</sup>

662. For their part, civil society organizations highlighted that the State had not taken the necessary measures to intensify justice efforts and that no progress was seen in the area of criminal liability for the serious violations of human rights committed during the dictatorship. In spite of the judgments passed by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Gomes Lund et al. ("Guerrilha do Araguaia") v. Brazil and Herzog et al. v. Brazil, no final convictions were issued. The denial of justice is allegedly structural and affects all three branches of government, which are supposed to exercise the control of conventionality. The Federal Public Prosecutor's Office has allegedly made attempts to fulfill this duty by submitting reports against dictatorship agents, but it has experienced setbacks, such as the elimination of working groups that specialize in transitional justice.<sup>464</sup>

663. The organizations also highlighted that, in the Brazilian justice system, judges have rarely admitted cases relating to violations of human rights committed in the context of the dictatorship and that, when they have, proceedings were halted or terminated by higher courts' decisions based on the statute of limitations and the Amnesty Law. As a result, no convictions have been issued and several cases have been closed, including the one against Sebastião Curió, who died in 2022 without facing punishment or revealing the truth about his actions. The position of the STF on the Amnesty Law, which has prevailed and obstructed justice, continues to be a major obstacle inasmuch as it is used as grounds to close complaints relating to serious violations and crimes against humanity.<sup>465</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

664. Due to the lack of updated information from the State and considering the information provided by civil society organizations regarding the failure to punish those responsible for serious human rights violations committed during the dictatorship, compliance with the recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

665. To steer the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission calls on the State to refrain from applying legal concepts that exempt perpetrators from liability and to intensify its justice efforts by seeking specific outcomes based on inter-American standards in terms of criminal responsibility for the serious violations committed during the dictatorship.

Recommendation No. 88. Ratify the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity.

666. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State failed to submit specific information on compliance. In this regard, the Commission reiterated that the recommendation was still pending and once again urged the State to ratify the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity.<sup>466</sup>

Information on compliance

667. In 2024, the State again failed to report measures aimed at complying with this recommendation.<sup>467</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

668. Based on the foregoing, compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

669. The Commission once again urges the State to ratify the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity.

Recommendation No. 89. Classify the crime of enforced disappearance, according to inter-American parameters.

670. In 2023, the State reported on the ratification of international conventions against forced disappearance and on the creation of the National Policy on the Search for Disappeared Persons in 2019, even though it did not expressly include forced disappearance. The State also referred to a bill that was under debate in Congress. The Commission acknowledged these efforts, but it noted that Brazil had not yet classified the crime of enforced disappearance appropriately in accordance with the inter-American standards. As a result, compliance with the recommendation was still pending.<sup>468</sup>

Information on compliance

671. In 2024, the State informed that Bill No. 6,240 of 2013, which is still being processed by the National Congress, proposes to classify enforced disappearance as a heinous crime. The bill is now ready to be evaluated by the Committee on the Constitution, Justice and Citizenship (CCJC) of the Chamber of Deputies. During its processing, the bill was amended and approved in permanent committees. The proposal responds to the demands for justice and memory for the crimes perpetrated during the military dictatorship (1964-1985) and strengthens state mechanisms for the defense of democracy and historical truth, in line with recommendation no. 19 of the final report of the CNV to improve legislation on crimes against humanity and forced disappearances.<sup>469</sup>

672. The State acknowledged the importance of aligning its domestic legislation with inter-American standards regarding the classification of enforced disappearance. It emphasized that, although the specific criminal classification of "enforced disappearance" is not included in the Penal Code, the country ratified the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance in 2016. Additionally, individuals involved in enforced disappearance are subject to charges such as kidnapping, unlawful imprisonment, concealment of a corpse, among others.<sup>470</sup>

673. For their part, civil society organizations pointed out that the need to classify the crime of enforced disappearance in Brazil was still an obstacle to justice, according to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Gomes Lund et al. ("Guerrilha do Araguaia") v. Brazil. Even though the Federal Public Prosecutor's Office was allegedly resorting to the crime of kidnapping due to the nonexistence of the crime of enforced disappearance, the lack of a specific classification prevents these cases from receiving adequate treatment and hinders the administration of justice. In addition, the classification is essential to avoid the repetition of these crimes, considering that enforced disappearances are still happening in the country, which would perpetuate impunity. Although bills on this issue have allegedly been processed in the past 10 years, none of them were approved and some contained errors: for example, some allowed for the application of the military jurisdiction or failed to establish the non-applicability of statutory limitations or sanctions that fit the seriousness of the crime, according to the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances.<sup>471</sup>

674. The Commission once again warns the State of the importance of classifying the crime of enforced disappearance, given its seriousness and particular implications in the human rights context. Therefore, the Commission determines that compliance with the recommendation continues to be partial.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

675. The Commission finds that, for the State to comply with the recommendation, the crime of forced disappearance must be properly classified in the country's domestic legal order, based on the inter-American standards.

IV. CONCLUSIONS

678. The Commission commends the State of Brazil for the many important steps it has taken to comply with the recommendations on human rights. In particular, in 2024, four recommendations progressed to full compliance, which reflects the considerable efforts undertaken by the State of Brazil to comply with its obligations relating to human rights. These recommendations include the development of systems for the collection of accurate and disaggregated data, such as the ObservaDH platform, which provides detailed information on the situation of human rights of vulnerable groups. This system, with over 500 indicators and multiple sources of data, helps to create public policies that are more tailored to the needs of vulnerable groups. However, important challenges persist, which limit effective compliance with the recommendations in many aspects.

679. With regard to violence against women, the Commission applauds the State's efforts to combat gender-based violence, by implementing programs such as the National Femicide Prevention Pact and the Mulher, Viver sem Violência program, which are allocated significant funding. The creation of Brazilian Women's Houses CMBs and CRMBs, which offer comprehensive services to women victims of violence, represent important steps towards the protection and empowerment of women. Notwithstanding that, civil society organizations have pointed out that these measures still fail to fully address the multiple intersectional factors that affect Afro-descendant, indigenous, disabled, trans and lesbian women, and that they do not eliminate the systemic barriers that these groups continue to face. In addition, there is concern as to the predominantly punitive approach of these policies, which neither gets to the structural root of gender-based violence nor offers enough prevention.

680. As to the rights of persons with disabilities, significant progress was achieved in 2024 towards their inclusion in social programs and access to basic services. The expansion of the Benefício de Prestação Continuada program and the strengthening of the PROCAD-SUAS have increased coverage and assistance for persons with disabilities facing a situation of economic vulnerability. Nonetheless, the Commission notes that persons with disabilities still face obstacles to access health, education and employment and therefore a wider implementation of measures and continuous awareness are required to reduce stigmatization and exclusionary practices.

681. As regards indigenous peoples, while the creation of the MPI and the increase in its budget represent important steps, structural challenges to the protection of their territorial and cultural rights continue to exist. The threats to their ancestral lands, the illegal exploitation of their resources and the violence against indigenous leaders demonstrate a lack of effective protection of their rights. The Commission reiterates the importance of implementing measures to protect their territories and of ensuring their right to prior, free and informed consultation in every decision that affects them.

682. The Commission also welcomes the expansion of social assistance programs, such as Bolsa Família and Minha Casa, Minha Vida, which prioritize the most vulnerable groups, including women, persons of African descent and indigenous communities, in an attempt to reduce structural inequality. Notwithstanding that, challenges persist to the implementation of a fiscal policy that effectively reduces socioeconomic inequality gaps and that addresses labor market limitations to achieve a fair distribution of wealth.

683. The Commission also identifies significant challenges in the field of memory, truth and justice. Despite the efforts of the truth commissions at the federal and state level, high levels of impunity continue to exist in relation to torture cases, forced disappearances and other serious human rights violations committed during the military dictatorship. The Commission urges the State to achieve progress in the implementation of transitional justice measures through effective investigation and appropriate punishment, as well as to promote education on and awareness about these issues to avoid the repetition of said crimes.

684. Finally, it is noteworthy for the Commission that structural racism continues to pose a serious challenge in Brazil. Despite the State's efforts to fight racial discrimination by strengthening the MIR, implementing affirmative policies and training judicial operators, racial profiling practices persist within the police and the judiciary. Data shows that persons of African descent are disproportionately affected by police violence and face bigger obstacles to access justice. For that reason, the Commission calls on the State to intensify its efforts to eradicate these discriminatory practices, especially from police and judicial protocols, and to develop policies that effectively promote racial equality.

685. In conclusion, the Commission acknowledges that the State has shown progress in the development and expansion of policies aimed at protecting and promoting human rights. However, structural challenges continue to exist, calling for a more effective and inclusive implementation of said policies, with an intersectional and human rights approach that responds to the specific characteristics of each vulnerable group. The Commission once again urges the State to continue stepping up its efforts to defend human rights and to ensure that any measures implemented are able to reduce inequality and fight discriminatory practices that are still present in Brazilian society. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that the level of compliance with the report remains partial.

PARTIALLY DISSENTING OPINION OF COMMISSIONER CARLOS BERNAL PULIDO ON CHAPTER V (BRAZIL) OF THE 2024 ANNUAL REPORT

With the customary respect for my colleagues and in accordance with Article 19.1 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (“the Commission” or “the IACHR”), I submit a partially dissenting opinion on certain points raised by the majority of the plenary of the Commission in Chapter V corresponding to the State of Brazil (“the Chapter” or “Chapter V (Brazil)”) of the 2024 Annual Report on the Development of Human Rights in the Region, Overview of the Human Rights Situation by Country (the “Report” or the “Annual Report”).

This follow-up chapter on the situation in Brazil contains information and considerations that are crucial for making progress in ensuring human rights in the State and the region. Notwithstanding the foregoing, in this reasoned opinion I will state that Chapter V: (i) contains considerations that pose a risk to pregnant persons and disregard integral needs of women and (ii) is imprecise in relation to the rights of LGBTI persons.

1. Chapter IV. A contains considerations that pose a risk to pregnant women and ignore the integral needs of women

Next, I will address the following issues: (i) the non-existence of the right to abortion and the margin of state configuration; (ii) the deficit of protection for the unborn.

1.1. Non-existence of the right to abortion and the state’s margin of configuration

Paragraphs 344 et seq. of Chapter V (Brazil) reference the need to ensure access to abortion. In addition, the report provides an analysis of access to the procedure in cases where rape has occurred.

In that regard, first, I should emphasize that although the IACHR does not affirm the existence of a “right to abortion,” nor does it clarify its non-existence in international law. In this regard, there are no binding sources in international law -and especially in the American Convention or other treaties that make up the Inter-American System- that contemplate (i) the so-called right to abortion or (ii) a correlative obligation for States to provide abortion services. Under this framework, the States have a wide margin of configuration - by virtue of the principles of subsidiarity or complementarity and representative democracy - to take measures to protect prenatal life - which is protected by the American Convention<sup>472</sup> - including, although it is not the only means, the use of criminal law.

In his partially dissenting opinion to the judgment in the case of Manuela et al. v. El Salvador, former IACHR Court Judge Eduardo Vio Grossi stated that there is no right to abortion:

“And in this regard it is indisputable that, (...) there is no inter-American or international legal norm, whether conventional, international custom or general principle of law, that recognizes abortion as a right. There are only resolutions of international bodies, most of which are made up of international officials and not representatives of States, decisions which, in addition to not being binding, are not interpretative of current international law but rather reflect aspirations for it to change in the direction they suggest”.<sup>473</sup>

Now, I emphasize that this margin of configuration derived from the non-existence of a right to abortion and the convergence of rights in tension acquires greater amplitude thanks to the competence that falls to the States to define punishable conducts and their consequences, and to the automatic referral that, according to the

IACHR Court, Article 7.2 of the American Convention makes to domestic law for the area of deprivation of liberty (principle of reservation of law).<sup>474</sup>

This is relevant if one takes into account that, from a systematic reading of Articles 31, 76 and 77 of the American Convention, only through consensus—expressed by the States through the signature and ratification of amendments or treaties—can additional international obligations arise in addition to those already contemplated in the ACHR. In the absence of such a consensus on abortion, it is therefore impossible to consider that there is a obligation for states to recognize a “right to abortion.”

In that regard, in view of the State’s assertions regarding the existence of a “right to abortion,” it was essential that the IACHR clarify in its report what international law provides on the matter.

Regarding the Secretariat’s statement in relation to the response to my initial comments on this chapter that “just as it has not been established either conventionally or jurisprudentially that there is a ‘right to abortion,’ there is no conventional basis or jurisprudence that states that abortion is a violation of the right to life of the fetus,” I consider it essential to clarify that abortion is not a right and, therefore, that States have no benefit obligations under international law where abortion is concerned. On the other hand, I clarify that it is rare for a conventional source to explicitly define the specific situations in which the recognized rights are violated. However, what is clearly established in the conventional sphere is that the right to life is protected from conception (Art. 4.1 ACHR), which implies that this right can be violated by conduct that results in an arbitrary deprivation of life, as could be the case of abortion.

Likewise, following the logic of the Secretariat’s statement, it is true that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has not analyzed any specific case in which the violation of the right to life of a fetus has been alleged. However, it is relevant to note that it did hear the case of Beatriz v. El Salvador in which the alleged existence of a “right to abortion” was alleged, and at no time did the Court recognize the existence of such a right.<sup>475</sup> This is further evidence of the non-existence of a binding legal source giving rise to a supposed right to abortion.

Furthermore, in the Artavia Murillo judgment, the Inter-American Court determined that “the protection of the right to life is not absolute, but gradual and incremental as the development of the fetus progresses”. This implies that, without prejudice to the concepts of graduality and incrementality (from which I completely separate myself), the Court has already established that persons in gestation must be protected by the State in their “right to life”. In a similar sense, in the judgment of the Cuscul Pivaral case<sup>476</sup>, the IACHR Court applied the ACHR to a person in gestation and also applied Article 19 of the ACHR, thus recognizing the legal status of a child to the person in gestation.

Therefore, I insist that any analysis related to this issue must start from a strict respect for the conventional framework, considering that the right to life is a right recognized from conception and on the contrary, there is no “right to abortion” in international law.

2. Deficit of protection for the unborn in the Report

Secondly, I emphasize that the references to abortion in the Report ignore the other person whose right to life is also conventionally protected: the unborn person. Thus, the necessary weighting that must exist between the rights in tension of all internationally protected persons is ignored. In this regard, it is emphasized that unborn persons are also subjects of law and holders of the right to life. A pronouncement on abortion always implies a position on a practice that necessarily implies the termination of the life of a dignified human being and that Article 4 of the ACHR protects, so it is necessary to expressly recognize the rights of the unborn person as part of the weighing required in any case of abortion.

<sup>476</sup> I/A Court H.R., Case of Cuscul Pivaral v. Guatemala. Case of Cuscul Pivaral v. Guatemala. Judgment of August 23, 2018. “On the other hand, the Court has pointed out that extreme poverty and the lack of adequate medical care for pregnant or post-pregnant women are causes of high maternal mortality and morbidity, so the States must provide adequate health policies that allow to offer assistance with adequately trained personnel for the care of births, policies to prevent maternal mortality through adequate pre-natal and post-partum controls, and legal and administrative instruments in health policies that allow to adequately document cases of maternal mortality. Likewise, the Court has recognized that, by virtue of Article 19 of the Convention, the State must assume a special position of guarantor with greater care and responsibility, and must take special measures guided by the principle of the best interests of the child”

In this regard, Article 1.2 of the ACHR clearly establishes that, for the purposes of the Convention, a “person” is every human being.<sup>477</sup> Thus, in light of the Convention, human rights are not only recognized for persons who have already been born, but all individuals must be protected from their conception, understanding them as human beings. Moreover, the IACHR Court itself in its advisory opinion 22 indicated that, without being a matter open to interpretation, the term person is equivalent to the term human being for the purposes of the ACHR.<sup>478</sup>

In view of this, there is no doubt that the unborn person is a human being.<sup>479</sup> Even the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights states that “the human genome is the basis of the fundamental unity of all members of the human family and of the recognition of their inherent dignity and diversity. In a symbolic sense, the human genome is the heritage of humanity”.<sup>480</sup>

The consequence of recognizing the unborn, as a person, as a human being is that he or she becomes a holder of rights. Thus, the ACHR establishes in the articles that develop rights the formula “Every person (...)”<sup>481</sup> Likewise, the instruments for the protection of human rights generally recognize the ownership of rights by members of the human species, especially the right to life<sup>482</sup>.

As I have already mentioned, it is clear, even from the Artavia Murillo ruling, that the right to life of unborn children must be protected. In a similar sense, in the judgment of the Cuscul Pivaral case,<sup>483</sup> the IACHR Court applied the ACHR to a person in gestation and also applied Article 19 of the ACHR, thus recognizing the legal status of a child to the person in gestation.

I emphasize that the preamble of the Convention on the Rights of the Child states that the child needs protection and care both before and after birth.<sup>484</sup> This implies that, in light of the CRC, the unborn person is a child who requires special care. This was reiterated in the preparatory work for the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.<sup>485</sup>

In fact, the report provides an analysis of access to the procedure in cases where rape has occurred. In that regard, of course, I wholeheartedly share the concern expressed in the report about cases of sexual violence and the consequences of such acts, especially for women, and I emphasize that States have the duty to prevent, investigate, prosecute, and punish sexual violence with full force. Notwithstanding the foregoing, in cases of pregnancies that are the result of an act of sexual violence, the rights of the woman, on the one hand, and the right to life of the unborn child, on the other, must be considered. That balance, which recognizes all the people involved in the matter, is not evident in the draft report.

3. Inaccuracies in relation to the rights of LGBTI persons

In relation to this, below, I will refer to: (i) the non-existence of a right to gender identity; (ii) the misplaced approach to the right to religious freedom and the right of parents to choose the education of their children; and (iii) the lack of basis for the State's duty to adopt specific benefit measures.

3.1. Non-existence of the right to gender identity

The concept of "gender identity" is included as a right throughout the draft report. In this regard, I reiterate that the American Convention does not expressly recognize a right to gender identity, nor is there a binding instrument in the inter-American system that establishes an obligation to adapt identification documents to gender identity.

As I have indicated, recognizing new rights that are not in the Convention through an interpretation that does not follow the procedures established in the Convention itself would undermine Articles 31, 76 and 77, ignoring the original will of the States that ratified the Convention.

Therefore, any pronouncement in which one of the organs of the ISHR applies a right that is not established in the binding instruments of international law that govern its activity will be an act that will violate the literal meaning of the American Convention and will exceed the scope of the competences of the IACHR or the Court, as the case may be. Such an irregular constitutive act would also undermine the principles of good faith and pacta sunt servanda.<sup>486</sup>

However, the fact that there is no "right to gender identity" does not mean that "gender identity" cannot be considered a suspect category in relation to the right to equality. However, this does not imply the creation of a new stand-alone right, since its analysis must be placed within the framework of a conventionally recognized right, i.e., that of equality. Likewise, even when a State recognizes the need to protect gender identity, that does not necessarily imply its recognition as an independent right within the framework of the inter-American human rights system.

On the other hand, although I am not unaware that OC-24/17 affirmed the existence of the so-called "right to gender identity", I emphasize, as I have done on other occasions, that the Advisory Opinions of the IACHR Court do not have the capacity to contemplate rights or obligations other than those expressly contemplated by the American Convention.<sup>487</sup>

In this regard, in the first place, Article 68 of the Convention is clear in that the States are obliged to comply with the decisions rendered by the Court "in any case to which they are parties". This provision is of great relevance in that (i) it is the only one that refers to the legal value of the Court's pronouncements and (ii) it circumscribes the binding nature expressly for the States parties to a case, thus limiting the addressee of the obligations -the State party to a case- and the context in which the pronouncement is issued -that is, the contentious one-. This position has also been sustained by some sectors of the doctrine, also based on the principle of consent of the States as the basis of conventional law.<sup>488</sup>

<sup>487</sup> I/A Court H.R., Gender identity, and equality and non-discrimination of same-sex couples. State obligations in relation to the change of name, gender identity, and rights derived from a bond between same-sex couples (interpretation and scope of Articles 1(1), 3, 7, 11(2), 13, 17, 18 and 24, in relation to Article 1 of the American Convention on Human Rights). Advisory Opinion OC-24/17 of November 24, 2017. Series A No. 24.

Secondly, specifically regarding OC-24/17, it is appropriate to take into consideration Article 64 of the ACHR, which circumscribes the competence of the Court to issue advisory opinions regarding the Convention or treaties of the Inter-American System. Thus, given that OC-24/17 establishes alleged rights not contemplated in the ACHR, nor in any other treaty of the IAHR, its binding nature is even more questionable.

Thirdly, to derive obligations or so-called rights not contemplated in the Convention, based exclusively on an advisory opinion, would be contrary to the principle of pacta sunt servanda that governs international treaty law, by virtue of which States are only bound to comply with that to which they have expressed their consent.<sup>489</sup>

Fourth, although the Inter-American Court has affirmed that advisory opinions are parameters of conventionality control,<sup>490</sup> I emphasize that an open and transparent inter-American dialogue is still necessary to further discuss this position, which is not expressly derived from the American Convention, nor from any other international instrument binding on the States. I call attention to the fact that there is still no consensus on the matter, neither in the States of the region nor in the academy; hence, important constitutional courts still refrain from invoking the figure of conventionality control and from incorporating advisory opinions as a parameter.<sup>491</sup>

Finally, I note that some authors have indicated that the extension of the effects of the advisory opinions could contribute to distort the functioning of the Inter-American System and, thus, weaken it, since (i) it results in equating the decisions issued in the advisory function of the Court with the text of the convention itself,<sup>492</sup> and (ii) blurs the differences between the jurisdictional and advisory functions of the Court. Some have even indicated that these interpretations of the Court generate legal uncertainty, since there is no certainty as to the effects with which the advisory opinions are issued.<sup>493</sup>

In conclusion, it is technically unsound and contrary to the American Convention to assert that there is a “right to gender identity.”

1.1. Misplaced approach to the right to religious freedom and the right of parents to choose the education of their children

Paragraph 382 of the Chapter states that the majority “is concerned that there are almost a hundred laws in various areas that, with the justification of protecting rights, violate the rights of transvestites and transsexuals in the country.” This statement, read in relation to paragraph 367, refers to laws that limit the use of neutral language and protection of religious freedom in schools in some Brazilian states.

This statement in the draft report is troubling, primarily because it seems to imply that the protection of religious freedom is a “justification” for the violation of rights. This statement trivializes and jeopardizes the religious freedom of individuals in the region.

This is not to ignore the fact that, as with any right, tensions can exist between the right to religious freedom and other basic guarantees. However, the matter should be analyzed on a case-by-case basis according to criteria of proportionality in conflicts arising between the exercise of religious freedom and other rights.<sup>494</sup>

<sup>490</sup> I/A Court H.R., Rights and guarantees of children in the context of migration and/or in need of international protection. Advisory Opinion OC-21/14 of August 19, 2014. Series A No. 21, para. 31.

Thus, an interpretation that consider religious freedom as a “justification” for the violation of rights, without taking into account the peculiarities of the cases, (i) would imply consolidating a hierarchical vision of rights, which is far removed from the foundations of international human rights law; (ii) would completely depart from the logic of weighing rights; and (iii) would represent, consequently, a very serious attack on one of the most important guarantees of every individual in the domestic jurisdiction.

Secondly, with these considerations, the majority of the IACHR overlooks that Article 12(4) of the ACHR establishes the guarantee that parents have the right to choose the religious and moral education (including sexual education) of their children that is in accord with their own convictions. Thus, limiting the use of certain language may be a legitimate expression of the parents’ choice regarding their children’s moral education.

This same guarantee has been provided for in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>495</sup>, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights<sup>496</sup>, the Convention on the Rights of the Child<sup>497</sup> and the Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights<sup>498</sup>. According to the ECtHR, the right of parents to choose their children’s education, including sex education, is an aspect of the right to respect for private and family life protected by the ECHR.<sup>499</sup>

In this regard, there is a consensus on the existence and recognition of this right of parents. The Inter-American Commission has understood that the right of parents to choose the education of their children (i) must be interpreted in conjunction with the rights of children and adolescents, especially the right to education<sup>500</sup> and (ii) must respect the provisions of the Inter-American instruments that establish that education must be oriented to train children to respect human rights, public freedoms and tolerance<sup>501</sup>.

Of course I agree with these criteria, however, it cannot be omitted that: (i) all types of education must be respectful of the best interests of children as a guiding principle, and (ii) the right of parents to choose the education of their children is derived from the right to education of children itself; therefore, there is a false dilemma in considering that both rights are incompatible.

Thus, the ECtHR, in its interpretation of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1, has stated that,<sup>502</sup> it is on the fundamental right to education that the right of parents to respect for their philosophical and religious convictions is based. According to the European Court of Human Rights, although the ownership of this right rests with the parents, it also rests with the children, who have the right to education and teaching.<sup>503</sup>

Undoubtedly, this right has an impact on the sexual education of children and adolescents since sexual education, like any other type of education, must be framed within the scope of protection of conventional law, recognized by international human rights law, which grants parents the right to choose the education of their children, in accordance with Article 12.4 of the Convention.

1.2. Lack of basis for the State’s duty to adopt specific benefit measures

Paragraph 399 states that the majority “values the implementation of quotas for trans persons in public universities, as well as for public competitions. Despite considering positive measures in the sense of the implementation of the recommendation, the IACHR considers that such measures are still not sufficient to guarantee a cultural change through education regarding the rights of LGBTQIA+ persons.”

<sup>503</sup> Case of Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen and Pedersen v. Denmark. Denmark (ECHR 1976/5 of 7 December, nr. 52).

This and other paragraphs in the report seem to imply that the State should adopt specific benefit measures in relation to people that identify as transgender. However, neither in the Report, nor in the information submitted by the State are there any elements from which to conclude that such measures, including “quotas” in public universities, are duly justified, much less necessary to meet the State’s human rights obligations. It is important to emphasize that the justification of benefit measures must be supported by solid, rigorous technical studies that demonstrate their propriety, effectiveness, and proportionality.

In this context, I reiterate my call for the IACHR to incorporate in its report statements that have a robust academic and technical basis, and avoid statements that lack rigor and proper grounds. In that respect, the Strategic Plan establishes transparency as an institutional value, and therefore the IACHR should account for its decisions and work.<sup>504</sup> That institutional value should inform in a crosscutting manner each of the Commission’s processes and its realization is subject, inter alia, to the existence of support for any statements issued.

I reiterate that it is necessary for the Commission to adopt a rigorous and methodologically sound approach in all its pronouncements. Methodological rigor, as has been doctrinally sustained, involves adopting parameters and measures to ensure the credibility, authenticity, trustworthiness, and integrity of certain findings.<sup>505</sup> In that regard, I should emphasize that in social sciences, a high-quality study that is rigorous stands apart from a substandard one.<sup>506</sup>

Rigor is all the more important when the information put forward has the potential to shape policies, strategies, and measures to be pursued in addressing certain phenomena. Within this framework, such conceptual power must be regulated in some way, so that judgments made on the basis of that knowledge are legitimate and consistent with the sources from which they arose.<sup>507</sup> This is because research without rigor becomes the unauthorized voice of a knowledge that becomes uncertain.<sup>508</sup>

The foregoing is even more relevant if the principle of providing grounds is taken into account. Providing proper grounds is the “the exteriorization of the reasoned justification that allows a conclusion to be reached.”<sup>509</sup> All bodies that adopt decisions with the potential to affect human rights must duly substantiate those decisions lest they become arbitrary.<sup>510</sup>

CHAPTER V

FOLLOW-UP OF RECOMMENDATIONS ISSUED BY THE IACHR IN ITS COUNTRY OR THEMATIC REPORTS

THIRD FOLLOW-UP REPORT ON COMPLIANCE WITH THE RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY THE IACHR IN THE REPORT ON THE SITUATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN EL SALVADOR IN 2021<sup>1</sup>

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The purpose of this chapter is to continue following up on the recommendations issued in the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in El Salvador, which was approved on October 14, 2021, by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (hereinafter "Commission", "Inter-American Commission" or "IACHR"), pursuant to Article 59(9) of its Rules of Procedure. Pursuant to this provision through Chapter V of its Annual Report, the Commission will follow up on the measures adopted by the Member States of the Organization of American States (hereinafter "OAS") to comply with the recommendations made in the country or thematic reports of the IACHR.

2. Regarding the background of this follow-up report, following a request from the Inter-American Commission, on July 2, 2019, the State granted its consent to conduct an in loco visit to the country, which took place between December 2 and 4, 2019. In this regard, the Commission highlighted and appreciated that, in the first 6 months of the current government, El Salvador has invited the IACHR to conduct an in loco visit after 32 years.

3. In 2021, the IACHR issued the report titled Situation of Human Rights in El Salvador (hereinafter "Country Report") which included a series of recommendations addressed to the State, based on the findings and information obtained before, during and after the in loco visit<sup>2</sup>. Likewise, to prepare for this report, the Commission based itself on the investigations carried out ex officio, the information provided by the State, inputs from the different mechanisms through which the IACHR has followed up on the situation in the country, as well as press articles, decisions and recommendations of specialized international organizations, among others, as established in Article 59, paragraph 5 of its Rules of Procedure.

4. In the Country Report, which includes events up to December 31, 2020, the Commission addressed the human rights situation in El Salvador with emphasis on the structural problems affecting the country that have been pending since the armed conflict. These issues include citizen security, high levels of violence and the impact of heavy-handed policies on the human rights of the population, as well as access to justice, truth and memory of the victims of the armed conflict. Additionally, in the Country Report, the Commission analyzed the situation of groups and persons of special concern, including persons deprived of liberty; women and LGBTI persons; indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples; persons in the context of human mobility; and human rights defenders. The IACHR also analyzed other issues related to ESCR and the situation of freedom of expression in the country.

5. After the publication of the Country Report, the IACHR prepared two follow-up reports on compliance with its recommendations, which it has included in Chapter V of its Annual Reports for the years

2022<sup>3</sup> and 2023<sup>4</sup>. Both reports have sought to identify State measures of compliance with the Commission's recommendations, as well as pending challenges in terms of implementation, based on information provided by the State and civil society organizations, as well as other publicly available information known to the IACHR.

6. Based on this background, this is the third follow-up report on the recommendations that the IACHR made to El Salvador in its country report. Like the second report, this one does not evaluate the implementation of recommendations 1, 2, 3, regarding citizen security, nor recommendations 12, 13, 14, 15 and 20, regarding the rights of persons deprived of liberty. This is because, during the year 2024, the IACHR published two reports that have an impact on this follow-up. The first one deals with the state of emergency and human rights in El Salvador<sup>5</sup> and addressed 23 recommendations to the State and the second monitored the level of compliance with five recommendations on persons deprived of liberty in the country<sup>6</sup>. The Commission requests to refer to these two documents for a more updated analysis on both topics and to complement what has been developed in this Report.

7. For the preparation of this follow-up report, on September 4, 2024, the IACHR requested the State of El Salvador to present, within 30 days, information on compliance with the recommendations contained in the Country Report. After requesting an extension, the State of El Salvador submitted the requested information on October 23, 2024<sup>7</sup>. The Commission appreciates and is grateful for the information received, which was included in this report.

8. For its part, the IACHR also sent a questionnaire to civil society organizations so that they could provide information related to the follow-up of the recommendations. The IACHR appreciates the information provided by some organizations, which was considered for the follow-up of the recommendations of the Country Report<sup>8</sup> and appreciates their involvement in the follow-up processes of the Commission's recommendations.

9. On January 3, 2025, the Commission transmitted a copy of the preliminary draft of this report to the State, following Article 59(10) of its Rules of Procedure, and requested it to submit its observations. On February 13, 2025, the Commission received the observations and comments from the State<sup>9</sup>, which were incorporated, as pertinent, into this version and whose document is annexed to this Report. The final version of this Report was approved by the Commission on March 3, 2025.

10. This follow-up report is divided into five sections dedicated to the analysis of the measures adopted by the State to comply with the Commission's recommendations and the pending challenges in terms of implementation. The recommendations are evaluated following the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the IACHR<sup>10</sup>, following the thematic structure incorporated into the Country Report. The preparation of this document is consistent with the Commission's recommendation follow-up practice.

11. This report is divided into five sessions according to the thematic axes of the recommendations being followed up. For each decision, the report presents a synthesis of the analysis of the last follow-up report corresponding to 2023<sup>11</sup>. Then, it covers the information that the IACHR obtained in 2024 through different sources, including that reported by the State and civil society organizations, as well as the information gathered to monitor the general human rights situation in the country<sup>12</sup>. Subsequently, it performs an analysis of the level of compliance and refers to the main advances and implementation challenges identified by the Commission, according to the information known during the year 2024. The analysis for each recommendation culminates with a diagnosis by the IACHR on the specific information that the State has not yet submitted or on the measures that have yet to be adopted to determine progress in the level of compliance with the recommendation. Finally, the IACHR issues its conclusions on the progress and challenges of compliance with the recommendations of the Country Report analyzed as a whole.

12. Full compliance with the recommendations of the IACHR is essential to ensuring the full enjoyment of human rights in the OAS Member States and strengthening the Inter-American Human Rights System (hereinafter "IAHRS"). The current international scenario demands that the actors involved not only actively participate by reporting information on measures to comply with the decisions adopted by international bodies, including the IACHR, but that these efforts translate into suitable, timely, and effective State measures that achieve the objectives of each decision.

13. The IACHR reiterates the importance that the State of El Salvador fully comply with the recommendations made in the report under follow-up. It also hopes that this tool will make it possible to establish a process of dialogue aimed at complying with the recommendations that the Commission has addressed to the State of El Salvador in human rights.

II. FOLLOW-UP OF RECOMMENDATIONS

A. Memory, truth and justice concerning the internal armed conflict

Recommendation No. 4. Adopt a National Reconciliation Law in accordance with Inter-American standards on transitional justice, particularly with respect to holding perpetrators of serious human rights violations accountable for their actions and in relation to the participation of victims.

14. For the 2023 follow-up report, the Commission noted that it has been aware of the draft of the "Special Law on Transitional Justice for Victims of Human Rights Violations in the Context of the Armed Conflict in El Salvador," law since 2022, when the State reported it. However, it noted civil society's concern about the lack of discussion of this initiative in the Legislative Assembly. Given the lack of progress in adopting this law, the Commission considered that this recommendation remained pending.<sup>13</sup>

Information on compliance

15. For the year 2024, the Commission learned of information provided by civil society according to which the State has not made progress in adopting a law on transitional justice in the country. It was also indicated that the president of the Justice and Human Rights Commission of the Legislative Assembly had intended to draft a Transitional Justice Law for victims of the armed conflict by the year 2021. However, no

<sup>12</sup> To this end, the IACHR has made use of information gathered during public hearings, investigations conducted ex officio, input from the mechanisms for petitions and cases and precautionary measures, and responses to requests for information submitted under the authority established in Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights, as well as information gathered from other public sources, and the decisions and recommendations of specialized international organizations, among others.

<sup>13</sup> IACHR, Annual Report 2023, Chapter V, Follow-up recommendations issued by the IACHR in its country or thematic reports - El Salvador, paras. 15-20.

progress has been made on this objective, even though some government institutions and civil society organizations were cited, including the Committee of Mothers and Relatives of the Detained, Disappeared and Politically Assassinated of El Salvador, Monsignor Óscar Arnulfo Romero (COMADRES).<sup>14</sup>

16. The Commission was also informed that a May 2024 reform to the Legislative Assembly's rules of procedure eliminated the Justice and Human Rights Commission, which oversaw transitional justice issues, and created the National Security and Justice Commission. In addition, it was confirmed that on May 29, 2024, due to the loss of its validity, the project of "Special Law of Transitional Justice for Victims of Human Rights Violations in the Context of the Armed Conflict in El Salvador", presented on October 7, 2021, by the victims of the armed conflict and through Congresswoman Claudia Ortiz<sup>15</sup> was archived. In this regard, the Commission learned of the concern and rejection expressed by the Roundtable Against Impunity in El Salvador and the Management Group of the Comprehensive Reparation Law regarding this file, as well as the affirmation that the State had not adopted measures to carry out a participatory process and followed a dialogue with the victims for the drafting of the law indicated in this recommendation.<sup>16</sup>

17. For its part, the State reported that in May, the National Security and Justice Commission of the Legislative Assembly filed the draft bill of the "Special Law on Transitional Justice for Victims of Human Rights Violations in the Context of the Armed Conflict in El Salvador", because it was filed in 2021 and no longer in force.<sup>17</sup>

18. In addition, the State clarified that Unconstitutionality Ruling No. 44-2013AC on the Amnesty Law, issued by the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, orders the Legislative Assembly to respond to demands regarding investigations, prosecution, clarification, and punishment of crimes committed during the armed conflict, as well as comprehensive reparation and non-repetition. It indicated that, as of this sentence, the National Reconciliation Law (Legislative Decree No. 147 of 1992) became effective again and that the latter establishes that "the persons who, according to the report of the Truth Commission, had participated in serious acts of violence that occurred since January 1, 1980, whose imprint on society demands with greater urgency the public knowledge of the truth, regardless of the sector to which they belonged in their case" will not be granted amnesty. At the same time, it clarified that the favor referred to in the General Amnesty Law for the Consolidation of Peace (Legislative Decree No. 486 of 1993) cannot be applied to facts indicated in the Report of the Truth Commission.<sup>18</sup>

19. Although the State's approval of the Transitional Justice Law referred to in the recommendation under follow-up is still pending, regulatory mechanisms and institutional infrastructure exist to investigate the acts committed during the armed conflict, applying international standards of transitional justice and in accordance with its commitment to truth, justice, and reparation.<sup>19</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

20. Since 2022, the IACHR had been aware of the preliminary draft of the "Special Law on Transitional Justice for Victims of Human Rights Violations in the Context of the Armed Conflict in El Salvador". For this year, the Commission regrets that this bill had not been discussed or studied in time, a concern that had already been pointed out by civil society. The IACHR expresses its concern over the archiving of this

<sup>19</sup> By way of example, the State referred to the creation of national commissions to search for disappeared persons and of a special investigative unit in the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic; to regulatory modifications to apply international standards in the investigation and prosecution of these acts; to the Policy for the Criminal Prosecution of War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity; to the strengthening of capacities in genetics and forensic anthropology; to the indictment and prosecution of cases; and to arrest warrants for high-ranking military officials. legislative initiative, despite its relevance to develop international standards on transitional justice in the country. In this regard, it identifies that the recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance compliance with the recommendation

21. The Commission urges the State to move forward with the issuance of the law indicated in this recommendation and to guarantee the full participation of victims and civil society in its drafting; it also reiterates the importance that the process of drafting this initiative be swift, participatory, and consider the perspective and contributions of victims' organizations and civil society, which is especially relevant in transitional justice contexts<sup>20</sup>. Likewise, the IACHR invites the State to consider successful comparative experiences in transitional justice processes in complying with this recommendation, especially regarding the implementation of continuous working sessions with the victims, insofar as it is compatible and whenever it is relevant to the Salvadoran context.

Recommendation No. 5. Investigate, judge, and, where appropriate, sanction crimes that constitute serious human rights violations perpetrated during the internal armed conflict.

22. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR appreciated the increase from 22 to 28 cases prosecuted by the Unit for the Investigation of Crimes Committed in the Armed Conflict (hereinafter "UIDCA") of the Attorney General's Office (hereinafter "FGR"), although it noted that this figure corresponds to only 11% of the total. In addition, it stated that it was unaware of any progress in the adoption of judicial decisions that identify those responsible for the facts and impose indicated sanctions, although it valued the information on the prioritization of the cases in the Truth Commission Report, as well as the intention to adopt a contextual approach in the investigations. It also requested information on the road map of the "Policy for the Criminal Prosecution of War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Occurring in the Context of the Armed Conflict". Based on the above, the IACHR concluded that the recommendation remained partially fulfilled and noted that its level of compliance would advance when most of the violations reported are being prosecuted.

23. For the year 2024, the State indicated that the FGR's UIDCA has been gradually endowed with the human and logistical resources necessary for its investigative work. It recalled that when it was created, it was a "working group" made up of three prosecutors, which was later transformed into an institutional unit, and currently has a team of thirteen people, including a coordinator and seven assistant prosecutors. The State also noted that the unit has enhanced the participation of victims and their representatives in the investigations.<sup>21</sup>

24. The State also referred to the cases in which it indicated that it had obtained essential results in the investigation, namely: the "San Andrés" case, in which, for the first time, a death squad was prosecuted; the "El Calabozo Massacre" and the "Dutch Journalists" case, in which arrest warrants were issued and, for the latter, included high-ranking military officials; and the "UCA Massacre" case, which is awaiting a preliminary hearing in December 2024. In addition, the State highlighted progress in the investigation of cases of sexual violence in the context of the civil war and serious human rights violations by the Farabundo Martí National Liberation Front (hereinafter "FMLN").<sup>22</sup>

25. Likewise, the State indicated that, in the case of the El Mozote Massacres and surrounding areas, a transitional justice team was formed to incorporate the applicable Inter-American standards and affirmed that it had removed obstacles to investigate, try and punish both the direct perpetrators and those who gave orders that violated fundamental rights and the commanders who did not respond to their legal duty to prevent abuses by subordinates. The State also pointed out that privileges and immunities were eliminated for officials who favored impunity for serious human rights violations and that, on December 22, 2023, the Court of Instruction of San Francisco Gotera declared the crime of personal concealment as a crime against humanity and, therefore, not subject to the statute of limitations.<sup>23</sup>

26. For its part, the Commission received information from civil society indicating that there is limited public information available regarding the UIDCA's progress in processing cases of serious human rights violations committed during the internal armed conflict<sup>24</sup>. Additionally, it was noted that the FGR's Work Report for the period of June 1, 2023, to May 31, 2024, mentions only one action taken by the UIDCA: the presentation of the indictment on June 6, 2023, in the case of the massacre of the Jesuit priests and their two collaborators.<sup>25</sup>

27. The Commission was also informed that there are still challenges related to the failure to comply with inter-American standards of due diligence in general and enhanced due diligence in cases of gender-based violence against women, as well as to guarantee the rights of victims to information and participation in investigations. This includes the lack of a gender perspective regarding violations of women's human rights. In addition, it was noted that only the assignment of an additional prosecutor, as reinforcement to the UIDCA, was known.<sup>26</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

28. The IACHR has noted the information reported by the State regarding the institutional strengthening of the UIDCA within the Attorney General's Office; the progress mentioned concerning the "San Andrés," "El Calabozo Massacre," "Dutch Journalists," and "UCA Massacre" cases; the investigations into sexual violence cases; the establishment of a transitional justice team aimed at incorporating Inter-American standards concerning the El Mozote Massacres and surrounding areas; the removal of privileges and immunities for officials that encouraged impunity; and the late 2023 decision by the San Francisco Gotera Court of Instruction to declare the imprescriptibility of the crime of personal concealment.

29. However, the Commission does not provide specific information indicating a significant increase in the number of cases prosecuted for serious human rights violations committed during the armed conflict. Without undermining the institutional strengthening decisions reported and some decisions adopted in relation to the mentioned cases, the IACHR reiterates that the essence of the recommendation under follow-up emphasizes the investigation, prosecution, and, if warranted, punishment of the reported facts. This requires concrete judicial decisions that identify the responsible parties and impose appropriate sanctions for the serious human rights violations committed during the internal armed conflict. In the absence of information demonstrating significant progress in these judicial decisions, the Commission believes that the recommendation remains partially fulfilled.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

30. The Commission reiterates the importance of achieving substantial progress in investigations and prosecutions and effective sanctions for serious human rights violations perpetrated in the context of the armed conflict. In this regard, it reiterates that it will evaluate a substantial partial implementation of this recommendation when the majority of these acts are during the investigation and sanctioning stages. It also urges the State to continue reporting details on the implementation of the Criminal Prosecution Policy roadmap concerning war crimes and crimes against humanity within the context of the country's armed conflict. all, it should specify the number of cases processed, detailing how many are still in the investigation, prosecution, and conviction stages. This information is crucial for closely monitoring the implementation of this recommendation.

Recommendation No. 6. Ratify the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons, the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity.

31. In the 2023 follow-up report, the State indicated that the Legislative Body was reviewing the first two conventions referenced in the recommendation and that the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity was undergoing consultation before being presented to the Legislative Assembly. The IACHR stated that this recommendation was pending compliance and urged the State to advance the ratification of the instruments specified in the recommendation.<sup>27</sup>

32. For the year 2024, the State indicated that on May 1, 2024, the new composition of the Legislative Assembly took office for the period 2024-2027 and was in charge of analyzing the eventual ratification of international human rights instruments, in accordance with human rights recommendations and national priorities. It also indicated that the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity is currently in the consultation stage with national entities, before determining its possible subscription.<sup>28</sup>

33. The Commission, for its part, received information from civil society regarding the lack of progress in ratifying the instruments mentioned in the recommendation. Additionally, it was noted that in December 2021, thirteen civil society organizations issued a document highlighting several reasons why it is essential for El Salvador to adhere to these international instruments<sup>29</sup>. The Commission recognized that, among other reasons, the document emphasizes the importance of complying with these instruments to enhance and supplement internal protection of human rights, foster constructive dialogue with international protection organizations, advocate for victims' demands, follow the recommendations of various international organizations, and reject forced disappearance.<sup>30</sup>

34. Considering that the implementation of this recommendation depends on substantial actions regarding the progress in the ratification of the instruments mentioned in the recommendation, the Commission considers that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

35. The IACHR urges the State to effectively advance in the ratification process of these international instruments, which is essential for reporting any progress in implementing this recommendation.

Recommendation No. 7. Organize all documentation on the security forces that acted during the internal armed conflict, systematize this, and make it publicly available to victims, authorities of the justice and search system, and society as a whole, ensuring that sensitive aspects are protected appropriately, in the latter case, and reconstructing any files that were destroyed or documents that were not produced when they should legally have been.

36. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR identified some actions to systematize the information indicated in this recommendation and appreciated that the Ministry of National Defense expressed its willingness to support the investigations of the Attorney General's Office, as well as the initiative of the "Guardians of Peace" project, on classification and digitization of historical archives. However, the IACHR identified that, although the reported actions represent partial systematization efforts, they do not comply with the core of the recommendation, namely, that this record be made available to the victims and society in general, attending to the necessary protection of sensitive aspects. Pending complementary information on these aspects, the Commission considered that this recommendation was still pending compliance.<sup>31</sup>

37. By 2024, the State indicated that the Ministry of National Defense had made progress in ordering, identifying, and classifying the documentation generated by the institution between 1980 and 1992. It indicated that several military units have a general inventory and that the last phase of information digitization is beginning. In addition, it indicated that, within the framework of the law, this entity provides the information requested by justice entities, victims or family members, if it is in existing or restored documents in the archives of the military units from the period of the armed conflict.<sup>32</sup>

38. The State indicated that in April 2024, the national commissions for the search for children and adults who disappeared in the context of the armed conflict signed a cooperation agreement with the Supreme Court of Justice. This measure seeks to facilitate access to files on the adoption and protection of children during the armed conflict and to judicial files of unidentified persons who had been recognized by the courts at the time, as well as support in exhumations and the processing of genetic profiles, and training for personnel of the Supreme Court of Justice on the search for persons.<sup>33</sup>

39. Additionally, the State noted that the national search commissions mentioned above began processes to review records from that time and have accessed documents and archives, including military and police records, in collaboration with entities such as the judiciary and family registries in various municipalities. Furthermore, it reported that between July 2022 and May 2023, these commissions examined cemetery archives in the departments of San Salvador and Santa Ana and identified over 1,500 "unidentified" individuals buried due to violent causes related to the internal armed conflict from 1974 to 1992, of which at least 50 were under 18 years old. The State indicated this action would be replicated in other cemeteries and complemented by mapping burial sites or mass graves. It also mentioned that, with the support of the United Nations Development Program (hereinafter "UNDP"), in 2024, these commissions will implement a system to digitize files and historical archives in order to achieve efficient management of the search processes and consolidate the Single Registry of Missing Children and Adults (hereinafter "RENIPAD").<sup>34</sup>

40. For its part, the Commission received information from civil society indicating that over the past year, there has been no progress in facilitating access to documentation from the armed forces and security forces involved during the armed conflict. It was noted that, on the contrary, state authorities even refused to make efforts to identify or request such documents. For example, in the context of criminal case No. 69/1992 related to crimes occurring during the Massacre of El Calabozo and surrounding areas, the organization Cristosal, on behalf of the victims, requested several documents from the court overseeing the case, including one titled "The Threat to the Sovereignty and Destruction of the State," prepared by the Ministry of National Defense, as well as the National Military Plans for the years 1980 to 1983. In January 2024, the Court of First

Instance of San Sebastian (now the Second Civil and Mercantile Court of San Vicente) reportedly notified that it would not request these documents, arguing that "there is no record" of the actions of the military forces in 1982.<sup>35</sup>

41. In the observations to the present report, the State affirmed that it has worked on recovering and systematizing documents related to the actions of the security forces during the armed conflict. The State emphasized that efforts have been made to access information safeguarded by international organizations; however, it stated that access to these archives has been denied on the grounds of confidentiality<sup>36</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

42. The Commission notes that the information provided by the State indicates partial progress on the recommendation under review. Specifically, the compliance measures identified by the Commission to assess this partial progress included the reported advancements in the ordering, identification, and classification of documentation by the Ministry of National Defense, as well as the cooperation agreement signed between the national search commissions and the Supreme Court of Justice, which facilitated access to military and police documents for these agencies. Regarding these measures, the IACHR encourages strengthening their implementation, reporting on this progress with concrete data, and providing information on their results and impact.

43. For its part, the IACHR appreciates the efforts reported by the State to access information held by international organizations. To assess its relevance in compliance with this recommendation, the State is invited to specify details of the type of information that has been requested, as well as the organizations that, under confidentiality, have denied access to it.

44. The Commission also identifies as essential that the victims and their families be guaranteed access to the documentation that has been compiled and systematized regarding the security forces that acted during the internal armed conflict. While awaiting specific information on compliance measures in the pending matters indicated and considering the actions reported, the Commission identifies that this recommendation has advanced to a partial level of compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

45. The IACHR will declare progress in the level of compliance with this recommendation when (i) the State provides details on progress in the ordering, identification and classification by the Ministry of National Defense of the documentation indicated and the results in access to information by the national search commissions; (ii) provide details on how access to the information indicated in the recommendation is guaranteed in practice for judicial authorities, victims and family members and society in general, specifying under what conditions this access is denied and ensuring that this decision is reasonable; (iii) indicate the concrete measures adopted for the reconstruction of the destroyed archives or documents not generated that legally should have been produced.

Recommendation No. 8. Adopt a legal framework regulating a national policy for the search of victims of forced disappearance; the creation of a genetic information bank; exhumation proceedings; and a law regulating the rights of the relatives of the victims of disappearances

46. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR valued State activities for promoting the search for missing persons, the progress in developing a protocol to coordinate the institutions involved in investigating forcibly disappeared persons, and the efforts to create a genetic data system. For its part, the Commission learned that the DNA Data Bank Law regulation is pending and that the victims have requested the Legislative Assembly to approve a Law on the Search for Disappeared Persons. In addition, the Commission reiterated the importance that the national commissions for the search of adults and children who disappeared in the context of the armed conflict be provided with legal certainty. Given the need for additional measures, the Commission noted that the recommendation remained partially fulfilled.<sup>37</sup>

Information on compliance

47. In 2024, the State indicated that there is no regulatory framework that independently governs the response to the disappearance of persons and the rights of their family members. However, it noted that it approved the National DNA Bank Law and has undertaken various actions to address this phenomenon, including the following<sup>38</sup>:

- The National Commission to Search for Children Disappeared during the Internal Armed Conflict (hereinafter "CNB"), created in 2010, and the National Commission to Search for Disappeared Adults in the Context of the Armed Conflict in El Salvador (hereinafter "CONABÚSQUEDA"), created in 2017, which constitute an administrative search mechanism.
- The Project aims to strengthen institutional capacity for managing disappearances linked to organized crime and fighting impunity from 2017 to 2019.
- The creation of the UIDCA of the FGR.
- The Policy for the Criminal Prosecution of War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity that occurred in the context of the armed conflict in 2018.
- The adaptation of the criminal offense of forced disappearance to meet international standards and the inclusion of this offense as a crime against humanity.
- The Urgent Action Protocol and Strategy for the Search of Missing Persons and the Instructions for the Urgent Search and Investigation of Cases of Missing Persons.
- Capacity building in genetics and forensic anthropology to investigate these events.

48. The project, which will run from July 2024 to July 2027, aims to implement a genetic profile bank administered by CONABÚSQUEDA. This bank will be used exclusively to compare DNA samples from victims with those from family members. Additionally, the State indicated that this project seeks to incorporate a multidisciplinary and inter-institutional approach involving various governmental and non-governmental organizations related to searching and identifying individuals who disappeared during the internal armed conflict. It also stated that the exhumation processes comply with current legislation and are coordinated by the FGR along with the search commissions for cases registered by the latter or those that have been adjudicated by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (hereinafter referred to as the "IACHR Court").<sup>39</sup>

49. On the other hand, the Commission was informed by civil society that there has been no progress in the development of the "National DNA Data Bank Law," nor in the development of regulations concerning the "Law on Disappearance of Persons," the exhumation processes, or the rights of relatives of disappeared persons. It was noted that the proposals being considered by the Legislative Assembly were shelved because they were deemed invalid<sup>40</sup>. Additionally, it was emphasized that information or official data on missing persons has been classified since 2022, and the State has created no official, public, or integrated registry.<sup>41</sup>

50. Likewise, civil society pointed out that the National Data Bank Law, approved in 2021, would still not be implemented and that the creation of a blood and DNA bank to recognize bodies found in clandestine cemeteries was still pending, even though it had been a measure foreseen in the Cuscatlán Plan<sup>42</sup>. In addition, it was reported that in August 2024, civil society organizations put into operation the Citizen Registry of Missing Persons in El Salvador for families and human rights organizations to enter data on missing persons and generate early warnings and statistical data disaggregated by geographic area, gender of victims and other variables useful for public policies to prevent and combat enforced disappearance.<sup>43</sup>

51. The Commission was also informed that civil society is concerned that in August 2024, the Specialized Unit for Cases of Disappeared Persons of the Attorney General's Office would have ceased to exist, to become part of the sub-directorate of organized crime, and because of the possible impact of this decision on the effective follow-up of active search cases.<sup>44</sup>

52. In its observations on the present report, the State indicated that the concern expressed by civil society regarding the Specialized Unit for Cases of Disappeared Persons of the FGR has no relation to the recommendation under follow-up, considering that the investigation of events that occurred in the context of the Salvadoran armed conflict corresponds to the Unit for the Investigation of Crimes of the Armed Conflict of the FGR, clarifying that the restructuring of the Prosecution Units has not had any impact on these cases<sup>45</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

53. The IACHR identifies that several of the measures reported by the State were adopted before this recommendation was issued and recalls the importance of subsequent actions aimed at their specific compliance. Although it values institutional strengthening actions to respond to this phenomenon, the Commission recalls that this recommendation requests the adoption of a regulatory framework that has not yet been fully adopted and that the creation of the CNB and CONABÚSQUEDA, as well as the National DNA Bank Law, were measures known to the Commission before the publication of the 2021 Country Report.

54. The Commission, for its part, welcomes the information provided by the State indicating that the CNB and CONABÚSQUEDA are managing the cooperation project "Improving Identification and Closure for Missing Persons," which aims to establish a genetic profile bank by 2027. In this context, the Commission is awaiting updates on progress in this initiative and recognizes that its development can positively contribute to fulfilling this recommendation. Furthermore, it emphasizes the importance of having a regulatory framework for the establishment of this bank.

55. For its part, the Commission identifies that some aspects of this recommendation still require State implementation efforts, including the issuance of the law on the disappearance of persons and the national data bank, as well as specific regulations on exhumation processes and the rights of family members. It also identifies the need for information on the status of the regulation and application of the National DNA Data Bank Law, approved in 2021. In addition, it notes that the legislative initiatives before the Legislative Assembly have been shelved and therefore urges the development and discussion of the requested regulatory framework. In this sense, the Commission identifies that this recommendation continues to be partially fulfilled.

Measures and information to advance in compliance with the recommendation

56. The IACHR emphasizes that progress in complying with this recommendation relies on the State adopting a regulatory framework addressing the four specified aspects: (i) the search for victims of forced disappearance, (ii) the establishment of a genetic bank, (iii) exhumation processes, and (iv) the rights of family members regarding the absence of the disappeared victims. Additionally, the IACHR reiterates the significance of developing this normative framework to ensure the participation of victims and relevant civil society organizations.

Recommendation No. 9. Provide the CNB, CONABÚSQUEDA, and the Institute of Legal Medicine with the human, economic, logistic, scientific and other resources needed for investigating into and determining the whereabouts of persons who disappeared in the context of the armed conflict.

57. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR noted that the budget for the Institute of Legal Medicine (hereinafter "LMI") has increased by an additional allocation of $2,499,555.00 over the amount scheduled for 2022. It also clarified that the resources available to the commissions mentioned in the recommendation exceed their allocated budget and that they benefit from the administrative resources of the Foreign Ministry, inter-institutional support, and funds from projects like "Guardians of Peace." Despite these efforts, the IACHR deemed it necessary for the State to ensure a significant budget increase to allow them to perform their functions adequately. Moreover, it concluded that the recommendation has progressed to a partial level of compliance.<sup>46</sup>

Information on compliance

58. For 2024, the State reiterated that the CNB and CONABÚSQUEDA are attached to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and function as deconcentrated units, having administrative dependence and an independent budgetary allocation in the General Budget of the Nation. It highlighted that for over 14 years, the CNB and, for more than 7 years, CONABÚSQUEDA have performed their duties without interruption and have developed their strategic lines of action, namely: i) search and identification, ii) psychosocial support for family members, and iii) historical memory and awareness.<sup>47</sup>

59. In addition, the State indicated that the commissions as mentioned above have been strengthened by cooperation projects such as "Women Guardians of Peace" and noted that the latter allowed the adoption of the database system for the search, RENIPAD, and the digitalization of search files; the acquisition of computer tools to systematize and review historical archives; the organization of community workshops with a focus on gender and new masculinities (with the support of UN Women); the development of 3 seminars together with UNODC, PDDH and the Supreme Court of Justice for justice operators who assist in the search for missing persons in the armed conflict and one of international scope for October 2024 on search and identification systems for missing persons in Ibero-America. Likewise, the State reiterated that these commissions have benefited from the project "Improved Identification and Closure for Missing Persons," implemented by FAFG and financed by USAID for two million dollars, and that this support is in addition to the regular budget of the commissions financed by the State's General Fund.<sup>48</sup>

60. Civil society informed the Commission that no measures were adopted in the last year to strengthen the CNB, CONABÚSQUEDA, and the IML and make progress in the search for persons who disappeared during the armed conflict. In this regard, it was also stated that no state efforts were made to guarantee the budgetary and functional autonomy of the CNB and CONABÚSQUEDA so that they could exercise their functions independently and more efficiently.<sup>49</sup>

61. In its observations on the present report, the State emphasized that there are various means by which the commissions mentioned in the recommendation provide information about their operations, projects, and institutional strengthening efforts. Additionally, United Nations agencies, such as UN Women, UNDP, and UNODC, continually collaborate with these commissions through the implementation of various projects. Furthermore, the State requested that, in the context of following up on this recommendation, its authority to determine the allocation of resources while defining national needs and priorities should not be interfered with, given that the State must address multiple needs with limited resources. The State indicated that a more significant allocation of resources does not necessarily lead to improved investigation results.<sup>50</sup>

62. The Commission appreciates the State's affirmation that the CNB and CONABÚSQUEDA have performed their functions without interruption in developing their strategic lines of action. Additionally, it values the strengthening measures reported from acquiring computer tools, workshops, and providing training, the support of international cooperation these institutions receive, and the regular budget of the commissions financed by the State's General Fund. While the State did not provide specific information this year on measures to enhance resources for the LMI, it recalls that in 2023, it identified significant compliance measures for this institution.

63. Although the Commission appreciates the information about the three institutions mentioned in the recommendation, it emphasizes the importance of the State's having a specific diagnosis to determine whether each one's functional burden can be adequately developed with the available budget and resources. In the meantime, the Commission considers that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the compliance with the recommendation

64. The IACHR will fully comply with this recommendation when the State presents a technical diagnosis that concludes the adequacy of human, economic, logistical, scientific, and other resources necessary for the three institutions to effectively investigate and determine the whereabouts of individuals who disappeared during the armed conflict. Additionally, the IACHR points out that the State's measures to progressively strengthen these entities' resources need to be more specific to assess progress on this recommendation. In this regard, the Commission reiterates that the recommendation being followed up on includes not only economic provisions but also human, logistical, scientific, and other types of resources, as long as they enhance efforts to investigate and determine the whereabouts of individuals who went missing during armed conflict, while ensuring that the State evaluates their necessity based on technical information.

Recommendation No. 10. Develop a regulatory and institutional framework to guarantee comprehensive reparation for the victims of the armed conflict; immediately restore the reparations program provided for in Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013 until such framework is fully established.

65. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR acknowledged that the monetary compensations granted under Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013 have been reinstated until 2022 and urged the State to make progress on the payment processes for compensation by 2023. It also noted other reparative actions that would be recognized in executing this Decree, although it highlighted the absence of information regarding its practical guarantees. Similarly, the Commission stressed the need for the State to ensure the timely implementation of a robust normative framework for the comprehensive reparation policy; it reiterated that the application of Executive Decree No. 204 serves as a transitional measure and concluded that the recommendation remains partially fulfilled.<sup>51</sup>

66. For 2024, the State indicated that Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013 is in force and is under the execution of the Ministry of Local Development, which is responsible for the Reparations Program for victims of serious human rights violations in the context of the internal armed conflict. It indicated that this entity executes monetary transfers to an annual average of 1,466 families of victims or victims' relatives. In addition, the State noted that, in the framework of the judgments of the IACHR Court, the State has executed different measures of reparation, namely<sup>52</sup>:

- The Garden Museum on Missing Children was inaugurated in April 2024 as part of the Rochac Hernandez et al. case.
- In the case of the El Mozote massacres and surrounding areas, various measures have been implemented. These include a development program targeted at the affected areas, which features a health center along with medical, psychological, psychiatric, and psychosocial care for the victims; an educational center in El Mozote; a home for the elderly; and a housing program. Additionally, the state indicated that there is currently a Day Care Center for the Elderly in the canton of La Joya, located in the municipality of Meanguera, department of Morazán. This center provides care to individuals from localities recognized by the judgment in this case. As a protective measure, food packages are periodically delivered to elderly individuals in El Mozote and nearby areas. Furthermore, home visits are conducted for vulnerable elderly individuals in neighboring localities to assess and attend to their health needs.

67. The State also indicated that the national search commissions hold a traveling exhibition every year to raise awareness of enforced disappearance among the general population.<sup>53</sup>

68. For its part, the Commission accessed information provided by civil society, according to which the measures provided in Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013 are not being complied with. Specifically, it was pointed out to the Commission that there have been no massive new additions to the Registry of Victims, nor have mechanisms been opened for the individual application for admission. The Scholarship Subprogram for higher education and graduate studies has not been created; the food security program and productive linkages have not been implemented, and the promotion of the ordered productive associations has not been fulfilled. Additionally, the compensatory monetary transfers are functioning irregularly, as victims received payments in September 2024 for July to December 2023 but did not receive them from January to September of this year. Furthermore, no measures have been enacted to dignify the victims.<sup>54</sup>

69. The Commission identifies that Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013 remains in force and that the Ministry of Local Development reports continuing to execute monetary transfers to an annual average of 1,466 families of victims or victims' relatives. In addition, it values the reparation measures provided in the two cases indicated, specifically those with the scope of satisfaction in the Rochac Hernández case and others, and health and psychosocial rehabilitation in the case of the El Mozote Massacres and surrounding areas.

70. Although the Commission values the measures reported in these cases, as well as the monetary transfers reported under the decree, it identifies that there are relevant components of this recommendation that remain pending implementation. First, it identifies that, despite the relevance of Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013, this measure does not supplant the importance of the State adopting a reparation policy that, as noted in the Country Report, "contemplates the different impacts suffered by the victims, in line with Inter-American human rights standards. Second, it emphasizes that the State must guarantee comprehensive reparations beyond monetary compensation and specific cases, ensuring inclusivity for all victims. This comprehensive approach should have a normative character robust enough to sustain over time and provide legal certainty while also considering the perspectives and needs articulated by civil society regarding the effective reparative scope of the measures provided. In this regard, the Commission notes that this recommendation is still only partially met.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

71. The IACHR will declare progress in complying with this recommendation when the State accredits not only the full implementation of Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013 but also, considering its transitory nature, adopts a comprehensive national reparations policy that considers the needs expressed by all victims. Likewise, the Commission invites the State to provide more specific information on the ongoing reparations measures, specifying their content, recipients, and periodicity.

Recommendation No. 11. Create spaces to hear the victims of the internal armed conflict, allowing them to express their needs regarding different state services on the matters of truth, memory, justice, and reparation for serious human rights violations.

72. In the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR acknowledged the information provided about the dialogue processes initiated by the National Search Commission and the opportunities for discussions on health reparation measures. Furthermore, that year, the IACHR became aware that organizations and victims called for the reactivation of dialogue spaces for both the implementation of Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013 and the legislative process of the Transitional Justice Law. The Commission recognized that it would still be necessary to adopt measures to ensure that victims are heard on issues beyond health reparations, such as memory, truth, justice, and comprehensive reparations, concluding that this recommendation remained partially fulfilled.<sup>55</sup>

73. In 2024, the State noted that relatives of disappeared persons, civil society, national and international organizations, and state entities participated in the actions of historical memory and awareness organized by the CNB and CONABÚSQUEDA. As part of these activities, it emphasized that, in collaboration with the Ministry of Culture, each year, the "International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearance" is commemorated with a concert by the Symphonic Orchestra of El Salvador. Additionally, various photographic exhibitions have taken place over the years, with the most recent one in 2024 titled "Women Searching for Their Disappeared." Every March 29, the Day of the Disappeared Children in the context of the armed conflict is also commemorated, and the Re-cordis Magazine is published, promoting historical memory and outlining the commissions' progress.<sup>56</sup>

74. Additionally, the State indicated that the Ministry of Health (hereinafter "MINSAL") maintains various spaces for communication and coordination with victims, as well as associations, committees, and institutions representing the victims. Among these, comprehensive health care workshops are conducted, along with the implementation and evaluation of health care services, in accordance with the Technical Standard on Health Promotion, which outlines the mechanisms for social and community participation, as well as multisectoral efforts. Furthermore, the State affirmed that different levels of health care provide mechanisms for directly listening to victims. These mechanisms include coordination meetings with the victims, their representatives, and associations, in which MINSAL authorities participate; community assemblies and local health and education roundtables where individuals express their opinions on health services and opportunities for improvement; and home visits and/or follow-ups by a multidisciplinary team to facilitate victims' access to health services.<sup>57</sup>

75. Likewise, for the year 2024, the State reported that, in compliance with the judgment of the IACHR Court in the Rochac Hernández et al. case, it held workshops with relatives of the victims of this case and other cases of forced disappearance as part of the development of the Garden Museum of Disappeared Children project. It noted that it conducted these consultations in December 2022 in Güarjila, Chalatenango, and February 2023 in Suchitoto, Cuscatlán; San Vicente, and Jocoaitique, Morazán.<sup>58</sup>

76. In addition, according to the State, the Ministry of Local Development carried out 21 activities to coordinate mechanisms to actively listen and promote comprehensive care and guarantee the participation of the victims of the Internal Armed Conflict. The activities reported include spaces for commemoration and awareness-raising on victims' rights, coordination on health and psychosocial care, dialogue on access to justice, and delivery of food and cleaning supplies. According to the State, these spaces made it possible to raise awareness among the population about respect for the human rights of victims, allowed the latter to be heard, and facilitated the provision of services.<sup>59</sup>

77. The State also stated that, as part of the "Guardians of Peace" project, co-creation workshops had been held in the municipalities of Jiquilisco, Aguilares, El Paisnal, and San Esteban Catarina, with the communities of Siquayo, El Calabozo, La Quesera, Aguilares, and El Paisnal. According to the State, these workshops aim to build traveling exhibitions in the territories. The first one was held in August of this year to commemorate the massacre of El Calabozo.<sup>60</sup>

78. The Commission received information from civil society indicating that there are no known State efforts to establish mechanisms for victim and civil society participation or the listening spaces mentioned in this recommendation. Additionally, it was noted that a dialogue space was opened with the Presidential Commissioner for Human Rights and Freedom of Expression to advance the reparation measures ordered by the Inter-American Court in the Massacres of El Mozote and surrounding areas case at the request of the Association for the Promotion of Human Rights of El Mozote (hereinafter "APDHEM"); however, it was emphasized that this initiative was not a State initiative. According to what was reported to the Commission, the same situation occurred with other meetings involving the Attorney General of the Republic and the Human Rights Ombudsman. Furthermore, it was reported that there are no known efforts to listen to victims regarding the implementation of Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013, and that the dialogue and coordination roundtables have not been reactivated since they ceased to function in 2019.<sup>61</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

79. The Commission appreciates that the CNB and CONBÚSQUEDA continue to provide reparation measures that allow family members, civil society, national and international organizations, and state entities to participate fully. Furthermore, it acknowledges the significance of the communication and coordination channels established by MINSAL and the Ministry of Local Development with victims and associations, committees, and institutions that represent victims. This includes actions that enabled the involvement of victims' families in specific cases monitored by the IACHR Court and within the context of the "Guardians of Peace" project.

80. However, the Commission also notes calls from civil society to create spaces for participation, highlighting the necessity for the State to enhance its efforts in providing venues for victims to be heard, ensuring genuine and effective inclusion. In this regard, the Commission requests that these spaces be established at the national level and specifically tailored for victims to articulate their needs for reparations, considering their specific circumstances, including vulnerability factors and historical discrimination. The Commission observes that this recommendation remains only partially fulfilled in this context.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

81. The IACHR reiterates the importance of ensuring that the adoption of the participation mechanisms mentioned in this recommendation forms part of a comprehensive, national, and ongoing strategy for listening to the victims of the armed conflict. This strategy should not be confused with isolated actions or spaces that involve contact with the citizenry or where reparation initiatives focused on satisfaction are conducted. Additionally, the IACHR emphasizes that it is essential for the information provided regarding these compliance measures to include the results and main findings of the dialogue processes concerning all aspects indicated in the recommendation: memory, truth, justice, and comprehensive reparation.

B. Prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

Recommendation No. 16. Ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; and establish a National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture.

82. In the 2023 follow-up report, the Commission learned that the legislature would be considering the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and that the Constitution permits the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsman (hereinafter "PDDH") to serve as a national preventive mechanism. However, civil society organizations emphasized the necessity of ratifying the Protocol to facilitate periodic visits to individuals deprived of liberty, highlighting that, despite a petition in 2018, the legislative process had not progressed. The IACHR found that this recommendation remained pending.<sup>62</sup>

83. For 2024, the State reported that, according to the recommendations on human rights and national priorities, the analysis on the ratification of international human rights instruments corresponds to the composition of the Legislative Assembly that took office in May 2024. In addition, it reiterated that, although the instrument indicated in the recommendation has not been ratified, the PDDH can function as a national mechanism for the prevention of torture.<sup>63</sup>

84. For its part, the Commission received information provided by civil society according to which it is not aware of any initiative aimed at ratifying the protocol mentioned in this recommendation, nor to create a National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture<sup>64</sup>. Likewise, it was indicated that, in the framework of the Universal Periodic Review, the State had not accepted the recommendation to ratify the protocol, but only a mechanism that, however, would not have made any progress.<sup>65</sup>

85. The IACHR notes that in the last year, no additional measures have been implemented for the ratification of the Optional Protocol mentioned in the recommendation. Regarding the establishment of the National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture, although the State indicated the possibility of the PDDH performing these functions, it did not specify details on concrete progress in this regard. In this sense, it concludes that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

86. The IACHR emphasizes the need for the State to adopt measures to ensure the two results requested in the recommendation, namely the ratification of the Optional Protocol and, in addition, the establishment of the National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture.

C. Operation of the office of the Attorney General of the Republic

Recommendation No. 17. Pass the Organic Law on the Office of the Public General Defender (PGR) and grant it a budget that will allow it to act consistently with the workload assigned to it.

87. For the follow-up report for the year 2023, the Commission positively assessed the issuance of the regulatory framework designed to strengthen the institutional structure of the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic (hereinafter "PGR"). Furthermore, it acknowledged the information regarding the increase in this entity's budget for 2023 and noted that a budget increase is necessary to ensure its effective functioning. At that time, the IACHR determined that the recommendation had a significant level of partial compliance and requested a more comprehensive analysis of the budgetary needs of this entity.<sup>66</sup>

88. For the year 2024, the State highlighted that every year, the PGR identifies its needs for human, material, technological, and input resources to prepare the draft institutional budget. It pointed out that, in the year 2023, it reinforced the human capacity of the Specialized Attention Units of this entity to improve their performance, especially those for the Defense of the Family, Individual Liberty, Real and Personal Rights, Workers' Rights, Psycho-Social Preventive Services and Mediation, Third Party Funds and Conciliation, Children and Adolescents, Substantive Equality and Life Free of Violence for Women and, in addition, auxiliary prosecutors. It also stated that the PGR has made a diagnosis of the investment projects needed for the five years of 2024-2028, emphasizing the strengthening of the Training, Analysis, and Research Center at the national level; the enhancement of the central offices, technological improvements, and infrastructure upgrades in specific sectors.<sup>67</sup>

89. For its part, the IACHR received information from civil society, according to which a 13.6% reduction in the PGR budget is foreseen between 2023 and 2025. In addition, it was indicated that, to date, there would be a setback due to the saturation of cases by the public defender's office, considering the increase of detentions in the framework of the exception regime, in addition to a dismissal of 400 workers that, according to what was indicated, would have occurred by the year 2024. It was also stated that according to the Movement of Dismissed Workers (hereinafter "MTD"), more than 60% of the lawyers of the PGR had been dismissed, leading to a saturation of the workload<sup>68</sup>. In this regard, the IACHR verified the information

<sup>68</sup> Passionist Social Service (SSPAS), Response to the follow-up questionnaire, October 4, 2024. Based on the fiscal transparency portal of the Ministry of Finance, this organization indicated to the IACHR that the budget in US dollars allocated to the PGR by management area has been as follows:

- Year 2023: 39,827,840 (38,149,755 for consumption or operational management; 273,900 for financial and other expenses; 1,404,185 for investments in fixed assets).
- Year 2024: 38,229,098 (37,350,453 for consumption or operating expenses; 307,800 for financial and other expenses; 570,845 for investments in fixed assets).
- Year 2025: 34,411,037 (33,532,192 for consumption or operating expenses; 308,000 for financial and other expenses; 570,845 for investments in fixed assets).

published in the Fiscal Transparency Portal of the Ministry of Finance of El Salvador for 2024 and the proposed budget for 2025. In this regard, it identified that, for the year 2024, a total of US$38.2 million was allocated to the PGR<sup>69</sup> and that, according to the draft budget law for the year 2025, a budget of just over US$34.4 million is foreseen for the same entity.<sup>70</sup>

90. In its observations of the present report, the State clarified that the Legislative Assembly approved a General Budget and Special Budgets for the Fiscal Year of 2025, as well as the Salaries Bill, which amounted to $9,663 million and is the first fully funded state budget in decades. According to the State, three months before the approval of the institutional budgets, the deputies of the Treasury and Special Budget Committee carried out a consultation and analysis process with the heads of the different State portfolios so that they could justify the use of the funds, with which the budget gap has been reduced and highlighting that, in 2019, the gap amounted to $1.2 billion. Likewise, the State affirmed that, due to the economic policies implemented, this figure has been significantly reduced year after year as follows: it indicated that, in 2020, the fiscal gap was reduced to $645 million; by 2022, it achieved a further reduction to $496 million; in 2023, it decreased to $472 million; and in 2024, it was $338 million, representing a reduction of 28.32% regarding 2019 and clarifying that by 2025, this fiscal gap will be zero dollars. According to the State, this trend reflects a commitment to fiscal stability and the country's economic development, which necessitated adjusting institutional budgets to align with the availability of resources, as increasing the taxpayer's tax burden is considered a measure of last resort.<sup>71</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

91. The Commission notes the State's information in the sense that the PGR assesses its resource needs annually and has diagnosed investment projects for the five years 2024-2028. The Commission has also considered the State's clarification regarding the State budget approved by the Legislative Assembly, the reduction of the fiscal gap, and the need to adjust institutional budgets to the availability of resources.

92. Despite the reported State measures regarding the approval of the State budget, the IACHR reiterates that the recommendation under follow-up focuses on two aspects: the first pertains to the organic law of the Attorney General's Office, which was considered fulfilled since 2022; the second requests a budget for the entity that "allows it to operate in a manner consistent with its assigned workload."

93. Regarding the component of the recommendation that remains under follow-up, the IACHR identifies that the State did not provide specific details regarding the scope of the budget allocated to this institution for the current year to determine whether its strengthening has been maintained and considering the information provided by civil society, which would indicate, in fact, a significant budgetary setback, the Commission emphasizes the importance of having additional detailed information on the current state of its resources and budgets, in comparison to the assessment of its priorities and workload. In the meantime, the Commission concludes that, based on the information it has accessed, this recommendation would have regressed in terms of compliance, reaching a partial level of fulfillment.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

94. The IACHR reiterates the importance that compliance with this recommendation be accompanied by an assessment of the functions that should be performed by the PGR and its workload so that, based on this assessment, the State can determine what budget is reasonably required for the optimal exercise of these functions. Based on this diagnosis, we reiterate the invitation to the State to report on the actions taken to ensure an adequate budget for the exercise of these functions. In addition, clarifying information is requested regarding the budget that has been allocated to the PGR for the years 2023, 2024 and 2025, to contrast the information that, according to civil society, is the one available in the Fiscal Transparency Portal.

D. Discrimination

Recommendation No. 26. Ratify the Convention against all Forms of Discrimination and Intolerance.

95. For the follow-up report for the year 2023, the State reported that it is conducting consultations at the national level through the Ministry of Foreign Affairs before forwarding the instrument indicated in the recommendation to the Legislative Assembly for ratification. After urging the State to move forward with this ratification, the Commission concluded that this recommendation was still pending compliance.<sup>72</sup>

Information on compliance

96. For the year 2024, in addition to the fact that the State reiterated that the new composition of the Legislative Assembly, which took office on May 1, 2024, until 2027, was in charge of analyzing the possible ratification of international human rights instruments, according to human rights recommendations and national priorities, it indicated that the instrument referred to in this recommendation is in the consultation stage with the relevant national entities before determining its possible subscription.<sup>73</sup>

97. For its part, the Commission accessed information provided by civil society, according to which no progress has been made in the process of this instrument, despite the multiple discriminations faced by various populations in El Salvador.<sup>74</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

98. Pending information on specific measures to comply with this recommendation, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation remains pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in compliance with the recommendation

99. The IACHR urges the State to adopt measures to achieve substantial progress in the process of domestic ratification of the international instrument mentioned in this recommendation and to report on its development.

E. Situation of specific groups

1. Women

Recommendation No. 18. Take the necessary steps to strengthen the system for protecting women and girls who are victims of violence, such as improving the system of monitoring of protection measures, the establishment of a Special Reparation Fund for Women Victims of Femicide Violence, and the creation of a network of shelters, and providing these with the resources they need to operate.

100. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR took note of the programs to guarantee the rights of women victims of gender-based violence of the Salvadoran Institute for the Development of Women (hereinafter "ISDEMU") and the PGR. In addition, it noted that the Special Fund for Women Victims of Violence was created from the Special Comprehensive Law for a Life Free of Violence for Women (hereinafter "LEIV"), issued in 2011, through Decree No. 520. In this regard, it requested information on how this Fund provides comprehensive reparations to victims of femicide. On the other hand, the Commission valued the adoption of guidelines and protocols for the operation of the network of shelters, welcomed the proposals to create an evaluation system and the Accreditation and Monitoring Unit of Shelters, and invited to report on the economic, logistical and human resources to strengthen these houses. The IACHR concluded that the recommendation remained partially fulfilled.<sup>75</sup>

Information on compliance

101. For the year 2024, the State reiterated information provided in 2023, according to which Article 35 of the LEIV establishes where the resources of the Special Fund for the Reparation of Women Victims of Femicidal Violence come from and indicates that these will be used for the projects encompassed in this law. It noted that ISDEMU works to provide comprehensive and specialized care to women who face gender-based violence and has consolidated a strategy to monitor, promote, and ensure compliance with regulations and public policies on prevention, care, and justice.<sup>76</sup>

102. In addition, the State emphasized that ISDEMU works in coordination with other institutions and sectors, and, specifically, that the protection centers work, for example, with (i) the International Organization for Migration, Plan International, the Norwegian Refugee Council, the International Rescue Committee, and the Red Cross, concerning case management, humanitarian aid, shelter, relocation, and life plans; and (ii) with national entities, such as the Ministry of Education, Science and Technology (hereinafter "MINEDUCYT"), regarding the education of the sheltered population; with the National Council for Early Childhood, Children and Adolescents (hereinafter "CONAPINA"), to report on sheltered children and adolescents; with the PGR, to attend to women who are forcibly displaced; with health units and hospitals; and with the FGR and family courts, peace courts and specialized courts of the LEIV, to guarantee the rights of users.<sup>77</sup>

103. The State also stated that ISDEMU provides services to women who face femicide, sexual, economic, physical, symbolic, patrimonial, psychological, and emotional violence and that it has a temporary shelter and a shelter house where the primary needs of women and their children who face violence are met and where they are provided with tools for personal and economic development, as well as social, legal, medical and psychological care. It also indicated that these spaces guarantee educational and recreational care to protect the physical, psychological, and sexual integrity of the users and their children.<sup>78</sup>

104. In this regard, the State indicated that ISDEMU's protection centers have a specialized staff made up of a coordinator, a person in charge of the shelter or shelter house, an administrative liaison, an educator, an orderly, a service collaborator, a psychosocial technician, a social technician, a caregiver, and a service collaborator, and specified the functions of each one. It also indicated that the protection centers have a budget of USD 584,124.84, which includes salaries, payment of goods and services, and food for the users.<sup>79</sup>

105. For its part, the Commission learned information from civil society according to which there are no known advances for the Special Fund for Reparations to Women Victims of Femicide Violence or to guarantee comprehensive reparations for women and girls victims of violence<sup>80</sup> beyond training courses on comprehensive reparations in the year 2024 for judges, prosecutors, specialized prosecutors for women, which, however, it was indicated, would be early on to determine the effectiveness of this measure<sup>81</sup>. addition, it was pointed out that the Legislative Assembly did not approve a proposed law presented in March 2023 on the Integral Responsibility of the Salvadoran State with the Victims of Femicide and Indirect Victims of Femicide, which contemplated a monthly subsidy, study grants, housing bonds, and free legal advice.<sup>82</sup>

106. It was also pointed out that budget allocations for the care of girls, adolescents and women who have suffered violence have decreased in recent years<sup>83</sup> and that the 2024 National General Budget Guide establishes that ISDEMU would have an allocation of 11.6 million dollars, although by 2023, this amount was 12.2 million dollars. It was also stated that the August 2022 decision to transfer the Ciudad Mujer Program to ISDEMU would have led to a deterioration in the latter; and that, within ISDEMU's organizational chart, between 2022 and 2024, some sub-directorates would have been eliminated, centralizing support services in a single one and with a decrease in the staff that provides care to women.<sup>84</sup>

107. Additionally, the Commission was informed that no progress has been made regarding the reception or temporary shelter services provided by ISDEMU<sup>85</sup> and that the available spaces are designated for the care of returned migrant women<sup>86</sup>. It was even reported that, despite having sought information from ISDEMU about the operation of the shelters, the State denied access to this information to avoid potentially hindering the institution's work, with this reservation in effect since June 2020. However, civil society claimed to have learned about the operation of two facilities: Las Luciérnagas and the shelter for returned migrant women, although the specific percentage of the budget allocated for their operation remains unknown, and these resources were identified as insufficient considering the need for service improvements throughout the national territory<sup>87</sup>. Furthermore, it was noted that, in 2018, REDFEM had proposed a reform for the financing and establishment of shelters, but for the 2021-2024 legislative period, at least 30 files have reportedly been archived in the Commission on Women and Gender Equality. In this context, it was reiterated that the lack of shelters continues to be a significant obstacle in protecting women victims of violence, including those with disabilities.<sup>88</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

108. The Commission identifies that, for 2024, no specific measures have been reported that would allow the conclusion of the progress in fulfilling this recommendation. The information reported by the State regarding the LEIV and the Special Reparation Fund had been previously reported. Still, no concrete actions for its creation and practical operation have been reported.

109. In addition, with respect to the claims regarding the services reportedly provided by ISDEMU to women victims of violence, as well as its allocated budget, a specific technical diagnosis is needed to determine whether or not there is still a need to strengthen the system for monitoring protection measures and to guarantee sufficient resources for the operation of the network of shelters. This data is necessary, considering the concerns expressed by civil society regarding the insufficiency of current resources and the number of shelters in operation for the entire territory. Considering the above, the Commission identifies that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

110. The IACHR reiterates that progress in complying with this recommendation requires the creation and implementation of the Special Fund for Reparations to Women Victims of Femicidal Violence; concrete measures to strengthen the system for monitoring protection measures; and specific actions to provide sufficient resources to the network of shelters. With regard to the last two points, the Commission invites the State to prepare a specific prior diagnosis that will allow it to visualize the sufficiency or additional needs measures to strengthen the system for monitoring protection measures and the resources of the network of shelters and safe houses to attend to cases at the national level.

Recommendation No. 19. Provide periodic training for state officials, particularly those in the judiciary, on how to include a gender perspective and comply with inter-American standards on gender-based violence and discrimination, access to justice for women and girls, investigations with a gender perspective, and due diligence of the State in this matter so as to eradicate impunity in cases of violence against women.

111. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR valued information on training provided by the Prosecutorial Training School of the FGR, the National Council of the Judiciary, the Specialized Training Unit of ISDEMU, and the Directorate for Comprehensive Attention to Women and Access to Justice of the Supreme Court of Justice, including training related to the Spotlight initiative. Additionally, it noted that these activities have been implemented over time, and the FGR and ISDEMU evaluate their results. However, it requested further information on the content and topics of the training reported as mandatory and sustained over time, particularly concerning justice operators, and considered that the recommendation had a substantial partial level of compliance.<sup>89</sup>

Information on compliance

112. For 2024, the State indicated that training sessions—whether initial, ongoing, or specialized—for the prosecutorial staff of the FGR are "indisputably mandatory," and that unjustified non-compliance is a serious offense punishable by suspension, in accordance with the Organic Law of this entity (hereinafter "LOFGR"). In this regard, it noted that the Prosecutorial Training School (hereinafter "ECF") verifies the attendance of prosecutorial personnel each day. The State referenced the 2023-2024 work report of the FGR that details the trained personnel and provided figures such as 534 courses conducted from June 2023 to May 2024 and 35 technical assistances, with 2,179 individuals trained. Additionally, it highlighted the list of cooperating partners for the training of prosecutorial staff, both national and international, and reported an initiative to enhance investigation and prosecution capacities with a human rights approach and gender perspective, benefiting more than 1,000 legal staff and psychology professionals for a comprehensive approach to victims and their families, funded by the Canadian government.<sup>90</sup>

113. Additionally, the State referred to the training sessions on these subjects conducted in 2023 by the National Judicial Center, which included topics on women's labor rights; women and the criminal justice system; women's rights in the jurisprudence of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights; gender perspectives in judicial decisions; Inter-American standards for the protection of women's rights and the criminal justice system; equality and access to justice for women; femicide and suicide by inducement; labor damages with a gender perspective; and ratified ILO conventions.<sup>91</sup>

114. The State also stated that the Specialized Training Unit (hereinafter "UFE") of the Subdirectorate of Public Policy, along with the subdirectorates of the Specialized Care Centers Ciudad Mujer and Territorial Management of ISDEMU, offers specialized training in women's rights for public servants and the general population. It noted that the objectives of the UFE are to contribute to reducing gender inequality and discrimination, and to enhance the State's response to its obligations to respect, protect, and guarantee women's rights, as well as to expand opportunities for women. The State mentioned that the specialized training covers topics such as equality, living free from violence for women, masculinities, and communication for equality, among others, and that these courses have been offered both virtually and in-person. In this regard, it stated that between 2019 and 2023, the UFE trained 22,038 individuals (12,417 women and 9,621 men), while the subdirectorates of Specialized Care Centers Ciudad Mujer and Territorial Management trained 2,344 individuals (1,487 women and 857 men).<sup>92</sup>

115. For its part, the Commission received information from civil society indicating that, based on public information or data that has been provided to it, training for civil servants is ongoing, particularly in the judiciary, prosecutor's offices, and attorney general's or public defender's offices. For instance, details were shared about training processes conducted in 2023 and 2024 by the National Council of the Judiciary, the FGR, the Supreme Court of Justice, and the PGR on topics encompassing gender perspective, comprehensive reparations, intersectionality, or addressing violence.<sup>93</sup>

116. In addition to the above, civil society organizations reported to the Commission information on the following facts:<sup>94</sup>

- On February 22, 2024, the President of the Republic affirmed in an interview conducted by the director of the organization Moms for Liberty that gender ideology is prohibited in El Salvador due to its promotion of “unnatural, anti-God and anti-family” ideas in education. Furthermore, according to the organizations, the President stated that such ideologies would not be allowed in schools and colleges and that, in addition, the curriculum mustn't include gender ideology<sup>95</sup>. In this regard, the Commission learned of a video in which the President makes these statements<sup>96</sup>.
- The Ministry of Education issued a memorandum on February 28, 2024, in which it would have requested the exclusion of materials and content related to “gender ideology” from public schools under penalty of sanctions and termination of functions<sup>97</sup>. Regarding this allegation, the IACHR also learned of a tweet published on February 27, 2024, by the Minister of Education of El Salvador, which explicitly states the elimination of “any use or trace of gender ideology from public schools”<sup>98</sup>.
- The Ministry of Health has withdrawn material on sexual diversity from health units and HIV clinics<sup>99</sup>.

117. In its observations on the current report, the State requested that the IACHR declare full compliance with this recommendation. In this regard, it noted that the statements made by civil society regarding the President, concerning the educational curriculum, and those of the Ministers of Education and Health exceed the scope of the follow-up to the recommendation. It asserted that the decisions of these authorities reaffirm the State's commitment to guaranteeing the rights of children and adolescents, including access to information and education tailored to their specific needs, alongside the teachings and guidance of parents, which serve as the foundation for their upbringing. Accordingly, the State requested that the Commission restrict its monitoring of the recommendation to elements pertinent to it, excluding aspects that do not fall within the training of officials and justice operators, on which, it stated, the State has reported actions taken that have been confirmed by civil society<sup>100</sup>.

118. Furthermore, in these observations, the State affirmed that human rights training is institutionalized and part of public officials' continuous and permanent training. In addition, it indicated that it had implemented a comprehensive training program for justice operators from a gender perspective in coordination with the Attorney General's Office and the Salvadoran Institute for the Development of Women (ISDEMU). In this regard, it complemented the information by noting that, in the last year, more than 1,500 judicial operators received training under the National Training Plan on Human Rights and Gender<sup>101</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

119. The Commission notes that the State continued to report information on the periodic training of State officials, particularly justice operators. Likewise, based on the topics listed by the State, the Commission recognizes that they seem to address issues from a gender perspective and Inter-American standards regarding gender-based violence and discrimination, access to justice for women, girls, and adolescents, investigations with a gender perspective, and due diligence. Specifically, the Commission identifies compliance efforts by the FGR, the National Judicial Center, and ISDEMU, which were verified by information provided by civil society.

120. For its part, the IACHR has taken note of (i) the facts alleged by civil society consisting of the statement of the President of the Republic and the alleged decisions of the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Health, as well as their effects on compliance with this recommendation and (ii) the State's request to consider that the statements and decisions mentioned by civil society "exceed the scope of the recommendation", since they are statements by the President, regarding the educational curriculum, as well as by the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Health.

121. The Commission reiterates that the primary objective of this recommendation is for the State to provide training, particularly for justice operators, on a gender perspective, understood as "a concept that highlights the position of inequality and structural subordination of women and girls to men, based on their gender, and as an essential tool to combat discrimination and violence against women, as well as against individuals with sexual and gender diversity, in accordance with Inter-American standards on the matter."<sup>102</sup>

122. Considering the training measures known to the IACHR since 2022, which have involved justice operators as addressees and, in addition, have developed the topics requested by the recommendation, it declares the cessation of compliance and considers that this recommendation has reached a level of full compliance. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Commission calls upon the State to ensure the continuity and obligatory nature of the training measures requested, ensuring that the notion of a gender perspective is duly disseminated and socialized with the civil servants, including justice operators.

123. For its part, the IACHR has taken note of the President's statements and decisions of the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Health. As they refer to the prohibition of a "gender ideology" in schools and school curricula, the Commission will request specific information on the scope of these decisions in the framework of recommendation 40 of the Country Report under follow-up<sup>103</sup>.

Recommendation No. 21. Strengthen mechanisms for women and girls to access justice, by clarifying legal competences, strengthening resources and capacities, and improving the work of the Specialized Courts for a Life Free from Violence and Discrimination.

<sup>103</sup> Recommendation No. 40 requests: "Include content on equality, non-discrimination, and social harmony in school curricula to advance on building a culture based on tolerance and peaceful conflict resolution, inclusion and respect for human rights."

124. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR noted that, since 2022, it recognized the importance of strengthening specialized courts to ensure a life free from violence and discrimination against women. In this regard, it appreciated the training provided, the multidisciplinary and specialized approach, and the improvements in infrastructure, although it recalled that, since 2022, it had been aware of significant congestion and low capacity to handle litigation. Additionally, it noted that the State did not address actions to resolve jurisdictional conflicts between specialized courts and peace and family courts concerning domestic violence, which has been recognized as a challenge for compliance with this recommendation. Based on the information available, the Commission concluded that the recommendation had advanced to a substantial partial level of compliance.<sup>104</sup>

Information on compliance

125. For the year 2024, the State reported that Legislative Decree No. 286 of 2016 establishes measures to enhance access to justice for women, girls, and adolescents, along with strengthening the specialized jurisdiction for a life free from violence and discrimination against them. It noted that, in the San Salvador department, this jurisdiction has included an investigative court and a sentencing court since July 2017, and, starting in January 2018, a chamber was added; for the departments of Santa Ana and San Miguel, the jurisdiction comprised an investigative court and a sentencing court since January 2018.<sup>105</sup>

126. In addition, the State pointed out that, having identified the greatest congestion of proceedings in the investigative courts in San Salvador and Santa Ana, the judicial body sought to reduce this congestion this way:<sup>106</sup>

- San Salvador increased its staff (four judicial collaborators and one notifier), implemented a support judicial office from July 2020 to April 2021, requested the creation of two new judicial offices, a second court in San Salvador and one for Cojutepeque, and approved that, for four months, the first examining court would stop receiving processes to purge pending cases with a temporarily strengthened staff.
- For Santa Ana, it conducted statistical studies, agreed to implement a back-up judicial office from March to September 2022, changed the jurisdictional authority, extended the back-up judicial office, and strengthened the support staff by the end of 2022.
- In addition, since 2023, it has created two multidisciplinary teams in Cojutepeque and San Francisco Gotera, in addition to the three existing ones in San Salvador, Santa Ana, and San Miguel, to support the courts with technical studies based on gender and to follow up on protection measures imposed in cases of domestic violence and crimes under the LEIV.

127. According to the State, the measures mentioned above significantly reduced the congestion index values in those judicial offices in 2023 because they made it possible to expedite case processing and reduce the inventory of pending proceedings. However, the state indicated that the load of the sentencing courts in Santa Ana and San Salvador increased due to the increase in the flow of cases in the examining courts. In this regard, the State indicated that it is developing additional technical studies to propose actions to increase productivity and speed.<sup>107</sup>

128. For its part, civil society informed the Commission that the judiciary, the FGR, the PGR, the PDDH, the National Civil Police, the IML, MINSALUD, and others have a legal obligation to have specialized care units for women facing violence<sup>108</sup>. In addition, the impact that the creation of the specialized jurisdiction for a life free of violence has had on the treatment of women's inequalities when they access the justice system was recognized, although it was indicated that the challenge of a sufficient budgetary standard remains.<sup>109</sup>

129. Civil society also highlighted that over the past year, state efforts have been made to reduce congestion in specialized jurisdictions aimed at ensuring a life free of violence and discrimination against women. This includes the creation of multidisciplinary teams in Cojutepeque, Cuscatlán, and San Francisco Gotera, Morazán, as well as the establishment of the Directorate of Comprehensive Care for Women and Access to Justice, which is responsible for conducting technical visits to assess conditions for specialized technical support, capacity building, and the reinforcement of support staff, among other functions.<sup>110</sup>

130. Similarly, the RED-FEM noted that in 2021, it conducted a study to evaluate the resolution, pendency, and congestion rates in the two types of specialized courts mentioned in this recommendation: the investigating courts (responsible for the investigation phase) and the sentencing courts (responsible for the final phase of criminal proceedings). The study aimed to assess the capacity of these judicial bodies to handle the cases under their jurisdiction and to identify potential delays or congestion. According to the information provided to the Commission, the study's conclusions were as follows:<sup>111</sup>

- Examining Courts:
  - 2021: resolution rate 97%, pendency rate 168%, congestion rate 267%.
  - 2023: resolution rate 107%, pendency rate 94%, congestion rate 192%.
  - 2024: resolution rate 145%, pendency rate 90%, congestion rate 183%.
- Sentencing courts:
  - 2021: resolution rate 79%, pendency rate 129%, congestion rate 175%.
  - 2023: resolution rate 60%, pendency rate 157%, congestion rate 253%.
  - 2024: resolution rate 135%, pendency rate 115%, congestion rate 214%.

131. Regarding the analysis of these figures, the Commission was informed that, although in the specialized pre-trial jurisdiction, the data show a significant improvement in the years 2023 and 2024, considering the increase in the resolution capacity and the decrease in accumulation and congestion, this could be explained by the entry into force of two new offices in 2021. Concerning the sentencing instances, although there was an improvement in the resolution capacity, there was also an increase in the accumulation and congestion rates from 2023 to 2024, although it decreased compared to 2021. In any case, civil society identifies that congestion continues to be critical, especially for examining courts, exceeding 100%.<sup>112</sup>

132. In addition, the Commission was provided with figures on the critical situation of violence against women, and it was indicated that these require budgetary and institutional efforts to guarantee access to justice. However, specialized personnel, equipment, training, and clear guidelines for addressing this problem are lacking.<sup>113</sup>

133. Regarding the clarity of material competence, civil society informed the IACHR that, given the number of domestic violence and criminal incidents, the Supreme Court of Justice issued Circular No. 420 in November 2023 for judgeships focused on peace, family, and specialized matters ensuring a life free of violence for women. It stated that this instrument would clarify that violence against women is primarily a criminal issue. For RED-FEM, this pronouncement acknowledges the seriousness of this violence, but in practice, it fails to ensure simple or effective access to justice and represents a disadvantageous legal treatment for the victims. According to what was reported to the Commission, leaving all acts of domestic violence under the competence of the criminal jurisdiction denies the right to specialization in the matter since not all these acts fit into criminal types.<sup>114</sup>

134. In its observations to the present report, the State reported that on January 14, 2025, it launched the “CIHUATL Mujeres” project, an initiative funded by the European Union, implemented by UN Women and led by the Government of El Salvador through the Salvadoran Institute for the Development of Women (ISDEMU), which will work in coordination with other key institutions responsible for implementing the legal framework, including the Attorney General's Office and the National Civil Police. According to the Government, the project, with an investment of US$4.12 million, has as its primary objective to reduce the gaps in the implementation of laws from government offices, reduce impunity, and strengthen the legal protection of women, for which this, existing regulations will be reviewed and updated, and the capabilities of the institutions responsible for their enforcement will be enhanced. The State indicated that approximately 4,000 public employees will participate in this process of updating and competency strengthening, as well as in facilitating processes to prevent the revictimization of women<sup>115</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

135. The IACHR recognizes that the State has continued to make significant efforts to strengthen specialized courts for a life free from violence and discrimination while seeking to reduce congestion levels. However, the IACHR notes that the State claimed the reported measures significantly lowered the congestion index values in these courts in 2023, without providing diagnostic information on these levels. Additionally, the State indicated it would be developing technical studies to propose actions for enhancing productivity and efficiency. Considering this information, along with the figures presented by civil society regarding the resolution rates, pendency, and congestion of both specialized investigative and sentencing courts, the IACHR underscores the importance of monitoring the effectiveness of the measures aimed at bolstering these judicial instances.

136. For its part, the IACHR did not identify State compliance measures for the clarification of competencies between the justices of the peace, family, and specialized courts. In this regard, it recalls that, for the 2021 Country Report, the Commission found that the specialized courts mentioned here would have “an almost universal competence to deal with acts of violence against women, but without the power to hear sexual crimes”. In addition, the information reported by civil society this year indicates that there would have been a decision by the CSJ, and considering the concern expressed by RED-FEM regarding this regulation, it considers it appropriate to request additional information to understand whether this decision contravenes or hinders access to justice for women victims of violence. In the meantime, the Commission concludes that this recommendation continues with a substantial partial level of compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

137. The IACHR considers that to fully comply with this recommendation, the State must demonstrate that the reported compliance measures have significantly reduced congestion levels in specialized courts addressing issues related to a life free of violence and discrimination. In this regard, the Commission requests the State to provide a reliable assessment of the congestion levels in these courts and to adopt a prompt and effective response based on its findings. Furthermore, the IACHR emphasizes that compliance with this recommendation should involve actions to clarify the competencies of the courts authorized to hear these cases. Additionally, the Commission encourages the State to report on the progress of the technical studies mentioned, which propose actions to enhance the productivity and efficiency of these judicial processes, and to consider the information provided by civil society as valuable input for implementing institutional strengthening measures.

138. Finally, the Commission welcomes the information provided by the State on the launch of the “CIHUATL Mujeres” project. As this measure was implemented in 2025, it invites additional information that will allow it to assess its relevance to fulfilling the present recommendation.

Recommendation No. 22. Review the cases of women who are serving severe prison sentences for aggravated homicide in relation to obstetric emergencies or complications and prioritize requests to commute sentences that they are currently serving.

139. For the 2023 follow-up report, the State asserted that obstetric emergencies are not classified as a crime. The IACHR recalled that, at the beginning of 2023, it identified as a setback in the guarantee of reproductive rights the convictions in El Salvador of women who experienced obstetric emergencies in the context of the absolute criminalization of abortion.<sup>116</sup> Additionally, it requested information on the convictions reviewed since the recommendation was issued, including regarding women who have been released. It also considered relevant the fact that a judge from the Second Sentencing Court of Santa Ana overturned, in October 2023, a 30-year prison sentence following a review requested by the Citizen Group for the Decriminalization of Abortion. Furthermore, it asked the State to clarify whether the prioritization of the commutation of prison sentences applies exclusively to convictions of women for aggravated homicide in the context of the criminalization of abortion. For that year, the Commission concluded that its recommendation remained partially fulfilled.<sup>117</sup>

Information on compliance

140. For the year 2024, the State emphasized that obstetric emergencies or complications at any stage of pregnancy are not criminalized under criminal law and that no policies exist for criminal prosecution regarding these situations. It noted that convictions and prison sentences imposed are for crimes categorized as offenses that protect the right to life and enhance the protection of children, in accordance with its obligations under the Convention. It further indicated that the Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice recorded 12 commutations of sentences, of which 11 related to the crime of aggravated homicide, and that the status of these cases is “expired.” It stated that a single case of imperfect homicide also had a favorable outcome and is, therefore, also recorded as “expired.”<sup>118</sup>

141. Similarly, the State reiterated that requests for sentence commutation are prioritized. In this regard, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security has ten working days to decide, starting when it receives the necessary documentation from the National Criminological Council and the Supreme Court of Justice. Additionally, the Special Law on Appeals for Mercy specifies that commutations apply to women’s convictions for aggravated homicide or any crime.<sup>119</sup>

142. Additionally, the State stated that the Penitentiary System fulfills its guarantee responsibilities, emphasizing respect for rights. It noted that the General Directorate of Penal Centers (hereinafter “DGCP”) transferred women deprived of liberty from the Preventive and Punishment Center for Women in Ilopango to the appropriate center in Apanteos to enhance their conditions regarding space, care, and habitability. Furthermore, it has provided health, education, and comprehensive early childhood development for women deprived of liberty who are pregnant or accompanied by their children.<sup>120</sup>

143. For its part, the Commission was informed of a communiqué from the Agrupación Ciudadana por la Despenalización del Aborto (Citizens' Group for the Decriminalization of Abortion), according to which, in December 2023, Lilian's release was obtained and that with this decision, a total of 73 women convicted after facing an obstetric emergency would have been released with sentences of up to 50 years in prison for aggravated homicide. Despite the above, it was also noted that "the denunciations and persecution of women facing obstetric emergencies" did not end and that, at that time, there were eleven active cases because the FGR had decided not to archive them and six that were being "processed for obstetric emergencies and that intersect with sexual and reproductive rights, related to maternal death due to ectopic pregnancy."<sup>121</sup>

144. The Commission was also informed of a communiqué issued by the same organization in October 2024 regarding the serious impact that the absolute criminalization of abortion continues to have in the country. It was pointed out that, despite the progress made, in 2024, "a new case arose: a 19-year-old girl was imprisoned after experiencing an obstetric emergency at the hospital where she sought medical attention." In this context, it was indicated that she was "denounced, handcuffed to the stretcher, and transferred directly from the hospital to jail." Furthermore, the Commission learned that, according to this statement, "El Salvador has one of the most restrictive laws in the world on abortion, criminalizing any type of pregnancy termination, even in cases where the mother's life is at risk." It was also noted that this regulatory framework has led to the unjust imprisonment of dozens of women, most of whom are in precarious socioeconomic conditions.<sup>122</sup>

145. In its observations on the present report, the State requested that the IACHR declare full compliance with this recommendation. It indicated that, given that the country report under follow-up was communicated to the State on November 2, 2021, this recommendation is confined to reviewing the cases of women sentenced to imprisonment for actions related to obstetric emergencies, as well as giving priority to the processing of requests for commutation of the sentence in progress, without considering or referring to facts or alleged future cases, but solely to the cases reportedly registered at that time.<sup>123</sup>

146. Furthermore, in its observations, the State affirmed that, based on publicly available information, the IACHR identified that, as of December 2023, 73 women convicted of aggravated homicide would have been released after serving up to 50 years in prison. However, it indicated that the reference to an alleged case registered for October 2024 exceeds the timeframe of this recommendation. The State stated that this recommendation should not be interpreted as an impossibility for the State to prosecute crimes in cases where there are well-founded elements to support a charge for violations of criminal law, particularly in cases involving crimes against children, for whom the State has a reinforced obligation of protection. It also pointed out that the Commission's designation of these cases as emergencies or obstetric complications does not change the legal classification of the crime made by the competent judicial authority, which is aware of the facts presented to it.<sup>124</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

147. The Commission reiterates that the recommendation under follow-up is to review the cases of women convicted of crimes related to emergencies or obstetric complications and the priority processing of requests for commutation. The information provided by the State, including its observations on the report, does not allow the IACHR to conclude whether, at this time, there are women with prison sentences for aggravated homicide based on facts related to obstetric emergencies or complications and whether sufficient measures have been adopted to review all these cases.

148. In addition, based on publicly available information, the IACHR identifies that, although in December 2023, the Agrupación Ciudadana por la Despenalización del Aborto would have celebrated the release of a total of 73 women who had faced obstetric emergencies and had been convicted of aggravated homicide with up to 50 years in prison, by October 2024, a new case would have been reported. For the Commission, this last figure leads to the conclusion that there is still pending compliance with this recommendation; in addition, it identifies that the follow-up of this decision requires official information provided directly by the State that is more specific about the measures being adopted to review these cases.

149. The IACHR also recalls that this recommendation was issued in response to a repeated concern of the Commission, based on a series of data, testimonies, and cases known in the framework of its on-site visit, about a context of criminalization of women for the crime of homicide, with the common denominator that the facts they were accused of were related to obstetric complications<sup>125</sup>. For the IACHR, it is crucial to have access to specific official information submitted by the State to understand whether this context persists and whether the requested review measures have been adopted to remedy it. In the meantime, the Commission concludes that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

150. The IACHR will declare progress in complying with this recommendation when it has sufficient and clear information to conclude that the State has reviewed all cases of convictions of women sentenced to severe prison sentences for aggravated homicide for facts related to obstetric emergencies or complications. In this regard, the IACHR reiterates the request for official information provided directly by the State that allows for a precise understanding of the evolution of the measures of compliance with this recommendation, namely:

- a. The number of women who, from the time the recommendation was issued to the present, have had ongoing prison sentences for aggravated homicide of newborns or unborn children each year. In this regard, please specify for each case whether the State has taken any action to review it and, if so, what that action entailed.
- b. If applicable, explain precisely what measures have been taken to review convictions for aggravated homicide of women to identify cases of obstetric emergencies, including women who are no longer deprived of liberty (among other reasons, because their sentences have been commuted).

151. In addition, the IACHR identifies that information is still pending on the recommendation's component requesting priority processing of ongoing requests for sentence commutation, specifically for these cases.

Recommendation No. 23. Take the necessary steps to adapt El Salvador's regulatory framework to comply with inter-American standards on the sexual and reproductive rights of women and girls.

152. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR identified state measures to promote sexual and reproductive health services for girls and adolescents aimed at preventing pregnancy and addressing sexual violence. However, it reiterated that in the country, the absolute criminalization of voluntary termination of pregnancy persists, even when it imposes a disproportionate burden on the exercise of women's rights, facilitates a context of unsafe abortions, and may disregard the respect, protection, and guarantee of life, health, and integrity. Additionally, the Commission noted that there are state measures establishing a distinction in the right to reproductive health based on whether a pregnancy continues and concluded that obstacles remain in women's, girls', and adolescents' access to sexual and reproductive health services, without any discrimination whatsoever. In this context, it determined that compliance with the recommendation is still pending.<sup>126</sup>

Information on compliance

153. In 2024, the State reiterated that some laws and regulations guarantee access to sexual and reproductive health, along with information and education on the topic. Furthermore, the Ministry of Health implements initiatives like the "Adolescent Friendly Services Strategy," which promotes empathetic and dynamic care in environments tailored to their needs.<sup>127</sup>

154. In addition, the State indicated that, in compliance with the orders of the judgment of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights of November 30, 2021, in the case of Manuela et al. v. El Salvador, it created the Technical Guidelines for Compliance with Professional Confidentiality in the National Integrated Health System (hereinafter "SNIS") with technical and ethical provisions of mandatory compliance for the personnel of that system and for professionals in the public and private spheres. According to the latter, the SNIS institutions must guarantee the confidentiality of clinical files, and disclosing such information entails legal, and technical sanctions. Also, the State approved the Protocol for the approach to care in the preconception, prenatal, childbirth, puerperium, and obstetric emergencies from a human rights perspective, with technical and ethical provisions so that sexual and reproductive health care is provided with a human rights approach. For the State, the orders of this sentence "constitute the specific measures that would comply with this recommendation (...)".<sup>128</sup>

155. The State also reported on the (i) Policy for Gender Equality and Equity in Health of 2022, which, according to the State, would have a socialization plan for the east of the country to be developed between 2024 and 2025, and (ii) the Crecer Juntos Law, which establishes measures for the comprehensive protection of early childhood, children and adolescents, as well as for comprehensive care for pregnancy in girls and adolescents and comprehensive education on sexuality and sexual and reproductive health. In addition, it listed a series of technical guidelines, manuals, and assistance protocols of the Ministry of Health on comprehensive health without specifying which are aimed at complying with this recommendation. Among these, some specifically refer to the sexual and reproductive rights of women, girls, and adolescents, such as the following:<sup>129</sup>

- Technical guidelines on comprehensive care for women with mental and behavioral disorders prevalent in the perinatal period; preconception care and high reproductive risk; psychosocial care in perinatal and early childhood bereavement; neonatal metabolic screening; performance of the technical committee evaluating health care cases of pregnant women, children, and adolescents in imminent danger to life or severe health conditions; and Obstetric Surgical Procedures and Techniques.
- Manuals for the application of the evaluation instrument of the Nacer con Cariño maternity model, which is the technical instrument for monitoring the implementation of the Nacer con

<sup>129</sup> In addition to the instruments specifically referring to sexual and reproductive rights of women, girls and adolescents, the State reported on others related to comprehensive health, including that of children and newborns, such as: Grow and learn healthy strategy; safe health care; palliative care; comprehensive habilitation and rehabilitation care; follow-up of events allegedly attributable to vaccination or immunization and programmatic errors; extramural dental care; comprehensive care for children under ten years of age with severe malnutrition; implementation and operationalization of the colostrum therapy strategy, nutritional care and outpatient management of people with malnutrition in the life cycle; compliance with professional confidentiality in the integrated national health system; implementation of Teleinterconsultation and Specialized Teleconsultation; surveillance, prevention and control of infections associated with health care in newborns; open door units in the care of newborns and pediatric population; neonatal metabolic screening; early detection of hearing loss in newborns and infants; cardiac screening of clinically healthy newborns, and Comprehensive Health Care for Adolescents and young people in the RIIS. - Assistance protocols for the preconceptional, prenatal, delivery, puerperium, newborn and breastfeeding periods in low risk situations at the First Level of Care; and on the approach to care in, prenatal period, delivery, puerperium, and obstetric emergencies from a human rights perspective.

156. Civil society noted that the regulations and policies regarding women's sexual and reproductive health are confined to their maternal and reproductive roles. This is evident in the Crecer Juntos Law for the Integral Protection of Early Childhood, Childhood, and Adolescence of 2021, the Nacer con Cariño Law for a Respectful Birth and Caring, Sensitive Care for Newborns of 2021, and the Amor Convertido en Alimento Law for the Promotion, Protection, and Support of Breastfeeding in 2022.<sup>130</sup>

157. The Commission was also informed that comprehensive and accessible sexual and reproductive health services for adolescents and young people to prevent early pregnancies and early unions have been inconsistent and irregular due to biases surrounding sexuality and restrictions on the right to access and use contraceptive methods<sup>131</sup>. Furthermore, civil society highlighted to the IACHR that, in their view, there is a dominance of “a State vision that promotes the conservative regulation of sexuality, which weakens and delays the implementation of the National Intersectoral Strategy for the Prevention of Pregnancy in Girls and Adolescents 2017-2027 (Enipena), since there is an explicit prohibition and censorship on addressing comprehensive sex education in the public system.”<sup>132</sup> In this context, it was noted that in 2020, the Ministry of Education, Science and Technology (Mineducyt) reportedly withdrew the existing Comprehensive Sexuality Education (EIS) materials from schools. Additionally, the Commission was informed that this action would prevent the student population from accessing information based on scientific evidence and international human rights standards<sup>133</sup>.

158. In its observations to the current report, the State recalled that the Inter-American Court recently issued a judgment in the case of Beatriz et al. v. El Salvador. In this case, it did not impose an obligation on the State to revise its domestic legislation but rather granted a period of one year to adopt “all the regulatory measures necessary to provide guidelines for medical and judicial personnel to act in situations of pregnancies that put the life and health of women at risk.” Therefore, the State points out that, concerning El Salvador, the Inter-American standards have not required a modification to its criminal legislation. On the contrary, the State can comply with this measure through the adaptation of existing protocols, the establishment of a new protocol, or any other regulatory measure that ensures legal certainty in addressing situations like the one in the case. The State requested that the IACHR condition compliance with this measure on the effective execution of the reparations ordered by the Inter-American Court. Once declared compliant by the Court, the Commission should also conclude its follow-up on this recommendation.<sup>134</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

159. The IACHR identifies that several measures reported by the State had been previously known. However, the IACHR reiterates the considerations expressed in 2022 and 2023 in the sense of observing that the absolute criminalization of voluntary termination of pregnancy persists even when, as it has stated, its denial in certain circumstances imposes a disproportionate burden on the exercise of women's rights, creates a context that facilitates unsafe abortions, and disregards international obligations to respect, protect and guarantee their rights to life, health and integrity.<sup>135</sup>

160. Additionally, since 2022, the IACHR has identified that measures including the Nacer con Cariño Law, the PIEGS, and the Crecer Juntos Law prioritize maternity protection, creating a distinction in the security and guarantee of the right to reproductive health based on whether a pregnancy continues. In this context, the IACHR believes that there are still restrictions in the regulatory framework and health policies that impede access for women, girls, and adolescents to sexual and reproductive health services without discrimination. Furthermore, the IACHR emphasizes that States have an obligation to provide medical care without discrimination, meaning that under no circumstances can medical care be contingent upon the needs of women who require it.<sup>136</sup>

161. Additionally, in following up on the current recommendation, it is important to reference the recent judgment rendered by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the case of Beatriz et al. v. El Salvador. In this case, the Court deemed it necessary for the State to implement, within one year, “all the regulatory measures needed to provide guidelines and action plans for medical and judicial personnel in situations involving pregnancies that jeopardize the life and health of women.” In this context, it was observed that the State could meet this requirement by modifying existing protocols, developing a new protocol, or any other regulatory measure that ensures legal certainty in addressing situations similar to the one presented. Furthermore, the State must incorporate “a gender perspective and consider the standards established by the Court’s jurisprudence.”<sup>137</sup>

162. Regarding the State’s request to limit this recommendation to the adaptation of protocols requested by the Inter-American Court as a guarantee of non-repetition in the case of Beatriz et al. v. El Salvador, the IACHR clarifies that the measures requested by the Court respond to the declaration of international responsibility in a specific case. In contrast, the recommendation of the 2021 Country Report under follow-up pertains to the adaptation of the Salvadoran normative framework in accordance with all relevant Inter-American standards, while considering the findings and concerns that were highlighted previously, specifically:

- (i) “At least 36 women reportedly died from preventable chronic diseases and another 13 from ectopic pregnancies”, which could have been prevented if the women could legally terminate their unsafe pregnancies.
- (ii) The prevalence of discriminatory gender patterns limits education on the subject and access to and distribution of contraceptives, particularly to women, girls, and adolescents, and although emergency oral contraception is legal for women victims of sexual violence, it is being distributed at the discretion of health operators.
- (iii) The IACHR has reiterated its concern about the regulations that criminalize abortion in all circumstances in El Salvador.

163. Considering that this recommendation requires adapting the existing regulatory framework to all the applicable inter-American standards and that no regulatory adaptation measures have been identified to remedy the restrictions on women’s, girls’, and adolescents’ access to sexual and reproductive health services without discrimination, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation remains pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

164. The IACHR recalls that, according to the 2021 Country Report, it was indicated that the State's obligation to adopt legislation in this area seeks to ensure that women are guaranteed the effective exercise of their sexual and reproductive rights "on the understanding that the denial of voluntary termination of pregnancy in certain circumstances may constitute a violation of the fundamental rights of women, girls and adolescents."<sup>138</sup>

Recommendation No. 24. Adopt specific measures in accordance with international standards that guarantee the rights to work and to fair and equitable working conditions for women employed in domestic service and in maquilas, particularly those working in the textile industry from their own homes. It is recommended that the State ratify ILO Conventions 177, 189 and 190, and implement ILO recommendations 184 and 201 on this matter.

165. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR valued the compliance actions focused on guaranteeing the rights of women domestic workers and the recent National Policy on the Co-responsibility of Care. However, regarding women working in the textile sector, the Commission noted that only inspections were reported without specifying additional measures to ensure fair and equitable working conditions. Likewise, it identified that ILO Conventions 177 and 189 had not been ratified and concluded that the recommendation continued to be partially complied with.<sup>139</sup>

166. For 2024, the State affirmed that it had sought social protection for women in vulnerable situations to increase their equal participation in productive areas and that, on March 13, 2023, it reformed the Labor Code to guarantee the rights of working women during pregnancy. In addition, it reiterated that the new composition of the Legislative Assembly, which took office on May 1, 2024, until 2027, oversees the analysis for the eventual ratification of international human rights instruments, including the ratification of ILO Conventions 177 and 189, according to human rights recommendations and national priorities.<sup>140</sup>

167. The State also pointed out that the National Policy on Co-responsibility for Care is aimed at children, adults with disabilities or in a situation of dependency, elderly people in a situation of dependency, and people who provide care services, whether paid or unpaid. It indicated that the implementation of this measure is the responsibility of public institutions and that its components and strategic lines include the provision of services for comprehensive care, support for caregivers, knowledge management, improvement of service coverage and quality, infrastructure, professionalization, and decent work, as well as social benefits.<sup>141</sup>

168. The Commission received information from civil society indicating that inequality gaps remain in access to income through the labor market in El Salvador. It was reported that "76.8% of men of working age have had access to paid work, while only 45.5% of women have had such access." Additionally, it was observed that women continue to bear a disproportionate burden of household work and unpaid services, with 34.7% of women in this situation compared to 1.4% of men.<sup>142</sup>

169. Similarly, civil society noted that there are no known government measures to enhance the protection, working conditions, and rights of thousands of women employed in the textile industry, whether in maquilas or through home-based work<sup>143</sup>. In this context, it was highlighted that, according to findings from 2023, "45% of female textile workers work between 8 and 12 hours, while 48% of female embroiderers work between 12 and 16 hours. Additionally, 94% of them reported that their wages do not match the time and effort they invest," indicating significant risks for these individuals, making it essential for the state to ensure fair compensation.<sup>144</sup> Furthermore, it was remarked that by 2023, "seven companies in the textile and apparel sector will cease operations in the country, leaving approximately 2,533 workers and their families without daily sustenance."<sup>145</sup>

170. In addition, it was reported that, in terms of salaries, the textile maquila sector in El Salvador shows a worrisome reality in comparison with other formal jobs in the private sector, as well as a salary gap between men and women in the textile maquila of 23.6%, with a much more pronounced disparity than in other sectors of the economy. Also cited was the finding that women in this sector have less access to opportunities for advancement and face challenges such as low wages, precarious working conditions, and lack of adequate social protection<sup>146</sup>. Also, civil society pointed out that, by the first quarter of 2024, the PGR would have registered 93 claims for violation of labor rights in the maquila sector, 70% of which would have been filed by women, and that, by the end of 2023, a proposed law would have been presented by the Union of Home Embroidery Workers in El Salvador (SITRABORDO), with no news on its progress.<sup>147</sup>

171. On the other hand, it was indicated that there was no known ratification process for ILO Conventions 177 and 189<sup>148</sup>. According to what was suggested to the Commission, this lack of ratification has allowed home-based workers and domestic workers to continue to be violated in their rights and to remain at a disadvantage concerning other workers in the country.<sup>149</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

172. The Commission notes that ratification of ILO Conventions 177 and 189 is still pending and that the measures reported by the State are not specific in terms of indicating precisely how the right to work under fair and equitable conditions has been guaranteed for women working in domestic services and maquilas, mainly work in the textile industry under the home-based work scheme. In this regard, the IACHR has taken note of the information provided and has noted that it has referred broadly to the policy of co-responsibility for care without specifying its actual impact or how the State guarantees the labor needs of the women indicated in the recommendation.

173. In addition, the IACHR is concerned about the information provided by civil society that there is an urgent need for protective measures for women working in the textile industry, especially in maquilas and in home-based employment, as well as for domestic service workers. These measures include those aimed at improving these people's working conditions, wages, and adequate social protection. In this context, the Commission identifies that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

174. The IACHR reiterates that progress in complying with this recommendation requires detailed information on the measures adopted to guarantee the rights to work and fair and equitable conditions for women working in domestic service and maquilas, particularly in the textile industry under home-based work. Likewise, the IACHR invites the State to promote the ongoing process for the approval of ILO Conventions 177 and 189 and to specify what actions it has taken to implement recommendations 184 and 201 on this issue.

2. LGTBI people

Recommendation No. 27. Adopt the measures needed to ensure that the Gender Identity Law is passed and adopted, and that it conforms to Inter-American standards on this matter, as well as adopt the necessary measures to strengthen institutions for the defense and protection of the rights of LGTBI persons.

175. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR acknowledged the training program mandated by the Supreme Court of Justice for the Institute of Forensic Medicine and the adjustments to the latter's protocols aimed at integrating a gender perspective into service delivery. However, it noted a lack of sufficient information to specify the year of adoption. The IACHR also pointed out that the requested compliance measure—approving the gender identity law—had not yet been adopted. Additionally, it recognized the February 2022 decision of the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, which provided the Legislative Assembly a year to establish a legal gender recognition procedure that would enable transgender individuals to change their names on their identity documents. Considering the absence of the requested measure, the Commission concluded that this recommendation remained pending.<sup>150</sup>

176. By 2024, the State confirmed that a Gender Identity Law had not yet been issued. It noted that since 2020, some transgender individuals have judicially requested name changes under the Name and Natural Person Law, and several individuals, including the executive director of COMCAVIS TRANS, have received favorable resolutions. According to the State, the process of the law mentioned above does not distinguish between cisgender and transgender individuals while aiming to provide a minimum level of legal certainty in this process. It also indicated that the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice is responsible for monitoring its decision regarding the unconstitutionality of the partial omission of Article 23, paragraph 2 of the Law of the Name of the Natural Person. Additionally, the state stated that in line with its commitment to human rights, it has developed various training programs for justice operators and service providers on the rights of LGTBI individuals.<sup>151</sup>

177. Additionally, the State indicated that it has updated the General, Expert, and Administrative Policy of the Institute of Legal Medicine (hereinafter "IML") and modified its protocols to prevent prejudice based on sexual orientation or gender identity. According to the State, these reforms have fostered an inclusive environment, enhanced training for officials on LGTBI rights, improved access to justice, and increased visibility of the problems faced by LGTBI individuals. The State also noted that there is a program of specialized courses for the medical staff and forensic experts of the IML concerning the reception of complaints, examinations, expert opinions, and medical assessments related to i) the investigation of hate crimes based on sexual orientation and gender identity and expression; and ii) the search for forensic evidence and the presentation of evidence at trial. It further stated that the Supreme Court of Justice has reinforced training on equality and non-discrimination within the manuals for service provision to users of the administration of justice through four directives.<sup>152</sup>

178. The Commission received information from civil society indicating that, since March 2018, the civil society organizations involved in the Permanent Roundtable for a Gender Identity Law in El Salvador had prepared a preliminary draft. Although this draft was submitted to the Legislative Assembly for review, it was ultimately shelved. Additionally, the Commission was informed that various challenges related to fulfilling this recommendation continue to exist, including the following:<sup>153</sup>

- Failure to update and implement the Policy for the Attention of LGBTI Persons, approved by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security in 2017, includes the institutions in charge of security, including the National Civil Police and the Armed Forces.
- Need for training processes on gender, sexual diversity, and human rights of the LGBTI population for the National Civil Police, emphasizing operational personnel.
- Lack of incorporation of human rights, gender, intersectionality, and inclusion approaches in all manuals, general, and operational plans of the National Civil Police.
- Need for more technical, operational, and material resources for the defense, surveillance, and monitoring of the situation of LGBTIQ+ persons by the PDDH.
- Lack of revision and strengthening of the PGR's Case Registration System to include variables on sexual orientation and gender identity and generate accurate information, make these people visible in providing services and guide decision-making.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

179. The IACHR observes that the compliance measure requested by the recommendation, which consists of the approval of the gender identity law, has yet to be adopted. Furthermore, concerning the update of the General, Expert, and Administrative Policy of the Institute of Legal Medicine (hereinafter "IML"), the Commission notes that more detailed information is required to understand the scope of this measure aimed at strengthening the institutional framework for protecting the rights of LGBTI individuals. In this regard, while it appreciates the assertion regarding the existence of a non-discrimination policy, specific data is necessary regarding implementation and results achieved in this strengthening effort. In this context, the Commission points out that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in compliance with the recommendation

180. The IACHR reiterates the importance of the State adopting a gender identity law that recognizes not only the change of name and image in identity documents but also the correction of the sex marker in such documents, including birth certificates and passports. The report on implementing this measure will allow for the assessment of progress in complying with this recommendation.

Recommendation No. 28. Adopt a comprehensive plan for the protection and guarantee of the human rights of LGBTI persons, from a human security perspective, including their access to justice, education, health and employment, and promote the participation of civil society organizations in its design and formulation.

181. In the 2023 follow-up report, the Commission noted that the State had reported relevant compliance measures in the education sector and welcomed the training processes and implementation of regulations in these centers, along with access measures to financial products for women with diverse sexual orientations or gender identities. However, it pointed out that these do not constitute a specific and focused comprehensive plan according to the recommendation and emphasized the need to implement measures that protect and guarantee the rights of LGBTI individuals in all the specified areas, in a participatory manner with civil society organizations. Therefore, it concluded that the recommendation remains partially fulfilled.<sup>154</sup>

<sup>153</sup> Cristosal Foundation, Response to follow-up questionnaire, October 4, 2024; cited Cristosal, Study on access to justice for LGBTIQ+ persons, particularly the Trans population, in Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador, May 2023.

Information on compliance

182. By 2024, the State affirmed that the domestic legal system recognizes the equality of all persons before the law, without exceptions, and that it has adopted actions for the prevention of crimes and comprehensive protection. In this regard, it reported applying the "Protocol of Action for the Investigation of Aggravated Crimes for Reasons of Hate for Gender Identity and Expression or Sexual Orientation" of 2020, which seeks to enhance access to justice; as well as the "Policy of Inclusion and Access to Justice aimed at vulnerable population" and the "Protocol of Attention to Population in Vulnerable Situations", both of 2022. It also indicated that the Deputy Prosecutor's Office for Women, Children, Adolescents, and other Vulnerable Groups (hereinafter "FAMNA") continues to promptly investigate crimes against women, children, adolescents, LGBTI population, and other vulnerable groups and noted that FAMNA is comprised of a national directorate; 19 specialized care units (hereinafter referred to as "UAEMNA") at the national level; a unit focused on investigating femicide, and another unit that addresses gender issues.<sup>155</sup>

183. The Commission gathered information provided by civil society, which indicates a lack of progress by the State in implementing a comprehensive protection plan and human rights for LGBTI individuals. In this regard, it was noted that legislative shortcomings persist, such as the recognition of gender identity and protection against discrimination based on gender identity and sexual orientation, considering that proposals of this nature were shelved in 2021. Additionally, it was brought to the Commission's attention that, since 2022, discriminatory government actions have intensified, including non-compliance with court rulings and the lack of visibility of these individuals in public records. Furthermore, an alleged absence of policies guaranteeing equal access to public services was highlighted, along with decisions in the healthcare system that render trans women invisible, such as the Ministry of Health's order from February 2024 to withdraw materials on sexual diversity from health units.<sup>156</sup>

184. Likewise, civil society pointed out that the current Government would have regressed in the implementation of the plan indicated in the recommendation, considering that more than 300 people from the Secretariat of Culture have been dismissed for allegedly promoting agendas incompatible with its vision and withdrawing material on sexual and reproductive health from the curricula, eliminating topics on gender violence and sexual orientation. According to suggests, the primary challenge for recognizing the rights of the LGBTIQ+ population is the approval of a Gender Identity Law, which would enable legal reforms to ensure fundamental rights without discrimination.<sup>157</sup>

185. Likewise, the Commission learned through the Observatory of Human Rights of the LGBTI population in the country, according to which decisions are being adopted that imply important institutional setbacks in the protection of their rights, such as the elimination of the Directorate of Sexual Diversity of the Secretariat of Social Inclusion, the suppression of institutional records to give visibility to people in their diversity.<sup>158</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

186. The IACHR warns that the measures reported by the State, in addition to repeating those from previous years, do not constitute a specific and focused comprehensive plan to protect and guarantee the rights of LGBTI persons in terms of the recommendation under follow-up, including access to justice, health, and employment. Nor are there any actions aimed at implementing specific measures from a human security perspective and with the participation of civil society.

187. On the contrary, the perception expressed by civil society regarding the recent weakening of the recognition of LGBTI persons in the country is of concern, which in turn indicates the need to strengthen the participation of these actors in the elaboration of the measure requested by this recommendation. Given the need for additional information on the articulation of these protection measures in a Comprehensive Plan that covers all the aforementioned aspects, the IACHR considers that the recommendation remains partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

188. The IACHR urges the State to adopt the Comprehensive Protection Plan indicated in this recommendation. In this regard, it reiterates the importance of this strategy, including all the sectors indicated in the recommendation (health, employment, education, and access to justice), and that its construction guarantees the adequate participation of civil society. Likewise, the IACHR invites the State to identify the time of adoption of the measures that make up this Plan intending to identify whether they are updated and adopted in compliance with this recommendation.

Recommendation No. 29. Provide training for state officials, especially judicial staff members, on the rights of LGBTI persons.

189. For the follow-up report for the year 2023, the Commission identified that the State reported a significant number of training activities provided by the Public Prosecutor's Office that involve the rights of LGBTI persons and are aimed at various sectors of the civil service as the executive body, the same entities of the Public Prosecutor's Office and the Supreme Court of Justice. The IACHR also valued the training and education activities for judicial personnel and prison staff and appreciated that several had the support of civil society organizations. However, the Commission identified the need for additional information on the content and scope of the training topics, particularly concerning justice operators. In the meantime, it concluded that the level of compliance with the recommendation was partially substantial.<sup>159</sup>

190. By the year 2024, the State referred to training processes on the human rights of LGBTIQ+ persons provided to the civil servants of different entities:<sup>160</sup>

- The Human Rights School of the PDDH developed the Basic Course on Human Rights, for which it specified the type of training, date, place, and beneficiaries of ten training processes, mostly on human rights of the LGBTIQ+ population and HIV, aimed at 285 civil service members from 2021 to June 2024. Of these, three were delivered virtually in 2021, four in person in 2023, and three in person in 2024. The target audience included mainly executive entities, PGR, and PPDH.
- Three training processes (one in 2021, one in 2022, and one in 2023) through 6 training days for personnel of the multidisciplinary teams of the Judicial Branch and the National Civil Police.
- Seven training processes, consisting of 18 workshops for 257 members of the PPDH, were developed with the support of LGBTIQ+ organizations. They addressed issues of sexual diversity, gender, human rights, stigma, and discrimination, hate crimes, psychosocial support for LGBTIQ+ people, gender-based violence, and the current legal framework. Two workshops were held in 2020, two in 2021, one in 2022, and two in 2023.

- The PPDH conducted the Course on Equity and Human Rights for People with HIV and the LGBTIQ+ Population to reduce stigma and discrimination, in coordination with FANCAP and USAID. This initiative aimed to enhance the knowledge of technical staff from various public institutions in central, western, and eastern El Salvador. In this context, two training sessions were reported, one in 2023 and the other in 2024, consisting of a total of 10 workshops attended by 268 participants from both the PPDH and other public institutions, including the PGR, the FGR, the National Civil Police, the Salvadoran Social Security Institute, ISDEMU, five municipalities, the Ministries of Justice, Public Security, and Public Health, hospitals, and more.
- The Training, Analysis and Research Center (hereinafter "CEFAI") of the PGR provided nine workshops and courses during the period 2023-2024 with 135 participants from its staff on topics related to the rights of LGBTIQ+ persons, gender-based violence, new masculinities, women with disabilities and women in situations of violence, gender-based violence in women and girls with disabilities.

191. For its part, it was reported to the Commission by civil society that, in response to a request for information to the PGR on training processes on the rights of LGBTI persons, they were informed that, in 2023, 14 processes with 110 hours of duration would have been conducted for 176 women and 74 men and that, in 2024, a process of eight hours would have been conducted for five women. Furthermore, according to the same response, the PGR implemented two instruments to attend to vulnerable populations in 2023-2024, namely, a Policy of Inclusion and Access to Justice in force since 2022, which includes specialized attention to the LGBTI population and training actions to promote their inclusion. In addition, a Protocol of Attention for these populations, from 2023, which seeks to strengthen the mechanisms of attention. In addition, it was reported that, according to this same response, the PGR established dialogues with civil organizations to coordinate human rights programs, conducting workshops in seven departments, focused on non-discrimination and LGBTI rights.<sup>161</sup>

192. In the same line, it was pointed out by civil society that, in another response provided in 2023 by the PGR to a request for information, this entity would have provided 64 hours of continuous training to its staff, benefiting 11 men and 45 women on human rights issues of LGBTIQ+ people and diverse women. According to the same response from the PGR that was reported by civil society, in 2024, eight hours of training would have been conducted, which included five women on diverse voices, needs and challenges of LGBTIQ+ people.<sup>162</sup>

193. Likewise, in terms of challenges for the fulfillment of this recommendation, it was pointed out that one of the main challenges is to overcome the fear caused by hate speech or "anti-rights" towards LGBTIQ+ people, which, according to what was pointed out to the Commission, has limited the request and reception of training on rights, affecting the awareness and adequate response in public services.<sup>163</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

194. The IACHR identifies that the State continued with the report of training activities on human rights of LGBTIQ+ persons to officials of various executive entities, the PGR, the PPDH, the Judiciary, the National Civil Police, the FGR, the Salvadoran Social Security Institute, the ISDEMU, municipalities, hospitals, among others; The Commission notes that not all these activities correspond to the year 2024, but some were carried out in the years 2020, 2021, 2022 and 2023, as well.

195. Considering that the State has continued to report training measures, the IACHR identifies the importance of having information confirming how the continuity and obligatory nature of these measures is guaranteed and how they are focused on justice operators. In the meantime, it concludes that this recommendation continues with a substantial partial level of compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

196. To declare full compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR considers it relevant to have information to confirm (i) the obligatory nature and continuity of the reported measures, with a particular focus on justice operators as addressees, and to indicate (ii) how many of these officials have been trained specifically on the requested topic in the last year.

Recommendation No. 30. Create a public statistical record on acts of violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons in El Salvador and ensure the data it contains is appropriately disaggregated and regularly updated.

197. For the 2023 follow-up report, the Commission identified the Automated Management System of the Prosecution Process (hereinafter "SIGAP") of the FGR as a relevant compliance measure. In addition, the Commission took note of the 2022-2023 work report of the FGR in which, according to the State, data on gender-based violence against the LGBTI population would be included; however, it identified that this provides information on crimes related to gender-based violence against women, but not specific data regarding LGBTI persons. Likewise, the IACHR recalled the importance of linking this system with records from other entities and emphasized the importance of the statistical data in this recommendation being useful for preventing, investigating, and eradicating acts of violence and discrimination. In this sense, it concluded that this recommendation continued to be partially complied with.<sup>164</sup>

198. For 2024, the State reiterated that the FGR's SIGAP records criminal proceedings, which is useful for decision-making, strategies, and responding to information requests. It explained that SIGAP has been implemented since 2012 and was subsequently modernized to integrate new technologies, improve the availability of information, and facilitate the collection of inputs for case analysis, incidents, geographic areas, and other factors such as vo investigative decisions. In addition, it pointed out that the auxiliary prosecutors must complete fields such as the one related to the condition of the vulnerability of the persons involved in each case to "adopt the necessary measures for their adequate approach," including the LGBTI population. On the other hand, the State pointed out that the Central Reserve Bank (BCR) oversees generating the main statistical data with the following disaggregation: geographic location, income, sex, age, education, family status, ethnicity, migratory status/internal displacement, disability, and other relevant characteristics in national contexts. It noted that with this information, indicators are analyzed, and pertinent information is highlighted.<sup>165</sup>

199. For its part, civil society expressed to the Commission its concern with the fact that violence against LGBTI persons is made invisible as a discriminatory practice; as it was pointed out, this would be highlighted by the fact that the annual reports of violence against women in 2019, 2020 and the first half of 2021 of the National Data System have included data on this type of violence and that, for the annual report of 2021, it was allegedly eliminated. According to what was pointed out to the Commission, this implies a setback in the recognition of violence against these people. In addition to the above, civil society organizations reported information to the Commission about the following events:<sup>166</sup>

- On February 22, 2024, the President of the Republic stated in an interview conducted by the director of the organization Moms for Liberty that gender ideology is prohibited in El Salvador because it promotes “unnatural, anti-God, and anti-family” ideas in education. Furthermore, as the organizations pointed out, the president stated that these ideologies would not be allowed in primary and secondary schools and that, furthermore, it is important that the curriculum does not include gender ideology.<sup>167</sup> In this regard, the Commission became aware of a video in which the President makes these statements.<sup>168</sup>
- The Ministry of Education issued a memorandum on February 28, 2024, in which it allegedly requested the exclusion of materials and content related to “gender ideology” from public schools under penalty of sanctions and dismissal<sup>169</sup>. Regarding this specific allegation, the IACHR also became aware of a tweet published on February 27, 2024, by the Minister of Education of El Salvador, explicitly stating the elimination of “any use or trace of gender ideology from public schools.<sup>170</sup>”
- The Ministry of Health had removed material on sexual diversity from health units and HIV clinics<sup>171</sup>.

200. Additionally, the Commission learned more information from civil society highlighting challenges in obtaining data on violence against LGBTIQ+ individuals. In this context, a study was referenced showing that, in 2020 and 2021, the National Civil Police provided some statistics; however, a trend of concealing information was later identified. Furthermore, it was observed that the PGR lacks the tools to inclusively identify individuals served, and the PDDH acknowledged the absence of a monitoring system for LGBTIQ+ rights violations, although both entities noted their collaboration to raise awareness and prevent discrimination within their institutions. Moreover, it was mentioned that a lack of interest in LGBTIQ+ rights has hindered the establishment of monitoring units to compile statistics, leaving civil society organizations with international support to generate the data.<sup>172</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

201. The Commission recalls that the content of the recommendation requests the adoption of data related to acts of violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons in the country with specific characteristics, namely, that they are (i) statistical, (ii) public, (iii) periodically updated, (iv) duly disaggregated. In this sense, it identifies that the SIGAP of the FGR had been reported as a state measure of compliance and that, although it is indicated that the auxiliary prosecutors must complete fields such as whether the individual involved in each case belongs to the LGBTI population to “adopt the necessary measures for their adequate approach”, this information is not sufficient to conclude an advance in the level of compliance with this recommendation insofar as it does not allow concluding how the four characteristics indicated are met. The same is true of the information provided concerning the data generated by the BCR.

202. In addition, the Commission considers it pertinent to emphasize the importance of allocating resources for the collection and analysis of the statistical data requested in the recommendation and that, recognizing the fundamental and historical role of civil society in these tasks, there should be mechanisms for receiving information from these groups to encourage joint and participatory work for the analysis and design of laws, policies, programs, and other decisions.<sup>173</sup>

203. Likewise, the IACHR has noted the concerns expressed by civil society regarding a perceived trend of concealment of information regarding acts of violence against LGBTI persons and calls on the State to make efforts to collect this information, considering that it is essential to identify and make progress in combating this type of violence. Consequently, the Commission determines that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in compliance with the recommendation

204. The IACHR will conclude that this recommendation has attained the level of compliance when it has sufficient information regarding efforts to collect and systematize data on violence against LGBTIQ+ persons that are (i) statistical, (ii) public, (iii) periodically updated, (iv) duly disaggregated, and (v) related to acts of violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons in the country. In this regard, the IACHR reiterates its invitation to clarify how existing registries, or those under construction, ensure coordination between entities in order to have unified and reliable statistics on acts of discrimination and violence against LGBTI persons. Likewise, for the IACHR it is essential that these registries include a broadened notion of acts of violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons and therefore invites to specify what type of acts are included in the reported registries.

Recommendation No. 31. Adopt measures necessary to strengthen access to justice for LGBTI victims of violence through a coordinated effort between organizations under the executive branch and the Office of the Public Prosecutor.

205. In the 2023 Follow-up Report, the IACHR valued the relevance of the instruments reported by the FGR to strengthen the investigation of crimes against LGBTI persons, as well as the inter-institutional and consultation efforts for the development of the reported Protocols of action in the investigation and legal assistance. For its part, the IACHR was informed of research presented by civil society that concluded that significant challenges persist in access to justice for LGBTI persons. The IACHR invited the State to continue with the establishment of a plan of action articulated between the Executive and the Public Prosecutor's Office that leads to increased access to justice for these people. In this sense, it reiterated the call to strengthen this inter-institutional strategy and considered that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.<sup>174</sup>

206. For the year 2024, the State reiterated that the FGR has an Action Protocol for the Investigation of Aggravated Crimes on Grounds of Hatred of Gender Identity and Expression or Sexual Orientation, dated November 2020, with guidelines for the investigation and proof of aggravating circumstances on the grounds of hatred of gender identity and expression or sexual orientation, and the special status of the victim of aggravated crimes on those grounds. It indicated that this document involves other institutions, so the Prosecutor Training School of the FGR has developed workshops with the National Civil Police and the IML and has socialized the instrument with its staff.<sup>175</sup>

207. For its part, the Commission received information provided by civil society, according to which access to justice for LGBTI persons continues to be limited in the country due to the opacity of information management and deficient data records in the justice sector.<sup>176</sup>

208. It was particularly highlighted that much of the data regarding this population is allegedly subject to confidentiality and that the Judiciary would not have provided data on gender identity and sexual orientation in cases of hate-motivated homicide, given that this information is not regulated by the Law on Access to Public Information (hereinafter "LAIP"). Additionally, it was noted that civil society, through the Observatorio Nuestra Mirada LGTBI, has proposed legal frameworks, protections, legal support, awareness programs, and inclusion in public policies to combat discrimination. However, many LGBTI individuals still do not report abuses due to a lack of confidence in institutions, fear of reprisals, ignorance, discrimination, and complications in the procedures.<sup>177</sup>

209. For its part, civil society pointed out the importance of promoting training and sensitization of state personnel, avoiding religious prejudices, and improving sexual and reproductive health education for young people, currently hindered by the Ministry of Education.<sup>178</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

210. The Commission notes that the information provided by the State does not allow it to identify progress in fulfilling this recommendation, given that the Protocol of Action from the FGR was issued prior to the publication of the 2021 Country Report. The effectiveness of this measure will depend on the State reporting how it has contributed to the effective strengthening of access to justice for LGBTI victims of violence, through a coordinated effort among various institutions of the Executive and the Public Prosecutor's Office.

211. Furthermore, in line with the concerns expressed by civil society regarding the statements and decisions of government authorities, the Commission identifies that the facts reported regarding the denial of protection of sexual orientation and gender identity represent an essential obstacle to progress in the implementation of this recommendation. In this regard, it is recalled that the requested strengthening would consist of a coordinated effort between the various institutions of the Executive and the Public Prosecutor's Office. In this sense, the Commission considers that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in compliance with the recommendation

212. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR emphasizes the importance of the State strengthening an inter-institutional action plan between the entities that make up the Public Prosecutor's Office and the Executive bodies that are relevant to enhancing access to justice for LGBTI persons, considering the challenges diagnosed around this issue. Likewise, with respect to the reported protocols, it invites you to provide additional information regarding their recent implementation and results obtained to assess whether these constitute specific measures of compliance with this recommendation.

provision of support and advisory services on comprehensive coordination mechanisms for protecting human rights.

213. For the follow-up report for the year 2023, the IACHR noted that the framework referred to in this recommendation is additional to the Special Law for the Comprehensive Care and Protection of Persons in Conditions of Internal Forced Displacement of 2020, as it refers to normative actions of accompaniment and advice on comprehensive protection coordination mechanisms, within the framework of the MIRPS. The Commission considered that the measures reported by the State, including the agreement for actions focused on women and the Protocol for Comprehensive Care for Applicants and Refugees, can contribute to the objective of the recommendation. However, it requested information on their content and additional measures, such as, for example, the regulation of the Inter-Institutional Technical Commission for the Care and Protection of Persons in Conditions of Internal Forced Displacement or the Special Law of 2020. In this sense, it considered that the recommendation was partially complied with.<sup>179</sup>

Information on compliance

214. In 2024, the State recalled that El Salvador joined the Regional Integrated Framework for Protection and Solutions (MIRPS) in 2019, committing to address forced displacement as part of this initiative for Central America and Mexico. In this framework, it noted the creation of a National Response Plan featuring 49 commitments in areas such as protection, health, education, and employment for displaced persons, refugees, and asylum seekers. Among the advancements, it highlighted the approval of the Law for the Integral Protection of Internally Displaced Persons in 2020 and the strengthening of the Commission for the Determination of Refugee Status (referred to as “CODER”) to expedite asylum applications. Additionally, it noted the implementation of visits and information sessions coordinated with the General Directorate of Migration and Alien Affairs at border points and the international airport.<sup>180</sup>

215. In addition, the State indicated that, to assist the victims of displacement, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security implemented psychological, social and legal support programs. It also stated that it has collaborated with the Ministry of Education for the school inclusion of displaced minors and has created Urban Centers for Welfare and Opportunities (hereinafter “CUBO”) in various localities, achieving the recovery of territories and, according to the Directorate of Attention to Victims, a decrease in cases of forced displacement due to violence. It also noted that four care centers called “A Tu Lado” were established in several cities to provide information services, legal advice, psychological care, and case management for the displaced population and asylum seekers, with 2,910 people assisted in 2024.<sup>181</sup>

216. In addition, the State reported that it has also made progress in implementing the Protocol for Comprehensive Care for Applicants and Refugees, launched in 2023, which seeks to ensure dignified treatment for those seeking protection in the country. In this regard, it stated that this protocol is part of the national efforts aligned with the MIRPS, in collaboration with UNHCR, to strengthen regional cooperation and share the responsibility to protect displaced persons in the region.<sup>182</sup>

217. For its part, the IACHR received information provided by civil society according to which, in response to a request for information made to the Presidential House in 2022, it was informed that there is a project in process for the drafting of the regulations of the Special Law for the Attention and Integral Protection of Persons in Conditions of Internal Forced Displacement or a regulatory framework for the operation of the Inter-Institutional Technical Commission for the Attention and Protection of Persons in Conditions of Internal

Forced Displacement. However, it was noted that its content is unknown, as well as progress on the installation of the Inter-Institutional Commission mentioned above.<sup>183</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

218. The IACHR positively values the information provided by the State regarding the creation of the National Action Plan with commitments for the operationalization of the protection of forcibly displaced persons and refugees in areas such as protection, health, education, and employment, as well as the actions reported by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security and the Ministry of Education to provide psychological, social and legal support mechanisms, and in education.

219. Despite this information, the Commission recalls that this recommendation is focused on the approval of a comprehensive regulatory framework on enforced displacement within the framework of the MIRPS that is aimed at guaranteeing the accompaniment and advice of the comprehensive coordination mechanisms for the protection of human rights, which may consist of the regulations of the Special Law adopted in 2020 or with a regulatory framework for the operation of the Inter-Institutional Technical Commission for the Attention and Protection of Persons in Conditions of Internal Forced Displacement, on which the State did not report information regarding its operation. Considering the type of compliance measure requested, the Commission considers that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

220. The IACHR will declare progress in the fulfillment of this recommendation when it has information indicating the adoption of a specific regulatory framework that is comprehensive on forced displacement and includes durable solutions within the framework of the implementation of the MIRPS, which may consist of the regulation of the Special Law adopted in 2020 or a regulatory framework for the operation of the Inter-Institutional Technical Commission for the Attention and Protection of Persons in Conditions of Internal Enforced Displacement.

Recommendation No. 34. Strengthen transnational coordination around the search for disappeared and deceased migrants, including strengthening mechanisms for collecting, storing and analyzing forensic data and genetic information banks, and improving consular services for Salvadorans abroad, especially those in need of international protection.

221. For the follow-up report of 2023, the Commission considered that the State had implemented several actions to strengthen consular services for Salvadoran persons abroad, a component of which, was declared fully complied with. Regarding the component of the recommendation that requests measures to strengthen transnational coordination in the search for missing and deceased migrants, as well as the strengthening of mechanisms for collecting, guarding and analyzing forensic data and genetic banks, the IACHR identified documentation efforts by CONABÚSQUEDA and the Vice-Ministry of Diaspora and Human Mobility of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. However, it pointed out that, in order to advance in compliance with said components, actions are needed to strengthen the systematization of this data and transnational coordination with authorities in other countries. In this regard, it considered that the recommendation had advanced to a partial level of compliance.<sup>184</sup>

222. For 2024, the State reported that it had implemented various measures to strengthen the search for and assistance to missing migrants. It indicated that the Protocol of Assistance and Humanitarian Management is implemented through the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to provide support to Salvadorans abroad, and the Forensic Data Bank of Missing Migrants has been strengthened, with DNA sampling days in 2024 to identify remains of migrants who died in migratory route. In addition, it was indicated that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs also participates in the Foreign Support Mechanism for Search and Investigation (hereinafter "MAEBI"), in which it collaborates with Mexico to report crimes against nationals in their passage through that country and to carry out searches for Salvadorans in hospitals and shelters.<sup>185</sup>

223. The State also indicated that it has strengthened its consular services, expanding its presence abroad with 19 new representations in the last five years, including consulates in the U.S., Mexico, and Europe, for 103 diplomatic representations and consulates worldwide. It also indicated that it has improved the issuance of passports in 81 consulates, reducing delivery times to 45 minutes; that consular offices provide comprehensive care to migrant children and adolescents with their families in Mexico and the United States, and that the Vice-Ministry of Diaspora and Human Mobility is working on projects to expand and improve consular services.<sup>186</sup>

224. Regarding the search for missing persons, the State indicated that CONABÚSQUEDA carried out a mission to Honduras in November 2023 for inter-institutional coordination on Salvadorans who disappeared in that country. It also stated that the project to strengthen this search commission, in collaboration with the Guatemalan Forensic Anthropology Foundation and USAID, aims to set up a bank of genetic profiles of persons who disappeared during the armed conflict and the systematization of information in the Single Registry of Missing Children and Adults (RENIPAD), to make progress in the identification and location of missing persons.<sup>187</sup>

225. For its part, the Commission received information from civil society, according to which the PDDH has a Department for the Care of Migrants and instructions on how to begin the search for a missing family member in migratory transit. It was also indicated that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, together with the Regional Center on Migration (hereinafter "CRM") and the International Committee of the Red Cross (hereinafter "ICRC") holds workshops to coordinate the identification and transfer of deceased migrants and the search for missing persons in this context, considering requests from the Committee of Relatives of Deceased and Disappeared Migrants (hereinafter "COFAMIDE"). However, it was noted that this committee has approached Mexican authorities but has received minimal response.<sup>188</sup>

226. In addition, civil society pointed out that El Salvador's Forensic Data Bank of Unaccounted Migrants is an inter-institutional effort that began work in August 2010 and is made up of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, COFAMIDE, the PDDH and the Argentine Forensic Anthropology Team (EAAF).<sup>189</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

227. The IACHR recalls that, as of 2023, it declared the component of this recommendation related to the strengthening of consular services for Salvadoran persons abroad to be fully complied with, although it values the information provided in 2024 by the State regarding this objective, including the implementation of the Protocol for Assistance and Humanitarian Management to provide support to Salvadorans abroad.

228. Regarding the component of the recommendation that requests measures to strengthen transnational coordination in the search for missing and deceased migrants, as well as the strengthening of mechanisms for the collection, custody, and analysis of forensic data and genetic banks, the Commission identifies as relevant measures the actions for taking samples for the Forensic Data Bank of Missing Migrants, as well as the participation in MAEBI and the CONABÚSQUEDA mission to Honduras. However, it identifies the importance of additional information demonstrating the results of these and other strengthening actions, specifying how, in practice, transnational coordination in the search for migrants has been optimized.

Considering the importance of additional efforts to strengthen these mechanisms, the Commission considers that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

229. The IACHR identifies that progress in compliance with this recommendation requires specific measures and information indicating the practical results of the reported measures, including the strengthening of the Forensic Data Bank of Missing Migrants, participation in the MAEBI or CONABÚSQUEDA's coordination with authorities in other countries. Likewise, it will be helpful to specify how civil society or relatives of migrants reported missing participate in implementing these compliance measures.

Recommendation No. 35. Adopt comprehensive programs and specific measures to guarantee the rights of internally displaced populations in safety and with dignity, and to place guaranteeing these rights at the core of any strategies to prevent forced migration, particularly the rights to housing, work, education and health.

230. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR highlighted the role of the Internal Forced Displacement Unit of the PGR, reported by the State and recognized by civil society, in providing assistance to this population and offering them protection and solutions to their situation. In addition, it highlighted the relevance of some initiatives reported to prevent and identify the risks of forced displacement, as well as efforts in school insertion of children and teenagers; access to job training programs; immediate health care, and assistance to migrant women. Likewise, the IACHR identified that, although a decrease in the percentage of forced internal displacement was reported, a significant number of cases would continue to be reported, as well as obstacles in guaranteeing and respecting the human rights of internally displaced persons. The Commission considered that the recommendation was partially complied with.<sup>190</sup>

231. By 2024, the State indicated that, since the approval of the Special Law for the Attention and Integral Protection of Internally Displaced Persons in 2020, it has implemented various measures to protect this population. It indicated that the PGR established the Internal Forced Displacement Unit (hereinafter "UDFI"), which identifies, assists and offers solutions to displaced persons. It reported that between August 2023 and May 2024, the UDFI benefited 1,788 people through legal advice, psychological support, and humanitarian aid, in addition to facilitating access to labor rights, housing, and basic services to improve their living conditions and prevent further displacement.<sup>191</sup>

232. The State also reported launching the Linkage Project to reintegrate returned minors, financed by the MIRPS Fund and supported by the OAS. The project provides seed capital for entrepreneurship and scholarships in technical areas, benefiting families and promoting their economic autonomy. Likewise, it stated that in the labor field, the "My First Job" program, in collaboration with UNHCR, facilitates the inclusion of displaced youth in the labor market, reaching 616 hires with the support of 184 companies and reinforcing their social inclusion.<sup>192</sup>

233. Likewise, the State reported that in September 2024, the National Council for Early Childhood, Childhood and Adolescence (hereinafter "CONAPINA") signed an agreement with UNHCR to strengthen the protection of displaced and vulnerable children. The agreement includes the implementation of the Growing Together Act, the development of care protocols, and the improvement of safe spaces for psychosocial support. In addition, it stated that UNHCR works with the State and civil society in remodeling and technical support for the comprehensive care of children affected by violence and displacement, ensuring safe spaces and promoting durable solutions for this population at risk.

234. Likewise, the State again referred to the establishment of the “A tu lado” support centers (also reported in the framework of recommendation number 32) in San Salvador, Santa Ana, San Vicente and San Miguel to orient and provide specialized services to persons in mobility conditions, including those internally displaced.<sup>193</sup>

235. For its part, the Commission received information provided by civil society according to which some roadmaps for the care of displaced persons with the participation of State institutions at the district level have been promoted by organizations such as EDUCO and Cristosal in seven municipalities and that there is no evidence of policies to promote access to housing, work, health and education especially aimed at the needs of the population at risk and/or in a situation of displacement.<sup>194</sup>

236. In addition, the IACHR accessed additional information from civil society according to which, although the State report entitled “A New El Salvador”, dated 2024, indicates that the Directorate for Attention to Victims of the Ministry of Justice and Public Security attends to internally displaced persons, this type of displacement would now involve, under the exception regime, State agents as the perpetrators. According to what was indicated to the Commission, this would make it difficult for victims to seek help from government institutions, instead receiving support from human rights organizations.<sup>195</sup>

237. Additionally, it was noted that, from the beginning of the regime until June 2024, the organizations registered 985 victims of forced displacement. It was also reported that, despite the existence of a 2020 law that protects internally displaced persons, no regulations have been implemented to define prevention and action routes, limiting support to victims; and it was indicated that, in 2023, forced displacement increased compared to 2022, with threats as the main cause, followed by violence against women and abuse of authority. According to civil organizations, 72% of the cases identify the National Civil Police as responsible, followed by gangs and other state agents. Likewise, according to a civil society registry, in 2023, 588 cases of displacement were reported, while in 2024, 472 cases were registered.<sup>196</sup>

238. In its observations to this report, the State requested “greater methodological rigor for the incorporation of information from sources such as civil society organizations,” considering that it does not identify the basis for the claim that internal displacement in El Salvador “now involves state agents as perpetrators under the state of emergency.” El Salvador reiterated that it has promoted programs for the reintegration of returned migrants and internally displaced persons within the framework of the National Reintegration Plan, although it indicated that the main achievement in terms of human mobility has been the drastic improvement in security through the Territorial Control Plan. He also indicated that the unprecedented reduction in violence has transformed the country, with the result that migration for security reasons has practically disappeared as a determining factor in human mobility. In addition, he pointed out that the strengthening of security has generated confidence in the population, which is reflected in a notable decrease in forced internal displacements and in the return of Salvadorans who now find a stable and safe environment for their development.<sup>197</sup>

<sup>197</sup> State of El Salvador, Note MPOEA-OEA-011/2025, Observations on the draft of Chapter V, February 13, 2025.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

239. The IACHR notes that the State continued to report the relevance of the role of the UDFI of the PGR as a mechanism to provide assistance and protection to persons in situations of forced internal displacement, as well as a considerable number of benefits in terms of legal advice, psychological support and humanitarian aid. It also values positively the program “My First Job” which, in collaboration with UNHCR, facilitates the inclusion of displaced youth in the labor market, as well as the agreement signed in 2024 between CONAPINA and UNHCR to strengthen the protection of displaced and vulnerable children for the implementation of the Growing Together Act, the development of care protocols and the improvement of safe spaces for psychosocial support. Likewise, the IACHR identifies the relevance of the support spaces “A tu lado” to provide specialized attention to the population in conditions of mobility, including internal displacement.

240. In addition, the Commission has taken note of measures reported regarding the reintegration of returned migrants, although, as reported, their relevance to the implementation of this recommendation is unclear, considering that the latter refers specifically to persons in a condition of forced internal displacement and who, therefore, have remained in their own country.

241. The IACHR has also taken careful note of the concerns expressed by civil society that the levels of forced internal displacement in the country are still high and are motivated, among other reasons, by the effects of the emergency regime. This concern is heightened by the fact that this situation makes it difficult for government institutions to receive support. In this sense, despite the State measures reported, for the Commission, obstacles persist in guaranteeing and respecting the human rights of internally displaced persons that require the strengthening of comprehensive programs and measures to guarantee their rights. In this regard, it considers that the recommendation under follow-up continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

242. The IACHR identifies that progress in complying with this recommendation depends on reliable information that makes it possible to conclude that the measures reported by the State are sufficient, in terms of results, to provide attention to persons in conditions of forced internal displacement in the country. In this sense, the Commission urges the realization of a comprehensive diagnosis that considers the concerns expressed by civil society regarding the causes of forced internal displacement, the increase in these cases, and that allows to understand to what extent the reported measures should be strengthened or new instances of attention should be created.

Recommendation No. 36. Adopt a public policy that aims at guaranteeing an effective, human rights centered reintegration process for returnee migrants, especially those in vulnerable situations and/or with a particular need for protection, such as children, victims of human trafficking, people with disabilities, LGBTI persons and people with medical needs.

243. For the follow-up report for the year 2023, the Commission took note of the Productive Reintegration Program with Psychosocial Attention, assistance spaces offered by the Department of Attention to Migrant Persons, and programs for young, returned migrants. Likewise, it valued the Human Mobility Policy presented by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the International Organization for Migration (hereinafter “IOM”) and identified the importance of knowing its content to comprehensively assess the actions to address the conditions and needs of children, victims of trafficking, persons with disabilities, LGBTI persons, the elderly and persons with medical needs, under the terms of this recommendation. The Commission considered that this recommendation advanced to a level of partial compliance.<sup>198</sup>

244. For the year 2024, the State indicated that, in November 2023, it launched the Human Mobility Policy that addresses the reintegration of returned migrants, especially the most vulnerable, such as children, the elderly, and those with specific protection needs. It also noted that the development of this policy underwent the following stages: agenda building and identification of the situation to be addressed, with a situational diagnosis in 2022; and design and/or formulation, with two phases of consultation. It also informed that the action plan of this policy has indicators and annual goals for each of its strategic lines and is consistent with the National Coordination Mechanism on Human Mobility, of 2023, and the National Implementation Plan of the Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration, of 2024. In addition, it indicated that a software to monitor the development of this measure is under construction, as well as an evaluation and follow-up plan.

245. Likewise, the State indicated that, as of 2023, it is formulating the National Plan for the Reintegration of Returned Persons 2025-2029, which coordinates efforts for sustainable reintegration and human rights, aligned with the Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration.<sup>199</sup>

246. The State also indicated that, in order to facilitate the reintegration of the persons mentioned in this recommendation, it has implemented projects such as “Reintegratech”, which offers digital training to young returnees to improve their job opportunities, and the Project for Change for Returnees, which trains young people in commerce, increasing their employability in coordination with local companies. It also reported that the “Transforming Lives” credit line offers financing to returnees to start or expand their businesses, and that, for the elderly, psychosocial care days have been organized and food kits and basic needs have been delivered.<sup>200</sup>

247. Likewise, the State referred to projects such as the inauguration of the Rincón Azul Store at the airport, which sells products made by returned entrepreneurs, and the “Cancillería Certifica” program to guarantee the quality of their products. In this regard, it was indicated that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has also established agreements with national organizations to strengthen support to returnees in sectors such as technology, agriculture and housing, in order to create a support network for their economic and social reintegration.<sup>201</sup>

248. For its part, the Commission received information provided by civil society according to which the National Directorate for Attention to Victims and Forced Migration of the Ministry of Justice and Public Security faces difficulties in effectively addressing displacement and forced migration, mainly due to a lack of budget and the absence of a concrete plan of action. In addition, it was noted that, although there are regulations such as the Special Law for the Attention and Integral Protection of Persons in Condition of Internal Forced Displacement, its implementation is limited, since the necessary regulations to operationalize its provisions have not yet been adopted.<sup>202</sup>

249. It was also noted that civil society organizations make up for some of the governmental shortcomings and provide assistance to affected persons, but that it is necessary to strengthen institutional responses to meet the needs of migrants and displaced persons, who still lack adequate institutional support. It was also pointed out that the main challenges include the allocation of an adequate budget and the development of a regulation that specifies the roles of each institution involved, thus ensuring a coordinated and effective response to protect people in vulnerable situations.<sup>203</sup>

250. In its observations to this report, the State asked the IACHR to declare the level of substantial partial compliance with this recommendation, taking into account the development of the Human Mobility Policy and its implementation; the construction of the National Plan for the Reintegration of Returnees 2025-

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

251. The IACHR values positively the information provided by the State regarding the stages that have taken place for the development of the Human Mobility Policy and its implementation in 2023. It also identifies that, according to publicly available information, this initiative was launched with the support of the International Organization for Migration (IOM), as a “crucial framework for the care and protection of Salvadorans on the move, as well as for the sustainable reintegration of returnees”<sup>205</sup>. On this matter, the Commission recognizes that the development of this Policy may contribute to the development of this recommendation and, in this sense, invites the State to report its results.

252. The Commission values the construction of the National Plan for the Reintegration of Returned Persons 2025-2029, which is under development and is awaiting the next stages of its design and implementation, specifically, its impact on benefiting migrant returnees in vulnerable situations, such as children, the elderly, persons with disabilities, LGBTI persons, and victims of trafficking. Considering that this plan is under development, the Commission invites the State to continue sharing information about its progress and invites the establishment of special mechanisms on its internal evaluation and identification of results.

253. Likewise, the IACHR values positively the projects reported by the State in the areas of training and employability; financial support and entrepreneurship; assistance and comprehensive care; and institutional strengthening and intersectoral cooperation. In this sense, the Commission identifies that the adoption of relevant measures on this recommendation continues and considers that the recommendation has advanced to a level of substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the compliance with the recommendation

254. In order to advance in the full compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to share information on the development and evaluation of the Human Mobility Policy and the National Plan for the Reintegration of Returned Persons 2025-2029, especially with respect to its differentiated coverage of the needs of each of the groups identified in the recommendation, namely children, victims of trafficking, persons with disabilities, LGBTI persons, the elderly and persons with medical needs.

4. Human rights defenders

Recommendation No. 37. Adopt a legal framework for the protection and defense of human rights defenders and implement a comprehensive policy for the protection of human rights defenders, taking all necessary measures to put an end to the stigmatization and degrading accusations emanating from the State or its agents in order to prevent violence against journalists, human rights defenders and in accordance with Inter-American standards that establish special responsibilities for public authorities in the exercise of their freedom of expression.

255. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR indicated that it was not aware of any actions in compliance with the recommendation. Regarding the adoption of a normative framework, it recalled that, despite the fact that a proposal has been presented, the bill for the recognition and comprehensive protection of human rights defenders and for the guarantee of the right to defend human rights, it was shelved. In addition, it noted with concern allegations regarding the increase in threats, harassment, persecution and violations of personal freedom and integrity against human rights defenders, especially journalists and women, as well as regulations and administrative practices that would hinder their work. In this sense, the Commission emphasized the need for comprehensive policies and specialized programs for the protection of the persons mentioned in the recommendation, which would also be supported by the reduction of the number of aggressions against them and the suppression of hostile or dangerous environments for their work. In addition, it considered that the recommendation was pending compliance.<sup>206</sup>

Information on compliance

256. By 2024, the State indicated that it has an institutional structure to protect human rights defenders and journalists. It stated that the FGR investigates crimes against these groups, rigorously applying the law without discrimination. It also stated that the State implements mechanisms for complaints and protection against harassment and reprisals, including possible abuses of force by State agents and that, in this regard, it created the Office of Citizen Attention for Internal Control (hereinafter "ODACCI") within the National Civil Police, which handles complaints of human rights violations committed by both operational and administrative personnel. According to the State, these efforts underscore the State's commitment to the protection of these fundamental actors.<sup>207</sup>

257. For its part, the Commission received the information provided by civil society according to which there are no state measures to stop the stigmatization and attacks against human rights defenders, nor a regulatory or adequate framework or a comprehensive policy to ensure their safety. In this regard, it was pointed out that the current government has weakened the protection of these persons through legal reforms and an intensive use of the exception regime. Among the reported effects of these measures are the severe restriction of guarantees of freedom of expression and other fundamental rights, the accusations of these people, and difficulties in accessing a fair defense.<sup>208</sup>

258. It was also highlighted that human rights organizations and defenders of democracy face state surveillance and persecution and that the emergency regime, implemented in 2022, has led to arbitrary detentions and abuses of power, affecting mainly vulnerable populations. In addition, some recent reforms that implied greater restrictions were specified.<sup>209</sup> In this regard, it was stated to the IACHR that initiatives such as the proposed law on "Foreign Agents" seek to control the activities and finances of civil organizations, requiring additional oversight and restricting their operations. According to what was stated to the Commission, this legislation reflects a context of systematic repression that hinders the joint work between institutions and civil society, seriously affecting the rule of law and democracy in the country.<sup>210</sup>

259. Likewise, it was pointed out to the Commission that women defenders, in particular, face discrimination and violence, often with the institutional support of hate speeches, and that there are no specific norms to guarantee their rights.<sup>211</sup> In addition, differential effects of discrimination and violence were noted with respect to defenders of land, natural resources and labor rights.<sup>212</sup>

260. In its observations to the present report, the State indicated that it reaffirms its commitment to the protection of human rights, guaranteeing safe conditions for human rights defenders and promoting policies that ensure respect and dignity for the victims of violence. In this regard, it requested recognition that:

- The Territorial Control Plan has been a key factor in the protection of human rights defenders and in guaranteeing the rights of gang victims.
- The eradication of criminal structures has improved security for those who work to defend fundamental rights, eliminating threats and risks that in the past limited their work.
- The strengthening of the justice system has guaranteed more effective access to protection for victims of gang violence, ensuring that they can report incidents without fear of reprisals.
- The creation of specialized courts for organized crime has made it possible to speed up legal proceedings against gang members, providing effective justice for those affected by these criminal groups.

261. On the other hand, regarding initiatives such as the proposed “Foreign Agents” law, the State affirmed that although a draft Foreign Agents Law was presented to the Legislative Assembly in 2021, this measure was not intended to affect social organizations, but rather to promote transparency in foreign funding, as part of the Government's commitment to ensure that international cooperation activities contribute to economic and social development, and to guarantee that the resources channeled into the country achieve the best results and are oriented towards the priorities of the Government, for the benefit of the real needs of the population. In addition, he indicated that the content and scope of this law were not new on the international scene, and that countries with a long democratic tradition and important partners of El Salvador have similar laws. It clarified that this law was not approved and that any promotion of an initiative of this nature will be subject to prior consensus with the relevant national actors and must observe the law-making process provided for in the Constitution. In addition, the State indicated that the information on this law does not correspond to the time frame that was defined with the Commission prior to the issuance of the report on its in loco visit.<sup>213</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

262. The Commission recalls that the follow-up of this recommendation is aimed at establishing whether the State has adopted a legal framework for the protection and defense of human rights defenders and whether it has implemented a comprehensive protection policy in their favor. From the information provided by the State, the IACHR does not identify concrete measures aimed at this purpose. Although the State reported the creation of the Office of Citizen Attention for Internal Control (hereinafter “ODACCI”) within the National Civil Police, as well as the Territorial Control Plan, the eradication of criminal structures, the strengthening of the justice system and the creation of specialized courts for organized crime, the IACHR requests additional and detailed information that will allow it to conclude that these are effective protection measures, in the terms indicated by the recommendation.

263. On the other hand, the IACHR shares the concern of civil society regarding the context of threats, harassment, persecution and violations of freedom and integrity against human rights defenders that has been reported<sup>214</sup>. For the Commission, these positions reinforce the importance and urgency of adopting compliance measures. In this sense, it concludes that the recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in compliance with the recommendation

264. As in 2022 and 2023, the IACHR reiterates the need for the State to adopt a legal framework for the protection and defense of human rights defenders and to implement a comprehensive policy in their favor. These must include protection measures that support the work carried out by defenders, activists, and journalists and, at the same time, guarantee adequate treatment of cases that result in human rights violations. Likewise, the IACHR insists on the need for the State to urgently adopt all necessary measures to put an end to the stigmatization and degrading accusations against journalists and human rights defenders, considering the context described above.

Recommendation No. 38. Carry out effective and due diligence investigations in order to identify, prosecute and punish those materially and intellectually responsible for crimes against human rights defenders.

265. For the follow-up report for the year 2023, the IACHR recalled that its Report on the Situation of Environmental Human Rights Defenders in Northern Central American Countries, published by the IACHR in April 2023, noted that information on crimes against human rights defenders is limited in the country. Thus it is not possible to have an approximate number of attacks and other acts of violence committed against them, and that the lack of investigation and punishment of those responsible for these crimes has led to high rates of impunity. In this context, the IACHR identified no known State measures to comply with this recommendation and concluded that the recommendation is still pending compliance.<sup>215</sup>

266. By the year 2024, the State affirmed that it has an institutional framework to guarantee the free exercise of the work of human rights defenders and pointed out that the criminal prosecution of threats or attempts against the life, integrity, security or any other right of these persons is effectively carried out by the FGR, regardless of the actors or perpetrators. It indicated that this entity processes with due diligence any complaint or illegal act brought to the prosecutor's attention, including those against human rights defenders and pointed out that this entity is part of the national system for the protection of human rights. The State pointed out that the prosecutorial functions and services are deployed throughout the national territory, free of charge, through the Prosecutor's Offices located in each departmental capital and in peripheral cities, and through the Specialized Investigation Units. In addition, it stated that the State has submitted its observations and different requests regarding particular cases under processing by the IACHR, within the framework of precautionary measures granted, and that it is awaiting a response.<sup>216</sup>

267. In its observations to this report, the State pointed out that the Territorial Control Plan has been a key instrument in the protection of human rights, having dismantled the criminal structures that for decades systematically violated the rights of thousands of Salvadorans. It stated that, due to this strategy, the main perpetrators of human rights violations have been brought to justice and are facing legal proceedings in compliance with current legislation. In addition, he indicated that this plan has managed to drastically reduce the rates of violence, preventing the gangs from continuing to operate with impunity; that specialized courts have been established for organized crime, and that the justice system has been strengthened with effective measures that guarantee due process, allowing the victims of these crimes to access justice in a more agile and secure manner. He pointed out that the State's commitment to guaranteeing human rights includes the protection of human rights defenders, who can now carry out their work without fear of reprisals from criminal structures. In this sense, he asked the IACHR to recognize these advances, highlighting the importance of the Territorial Control Plan as a model of success in the fight against crime and the protection of human rights, and affirmed that El Salvador has a solid institutional framework that guarantees the free exercise of the work of defending human rights.<sup>217</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

268. In the framework of the follow-up of this recommendation, the IACHR has taken note of the State's claims, and the information provided on the Territorial Control Plan. However, it does not identify specific measures of compliance in terms of investigation and institutional strengthening for the prosecution and punishment of those materially and intellectually responsible for crimes against human rights defenders, which is the specific object of this recommendation. With regard to the Territorial Control Plan, the information provided is not sufficient to verify how, in practice, this measure has involved carrying out effective investigations with due diligence in order to identify, prosecute and punish the perpetrators and masterminds of crimes against human rights defenders. In this sense, it identifies that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the compliance with the recommendation

269. Reiterating the guidelines for implementation of this recommendation from previous years, the IACHR urges the State to take the necessary actions to carry out investigations to identify, prosecute and punish the individuals responsible both materially and intellectually for crimes committed against human rights defenders. These actions should include a transparent registry of complaints and events related to these crimes, with the purpose of evaluating how the investigation, prosecution and punishment activities contribute to combating impunity in cases of this nature.

5. Indigenous Peoples and People of African Descent

Recommendation No. 46. Generate statistical data on the indigenous population and persons of African descent at a national level, by including questions in the population census that contribute to identifying and registering these groups.

270. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR appreciated the fact that a census is being prepared that will consider international recommendations on indigenous and Afro-descendant persons. It also reiterated its concern about the absence of data and statistics on the human rights situation of the Afro-descendant population and tribal communities and called on the State to address the need to compile detailed and updated statistical information to serve as a basis for the formulation of public policies. In addition, it stressed the importance of including self-identification as Afro-descendant in all data collection systems and of using the category of ethno-racial origin instead of the terms race, ethnicity or lineage. Consequently, it considered that this recommendation is pending compliance.<sup>218</sup>

271. For the year 2024, the State affirmed that the Central Reserve Bank (hereinafter "BCR") launched the VII Population Census and VI Housing Census, highlighting those 17 years had passed without updated data on the number of Salvadorans living in the territory. In this regard, it indicated that this instrument allowed for the collection of "disaggregated demographic information with a territorial approach on the characteristics of the population and its environment" and facilitates the monitoring of social policies on income and social protection, as well as the improvement of labor policies with a rights-based approach.

272. The State also stated that the Ministry of Culture is currently conducting a population census under the direction of the Central Reserve Bank and that the latter has consulted “in a timely manner” with organizations of indigenous peoples and Afro-descendants, as well as with the Ministry of Culture, in order to receive input that will ensure the proper formulation of the census instrument with respect to these groups, and clarified that the census process is underway. Additionally, the State indicated that the Ministry of Culture is conducting a census of the linguistic community of speakers of the Náhuat language in El Salvador.<sup>219</sup>

273. In its observations to this report, the State indicated that it has concluded its VII Population and VI Housing Census, which included a question for the self-identification of the Salvadoran population. It stated that, according to the results of this census, 68,148 people consider themselves to belong to an indigenous people, which represents 1.1% of the total population. It reported that, according to the disaggregated data, the identified indigenous population is as follows: 43.2% Nahuat Pipil; 20.4% Lenca; 9.2% Kakawira (Cacaopera); 5.9% Maya Chortí; 3.2% Maya Pocomames; 0.3% Xinca; 0.2% Mangue and 0.1% Mixe or Alagüilac. In addition, it reported that among the recognized indigenous languages spoken by the population are Nahuat with 1,135 speakers, Pisbi (Cacaopera) with 24 speakers and Potón (Lenca) with 32 speakers. According to the State, this progress in the learning and preserving the Nahuat language is possible thanks to the efforts of communities and teaching projects that seek to revitalize this cultural jewel. In addition, he mentioned that this data includes both native speakers and neo-Nahuatl speakers, who have recently learned the language. Likewise, according to the population census, 23,690 people self-identify as African descent, of whom 13,183 are women and 12,507 are men.<sup>220</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

274. The Commission positively values the information provided by the State during the year 2024 and notes that, thanks to recent census measures, relevant data on the indigenous population and people of African descent have been updated. In this regard, it is not clear to the Commission if the VII Population Census and VI Housing Census of the BCR would be the same or additional to the one reported by the Ministry of Culture, so it invites the State to provide information in this regard.

275. The IACHR recalls that the issuance of this recommendation was based on the need to improve the collection of disaggregated statistical information on the different peoples that exist in the country, which include the Nahua, Pipil, Lenca, Kakawira and Maya Chortí peoples, as well as the need for a legal framework for greater protection of their rights; in addition, at the time, it regretted the scarce information available on Afro-descendants. Considering the importance of compliance measures and that the censuses were effectively carried out, yielding relevant statistical data for the populations indicated in the recommendation, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation has advanced to a level of partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

276. To make progress in complying with this recommendation, the IACHR requests additional information on:

- (i) the details of the design, implementation and analysis of the censuses carried out, specifying whether there was consultation and participation of indigenous peoples and people of African descent in the design of the methodology and, if so, the details of its implementation.
- (ii) the measures that the State will continue to implement to generate comprehensive statistical records regarding the persons indicated in the recommendation, which will be useful in the adoption of measures to respond to their particular needs.

Recommendation No. 47. Ratify the Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination and Related Forms of Intolerance, and the International Labor Organization Convention 169 on Indigenous and Tribal Peoples.

277. For the follow-up report for the year 2023, the State informed that it is analyzing the Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination and Related Forms of Intolerance, as well as the Convention on Indigenous and Tribal Peoples 169 of the International Labor Organization to decide whether to refer them to the Legislative Assembly for consideration and possible ratification. It reiterated the importance of ratification of these instruments and, in the meantime, concluded that the recommendation was pending.<sup>221</sup>

278. For the year 2024, the State indicated that the ratification process of international instruments requires various consultations on constitutional aspects, legality and other analyses. In this regard, it indicated that the referral to the Legislative Assembly of ILO Convention 169 and the Inter-American Convention mentioned in this recommendation.<sup>222</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

279. In view of the absence of updated information on the ratification of the instruments mentioned in the recommendation, the IACHR reiterates what it stated in its follow-up report of 2022, indicating that this constitutes an indispensable step for the respect and guarantee of all human rights, and the prevention and eradication of all forms of discrimination. As the aforementioned Inter-American Convention and ILO Convention have not been ratified, the IACHR considers that this recommendation is pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

280. The Commission reiterates its invitation to the State to promote the ratification of both instruments and to inform the Commission on the substantial progress of this process.

F. Economic, social, cultural and environmental rights

Recommendation No. 39. Promote the adoption of measures to implement Inter-American standards on business and human rights.

281. For the previous follow-up report, the State reported on the monitoring of labor rights by the General Directorate of Labor Inspections; the employment promotion policies of the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare; the fiscal policy 2019-2024 that seeks to modernize the tax system and actions of the Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources (hereinafter "MARN") on extractive activities. For its part, the IACHR and its REDESCA highlighted its concern about the impact of megaprojects and metal mining on the environment in a country with scarce water availability. The Commission considered that the recommendation was pending compliance and requested specific measures to promote standards regarding (i) extractive activities, (ii) provision of essential public services, and (iii) fiscal or tax policies, considering vulnerable individuals and groups.<sup>223</sup>

Information on compliance

282. For the year 2024, the State pointed out that, as part of the second mandate of the current government, the El Salvador Economic Plan has been implemented, which includes three stages:

- The first seeks to develop a food security approach through the installation of AgroMercados and the construction of food supply centers.
- The second is about technology and focuses on boosting macroeconomic growth, within which the State highlighted the first Tier III certified Commercial Data Center in the country that will offer advanced services such as colocation, public and private cloud, and dedicated spaces for people.
- The third seeks to strengthen the country's logistics infrastructure through an investment of US$1,615 million, which, according to the government, is the most significant to date in El Salvador.

283. With respect to essential public services, the State pointed out that the Salvadoran Water Authority (hereinafter "ASA") issued the Special Regulation for the Determination of Fees for the Use and Development of Water Resources, according to which the Water Boards and community organizations that provide water distribution services for human consumption will not pay any fee. The State indicated that this measure especially benefits inhabitants of rural areas, where a large number of populations of indigenous and Afro-descendant descent are located.<sup>224</sup>

284. For its part, the Commission learned information from civil society according to which the MARN is in charge of implementing the regulatory framework for the respect and guarantee of human rights in the face of business activities, including extractive industries. According to information obtained by an organization that responded to the IACHR questionnaire, the MARN reported to have presented, in June 2022, the National Environmental Policy, valid for 5 years.<sup>225</sup> According to this information, this policy seeks to "address the main environmental challenges and problems affecting Salvadoran society today," such as "the negative implications on the natural hydrological regime, the impact of climate change, environmental sanitation, damage to (...) biodiversity and the degradation of unique and vulnerable ecosystems (...) and the need for a more energetic and effective environmental management".<sup>226</sup>

285. The Commission was also informed that the general purpose of the National Environmental Policy is to "incorporate sustainability criteria into the development model in the face of major climate and environmental challenges" and, in addition, its specific objectives, problems to be addressed and strategic guidelines were indicated, namely, the management of water resources to ensure their security over time; climate risk management and the transition to a low-carbon economy; the integration of biodiversity into economic and social development activities; and the promotion of environmental management that favors the protection and conservation of resources.<sup>227</sup>

286. According to the information provided to the IACHR, although the policy is broad and addresses important concerns, it is insufficient to guarantee human rights in the face of extractive activities with unfavorable conditions for the right to water and a healthy environment. In this regard, it was indicated

<sup>225</sup> Foro del Agua El Salvador, Response to the follow-up questionnaire, October 4, 2024. In this regard, this organization noted that the information on this national policy was provided by MARN in response to a previously made request (which was allegedly admitted by the entity on October 2, 2024, through reference No. MARN-2024-00238).

to the Commission that this policy would have the following shortcomings that prevent full compliance with the recommendation under follow-up:<sup>228</sup>

- It allegedly does not make direct reference to the structural causes of the ecological crisis, but rather “attributes the deterioration of environmental conditions to the absence of an adequate territorial planning framework and an excessive institutional framework”. According to the report, “the policy allegedly does not identify the bases of a neoliberal economic model, based on extractivism and overexploitation of natural resources, as the main cause of ecological injustice”.
- The application of this policy is allegedly taking place in a context of strengthening of the neoliberal model which, according to what was pointed out to the Commission, would facilitate the “conditions for extractivist companies to develop their economic activity”. In this regard, it was pointed out, for example, the opinion of the Legislative Assembly of September 2, 2024 to create the Directorate of Territorial Planning and Construction to reduce the processing time of construction permits; provisions on income tax exemption for investors in construction; the exoneration of water use fees for the sugarcane agro-industry or an eventual reactivation of the extractive activity of Metallic Mining.

287. In addition, in this regard, information was provided to the IACHR on the concern of civil society regarding the granting of environmental permits to companies and industries that allegedly degrade life in the territory. In this regard, the following cases were:<sup>229</sup>

- A surf tourist circuit that would be carried out in territories of the Icacal community, Intipuca, in the department of La Unión;
- The use of 100 blocks for solar panels and electricity generation to feed a bitcoin mining plant in Finca Santa Adelaida, affecting the communities of Chorro Arriba, Chorro Abajo, Cuntán and Cuyagualo, in the district of Izalco, Sonsonate Este, department of Sonsonate;
- The mega-project of the Pacific Airport that allegedly caused the forced displacement of numerous families without fair compensation and that was allegedly initiated without an approved environmental impact study. It was pointed out that, although the Autonomous Port Executive Commission (CEPA) is conducting the environmental analysis, the work is underway with irreversible damage to the communities, flora and fauna, and that the airport is being built in a wetland area protected by the Ramsar Convention, crucial for the regulation of the biosphere and water recharge, and a vital wildlife corridor.

288. Likewise, information collected by REDESCA suggests possible situations of persecution against activists opposed to gold and other metals mining, which in turn could have potential effects on water use and the environmental situation.<sup>230</sup> In 2017, El Salvador's legislature voted to ban gold and other metals mining in what was considered a historic event. However, five activists, who were instrumental in the campaign against mining because of its effects on water, were charged for events that occurred in the 1980s unrelated to the issue and placed under house arrest.<sup>231</sup> Although the charges against these individuals were finally dropped in October,<sup>232</sup> this situation raises the possibility of persecution of activists opposed to possible attempts to reverse the ban on gold mining.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

289. Based on the information provided by the State, the IACHR values the adoption of the El Salvador Economic Plan and the exemption of the water resources fee for water boards and community organizations that provide water distribution services for human consumption with benefits for rural inhabitants. For its part, the Commission has taken careful note of the information provided by civil society regarding the importance of the National Environmental Policy, as well as its alleged insufficiency to guarantee human rights in the face of extractive activities. It also takes note of possible persecution of activists opposed to extractive activities linked to gold mining. In this regard, the Commission urges the State to assess the concerns expressed and to indicate the concrete measures it has adopted to incorporate standards on business and human rights with respect to these activities. Pending this specific information, the Commission identifies that this recommendation remains pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

290. The IACHR recalls that the analysis of compliance with this recommendation is based on identifying concrete State measures that implement Inter-American standards related to business and human rights, specifically with regard to extractive activities, the provision of essential public services and fiscal policies or tax practices, with special consideration for individuals and groups in situations of vulnerability.<sup>233</sup>

Recommendation No. 40. Include content on equality, nondiscrimination and social harmony in school curricula to advance on building a culture based on tolerance and peaceful conflict resolution, inclusion and respect for human rights.

291. For the previous follow-up report, the State reported that the Ministry of Education, Science and Technology (hereinafter "MINEDUCYT") has integrated human rights issues into the school curriculum through the subject Moral, Civility and Civics (hereinafter "MUC") and teacher training. It also noted that, under the "My New School" program, the social studies subject in the third cycle of basic education is being reformed, with a focus on human rights. In addition, the Commission learned that, as of 2022, the Inclusive Education program integrates content for students with disabilities and technical assistance for teachers. The IACHR determined that this recommendation has advanced to be partially complied with and requested information on the time, manner, place and results of the implementation of the program and reformed curricular content on equality, non-discrimination and citizen coexistence.<sup>234</sup>

292. By the year 2024, the State reported that the curricula for the Second Cycle of Basic Education and Secondary Education in the subject of Social Studies include themes of equality, non-discrimination and citizen coexistence; that all educational levels integrate critical and responsible participation in society as a competency, and that the "grade and unit objectives" as well as the "content and achievement indicators" seek that students participate in the family, school and society.<sup>235</sup>

293. In addition, the State pointed out that the "My New School" curriculum renewal process is underway for all programs and subjects at different educational levels, which seeks that the Third Cycle of Basic Education integrates themes of equality, non-discrimination and citizen coexistence to the subject of Social Studies, at a theoretical and practical level, with content on interculturalism, human rights and citizen participation. Regarding the latter, it pointed out that the new curricula began in 2024 and that the curricular reform will be carried out gradually in the other educational levels.<sup>236</sup>

294. The State also pointed out that the entire student population of the Third Cycle of Basic Education, as well as the teaching staff, have textbooks with the new contents for the Social Studies subject at the national level in the public sector. It pointed out that the contents of the Third Cycle Social Studies Program include topics such as national and international mechanisms and instruments and institutions to guarantee human rights; collective and specific rights; political and cultural transformations, including women's rights; guarantees for a dignified life; citizen actions to promote the rights of vulnerable populations; defense mechanisms and citizen participation. Finally, the State clarified that the subject Moral, Civility and Civics in El Salvador was incorporated into the national curriculum as of Legislative Decree No. 278 of 2016 and that its implementation began as of 2018.<sup>237</sup>

295. For its part, the IACHR heard allegations from civil society regarding alleged statements by state authorities, including representatives of the Ministry of Education, Health and Culture, contrary to the promotion of educational content on equality and non-discrimination, specifically with regard to diverse sexual orientations and gender identity.<sup>238</sup>

296. In its observations to the present report, regarding the allegations made by civil society on statements made by state authorities that they consider contrary to the promotion of educational content on equality and non-discrimination, specifically with regard to diverse sexual orientations and gender identity, the State noted that the recommendation refers to a specific measure related to the school curriculum. In this sense, it pointed out that the objective element of analysis should be the inclusion or not of such content in the school curriculum, and not what is related to statements by public officials. In addition, the State confirmed that the statements cited correspond to the values and vision of the Government of the current President.<sup>239</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

297. The Commission identifies that the "My New School" curriculum renewal process for all programs and subjects at different educational levels is a relevant measure to comply with this recommendation. Considering that it began with the integration of equality, non-discrimination and citizen coexistence in the subject of Social Studies in the Third Cycle of Basic Education, as of 2024, the IACHR encourages the completion of the process for the other educational levels, provided that it is in accordance with Inter-American human rights standards.

298. In this regard, the Commission identifies the importance that this process be used as a mechanism to enhance the inclusion of the contents indicated in the recommendation within the school curriculum. In this sense, it invites that, in addition to completing its implementation, the Commission be informed about mechanisms that ensure its sustainability and, in addition, the measurement and monitoring of its results.

299. Also, considering the allegations made by civil society regarding the lack of inclusion of content related to the rights of LGBTIQ+ persons, the Commission requests specific information explaining how this reform process ensures the inclusion of Inter-American standards that prevent any type of discrimination or violence against these persons, based on their sexual orientation and gender identity or expression.

300. For its part, the IACHR has taken note of the State's observation that the objective element of analysis of this recommendation should be the inclusion or not of content in the school curriculum, and not the statements of public officials. In this regard, the IACHR identifies that the prohibition stated by the President of the Republic of a gender ideology in schools<sup>240</sup>; the information on an alleged memorandum from the Minister of Education on February 28, 2024 excluding materials and content related to “gender ideology” from public schools, and his statement of February 27, 2024 informing the elimination of “any use or trace of gender ideology from public schools”<sup>241</sup> does have an impact on the analysis of compliance with this recommendation. For this reason, the Commission invites the State to provide specific information on the scope of the prohibition indicated by the authorities with respect to the school curriculum and the specific material that has been eliminated, if any.

301. For the IACHR, it is relevant to have this information in order to assess whether the prohibition of the material referred to by these authorities has any impact on the inclusion in the school curriculum of issues of equality, non-discrimination, coexistence, tolerance and peaceful conflict resolution, inclusion and respect for human rights. Pending this information, the Commission considers that this recommendation remains partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

302. The Commission invites the State to report on progress in the implementation of the “My New School” curriculum renewal process or similar processes that develop the components of the recommendation at the different educational levels. In addition, to guarantee and report on its mechanisms for sustainability and internal measurement and follow-up, with a view to ensuring its continuity over time, as well as its results. Also, considering the allegations made by civil society regarding the lack of inclusion of content related to the rights of LGBTIQ+ persons, the Commission requests specific information to explain whether this reform process ensures the inclusion of the Inter-American standards that prevent any type of discrimination or violence against these persons based on their sexual orientation and gender identity or expression. In addition, it invites the State to specify, if applicable, the scope of the material or the prohibition of what the authorities have indicated as “gender ideology”.

Recommendation No. 41. Recognize the human right to drinking water and sanitation within the country’s legal system, promote the comprehensive and coordinated administration of water as a public good using a rights-based approach, and ensure that water-use permits and agreements with companies on this resource do not jeopardize the effective realization of the human right to water.

303. In the previous follow-up report, the IACHR assessed progress in the implementation of the General Law on Water Resources (hereinafter “LGRH”); in the adoption of the Special Regulation for the Determination of Fees for the Use and Development of Water Resources and the Guidelines for Transparency in the Canon; in the socialization of the LGHR by the ASA, and in the latter’s support to the water boards. In this sense, it identified progress in the recognition of the right to drinking water and sanitation, and in the administration of the resource as a public good from a rights-based approach. In turn, it awaited the adoption of the General Regulations of the LGHR; it identified challenges to ensure that water use permits and agreements with companies do not jeopardize this right and considered that the recommendation advanced to the level of substantial partial compliance.<sup>242</sup>

304. For 2024, the State indicated that the LGRH issued guidelines for water management policies to consider the needs of rural and indigenous populations and respect the traditional and cultural uses of this resource. It also reiterated information provided in 2023 according to which the ASA issued the “Special Regulation for the determination of fees for the use and exploitation of water resources” which establishes that the Water Boards and community organizations that provide the service of water distribution for human consumption will not pay fees, with special benefit for inhabitants of rural areas, and communities of indigenous and Afro-descendant descent.<sup>243</sup>

305. In addition, the State indicated that it had issued guidelines for water supply activities to apply the coefficient based on the social interest or purpose of its use and exploitation for the cultivation or production of food that make up the basic food basket or for the generation of public electric power. These guidelines state that the administration of this resource must consider the regular, permanent and free access that every person must have to a quantitatively and qualitatively adequate and sufficient food supply.<sup>244</sup>

306. The State also indicated that the ASA and the National Aqueduct and Sewer Administration (hereinafter “ANDA”) signed an Interinstitutional Cooperation Agreement to coordinate technical, legal, administrative, scientific and financial efforts to ensure the application of the regulations in force. In addition, it stated that ANDA will allocate US$4,940,000 million, from the fees for the use of the resource, to initiatives that improve the access and quality of water and sanitation services.<sup>245</sup>

307. Likewise, the State indicated that the ASA attends to requests from natural or legal persons to use and exploit the water resource for purposes other than domestic use, for which it must determine the availability of the resource, in accordance with the priority uses established by the LGRH or possible effects on other sources of supply. Within this process, the dissemination and publication of these processes in newspapers and other digital platforms and municipalities is foreseen (Art. 77 LGRH), and citizens may oppose the issuance of the authorization (Art. 78 LGRH) when they consider that there is a possible infringement. The State pointed out that, once the authorization is issued, the ASA can carry out water audits (Art. 86 LGRH) or determine liability for non-compliance with the conditions set in the authorization.<sup>246</sup>

308. For its part, the Commission learned that on October 3, 2024, the ASA responded to a request for information from an organization stating that the General Regulations of the LGRH are being prepared and that they will include water planning. In addition, it was pointed out that this law establishes the aspects to be regulated by the secondary regulation.<sup>247</sup> On this matter, although the importance of adopting such regulation was recognized, concern was expressed that it has not been approved, almost three years after the adoption of the LGRH and more than two years since its entry into force, and that its elaboration is part of an “opaque, inconsistent process, without information and without citizen and community participation”, without the participation of organizations working for the human right to water, sustainability and water justice. In this regard, particularly, the El Salvador Water Forum (composed of two hundred Rural and Urban Water Boards and sixty civil society organizations) regretted not having been invited to participate, despite being active in the implementation of the LGRH with the presentation of complaints, requests and briefs before the ASA.<sup>248</sup>

309. As to whether the State has taken actions to allow the participation of civil society in the implementation and regulation of the LGRH, it was reported to the IACHR that the ASA had responded to the El Salvador Water Forum that the Sub-Directorate of Territorial Management of that entity would be in charge of promoting it. However, the concern that only 486 water boards (out of a total of almost 2,500 water boards registered in 2015) have been submitted for registration in the National Registry of Water Resources, created by the ASA, was reported to the Commission, while at the same time that 18,731 companies have completed the registration of their respective water source before the same entity. According to what was reported to the Commission, this situation responds to the fact that the LGRH is being implemented with “a clear anti-communal bias (...) characterized by a policy that treats companies and water boards as equals, despite having different purposes and there existing tremendous technical, legal and, above all, financial asymmetries between both (...)”.<sup>249</sup>

310. In this regard, the Commission heard the request of the Water Forum of El Salvador that (i) the Sub-Directorate of Territorial Management of the ASA comply with the LGRH and implement a program of information, technical and financial support that responds to the needs of the water boards and addresses the deficiencies of these organizations in their legalization process. In addition, concern was expressed that (ii) despite the “opposition” mechanism of the LGHR that allows a person or community to expose if they are affected by a project authorization, the ASA has eliminated other participation mechanisms and maintains the confidentiality of information for up to seven years on inter-institutional cooperation agreements with ANDA for the financing of works, activities and projects, by limiting the social audit.<sup>250</sup>

311. Finally, the Water Forum of El Salvador requested a response to its requests, such as the one presented to the ASA with a proposal of the contents for a General Regulation of Attention to Rural and Urban Water Boards, the result of the discussion with more than one hundred rural and urban water boards of the departments of San Salvador, La Libertad, Cuscatlán, La Paz, Chalatenango and Morazán. The same was requested in relation to a proposal presented on July 30, 2024, where it is demanded that, in view of the food crisis, the Regulation for the Determination of Fees be reformed so that there is a symbolic canon for the use of water for food irrigation. Finally, it pointed out the absence of the appointment of the civil society representative in the ASA Board of Directors.<sup>251</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

312. The IACHR identifies that the State reiterated, as of 2023, the “Special Regulation for the determination of fees for the use and development of water resources”. In addition, it positively values the adoption of guidelines so that water management policies consider the needs of rural and indigenous populations and respect the traditional and cultural uses of this resource; so that water supply activities apply the coefficient based on the interest or social purpose of its use and exploitation for cultivation or food production or the generation of public electricity, as well as the allocation of investment for improvements to water and sanitation services.

313. For its part, the Commission recalls that, since the year 2023, it identified challenges regarding the component of the recommendation that calls for ensuring that use permits and agreements with companies on water resources do not jeopardize the effective realization of the human right to water. In this regard, it took note of the drafting of the General Regulation of the LGRH, which, according to information provided by civil society, is still in the formulation phase.

314. The Commission identifies this instrument as an opportunity to develop guidelines on the signing of water agreements in favor of companies and to emphasize the participation of civil society in the administration of water resources, as well as access to information on the granting of permits, signing of agreements, project financing, among other matters. However, the allegations of civil society regarding the opacity and restriction of this process, and the lack of participation of the Water Forum of El Salvador, are of concern. For the Commission, it is essential that the regulation of this tool is aimed at guaranteeing the participation of civil society in the regulation of water use permits and agreements with companies, considering that the objective is to ensure that the effective realization of the human right to water is not put at risk. Considering the importance of strengthening this component of the recommendation, the IACHR considers that the recommendation continues to be complied with at a substantial partial level.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

315. The IACHR will assess progress in compliance with the recommendation when the State (i) proves that it has provided civil society with spaces for effective participation in the process of implementation and regulation of the General Law on Water Resources, which requires guaranteeing access to information regarding the administration of this public good and (ii) provides information on measures adopted to ensure that water use permits and agreements with companies on this resource do not jeopardize the effective realization of the human right to water, considering the perspective of civil society.

Recommendation No. 42. Promote the negotiation and adoption of a treaty in cooperation with neighboring countries to guarantee the necessary measures for preventing, regulating and overseeing the comprehensive, sustainable management of shared, transboundary water basins, placing the human right to water at the core of this action.

316. For the 2023 follow-up report, the State highlighted that it is analyzing, together with riparian countries, transboundary water protection measures and referred to studies with Honduras on the behavior of the Ocotepaque; project management in the Central American Integration System (SICA) and the Central American Commission on Environment and Development (CCAD); updating the Regional Climate Change Strategy (ERCC), and a possible accession to the Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes. The Commission noted that the recommendation remained partially complied with, for which it recalled that, although in 2022 it was aware of the treaty on the integrated management of transboundary watersheds with Guatemala, it would be awaiting information on the negotiation of a treaty with Honduras under the terms of the recommendation.<sup>252</sup>

317. For the year 2024, the State pointed out that the LGRH created the International Watercourse Management Committee that will be integrated by a representative of the ASA, the MARN, as well as the Ministries of Housing, Agriculture and Livestock (hereinafter "MAG"), National Defense, Local Development and Foreign Affairs. It pointed out that this makes it possible, as requested by law, for the State to negotiate and sign international treaties and conventions on international drainage basins or transboundary basins facing international watercourses, in accordance with the Constitution and applicable international principles. The State noted that both ASA and the International Watercourse Management Committee received a visit of an expert from the Water Convention Secretariat; and participated in the Water Conference in New York in 2023 and in the Working Group on Monitoring and Evaluation of the Water Convention in Switzerland.<sup>253</sup>

318. For its part, the IACHR received information from civil society indicating that the MARN allegedly reported on Transboundary Development initiatives to promote the Participatory Master Plan for the Trifinio Region and the Development of Climate Resilient Regional Value Chains that Strengthen Ecosystem Water Services and Generate Rural Income in the Tri-national Basin of the Lempa River in the Trifinio. In addition, regarding whether the State has promoted the participation of civil society to ensure the integrated and sustainable management of shared transboundary water basins, the Commission received information according to which the British Embassy in the country, in coordination with the Government, presented the project “Resilient and Biodiverse Landscapes of Northern Mesoamerica” which seeks to allocate 2 million dollars to the Trifinio Plan in Metapán. It was also noted that in June 2024, leaders of the countries of the Trifinio region renewed their commitment to the Trifinio Plan’s cross-border cooperation, sustainable development and Central American integration.<sup>254</sup>

319. The IACHR recalls that, since 2022, the IACHR has been aware of the conclusion of a treaty on the integrated management of transboundary watersheds between the Republic of El Salvador and the Republic of Guatemala,<sup>255</sup> for which reason it had been awaiting information on the negotiation of a treaty with Honduras on similar terms. In this sense, the Commission identifies that the State has adopted actions relevant to the management of transboundary waters, although specific information is required on the referred negotiation, as well as on the effective functioning of the International Watercourse Management Committee referred to in the LGRH. According to the information provided, this body will make possible the negotiation and signing of treaties and agreements with respect to international drainage basins or transboundary basins facing international watercourses. Considering its importance in achieving the objective stated in the recommendation, the IACHR identifies that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

320. The Commission reiterates that progress in the fulfillment of this recommendation will be based on actions to promote the adoption of a cooperation treaty with Honduras that will allow for coordinated action in the face of various challenges in this area. In addition, considering the most recent information from the State, the Commission invites the State to report on the functioning of the International Watercourse Management Committee referred to in the LGRH and on its efforts to negotiate and adopt agreements on the integrated and sustainable management of shared transboundary water basins.

Recommendation No. 43. Ratify the Regional Agreement on Access to Information, Public Participation and Justice in Environmental Matters in Latin America and the Caribbean (Escazú Agreement).

321. For the 2023 follow-up report, the State reported that it was analyzing the ratification of the Escazú Agreement, while civil society indicated that no measures had been taken in this regard and criticized the approval of environmental permits for projects in protected areas that could negatively affect the environment and the rights of local communities, which would generate concerns about the right to a healthy environment and reprisals against community opposition leaders. The IACHR considered that this recommendation remained pending and urged the State to strengthen the approval process of the aforementioned agreement.

322. For the year 2024, the State indicated that the Escazú Agreement continues in the analysis stage and round of consultations. In addition, it indicated that “the ratification of international treaties is part of an exercise of national sovereignty” and requires a process provided for in the Constitution with phases of consultations with various institutions and analysis of constitutional and legality aspects, which, in addition, may require control between different agencies.<sup>256</sup>

323. For its part, civil society indicated to the Commission that the State has not taken steps to adhere to or ratify the Escazú Agreement, although its approval is being discussed since 2019 and despite its relevance in guaranteeing access to information and protecting environmental defenders. In this regard, it was pointed out that the ratification of this instrument would provide useful legal instruments in favor of transparency, public participation and access to justice in environmental matters.<sup>257</sup>

324. Particularly, it was indicated to the Commission that the relevance of this agreement lies in the fact that an increase in the difficulties to access public information has been identified as a result of the use of reserved classification of information, which is allegedly blocking access to data on projects, activities and state investments for several years. Additionally, it was pointed out that there would be government opposition to adhere to the Escazú Agreement as it would run counter to extractive megaprojects, infrastructure and tourism and considering an alleged existence of smear campaigns against environmental defenders from the State.<sup>258</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

325. The IACHR reiterates that the Escazú Agreement is a key instrument that is complementary to the instruments and obligations of the Inter-American system on environmental rights and that, according to what REDESCA stated in its 2022 annual report, “reinforces principles and obligations established in Inter-American norms and jurisprudence on the right to a healthy environment, highlighting the need to guarantee the so-called access rights to ensure their validity, such as the effective protection of the right of individuals to defend the environment”.<sup>259</sup> Pending progress towards the adoption of the Escazú Agreement, the IACHR considers that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the compliance with the recommendation

326. The IACHR reiterates that progress in compliance with this recommendation requires strong measures aimed at the ratification of the Escazú Agreement.

G. The right to Freedom of Expression

Recommendation No. 48. Take the necessary measures to ensure a safe working environment for journalists and respect for the independence of the media. In particular, ensure that official advertising and frequency allocation are guided by democratic criteria and in accordance with international human rights standards. Also incorporate measures to ensure that state media operate under international standards on public media.

327. For the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR welcomed the decision of the Legislative Assembly in November 2023 to decriminalize the dissemination of messages alluding to gangs, although it noted the need for other measures to strengthen civic space and provide adequate conditions for the work of defenders and journalists, considering the prevalence and seriousness of reports of attacks against them. Likewise, the Commission highlighted that additional information was needed on the two remaining components of the recommendation, namely the application of democratic criteria for official advertising and the allocation of frequencies, and international standards on public media versus state-owned media; it also concluded that the recommendation was still pending compliance.<sup>260</sup>

328. For 2024, the State affirmed that it rejects any aggression or attack on the free exercise of freedom of expression and that El Salvador has a “duly structured institutional framework to guarantee the free exercise of the work of human rights defenders”, including journalists and communicators. It also indicated that the Attorney General’s Office of the Republic (hereinafter “FGR”) rigorously prosecutes crimes against these persons and that, as part of social control in a democratic rule of law, “there are several digital and written newspapers, and totally independent media, some of them with a critical line towards the Government”.<sup>261</sup>

329. In addition, the State indicated that, in accordance with the Telecommunications Law, the General Superintendence of Electricity and Telecommunications (hereinafter “SIGET”) has the function of planning, administering, monitoring and controlling the radio spectrum. It pointed out that this entity has updated the regulation to ensure that access to spectrum frequencies is equitable and non-discriminatory, which includes sound and television broadcasting. It also indicated that it has facilitated citizen participation in the concession of the radio electric spectrum, and has guaranteed that interested parties have access to frequencies and contribute to the diversity of the media.<sup>262</sup>

330. The State also indicated that SIGET promotes access to information and participation in the assignment processes, for which it publishes the forms and requirements through digital channels. It also indicated that it ensures that its actions support a rational and sustainable use of the spectrum in an inclusive telecommunications environment aligned with international standards. According to the State, these actions “consolidate the conditions for journalists and human rights defenders to carry out their work in a context that respects and protects the principles of freedom of expression and access to information”.<sup>263</sup>

331. The Commission also received information from civil society indicating the ineffectiveness of measures to protect journalists and eradicate violence against them. Likewise, an alleged systematic refusal to investigate the facts of espionage against journalists and members of civil society organizations was alleged, both by the Presidential Commissioner for Human Rights and Freedom of Expression<sup>264</sup> as well as by the Court of Auditors of the Republic and even judicial authorities<sup>265</sup>. According to what was reported, this hinders the public from knowing if there was a bidding procedure or if the company that provides espionage services through the spy software Pegasus was hired illegally.<sup>266</sup>

332. In particular, the Commission obtained information on a decision of the Disputes Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, which reportedly confirmed the inadmissibility of a lawsuit filed against decisions of the Court of Auditors. The latter, in turn, allegedly declared the inadmissibility of carrying out a special examination to investigate the alleged use of public funds for the acquisition of espionage services. In this regard, it was reported that the court based its decision on serious considerations such as “it cannot examine acts of which it gained knowledge in the exercise of the auditing function” and that “the administrative litigation courts cannot directly protect human rights regulated in international treaties”.<sup>267</sup>

<sup>265</sup> The Cristosal Foundation indicated that it has filed requests to investigate the alleged use of public funds for espionage; however, it indicated that authorities of the Court of Accounts of the Republic have refused to exercise oversight powers and judicial authorities have refused to admit a lawsuit against this refusal. Fundación Cristosal, Response to the follow-up questionnaire, October 4, 2024.

<sup>267</sup> Particularly, reference was made to the decision of reference 20-22-RA-SCA of the Administrative Litigation Chamber, dated March 29, 2023 (notified on April 13, 2023) which denied an appeal filed on October 31, 2022 for the admission of a complaint against unfavorable acts of the agencies of the Court of Accounts of the Republic. The challenged decisions allegedly were (i) the declaration of inadmissibility of a complaint filed on February 8, 2022 before the Department of Citizen Participation of the Court of Accounts of the Republic to investigate the allocation of funds for the acquisition of Pegasus or the contracting of the company NSO Group Technologies Ltd and (ii) the confirmation of this declaration by the Management Body of the Court of Accounts of the Republic. Fundación Cristosal, Response to the follow-up questionnaire, October 4, 2024.

333. In terms of figures, the Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE) received information according to which, in 2023, 311 attacks on the press were recorded, with an increase of 66% over the year 2022; it also indicated that, from March to May 2024, 50 cases of different types of attacks on journalists were recorded, about which, as it was pointed out to the Commission, a context of impunity prevails that allows the repetition of these acts and leads to self-censorship of journalists.<sup>268</sup> The Commission also received reports from civil society organizations on attacks on journalists in the digital sphere. Between October 1, 2023 and January 10, 2024, 4,057 attacks were recorded on social networks, of which 655 (16%) were directed at women journalists.<sup>269</sup> According to publicly available information, attacks against the press occur in a context of increasing harassment, threats and stigmatization, including by high-ranking State officials, with the alleged aim of delegitimizing journalistic work.<sup>270</sup>

334. In addition, the IACHR received information from civil society according to which the reforms to the Special Law for the Intervention of Telecommunications, of November 2022, facilitate the wiretapping of individuals considered to be opponents, including people who practice journalism. According to this information, with this reform, the State does not need the Pegasus malware, since an order from the prosecutor's office without exhaustive grounds is sufficient. It was also stated that "the lack of access to public information and impunity on the part of the State have made it impossible to investigate these espionage acts".<sup>271</sup>

335. In addition to the latter, recent reports from civil society organizations have expressed their concern and demanded that the Government be held accountable for the revelations of a journalistic investigation, according to which high-ranking State officials have agreed to establish a center for espionage against journalists and political opponents.<sup>272</sup>

336. Finally, the IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship learned of public reports of limitations on private correspondence, intimidation tactics such as financial audits and allegations of manipulation of official advertising. These practices are denounced as a strategy to silence critical media. According to civil society reports, government advertising is mostly allocated to media favorable to the Government, while being reduced or withdrawn from those that criticize the administration.<sup>273</sup>

337. In its observations to the present report, the State indicated that it reaffirms its commitment to freedom of the press and expression, guaranteeing that journalists and media outlets can operate without undue restrictions. It indicated that the reports that question the situation of press freedom in El Salvador lack technical and methodological rigor, presenting unverified data or biased interpretations that do not reflect the reality of the country. In this sense, it requested to take into account reliable sources and to recognize the State's respect for the principles of pluralism of information and the free exercise of journalism. It also indicated that the country has promoted an environment where the media have unrestricted access to public information, and where protection mechanisms for journalists have been strengthened, guaranteeing their safety and the development of their work without interference. It urged the IACHR to recognize these advances and to consider information based on evidence and technical methodologies to prepare its reports.<sup>274</sup>

338. Likewise, in its observations, the State indicated that the civil society information on the reforms to the Special Law for the Intervention of Telecommunications of November 2022 and its possible misuse by the FGR, makes abstract evaluations of the internal legislation of El Salvador, without any basis in concrete facts to support such considerations.<sup>275</sup>

339. The Commission recalls that the first component of the recommendation calls for measures to guarantee a safe working environment for journalists and for the independence of the media. In this regard, the IACHR has taken note of the State's rejection of any aggression or attack on the free exercise of freedom of expression and its affirmation of the existence of an institutional framework that, as indicated, guarantees the free exercise of the work of journalists and communicators.

340. However, the IACHR expresses its concern with the allegations coming from civil society indicated above regarding the continued prevalence of attacks on journalists, as well as the hostile climate that has prevailed since 2023 for the exercise of journalistic work in the country.<sup>276</sup> In this regard, the IACHR and RELE reiterate that journalism is the primary and principal manifestation of freedom of expression and that those who practice journalism and the media keep society informed on matters of public interest and contribute to the existence of a broad, robust and pluralistic public debate.<sup>277</sup> Likewise, the Commission has repeatedly held that an independent and critical press is a fundamental element for the validity of the other freedoms that make up the democratic system and the rule of law. For this reason, States have the obligation to create the conditions for journalists to be able to exercise their function freely, independently and safely.<sup>278</sup>

341. Considering the concerns expressed and the imperative need for the protection of journalism, the Commission identifies that the information submitted by the State does not identify practical measures of compliance that demonstrate due attention or adequate investigation of the facts that impede a safe working environment for journalism and for the independence of the media. Of particular concern to the Commission is the information provided by civil society regarding the alleged prevalence of a systematic refusal to investigate acts of espionage against journalists, on which it calls for a diligent approach<sup>279</sup>.

342. With respect to the second component of this recommendation, namely the application of democratic criteria for official advertising and frequency allocation, the IACHR has taken note of the State's assertion that SIGET is in charge of planning, managing, monitoring and controlling the radio spectrum and that it updated the regulation to ensure equitable and non-discriminatory access. The Commission appreciates this information; however, in order to determine its relevance to compliance with this component, it identifies the need for information that specifies the content and results of the actions reported by SIGET regarding the democratization of frequency allocation.

343. Finally, with respect to the third component of the recommendation on the application of international public media standards to state media, the Commission does not identify specific information on state measures that contribute to its compliance. Considering the lack of identification of measures aimed at implementing the three components of the recommendation, the Commission considers that this recommendation remains pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

344. The IACHR reiterates that progress in compliance with this recommendation requires the adoption of practical measures that (i) guarantee a safe working environment for journalists, as well as respect for the independence of the media (considering the hostile context for the practice of journalism that has been denounced); (ii) the application of democratic criteria on official advertising and frequency allocation, and (iii) international public media standards for state-owned media.

Recommendation No. 49. Guarantee the right of access to public information in accordance with the guidelines of the Inter-American legal framework and adopt the necessary measures to remove the barriers that impede its effective compliance.

345. In the 2023 follow-up report, the IACHR took note of the measures reported by the State, including the Law on Access to Public Information (hereinafter "LAIP") and the functions of the Institute for Access to Public Information (hereinafter "IAIP"). However, it expressed its concern about the allegations made by civil society regarding limitations to the right of access to information through the classification of information as reserved used by the three branches of government, which allegedly has a differentiated impact with respect to information on citizen security. The Commission considered that it is essential to address the allegations of inordinate and disproportionate use of classification of information as reserved and urged the State to identify and overcome barriers to access to public information. For these reasons, it considered that the recommendation is pending compliance.<sup>280</sup>

346. For the year 2024, the State affirmed that access to public information is a fundamental right that arises from freedom of expression and consists of the power to "seek, receive and disseminate data, ideas or information of any kind, public or private, that are of 'public interest' (...)" as a mechanism for social control of public administration. It indicated that it is governed by the principle of maximum disclosure, according to which the information held by the obligated entities is public and its dissemination is unrestricted, except for the exceptions established by law, for which it cited the IACHR, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, as well as the Principles on the Right of Access to Information of the Inter-American Juridical Committee.<sup>281</sup>

347. In addition, the State pointed out that the right of access to public information is subject to restrictions under the LAIP, including the one that indicates that it may be limited in the case of information classified as reserved. In this regard, it explained that this reservation applies when there are legitimate objectives, values or legal rights that could be equal or more relevant than the referred right and that could be harmed by the publication of the information, especially when it is a superior legal right.<sup>282</sup>

348. Likewise, the State explained that the classification of information as subject to reserve is established by law and not "in a whimsical manner or due to circumstances that are not expressly detailed in the Constitution or the Law". It pointed out that this figure seeks to "balance transparency in public administration with the protection of legitimate interests, such as national security and the protection of personal data" and that the IAIP determines that for this limitation to be valid, it is required to comply with the criteria of legality (that the reserve is established by law); reasonableness (that the adoption of this limitation is reasoned and justified to reduce arbitrariness in the actions of officials), and temporality (that the restriction is subject to a term defined by law).<sup>283</sup>

349. Likewise, the State indicated that the classification of information as reserved requires compliance with one of the grounds for exception in Article 19 of the LAIP and that it must be determined that the “release of the information could effectively threaten the legally protected interest and that the harm that could be caused by the release of this information would be greater than the public interest in knowing the information”. In addition, it indicated that access to public information admits two exceptions, namely, “when the disclosure of the information may cause harm to a legally protected public interest, such as public safety or national security” or when “the need to preserve the private life and patrimony of individuals” is identified.<sup>284</sup>

350. Also, the State stated that any person can use two mechanisms to report a possible disproportionate use of the reserve classification, namely:<sup>285</sup>

- The appeal before the obligated entity or the IAIP (to require the obligated entity to deliver the requested information when the denial was unjustified). The State pointed out that this appeal may be filed by itself or through a representative and that the IAIP may confirm the resolution of the information officer of an obligated entity or revoke or modify such resolution.
- The sanctioning procedure, according to which the IAIP may hear and process administrative sanctioning procedures against public servants and/or officials who have incurred in any violation of the LAIP. In this regard, it indicated that one of the serious infractions indicated by this law consists of “Invoking as reserved information that does not comply with the characteristics indicated in the LAIP”. In this regard, the State clarified that this infraction only proceeds when the Institute has determined by means of a legal opinion that the information is of a public nature.

351. For its part, the Commission learned of civil society concerns about the opacity and lack of transparency in the country’s public administration and the refusal of institutions and political actors to provide information that by law should be done ex officio.<sup>286</sup> In this regard, it was pointed out that the following are among the types of impediments to access to information:

- Formal: When mandatory forms are required or unfounded requirements on lack of coincidence of the applicant's signature with the Documento Único de Identidad (Single Identity Document);
- Unavailability of information: When there is a lack of response; delivery in formats that cannot be processed; outdated information in transparency portals and indexes of reserved information; and
- Substantive: With declarations of classifications of reserved information, non-existence, deregulation of norms that allow access to information through guidelines of the entity in charge, new jurisprudential criteria or the creation of laws that do not establish its obligatory nature, such as the lack of access to procurement information as of the new Public Procurement Law.<sup>287</sup>

352. Regarding findings that report these shortcomings in access to information, it was reported that, according to a January 2024 report by Transparency International, on the perception of corruption in 2023, El Salvador fell 10 positions in the world ranking due to the weakening of the LAIP, the outdated transparency portals of public institutions and the lack of justification in the classification of information as reserved. In this sense, El Salvador is allegedly in 126th place out of 180, with a score of 31 out of 100, which is allegedly its lowest score since 2012.<sup>288</sup>

353. In addition, it was informed that, according to a civil society study, “out of 1,463 information requests made by 15 entities (including civil society organizations and media) between June 2019 and December 2023, only 394 obtained a response”, which, as it was pointed out, implies that more than 73% of the information requests were not answered favorably by the obligated entities and that “of the information that was delivered, 15% obtained a partial response”. In addition, it was stated that, of the lists reviewed, “34.7% (508) of the requests are related to the use of public resources and contracting”, followed by information on sources of financing and purpose.<sup>289</sup>

354. In the same vein, it was reported to the Commission that the Report on Freedom of Expression 2023 “Pienso dos veces antes que aparezca mi nombre” of the University Observatory of Human Rights (hereinafter “OUDH”) of the Universidad Centroamericana José Simeón Cañas reported that, of 1455 requests for information from citizens, less than 50% were answered satisfactorily and that, in many cases, only a link was provided without substantive information.<sup>290</sup> The OUDH also analyzed 18 public institutions in relation to the ex officio delivery of information in 2023 and concluded that “most of these institutions refuse to share information”.<sup>291</sup> Likewise, it was noted that the country registers setbacks according to the Open Budget Survey on access to budget information, opportunities for participation and oversight of public resources, positioning it as the country with the least budget transparency in the region. In addition, it was noted that the level of opportunities for public participation in budget approval process was extremely low.<sup>292</sup>

355. Likewise, the Commission received information from civil society according to which the excessive denial of information is accompanied by an inoperability of the IAIP<sup>293</sup> and that there has been a recent structured blocking of access to information from the social network accounts of the ministries for civil society and the media.<sup>294</sup> Additionally, the Commission received information from the Water Forum of El Salvador according to which the difficulties to access public information have increased, due to the use of the classification of information as reserved, which is allegedly “blocking access to data on projects, activities and state investments for several years, generally justified with unconvincing arguments”. In this regard, it was noted that several requests for information from this organization have been denied.<sup>295</sup>

356. Finally, the IACHR received some information that was allegedly obtained in response to a request to the IAIP according to which, from 2019 to June 2024, 9 sanctions were allegedly imposed for the very serious infraction of “delivering or disseminating reserved or confidential information”; 236 sanctioning procedures were allegedly carried out, 80% initiated by complaints; 120 appeals were allegedly filed for “classification of information as reserved”, 107 for “refusal to provide information due to non-existence of information”, 105 for “partial provision of information”, 72 for “reserved information” and 68 for “lack of response”. In addition, it was pointed out that from January 2023 to August 2024, the IAIP would have heard 205 appeal processes, 90 of which were allegedly resolved in favor of the citizen.<sup>296</sup>

357. Despite the information provided by the State, the Commission recalls that the importance of this recommendation lies in promoting actions that, in a context of shortcomings in access to public information, demonstrate an unequivocal strategy and intention of the State to guarantee the right of access to public information. In this regard, the Commission reiterates its concern about the allegations of civil society regarding limitations to the right of access to information through the figure of reserve used by various State agencies, as well as the shortcomings that have been identified in the diagnoses on transparency and access to information.

358. The IACHR reiterates that it is essential that the State effectively address the allegations presented regarding the disordinate and disproportionate use of the classification of information as reserved as a mechanism that limits access to public information. In this sense, it invites the State to identify the alleged barriers, including the figure of the reserved information, and to adopt the necessary measures so that these do not hinder access to information, as well as to provide the maximum amount of information in an ex officio manner, in accordance with the obligation of active transparency. Pending these advances, the IACHR considers that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance in the fulfillment of the recommendation

359. The IACHR reiterates that it is essential that the State identify the obstacles and limitations present in access to public information and, based on this prior diagnosis, adopt the necessary compliance measures. These may consist of the adoption of regulations or institutional strengthening tools to combat the obstacles identified.

Recommendation No. 50. To give its consent for a working visit by the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the IACHR, which would allow that Office to monitor and gather information directly on the situation of the right to freedom of expression in El Salvador.

360. For the 2023 follow-up report, the State expressed its willingness to facilitate the monitoring of the situation of the right to freedom of expression through the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE) of the IACHR, responding to written requests and holding dialogues. However, the State pointed out that conversations with different actors should not be limited to a physical space and that the visit is one more means of gathering information. The Commission invited the State to continue the dialogue and facilitate the collection of information in the field and concluded that the compliance with the recommendation remained pending.<sup>297</sup>

361. For the year 2024, the State indicated that it will maintain a dialogue with the Commission through the figure of the Presidential Commissioner for Human Rights and Freedom of Expression, including RELE. It indicated that it will maintain its permanent collaboration with the Commission and will generate opportunities for rapprochement in accordance with its national interests and priorities.<sup>298</sup>

Analysis and measures to advance in the implementation of the recommendation

362. The IACHR invites the State to continue a dialogue and to establish joint working mechanisms to identify information on the situation of the right to freedom of expression in El Salvador. In addition, it reiterates the importance of enabling spaces to gather information directly on site and to have conversations

IV. CONCLUSIONS

364. Full compliance with the IACHR's recommendations by OAS Member States is essential to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights in the region and to strengthen the effectiveness of the Inter-American Human Rights System. In the exercise of its mandate to follow up on these decisions, the Commission prepares reports in which it identifies the progress, challenges and setbacks in the adoption of the compliance measures that, through its various working mechanisms, it has requested of the States.

365. This follow-up report analyzes the implementation of the recommendations that the Commission issued in its country report on the "Situation of Human Rights in El Salvador," approved by the IACHR on October 14, 2021.<sup>299</sup> The recommendations analyzed were formulated based on the findings and information obtained by the IACHR before, during and subsequent to its on-site visit carried out from December 2 to 4, 2019. These were addressed to the State to guide it in addressing structural human rights problems affecting the country that require a diligent response.

366. In the aforementioned country report, the IACHR included 50 recommendations on the following thematic areas: three related to citizen security; eight on memory, truth and justice; one on prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; one on the functioning of the Attorney General's Office; one on discrimination; seven on women; five on LGBTIQ+ persons; five on persons in the context of human mobility; five on persons deprived of liberty; two on behalf of human rights defenders; two on indigenous peoples and Afro-descendants; seven on ESCR; and three on freedom of expression.

367. After the publication of the country report, the IACHR prepared two follow-up reports on these recommendations through chapters V of its annual reports corresponding to the years 2022<sup>300</sup> and 2023.<sup>301</sup> This follow-up report is the third to be published in relation to 38 recommendations out of the 50 issued and excludes follow-up on twelve of these decisions, namely:

<sup>299</sup> IACHR, Country Report "Situation of Human Rights in El Salvador", OEA/Ser.L/V/II Doc.278/21, October 14, 2021.

- three on citizen security<sup>302</sup> and five on the rights of persons deprived of liberty<sup>303</sup> considering that, during the year 2024, the IACHR published two reports that have an impact on this follow-up.<sup>304</sup>
- four additional recommendations, namely one on women, one on people in the context of mobility and two on ESCR, due to the fact that in previous years it declared the cessation of its follow-up.<sup>305</sup>

368. Based on the General Guidelines for Follow-up on IACHR Recommendations and Decisions, this follow-up report identifies the compliance measures adopted, progress made, and challenges regarding the implementation of the recommendations analyzed.<sup>306</sup> For its preparation, the IACHR received information both from the State of El Salvador and from some civil society organizations. In addition, it relied on the relevant information it has learned through its monitoring of the human rights situation in the country. For each recommendation, the Commission culminated its diagnosis by indicating the specific information that the State has not yet submitted or the measures that have yet to be adopted to determine progress in the level of compliance with the recommendation.

369. For this follow-up report, the Commission concluded that, of the 38 recommendations analyzed, one has a level of total compliance (3%); 4 have a level of substantial partial compliance (10%); 19 are partially compliant (50%), and 14 are pending compliance (37%). In addition, it determined that, for the year 2024, five of these decisions had a change in their level of compliance, namely, recommendation number 7 advanced from pending to partial compliance; recommendation number 19 from substantial partial to full compliance; recommendation number 36 from partial to substantial partial; and recommendation number 46 from pending to partial. In addition, two recommendations, numbers 17 and 29, regressed in their level of compliance from substantial partial to partial. The IACHR reiterates to the State the importance of effectively complying with the recommendations that have not been fully complied with. Below are the main findings of the IACHR regarding compliance with the recommendations, according to the following thematic areas.

370. Regarding the recommendations on memory, truth and justice:

- The adoption of a National Reconciliation Law on transitional justice is still pending. Its elaboration should be speedy, participatory and consider contributions from victims and civil society (recommendation number 4).
- There has not been a significant increase in the number of cases prosecuted for serious human rights violations perpetrated during the armed conflict. A substantial partial level of compliance will be assessed when most of these facts are in the stage of prosecution and punishment (recommendation number 5).
- Ratification of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons, the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity (recommendation 6) is pending.
- The Ministry of National Defense reported partial measures to systematize the documentation of the security forces that acted during the armed conflict and progress was made in a cooperation agreement between the national search commissions and the Supreme Court of Justice. However, there is a lack of actions on access to this documentation and for the reconstruction of destroyed archives or documents not generated that legally should have been produced (recommendation number 7).

- There are partial measures on the adoption of the regulatory framework of the national policy for the search for persons, although the issuance of a law on the disappearance of persons and regulation of the national data bank, exhumation processes and the rights of family members are pending. Also, the project "Improvement in the identification and Closure for Missing Persons" , which will seek to implement a genetic profile bank, was valued (recommendation number 8).
- It is important for the State to have a specific diagnosis to identify whether the functional load of the CNB, CONABÚSQUEDA and the IML can be adequately developed with the budget and resources at its disposal (recommendation number 9).
- Despite the relevance of Executive Decree No. 204 of 2013, this measure does not supplement a state reparation policy that contemplates the different impacts suffered by the victims, in accordance with Inter-American human rights standards; the adoption of this policy remains pending (recommendation number 10).
- The CNB and CONBÚSQUEDA continue to offer some reparation measures with the scope of satisfaction that allow the participation of family members, civil society, national and international organizations and state entities. However, it is important to increase state efforts to open spaces for listening to the victims, guaranteeing their real and effective inclusion (recommendation 11).

371. Regarding recommendation number 16 on the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the report identified that the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on this matter is still pending, as well as the creation of the National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture. Regarding recommendation number 17 related to the functioning of the State Attorney General's Office, it determined a setback in its level of compliance based on information received indicating a decrease in the budget allocated to the entity. Regarding recommendation number 26 on non-discrimination, it noted that the ratification of the Convention against all Forms of Discrimination and Intolerance is still pending.

372. On the recommendations related to women's issues:

- A technical diagnosis is needed to determine whether or not there is still a need to strengthen the system for monitoring protection measures and to increase resources for the network of shelters, as well as to adopt the measures indicated by its findings (recommendation number 18).
- The IACHR reported the continuity of training for State officials, particularly justice operators, on the gender perspective and Inter-American standards on gender-based violence and discrimination. The IACHR declared that it will no longer monitor this recommendation, although it urged the State to maintain the continuity, obligatory nature and gender perspective of these training measures for civil servants. (recommendation number 19).
- Efforts continue to be made to strengthen the specialized courts for a life free of violence and discrimination, and to reduce congestion levels. However, the effectiveness of measures to strengthen these judicial instances should be monitored and measures to clarify the competencies of justices of the peace, family and specialized courts should be reinforced (recommendation number 21).
- There is no clear information on whether, at this time, there are women with prison sentences for aggravated homicide based on facts related to obstetric emergencies or complications and whether sufficient measures have been taken to review all of these cases (recommendation number 22).

- The absolute criminalization of voluntary termination of pregnancy persists even when its denial in certain circumstances imposes a disproportionate burden on the exercise of women's rights, creates a context that facilitates unsafe abortions, and disregards international obligations to respect, protect and guarantee their rights to life, health and integrity (recommendation number 23).
- Ratification of ILO Conventions 177 and 189 is still pending, and protection measures are urgently needed for women working in the textile industry, especially in maquilas and in the home-based sector, as well as for domestic service workers (recommendation number 24).

373. On the recommendations related to LGBTI persons:

- The Gender Identity Law has not been adopted to recognize not only the change of name and image in identity documents, but also the rectification of the sex marker in identity documents, including birth certificates and passports (recommendation number 27).
- Beyond isolated actions, it is necessary to advance, in a specific and focused manner, in the adoption of a comprehensive plan to protect and guarantee the rights of LGBTI people, including access to justice, health and employment (recommendation number 28).
- Training activities on the human rights of LGBTIQ+ persons were reported for civil servants of different executive entities, the PGR, the PPDH, the Judicial Branch, the National Civil Police, the FGR, the Salvadoran Social Security Institute, the ISDEMU, municipalities, hospitals, among others, although not all correspond to the year 2024. However, there are concerns about the impact that an exclusionary State agenda on issues of sexual orientation and gender identity could have on the specific content of the training programs provided to civil servants (recommendation number 29).
- The adoption of data related to acts of violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons in the country complying with specific characteristics, namely, that they be (i) statistical, (ii) public, (iii) periodically updated, (iv) duly disaggregated, is important (recommendation number 30).
- It is necessary to emphasize the strengthening of an inter-institutional action plan between the entities that make up the Public Prosecutor's Office and the executive entities that are relevant to strengthening access to justice for LGBTI persons (recommendation number 31).

374. Regarding the recommendations related to the issue of people in the context of human mobility:

- The creation of the National Action Plan with commitments for the operationalization of the protection of forcibly displaced persons and refugees in the areas of protection, health, education and employment was valued, although a comprehensive regulatory framework on forced displacement with durable solutions is needed, within the framework of the implementation of the MIRPS (recommendation number 32).
- Progress was made in the collection of samples for the Forensic Data Bank of Missing Migrants, as well as participation in MAEBI and the CONABÚSQUEDA mission to Honduras. However, information is needed on their results and other strengthening actions, specifying how, in practice, transnational coordination in the search for migrants has been optimized (recommendation number 34).
- The relevance of assistance and protection actions for internally displaced persons, the program "My First Job" on labor inclusion of displaced youth and the support spaces "At your side" were recognized. Also, the persistence of obstacles in guaranteeing and respecting the human rights of internally displaced persons was identified, which requires the strengthening of comprehensive programs (recommendation number 35).

- The information on the development of the Human Mobility Policy and its implementation in 2023, as well as the construction of the National Plan for the Reintegration of Returned Persons 2025-2029 was positively valued, and it was considered that it is important to establish special mechanisms on its internal evaluation and identification of results (recommendation number 36).

375. Regarding the recommendations on human rights defenders, the report identifies the importance of a legal framework for the protection and defense of human rights defenders and a comprehensive protection policy in their favor (recommendation number 37), as well as shortcomings in the investigation and institutional strengthening for the prosecution and punishment of those materially and intellectually responsible for crimes against human rights defenders (recommendation 38).

376. In relation to the recommendations regarding indigenous peoples and persons of African descent, the follow-up report welcomed the conduct of censuses that made it possible to update statistical data on indigenous peoples and Afro-descendants, requesting details on the methodology applied and whether there was consultation and participation of the populations in question (recommendation 46). In addition, ratification of the Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination and Related Intolerance and Convention 169 of the International Labor Organization on Indigenous and Tribal Peoples is still pending (recommendation 47).

377. Regarding the recommendations on economic, social, cultural and environmental rights, this follow-up report:

- Values the adoption of the El Salvador Economic Plan and the exoneration of the water resources canon for water boards and community organizations that provide water distribution services for human consumption. It also stressed the importance of strengthening the National Environmental Policy to guarantee human rights in the face of extractivist activities (recommendation 39).
- Identifies the curriculum renewal process "Mi Nueva Escuela" as a relevant compliance measure that should be implemented at all educational levels. In addition, it took note of the allegations made by civil society regarding the lack of inclusion of content related to the rights of LGBTIQ+ persons (recommendation 40).
- Notes the adoption of guidelines so that (i) water management policies consider the needs of rural and indigenous populations and (ii) water supply activities apply the coefficient based on the social interest or purpose of its use and exploitation for cultivation or food production or generation of public electricity. In addition, it reiterated challenges to ensure that use permits and agreements with companies on water resources do not jeopardize the effective realization of the human right to water and the importance of drafting the General Regulations of the LGRH (recommendation 41).
- Recognizes relevant actions in the management of transboundary waters, although it reiterated that actions are required to promote the adoption of a cooperation treaty with Honduras that would allow for coordinated action in the face of various challenges in this area. It also requested information on the functioning of the International Watercourse Management Committee referred to in the LGRH and on its efforts to negotiate and adopt agreements on the integrated and sustainable management of shared transboundary water basins (recommendation 42).
- Notes that ratification of the Regional Agreement on Access to Information, Public Participation and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters in Latin America and the Caribbean or "Escazú Agreement" (recommendation 43) is still pending.

378. Regarding the recommendations related to freedom of expression, this follow-up report:

- Highlights the need for practical compliance measures that demonstrate due attention and proper investigation of facts that impede a safe working environment for journalism and media independence. It notes the concern with the alleged prevalence of a systematic refusal to investigate acts of espionage against journalists and calls for them to be addressed diligently. In addition, it requests information on the content and results of the actions reported by SIGET regarding the democratization in the allocation of frequencies and does not identify actions on the application of international standards of public media to the operation of state media (recommendation number 48).
- Indicates the importance of promoting actions that, in a context of shortcomings in access to public information, demonstrate an unequivocal strategy and intention of the State to guarantee the right of access to public information. In addition, it reiterates its concern regarding allegations of limitations to the right of access to information (recommendation number 49).
- Invites the State to continue a dialogue and to establish joint working mechanisms to identify information on the situation of the right to freedom of expression in El Salvador (recommendation number 50).

379. Finally, the Commission is grateful for the information provided by both the State and civil society organizations for the preparation of this follow-up report. It also reiterates its willingness to provide technical assistance to promote the implementation of the recommendations analyzed, in accordance with applicable Inter-American standards.

PARTIAL REASONED VOTE OF COMMISSIONER CARLOS BERNAL PULIDO ON CHAPTER V EL SALVADOR OF THE 2024 ANNUAL REPORT

With all due respect for my colleagues and in accordance with Article 19.1 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights ("the Commission" or "the IACHR"), I hereby submit a partial reasoned vote on certain points raised by the majority of the plenary of the Commission in Chapter V on the State of El Salvador ("the Chapter" or "Chapter V-El Salvador") of the 2024 Annual Report (the "Report" or the "Annual Report").

I emphasize the relevance of this chapter of the annual report for the observance and guaranteeing of human rights in the region. Nevertheless, in this explanation of my vote I will analyze, in particular, references made in the Chapter to sexual and reproductive rights, abortion, gender identity, comprehensive sexual education, and use of language.

In particular, I will state that Chapter V: (i) contains considerations that pose a risk to pregnant women and ignore the comprehensive needs of women; (ii) non-existence of an obligation to guarantee the rectification of the sex marker on identity documents for persons who identify as transgender; and (iii) contains problematic considerations regarding measures taken by the State in connection with comprehensive sex education for children and adolescents.

1. Chapter V contains considerations that pose a risk to pregnant women and ignore women's comprehensive needs (necesidades integrales de las mujeres)

Next, I will address the following issues: (i) the non-existence of the right to abortion and the extent to which the state may regulate this matter (margen de configuración estatal); (ii) the lack of protection of the unborn; (iii) the violation of the principle of subsidiarity and lack of protection of the unborn in relation to so-called obstetric emergencies; and (iv) inaccuracies/lack of precision of the Report with respect to considerations on special protection measures granted by the State to pregnant women.

1.1. Non-existence of the right to abortion and state leeway with respect to the criminalization of abortion

In paragraph 161, the majority of the Commission stated that "However, the IACHR reiterates the considerations expressed in 2022 and 2023, in the sense of observing that the absolute criminalization of voluntary termination of pregnancy persists even when, as it has stated, its denial in certain circumstances imposes a disproportionate burden on the exercise of women's rights, creates a context that facilitates unsafe abortions, and disregards the international obligations to respect, protect, and guarantee their rights to life, health and integrity."

In addition, paragraphs 164 and 165 stated that:

"164. Regarding the State's request to limit this recommendation to the adaptation of protocols requested by the I/A Court H.R. as a guarantee of non-repetition in the case of Beatriz et al. v. El Salvador, the IACHR clarifies that the measures requested by the Court are in response to the declaration of international responsibility in a specific case. For its part, the recommendation of the 2021 Country Report under follow-up refers to the adaptation of the Salvadoran regulatory framework in accordance with all applicable inter-American standards, and considering the findings and concerns that were pointed out at the time, namely:

(i) That "at least 36 women had reportedly died from preventable chronic diseases and another 13 from ectopic pregnancies", which could have been prevented if the women had had the possibility of legally terminating their unsafe pregnancies;

(ii) That the prevalence of discriminatory gender patterns limits education on the subject and access to and distribution of contraceptives, particularly to women, girls and adolescents, and that, although emergency oral contraception is legal for women victims of sexual violence, it is reportedly being distributed at the discretion of health operators.

(iii) That the IACHR has reiterated its concern about the regulations that criminalize abortion in all circumstances in El Salvador

165. Considering that this recommendation requires the adaptation of the existing regulatory framework to all applicable inter-American standards, and that no regulatory adaptation measures have been identified to remedy the restrictions to access, without discrimination, of women, girls and adolescents to sexual and reproductive health services, the IACHR concludes that compliance with this recommendation is still pending."

First, as I did regarding the 2022 and 2023 reports, I reiterate that there are no binding sources in international law -and especially in the American Convention or other treaties that make up the inter-American system- that contemplate (i) the so-called right to abortion or (ii) a corresponding obligation for states to provide abortion services. That said, states have ample leeway - by virtue of the principles of subsidiarity or complementarity and representative democracy - to take measures to protect the life of the unborn child - which is indeed protected by the American Convention<sup>307</sup>- including, although it is not the only means, the use of criminal law.

Regarding the non-existence of the right to abortion, former I/A Court H.R. Judge Eduardo Vio Grossi established in his opinion partially dissenting from the judgment in the case of Manuela et al. v. El Salvador:

"In this regard, it is indisputable that (...) there is no inter-American or international legal norm, whether conventional, international custom, or general principle of law, that recognizes abortion as a right. There are only resolutions of international bodies, most of which are made up of international officials and not representatives of States: decisions which, in addition to not being binding, are not interpretative of current international law but rather reflect aspirations for it to change in the direction they suggest."<sup>308</sup>

In fact, in the case of Beatriz v. El Salvador in which the supposed existence of a "right to abortion" was alleged by the IACHR and the victims' representation, it is worth noting that, in the judgment, the Court did not establish the existence of such a right.<sup>309</sup> This is further evidence of the non-existence of a binding legal source from which an alleged right to abortion is derived.

That said, I emphasize that this leeway derived from the non-existence of a right to abortion and the convergence of competing rights is increased thanks to the fact that it is incumbent upon States to define punishable conducts and their consequences, and to the automatic referral made, according to the I/A Court H.R., by Article 7.2 of the American Convention to domestic law in matters related to deprivation of liberty - legal exception principle (principio de reserva de ley)-.<sup>310</sup>

In addition, I also emphasize that the sections in which such assessments are formulated are not such as to prove unequivocally the existence, in the inter-American System, of a clear and binding parameter that could serve as a basis for rejecting the models of criminalization of abortion as negative. The conventional parameter that does exist and that is mandatory is Article 4 of the ACHR which, as I have said on other occasions, contemplates protection of the right to life from conception and demands the existence of regulatory frameworks that do not leave pregnant women devoid of all protection.

This is relevant if one bears in mind that, based on a close reading of Articles 31, 76, and 77 of the American Convention, it is only through consensus -- provided by the States signing and ratifying amendments or treaties -- that international obligations can arise that are in addition to those already contemplated in the ACHR.

Thus, I conclude that, in the absence of a right to abortion in the inter-American human rights system (IHRS) and given the absence of clear rules regarding criminalization models, States have considerable leeway in this regard.

Likewise, I emphasize that the Report did not substantiate the claim that the prohibition of abortion leads to the consequences mentioned, or why it is an absolute prohibition in the State of El Salvador.

1.2. Lack of protection for the unborn in the Report

Secondly, I emphasize that references to abortion ignore the other person whose right to life is also protected by conventions: the unborn person. Thus, they ignore the necessary balance that must exist between competing rights of all internationally protected persons. In this regard, it should be noted that pregnant women are also subjects of law and holders of the right to life. A pronouncement on abortion always implies a position on a practice that necessarily implies the termination of the life of a dignified human being and that Article 4 of the ACHR protects, so it is necessary to expressly recognize the rights of the unborn person as part of the weighing up of considerations required in any case of abortion.

In this regard, Article 1.2 of the ACHR clearly establishes that, for the purposes of the Convention, a "person" is every human being.<sup>311</sup> Thus, in light of the Convention, human rights are not only recognized for persons who have already been born, but must be protected for all individuals from conception, who are to be considered human beings. Moreover, the I/A Court H.R. itself, in its advisory opinion 22, indicated that, unquestionably, the term "person" is equivalent to the term "human being" for the purposes of the ACHR.<sup>312</sup>

In light of the above, it is clear that the unborn person (persona en gestación) is a human being.<sup>313</sup> Furthermore, the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights states that "the human genome underlies the fundamental unity of all members of the human family, as well as the recognition of their inherent dignity and diversity. In a symbolic sense, it is the heritage of humanity."<sup>314</sup>

The consequence of recognizing the unborn as a person/human being is that he/she becomes a holder of rights. Thus, the ACHR establishes in its articles on rights the formula "Every person (...)"<sup>315</sup> Likewise, the instruments for the protection of human rights generally recognize the ownership of rights by members of the human species, especially the right to life.<sup>316</sup>

Furthermore, in the Artavia Murillo judgment, the I/A Court H.R. determined that "the protection of the right to life is not absolute, but gradual and incremental as the development of the fetus progresses." This implies that, irrespective of the concepts of gradualness and incrementality (with which I take issue), the Court has already established that persons in gestation must be protected by the State in their "right to life." In the same vein, in the Cuscul Pivaral case,<sup>317</sup> the I/ A Court H.R. applied the ACHR to a fetus (persona en gestación) and also applied Article 19 of the ACHR, thus recognizing the legal status of the fetus as a child.

In the same vein, I emphasize that the preamble of the Convention on the Rights of the Child states that the child needs protection and care both before and after birth.<sup>318</sup> This implies that in light of the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the unborn child is a child in need of special care. This was reiterated in the preparatory work for the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.<sup>319</sup>

1.3. Inadequate approach to the use of contraceptive methods

Paragraph 164 included the following:

"ii) That the prevalence of discriminatory gender stereotypes limits education on the subject and access to and distribution of contraceptives, particularly to women, girls and adolescents, and that, although the emergency oral contraceptive is legal for women victims of sexual violence, it is being distributed at the discretion of health operators."

In this regard, I emphasize that it is not enough that the use of contraceptive methods be approved to guarantee women's sexual and reproductive rights, but that these measures must be accompanied by education and awareness-raising measures on the use of contraceptive methods in general, information on the specific physical effects they entail, and their impact on the right to health. I emphasize that freedom in decision making is not limited to the provision of options. True freedom comes when sufficient information is provided to make decisions.

In this regard, the World Health Organization has indicated that the choice of contraceptive methods will depend on "the person's general state of health", among other criteria.<sup>320</sup> This is important, since it shows that not every method is suitable for every person and that, in this context, the supply of such methods may represent a health risk in specific cases. Thus, it is essential that people receive adequate guidance on existing contraceptive methods so that they can make an informed choice of the most appropriate option for them.

Only with proper guidance can it be guaranteed that people who use contraceptive methods give their informed consent, an essential guarantee that derives from the text of the Convention.<sup>321</sup> With respect to informed consent, the Inter-American Court has stated that:

"the concept of informed consent consists in a prior decision to accept or to submit to a medical act in the broadest sense, which has been freely obtained – in other words, without threats or coercion, improper induction or incentives – and given after obtaining adequate, complete, reliable, comprehensible and accessible information, provided that this information has really been understood, which would allow the individual to give their full consent. Informed consent is the positive decision to submit to a medical act resulting from a decision process, or prior, free and Therefore, States must implement appropriate health policies that allow it to provide assistance with suitably qualified personnel during births; policies to prevent maternal mortality by providing adequate prenatal and postpartum controls, and legal and administrative instruments relating to health policies that record cases of maternal mortality adequately. The Court has also recognized that, under Article 19 of the Convention, the State must assume its special position of guarantor with greater care and responsibility and take special measures focused on the principle of the best interest of the child."

informed choice, which constitutes a two-way mechanism of interaction in the physician-patient relationship.”<sup>322</sup>

In relation to this, in the case of I.V v. Bolivia, the Court criticized the fact that the victim never had the possibility of knowing and weighing up alternative contraceptive methods.<sup>323</sup> In this case, the I/A Court H.R. emphasized the importance of people having the necessary data to make an informed decision. In this framework, the Court highlighted the importance of free choice of addressing the effects or impacts of the method.<sup>324</sup>

Thus, the autonomy of individuals in the choice of contraceptive methods can only be guaranteed when they have the capacity to consent to their use or non-use based on the necessary information.

1.4. Obstetric emergencies: violation of the principle of subsidiarity and lack of protection of the unborn child

In paragraphs 141 to 152, the Commission reiterated the recommendation in which it asked El Salvador to review cases of women sentenced to severe prison sentences for aggravated homicide, related to alleged obstetric emergencies or complications, and to give priority to processing ongoing requests for commutation of sentences. In particular, in paragraph 151, it stated:

"Likewise, the IACHR recalls that this recommendation was issued in response to the Commission's repeated concern, based on a series of data, testimonies, and cases it heard about in connection with its on-site visit, regarding a context of criminalization of women for the crime of homicide, with the common denominator that the facts they were accused of were related to obstetric complications. For the IACHR, it is important to have access to specific official information submitted by the State to understand whether this context persists and whether the requested review measures have been adopted to remedy it. Based on the information it received, the Commission finds that compliance with this recommendation has been partial."

In this regard, I reiterate that I fully agree that the State should not condemn women for obstetric emergencies or complications. What I disagree with is that a body such as the Commission should interfere in an intense manner in national criminal proceedings and decisions, without sufficient factual and legal grounds for doing so, and, moreover, through considerations that place the right to life of newborn children in serious danger.

First, I am concerned about this recommendation because (i) it disregards the principle of subsidiarity, and (ii) it paints a picture of illegitimacy with respect to all convictions imposed by the State in these cases -even when they may be properly substantiated-.

Logically, the majority's rejection of the sentences imposed leads to the need to revoke those sentences. That is, it implies a pronouncement by which the majority position seeks to replace the national authority and considers that the persons convicted in the cases did not commit the crimes envisaged in domestic law, and therefore the State should not individualize or enforce any penalty against them. Therefore, the majority position far exceeded the limits on the inter-American Commission's sphere of confidence. In effect, the Commission acted like a fourth criminal instance, without any type of motivation and in a scenario in which such an assessment is not appropriate.

<sup>324</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case I.V. v. Bolivia. Preliminary Objections, Merits, Reparations, and Costs. Judgment of November 30, 2016. Series C No. 329.

In this regard, the jurisprudence of the I/A Court H.R. recognizes that not even this Court, as the highest authority of the regional human rights system, can replace the national authority in assigning individual punishments for crimes envisaged under domestic law.<sup>325</sup>

This erroneous position with which I take issue not only resulted in a manifest violation of the principle of subsidiarity or complementarity, but also severely jeopardized the legal right to life of newborn children. If the convicted persons really committed crimes, then the majority's rejection of those convictions would constitute a disastrous precedent of denying protection of human life.

As on other occasions, I recall that the State has a particular duty to protect the rights of children. From this duty derives the international obligation to investigate, prosecute, and punish human rights violations against children.<sup>326</sup> This is a consideration that must be taken into account in the analysis of these cases, where there are serious concerns about the arbitrary deprivation of life of newborns.

1.5. Inaccuracies/lack of precision with respect to special protection measures granted by the State to pregnant women

Paragraph 162 stated that:

"In addition, since 2022, the IACHR has ascertained that measures such as the Nacer con Cariño Law, PIEGS, or the Crecer Juntos Law prioritize maternity protection, establishing a distinction in the protection and guaranteeing the right to reproductive health, depending on whether a pregnancy continues or not. In this regard, the IACHR considers that there are still restrictions in the regulatory framework and in health policies that hinder the access of women, girls, and adolescents to sexual and reproductive health services without discrimination. In this regard, the IACHR reiterates that States have the obligation to provide medical care without discrimination, which implies that under no circumstances may conditions be imposed on the provision of medical care for women who require it."

The report did not clearly state how exactly these measures prioritize maternity, and how this approach could be discriminatory. The protection of pregnant women, in certain contexts, implies a differentiated treatment for them, guaranteeing that they receive adequate and reinforced medical care, taking into account both their well-being and that of the fetus (persona en gestación). It is important to emphasize that prioritizing maternity protection should not, in principle, be considered a discriminatory act. On the contrary, pregnant women require special protection measures<sup>327</sup> and are entitled to receive them from the State<sup>328</sup>, as this is essential for their health and that of their child. In this regard, with regard to the prioritization of protection, I reiterate to the Commission that not all unequal treatment is discriminatory.<sup>329</sup> The distinction discussed in this case must be analyzed in light of criteria of reasonableness and proportionality, and not just taken for granted.

2. No obligation to guarantee the rectification of the sex marker on identity documents for persons who identify as transgender

Paragraph 182 of the report states "the IACHR reiterates the importance of the State adopting a gender identity law that recognizes not only the change of name and image in identity documents, but also the rectification of the sex marker in identity documents, including birth certificates and passports." This is reiterated in paragraph 367 of the recommendations. In this regard, I reiterate that the American Convention does not expressly contemplate a right to gender identity, nor is there a binding instrument in the inter-American system that establishes an obligation to adapt identification documents to gender identity.

As I have indicated, recognizing new rights that are not in the Convention through an interpretation that does not follow the procedures established in the Convention itself would undermine Articles 31, 76, and 77, ignoring the original will of the States that ratified the Convention.

Therefore, any pronouncement in which any of the organs of the IHRS applies a right that is not established in the binding instruments of international law that govern its activity will be an act violating the literal meaning of the American Convention and will exceed the scope of the competencies of the IACHR or the I/A Court H.R., as the case may be. Such an irregular constitutive act would also undermine the principles of good faith and pacta sunt servanda.<sup>330</sup>

In light of the above, given that there is no right under the Convention to gender identity that is binding on States, it is possible to affirm that there are no correlative obligations to recognize this right either.

On the other hand, although I am not unaware that OC-24/17 asserted the existence of the so-called "right to gender identity" and a supposed obligation to adapt identification documents to gender identity in the terms indicated in this Chapter, I emphasize that the Advisory Opinions of the I/A Court H.R. are not entitled to contemplate rights or obligations other than those expressly contemplated by the American Convention.<sup>331</sup>

In this regard, first, Article 68 of the Convention is clear in stating that the States are obliged to comply with the decisions rendered by the Court, "in any case in which they are parties." This provision is important in that (i) it is the only one that refers to the legal value of the Tribunal's pronouncements and (ii) it expressly limits the binding nature of those pronouncements to the States party to a case, thus limiting the addressee of the obligations -the State party to a case- and the context in which the pronouncement is issued -that is, litigation-. This position has also been supported by some exponents of legal doctrine (sectores de la doctrina), also based on the principle of State consent as the basis of conventional law.<sup>332</sup>

Secondly, specifically regarding OC-24/17, consideration should be given to Article 64 of the ACHR, which limits the competence of the Court to issue advisory opinions regarding the Convention or treaties of the inter-American system. Thus, given that OC-24/17 establishes alleged rights not contemplated in the ACHR, nor in any other treaty of the ISHR, their binding nature is even more questionable.

Thirdly, to derive obligations or so-called rights not contemplated in the Convention, based exclusively on an advisory opinion, would contravene the principle of pacta sunt servanda that governs international treaty law, by virtue of which States are only bound to comply with that to which they have expressed their consent.<sup>333</sup>

Fourth, although the I/A Court H.R. has affirmed that advisory opinions are parameters of conventionality control,<sup>334</sup> I emphasize that an open and transparent inter-American dialogue is still needed to further discuss this position, which is not expressly derived from the American Convention, or any other international instrument that is binding upon States. I call attention to the fact that there is still no consensus regarding this matter, either in the States of the region or in academic circles; for that reason, important constitutional courts still refrain from invoking the notion of conventionality control and from incorporating advisory opinions as a parameter.<sup>335</sup>

Finally, I note that some authors have indicated that broadening the effects of advisory opinions could facilitate distortions in the way the inter-American system operates and, thus, weaken it, since (i) it entails equating decisions issued as part of the Court's advisory functions with the text of the convention itself,<sup>336</sup> and (ii) it blurs the differences between the jurisdictional and advisory functions of the Court. Some have even pointed out that these interpretations by the Court generate legal uncertainty, since there is no certainty as to the effects associated with the issuance of advisory opinions.<sup>337</sup>

On the contrary, as I have stated in previous explanations of my votes, gender identity, based on self-determination or self-perception, poses serious risks to the rights of individuals, in general, and, in particular, to population groups with special inter-American protection, such as women. Insisting that States change even the sex markers on identity documents increases these risks, as it completely dilutes gender differentiation and hampers implementation of affirmative measures for women.

The Commission must deliberate deeply on this matter, from a human rights perspective and with a differential approach, in order not to harm or frustrate affirmative measures in favor of women or other population groups with special inter-American protection.

If it is enough for a person to state that he/she perceives herself as a woman for the State to automatically recognize her as such, without any additional regulation or reasonable requirement, affirmative measures in favor of women will most likely lose their effectiveness, and the States will end up erasing the very identity of women and of any other population group.

On this, the then Judge Elizabeth Odio Benito was clear, explaining that:

"[...] the central subject of feminism (and, in this case, of violence against women because they are women) is women and the specific oppression they suffer, its origin and impact. If we confuse the feminist struggle and replace the subject of feminism, if the subject of feminism ceases to be the biological woman but rather a strange and confusing variable of subjective identities, we must consider and prepare to deal with the more than foreseeable negative impact it would have on decades of feminist struggle and theory. And not only feminism would disappear, but also the theory of human rights, which is also based not on feelings or self-perceptions, but on objective and scientific categories. Thus, one might ask: if sex, a material and scientific category, disappears, absorbed by "gender identity", an individual subjective perception, what would gender-based violence be based on? And what is the female sex reduced to? How would rape and other crimes of sexual violence against women be documented? How would the violence suffered by trans people be documented if the change of sex is something confidential that cannot be documented? What about wage differentials? What about discrimination in access to education at all levels, formal and informal? There are many, many more questions. But these few are enough to show the chaos and the regression we are facing."<sup>338</sup>

I take advantage of the considerations of then Judge Elizabeth Odio Benito to insist on the defense of the value that exists in being biologically female or male, which is not equivalent to reducing the identity of a person only to his or her biological sex.

Therefore, if international human rights law erases biological sex and measures with a differential approach based precisely on the criterion of biological sex, it would deprive the protection of population groups such as women of any rational basis. If the majority position is maintained in the promotion of absolute legal recognition of self-perceived or self-determined gender identity, it will hinder -if not nullify- the effectiveness of countless special protection measures.

3. Considerations regarding measures taken by the State in relation to comprehensive sex education for children and adolescents

Paragraphs 116 and 202 of the report indicate:

"In addition to the above, civil society organizations reported to the Commission information regarding the following facts:

- That, on February 22, 2024, the President of the Republic stated in an interview conducted by the director of the organization Moms for Liberty that a gender ideology is prohibited in El Salvador, due to its promotion of "unnatural, anti-god, and anti-family" ideas in education. In addition, according to the organizations, the president stated that these ideologies would not be allowed in schools and colleges and that it is also important that the curriculum does not include gender ideology. In this regard, the Commission was told about a video in which the President makes these statements.
- That the Ministry of Education issued a memorandum on February 28, 2024 in which it reportedly requested that materials and contents related to "gender ideology" be banned from public schools. Persons contravening this ban would be subject to punishment or dismissal. Regarding this specific allegation, the IACHR was also informed about a tweet published on February 27, 2024 by the Minister of Education of El Salvador, explicitly announcing the elimination of "any use or trace of gender ideology from public schools."

In the same vein, paragraph 186 stated: "Likewise, civil society told the Commission that the current Government had reportedly decided not to go ahead with the plan indicated in the recommendation, given that more than 300 people from the Secretariat of Culture had reportedly been dismissed for allegedly promoting agendas incompatible with its vision and that material on sexual and reproductive health had been removed from the curricula, which no longer addressed topics relating to gender violence and sexual orientation. According to this information, the main challenge for recognition of rights of the LGBTIQ+ population is the approval of a Gender Identity Law, which would allow legal reforms to guarantee basic rights without discrimination."

Finally, paragraph 305 included the following: "Also, considering the allegations made by civil society regarding the lack of inclusion of content related to the rights of LGBTIQ+ persons, the Commission requests specific information to explain whether this reform process ensures the inclusion of the inter-American standards aimed at preventing any type of discrimination or violence against these persons, based on their sexual orientation and gender identity or expression. In addition, it invites the State to specify, where applicable, the scope of the material or the prohibition of what the authorities have called "gender ideology." This is reiterated in paragraphs 302 and 380.

In this regard, I will make reference to the fact that with these considerations: (i) the IACHR jeopardizes the duty to protect the best interests of children and adolescents and to avoid hypersexualization and (ii) the IACHR omitted the right of parents to choose the education of their children.

3.1. The IACHR jeopardizes the duty to protect the best interests of children and adolescents and to prevent hypersexualization

With these considerations, the majority of the Commission's members failed to consider a risk that derives from its considerations on comprehensive sex education (CSE) for the best interests of children and adolescents: hypersexualization.

The IACHR failed to mention that the best interests of children and adolescents is a guiding principle that should govern all state actions. Indeed, this principle is enshrined in binding instruments of the Universal Human Rights System (UHRS), the Inter-American Human Rights System (IAHRS), and the European Human Rights System (EHRS).

In the UHRS, the best interests of the child are enshrined in the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW). Indeed, the CRC states in Article 3.1 that "[i]n all actions concerning children, whether undertaken by public or private social welfare institutions, courts of law, administrative authorities or legislative bodies, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration." and the CEDAW, in Article 5.b, enshrines the obligation of States parties to "ensure that family education includes a proper understanding of maternity as a social function and the recognition of the common responsibility of men and women in the upbringing and development of their children, it being understood that the interest of the children is the primordial consideration in all cases."

In the inter-American system, the American Convention on Human Rights establishes that "[e]very minor child has the right to the measures of protection required by his condition as a minor on the part of his family, society, and the state."

This principle has been extensively developed by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in General Comment 14. In that Comment, the Committee held that the best interests of the child is an umbrella term that encompasses three dimensions, namely: (i) a fundamental right of the child, (ii) a basic and interpretative principle and (iii) a procedural rule<sup>339</sup>.

Regarding the content of this principle, the Committee held that it implies that any action involving a child must consider the best interests of the child as a primary consideration.<sup>340</sup> Hence, according to the Committee, the application of this principle means that not only should the interests of the child be considered, but also that his or her interests should take precedence whenever they conflict with other principles or interests.

Accordingly, all public policies implemented by States within the framework of their functions must take into account the interests of children and adolescents as an essential consideration. As a public policy, Comprehensive Sexuality Education must also be governed by the best interests of the child.

In this regard, I would like to point out a growing concern regarding sex education policies, that is, the hypersexualization of children and adolescents. Hypersexualization represents a risk that disproportionately affects the childhood population. This has been recognized by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in General Comment 20, which states that "[t]he digital environment can also expose adolescents to risks, including (...) over-sexualization."<sup>341</sup> This has been reiterated by the Committee in several reports, in which it has stated that hypersexualization is a problem that must be addressed by the States, since it jeopardizes the rights of children and adolescents.<sup>342</sup>

<sup>341</sup> General Comment No. 20 (20) on the implementation of the rights of the child during adolescence,

<sup>342</sup> Consideration of the reports submitted by States parties under article 44 of the Convention. Fifth periodic reports of States parties due in 2012; Committee on the Rights of the Child. Combined fifth and sixth periodic reports submitted by the Plurinational State of Bolivia under article 44 of the Convention, due in 2015.

Sex education, therefore, should be a means to prevent the hypersexualization of children and adolescents<sup>343</sup> and not a mechanism to promote it. Consistent with this, the ECtHR has established that for sex education to be in keeping with the Convention, it must aim to provide children with correct, accurate, objective, and scientific knowledge on the subject, presented in an age-appropriate way.<sup>344</sup>

Complaints about the hypersexualization of educational materials have been filed all over the world; this calls for strict regulation by the States and vigilance and research in these matters.<sup>345</sup> In the United States, multiple bills have been introduced to establish the right of parents to know the education their children receive in matters such as gender identity.<sup>346</sup> In addition, many States have banned educational materials that include references contrary to the best interests of the child.<sup>347</sup>

3.2. The IACHR omitted parents' rights to choose their children's education

In its considerations, the IACHR completely omitted the right of parents to choose their children's education. In this regard, I draw attention to the wording of Article 12.4 of the ACHR, which states that "[p]arents or guardians, as the case may be, have the right to provide for the religious and moral education of their children or wards that is in accord with their own convictions." (Bold added).

The same guarantee has been provided for in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>348</sup>, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights<sup>349</sup>, the Convention on the Rights of the Child,<sup>350</sup> and the Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights.<sup>351</sup> According to the ECHR, the right of parents to choose their children's education, including sex education, is an aspect of the right to respect for private and family life protected by the ECHR.<sup>352</sup>

Thus, there is a consensus on the existence and recognition of this parental right. The Inter-American Commission has understood that the right of parents to choose the education of their children (i) must be interpreted in conjunction with the rights of children and adolescents, especially the right to education<sup>353</sup> and (ii) must respect the provisions of the inter-American instruments that establish that education must be oriented to train children to respect human rights, public freedoms, and tolerance.<sup>354</sup>

Of course, I agree with those criteria. However, it must not be forgotten that: (i) all types of education must be respectful of the best interests of children as a guiding principle, and (ii) the right of parents to choose the education of their children is derived from the right to education of children itself; therefore, there is a false dilemma in considering that these two rights are incompatible.

Thus, the ECtHR, in its interpretation of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1, has stated that<sup>355</sup> the right of parents to respect for their philosophical and religious convictions is based on the fundamental right to education. According to the European Court of Human Rights, although entitlement to this right rests with the parents, it also rests with the children, who have the right to education and teaching.<sup>356</sup>

Undoubtedly, this right affects sex education for children and adolescents because sex education, like any other type of education, must be framed within the scope of protection of conventional law, recognized by international human rights law, which grants parents the right to choose the education of their children, in accordance with Article 12.4 of the Convention. However, the Commission did not take this right into account in its report.

<sup>355</sup> The general principles enunciated by the ECtHR are mainly derived from the judgments handed down in the following cases: Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen and Pedersen v. Denmark (ECtHR 1976/5); Campbell and Cosans v. United Kingdom (ECtHR 1982/1); Valsamis v. Greece (ECtHR 1996, 70), and Folgero et al. v. Norway (ECtHR 2007/53).

FOLLOW-UP TO RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY THE IACHR IN ITS COUNTRY OR THEMATIC REPORTS

NINTH FOLLOW-UP REPORT ON RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY THE IACHR IN THE 2015 REPORT ON THE SITUATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN MEXICO<sup>1</sup>

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The purpose of this chapter is to follow up on the recommendations issued in the report "Situation of Human Rights in Mexico," approved on December 31, 2015 by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (hereinafter "Commission," "Inter-American Commission," or "IACHR") in compliance with Article 59(9) of its Rules of Procedure. In accordance with this provision, through Chapter V of its Annual Report, the Commission will follow up on the measures adopted to comply with the recommendations made in the Country Report. Through this monitoring, the main current problems identified in the field of human rights in the United Mexican States (hereinafter "Mexico", "Mexican State" or "State") are addressed. These are related to citizen insecurity and militarization, disappearances, torture, access to justice and impunity, the situation of freedom of expression, as well as the situation of particular groups.

2. At the invitation of Mexico, the IACHR conducted an on-site visit to the country between September 28 and October 3, 2015. The IACHR prepared the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Mexico (hereinafter "Country Report") with a series of recommendations to the Mexican State, drawing on the findings and information obtained before, during, and after the visit. The Country Report was based on the investigations carried out ex officio, the information provided by the State, the inputs from the different mechanisms through which the IACHR has followed up on the situation in the country, as well as journalistic articles, decisions, and recommendations of specialized international organizations, among others, in accordance with the provisions of Article 59, paragraph 5, of its Rules of Procedure.

3. During the years following the publication of the Country Report, the IACHR prepared follow-up reports on the recommendations, which were incorporated into Chapters V of the Commission's Annual Reports for the years between 2016 and 2023. These follow-up reports included, as appropriate, the observations submitted by the Mexican State and civil society.

4. For the preparation of this ninth follow-up report, in a communication sent on September 4, 2024, the IACHR asked the State to submit information on the compliance measures adopted in the last year on the recommendations contained in the Country Report. Mexico's response was received on September 30 and October 1 through the Inter-American SIMORE. The Commission appreciates and appreciates the information received which was included in this follow-up report. At the same time, the IACHR appreciates the information provided by civil society organizations.<sup>2</sup>

5. In accordance with Article 59(10) of its Rules of Procedure, on January 16, 2025, the IACHR transmitted the report to the State, which submitted its observations on February 15 and 28, 2025<sup>3</sup>, the pertinent parts of which were incorporated into the final version of this Report. This follow-up report was finally approved by the IACHR on March 19, 2025.

<sup>1</sup> In accordance with the provisions of Article 17.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner José Luis Caballero Ochoa, a Mexican national, did not participate in the discussion, investigation, deliberation, and approval of this report.

<sup>2</sup> The IACHR received information from the Agustín Pro Juárez Human Rights Center (Centro Prodh); the Foundation for Justice and the Democratic Rule of Law (FJEDD); Marisol Méndez Cruz, Jerónimo del Río and Fabienne Cabaret; Services and Advice for Peace (SERAPAZ); Idheas Strategic Litigation in Human Rights; and Ku'kay Organization.

6. This follow-up report is divided into 7 sections devoted to consideration of the most recent measures adopted by the State to comply with the Commission's recommendations, and the remaining challenges in terms of implementation. Compliance with the recommendations has been evaluated in accordance with the IACHR's General Guidelines for Follow-up on Recommendations and Decisions<sup>4</sup>. Each section refers to the recommendations issued by the IACHR, in accordance with its thematic axes. The report presents, first, a synthesis of the information known to the IACHR and its analysis in the latest follow-up report for 2023. After this summary, the report covers the information that has been known to the IACHR in 2024 through different sources, including the State and civil society organizations, as well as the information that the Commission has collected in monitoring the general human rights situation in the country.<sup>5</sup> The report then presents an analysis of the level of compliance and refers to the main progress and implementation challenges identified by the Commission, according to the information known during 2024. The analysis of each recommendation culminates with a diagnosis by the IACHR of the specific information that the State has not yet submitted or of the measures that remain to be adopted to determine progress in the level of compliance with the recommendation. Finally, the IACHR presents its conclusions regarding the progress and challenges in complying with the recommendations of the Country Report, as a whole.

II. FOLLOW-UP OF RECOMMENDATIONS

A. Citizen Security

Recommendation No. 1: Develop a concrete plan for the gradual withdrawal of the Armed Forces from public security tasks and for the recovery of these tasks by the civilian police.

7. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR received information that the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation (SCJN) invalidated the transfer of the powers of the National Guard (GN) to the Ministry of National Defense (SEDENA), stressing that the GN should be under civilian control in accordance with Article 21 of the Constitution. Despite this, the IACHR was informed by civil society organizations that, in practice, the GN was still under the control of SEDENA, and that the President of the Republic had expressed his intention to present a new constitutional initiative to assign the GN back to SEDENA; and stressed that the participation of the Armed Forces in public security tasks had expanded, which had generated concerns in the international community. The IACHR welcomed the SCJN's decision, but expressed concern that recent legislative reforms could contravene international standards and strengthen the military presence in public security tasks. For this reason, the Commission reiterated its call on the Mexican State to limit the militarization of citizen security and strengthen civilian security forces, in line with international human rights commitments<sup>6</sup>, and concluded that compliance with the recommendation was pending.

Compliance Information

8. In 2024, the State submitted information on the National Public Security Strategy, stating that it would have made it possible to rebuild the social fabric of communities affected by violence, as well as to recover society's trust in police institutions. The State reported on the coordination and permanent work

<sup>4</sup> IACHR, General Guidelines for Follow-up on Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, OEA/Ser.L/V/II.173 Doc. 177, September 30, 2019.

<sup>5</sup> To this end, the IACHR has made use of information gathered during public hearings, investigations conducted ex officio, inputs from the petition and case mechanisms and precautionary measures, and responses to requests for information submitted under the authority established in Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights; as well as information received from other public sources, and the decisions and recommendations of specialized international organizations, among others.

efforts of the Security Cabinet and the Roundtables for Peacebuilding, (these roundtables would have been promoted in the 32 states and in 266 regions of the country), as well as the coordination with prosecutors' offices and prosecutors' offices in the states. Mexico highlighted that, comparing the figures for June 2024 with those of December 2018, the theft of hydrocarbons would have been reduced by 94.2%; kidnapping by 62.9%; total theft by 34.8%; and vehicle theft decreased by 50.3%. The daily average of victims of intentional homicide would have decreased 18% in the same period. In the same sense, the State highlighted the creation in 2019 of the GN; a force that, as of June 30, 2024, would have 133,102 elements, of which 81.5% are deployed throughout the national territory to protect the life, integrity and property of Mexicans. He added that, in December 2018, 73.7% of the population considered their city unsafe; while, by March 2024, this figure would have decreased to 61%, according to figures from the National Institute of Geography and Statistics (INEGI).<sup>7</sup>

9. The State stressed that the Special Peacebuilding Strategy would prioritize addressing the causes of violence through social programs, recovery of public spaces, and community networks. In December 2020, the State promoted this security strategy in the 15 municipalities with the highest rate of intentional homicides; By 2021, this strategy was expanded to the 50 municipalities that account for 49% of the incidence of this crime. With respect to the Armed Forces (FFAA), the State only said that they assist the civilian population in cases of disasters and assist in public security tasks and support the construction of infrastructure and public works.

10. For their part, civil society organizations reported that on February 5, 2024, the former head of the Executive presented a package of constitutional reform initiatives to the Congress of the Union, among which was the affiliation of the GN to SEDENA. After the 2024 elections, in which the ruling political party obtained a qualified majority in the legislative branch, the constitutional reform that made the GN part of SEDENA was approved. This reform provides that: the head of the executive may use the Permanent Armed Forces at his discretion and at any time in tasks of public security, internal security and external defense, even in times of peace; the incorporation of the GN into the Permanent Armed Forces; the power of the GN to carry out investigative work under the command of the Public Prosecutor's Office; the application of military jurisdiction to the GN; the power of the Legislative Branch to issue secondary provisions on the participation of the Armed Forces in internal security and public security tasks; it contemplates that even in times of peace, Congress and the Executive may grant all kinds of functions to the Permanent Armed Forces; and admits the possibility of a military member participating in the presidential elections, with the simple fact of not being on active duty six months before the election. The new head of the GN will be a Major General, appointed by the head of the Federal Executive at the proposal of the head of SEDENA.

11. Civil society organizations expressed their concern about the approval of the reform because it shows progress in the militarization of Mexico. In this sense, the organizations said that the impact of the transfer of the GN to SEDENA would reinforce a logic of security and containment instead of a focus on the protection of human rights, which could generate an increase in practices of harassment, repression and violation of rights.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

12. The Commission emphasizes that this recommendation establishes the need to develop a concrete plan for the gradual withdrawal of the Armed Forces from public security tasks and their transfer to the civilian police. This mandate seeks to safeguard the civilian character of the institutions in charge of guaranteeing public security. However, the recent regulatory framework in Mexico, which militarizes the National Guard by integrating it into SEDENA, represents a direct breach of this recommendation. The Mexican State has chosen to consolidate a security model based on militarization, as evidenced by the 2024 reform that transfers operational and administrative control of the National Guard to SEDENA. This approach contravenes the recommendations of international organizations such as the IACHR, which repeatedly referred to the risks inherent in the use of military forces in public security tasks, including the lack of training in human rights and the increase in violations of these rights<sup>8</sup>. In the same vein, it is noted that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) expressed "the potential impact of this modification on the increase in forced disappearances and impunity is extremely worrying."<sup>9</sup>

<sup>7</sup> SIMORE Inter-American, Progress report of the Mexican State on compliance with and follow-up to the IACHR's recommendations, Recommendation 1, Chapter V, September 30 and October 1, 2024.

13. Despite international recommendations, Mexico lacks a clear and structured plan to return public security tasks to civilian police. Instead of moving towards the professionalization of these institutions, the budget and resources allocated to their strengthening have decreased, while the resources allocated to the Armed Forces have increased significantly<sup>10</sup>. This trend is evidence of a clear failure to comply with the IACHR's recommendation. In turn, the structural weakening of the civilian police reflects a serious omission by the State in its duty to guarantee public security through competent civilian institutions. According to INEGI data,<sup>11</sup> less than 30% of municipal police have the basic levels of professional certification. This lag, far from being addressed, is aggravated by the growing dependence on the military model. The militarization of the National Guard and the lack of a concrete plan for the gradual withdrawal of the Armed Forces from public security tasks constitute a direct violation of Recommendation No. 1 of this report. This situation perpetuates an ineffective and human rights-based security model. In light of the foregoing, taking into consideration the General Guidelines for Follow-up on Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights<sup>12</sup>, and noting that the Mexican State has implemented a series of actions and conduct that repeatedly ignore, hinder, or impede compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR concludes that the recommendation has not been complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

14. The Committee takes note of the information provided in the area of the national security strategy. However, this strategy, like the measures reported by the State, does not refer to or provide for the design and implementation of a plan that would allow the withdrawal of the Armed Forces from public security functions. In this regard, the IACHR invites the State to submit information related to the specific object of the recommendation. Beyond a security strategy in abstract terms, it is necessary for the State to report on how such a strategy or any other reported action would be guaranteeing a plan for the gradual withdrawal of the Armed Forces.

Recommendation No. 2: Strengthen the capacity of the police to carry out public security tasks in accordance with international human rights standards.

15. In 2023, the State reported to the IACHR that it trained thousands of elements in human rights and allocated resources for the training of public security personnel; but the IACHR received information that the Secretariat of Security and Citizen Protection lacked the infrastructure to control the GN, which had led to a strengthening of SEDENA to the detriment of civilian bodies. Despite the training, the IACHR considered that it was insufficient due to the lack of labor guarantees, budget, and human resources for civilian bodies, maintaining the recommendation as pending compliance. The IACHR urged the State to provide more information on measures to strengthen police forces and to ensure that civilian forces have the necessary conditions to perform their functions adequately and safely.<sup>13</sup>

Compliance Information

16. In 2024, the State said that the professionalization of public security forces focused on strengthening the standardization of training and certification, to raise the quality of police forces. He reported that the Single Police Certificate (CUP) would validate that the elements meet requirements such as initial training, evaluation of competencies, academic performance and confidence control. He clarified that, as of March 2024, 390,694 certificates would have been issued, reaching 75.7% of the total of 515,862 items. This progress, according to Mexico, includes 59% in the federal police, 88.4% in the state police, and 78.9% in the municipal police. Regarding training, the State reported that between 2019 and 2024, more than 20 thousand curricula would have been validated, benefiting more than one million elements. 16,301 continuing education programs were implemented, covering essential topics such as police function, first responder, forensic science, effectiveness in first acts of investigation, gender violence, attention to victims, human rights, civic justice and crime prevention. In addition to this, he stressed that the Professional Career Service promotes stability and professionalization in public security institutions, with the implementation of regulations and manuals in several entities and municipalities to ensure quality and confidence in the police service. On the other hand, the State emphasized that the National Model of Police and Civic Justice would promote coordination between the three levels of government to strengthen local police forces.<sup>14</sup>

17. On the other hand, the State reported that the strategy would have focused on prevention, with a 25.7% increase in the resources of the Public Security Contribution Fund (FASP) and the incorporation of the Fund for the Strengthening of Public Security Institutions (FOFISP). Investment in infrastructure for women victims of gender-based violence has increased care capacity by 43.5%, from 287,000 women served in 2018 to more than 412,000 in 2023.<sup>15</sup>

18. The information provided by the State shows that the capacity of the police has been strengthened through increases in their budget, social security guarantees and training programmes. However, the state's decision to continue deploying armed forces for public security functions reflects the persistence of challenges that prevent the police from assuming all of these functions, so the recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

19. The Commission reiterates its call on the Mexican State to comply with its international human rights commitments by adopting the necessary measures to limit the militarization of citizen security. It also urges the State to rethink its security strategy, strengthening the civilian security forces in accordance with international standards and establishing a plan for their gradual withdrawal from the Armed Forces.

Recommendation No. 4: Take steps to ensure that federal and state officials refrain from issuing public statements on the legality of the actions of the security forces in cases that may constitute an improper use of force before the results of an investigation are available.

20. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported on the training of 154 officials of the Attorney General's Office (FGR) in human rights. For their part, civil society organizations reported that the head of the Executive made anticipated public statements defending the actions of the Armed Forces in cases of human rights violations, even in the face of evidence of their participation in crimes such as homicides and disappearances. The IACHR valued the training but expressed its concern about the anticipated statements of senior officials on the legality of the actions of the armed forces before a judicial resolution and maintained the recommendation as partially complied with. The Commission urged the State to avoid these statements and to report on the measures adopted to limit this type of positioning, in line with international recommendations.<sup>16</sup>

Compliance Information

21. In 2024, the State reported that the FGR trained 5,274 public servants of that institution in human rights.<sup>17</sup> The State also reported that federal and state officials would not be allowed to issue public statements on the legality of the actions of the security forces. The State said that these officials must adhere to the provisions of the General Law on Social Communication and the agreement establishing the Federal Government's Social Communication Policy, published in the Official Gazette of the Federation on May 17, 2019; which would have the purpose of establishing the public policy of social communication that the agencies and entities of the Federal Public Administration must observe. Mexico specified that Article 20, paragraph B, section I, of the Constitution provides for the right of any accused person to be presumed innocent until proven guilty. Similarly, he clarified that the National Code of Criminal Procedure states in its numeral 113 section XVI that every accused person has the right not to be exposed to the media.<sup>18</sup>

22. For their part, civil society organizations expressed that advance declarations on the legality of the actions of various security forces continue to be made. In particular, they referred to the events related to the arbitrary deprivation of the life of a group of migrants in Chiapas, committed on October 2, 2024, and regarding which, SEDENA would have released a press release in which it reported that a day earlier, in a patrol, elements of the Army had detected two pickup trucks "like those used by criminal groups in that region." and that upon hearing detonations, two elements of the Army activated their weapons, stopping the march of one of the pickup trucks<sup>19</sup>. According to the official statement, there were 33 migrants in the van, of whom four were killed at the time and two more died in the hospital.<sup>20</sup> In relation to this case, the IACHR recognizes that President-elect Claudia Sheinbaum said two days later that it was an "unfortunate event and must be investigated and punished"; and that "such a situation cannot be repeated."<sup>21</sup>

23. Another example referred to by civil society organizations is related to the pronouncement issued in September 2024 by the National Human Rights Commission (CNDH), on the case of the extrajudicial execution of the girl Heidi Mariana, committed by military agents in Nuevo Laredo, Tamaulipas in 2022; in which the agency stated that "it does not have evidence that directly links SEDENA with the events that led to the tragic death of the minor",<sup>22</sup> without having issued a recommendation.<sup>23</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

24. Although the Commission appreciates the information reported in relation to the regulations that regulate and prohibit public statements by State officials on the legality of the Armed Forces, the information reported by civil society organizations shows that in practice the regulation referred to by the State would not be applied. due to the fact that advance statements on the actions of the Armed Forces by various actors continue. For the foregoing, the IACHR maintains partial compliance with the recommendation.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

25. The IACHR invites the State to provide specific information on how it would be dealing with those cases where an anticipated position on the legality of the actions of the security forces was accredited. It is important that, beyond the existing regulation, public officials are sensitized about the implications of a public statement validating the legality of a fact that has not yet been elucidated in the framework of a judicial process.

Recommendation No. 5 Adopt and implement accountability measures by a body independent of all security forces in relation to public security operations and tasks where there is deprivation of life.

26. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State informed the IACHR of the adoption of guidelines for the legitimate use of force by the Federal Ministerial Police and the corresponding training. At the same time, civil society organizations highlighted a failure to issue detailed reports on the use of force, since only 40 reports were registered out of the 421 that should have been issued according to the regulations. The organizations reported that the State had not implemented the creation of an independent observatory ordered by the Inter-American Court in the case "Women victims of sexual torture in Atenco," to monitor accountability in the use of force. The IACHR highlighted the discrepancy between the State's information and that provided by civil society, determining that the recommendation was pending compliance. The Commission urged the State to ensure a commitment not only to normative, but also to effective implementation, and to establish an independent body to ensure impartiality in the accountability and processing of information on the use of force.<sup>24</sup>

Compliance Information

27. In 2024, the State reiterated the adoption of an intelligence-focused approach to combat violence. The State specified the reduction of 36.7% in the number of femicides and 21.4% in intentional homicides between December 2018 and July 2024. The State made explicit the 82% decrease in kidnappings. He added that the Public Security Contribution Fund (FASP) would have improved information systems and thus reduced the incidence of crime. The State stated that various protocols of action and manuals on the use of force had been implemented by the National Guard. In the same vein, the National Public Security Strategy would seek to coordinate efforts and prioritize respect for human rights. The National Registry of Detentions reports more than 1.4 million arrests, showing a slight decrease compared to previous periods. The Federal Institute of Public Defenders reportedly provided legal services and support to detainees, resulting in numerous releases and improvements in prison conditions. The State maintained that the National Public Security Program 2022-2024 would include indicators that evaluate the performance of the security forces in relation to crime reduction and respect for human rights and reported that the CNDH is the body responsible for receiving complaints against public officials.<sup>25</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

28. The information reported accounts for a security strategy and figures related to the reduction of some crimes. However, this recommendation calls on the State to implement accountability measures by an independent body in cases of deprivation of life by security forces. The information provided by the State does not report any actions or progress related to the formation of an independent body of accountability. With regard to the work of the CNDH, although it is an autonomous constitutional body, the CNDH is not the competent body for accountability processes, since its functions focus primarily on receiving complaints about alleged human rights violations, formulating recommendations and conciliation processes. Nor is the Public Defender's Office the body in charge of this function. By virtue of the foregoing, the IACHR maintains the recommendation as pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

29. To advance in compliance with the recommendation, a state commitment is required, not only in the regulatory framework, but also in the implementation of the regulation provided in the matter. The IACHR emphasizes that accountability must be led by a body independent of the security forces to ensure the impartiality of the processing of the information reported. Similarly, it is essential that the records in which the existence of the use of force is accredited be prepared in accordance with the reports issued by the competent institutions and that these be verified and used in order to adopt the corresponding investigative measures.

Recommendation No. 6 Ensure that, in cases of enforced disappearance, extrajudicial executions and torture, the lines of investigation not only respond to the material authorship but also include the responsibility of the chain of command.

30. In accordance with Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State informed the IACHR that the general rules of authorship and participation in criminal matters are also applied to determine responsibility for crimes of forced disappearance, torture, and other inhuman treatment, and highlighted the publication of protocols for the investigation of these crimes. However, civil society organizations highlighted the lack of progress in the investigation of the chain of command in emblematic cases such as that of the Women of Atenco, and reported that, in 2020 and 2021, no senior commander was sentenced for torture or forced disappearance. The IACHR considered that the information provided by the State was repetitive and did not reflect concrete progress in practice, maintaining the recommendation with partial compliance. The Commission urged the State to adopt measures to ensure the effective investigation of the chain of command and to report actions, protocols, and data that demonstrate progress in the implementation of this recommendation, including applicable judicial precedents.<sup>26</sup>

31. In 2024, the State reported that Article 258 of the National Code of Criminal Procedure (CNPP) establishes the right of victims and injured parties to challenge the omissions of the Public Prosecutor's Office during the initial investigation. This would include omissions that prevent clarifying the facts and assigning responsibilities in the chain of command, which would include those who directly carried out the acts and those who, due to their hierarchy, had a legal duty to act. The SCJN said that the omissions of the Public Prosecutor's Office can affect due diligence and has interpreted that the control judges must ensure that the investigation observes the standards of due diligence of Articles 8.1 and 25 of the American Convention on Human Rights (ACHR). According to the State, these norms and precedents would ensure that both the direct perpetrators and those who, by virtue of their hierarchical position, were able to facilitate or enable the acts that violate human rights are investigated.<sup>27</sup>

32. The State also reported that the SCJN updated the Protocol for Trying Cases of Torture and Ill-Treatment, which provides a guide for judges based on standards of protection of the rights to due process, integrity, and access to justice. The protocol underscores the prohibition of the use of unlawful evidence obtained through torture and requires that investigations include the identification of responsibilities in the chain of command, as set out in Articles 8.1 and 25 of the ACHR. The SCJN would have promoted training for jurisdictional personnel on the Istanbul Protocol, thus strengthening the application of these norms and ensuring that investigations of torture and human rights violations comply with international standards of due diligence and justice, contemplating the adequate investigation of responsibility in the chain of command.<sup>28</sup> Civil society organizations, for their part, reported that, in the Rosendo Radilla Case, no senior civilian or military commander had been sentenced for torture or forced disappearance, according to the public sentences, and that the investigation into disappearance would continue to focus on seeking direct <sup>29</sup>material authorship. The State added in its observations to this Report that in 2023 a work was published that analyzes the legal framework regarding State obligations with respect to acts of forced disappearance. He also reported on the resolution of various judicial actions that develop criteria in matters of disappearance.<sup>30</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

33. For the Commission, it is pertinent to analyze the content of the recommendation in order to determine the level of compliance of the State. In this regard, the recommendation provides for the need to ensure that the lines of investigation not only respond to the material authorship of the facts, but also that the investigation of hierarchical responsibilities must be guaranteed. The IACHR emphasizes that the mere normative regulation at the federal level does not ensure per se that the State guarantees the exhaustion of this line of investigation. The IACHR emphasizes that the possibility for victims to challenge omissions in the investigation does not represent progress in complying with the recommendation. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the IACHR welcomes the information reported regarding the update of the SCJN Protocol for Trying Cases of Torture and Ill-Treatment, which requires that investigations include the identification of responsibilities in the chain of command in cases of torture. However, there is no mention of similar instructions or training for cases of enforced disappearance or extrajudicial executions, nor are any relevant judicial decisions identified. Therefore, the IACHR determines that the recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

34. In order to guide the implementation of this recommendation, the Commission reiterates to the State the need to adopt measures to ensure in practice the investigation of the chains of command in cases of torture, forced disappearance, and extrajudicial executions. The IACHR invites the State and civil society to report on the actions and measures adopted, including protocols or any institutional strengthening action in this regard, as well as disaggregated data that allow for a quantitative evaluation of the progress made in the investigations and the forecast of the responsibility of the chain of command in the investigative hypotheses. The Commission invites examples of judicial precedents that apply the responsibility of the chain of command in cases of enforced disappearance, torture, and extrajudicial executions.

Recommendation No. 7 Create systems for information, compilation, and analysis of data regarding the violence that affects the different groups addressed in this report, such as women, children and adolescents, migrants, human rights defenders, justice operators, LGBT persons, indigenous peoples, and persons deprived of liberty.

35. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, it was reported that the State had transmitted to the IACHR the publication of disaggregated prison information notebooks and statistical documents on violence against women and discrimination. The State mentioned the SCJN's resolution on the National Law on the Registration of Detentions and the implementation of a differential approach in the Homologated Investigation Protocol for crimes of forced disappearance and torture. However, civil society organizations reported the lack of disaggregated data by SEDENA and FGR and denied the existence of complete records on victims. They also highlighted the setback in transparency with the suspension of statistical reports from the Investigation Unit of crimes for migrants. The IACHR valued the aforementioned publications but stressed that the recommendation continued to be partially complied with due to the lack of adequate information systems and the insufficiency of disaggregated data on the part of security and justice institutions. The Commission urged the State to design institutional diagnoses with methodologies that allow for the collection and analysis of disaggregated data, and to ensure coordination among institutions to update a uniform registry that reflects the current human rights context in Mexico.<sup>31</sup>

Compliance Information

36. In 2024, the State highlighted that it would have implemented information and data analysis systems supported by the censuses and indicators of the National Institute of Statistics and Geography (INEGI) to address violence affecting women, girls, boys, adolescents, migrants, human rights defenders, LGBT people, indigenous peoples, and people deprived of liberty. The National Census of Federal Human Rights and the National Census of Federal Law Enforcement of INEGI provide data on the violence that affects these groups. The National Census of the Federal Penitentiary System would provide information on people deprived of liberty, including data disaggregated by gender and ethnicity, which makes it possible to identify patterns of violence and discrimination that affect specific groups such as indigenous peoples and LGBT people. The State specified that the National Population and Housing Census and the National Survey on the Dynamics of Relationships in Households (ENDIREH) are fundamental tools for obtaining data on domestic and gender-based violence and violence against children and adolescents. ENDIREH, for example, would make it possible to analyse intimate partner violence and other forms of violence faced by women in their homes and communities. The National Survey on Discrimination (ENADIS) provides data on discrimination and structural violence affecting LGBTI, indigenous, migrant and other vulnerable groups. The State reported that the National Public Security Program 2022-2024 has compliance indicators, which evaluate the reduction in crimes such as homicides, femicides, and kidnappings, as well as the effective implementation of action protocols, such as the proportional use of force and respect for human rights.<sup>32</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

37. The Commission values positively the information provided by the State, which allows it to account for a solid information system that contributes to the analysis of data regarding violence against groups in vulnerable situations. The IACHR invites the State to guarantee and strengthen the functioning of INEGI, which is an institution that exemplifies good practices in the systematization and processing of information. In this regard, the Commission concludes that this recommendation advances to full compliance and ceases its monitoring.

Recommendation No. 8 Reorient the approach to the drug issue in Mexico from an approach of militarization and "frontal combat" using the public force, to one with a comprehensive perspective, of human rights and public health on addictions and consumption without distribution purposes.

38. Within the framework of Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the Mexican State reported the creation of the National Commission on Mental Health and Addictions (CONASAMA) to guarantee mental health care and prevent addictions with a focus on human rights and implement prevention campaigns. However, civil organizations criticized the lack of progress in the legalization of the recreational use of marijuana and said that government campaigns stigmatize consumers, reinforcing a prohibitionist approach. The IACHR valued the efforts in public health but considered that the approach is still partial and needs a comprehensive rethinking that prioritizes human rights in drug policy.<sup>33</sup> It therefore concluded that the recommendation was in partial compliance.

Compliance Information

39. In 2024, the State reported that, within the framework of the public policies implemented, it would have prioritized the prevention of addictions, focusing on mental health and the comprehensive development of communities. This approach would seek to address associated risk factors such as violence, inequality, and lack of opportunities. He added that, through educational programs and community activities, healthy lifestyles would be promoted. On the other hand, the State reported that, from September 2023 to June 2024, CONASAMA has been instrumental in the implementation of prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs; and has carried out training in mental health and addictions, training more than 12,000 professionals at the first level of care and 20,000 participants in the course "Mental Health for All People". During this period, 3,185 discharges were made from psychiatric hospitals, and in 2023, the commemoration of international days resulted in educational and awareness-raising events that would reinforce the importance of mental health. The State reported the development of various educational tools, such as a guide for teachers and an online portal that offers resources on psychoactive substances. The @prende.mx platform has facilitated the course "Strategy in the Classroom: Prevention of Addictions", which has trained 7,435 people. He specified that seminars were held for teachers and sessions with experts in prevention.<sup>34</sup>

40. The State reported that the Ministry of Public Education (SEP) would have carried out 2.8 million activations and talks, reaching 4.5 million students with the support of more than 275,000 teachers. 14 prevention campaigns that would have reached 1.2 million people would have been disseminated through mass media, including radio and television spots, as well as graphic materials aimed at different audiences. In this same period, the Specialised Medical Units would have provided 323,424 consultations, covering both the treatment of consumers of psychoactive substances and the promotion of healthy lifestyles, benefiting more than 2.7 million people. The "Lifeline", a telephone guidance service, would have provided 44,229 attentions, offering support to those who face problems related to addictions. 98 community coalitions have been formed that have developed 4,338 advocacy actions, strengthening interaction between community members and improving their environments. Trainings under the mhGAP (Mental Health Gap Action Programme) programme have strengthened the skills of non-specialist health personnel, training more than 15,000 professionals. These initiatives seek to ensure comprehensive and effective mental health and addiction care, thus strengthening the capacity of the health system to face these crucial challenges in Mexican society.<sup>35</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

41. The Commission welcomes the adoption of public policies that prioritize mental health care, as well as the creation and strengthening of tools for free access to people with addiction problems. The IACHR recognizes the importance of accompanying this type of public policy with awareness-raising measures and educational programs that provide information related to drug use from a public health and human rights perspective. In this regard, the Commission concludes that the recommendation is moving towards full compliance. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the IACHR emphasizes that the problem of the militarization of public security is a latent concern for the IACHR, which will continue to be the subject of the Commission's follow-up since its analysis of Recommendation 1 of this report.

B. Disappearances and enforced disappearances

42. The Commission emphasizes that the detailed analysis of the problem of disappearance and forced disappearance will be carried out in a specific thematic report of the IACHR, which will be published in the first half of 2025. In preparing this report, the Commission has received extensive information from the State and civil society. Notwithstanding the foregoing, a general study in relation to recommendations 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 of the 2015 Country Report is presented below.

Recommendation No. 9 Adopt a General Law on Disappearance and Enforced Disappearance, and adopt all necessary measures to ensure that, at both the federal and state levels, legislation and practices are in line with international standards in this area.

43. Within the framework of Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the Mexican State reported on the creation of the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Forced Disappearance and the National Search Commission (hereinafter "CNB"), within the framework of the General Law on Forced Disappearance of Persons, Disappearance Committed by Individuals and the National System for the Search of Persons (hereinafter, "General Law of Disappearance"). Despite these advances, civil organizations referred to the lack of a public identification policy and the omission in the creation of the National Forensic Data Bank (BNDF), which perpetuated the forensic crisis. The IACHR appreciated the State's efforts but expressed concern over the resignation of the head of the CNB and the lack of coordination between authorities, which had hindered effective compliance with the General Law on Disappearances.<sup>36</sup> As a result, the Commission concluded that the recommendation remained in partial compliance.

Compliance Information

44. In 2024, the State reiterated information on the National Search System (hereinafter, "SNB" or "Search System") as the mechanism established in Mexico to address the situation of disappeared persons, and whose main objective is the establishment of public policies and procedures among authorities at all levels of government for the search. Location and identification of missing and unlocated persons.<sup>37</sup>

45. The State referred to the first session of the SNB in 2024, held on February 2, in which the regulations and guidelines for the search for persons were discussed, as well as training criteria for public servants; and the guidelines for the operation and functioning of the SNB were presented, information on the National Registry of Disappeared and Unlocated Persons (hereinafter "National Registry of Disappeared Persons" or "RNPDO"), and the search actions carried out between October 1, 2023 and January 29, 2024. In the second session, on May 6, the State reported that it discussed the CNB's work strategies and RNPDO's technological update plan, advances in human identification, agreements under review, and collaboration with local search commissions (hereinafter "CLB"). The State highlighted that, from October 2023 to January 2024, the CNB organized a total of 278 searches in 19 states. He added that 236 days of individualized search and 42 of generalized search were organized. The State reported that the CNB increased the number of searchers from 19 in 2023 to 124 in May 2024. Between February and April 2024, the 124 searchers carried out 1,088 search actions, achieving 63 living locations and 47 forensic findings; and implemented processes for the identification of deceased persons found in sheltered spaces and graves, using advanced scientific techniques, in collaboration with the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA).<sup>38</sup>

46. During the period from October 2023 to January 2024, the CNB served 63 groups and 191 people, prioritizing states such as Guerrero, where urgent care was provided due to Hurricane Otis. The meetings included the participation of families, groups, local prosecutors' offices, the CNDH, the Executive Commission for Attention to Victims (CEAV), UNFPA, and the Office in Mexico of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), with the aim of improving coordination and attention to victims of disappearance in the country. The State reported that, since 2019, a federal subsidy program has been implemented for the creation and consolidation of Local Search Commissions, benefiting 20 commissions initially and extending to the 32 states from 2023. As of February 1, 2024, the CNB would have been part of the

47. For their part, civil society organizations informed the Commission of the current context of the Search System and the National Search Commission in particular; and they mentioned that from August 24 to October 4, 2023, there was an interim in the direction of the CNB, which is not provided for in the law. Subsequently, on October 5, 2023, the SEGOB opened the public call to appoint the new head of the CNB<sup>40</sup>. On October 23, 2023, the new National Search Commissioner was appointed<sup>41</sup>. The organizations stressed that this appointment process was controversial and lacked transparency, because the profile of the current incumbent would not accredit the requirements established in the General Law on Disappearances to occupy such a position<sup>42</sup>. In the same vein, they reported that various organizations and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights regretted that "the appointment process did not have the levels of consultation, participation, transparency and scrutiny desirable and encouraged by some victims and national and international human rights organizations."<sup>43</sup> In this sense, they said that the consultation process represented a setback to the public scrutiny that had been carried out in the previous appointment. In addition, organizations indicated that in recent media reports reported that the profile of the current head of the CNB had been proposed and supported by public officials of the National Human Rights Commission (CNDH).<sup>44</sup>

48. The organizations stressed that the head of the National Search Commission would not have experience in the matter, nor would she have carried out related activities in her sector in the last two years, as stipulated. Moreover, in recent press reports it has been reported that the person in charge of the CNB and people who are now part of the CNB do not meet the profiles described for the positions or the requirements stipulated in the law regarding experience in the field;<sup>45</sup> and that in addition the staff of the Commission has been reduced by more than 80%.<sup>46</sup>

49. The organizations reported that, after the appointment of the current head, more than 100 people from the institution had been fired and/or forced to resign, who would have specializations in anthropology, archaeology and genetics, as well as medical, dactyloscopic, forensic, psychology and social work personnel, as well as experts in legal issues and international <sup>47</sup>relations. In the same vein, 40 persons assigned to the National Center for Human Identification (hereinafter, "CNIH" or "Identification Center"), who had the obligation to implement the massive search approach provided for in the General Law on Disappearances, were terminated from their posts, which has been considered as the beginning of the dismantling of the institutional framework in the field of searching.<sup>48</sup>

50. Similarly, organizations reported that the CNB would continue to fail to comply with the General Law on Disappearances because no progress had been made with the issuance of the regulation. The organizations reported that, in the first session of the National Search System in 2024, the head of the CNB would have confirmed the absence of progress in the issuance of the regulation and would have transmitted to them that they would only have an initial draft, which is not public, nor would it have been shared with the members of the SNB<sup>49</sup>. On the other hand, they said that the National Citizen Council ordered by the General Law on Disappearances is not properly in office since the Senate would not have issued the call; and, therefore, families do not have participation in the SNB<sup>50</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

51. The IACHR had recognized multiple advances in the implementation of the General Law on Disappearances in recent years. However, it notes with concern the institutional weakening of the CNB and the National Search System in general. The State reported statistical information on the number of searches, findings, meetings, and attention to groups. However, in order to comply with the recommendation, it is necessary to ensure that such actions are in line with international standards in this area and that their institutionality is ensured. In this regard, the Commission is concerned about the alleged dismissals of specialists. In particular, these dismissals affect the performance of the CNB and the Identification Center and prevent compliance with international obligations in the field of forensic search and identification.

52. On the other hand, although the CNB continues to operate, according to information provided by civil society organizations, its operation would not be in line with international standards on the matter, due to the lack of participation of families in the search processes and the decision to designate the Ministry of Welfare as the entity responsible for the process of updating the National Registry of Missing and Unlocated Persons<sup>51</sup>, since the general law establishes the coordination, operation and functioning of this registry as the exclusive power of the CNB<sup>52</sup>. This would be aggravated in the face of the allegations of civil society that refer to the possible illegitimate alteration of the RNPDO and given that the Identification Center would no longer be in operation, the consolidation of the National Search System and the effective implementation of the General Law on Disappearances would have been reversed. Thus, despite the progress reported in previous years, by 2024 severe setbacks are identified that would ignore the obligations provided for in the General Law on Disappearances and would be in contravention of international obligations contracted by Mexico in terms of the disappearance of persons. In view of the foregoing, the IACHR considers that this recommendation is backwards to pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

53. In order to comply with this recommendation, the IACHR reiterates the need to have information on the CNB's lack of personnel and on the operation of the Identification Center, indicating how it would be guaranteed that the CNB's operations are carried out by professionals with specialized skills in the search for persons, forensic identification, or related disciplines, thus ensuring that the operation of the SNB is in accordance with international standards. In addition, the State is invited to report on the strategies for collaboration between the prosecutors' offices to guarantee the creation of records in an approved manner and thus allow for the creation and effective administration of the Federal Forensic Registry, in accordance with the provisions of the General Law on Disappearances. Finally, the Commission invites the State to submit information on the process of updating the RNPDO and on the conduct of the census of disappeared persons.

Recommendation No. 10 Establish mechanisms for the immediate search for disappeared persons throughout the national territory.

54. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported the use of INTERPOL tools, such as Yellow Notices, and the implementation of the Alba Protocol and the Amber Alert to coordinate the search for missing persons, with 255 notifications made. However, civil organizations highlighted problems of fragmentation and delays in the immediate search, with the obligation to wait 72 hours to accept complaints. The IACHR welcomed the progress but noted that the implementation of the National Protocol and collaboration between authorities presented challenges, maintaining substantial partial compliance with the recommendation. The Commission urged the State to improve coordination and ensure the effective application of urgent search mechanisms throughout the country.<sup>53</sup>

Compliance Information

55. In 2024, the State reported that the Homologated Search Protocol (hereinafter, "PHB") was published on October 6, 2020 and entered into force on January 6, 2021. The State specified that this protocol would highlight the obligations of the authorities in the search for disappeared persons and would have been implemented with the support of training for personnel of the National Search Commission, local search commissions, and relatives of victims. He reported that the PHB defines five types of search: immediate search, individualized search, pattern search, generalized search and family search. For its part, the Standardized Protocol for the Investigation of Crimes of Forced Disappearance (hereinafter, "IHP") would seek to establish a systematic approach to investigate crimes of forced disappearance and by individuals. The National Code of Criminal Procedure (CNPP) would establish a legal framework that regulates the investigation of crimes, ensuring that the State conducts diligent and effective searches. According to Mexico, the CNPP obliges the authorities to carry out thorough investigations, protect the rights of victims, and prevent impunity. Finally, the State clarified that the CNB, in collaboration with state and federal authorities, collectives, and relatives of disappeared persons, had developed regional strategies that address specific contexts. An example of this is the regional search program in the northeast of the country, which covers Coahuila, Durango, Nuevo León and Tamaulipas, in order to coordinate actions between different institutions to achieve effective searches.<sup>54</sup> The State reported that on October 3, 2024, the General Operating Guidelines of the Amber Alert Mexico Program were published.<sup>55</sup>

56. In addition, in its observations on this report, the State added that the Federal Ministerial Police (PFM), through the International Police Affairs Unit and INTERPOL, strengthened its actions in the search for and location of disappeared persons. As part of its work, it has created a specialized area within the Directorate of International Police Liaison and Cooperation, responsible for managing the publication of INTERPOL Yellow Notices, used to locate victims of disappearance in Mexico and abroad. INTERPOL Mexico coordinated a Training Session with the INTERPOL General Secretariat's Specialized Group on Notices and Broadcasts. In this regard, in the last four years, 1,512 Yellow Notices have been issued, registering 178 in 2021, 359 in 2022, 426 in 2023 and 549 in 2024.<sup>56</sup>

57. Civil society organizations, however, reported deficiencies in the design and implementation of search plans. In this regard, they said that they had requested the preparation of search plans from the local search commissions and the National Search Commission, including through the promotion of urgent actions requested from the Committee on Enforced Disappearances, without these being drawn up. They added that in the cases in which the preparation of search plans was achieved, they did not guarantee the minimum requirements provided for in national regulations and, specifically, in the Homologated Search Protocol. The organizations also highlight a lack of coordination between the CNB and local commissions, which is due to a lack of training, constant changes in personnel, and a lack of strategy by state, among other problems<sup>57</sup>. In relation to the lack of professional training, the organizations expressed that it would be a constant in public servants from public prosecutors to experts<sup>58</sup>. The organizations mentioned that fragmentation would persist in the search and investigation processes that would affect the obtaining of results in terms of immediate searches.<sup>59</sup>

58. On the other hand, organizations indicated that the Attorney General's Office and state prosecutors' offices would continue not to implement the Homologated Search Protocol. In this regard, they reported that, in the second session of the National Search System of 2024, the integration of the commission, implementation, monitoring, evaluation, and updating of this Protocol, provided for in section 9.1 of the instrument, was addressed; and that it would have been reported that the state prosecutors' offices would not implement the Homologated Search Protocol and that they would apply, instead, the investigation protocol.<sup>60</sup> In addition, they stressed that the representation of the FGR voted against the Homologated Search Protocol.<sup>61</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

59. The Commission analyzes compliance with this recommendation in conjunction with the previous recommendation; in the sense that, although the Homologated Search Protocol represents progress, the General Law on Disappearances provides for the need for these searches to be carried out in compliance with the principles of due diligence with respect to the interests of the Disappeared Protocol, differential and specialized approach, joint participation, among others. However, the information reported would account for the persistence of the lack of coordination between authorities, as well as the discontent and disagreement on the part of civil society derived from this lack of coordination and the delay in the implementation of immediate search actions. Although the General Law and the PHB have complied with the establishment of immediate search mechanisms, there is not enough information that these are applied throughout the territory. Moreover, the State only reports one plan in the northeast region of the country. Therefore, the IACHR maintains that the recommendation is in substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

60. In relation to compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to continue with the design and implementation of regional search plans and to ensure compliance with the urgent actions of the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances, especially with regard to the need to develop search plans. The IACHR calls on the State to provide information that clearly indicates in which states immediate search mechanisms have been implemented, indicating whether there are territories in the country where their adoption is still necessary. In addition, the IACHR invites the authorities participating in the processes of immediate search for disappeared persons to act in an articulated manner, ensuring that the mechanisms for immediate search are carried out effectively. The IACHR invites the State to promote collaboration between the prosecutors' offices and the search commissions for the deployment of immediate

In this regard, in order to move forward with compliance with the recommendation, the State could report on the measures adopted to strengthen this coordination and to ensure that the immediate search mechanisms established in the PHB are applied without delay throughout the national territory.

Recommendation No. 11: Improve the National Registry of Disappeared Persons as a single registry of disappearances and also allow a person to be registered as a victim of forced disappearance. A database must contain personal information of missing persons, necessary personal information, primarily genetic and cell samples, from relatives of missing persons with their consent, and genetic information and cell samples from the bodies of any unidentified persons who were deprived of life. Such personal information must be protected on the Registry's portal in accordance with international standards on access to information.

61. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned about the operation of several key registries, such as RENAPEFA and REFOFE, for the identification of deceased and disappeared persons. However, civil organizations stressed that the creation and operation of the National Forensic Data Bank (hereinafter, "BNDF") and other associated registries are still pending, with interconnection and transparency problems, and criticized a census announced in July 2023 for its lack of consultation with the CNB and the potential revictimization of relatives of the disappeared. The IACHR observed that, despite the progress, significant challenges persisted in the implementation and coordination of these mechanisms, maintaining partial compliance with the recommendation. The State was urged to guarantee the effectiveness and transparency of the registries and to report on the process of updating the National Registry of Missing and Unlocated Persons (RNPDO).<sup>62</sup>

Compliance Information

62. In 2024, the State reported that the CNB would have almost quadrupled its search actions compared to previous years. Regarding the main advances of the RNPDO, he highlighted the interoperability between institutions and the technological updating and quality of the data. On the other hand, the State submitted information related to the location of persons, noting that, as of May 1, 2023, more than 895 million records had been consulted for cross-referencing of information; of which, 114.22 million are from the COVID vaccine registry; 122.9 million from the single registry of beneficiaries (PUB); 18.4 million state governments; 160.5 million in Plataforma México of the Ministry of Public and Citizen Security; 190 million in the National Population Registry (RENAPO); and 280.2 million in the Mexican Institute of Social Security (IMSS). The State specified that the CNB, in collaboration with the local search commissions of various states (Baja California Sur, Coahuila, Durango, Hidalgo, Michoacán, Morelos, Nayarit, Nuevo León, San Luis Potosí, Sinaloa and Sonora), was part of the Mass Graves Module (MFC).<sup>63</sup>

63. In its observations on this report, the State added that the Attorney General's Office has made progress in identifying disappeared persons through the creation and operation of the National Genetic Information Base (BaNIG), which stores data on family members and unidentified persons. Likewise, the National Forensic Data Bank (BNDF), in operation since May 29, 2023, integrates ten interconnected information systems, including the National Registry of Unidentified and Unclaimed Deceased Persons (RENAPEFA), Amber Alert and the National Genetic Information Base (BaNIG). In addition, the FGR signed an agreement with the Ministry of the Interior on June 13, 2024, to interconnect the BNDF with the National Registry of Missing and Unlocated Persons.<sup>64</sup>

64. Civil society organizations indicated that the National Forensic Data Bank would continue to be unconsolidated, as well as various registries mandated by the General Law on Disappearances and that they would not be properly integrated. In the same vein, following the execution of the amparo judgment issued by the First District Court of the Auxiliary Center of the Ninth Region and confirmed by a Collegiate Court, in the lawsuit filed by Olimpia Montoya Juárez, sister of Marco Antonio Montoya, disappeared in the state of Guanajuato, against the failure of the FGR to create and operate the BNDF and the National Registry of Unidentified Deceased Persons, It would be possible to identify the omissions that persist and that lead to genetic information continuing to be processed in a fragmented manner. Thus, by April 2024, the FGR would have reported that there are already nine information resources interconnected to the BNDF Search System, namely: a) the National Registry of Unidentified and Unclaimed Deceased Persons; b) the ante-mortem and post-mortem database; c) the Amber Alert; (d) the National Register of Mass Graves and Clandestine Graves; (e) the National Genetic Information Base; (f) the Federal Forensic Registry; (g) the Strategic Monitoring System on Criminal Expressions (SINIED); (h) the National Information System; Nominal (SININ); and (i) the National Registry of the Crime of Torture (RENADET). On this, organizations reported that the interconnection that some of these registries would have would not ensure that they have the adequate and substantive information necessary that the registries of missing persons should have.<sup>65</sup>

65. In relation to the census carried out within the framework of the National Registry of Missing and Unlocated Persons, civil society organizations conveyed that the government's alleged strategy was aimed at reducing the number of disappeared persons to 12,377, which would minimize a much greater crisis; using a very high criterion to prove a disappearance. And they reported that after the publication of this review, various omissions were denounced by the victims, even in cases that have had complaints at the national and international level.<sup>66</sup> In this context, various organizations and groups promoted actions to resolve the alleged errors of the Registry. However, they clarified that this would imply an effort from each family, which would generate uncertainty and anxiety.<sup>67</sup> In the same vein, they reported that on March 18, 2024, the federal government filed a review of the records, in which it stopped using some of the questioned categories not included in the law.<sup>68</sup> However, they stressed that, as of March 2024, the RNPDO had a record of 114,815 missing persons, about whom it was stated that 15,158 people had been located and 99,729 people would still be "in the process of being searched". The organizations said that there are currently two versions of the

Al respecto, el Centro Prodh enlistó los siguientes ejemplos:

I. Registro Nacional de Personas Fallecidas No Identificadas y No Reclamadas. Al corte del 31 de marzo de 2024, se contaba únicamente con 490 registros, frente a los 46.731 cuerpos que, de acuerdo con el último informe del INEGI quedaron rezagados para identificación, solo del año 2022. Es decir, el avance es sumamente lento e insuficiente respecto de la dimensión de la crisis forense y en términos de la debida diligencia para la búsqueda e identificación de las personas desaparecidas.

II. Base de datos ante mortem y post mortem. De acuerdo con la FGR, al corte del 31 de marzo se contaba con 134.449 registros en esta base; sin embargo, no precisa la autoridad responsable que realizó el registro.

III. Alerta Amber. FGR indica que contará la misma fecha que los registros previos, con 1.498 registros sobre niñas, niños o adolescentes desaparecidos o desaparecidas. Sin embargo, de acuerdo con el Registro Nacional de Personas Desaparecidas y No Localizadas, para abril de 2024 había más de 17.000 niñas, niños o adolescentes víctimas de desaparición (es decir, no se cuenta con la información de más de 15 mil niños, niñas o adolescentes).

IV. Registro Nacional de Fosas Comunes y Fosas Clandestinas. En particular, la FGR ha informado que, para el fin de marzo de 2024, únicamente se ha interconectado la información de fosas clandestinas, es decir, el Registro de Fosas Comunes establecido en la Ley General continúa sin existir. Adicionalmente, se tiene registro de 1.789 fosas clandestinas, cifra que contrasta con la información hecha pública en 2023 por la CNB, que tenía registro de, al menos, 2.863 fosas clandestinas desde el año 2006; mientras que ejercicios académicos y periodísticos dan cuenta de que la cifra es todavía mayor, pues se han documentado inclusive más de 5.600 fosas clandestinas.

V. Base Nacional de Información Genética. De acuerdo con la información proveída, la base cuenta con 9.374 registros, sin que se pueda distinguir si se trata de registros de muestras de referencia de familiares de personas desaparecidas o de cuerpos o restos pendientes de identificar. Adicionalmente, la cifra dista de los registros con los que una auténtica base a nivel nacional de información genética debería contar: es decir, al menos 52 mil registros de cuerpos, así como las muestras de referencia de las familiares de personas desaparecidas.

RNPDNO, the "statistics" version and the "new version of public consultation" that would still have errors in the records of missing persons.<sup>69</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

66. The Commission notes with concern the contradictory information from various authorities on the consistency of the RNPDNO and the impact that this lack of definition has on the families of disappeared persons in Mexico. In this sense, the creation of a registry is one of the many tools mandated by the General Law on Disappearances. The creation of databases and the flow of information between them must serve the ultimate purpose of finding the whereabouts of missing persons. To this end, the General Law on Disappearances mandates the creation of four registries: 1. RNPDNO; 2. The National Forensic Data Bank (BNDF); 3. the National Registry of Graves (common and clandestine), and 4. The National Registry of Deceased, Unidentified and Unclaimed Persons. The authorities in charge of creating and coordinating these registries are the CNB — in the case of the RNPDNO — and the FGR — in the case of the other three registries. However, until November 2024, only the RNPDNO, created by the CNB, existed and was in operation.

67. The IACHR emphasizes that, after the creation and implementation of the aforementioned registries, the State has the obligation to guarantee their coordination, systematization, and interconnection. This must be done in a way that allows the effective cross-referencing of information with the hundreds or thousands of databases existing at the different levels of government, ensuring at all times the adequate protection of personal data and focusing exclusively on the search for missing persons. Considering that, with the exception of the RNPDNO, the provisions of the law regarding the operation of the other registries have not been complied with, it is still impossible to achieve the necessary interconnection between them. Added to this situation is the concern generated by the revision of the RNPDNO data and the use of categories not contemplated in the General Law of Disappearance. While the State has not reported on concrete measures aimed at consolidating and strengthening the registries established by law, the Commission concludes that the recommendation remains partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

68. In order to comply with this recommendation, the IACHR reiterates its call from previous years, in which it calls on the State to complete the creation and effective implementation of the Forensic Data Bank, the Registry of Unidentified and Unclaimed Deceased Persons, the National Registry of Graves, and the Exhumation Program. On the other hand, it is important for the State to inform the Commission of the process of updating the RNPDNO and/or, where appropriate, of the conduct of the aforementioned census, considering that the recommendation highlights the importance of having a single registry. Similarly, in light of the recommendations issued by the UN Committee on Enforced Disappearances, it is crucial "to ensure that the different institutions report on the cases of disappeared persons that they know of and that the RNPDNO clearly identifies the phenomenon of disappearances of people in a regular or irregular migratory situation and is interoperable with existing migrant registries".<sup>70</sup> The Commission reiterates that the creation and strengthening of the National Registry of Disappeared Persons must guarantee its transparency and access by family members. In the case of the implementation of a census, it would be necessary to make public the procedure of the alleged data purification and the mechanisms by which the registry of disappeared persons would be carried out, transmitting to the public which is the authorized civil service and what are the questions that will guide its realization.

Recommendation No. 12 Strengthen existing mechanisms for early warning and urgent search in cases of disappearance of women and girls to ensure their effective implementation at the federal, state, and municipal levels. Likewise, strengthen the National Registry of Data on Missing or Disappeared Persons so that it provides accurate and reliable information on missing and forcibly disappeared women and girls.

69. Within the framework of Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that the Alba Protocol and the Amber Alert are in operation throughout Mexico, with differentiated approaches according to gender and the condition of children and adolescents. However, civil organizations highlighted problems in the homologation of the Alba Protocol, its lack of dissemination and adequate resources for its implementation. The IACHR welcomed the inclusion of differentiated approaches in the Standardized Search Protocol, but noted that the State had not submitted recent updates on measures for the approval of the Alba Protocol. Therefore, the recommendation remained in substantial partial compliance. The IACHR urged the State to standardize the application of these protocols and to ensure their effective implementation in all states.<sup>71</sup>

Compliance Information

70. In 2024, the State reported that the PHB includes a section entitled "Differentiated Search Guidelines," which would summarize the specific actions to be taken when missing or missing persons belong to vulnerable groups, such as migrants, people with disabilities, women, children, adolescents, human rights defenders, and journalists, among others. This would be intended to distinguish the conditions of vulnerability associated with disappearance in order to be considered as central axes in the search processes. The State specified that when searching for persons from indigenous peoples, an intercultural perspective must be used that guarantees the right to participation and information of their communities, which would include the availability of interpreters and traditional authorities as representatives of the families in the search process.<sup>72</sup>

71. According to the State, in the case of missing persons from the LGBTI population, street populations, or sex workers, the authorities should recognize that their closest link may be community-based, so that the rights of participation and information granted by the General Law should be extended to the members of these populations, ensuring that they are included in the search process. In addition, the gender approach would make it possible to analyze the dynamics of power and vulnerability associated with sexual and gender identity in cases of disappearance. The State reported that prosecutors' offices and search commissions would be responsible for mapping gender-related patterns of disappearances. Thus, the Alba Protocol would establish guidelines for the differentiated search for women, and the CNB, together with the National Commission to Prevent and Eradicate Violence against Women (CONAVIM), would have worked to harmonize this protocol in the 32 states. Although some state protocols would still apply a 72-hour deadline for the search, he clarified that the Homologated Search Protocol and the Additional Protocol for the Search for Children and Adolescents (PANNA) would require an immediate response.<sup>73</sup>

72. Within the framework of the PHB, the State stated that the authorities would have a reinforced duty of diligence in the search for children and adolescents, applying the best interests of the child. On the other hand, the Amber Alert would represent a national mechanism for the rapid search for missing minors, which involves various authorities and sectors of society. According to Mexico, when the disappearance of a minor is reported, the search strategy would be coordinated immediately, deciding whether to activate the Amber Alert. In this way, the strengthened mechanisms would allow for a faster, more coordinated response adapted to the needs of vulnerable groups, ensuring accurate and reliable information on missing women and girls.<sup>74</sup>

73. The Commission welcomes the strengthening of search protocols and alerts that ensure a differentiated approach that addresses the particularities of the various groups in vulnerable situations. In this sense, the first part of the recommendation advances to full compliance. However, the IACHR reiterates its concern regarding the challenges identified in relation to the Registry of Disappeared Persons, which were developed in the analysis of the previous recommendation. In this regard, although this recommendation has been fully complied with, the IACHR will continue to monitor the strengthening of the Registry of Disappeared Persons in the context of the follow-up to Recommendation 11 of this Report.

Recommendation No. 13 To heed the recommendations of the GIEI in accordance with the powers conferred in its mandate, specifically its repeated request to meet with members of the Army, as well as to visit Battalion 27 and continue with the investigations in the case. Consider the use of similar mechanisms for other cases of serious human rights violations.

74. In 2023, the State highlighted progress in the Ayotzinapa case, such as the Commission for Truth and Access to Justice in the Ayotzinapa Case (COVAJ) recognizing the State crime and new lines of investigation; and mentioned the identification of three students and the reactivation of searches. However, civil society organizations expressed concern about the lack of significant progress, the deteriorating relationship with families, and the refusal of the armed forces to collaborate with the GIEI, which withdrew due to obstacles in accessing crucial information. The IACHR welcomed the creation of COVAJ and the Special Unit for Investigation and Litigation for the Ayotzinapa Case of the Public Prosecutor's Office (UEILCA), but noted that the GIEI had faced serious difficulties in its work, including the refusal of the Armed Forces to hand over documents. The Commission considered that, despite some progress, the recommendation remained partially implemented due to the lack of full cooperation and the need for additional measures to guarantee justice and access to information.<sup>75</sup>

75. In 2024, the State reported that COVAJ had implemented a comprehensive model focused on victims. In this regard, he clarified that COVAJ had held 79 meetings to evaluate the progress of the case. The State referred to the publication of the Second Report in September 2023; and the publication of an addendum in October. The State highlighted that 191 search actions were carried out at facilities under military control between September 2023 and June 2024. As a result of these investigations, 124 people were arrested, of which 35 would be members of the criminal organization "Guerreros Unidos", and 70 police officers from different corporations and former public servants. In terms of prosecution, 48 working sessions would have been held with new informants, and collaboration with the government of Israel in the process of extradition of Tomás Zerón would continue. According to information provided by the State, 5,677 consultations were provided to the families of the victims, who would continue to receive support from social programs.<sup>76</sup>

76. For their part, civil society organizations related to the case reiterated their concern, because there would be little progress in the investigation process during the last year. To this would be added a deterioration of the relationship with the families of the 43 disappeared students with the authorities. The organizations stressed that after the departure of the GIEI there would not have been similar mechanisms. Similarly, they specified that, based on the latest GIEI report in which it was denounced that the Armed Forces had not cooperated in providing all the required information, the families would have promoted various actions of complaint and litigation so that the requested intelligence information be sent<sup>77</sup>: in particular, an undetermined number (at least 800) of reports from the Regional Intelligence Fusion Center. According to the organizations, despite these efforts, the information has not yet been provided, which would end up further deteriorating the dialogue between the families and the federal authorities. On the other hand, the organizations said that the authorities sought to impose the burden of searching for information on the families themselves. In this regard, they conveyed that in June 2024 the Federal Government delivered to the families 15 pages of the more than 800 that the families had requested in writing to the President of the Republic. The folios delivered would confirm that there would still be more information in the military archives that would have to be delivered.<sup>78</sup> The organizations reported that these documents would transcribe telephone taps made in communications of people possibly related to the events, which would reinforce the need for all information related to them to be made available. In addition, they reported that, in a meeting with federal authorities, including the then President of the Republic, it was said that there were just over 600 pages that the Army unilaterally determined were not relevant<sup>79</sup>. Finally, the Inter-American Commission learned that on December 4, the victims' relatives had a first meeting with President Claudia Sheinbaum. According to the representatives, the President "was clear on the need to rebuild the dialogue";<sup>80</sup> and offered "a new route to continue with the investigations of the whereabouts of the students, with the formation of a team of experts who will use technology, and to make a new review of the current files".<sup>81</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

77. The IACHR welcomes the efforts of the new administration to resume dialogue and trust with the families, and the implementation of measures aimed at guaranteeing resources and experts to the judicial authorities in charge of the investigation. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Commission observes with concern the lack of progress in the investigation reported by the families and their representatives, as well as the departure of the GIEI, which decided not to continue its work in Mexico as a result of "a systematic concealment of information by SEDENA."<sup>82</sup> The families and their representatives have the right to access information related to the case, regardless of the relevance with which the authorities qualify them.

78. However, taking into account that the recommendation provides that the State guarantees the GIEI the possibility of meeting with the Army and that the Group is no longer in operation, compliance with this recommendation is devoid of substance, so that its follow-up is considered closed. The foregoing does not mean that the State's obligations in relation to the rights of the victims and their families in the Ayotzinapa area have been fulfilled; however, the IACHR will continue to follow up on these obligations within the framework of Precautionary Measure 409/14 and its monitoring functions.

C. Torture

Recommendation No. 14 Adopt a General Law on Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and adopt all necessary measures to ensure that, at both the federal and state levels, legislation and practices are in conformity with international standards on the subject, in particular the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

79. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that the Attorney General's Office established the Operating Guidelines of the National Registry of the Crime of Torture (hereinafter, "RENATED") and has a Specialized Prosecutor's Office for the investigation of torture. However, civil organizations reported a high incidence of physical and psychological torture during detentions, according to the National Survey of the Population Deprived of Liberty (ENPOL 2021); and highlighted the lack of publication of the National Program to Prevent and Punish Torture (hereinafter, "PNCT"), despite the fact that the Ministry of the Interior presented the Strategy against Torture. The IACHR considered that, although progress has been made in the creation of the necessary legislation and structures, significant challenges remain, including the effective application of the General Law to Prevent, Investigate, and Punish Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman, or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter, "General Law against Torture" or "LGT") and the publication of the PNCT. Compliance with the recommendation was therefore maintained at a partial level. The Commission stressed the need to harmonize local legislation with international standards and to ensure the full implementation of the General Law on the matter.<sup>83</sup>

Compliance Information

80. In 2024, the State reported on the implementation of the National Strategy Against Torture (ENCT), which would aim to articulate a public policy to address this crime under two axes: (1) prevention of torture; and (2) care, assistance and comprehensive reparation for victims of torture. The ENCT is made up of 66 lines of action focused on the prevention and care of torture and six on the care, assistance and comprehensive reparation of victims of the crime of torture. 18 agencies and administrative units of the Federal Public Administration participate in its implementation, as well as the 32 states. Thus, the strategy would focus on the protection and promotion of human rights. Similarly, Mexico highlighted that, in October 2023, all states would join the ENCT. In this context, actions such as the National Training Program on Torture 2024-2025 have been implemented, which would seek to train public servants in the prevention and fight against torture and explained the establishment of the 2024 Annual Work Program and the 2024 National Campaign Against Torture, whose main objective would be to raise awareness among citizens and government personnel about the eradication of this crime.<sup>84</sup>

81. The State referred to the Annual Report on Results, which provides for an evaluation of the impact of these measures in the coming years. He added that the National Campaign Against Torture "Mexico Without Torture", launched in June 2024, would aim to make the problem of torture visible and prevent its occurrence through communications aimed at society and public servants. This campaign would include images and messages that would reinforce the importance of respecting human rights and promoting a zero-tolerance policy towards torture. Additionally, within the framework of the International Day in Support of Victims of Torture, a virtual meeting was held that brought together authorities from the 32 states. Finally, the State mentioned that the Mechanism for Follow-up on Cases of Sexual Torture Committed against Women is a body created to monitor and accompany women victims of sexual torture, with a special focus on those who are deprived of their liberty.<sup>85</sup>

82. For their part, civil society organizations reported that, seven years after the publication of the General Law against Torture (LGT), only one state of the republic, Oaxaca, would have a harmonized law on the matter; without there being a coordinated action to promote such a law in all entities; and that this has been recognized by the Follow-up Mechanism on Cases of Sexual Torture.<sup>86</sup> In relation to the National Program against Torture (PNT), between 2019 and 2021 a group of organizations worked on proposals with the various responsible authorities, including the SEGOB and the FGR. However, given the failure of the Attorney General's Office to publish the Program in accordance with Article 70 of the Law – which establishes that it should be published 180 days after the publication of the law – various organizations have filed legal appeals that continue to be heard. The organizations highlight that, seven years after the publication of the General Law against Torture, the PNT has not been published and warn that the National Strategy against Torture, presented by the SEGOB, would not comply with the provisions of the LGT.<sup>87</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

83. The IACHR reiterates its analysis of 2023<sup>88</sup>, in that the first component of this recommendation requesting the adoption of a General Law on the matter would be fully complied with, since said law was published in the DOF on June 26, 2017.<sup>89</sup> However, the recommendation also calls for measures to ensure that legislation and practices are in line with international standards in this area. The available information provided to this Commission shows important challenges in this regard. Similarly, the Commission notes that the State did not provide updated information related to legislative harmonization at the local level in accordance with the General Law to Prevent, Investigate, and Punish Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman, or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (General Law against Torture) and international standards on the matter. Finally, in the context of the application of the LGT, the Commission reiterates its concern over the statements that, according to the information provided, the FGR would have made in the sense of the "material impossibility for the publication of the PNCT."<sup>90</sup> Consequently, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation maintains a partial level of compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

84. In order to comply with this recommendation, it is necessary for the State to provide information related to the progress made in harmonizing legislation at the local level with international standards to prevent and punish torture, taking into account the progress reported in previous years. This will allow the application of the LGT and the fight against torture to be carried out transversally throughout the institutional apparatus of the State. Similarly, it is essential that the State comply with the second component of the recommendation related to the effective application of the General Law against Torture, and this implies complying with the publication of the National Program against Torture (PNCT), under the terms of Article 70 of that law.<sup>91</sup>

Recommendation No. 17 Investigate cases in which judges have not ordered an investigation when there are allegations or indications of torture or ill-treatment. Ensure that the Istanbul Protocol is implemented at the national level by competent and independent authorities in an expeditious manner and under risk of sanctions.

85. Within the framework of Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned about the National Registry of the Crime of Torture (RENADET), a tool for the investigation and collection of data on cases of torture and cruel treatment. However, civil organizations highlighted that, from January 2006 to October 2022, at least 33,768 cases related to torture were registered, with an estimated total number of 50,523 files nationwide. The IACHR stressed that compliance with the recommendation required progress in the investigation of cases where judges have not ordered investigations into allegations of torture, as well as the application of the Istanbul Protocol. Although measures and training had been implemented, the information available was not sufficient to confirm full compliance. Therefore, the level of compliance was considered partial, and the IACHR urged the State to provide information on the mechanisms for investigating cases of torture and the application of the Istanbul Protocol in all relevant cases.

Compliance Information

86. In 2024, the State said that the SCJN had strengthened its protection of the right not to suffer torture and to humane treatment through resolutions that would require due diligence in the investigation of acts of torture and updated the "Protocol for Trying Cases of Torture and Ill-Treatment," which guides judges on due process and access to justice. Mexico also reported that the SCJN had promoted training on the Istanbul Protocol and its application. It was also highlighted that the Federal Institute of Public Defenders (IFDP), since 2019, has a Technical Secretariat for Combating Torture, in charge of dealing with cases of torture and ill-treatment. In its observations on this report, the State reported that the IFDP has a Forensic Sciences Area (ACF), which provides opinions and advice following this protocol in cases of torture and cruel treatment. In 2024, the IFDP organized workshops on evidentiary exclusion, led by litigation experts, to strengthen strategies to ensure the elimination of evidence obtained by illicit means, the inputs of which are being used to develop new guidelines. In addition, the CJF has issued bulletins to promote the use of the Istanbul Protocol, strengthening the effective documentation of torture and cruel treatment. In addition, within the framework of the FORTAJUS-DH project, 12 standards have been developed to facilitate the identification of international obligations in the field of torture and 21 indicators to measure their compliance.<sup>92</sup>

87. According to the State, this body has developed projects to adequately document the exclusion of evidence obtained under torture and other human rights violations in judicial proceedings. To date, he has obtained 33 favorable sentences in amparo for the benefit of torture survivors and has prosecuted three cases for this crime. From 2022 to 2023, the IFDP filed various legal actions in defense of 345 people in prison conditions that constituted acts of torture, achieving immediate suspensions to attend to these cases<sup>93</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

88. The IACHR emphasizes that the content of this recommendation is twofold, the first in relation to the promotion of the investigation in cases with allegations or indications of torture, the second related to the application of the Istanbul Protocol at the national level, so that investigations are diligent. In this regard, although the State reported information on measures aimed at preventing torture and highlighted the IFDP's actions in dealing with cases of torture, the State did not submit information related to how it proceeds or what measures it has implemented to initiate investigation proceedings against judges who did not order investigations into possible acts of torture. Similarly, the second aspect of the recommendation is related to recommendation 14, which calls for the implementation of measures to ensure the harmonization of international standards in this area at the federal and state levels. The Commission emphasizes that, of the 32 states in Mexico, only one would have a harmonized law on the matter, so it could not be inferred that the application of the Istanbul Protocol is guaranteed throughout the country. Therefore, the recommendation remains partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

89. In order to comply with this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to provide information related to the mechanisms implemented to guarantee the investigation of cases where there are indications of torture, when judges have not ordered such investigations, including the results generated by these investigations. Information should be reported on ongoing judicial proceedings to ensure the implementation of the Istanbul Protocol in all cases where there are allegations or indications of torture.<sup>94</sup>

Recommendation No. 18 Establish the mandatory use of cameras and other security protocols during interrogations and patrols as a preventive measure against torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment.

90. According to Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State said that it had held meetings with the Armed Forces and police corporations to address the implementation of body cameras, including their placement in detention areas, and that it was working to strengthen the training of personnel in this area. However, civil society organizations reported that in 2020 and 2021 only 435 and 110 cameras had been granted to state public security agents, respectively, compared to a total of 174,536 agents nationwide. The IACHR observed that, in practice, the mandatory use of cameras and other security protocols in interrogations was not guaranteed. Although it welcomed the State's initiatives, it determined that these were only a first step to comply with the recommendation, which was still pending compliance. The IACHR urged the State to submit information on the progress made in the implementation of cameras and to take the necessary legislative actions to ensure the regulation and mandatory use of cameras in interrogations.<sup>95</sup>

Compliance Information

91. In 2024, the State reported that it had adopted measures within its National Strategy against Torture to ensure the prevention of torture in the context of interviews. And it reiterated the information provided in the framework of compliance with recommendation 17.<sup>96</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

92. The IACHR positively values the measures reported by the State to prevent torture. However, the content of this recommendation addresses the specific measure of establishing the mandatory use of cameras and other security protocols in interrogations and patrols. The State did not report information related to that measure. In 2023<sup>97</sup>, the State reported that meetings had been held for the implementation of these chambers. However, for 2024, the State did not report concrete information. Pending information on updated compliance measures, the IACHR concludes that compliance with this recommendation is still pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

93. In order to comply with the recommendation, the Commission invites the State to submit information on the progress and results of the initiatives to implement the use of cameras in interrogations. Similarly, it is necessary to carry out sufficient, indispensable and timely actions at the legislative level to guarantee the regulation of the mandatory use of cameras and other security protocols in interrogations.<sup>98</sup>

Recommendation No. 19 Establish guidelines for federal and state application on the compilation of uniform statistics on serious human rights violations. In particular, the State must improve the system for collecting information in a disaggregated manner, with a consistent and transparent methodology.

94. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State stated that, since 2017, INEGI had been generating information annually on the management and performance of public agencies in the field of human rights through the National Human Rights Census and the National Survey of Adolescents in the Criminal Justice System (ENASJUP). The State implemented a protocol for cases of torture and a Classifier of Acts Violating Human Rights was being developed. However, the IACHR observed that the National Survey of the Population Deprived of Liberty (ENPOL) only processed data on persons deprived of liberty and did not cover serious human rights violations in a uniform manner. Despite the advances, the available information did not fully comply with the recommendation, which led to classifying compliance as partial. The State was urged to expand data collection and ensure transparency in the collection of statistics on serious human rights violations.<sup>99</sup>

Compliance Information

95. In 2024, the State reported that INEGI presented the results of the 2023 National State Human Rights Census (CNDHE) and the Federal National Human Rights Census (CNDHF). These censuses would provide information on the management and performance of the CNDH and the Public Human Rights Organizations (OPDH) in each state, focusing on functions of government, training, dissemination, defense and protection of human rights. Its objective would be to support the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of public policies at the national level. According to the National Census, in 2022, 156,743 alleged human rights violations were recorded. Of these, 23,749 were reported to the CNDH and 132,994 to the OPDH.<sup>100</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

96. The IACHR resumes its analysis made in recommendation 7, in the sense of positively evaluating the information provided by the State, which allows it to account for a solid information system that contributes to the analysis of data related to violence against groups in vulnerable situations. The IACHR invites the State to guarantee and strengthen the functioning of INEGI, which is an institution that exemplifies good practices in the systematization and processing of information. In this regard, the Commission concludes that this recommendation is moving towards full compliance.

Recommendation No. 20 Eliminate arraigo and flagrante delicto from the Mexican legal system.

97. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State referred to the initiation of internal files to study compliance with the judgments of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR Court) in the cases "García Rodríguez et al. v. Mexico" and "Tzompaxtle Tecpile et al. v. Mexico,"<sup>101</sup> in order to evaluate the measures that the Judiciary should adopt to align arraigo and pretrial detention with those judgments. However, civil society organizations reported that, eight months after the ruling in the García Rodríguez case<sup>102</sup>, the figures of arraigo and informal pretrial detention had not been eliminated from the Mexican Constitution (on this subject, see Recommendation No. 50). Although the jurisprudence established by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights had begun to be applied judicially, the recommendation was considered partially complied with due to the lack of legislative progress to eliminate the arraigo. The Commission suggested that the State organize public forums to discuss the elimination of this legal figure and take concrete actions to that end<sup>103</sup>.

Compliance Information

98. In 2024, the State reported that the use of arraigo would have decreased since 2013. Thus, he reported that, in 2022, it was used in only 25 cases nationwide. Since the constitutional reform of June 18, 2008, the admissibility of arraigo was limited only to organized crime crimes. The SCJN's criterion has been that the exclusive competence to legislate on matters of organized crime corresponds to the Federation and, therefore, it determined that it is only the power of the Federation to legislate in relation to arraigo. This would imply that, after the aforementioned constitutional reform, no federal entity would be empowered to legislate on this figure.<sup>104</sup>

99. For their part, civil society organizations reported to the Commission that the State had not adopted legislative measures to eliminate the concept of arraigo from the Mexican Constitution. The organizations reported that, in the face of Congress' refusal to comply with the judgments of the Inter-American Court, the Judiciary has begun to apply, through jurisprudence, the established inter-American standards<sup>105</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

100. There is no information reported to the Commission that accounts for initiatives aimed at eliminating the concept of arraigo from the Mexican legal system. In this regard, the Commission maintains partial compliance with the recommendation.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

101. The Commission reiterates what it has stated above to the effect that compliance with this recommendation can only be achieved with the legislative elimination of arraigo. The Commission suggests that the State implement forums for public and democratic debate to continue the discussion on the elimination of this legal figure, which has been used to favor practices of torture, accompanied by forceful actions that achieve the objective of this recommendation.<sup>106</sup>

D. Extrajudicial executions

Recommendation No. 21 In any act in which there is deprivation of life by members of the security forces, carry out an exhaustive inquiry and investigation in accordance with international standards, and that investigations from the scene of the crime be carried out by experts who are not members of police or military agencies.

102. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that, under the General Law against Torture, victims have the right to be evaluated by doctors or psychologists of their choice; and that medical-psychological opinions must comply with the Istanbul Protocol. However, civil society organizations reported the lack of a public policy to address extrajudicial executions perpetrated by security forces, which would complicate the identification and follow-up of these cases, and reported that the State had not created the Special Commission of Multidisciplinary Investigation recommended for cases of massacres and disappearances of migrants. Although the State provided details on the rights of victims in cases of torture, the lack of updated information and specific measures for cases of deprivation of life by security forces led the Commission to consider the recommendation as pending compliance. It was suggested that the State provide data on thorough investigations and the participation of independent experts in these cases.<sup>107</sup>

Compliance Information

103. In 2024, the State referred to the Homologated Police Report (hereinafter "IPH") as an essential tool for police institutions, as it allows for the standardized documentation of information related to the availability of people and objects after police interventions. Its objective is to improve the efficiency of these procedures, guarantee due process and use the data for intelligence work that supports ministerial procedures. Between May 2019 and March 2024, 29.3 million reports were registered, with 1.4 million new records in the last period, of which 57% have a cartographic reference. In cases of interventions that result in injuries or deaths, the IPH requires a detailed report on the use of force, describing the conduct that motivated the use of force and the proportional level used, as established in articles 10 and 11 of the National Law on the Use of Force.<sup>108</sup>

104. For their part, civil society organizations reported to the Commission that there is no public policy for dealing with cases of executions involving security forces. Cases of extrajudicial executions would continue to be investigated for the crime of homicide, so that there would be no differentiation or particular measures when the perpetrators are public servants. According to the information provided, this situation would complicate the identification of cases and their follow-up; there would be no collaboration of the Armed Forces in the investigations of cases involving their members; and prosecutors' offices would have a tendency to minimize the impact of such events<sup>109</sup>. The organizations reported that, to date, the State has not created the special multidisciplinary investigation commission recommended by the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances, in April 2022, for cases of massacres and disappearances of migrants, which should be made up of national and international experts to support investigations with a regional perspective<sup>110</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

105. The information provided does not reflect a specific measure aimed at guaranteeing exhaustive inquiry and investigation in cases where members of the security forces are involved in cases of extrajudicial executions. Although the Homologated Police Report represents a first step in the documentation of these cases, there is no information on the follow-up of the investigation processes and how its application has impacted the clarification of responsibilities. In this regard, the recommendation remains partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

106. In accordance with the provisions of 2023, the IACHR reiterates that compliance with the recommendation requires measures that promote the investigation of the crimes in question. The Commission considers it important that specific data be provided on how a thorough investigation is being ensured in accordance with international standards. It is appropriate for the State to provide information on those cases in which independent experts participated.<sup>111</sup>

Recommendation No. 22 Ensure that the Armed Forces record the numbers of people killed and injured in their operations and that the corresponding investigations are opened when appropriate.

107. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that, through the National Federal Human Rights Census (CNDHF) of the INEGI, information would be collected on human rights violations in which SEDENA and SEMAR are presumed responsible. The State reported that INEGI collects data on people who have died, been injured, and detained during confrontations with public security elements through several national censuses. However, civil society organizations highlighted that, despite the progress in recording figures on people affected by the Armed Forces, the quality of the information reported remained deficient, with inconsistencies and stigmatization. The Commission positively valued the State's efforts in data collection but determined that the information provided was not sufficient to demonstrate improvements in public policies related to the attention and investigation of these cases. Accordingly, the recommendation was considered to be in substantial partial compliance. The State was urged to provide specific details on the operation and methodology of the Census, as well as on measures to improve the recording and investigation of cases related to the use of force.<sup>112</sup>

Compliance Information

108. In 2024, the State reported that, within the framework of the National Human Rights Information System (SNIGSPIJ), INEGI began in 2014 the Information Collection Program on Public Agencies for the Protection and Defense of Human Rights in Mexico, with the aim of systematizing and standardizing the data of the CNDH and the 32 state public agencies. The program was developed until 2016, when the review began to create an instrument that would capture information on violations and complaint procedures. In 2017, the Federal National Human Rights Census (CNDHF) was implemented, as part of the Specialized Technical Committee on Human Rights. Since then, the census has been carried out annually. The CNDHF uses existing classifications and catalogues and develops its own to standardise concepts and support comparative analysis. The data is collected through public informants in the CNDH, including specific roles to ensure the validity and officialization of the information. In this sense, INEGI's 2023 National State and Federal Human Rights Census identifies alleged human rights violations by security and justice agencies.<sup>113</sup>

109. However, civil society organizations indicated that there is no adequate registry of people deprived of life or injuries derived from the actions of the Armed Forces and that the Armed Forces do not comply with the detailed reports on the use of force as mandated by the National Law on the Use of Force<sup>114</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

110. The State reiterated the information related to the compilation of statistical information on human rights violations, which had already been evaluated positively in previous years—<sup>115</sup> and which is even valued with respect to other recommendations of this same report. However, the State did not provide information specifically related to the provisions of this recommendation, regarding the need for the Armed Forces to record figures on people killed and injured in their operations. Nor did the State transmit information on the opening of investigations into these events. In this sense, it is identified that there is not enough information to update the level of implementation of the recommendation. Accordingly, the Commission determines that the recommendation remains in substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

111. In order to comply with this recommendation, the IACHR reiterates the importance of having specific information on the existence of a registry of dead and injured persons derived from the actions of the Armed Forces, and on how its findings impact the opening of corresponding investigations.<sup>116</sup>

Recommendation No. 23 Establish a national registry on the location of unidentified remains buried in cemeteries throughout the country with causes of violent death. It is also recommended to search for clandestine graves in states that have registered high levels of violence.

112. Within the framework of Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State informed the Commission about the beginning of the operation of the National Forensic Data Bank (BNDF) and the National Registry of Unidentified and Unlocated Deceased Persons (RENAPEFA) as of May 29, 2023, with a gradual implementation of the National Registry of Clandestine Graves (RENAFO). The State mentioned that the main difficulty lies in the quality of the information and the lack of standardization between states and the central government. Civil society organizations highlighted the lack of an effective national registry, and delays in the implementation of forensic search and identification mechanisms, despite the law in force for six years. The IACHR recognized the State's efforts, but considered that the recommendation remained partially complied with, due to the need for effective coordination between authorities and significant progress in the implementation of the searches and search mechanisms. The State was urged to provide additional information on the operation of these databases and the activities involved in the search for clandestine graves.

Compliance Information

113. In 2024, the State said that in 2020 the CNB created the Mass Graves Module (MFC), a database that centralizes and standardizes information on bodies and remains buried in mass graves in Mexico. This system periodically compares the information with the Registry of Missing Persons (RNPDO) to find possible matches. Matches are evaluated to eliminate false positives and, if viable, investigated with local authorities. The MFC is updated through the systematization of burial and exhumation records provided by the cemeteries. The State reported that, between September 2023 and July 2024, the mass graves of 41 cemeteries have been reviewed, systematizing a total of 42,445 burials. The State reported the registration of 1,408 alternative data, such as variations in names, dates and folios. The National Forensic Data Bank concentrates the databases of the states and the Federation; as well as other databases that have relevant forensic information for the search and identification of missing and unlocated persons. Based on the General Law, it is the responsibility of the Attorney General's Office to coordinate the operation and centralize the information of the National Forensic Data Bank, as well as to administer the Federal Forensic Registry<sup>117</sup>. In its observations on this report, the State added that the Criminal Investigation Agency (AIC) of the Attorney General's Office is part of the National Exhumation Plan, making progress in the creation of protocols for controlled exhumations, with the objective of improving the identification of deceased persons in mass and clandestine graves. The AIC has worked on the consolidation of the National Registry of Common and Clandestine Graves (RENAFO), which collects information on municipal cemeteries and findings of clandestine graves identified by law enforcement institutions.<sup>118</sup>

114. The civil society organizations in turn reported that, to date, the National Registry of Mass Graves and Clandestine Graves, stipulated in Article 4, paragraph XXII of the General Law on Disappearances, which should concentrate information in relation to the mass graves that exist in the cemeteries and cemeteries of all the municipalities of the country, has not been consolidated. as well as the clandestine graves that the Prosecutor's Office and the Local Prosecutor's Offices and Prosecutors' Offices locate. Article 135 of the law provides that a National Program of Exhumations and Forensic Identification must be created, under the responsibility of the Attorney General's Office, which must contain, at least, the list of all the cemeteries and cemeteries in the country, as well as information on the number of unidentified bodies buried in each one and the corresponding circumstances and contexts. However, according to the information sent by the FGR, the Registry of Mass Graves, as regulated by law, would continue to do not exist.<sup>119</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

115. The IACHR reiterates what it said in 2023, in that it recognizes that institutional efforts have been made by the Mexican State to address the crisis of disappearance of persons and human identification, which have included the implementation of the BNDF and RENAPEFA. The Commission notes positively that the gradual implementation of RENAFO has begun. However, the IACHR once again observes a lack of coordination between authorities. The Commission is struck by the fact that, as in recommendation 14, although the law establishes the FGR as the competent authority—due to the characteristics of its competencies and investigative powers—these initiatives are being addressed by other state entities that lack the same powers. In this regard, although the actions implemented are positively valued, the IACHR maintains that this recommendation is in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

116. Recalling the guidance provided in the last annual report, the IACHR considers that, although there are several databases reported by the State of unidentified remains, it is necessary to have records in which the information dialogues in a coordinated manner to promote the exchange of information; and with an objective and transparent methodology that facilitates access to information for people who are looking for their disappeared relatives. The Commission invites the State to provide additional information on how the databases that have been designed in relation to the location of remains of persons who died in violent deaths and clandestine graves work effectively.<sup>120</sup>

Recommendation No. 24 Establish an autonomous national forensic services institution with adequate infrastructure, adequate human and financial resources, and standardized protocols applicable at the national level.

117. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State informed the Commission that the established expert procedure must follow a scientific or technical methodology according to current legislation, and that progress had been made in the implementation of the National Center for Human Identification (hereinafter, "CNIH" or "National Identification Center") and the Protocol for the Identification of Human Remains (PHB). However, the Extraordinary Forensic Identification Mechanism (MEIF) had a limited operation and was unable to sign coordination agreements with the prosecutors' offices or clearly define its operational destination. Civil society organizations reported the lack of an independent national forensic services institution and the ineffective operation of the National Identification Center due to coordination and resource problems. The IACHR appreciated the progress made in the National Identification Center and the PHB, but considered that the forensic identification policy was still unclear and that the MEIF had not shown significant results. Therefore, the recommendation was updated to substantial partial compliance. The Commission reiterated the need for an independent national forensic institution and requested information on the autonomy and effectiveness of human identification centres.<sup>121</sup>

Compliance Information

118. In 2024, the State reported that the National Identification Center, in coordination with the CNB, is carrying out the forensic search for the identification of bodies and human remains, applying a massive approach and through forensic genetics, 15 brigades have been carried out to take genetic samples in eight states from 3,749 families of 1,466 victims; and, at the time of the presentation of the Report, 3,518 referential genetic profiles have been processed, of which 1,102 have been delivered to relatives and 2,416 are in the process of being delivered. The State reported that, in collaboration with the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), 290 necrofingerprint records were digitized in three states. The CNIH reported 299 lophoscopic hits, which allowed the restitution of 12 individuals to their families in different states. In the area of genetics, 22 matches were registered, of which three remains of deceased people were returned to their families.<sup>122</sup>

119. For their part, civil society organizations recalled that in May 2022 the General Law on Disappearances had been amended to create the National Center for Human Identification, as an administrative unit, with technical-scientific independence, attached to the National Search Commission, which was to safeguard information aimed at human identification. And that this information, once processed, should be sent to the competent authority and made known to the families concerned.<sup>123</sup> However, they stressed that, after the changes in the ownership of the CNB, the National Identification Center would have begun to be dismantled and, with it, the proposal to generate massive schemes<sup>124</sup>. The organizations reported that the representative of the FGR during a session of the National Search System acknowledged that, in 2023, the institution's expert services genetically identified only 35 people and 4 with fingerprint crosses,<sup>125</sup> in the face of the crisis of tens of thousands of missing people in the country. Additionally, according to public information, 40 of the 59 specialists hired for the National Identification Center would have been dispensed with<sup>126</sup>. Finally, they stressed that since the CNIH was created as an administrative unit attached to the CNB with powers limited to those established in the General Law on Disappearances, the systems of expert and forensic services in the country were not reformed with the creation of the National Identification Center, so they would continue to depend on the mostly from the Attorney General's Office and state prosecutors' offices.<sup>127</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

120. The IACHR notes with concern the information highlighted by civil society that the recently created National Identification Center is being dismantled, that there have been layoffs of personnel, and that the personnel who remain attached to it lack professionalization. In 2023, the IACHR had already announced that, in order to advance in the level of compliance with this recommendation, it was essential to strengthen the National Identification Center. However, the available information does not distinguish new actions from such strengthening, but only decisions that would affect its operation and viability. Therefore, the IACHR considers it necessary to go back in the level of compliance with this recommendation to partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

121. Compliance with the recommendation in question implies the creation of a national institution of forensic services independent of the organs of law enforcement and administration of justice and, where appropriate, the creation of counterpart institutions at the State level<sup>128</sup>. While the human identification centers pointed in this direction, the IACHR invites the State to report on their current operation, functioning, and capacities, together with the level of autonomy that these institutions enjoy to meet the standard required by the recommendation.

Recommendation No. 25: Carry out all processes of exhumation and identification of remains with strict adherence to the dignified treatment of the victims' relatives by the authorities of all levels of government involved in the process.

122. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the Commission learned about the application of the Protocol for the Identification of Human Remains (PHB) and the Internal Guide for Comprehensive Attention to Victims. The Forensic Commission identified 72 remains of migrants in San Fernando and 96 remains in Cadereyta and the Organic Statute of the FGR was published, creating the Special Prosecutor's Office for the Investigation of Crimes Related to Migrants and Refugees. Civil society organizations highlighted the publication of the new Guidelines for the External Support Mechanism for Search and Investigation (MAEBI), but expressed concern about the lack of clarity in coordination; and obstacles faced by the Forensic Commission due to lack of support and collaboration. The IACHR welcomed the State's efforts to treat the victims with dignity and considered that the recommendation was moving towards partial compliance, asking the State to report on the results of the implementation of the protocols.<sup>129</sup>

Compliance Information

123. In 2024, the State said that the dignified treatment of family members in the exhumation and identification processes is a priority for the CNB. The State reported that, at the Third Ordinary Session 2024 of the SNB, it was emphasized that this administration would have stopped seeing the victims of disappearance as simple statistics, recognizing their histories and families. Finally, the State reported data related to the number of searches and meetings with groups and family members<sup>130</sup>. The State added in its observations on this report that, out of a total of 72 remains of migrants located in San Fernando, the Forensic Commission has been able to identify three. Likewise, with respect to the remains identified in Cadereyta, the Commission has confirmed the identity of 17.<sup>131</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

124. The Commission considers it necessary to insist that the information provided be related to specific measures and/or actions to comply with the recommendation. In this sense, although prioritizing dignified treatment of families and victims and expressing that victims are not a statistic are valued as positive statements, the State does not report concrete actions from which it could be verified that dignified treatment is guaranteed in exhumation and identification processes. Therefore, in the absence of tangible information, the recommendation remains in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

125. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to adopt and report on concrete measures and/or actions that guarantee results from the implementation of its protocols on the dignified return of human remains to the families and to report to the Commission on these advances.

Recommendation No. 26 Continue and deepen the work of the Forensic Commission for the Identification of Remains in cases found on migrant routes. Adopt the necessary measures for the creation of the Transnational Mechanism for Access to Justice for Migrants and their Families, as well as the creation of a Special Prosecutor's Office for Crimes of Violence against Migrants at the federal level.

126. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reiterated the approval in 2022 of the Guidelines of the Foreign Support Mechanism for Search and Investigation (MAEBI) by the National Search System. These guidelines allow Mexican embassies, consulates, and attaché offices to act as points of contact for families of persons who have disappeared abroad, making it easier to report disappearances and obtain information from their countries of residence. The IACHR welcomed these guidelines to improve coordination and cooperation in the search for missing migrants, but considered that the recommendation continued to be partially complied with due to the lack of additional information on the effectiveness of the MAEBI, the Forensic Commission, and the Special Prosecutor's Office. The IACHR requested updated information on the implementation and functioning of these entities in order to evaluate compliance with the recommendation.<sup>132</sup>

Compliance Information

127. In 2024, the State stated that migrants have the right to access to justice, regardless of their nationality or migratory status. Thus, the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Migration Crimes (FEDPMR) of the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic is responsible for investigating and prosecuting federal crimes committed against migrants, and coordinating actions for the reparation of damage to victims. Mexico highlighted that there are currently eight states with Specialized Prosecutor's Offices for Attention to Migrants. The State reported that the Legal Advisory Unit of the Federal Institute of the Public Defender's Office also offers specialized services for migrants and labor matters. The State recalled that, in May 2022, the Roundtable for the Search for Missing Migrants had been established, which has coordinated efforts with authorities in Honduras and several Latin American countries to search for missing persons in transit through Mexico. The State clarified that MAEBI was created to strengthen collaboration between various Mexican authorities and their counterparts abroad.<sup>133</sup>

128. For their part, civil society organizations reported that the MAEBI Guidelines, published in the Official Gazette of the Federation on December 14, 2022, would constitute an adequate measure to guarantee the implementation and effectiveness of the MAEBI. The foregoing, given that they make explicit legal obligations of the agencies in charge of receiving and attending to reports of disappearances and define lines for the attention to victims and follow-up of cases, as well as for articulation between countries. On the other hand, according to the organizations, the Guidelines would guarantee the application of the MAEBI to all countries in the region and reported that the Forensic Commission would continue to map victims of the three massacres that were the object of its mandate (the massacre of 72 migrants, the clandestine graves of San Fernando, the massacre of Cadereyta) and that, At the time of sending this report, it would have been able to identify, notify and repatriate/deliver the bodies of 97 victims<sup>134</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

129. The IACHR appreciates the information provided that accounts for the creation of a Specialized Prosecutor's Office for Migration Crimes at the national level. The IACHR also recognizes that the MAEBI would have guidelines that would guarantee its operation and that the work of the Forensic Commission would continue to be carried out properly. The Commission therefore concludes that this recommendation is moving towards full compliance.

Recommendation No. 27: Implement a national mechanism to facilitate the exchange of forensic information on the unidentified remains of missing Mexicans and Central Americans in Mexico with the forensic banks of missing migrants that have been developed in the region.

130. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reiterated the implementation of the Registry of Disappeared Persons (RNPDO) within the National Public Security System, the approval of the Bases of Collaboration for several registries, including the National Forensic Data Bank (BNDF), the National Registry of Unidentified and Unclaimed Deceased Persons, the National Registry of Mass Graves and Clandestine Graves, and the National Genetic Information Base; and highlighted the participation of the Unit for the Investigation and Litigation of Crimes of Forced Disappearance (UIDPM) in the search for missing migrants convened by the CNB. However, civil society organizations reported that the Roundtable for the Search for Missing Migrants has not been installed or publicly convened, and that the progress of the Inter-

Institutional Working Group Specialized in the Search for Foreign Migrants is not known. The IACHR appreciated the implementation of the Roundtable but stressed the need for actions to include the participation of the families of the disappeared. The recommendation was considered partially complied with due to the lack of information on how the records would facilitate data sharing with forensic banks in the region. The IACHR requested additional information on the effectiveness of the Roundtable and the specific measures for the exchange of forensic data with other countries.

Compliance Information

131. In 2024, the State reported that the General Law on Disappearances provides for coordination between different levels of government to search for missing and unlocated persons and incorporates a differentiated approach and special measures for the search for migrants. The law mandates the creation of various institutions, including the National Search System and the RNPDO. The State highlighted that, in November 2021, a roadmap was approved to prepare the Regulations of the General Law on Disappearances in collaboration with the families of the victims, civil society organizations, and authorities. Subsequently, in December 2022, the Guidelines of the Foreign Support Mechanism for Search and Investigation (MAEBI) were approved, which will allow Mexican embassies and consulates to operate as windows for relatives of foreigners who have disappeared in Mexico to report and report cases from their country, as well as request information and initiate procedures related to their rights. In May 2022, the Search Table for Missing Migrants was established, which includes the Inter-Institutional Working Group and the MAEBI. Between September 2022 and June 2023, meetings were held with Honduran authorities to coordinate efforts in the search for missing persons in their transit through Mexico. The State reported that three regional roundtables were held with consulates and embassies of several Latin American countries, and a National Meeting of Local Search Commissions to exchange best practices and design strategies for the search for migrants. Finally, the State specified that, in 2023, the CEAV coordinated with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to follow up on cases of Hondurans recognized as victims of crime in Mexico.<sup>135</sup>

132. For their part, civil society organizations reported that the operating guidelines of the Search Table for Missing Migrants are pending publication, which hinders its operation. The process of approving the draft guidelines, worked on jointly by the organizations and the National Search Commission, would have been hindered since the change of its head. However, organizations, together with committees of relatives from Central America, have held several meetings with the new administration of the CNB to promote the guidelines, which would have been complex in 2024 due to the institutional paralysis generated by the presidential electoral process.<sup>136</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

133. The IACHR welcomes the State's efforts to establish mechanisms for the exchange of forensic information and the creation of platforms to coordinate the search for disappeared persons. However, there is still a need to ensure effective implementation that integrates the participation of victims' families and ensures adequate data sharing with forensic banks in the region. Therefore, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation continues to be substantially partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

134. The IACHR invites the State to increase transparency regarding the results achieved by the Inter-Institutional Working Group. The Commission recommends strengthening the exchange of forensic information with regional databases to ensure better coordination and more effective results in the identification of human remains.

E. Access to justice

135. The Commission took cognizance of and closely monitored the constitutional reform of the judiciary, published on September 15, 2024, which has a direct impact on the right of access to justice. Although recommendations 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35 of this Report are framed in the area of access to justice, the detailed analysis of judicial reform is carried out in Chapter IV A of the IACHR's 2024 Annual Report.

Recommendation No. 29 Establish a coherent plan for cooperation between the federal and state law enforcement authorities in the investigation of serious human rights violations, with a comprehensive vision, specific protocols, and the adoption of technical-professional, rather than political, criteria in attracting investigations by the federation.

136. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned about the implementation of the General Law against Torture through inter-institutional collaboration, the preparation of the Strategic Plan for the Prosecution of Justice, and coordination with the Armed Forces and police corporations, and workshops given by the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Human Rights. However, civil society organizations highlighted the lack of adequate policies to address serious human rights violations, deficiencies in coordination between the FGR and the states in cases of migrants, and the prevalence of impunity in massacres of migrants. The IACHR appreciated the State's efforts but concluded that additional information was required on inter-institutional cooperation and the results of the investigations, maintaining partial compliance with the recommendation.<sup>137</sup>

Compliance Information

137. In 2024, the State reported that the National Conference on Law Enforcement (CNPJ) would have established itself as a forum in which prosecutors and prosecutors share information, best practices, and experiences aimed at improving the investigation of crimes. Between April 1, 2023 and March 31, 2024, the CNPJ held the XLVIII and XLIX plenary assemblies and held eight regional sessions, in which 90 agreements were adopted; such as the homologation of the criminal type of femicide, the creation of collaboration bases for forensic records, and the development of an investigation protocol under the National Model of Police and Civic Justice. Within the framework of the "Zero Impunity" strategy, collaboration between security and law enforcement authorities has been promoted, allowing the arrest of more than 84,000 members of criminal gangs, of which approximately 10,000 belong to criminal organizations. In the field of femicides, between July 2022 and March 2024, 1,149 femicides were arrested and 401 convictions were issued, achieving a 41.5% reduction in the crime of femicide compared to December 2018.<sup>138</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

138. The IACHR recognizes the State's progress in creating spaces for cooperation and coordination between different levels of government and in the implementation of strategies aimed at combating serious human rights violations. However, it is still necessary to evaluate the effectiveness of inter-institutional collaboration to guarantee the investigation and punishment of all crimes involving serious human rights violations in a comprehensive manner. Therefore, the IACHR concludes that the recommendation remains in partial compliance.

<sup>138</sup> SIMORE Inter-American, Progress report of the Mexican State on compliance with and follow-up to the IACHR's recommendations. Recommendation 29, Chapter V, September 30 and October 1, 2024.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

139. The IACHR recommends that the State increase transparency regarding the concrete results of the National Conference on Law Enforcement and strengthen accountability in the implementation of agreements and protocols. The Commission suggests that efforts be intensified to address cases of forced disappearance, particularly against migrants and other high-impact crimes in which impunity persists.

Recommendation No. 30 Adopt specific protection measures for victims, their families, representatives, witnesses, experts, and defenders who participate in the investigation or search for justice when they are at risk. Guarantee access to the files for family members and legal representatives. Impose appropriate sanctions in cases of retaliation against any of these individuals.

140. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned about the application of the Protection Mechanism and the collection of data by INEGI on complaints of human rights violations and victim protection measures. However, civil society organizations denounced an alleged internal policy in the Mechanism to reduce expenses, which would have led to the withdrawal of protection measures for people at risk. The IACHR valued the existing regulatory framework but stressed the need to strengthen protection measures and to receive additional information on access to files and sanctions for reprisals, concluding that the recommendation remained partially complied with.<sup>139</sup>

141. By 2024, the State reported that it would have included a new strategy that provides for the responsibility of the perpetrator in the comprehensive reparation of the damage and guarantees the non-repetition of the facts. In the event that the perpetrator lacks the resources to repair the damage, the State would have assumed the responsibility of providing subsidiary compensation. Between 2021 and 2023, the CEAV would have managed 21,069 files and offered 280,309 services to 32,783 victims. From May 2019 to March 2024, the CEAV would have issued 1,255 resolutions of reparation for human rights violations, benefiting 5,308 victims. As of June 2024, the National Registry of Victims (RENAVI) would register 75,863 people, and between January 2023 and June 2024, 19,246 new people would have been registered as victims.<sup>140</sup> She also stressed that the Inter-Ministerial Commission against Trafficking in Persons, coordinated by the Ministry of the Interior, would have worked to prevent and eradicate this crime and its violations related to human rights, with a gender perspective. In 2023, 1,967 public servants would have been trained in this area. The State reported the establishment of a roundtable dedicated to trafficking in persons, reaching a total of 22 meetings as of March 2024, which would have led to 99 agreements and made it possible to identify 60 targets related to criminal trafficking groups.<sup>141</sup>

142. The State added in its observations on this Report that the CEAV maintains 35,832 active legal advice and representation files. During 2024, 1,019 files were concluded and 155,631 legal services were granted, benefiting 7,483 women and 14,017 men in the situation of victim.<sup>142</sup>

143. The IACHR recognizes the State's significant progress in creating and strengthening mechanisms for the protection and comprehensive care of victims, as well as the increased financial support for the Protection Mechanism. However, further strengthening of protection measures and transparency in the implementation of resources is still needed, especially to ensure the continuity of effective protection measures for people at risk. The IACHR concludes that this recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

144. The IACHR suggests that the State increase the effectiveness of protection measures and strengthen transparency mechanisms regarding the execution of the Protection Mechanism's budget. The Commission recommends ensuring access to the files for victims and their representatives, as well as adequate sanctions in cases of reprisals.

Recommendation No. 31 Adopt specific protection measures for justice operators in accordance with their particular needs and in consultation with them.

145. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the General Agreement that regulates security measures for public servants of the Judicial Branch of the Federation, excluding the SCJN and the Electoral Tribunal; and that contemplates self-protection practices and measures such as armored vehicles and escorts, was known. However, the Federal Institute of Public Defenders reported the case of Judge Angélica Sánchez, who had reportedly faced reprisals and arbitrary detentions following a court ruling, raising international concern about judicial independence. The IACHR valued the measures reported, but stressed that challenges persisted in the protection of justice operators, concluding that the recommendation continued to be partially complied with.<sup>143</sup>

Compliance Information

146. In 2024, the State stressed that the security of justice operators would be essential to preserve their independence and the proper functioning of courts and tribunals. He said that, in situations of risk or intimidation, the Center for Attention to Security Requests (CASS) would have attended to 105 requests for protection for public servants, mainly from the Federal Criminal Justice Centers. For its part, the Executive Secretariat of Surveillance would have registered 242 matters related to the security of public servants, of which 147 would have resulted in support and protection measures. In total, 54 magistrates, judges, and other justice operators received security measures. In addition, according to the State, in order to prevent risks in judicial headquarters, operational processes were implemented, such as the evaluation of surveillance personnel, the supervision of security systems, and the monitoring of facilities, including the installation of security technology in various venues. These measures included the constant supervision of X-ray equipment and metal detectors, as well as information campaigns aimed at promoting a culture of personal security among public servants.<sup>144</sup> The State added that since 2023 the Security Coordination of the Judicial Branch of the Federation strengthened risk assessment, by optimizing the assignment of protection measures to public servants, as well as differentiated measures according to the level of risk.<sup>145</sup>

147. For their part, civil society organizations expressed concern about the reforms to the Judiciary published in the Official Gazette of the Federation on September 15, 2024, which would have included the figure of "faceless judges" for the prosecution of organized crime cases. It should be noted that similar figures adopted in other States of the region have been declared contrary to the American Convention on Human Rights by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR Court).

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

148. The IACHR appreciates the State's efforts to improve security conditions for justice operators through self-protection and physical protection measures. However, recent reforms to the Judiciary, by contemplating popular election and with regard to the incorporation of measures to protect the identity of justice operators ("faceless judges"), could represent challenges to security and transparency in justice processes. The IACHR concludes that this recommendation is in partial compliance, and stresses the importance of implementing measures that strengthen the security of justice operators, which are compatible with the standards of the inter-American human rights system.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

149. The IACHR recommends that the State review the implications of the reforms, in consultation with experts and international organizations, to ensure that the protection and security measures for justice operators are in accordance with international standards on the subject.

Recommendation No. 32 Ensure the implementation of the General Law on Victims and the functioning of the Executive Commission for Attention to Victims at the federal and state levels. In consultation with civil society organizations and victims, analyze and concretely address barriers that limit their effective implementation and eliminate them.

150. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported the conduct of academic activities in collaboration with the CEAV on victims' rights and mechanisms for their attention, as well as coordination in cases of federal crimes through a specific protocol. However, civil society organizations criticized the government's lack of prioritization in victim care, pointing to deficiencies in the CEAV, an insufficient budget, and a lack of effective national coordination. The IACHR appreciated the training efforts, but expressed concern over the absence of information on the participation of civil society and victims in resolving barriers to the implementation of the General Law on Victims, concluding that the recommendation remained partially complied with.<sup>146</sup>

151. For 2024, Mexico highlighted that the CEAV coordinates the implementation of the CEAV Institutional Program (PICEAV 2020–2024), aligned with the National Development Plan 2019–2024, which ensures the rights of victims within the framework of the security and peacebuilding strategy in Mexico. This programme complies with the obligations established in the General Law on Victims and contributes to international human rights commitments. The CEAV provides care to victims through specialized services that include legal, psychosocial and medical accompaniment, as well as help and assistance measures. In 2023 and 2024, it has focused on integrating the progress of the PICEAV, in accordance with the Planning Law and the criteria of the Ministry of Finance for the monitoring of programs. The State remarked that, since December 2021, the CEAV has undertaken a process of institutional redesign to strengthen the 32 Comprehensive Care Centers in the country, ensuring optimal conditions for personnel and facilities. In this way, she said, it seeks to enhance the capacities of the staff through the standardization of care processes and continuous training with a gender perspective, promoting a work environment free of violence. As of June 2024, the National Registry of Victims (RENAVI) has 75,863 people registered. Clarifying that, between January 2023 and June 2024, 19,246 people had been registered as victims.<sup>147</sup>

152. The CEAV would also have provided 268,799 services through social work, psychology and medical services, most of them in the National Network of CAIs. The General Directorate of Federal Legal Advice would have granted 137,610 legal services in 2023, resulting in 287 convictions and 3,450 new files in 2024, achieving reparations for 173 people. To ensure the sustainability of the care, the CEAV would have managed resources from the Public Security Contribution Fund (FASP) in collaboration with the Executive Secretariat of the National Public Security System, asking the governors to increase investment in the State Commissions for Attention to Victims (CEEV). In 2023 and 2024, agreements would have been made with various CEEVs to facilitate the integration of victim data into RENAVI, that there are already 20 entities that currently transmit information, and that an additional agreement was signed with Guerrero in 2024. The State said that the National System of Attention to Victims (SNAV) would not have met as stipulated in the LGV at the end of the six-year term.

153. The State added in its observations to this Report that the CEAV works on the basis of the Institutional Program of the Executive Commission for Attention to Victims (PICEAV 2020–2024) and that it operates with three objectives, 12 priority strategies, and 76 specific actions, guaranteeing the exercise of victims' rights within the framework of the National Development Plan 2019–2024. In addition, the CEAV has provided 173,006 services, including 111,819 social work services, 51,082 psychological care and 10,105 medical services, mainly through the Comprehensive Care Centers in the 32 states.<sup>148</sup>

154. For their part, civil society organizations reported that the SCJN determined that the 2020 reform to the General Law of Victims (LGV), which eliminated the obligation to allocate a minimum percentage of the annual budget to the CEAV, was unconstitutional. This decision, issued on March 13, 2024 in the framework of an amparo, would have invalidated a reform considered regressive for the rights of victims, since it eliminated a minimum budget (0.014% of programmable spending) for the care of victims, including expenses for comprehensive reparation, funeral, medical, psychological, hospital and other services necessary for the monitoring of their justice processes. The SCJN unanimously resolved the amparo in review 675/2022, concluding that the reform violated the principle of progressivity of human rights, stipulated in the first article of the Constitution. Civil society stresses that this judicial decision represents an important step forward to guarantee adequate and sustained financing for victims, although it would be necessary for the Congress of the Union to formally reestablish this obligation in the LGV.<sup>149</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

155. The Commission positively highlights the implementation of the CEAV Institutional Program (PICEAV) 2020–2024, aligned with the National Development Plan 2019–2024. It also recognizes that the CEAV has been providing victim care services, including legal, psychosocial and medical accompaniment, as well as assistance and support measures. According to information provided by the State, the National Registry of Victims (RENAVI) would have almost 76 thousand people, and more than a quarter of them were registered in the last period. The IACHR recognizes the State's efforts in implementing the General Law on Victims and the provision of services through the CEAV. However, the recent decision of the SCJN declaring the 2020 reform of the LGV unconstitutional highlights the need to ensure a minimum budget for the care of victims and to respect the principle of progressivity of human rights. The lack of this fixed budget, together with deficiencies in the coordination and participation of victims and civil society organizations, continues to limit the effectiveness of the implementation of the law. The IACHR concludes that the recommendation remains in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

156. The Commission invites the State to report on the processes of consultation with victims and civil society regarding the barriers in the implementation of the General Law on Victims, in order to adopt the necessary measures to address these problems.

Recommendation No. 33 Assume the historical responsibility of being accountable for serious human rights violations. To investigate, clarify and punish the acts committed during the time of the so-called "Dirty War".

157. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned of the actions of the Mechanism for Truth and Historical Clarification (hereinafter "Historical Clarification Mechanism" or "MEH"), including the convening to collect testimonies and the holding of "Dialogues for the Truth" in various regions, as well as a cooperation agreement with Argentina for the clarification of serious human rights violations. However, civil society organizations highlighted shortcomings in the Commission for Access to Truth, Historical Clarification and the Promotion of Justice for Serious Human Rights Violations Committed from 1965 to 1990 (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission for Access to the Truth of the Dirty War" or "COVEH"), highlighting personnel resignations, budget problems, and obstacles on the part of SEDENA in accessing military archives. The IACHR appreciated the State's efforts, but expressed concern about obstacles to transparency and access to information. It therefore considered that the recommendation continued to be substantially partially complied with<sup>150</sup>.

Compliance Information

158. In 2024, the State said that it would have implemented a Truth and Memory Policy focused on clarifying human rights violations committed between 1965 and 1990. Between September 2023 and July 2024, several activities were reportedly carried out in collaboration with the CNB and CNDH, including inspections in the 9th Military Zone and the Historical Archive of Sinaloa (identified as clandestine detention centers) and the exhumation of bodies in Ajuchitlán del Progreso, Guerrero. The Historical Clarification Mechanism would have presented its final report to the president of the Commission for Access to the Truth of the Dirty War and, subsequently, to victims' groups in an ordinary session of the COVEH. In collaboration with the International Coalition of Sites of Memory, 16 projects have been developed to strengthen archives and memory initiatives in the country. In April 2024, the basement of the building at Circular de Morelia 8 would have been officially declared a Site of Memory, and signage would have been inaugurated on public roads to highlight its historical importance.<sup>151</sup>

159. Civil society organizations reported on the delivery of the final report of the Historical Clarification Mechanism (MEHV), in two parts: on June 25, 2024, a collection entitled "It was the State (1965-1990)" was presented, and on July 11, 2024, the report "Undeniable Truths. For a Mexico without impunity." These reports would document serious human rights violations, the factors of persistence of these practices, and the barriers faced in accessing information from the Armed Forces and other security agencies. The second part of the report would have been submitted on 10 October 2024, following the conclusion of the MEHV's mandate. On the other hand, a journalistic work would have revealed on August 7, 2024 a list, presumably of the Mexican Army, with the names of 183 possible victims of the "Death Flights" in 1974. At least 160 of these names would coincide with records of missing persons in reports by the Special Prosecutor's Office for Social and Political Movements of the Past (FEMOSPP) and other entities. The company said that this is part of the information that the Armed Forces would have denied. Finally, on September 25, 2024, the Undersecretariat for Human Rights of the Ministry of the Interior presented an Executive Summary of the reports in a closed session, excluding some crucial findings of the MEHV, which was denounced by the commissioners, who reported that the magnitude of the violations and the factors of impunity documented were unknown. This situation would have revealed the lack of official recognition of the findings of serious human rights violations of the past.<sup>152</sup>

160. The IACHR recognizes the State's progress in implementing the Truth and Memory Policy and in its efforts to clarify the historical events of serious human rights violations. However, the difficulties identified by civil society, including limited access to military archives, the omission of critical information in the official version of the report, and funding difficulties, highlighted serious challenges to transparency and full recognition of the facts documented by the MEHV. These barriers compromised the effectiveness and independence of the Mechanism, which was critical to meeting standards of justice and truth. The IACHR concludes that the recommendation remains in substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

161. The IACHR recommends that the State continue to carry out measures to clarify the serious human rights violations committed during the so-called "Dirty War". In particular, to guarantee unrestricted access to relevant documentation, especially that from the Armed Forces, and to ensure the full inclusion of the findings in official publications. The Commission suggests increasing funding for COVEH to support independent work and facilitate the fulfillment of its truth and justice objectives.

Recommendation No. 34 Strengthen the Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and Journalists, guaranteeing its long-term economic sustainability and providing it with greater administrative autonomy and urging the states to collaborate with it. The Mechanism, meanwhile, is recommended to evaluate and adopt differentiated protection measures taking into account gender, indigenous leaders and environmental defenders, to carry out measurements on the effectiveness of the measures implemented, to promote institutional coordination and cooperation with the PGR, as well as to increase the transparency of all actions taken to strengthen the confidence of the beneficiaries. This must be accompanied by the development of a policy of prevention and participation of the target population.

162. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, progress was highlighted in the discussion of a new General Bill for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and Journalists, noting a significant increase in the resources and personnel allocated to the Protection Mechanism. However, civil society organizations expressed concerns about the lack of meaningful participation in the dialogues for this law, and stressed the need to strengthen coordination between local and federal institutions with the Mechanism. The IACHR appreciated the budget increase, but underscored the lack of information on measures to give the Mechanism greater autonomy and improve inter-institutional coordination. It therefore considered that the recommendation was still partially complied with and urged the State to report on the initiatives taken to ensure the autonomy of the Mechanism and the effective participation of the target population.

Compliance Information

163. In 2024, the State reported the strengthening of the Protection Mechanism based on three axes: (i) protection, (ii) prevention, and (iii) institutional strengthening, which would guide its activities and the implementation of methodologies with a gender perspective, achieving a differentiated analysis and promoting the active participation of civil society and international organizations. The State reiterated that, from its creation in 2012 until July 2024, the Board would have held 150 sessions and attended to 5,965 matters, with 90% approval of protection plans without the need for plenary sessions. In 2023, the Working Group for the Strengthening of the Mechanism would have made significant progress, complying with 66% of 75 prioritized recommendations, and by 2024, guidelines would have been established for the attention of collective cases and measures with a digital approach.<sup>153</sup>

<sup>153</sup> SIMORE Inter-American, Progress report of the Mexican State on compliance with and follow-up to the IACHR's recommendations, Recommendation 34, Chapter V, September 30 and October 1, 2024.

164. According to the State, the budget of the Mechanism would have tripled compared to previous administrations, with a total of 2,606 million pesos between 2019 and 2023, and an allocation of 599 million pesos for 2024. This would have made it possible to improve coverage in territories in need of protection for journalists and human rights defenders. In collaboration with the Mexican Institute of Social Security (IMSS), a Social Security program for Independent Journalists was implemented, benefiting 1,670 journalists with a budget of 47 million pesos, managed through the SEGOB. From March 2023 to August 2024, 3,344 public servants and defenders in various states were trained. To protect environmental defenders, Mexico reportedly implemented the Escazú Agreement and organized the "Regional Action for Environmental Defenders" roundtable in February 2024, integrating a local perspective into the Regional Action Plan for Environmental Defenders, approved in April 2024. Currently, 26 states have protection regulations for defenders and journalists.<sup>154</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

165. The IACHR recognizes the State's efforts to strengthen the Protection Mechanism through a significant increase in resources and differentiated protection measures for women, indigenous and environmental defenders. However, the lack of administrative autonomy and meaningful participation of civil society in the design of new protection legislation remains a concern. It is crucial to ensure more effective collaboration between local authorities and the Facility. Consequently, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation remains in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

166. The IACHR recommends that the State implement measures that provide greater administrative and financial autonomy to the Protection Mechanism and encourage more active and effective participation of civil society and beneficiaries in the design and evaluation of its policies. The Commission suggests strengthening coordination between the Mechanism and local institutions to guarantee comprehensive protection and prevent violations throughout the country.

Recommendation No. 35 Reform the Code of Military Justice to provide that when an element of the armed forces commits acts that could constitute a violation of human rights, such acts shall be tried by courts of civilian jurisdiction, regardless of whether the victim is a civilian or a member of the military.

167. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State informed the IACHR that the SCJN strengthened civilian jurisdiction for cases of human rights violations committed by the military against civilians, invalidating certain articles of the Military Code of Criminal Procedure that extended military jurisdiction. However, civil society organizations highlighted the lack of legislative progress to reform the Code of Military Justice, considering that Congress has presented only one reform initiative in recent years. The IACHR appreciated the judicial efforts, but stressed that the recommendation remained pending, urging the State to complete legislative reform to ensure that the military jurisdiction does not intervene in cases of human rights violations.<sup>155</sup>

Compliance Information

168. In 2024, the State reported that the SCJN issued resolutions that invalidate articles of the Code of Military Justice (CJM) and the Military Code of Criminal Procedure (CMPP), reaffirming that the civilian jurisdiction is competent to judge acts committed by military personnel that violate human rights, in line with international standards. The Court reportedly ruled that cases involving human rights violations, whether the victim is civilian or military, must be dealt with by civilian courts, thereby strengthening access to justice for victims and reaffirming the principle of separation between military and civilian justice. Despite these resolutions, the legislative reform of the CJM, which formally provides for the jurisdiction of the civilian jurisdiction for all cases of human rights violations committed by the military, has not been approved by the Congress of the Union.<sup>156</sup> The State added in its observations on this Report that various resolutions issued by the SCJN limit the scope of military jurisdiction.<sup>157</sup>

<sup>154</sup> SIMORE Inter-American, Progress report of the Mexican State on compliance with and follow-up to the IACHR's recommendations, Recommendation 34, Chapter V, September 30 and October 1, 2024.

169. Civil society organizations reported that the reform of the Code of Military Justice would remain incomplete, since the State had not carried out the necessary modifications to Article 57 of the CJM, in accordance with the judgments of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR Court) in the cases of Fernández Ortega<sup>158</sup>, Rosendo Cantú<sup>159</sup>, Radilla Pacheco<sup>160</sup> and Cabrera García and Montiel Flores<sup>161</sup>. According to civil society, the existing reform would be insufficient, allowing parallel investigations to be opened in multiple cases of serious human rights violations in civilian and military jurisdiction, which could dilute criminal responsibility and affect access to justice. A recent example would have been the case of the deprivation of the lives of six migrants on October 1, 2024. On the other hand, civil society organizations highlighted that, with the approved reform of the National Guard, Article 13 of the Constitution was modified, expanding military jurisdiction to hear crimes committed by members of the National Guard related to breaches of military discipline, which would contravene the standards developed by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and would strengthen a scheme of undue extension of military jurisdiction.<sup>162</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

170. The IACHR recognizes the actions taken by the SCJN to reaffirm the competence of the civilian jurisdiction in cases of human rights violations committed by the military. However, the lack of a reform of the Code of Military Justice, as well as the recent expansion of military jurisdiction through the reform of the GN, pose serious challenges to the implementation of this recommendation. The possibility of parallel investigations in civilian and military jurisdictions could undermine effective access to justice for victims and dilute the criminal responsibility of perpetrators. Consequently, the IACHR concludes that compliance with the recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

171. The IACHR recommends that the State move urgently to reform Article 57 of the Code of Military Justice to eliminate any possibility that human rights violations will be tried by military courts. It is suggested that the recent provisions on the jurisdiction of the GN be reviewed and ensure that cases of human rights violations committed by its members are dealt with exclusively in civilian courts. The Commission urges the State to implement clear mechanisms for cooperation between the Attorney General's Office and the military jurisdiction to avoid parallel investigations and ensure effective accountability.

F. Affectation of particular groups

1. Personas LGBT

Recommendation No. 38 Adopt the necessary measures to investigate, punish, and redress acts of violence against LGBT persons, in accordance with due diligence standards. Investigations into cases of violence against LGBT people should be free of stereotypical notions of LGBT people and should include determining whether these acts were committed because of the victims' sexual orientation or gender identity.

172. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned about the implementation of the National Protocol of Action for Law Enforcement Personnel in Cases Related to the Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity of LGBTI Persons, approved in December 2017. Although the IACHR recognized these advances as positive for equality and non-discrimination, it observed that no specific measures were detailed to punish and investigate with a differentiated approach, concluding that the recommendation remained in partial compliance. The IACHR urged the State to develop a comprehensive strategy for the investigation, punishment, and reparation of acts of violence against LGBTI persons, ensuring that the principle of due diligence is adopted and stereotypes are avoided.<sup>163</sup>

Compliance Information

173. In 2024, the State reported that the FGR had implemented various activities to improve the investigation and attention to cases of violence against LGBTI+ persons. In 2024, she collaborated with her office in Aguascalientes to prepare technical opinions on gender factors in investigations of discrimination against trans women, based on information from research folders and national and international documents. In 2023, the Guidelines of the Economic Aid Program for the Training of Trans Women and Men, Victims of Crime, would have been published, seeking to improve their job opportunities through education and training. The FGR would have issued administrative opinions in cases of co-maternity leave for workers in lesboparental homes, showing an inclusive approach in the internal administration. In 2023, the FGR participated in the Specialized Gender Network of the Ibero-American Association of Public Prosecutors, contributing information to develop resources on the investigation of violence against LGBTIQ+ people. For its part, the SCJN published the "Protocol for Judging with a Perspective of Sexual Orientation, Gender Identity and Expression" in 2021, which brings together judicial criteria and international standards to guarantee the rights of LGBTI+ people. This protocol underscores the need to apply standards of due diligence throughout the criminal process and eliminate stereotypes, promoting an impartial and effective investigation and would have continued to apply the "National Protocol of Action for Law Enforcement Personnel", approved in 2017 and published in the Official Gazette in 2018. This protocol establishes clear rules for cases involving LGBTI+ people, seeking to ensure respect for their human rights.<sup>164</sup> The State added that the CFJ implemented measures to protect and promote the rights of LGBT persons through training, legal assistance, and institutional strategies, as well as through the Well-being, Diversity, and Inclusion Strategy (BDI).<sup>165</sup> The State also added that works have been published on the recognition and guarantee of the rights of LGBT persons. Additionally, in 2023, the FEMDH participated in the review of the Homologated Protocol for the Investigation of Crimes against LGBTI+ Persons, in coordination with FEVIMTRA and the Aguascalientes Prosecutor's Office. This document was sent to the CNPJ, and after receiving contributions from 15 state prosecutors' offices, it is awaiting final validation for publication at the national level.<sup>166</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

174. The IACHR recognizes the State's efforts to strengthen the investigation and punishment of acts of violence against LGBTI+ persons through the implementation of the National Protocol for Action and the Protocol for Judging with a Perspective of Sexual Orientation, Gender Identity, and Expression. These protocols have been accompanied by extensive training that has benefited more than 15,900 public servants, reflecting a significant commitment to improving care for this population. However, while progress has been made in raising staff awareness and creating specific programmes for trans people, challenges remain in the practical implementation of the protocols. The lack of an Approved Research Protocol prevents a uniform and effective response, and the absence of a disaggregated data collection system limits the State's ability to monitor the impact of the measures adopted and evaluate their effectiveness. The recent evaluation of the protocol in collaboration with the National Commission for the Prevention of Discrimination (CONAPRED) and civil society organizations is a positive step towards continuous improvement, and shows a commitment to update and strengthen existing mechanisms. However, the existing problems in the practical implementation, as well as the persistence of stereotypes during the research process, indicate that there are still significant areas that require attention. In accordance with the progress made in the adoption of training, awareness-raising, and the creation of inclusive programs, in contrast to the remaining challenges, the IACHR advances the level of compliance to a substantial partial one, recognizing the significant efforts made, although not yet sufficient to achieve full compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

175. To make progress in complying with the recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to continue strengthening the implementation of the National Protocol of Action, updating it in collaboration with CONAPRED and civil organizations to address areas for improvement. The Commission suggests the development of an Approved Investigation Protocol and the creation of a system for the collection of disaggregated statistical data to monitor cases of violence against LGBTI+ persons, ensuring the elimination of stereotypes and the application of due diligence standards in investigations.

Recommendation No. 39 Adopt necessary measures in the area of violence prevention, including legislative measures and public policies aimed at eradicating social discrimination against LGBT persons, which enhances and reinforces violence based on prejudice.

176. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned about the activities of the Gender Equality Unit to promote LGBTI rights and highlighted the National Program for Equality and Non-Discrimination (PRONAIND) for the period 2021-2024. The State reported the issuance of an administrative opinion by the Attorney General's Office, which facilitated co-maternity leave in lesbomaternal homes. Although the IACHR appreciated these efforts, it noted that information on legislative initiatives was insufficient and did not detail how these measures contribute to public policies to prevent discrimination. Therefore, the recommendation was considered to be in partial compliance. The IACHR suggested that the State provide detailed information on public policies and laws for the prevention and eradication of discrimination against LGBTI persons.<sup>167</sup>

177. In 2024, the State reported that, to date, 22 states have approved laws that allow the administrative recognition of gender identity in birth registrations, facilitating gender change according to people's self-perception. Of these entities, 19 would have included the recognition of non-binary gender identity, allowing the inclusion of option "X" in official documents such as the CURP and passport. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs (SRE) would have implemented in 2022 an instruction to issue birth certificates to trans people in Mexican consulates, avoiding the need to travel to Mexico. The National Electoral Institute (INE) would have facilitated the change of sex in the voter's credential and promoted the inclusion of gender identity in its 2021 Children and Youth Consultation. The National Program for Equality and Non-Discrimination (PRONAIND) 2021-2024, coordinated by CONAPRED, would establish strategies to ensure equality and non-discrimination through regulatory reforms, affirmative actions, and training. A relevant legislative milestone was the approval, on April 25, 2024, of a reform to prohibit Efforts to Correct Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity (ECOSIG), imposing prison sentences and fines on those who practice these therapies. This reform, which came into force in June 2024, has been widely celebrated by international organizations such as UNAIDS and the IACHR itself. For its part, CONAPRED has actively monitored local reforms and, as of July 2024, has identified that 19 states have criminalized ECOSIGs in their penal codes and health laws, showing significant progress towards the eradication of discriminatory practices.<sup>168</sup>

178. The State added in its observations on this Report that the Chamber of Deputies set up a Working Group in conjunction with agencies of the Federal Executive and autonomous agencies, with the purpose of developing a draft general law on attention to sexual and gender diversity, as well as a constitutional reform to recognize the right to free development of personality. equality and non-discrimination based on sexual orientation, gender identity and sex characteristics. In addition, the Guidelines of the Economic Aid Program for the Training of Trans Women and Men, Victims of Crime, were published.<sup>169</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

179. The IACHR recognizes that the State has implemented a series of public policies and legislative reforms aimed at preventing violence and eradicating discrimination against LGBTI+ persons. The National Programme for Equality and Non-Discrimination (PRONAIND) and the actions coordinated with CONAPRED show a comprehensive and coherent approach to the transformation of discriminatory cultural patterns. However, challenges remain in the uniform implementation of these policies in all states, as well as in the adoption of laws and public policies that explicitly address the prevention of violence based on prejudice against LGBTI+ people. Due to the relevant progress in the adoption of legislative measures, the implementation of inclusive public policies, and active coordination with international and local organizations, it is concluded that the level of compliance with this recommendation advances to substantial partial compliance. Although efforts are still required to ensure uniform and effective implementation throughout the territory, the progress so far is tangible and responds to the objectives set by the recommendation.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

180. To advance in full compliance with this recommendation, it is necessary for the State to ensure the uniform implementation of laws and public policies in all states, ensuring that the recognition of gender identity and the prohibition of ECOSIG are effectively applied throughout the country. The State is invited to strengthen awareness-raising and public education campaigns, in collaboration with CONAPRED and civil society organizations, to address prejudices and stereotypes that perpetuate discrimination and violence against LGBTI+ persons; and to develop a monitoring and evaluation system that allows the impact of the public policies implemented to be measured, including the collection of disaggregated data on incidents of violence and discrimination. These actions would consolidate the progress made and contribute to the effective eradication of discrimination and violence based on prejudice, aligning the State with international human rights standards.

2. Women

Recommendation No. 40 Implement and strengthen measures, incorporating the gender perspective, to comply with the duty to act with due diligence to prevent, punish, and eradicate violence and discrimination against women, including concrete efforts to comply with the obligations of prevention, investigation, punishment, and reparation of violations of women's human rights; this includes training and monitoring of the authorities in charge from research, including health services and in the field of justice.

181. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the Commission took note of several initiatives and programs to address gender-based violence and promote equality, including collaboration with local entities and the creation of brigades for legal advice to women deprived of liberty. The State highlighted the implementation of the "Construye" program to promote egalitarian relationships among male public servants and the creation of a Specialized Gender Equality Unit in the FGR. The State also mentioned academic activities on gender-based violence and training on the General Law on Women's Access to a Life Free of Violence. However, civil society organizations highlighted gaps in surveys on violence, the use of punitive models in Women's Justice Centers, and persistent obstacles for victims of sexual violence. The IACHR appreciated the efforts, considering that the recommendation had advanced to partial compliance, but noted that challenges and the need for a comprehensive strategy persisted and urged the State to implement a comprehensive strategy that includes clear diagnoses and specific measures to avoid a merely punitive vision, including training, monitoring, and comprehensive care.

Compliance Information

182. In 2024, the State reported that it had implemented a series of comprehensive measures with a gender focus to address violence and discrimination against women. She highlighted the Comprehensive Strategy against Violence against Women and Girls, applied in 15 priority municipalities, involving 24 federal agencies and more than 200 local governments. According to Mexico, this strategy aims to reduce femicides and improve access to justice, and has resulted in the arrest of 1,437 people involved in gender-based crimes. It was also reported that the Women's Justice Centers (CJM) had increased their services by 5.4%, providing legal advice, psychological and medical care and shelters, supported by the Support Program for Specialized Shelters, which has received more than 2,525 million pesos. In the legislative sphere, significant reforms have been approved, such as the modification of the National Code of Civil and Family Procedures (CNPCF) in 2023, to guarantee the gender perspective in cases involving women and children. In turn, the General Law on Women's Access to a Life Free of Violence would have been strengthened to address sexual harassment in public spaces and improve inter-institutional coordination. The State added that the Commission for the Attention of the Crime of Intentional Homicide, headed by the Secretariat of Security and Citizen Protection (SSPC), was created to improve the prosecution of cases of femicide.

183. In terms of training, the SCJN has trained more than 152,000 public servants since 2018, including prosecutors, judges, and police officers, to address gender-based violence from a human rights perspective. Specialized protocols, such as the National Protocol for Police Action in Cases of Violence against Women and Femicide, have been implemented to improve the response of the authorities. Finally, the National Strategy for the Prevention of Adolescent Pregnancy (ENAPEA) has achieved a 30% reduction in the adolescent fertility rate in the last five years.<sup>170</sup> In its observations on this report, the State added that, in 2024, the investment approved for the key programs (Program to Support Women's Instances in the States - PAIMEF, Justice Centers for Women - CJM, and Specialized Shelters for Women Victims of Gender Violence) was 1,067.6 million pesos, totaling 5,597.8 million pesos during the entire six-year term. In addition, the National Data and Information Bank on Cases of Violence against Women (BANAVIM) was modernized to optimize the management of cases of gender violence.<sup>171</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

184. The IACHR welcomes the significant progress made by the State in the design and implementation of public policies, programs, and legislative reforms aimed at preventing, punishing, and eradicating violence against women, integrating a gender perspective. The implementation of the Comprehensive Strategy against Violence against Women and Girls and efforts to strengthen the Women's Justice Centers reflect a coherent and coordinated response to the challenges of gender-based violence in Mexico. The massive training of public servants, as well as the implementation of specialized protocols, indicate a clear commitment to strengthening institutional capacities to address gender-based violence. However, in the IACHR's opinion, challenges persist in the uniform implementation of these measures throughout the country, especially in rural areas and municipalities with high rates of violence. Information provided by civil society organizations highlights gaps in data collection and inter-agency coordination, as well as the persistent use of punitive models in Women's Justice Centers, which can limit access to justice for victims. Given the substantial progress in the creation of regulatory frameworks and the implementation of comprehensive strategies and considering the persistent challenges in practical application and in the collection of disaggregated data, it is concluded that the level of compliance advances to substantial partial compliance.

<sup>170</sup> SIMORE Inter-American, Progress report of the Mexican State on compliance with and follow-up to the IACHR's recommendations, Recommendation 40, Chapter V, September 30 and October 1, 2024.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

185. In order to fully comply with the recommendation, it is necessary for the State to strengthen the uniform implementation of programs and protocols in all states, with special attention to rural areas and communities with high rates of gender-based violence. The State should improve the collection of disaggregated data to monitor the impact of implemented policies and adjust strategies as needed, ensuring an evidence-based approach. It is essential to develop a comprehensive strategy of continuous training in collaboration with civil society organizations, ensuring that all public servants, including justice operators and health personnel, have up-to-date knowledge on due diligence in cases of gender-based violence. The State must promote a comprehensive care approach for victims, avoiding merely punitive models and guaranteeing access to health services, legal advice and psychological support, with a focus on the needs of victims. Finally, it is crucial to strengthen monitoring and evaluation mechanisms, ensuring the participation of civil society organizations and the affected women themselves, to evaluate the effectiveness of the measures adopted and ensure a coordinated and effective response.

Recommendation No. 41 Adopt the necessary measures to prevent, punish and eradicate acts of sexual violence and other forms of violence, torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment by the security forces against women, especially those deprived of their liberty.

186. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that the Secretariat of Security and Citizen Protection (SSPC) disseminated material on sexual torture in the Federal Centers for Social Rehabilitation and that the Commissioner for Prevention instructed prison staff on the prohibition of torture, seeking to ensure dignified conditions for persons deprived of liberty, especially women. While these actions are positive, the IACHR noted that the information did not fully address the aspects of punishment and eradication of torture and other cruel treatment of women in custody. The State mentioned a National Diagnosis on Sexual Torture with 67 recommendations, but no progress was reported in its implementation. Therefore, the recommendation was considered to have advanced to partial compliance. The IACHR urged the State to present more comprehensive measures to prevent, punish, and eradicate torture and degrading treatment, especially for women deprived of liberty.<sup>172</sup>

187. In 2024, the State reported the implementation of various actions to address the prevention, punishment, and eradication of torture and other cruel and inhuman treatment against women, especially in situations of deprivation of liberty. Among the most outstanding measures, SEDENA and CNDH organized 81 online courses on human rights, forced displacement and torture prevention, training 2,729 members of the Armed Forces. These trainings would have strengthened knowledge and awareness in the military field about human rights, including the prohibition of torture. The Mechanism for Follow-up on Cases of Sexual Torture Committed against Women (MTS), created to address this problem, has reportedly promoted 67

recommendations derived from the National Diagnosis on Sexual Torture. These recommendations seek to make sexual torture visible, identify challenges and place them on the public agenda. In December 2023, the MTS organized a Health Day at the Morelos Federal Center for Women's Social Rehabilitation, where comprehensive medical care was provided to women deprived of liberty, covering aspects of physical and mental health<sup>173</sup>. The State added that in 2024 the Mechanism and Criteria for the Preparation of Annual Training Programs was implemented, based on a diagnosis of training needs. The incorporation of the National Conference of Governors (CONAGO) in 2023, as a permanent guest to the national coordination mechanism, strengthened collaboration between different levels of government, promoting the implementation of policies for the prevention and eradication of violence.<sup>174</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

188. The IACHR recognizes that the State has adopted important measures to prevent, punish, and eradicate torture and other cruel and inhuman treatment against women, especially those deprived of liberty. The human rights training aimed at members of the Armed Forces and the promotion of the Mechanism for Follow-up on Cases of Sexual Torture represent notable efforts to address this problem from a comprehensive and human rights perspective. The care provided through health days in social rehabilitation centers and the comprehensive reparation resolutions issued by the CEAV reflect a commitment to reparation for victims. However, despite these advances, significant challenges remain, such as the effective implementation of the 67 recommendations derived from the National Diagnosis on Sexual Torture, and the lack of information on specific sanctions for perpetrators. The persistence of sexual torture and other degrading treatment, as well as the need for greater inter-institutional coordination and monitoring of the actions implemented, indicate that full compliance with the recommendation has not yet been achieved. Therefore, it is concluded that the level of compliance advances to substantial partial compliance, considering the tangible progress achieved, but recognizing that there are still critical areas that require attention.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

189. The IACHR invites the State to strengthen the implementation of the 67 recommendations of the National Diagnosis on Sexual Torture, ensuring their adoption at both the federal and state levels, and to strengthen the mechanisms for punishing perpetrators of sexual torture and other cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment, ensuring that cases are investigated with due diligence and that sanctions proportionate to the seriousness of the acts committed are imposed. It is essential to increase inter-institutional coordination and monitoring of the actions of the Ministry of Health to ensure a comprehensive response to cases of sexual torture. Finally, human rights training for personnel of the security forces and the prison system should continue to be strengthened, with a specific focus on the prevention of torture and respect for the rights of women deprived of liberty.

Recommendation No. 43 Adopt public policies aimed at restructuring stereotypes about the role of women in society and promoting the eradication of discriminatory socio-cultural patterns that impede their access to justice, including training programs and comprehensive policies for the prevention of violence against women.

190. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the State highlighted that the National Commission to Prevent and Eradicate Violence against Women (CONAVIM) trained more than 2,700 people, the Ministry of Public Education (SEP) implemented educational protocols on gender-based violence, and the Attorney General's Office developed activities with a gender approach. The Institute of Security and Social Services for State Workers (ISSSTE) created an Equality and Non-Discrimination Commission. The IACHR appreciated these efforts, but concluded that the actions should be integrated into a more coordinated and structured strategy to remove gender stereotypes. Therefore, the recommendation was determined to be in partial compliance. The IACHR suggested that the State adopt a comprehensive strategy that includes the construction, design, implementation, and evaluation of public policies with the participation of civil society and clear indicators to measure effectiveness<sup>175</sup>.

Compliance Information

191. In 2024, the State reported that various actions have been implemented within the framework of the National Program for Equality and Non-Discrimination (PRONAIND) 2021-2024, which aims to make visible and combat discrimination in Mexico through comprehensive public policies. CONAVIM trained more than 2,700 people on gender equality issues, while the SEP implemented educational protocols to address gender-based violence in educational institutions. The FGR developed activities focused on the promotion of equality and the prevention of discrimination, and the Institute of Security and Social Services of State Workers created an Equality and Non-Discrimination Commission to promote these principles in its sphere of action. The State reported on studies that analyze discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity in the labor market, as well as research on the financial inclusion of persons with disabilities; and diagnoses were made on the strengthening of capacities for employment, with disaggregated data from the IMSS and the Comprehensive Information System of the General Directorate of Technological and Polytechnic Universities. In the area of awareness-raising, Mexico highlighted that programs have been implemented to transform discriminatory paradigms in institutions and society. It was also reported that the Secretariat of Security and Citizen Protection offered training in priority municipalities affected by gender violence and femicides, in line with the established protocols.<sup>176</sup> In its observations on this report, the State highlighted the implementation of the National Strategy for Strengthening Police Action with a Gender Perspective, which trained 10,345 people, including 4,554 women and 2,626 men, in human rights and a gender perspective.<sup>177</sup>

192. To promote the rights of children and adolescents, the National System for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (SIPINNA) produced 50 graphics and 62 videos that disseminate the rights recognized in the General Law on the Rights of Children and Adolescents, integrating a gender and intercultural perspective. CONAPRED developed audiovisual materials and awareness campaigns such as "You discriminate when..." (2020) and "Being different is my right" (2022), using social networks to promote inclusion and combat discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity and the Mexican Standard NMX-R-025-SCFI-2015 on Labor Equality and Non-Discrimination was implemented, promoting the certification of workplaces in labor equality.<sup>178</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

193. Although there is a commitment on the part of the State to transform discriminatory paradigms and promote gender equality, despite significant progress, challenges persist in the uniform and effective implementation of these measures in all states. The information provided does not account for how the impact of these actions is assessed, and there is a lack of disaggregated data that makes it difficult to monitor progress. The reported actions lack a comprehensive strategy that encompasses everything from the construction and design to the evaluation of effective public policies, including more active participation of civil society and the development of clear indicators to measure their effectiveness. For these reasons, it is concluded that the recommendation remains in partial compliance, with important advances, but with areas that still require attention and strengthening to achieve full compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

194. To make progress in complying with this recommendation, the IACHR suggests that the State adopt a comprehensive and coordinated strategy for the restructuring of gender stereotypes, which includes the active participation of civil society in the design and evaluation of public policies. It is critical to improve the collection of disaggregated data to monitor the impact of implemented measures and adjust strategies as needed. The State should continue to strengthen training and awareness-raising programs aimed at public officials and the general public, integrating intercultural and intersectional approaches that address the specific needs of vulnerable groups, such as indigenous and Afro-Mexican women. Awareness-raising campaigns need to be intensified to eliminate gender stereotypes at all levels of society and to promote policy changes that reflect a genuine commitment to gender equality.

Recommendation No. 44 Design and implement culturally appropriate policies with the participation of indigenous women, applying a comprehensive and holistic approach, whose objective is the prevention, investigation, punishment and reparation of acts of violence and discrimination committed against them.

195. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the Commission took note of initiatives such as the FGR's Specialized Unit for Attention to Indigenous Affairs, which trained indigenous communities and public servants in gender-based violence. INMUJERES continued with its strategy to prevent and punish sexual harassment in higher education institutions and intercultural universities. The Mechanism for Follow-up on Cases of Sexual Torture was also published, which freed several indigenous women. The SCJN, for its part, updated the Protocol for judging with an intercultural perspective, and there are Indigenous or Afro-Mexican Women's Houses to provide culturally relevant care. However, civil society reported that, despite these efforts, policies that were sufficiently adapted to intercultural needs had not been implemented and that problems of structural racism and lack of recognition of indigenous normative systems persisted. The IACHR valued the initiatives and progress, but considered that a more comprehensive and specialized strategy is required to guarantee the prevention, investigation, and reparation of violence against indigenous women, noting that the recommendation has advanced to partial compliance.<sup>179</sup>

Compliance Information

196. In 2024, the State reported that it would have implemented various initiatives to address the needs of indigenous women. Through the Programme for the Comprehensive Welfare of Indigenous Peoples (PROBIPI), 157 projects aimed at benefiting 1,776 communities have been supported, including specific actions to strengthen community governance and promote the rights of indigenous women; and it would have provided economic support to community promoters of indigenous and Afro-Mexican women's rights to carry out actions with cultural and linguistic relevance. INPI and INMUJERES also collaborated in the establishment of the "School of Indigenous Women's Rights for Equality", which resulted in the creation of the "Women's Bill of Rights", addressing issues such as justice, education and health. Mexico highlighted that 195 radio programs focused on the rights of indigenous women had been broadcast through the Network of Indigenous Women (Red Mira). And he added that the State would have participated in projects to prevent trafficking in persons in indigenous communities in collaboration with UNODH, achieving the training of local actors and public servants. However, the IACHR warns that the State has not provided disaggregated data on the impact of these initiatives, nor detailed the effective participation of indigenous women in the design and monitoring of these policies. The available information, therefore, would not allow the sustainability and effectiveness of the implemented projects to be evaluated<sup>180</sup>. In its observations on this report, the State added that, through the Program for the Integral Welfare of Indigenous Peoples (PROBIPI), 35 Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Women's Houses were strengthened in 17 states, providing psychological, medical, and legal care in indigenous languages to women from 16 indigenous peoples. In education, the Indigenous Education Support Programme (PAEI) provided food and lodging to 40,129 women in 1,391 houses and dining rooms.<sup>181</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

197. The IACHR appreciates the State's efforts to design policies that seek to address the specific needs of indigenous women, especially through initiatives such as PROBIPI and collaboration with international organizations. The creation of the "Indigenous Women's Rights School for Equality" and rights-focused radio programs are positive steps towards greater visibility of indigenous women and the promotion of their rights. However, these policies appear to be fragmented and lack a comprehensive approach to effectively address the discrimination and structural violence faced by indigenous women. The lack of disaggregated data and the limited participation of indigenous women themselves in the development and evaluation of policies affect their effectiveness and sustainability, and problems of structural racism and lack of recognition of indigenous normative systems persist, limiting indigenous women's access to justice and adequate services. Therefore, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation remains in partial compliance; since, although notable efforts have been made, a more comprehensive and sustainable strategy is still required to ensure the effective implementation of culturally adapted policies.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

198. To move towards full compliance, the State should develop a monitoring system with disaggregated data that allows the impact of the policies implemented to be evaluated, identifying areas for improvement and facilitating the adaptation of strategies according to the results obtained. It is essential to guarantee the active participation of indigenous and Afro-Mexican women in the design, implementation and evaluation of these policies, ensuring that their perspectives are foreseen at all stages of the process.

3. Children and adolescents

Recommendation No. 45 Develop protocols for police action with respect to interventions with children and adolescents in order to ensure the protection of their rights.

199. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the National System for the Integral Development of the Family trained 28,878 public servants on issues such as human trafficking, children's rights, and gender-based violence. Mexico highlighted the participation of various institutions in these trainings and the implementation of courses and protocols, such as the National Protocol for Inter-institutional Coordination for the Protection of Children and Adolescents Victims of Violence. He also mentioned the use of a virtual campus to expand the scope of training. However, the IACHR identified the need for additional information on the specific application of these protocols by the police. Therefore, it concluded that the recommendation remained in partial compliance and asked the State for more details on the implementation and results of the protocols aimed at the police to ensure action with a human rights approach.<sup>182</sup>

Compliance Information

200. In 2024, the Mexican State reported progress in the training and development of protocols for the protection of children and adolescents (NNA). The National System for the Integral Development of the Family (SNDIF) trained 28,878 public servants on issues related to children's rights, human trafficking and gender-based violence, and the National Protocol for Inter-institutional Coordination for the Protection of Children and Adolescents who are victims of violence was implemented. The Ministry of Security and Citizen

Protection, in turn, carried out more than 4,000 courses and workshops focused on the prevention of violence, digital security and promotion of the culture of peace, with special emphasis on strengthening the gender perspective in police action. The National System for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (SIPINNA) has implemented protection programmes in the country's 32 states, achieving an advance of 73.3% in the creation of municipal systems. The State reported on the development of specific programs for the protection of migrant children, including the figure of the Child Protection Officer (OPI), with robust training in collaboration with organizations such as UNICEF and Save The Children.<sup>183</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

201. The IACHR welcomes the protocols reported by the State in the context of inter-institutional training and the implementation of protocols aimed at protecting the rights of children, including specific approaches for vulnerable groups, such as migrant children. In this regard, the Commission concludes that the recommendation is moving towards full compliance.

Recommendation No. 46 Implement and strengthen measures to comply with the duty to act with due diligence to prevent, punish, and eradicate violence against children and adolescents, including concrete efforts to comply with the obligations of prevention, investigation, punishment, and reparation of human rights violations and to consider the corresponding aggravating circumstances given the age of the victim.

202. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that the National System for the Integral Development of the Family, through the Federal Attorney General's Office for the Protection of Children and Adolescents, developed a Registry of Protection Measures that was about to be implemented. FEVIMTRA coordinated with the AMBER Mexico National Alert Program and participated in actions to protect children and adolescents in Mexico, including the National System for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents. The 2019-2024 Plan of the Commission to Prevent and Respond to Violence against Children and Adolescents (COMPREVNNA) was also mentioned, with an implementation report scheduled for January 2024. The IACHR welcomed these efforts, but determined that the recommendation was partially complied with due to the need for more information on the implementation of SIPINNA, the Registry of Protection Measures, and the COMPREVNNA Action Plan<sup>184</sup>.

Compliance Information

203. In 2024, the State reported progress in the training of personnel to address the protection of the rights of children and adolescents. The National System for the Integral Development of the Family would have trained 28,878 public servants on issues such as children's rights, human trafficking and gender violence, using both face-to-face courses and virtual platforms to maximize reach; and it would have implemented the National Protocol for Inter-institutional Coordination for the Protection of Children and Adolescents Victims of Violence, seeking to standardize the response of the authorities and guarantee a human rights approach. The Secretariat of Security and Citizen Protection (SSPC) would have reinforced its interventions in municipalities with a high incidence of gender violence, with a particular focus on the prevention of violence in educational and community spaces. Between September 2023 and June 2024, the SSPC would have carried out more than 4,000 courses and workshops aimed at promoting the culture of peace, digital security and the prevention of addictions in children and adolescents. Specific actions have also been carried out for the social reintegration of adolescents in conflict with the law, with a focus on education, health and job training<sup>185</sup>.

204. In its observations on this report, the State added that the Commission to Prevent and Respond to Violence against Children and Adolescents (COMPREVNNA), through the Office of the Federal

Attorney for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (PFPNNA), provided legal advice and representation in cases of custody, sexual abuse, abduction, and parental authority.<sup>186</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

205. The IACHR recognizes the State's efforts to develop institutional capacities and establish protocols for action to protect the rights of children and adolescents. The implementation of the National Protocol for Inter-institutional Coordination and the strengthening of SIPINNA reflect a significant commitment to improve the response to situations involving children and adolescents. The massive trainings carried out by the SNDIF and the SSPC are important advances, especially as they have included topics such as the gender perspective and digital security. However, challenges remain in the specific application of these protocols by the police and other security forces. Although the State reports progress in training, no data were provided on the impact evaluation of these trainings or on the effective implementation of the protocols at the operational level. The lack of information on the monitoring and supervision of police interventions in cases involving children indicates a significant gap in practice. Accordingly, the recommendation remains in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

206. To move towards full compliance with the recommendation, the State is invited to implement a monitoring and evaluation system that allows measuring the impact of training and the effectiveness of the protocols on the actions of the police and other security authorities. It is necessary to develop clear indicators that assess respect for the principle of the best interests of the child in all police interventions. The Commission suggests increasing collaboration with civil society organizations and international organizations to strengthen oversight and ensure that protocols are applied with a human rights approach, avoiding any type of abuse or mistreatment. Finally, it is crucial to ensure the active participation of children and adolescents in the development and review of these protocols, thus promoting an inclusive approach based on their specific needs and rights.

4. Indigenous peoples

Recommendation No. 47 Adopt measures to ensure that a culturally appropriate perspective is used and that the collective character of indigenous communities and peoples is taken into account when they, or their members, are victims of human rights violations.

207. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the Commission noted that the INPI had developed a Registry of Protection Measures for indigenous and Afro-Mexican persons, which was in the final phase of implementation. The State reported that these people were being supported in their release and that the role of interpreters and translators was strengthened and that families in situations of forced displacement or economic need were being supported. The State reported progress on a Constitutional Reform on the Rights of Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Peoples. However, civil society organizations highlighted that, despite the efforts, problems persisted such as the lack of progress in constitutional reform, mistrust in the judicial system, and the lack of quantitative and qualitative data on violations of the human rights of indigenous peoples. The organizations criticized the lack of recognition of indigenous justice systems and the criminalization of work in defense of indigenous rights. The IACHR appreciated the progress reported, but stressed the need for additional information on the participation of indigenous communities in the design and implementation of these measures. Therefore, while the recommendation advanced to substantial partial compliance, the IACHR urged the State to provide more information on how the measures adopted take into account the cultural perspective and collective character of indigenous communities.<sup>187</sup>

Compliance Information

208. In 2024, the State reported the creation of the National Catalog of Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Peoples and Communities. This instrument makes it possible to identify the country's peoples and communities in order to ensure the exercise of their collective rights and to guide the design and implementation of public policies. The Support Program for Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Peoples (PROBIPI) has prioritized the direct delivery of resources to communities, focusing on projects validated in community assemblies and strengthening the gender perspective. Between 2022 and 2024, more than 6,500 million pesos would have been invested in infrastructure projects, women's empowerment and promotion of cultural heritage. The consolidation of models of self-government, such as in the indigenous municipality of Hueyapan, Morelos, and human rights training for indigenous and Afro-Mexican communities reflect significant efforts in this regard. However, civil society highlighted shortcomings, such as the lack of comprehensive data on violations of the human rights of indigenous peoples and the inadequate recognition of indigenous justice systems<sup>188</sup>. For its part, the Commission received satisfactorily information on the constitutional reform that entered into force on October 1, which guarantees the right of Mexico's indigenous peoples to decide in accordance with their normative systems, representatives, and internal forms of government, and establishes that the nation has a multicultural and multiethnic composition.

209. In its observations on this Report, the State added that on September 30, 2024, Article 2 of the Constitution was amended, recognizing Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Peoples as subjects of public law, with legal personality and their own patrimony. In addition, on December 11, 2024, the Mechanism for the Implementation and Protection of the Rights of Indigenous Peoples was created, with the participation of 17 national secretariats and bodies to coordinate cross-cutting public policies.<sup>189</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

210. The State has demonstrated tangible progress in creating mechanisms to protect the rights of indigenous communities, particularly through the National Catalog and the strengthening of community projects; and through the approval of the constitutional reform. However, challenges remain in the effective implementation of a culturally appropriate approach that takes into account the collective character of these communities. The lack of quantitative and qualitative data on violations of the human rights of indigenous peoples and the limited participation of these communities in decision-making remain obstacles to full implementation of the recommendation. In this sense, the recommendation remains in substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

211. To achieve full compliance with the recommendation, the State must ensure the active and meaningful participation of indigenous communities in the design, implementation, and evaluation of public policies. It is necessary to strengthen the collection and analysis of specific data on violations of the human rights of indigenous peoples and to guarantee effective dialogue mechanisms that promote the peaceful resolution of conflicts in indigenous territories. Although the Commission took note of the constitutional reform that recognizes the rights of indigenous peoples and communities, published on September 30, 2024, the IACHR invites the State to provide information on the implementation of the reform and its impact on compliance with this recommendation.

Recommendation No. 49 Adopt the necessary measures to carry out free, prior, and informed consultations on projects that affect their territories.

212. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the Committee noted that the right to free, prior, and informed consultation has been in force since September 1991 with ILO Convention 169, although its implementation began in 2004. Between 2004 and 2018, the National Commission for the Development of Indigenous Peoples participated in 109 consultation processes, while since 2019, the INPI has participated in 178 processes and held 657 dialogue and consultation assemblies. Notwithstanding the above, civil society organizations documented serious human rights violations in indigenous communities, including the criminalization of rights defenders and the lack of recognition of indigenous peoples as subjects of law. The IACHR noted that, although mechanisms are in place to ensure consultations, there was a lack of specific information on how these consultations are conducted and how current conflicts are resolved. Consequently, the recommendation remained at a partial level of compliance. The IACHR invited the State to provide additional information on how prior, free, and informed consultation processes are guaranteed.<sup>190</sup>

213. In its observations on this report, the State added that the National Catalog of Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Peoples and Communities (CNPICIA) is the first State instrument that identifies and recognizes indigenous and Afro-Mexican peoples and communities as subjects of public law, guaranteeing the exercise of their collective rights.<sup>191</sup>

Compliance Information

214. In 2024, the State highlighted the creation of a National Catalog of Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Peoples and Communities, which identifies 70 indigenous peoples and the Afro-Mexican people, covering 12,711 communities. This catalog would have been designed to facilitate the development and implementation of public policies with a culturally appropriate approach and would have invested 6,537.8 million pesos in the Support Program for Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Peoples (PROBIPI) during the period 2022-2024, focusing on indigenous rights, women's empowerment, and promotion of cultural heritage. The State has implemented specific projects, such as the consolidation of self-government in Hueyapan, Morelos, and a training course on human rights has been held for indigenous and Afro-Mexican communities, and dialogue processes have been carried out in indigenous territories in various states for the peaceful resolution of conflicts. The creation of 244 Indigenous and Afro-Mexican Women's Houses and the implementation of 20,664 actions for access to justice would be part of the State's comprehensive approach to indigenous peoples.<sup>192</sup>

215. However, civil society organizations highlighted the persistent criminalization of indigenous activism and reported problems of structural racism and lack of recognition of indigenous peoples' own justice systems.<sup>193</sup> For its part, as already mentioned, the Commission positively recognizes the constitutional reform that entered into force on October 1 and which guarantees the right of indigenous and Afro-Mexican peoples to decide in accordance with their normative systems, representatives, and internal forms of government, and establishes that the nation has a multicultural and multiethnic composition. In particular, it incorporates the

Similarly, the reform determines that the Mexican authorities, within the scope of their powers, must establish specific budget items for the peoples and communities that they administer and exercise in accordance with the laws on the matter.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

216. The IACHR welcomes the progress made in the recent constitutional reform, because it represents a significant advance in the process of harmonizing norms and effectively recognizing the collective rights of indigenous peoples. However, taking into account its incipient approval, its impact at the national and local level is not yet noticeable. Likewise, the persistence of practices of criminalization of indigenous defenders and the limited participation of communities in the design and implementation of these policies remains a significant challenge, suggesting a need to more actively integrate the perspective of indigenous peoples into policymaking. In this context, the IACHR concludes that the recommendation is moving towards substantial partial compliance, recognizing the progress made in the creation of instruments and programs, but underscoring the need for more effective implementation and greater community participation in the process.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

217. In order to fully comply with this recommendation, it is necessary for the State to report on the impact of the constitutional reform and to strengthen the active participation of indigenous peoples in the creation and evaluation of public policies, ensuring that their voices are heard and respected. The State should improve mechanisms for collecting qualitative and quantitative data on human rights violations, including indicators that adequately reflect the cultural perspective and collective character of indigenous peoples.

5. Persons deprived of liberty

Recommendation No. 50 Correct the excessive application of pretrial detention, and apply it exceptionally, making use of other non-custodial precautionary measures. In this context, guarantee the immediate transfer of detainees to the judge, in order to restrict detention without a judicial warrant in cases of alleged flagrante delicto and flagrante delicto.

218. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned that the SCJN was processing the File for the Reception of Judgments of International Tribunals 3/2023, which would address the effects of the Inter-American Court's judgment in the case "Daniel García et al. v. Mexico" on informal pretrial detention. The SCJN reaffirmed its doctrine on the invalidity of local regulations related to pretrial detention, the requirements for granting substitutes for sentence and pre-release benefits and its relationship with the principle of social reintegration, and a Presidential Agreement was published to manage requests for pre-release and cases of people in pre-trial detention and victims of torture. Civil society organizations reported the elimination of informal pretrial detention in 18 states, without having implemented legislative or executive measures to eliminate it at the national level, and pointed out that the Federal Executive Branch had issued criticisms of the judiciary. The IACHR thanked the information provided, but highlighted the lack of updated data on the decrease in pretrial detention and the alternative measures adopted, and concluded that compliance with the recommendation remained pending. The IACHR suggested that the State strengthen measures to reduce the use of pretrial detention and provide data on its use, and reiterated its call to eliminate informal pretrial detention from the legal system<sup>194</sup>.

<sup>194</sup> CIDH, Informe Anual. Capítulo V. México, 2023, párrs. 264-270.

Compliance Information

219. In 2024, the State reported that, through the Amnesty Law and other pre-release programs, the government would have allowed the release of thousands of people detained for non-serious crimes, including older adults with chronic illnesses and victims of torture. Between July 2022 and March 2024, 8,733 pre-release benefits were granted, which included modalities such as early release, partial remission of sentence, conditional release and amnesty. According to the State, the Standing Committee for the Follow-up of Pre-Releases, created in 2021, would have played a key role in the review of requests for pre-release and in cases of torture, promoting the release of vulnerable people. In addition, reforms have been made to the National Code of Criminal Procedure (CNPP) and the Federal Criminal Code (CPF) to limit the application of informal pretrial detention to serious crimes, such as femicide and sexual violence against minors. The State would have cooperated with the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, which visited Mexico in September 2023 to assess the conditions of detention. The Working Group's report, presented in September 2024, recognized advances such as the reduction of the use of arraigo and the implementation of the National Detention Registry. However, civil society organizations reported that no legislative measures have been adopted to eliminate informal pretrial detention at the national level, and that the Executive Branch persists in criticism of the judiciary for its invalidity<sup>195</sup>. Finally, the IACHR learned of the constitutional reform initiative that seeks to expand the catalog of crimes that authorize informal pretrial detention. The reform was approved by the Chamber of Deputies on November 13, 2024 and went to the Senate for study<sup>196</sup>. The State added in its observations on this Report that the SCJN resolved four matters that establish some criteria for the delimitation of informal pretrial detention.<sup>197</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

220. The IACHR notes with concern the persistence of informal pretrial detention at the national level and warns that the constitutional reform initiative and the lack of legislative reforms to eliminate it completely show a significant gap in compliance with the recommendation. Although the use of arraigo has decreased, the application of pretrial detention is still frequent and disproportionate, especially in minor crimes, which affects people in vulnerable situations and contributes to prison overcrowding. The lack of up-to-date and detailed data on the implementation of alternative measures limits the ability to assess the real impact of these initiatives. Therefore, the IACHR concludes that the recommendation regresses to pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

221. In order to guide compliance with the recommendation, the Commission suggests that the State avoid advancing in the constitutional reform that expands the catalog of crimes that allow for informal pretrial detention and, on the contrary, that this figure be eliminated from its legal system. The IACHR also invites the State to strengthen measures to reduce the use of pretrial detention, as well as other alternative measures to deprivation of liberty during the trial. The assessment of these measures would require the State to provide data on the use of this figure, making it clear whether it has decreased or, on the contrary, has been maintained or increased.

Recommendation No. 51 Adopt all necessary measures to ensure a social reintegration strategy. In this regard, ensure that financial resources are directed to humanize and implement measures that allow the reintegration of persons deprived of liberty. In particular, with respect to people with disabilities, identify a strategy for social insertion through the implementation of services in the community.

222. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that the Inter-Ministerial Commission for Social Reintegration and Post-Penal Services, installed in 2019, was operational. It was reported that recruitment and hiring actions were being carried out for the Federal Penitentiary System and that eight complaints and three hearings had been filed with the Internal Control Body against prison officials and custody personnel; Of these, seven complaints and all three hearings were under investigation, and one complaint was resolved through an alternative dispute resolution mechanism in criminal matters. The IACHR observed that the State had only mentioned the strengthening of the social reintegration body without specifying how it would impact the reintegration strategy. He warned that there were also deficiencies in infrastructure, lack of training programs, mental health and tools for reintegration in prisons. The IACHR concluded that compliance with the recommendation remained pending. Consequently, the State was urged to provide assessable information on the social reintegration actions adopted and to move forward with a general strategy to guarantee reintegration processes, detailing the actions carried out by the Inter-Ministerial Commission.<sup>198</sup>

Compliance Information

223. In 2024, the State reported on a series of actions coordinated by the Decentralized Administrative Body for Prevention and Social Readaptation to improve the social reintegration of persons deprived of liberty. Programs in areas such as culture, health, education and job training were highlighted. The "Community Culture" program, implemented by the Ministry of Culture, offered artistic workshops in detention centers in four entities, with the aim of combating stigmas and promoting artistic expression as a means of rehabilitation. In the field of health, more than 70,000 general medical consultations, 19,000 dental consultations and 21,000 specialized consultations have been carried out in the 14 Federal Centers for Social Rehabilitation (CEFERSO), reinforcing the comprehensive approach to reintegration. The State also reported significant efforts in the training of prison staff, including the participation of more than 6,000 public servants in specialized courses, with the support of international organizations such as the PACCTO and the UNODC. The State also highlighted the implementation of digital training projects, benefiting more than 1,000 people deprived of liberty in the centers of Santa Martha Acatitla, facilitating their future reintegration into the labor market through learning digital tools such as Microsoft Office. With regard to adolescents in conflict with the law, the State mentioned the holding of workshops for the prevention of risky behaviors and sports programs such as More Beige, Less Violence, implemented in 13 detention centers, aimed at promoting healthy habits and reducing recidivism<sup>199</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

224. The IACHR recognizes the State's efforts to implement activities aimed at social reintegration, especially in areas such as health, culture, and job training. The creation of programs such as "Community Culture" and the development of digital projects reflect a commitment to improve the reintegration opportunities of people deprived of liberty. Care for adolescents in conflict with the law and continuous training of prison staff are important advances that contribute to the strengthening of the justice system. However, significant challenges remain in the implementation of a comprehensive social reintegration strategy. Although progress is reported in different programs, the lack of effective coordination and clear indicators to measure their impact limits the ability to evaluate their effectiveness. The absence of specific programmes for persons with disabilities and the lack of post-prison community services highlight the need to adopt a more inclusive and holistic approach to social reintegration. Therefore, the IACHR concludes that the recommendation is progressing to partial compliance, pointing to important but insufficient progress to guarantee an effective and coordinated social reintegration strategy that responds to the needs of all groups in vulnerable situations.

<sup>199</sup> SIMORE Inter-American, Progress report of the Mexican State on compliance with and follow-up to the IACHR's recommendations. Recommendation 51, Chapter V, September 30 and October 1, 2024.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

225. To achieve full compliance with this recommendation, the State should develop and implement a national strategy for social reintegration that includes specific programs for persons with disabilities and post-prison community services. This strategy should be based on a human rights and gender approach, and include clear indicators to assess the impact of the actions implemented. It is essential to strengthen inter-institutional coordination and ensure an adequate allocation of financial resources to improve the infrastructure of prisons and expand job training and education programs. The State should establish follow-up and monitoring mechanisms that allow the results of programs to be measured and policies adjusted accordingly, ensuring effective and sustainable social reintegration for all persons deprived of liberty.

Recommendation No. 52: Make public information about the American Correctional Association's ("ACA") standards for accrediting correctional facilities.

226. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that 12 Federal Institutions were certified by the American Correctional Association (ACA), some of which had been audited and recommended for reaccreditation and the accreditation of five additional correctional institutions was sought for that year. The IACHR welcomed these advances and considered that the recommendation had achieved substantial partial compliance. However, it requested additional information from the State on the progress made in the certification of the remaining prisons in order to make progress in full compliance with the recommendation.<sup>200</sup>

Compliance Information

227. In 2024, the State reported that at least 12 federal correctional facilities would be certified by the ACA, and some of these institutions would have been audited for reaccreditation; and the accreditation of five additional facilities was sought to improve operating standards and detention conditions in the federal prison system. The activities reported would include the optimization of prison infrastructure and the disincorporation of five facilities, which would allow for more efficient management of resources and improve conditions of detention. The State reported efforts to improve governance, health, and training within prisons. Between September 2023 and June 2024, more than 158,000 medical consultations and more than 12,000 cultural and educational activities for people deprived of liberty were reportedly carried out. The funds from the Fund for the Strengthening of Public Security Institutions (FOFISP) would have been allocated to 10 states, with a total investment of 129.15 million pesos, aimed at improving infrastructure and prison services.<sup>201</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

228. The State has demonstrated significant progress in implementing the ACA's accreditation standards for federal correctional facilities, reflecting an effort to improve governance and conditions of detention. The expansion of the accreditation program to five additional centers and the reported improvements in infrastructure, health, and reintegration activities are important steps toward meeting the recommendation. The use of FOFISP resources to strengthen the national prison system and the optimization of installed capacity are indicative of a commitment to improve conditions of detention.

229. However, the IACHR notes that the recommendation remains in substantial partial compliance, as challenges persist in the public dissemination of the ACA's standards. Transparency in these processes is essential to enable independent evaluation, and to enable civil society and stakeholders to learn about the criteria used for accreditation, as well as the tangible benefits that these certifications bring to the prison system.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

230. In order to fully comply with the recommendation, it is necessary for the State to submit information on the progress made in the certification processes of the remaining prisons.

Recommendation No. 53 Implement normative and any other measures to guarantee conditions of detention appropriate to the particular needs of groups in a particularly vulnerable situation. With regard to women deprived of liberty, the State must ensure that the adoption of respective measures takes into account a gender approach. With respect to persons with disabilities deprived of their liberty, the Mexican State must guarantee the elimination of environmental barriers that hinder the exercise of their rights, through reasonable accommodations.

231. According to Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that, in conjunction with permanent services, specific medical care is provided for women in prisons and that spaces adapted for people with disabilities have been set up. However, civil society organizations reported troubling conditions in the centers, including severe overcrowding, lack of access to personal hygiene products, and an increased incidence of violence and discrimination against LGBTI people and trans women. The IACHR noted these conditions with concern and highlighted the lack of progress in complying with the recommendation. The recommendation remained pending, and additional information was requested on measures taken to ensure dignified and adequate conditions of detention, especially for women and persons with disabilities.<sup>202</sup>

Compliance Information

232. In 2024, the State reported that various measures have been implemented to improve the conditions of detention of people in vulnerable situations, with a specific focus on women and people with disabilities. Among the advances, mention is made of the provision of specialized medical services for women in prisons, as well as the provision of spaces adapted for persons with disabilities, complying with the reasonable adjustments necessary to facilitate access to their rights. With regard to women deprived of liberty, the State reported the implementation of educational, health, and recreational programs at CEFERESO CPS 16 Femenil, where 632 specialized medical consultations were provided and educational activities were carried out for 110 women, and job training workshops and recreational activities, such as yoga, theater, and dance, were offered. with the active participation of the inmates and provided psychological care services, with 11,859 participations in self-care workshops and preventive talks. These initiatives seek to mitigate the negative effects of imprisonment and promote effective reintegration. The State reported on the massive training of security and law enforcement officers on human rights issues, a gender perspective, and attention to victims. In collaboration with the National Human Rights Commission, CONAPRED and INMUJERES, 3,609 members of the Federal Protection Service were trained to improve police action with a gender perspective. These actions reflect an effort to strengthen the protection of the rights of women deprived of liberty and guarantee more dignified conditions of detention.<sup>203</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

233. Despite the progress reported, structural problems persist, such as overcrowding and lack of access to basic products, which disproportionately affect women and LGBTI people, highlighting the need to strengthen these measures. Insufficient information was provided on how environmental barriers are being removed for persons with disabilities deprived of their liberty. In addition, during the Hearing "Situation of Women Deprived of Liberty in CEFERESO 16”<sup>204</sup> of the 191st Period of Sessions and the Hearing "Human Rights of Women with Disabilities," civil society organizations informed the Commission of challenges in guaranteeing the rights of women deprived of liberty. This has led to deaths in custody allegedly by suicide. In addition, the organizations pointed to a lack of attention to physical and mental health, adequate investigations and mechanisms for non-repetition of the facts. Therefore, the recommendation is considered to be moving towards partial compliance, with the need to adopt more comprehensive and sustainable measures to guarantee adequate conditions of detention.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

234. Compliance with this recommendation requires the State to provide situational information that serves as a baseline for the IACHR in its assessment of the measures adopted by Mexico to guarantee adequate conditions of detention, with particular emphasis on the specific measures for women deprived of liberty and persons with disabilities. These measures may consist of public policies, institutional strengthening actions, provision of resources, among others.

Recommendation No. 54 Adopt measures to address pretrial detention and high levels of overcrowding. The measures to be adopted may consist, inter alia, of increasing the number of criminal enforcement judges and establishing periodic brigades for the review of cases to identify cases of excessive length of pretrial detention.

235. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned of the progress made by the SCJN in the analysis of the constitutionality of informal pretrial detention and the collaboration with federal authorities to manage the transfer of people who require special surveillance measures. However, civil society organizations reported that pretrial detention continued to affect judicial independence and had increased significantly since the 2019 reform, with a 25% increase in the number of people in pretrial detention without sentence, affecting approximately 40% of crimes. The IACHR observed that, despite jurisdictional advances, the regulations were still in force and the percentage of people in pretrial detention had increased. The recommendation was maintained with partial compliance, and the IACHR requested additional information on the reduction of pretrial detention and overcrowding in prisons.<sup>205</sup>

Compliance Information

236. In 2024, the State reported the implementation of strategies to reduce the excessive use of pretrial detention and mitigate overcrowding in prisons. The SCJN carried out a continuous analysis of the constitutionality of informal pretrial detention, reaffirming the need for its application in exceptional cases and underlining the importance of guaranteeing access to a fair trial. A programme of periodic review of files was also implemented, coordinated by the National Commission of Superior Courts of Justice and the Decentralized Administrative Body for Prevention and Social Rehabilitation. This programme included collaboration with criminal enforcement judges to assess cases of prolonged pretrial detention and to offer alternative measures, such as conditional release and partial remission of sentence. Through these initiatives, 7,315 cases of people who have exceeded the maximum time allowed in pretrial detention have been managed. The State reported the installation of periodic brigades to review files, composed of representatives of the Judiciary, FGR, CEAV, and CNDH. These brigades would have made it possible to find cases of people unjustly detained or in conditions that require urgent intervention, facilitating their release through amparo or other legal remedies. As of March 2024, 4,108 cases of people released through these review brigades were reported.<sup>206</sup> The State added in its observations on this Report that the SCJN has promoted initiatives aimed at applying differentiated approaches, in particular a Latin American Congress and the publication of a work on the subject.<sup>207</sup>

237. However, civil society organizations reported that pretrial detention continues to be applied in a generalized and automatic manner, affecting judicial independence and contributing to overcrowding in prisons. They reported a 25% increase in the number of people in pretrial detention since the 2019 reform, which has led to overcrowding in several prisons in the country. The widespread use of pretrial detention continues to disproportionately affect low-income people, indigenous people, and other vulnerable groups, exacerbating conditions of detention and perpetuating discriminatory practices.<sup>208</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

238. The IACHR notes with concern that the excessive use of pretrial detention as a precautionary measure continues to be a structural problem, especially after the 2019 reform, which expanded its application to a greater number of crimes; and with the 2024 constitutional reform initiative that seeks to expand the catalog of crimes that allow informal pretrial detention. The 25 per cent increase in the pretrial detention population indicates that the measures taken so far have not been sufficient to reverse this trend. While progress has been made in reviewing cases and promoting alternatives to pretrial detention, data provided by the State show that the percentage of people in pretrial detention remains high, and prison overcrowding continues to be a significant problem. The actions implemented have not been able to effectively mitigate the impact of pretrial detention on the human rights of detainees, especially in relation to vulnerable groups. Therefore, it is considered that this recommendation remains in partial compliance, given that measures have been adopted, but a more comprehensive and effective strategy is still required to reduce the use of pretrial detention and address the problem of overcrowding.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

239. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR reiterates the importance of the State adopting compliance measures that address the problem of the indiscriminate use of pretrial detention, while at the same time addressing overcrowding. The evaluation of progress in compliance with the recommendation therefore requires official information demonstrating the measures adopted to address these problems, indicating what results have been obtained.

6. Migrants and people facing forced internal displacement

Recommendation No. 57 Prepare a national diagnosis to "characterize" internal displacement in Mexico and, consequently, adopt a national policy and measures aimed at providing a response in accordance with international standards on the subject, in particular the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement.

240. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported significant progress in addressing internal forced displacement in Mexico, including the preparation of the National Diagnosis and the Survey to Characterize the Population in a Situation of Internal Forced Displacement in Chihuahua; as well as the inclusion of the issue in several federal programs and the enactment of local laws. However, civil society organizations highlighted the lack of a comprehensive national policy and persistent challenges in the care and protection of displaced persons. The IACHR welcomed the progress, concluding that the recommendation advanced to a substantial level of partial compliance, highlighting the need for a national policy harmonized with international standards, and requesting additional information on its implementation and results.<sup>209</sup>

Compliance Information

241. In 2024, the State underscored important progress in addressing internal forced displacement (IDF) in Mexico. In this regard, in 2022, the SCJN, together with UNHCR and the ICRC, developed the "Manual on Internal Displacement". This manual would provide judges with tools to apply international human rights standards when judging cases of displaced persons, focusing on their rights and the State's obligations to provide protection and durable solutions. In addition, the State prepared the "Report on the Exercise of Characterization of Internal Displacement" in Chihuahua. This report analyses the living conditions and needs of the displaced population, covering issues such as housing, livelihoods and land ownership. The report represents a significant effort to document and characterize the phenomenon of internal displacement in a specific region of the country. In 2023, a pilot plan was carried out in Tepuche, Sinaloa, to facilitate the safe return of 70 displaced families. The plan included security measures, access to health and education services, as well as improvements in housing conditions. This project is one of the first to implement an active policy of safe return for victims of internal displacement. Likewise, the Ministry of the Interior resumed dialogue tables with local authorities and affected communities, including displaced Triqui families in Oaxaca. These dialogues aim to comply with the precautionary measures issued by the IACHR and promote the pacification of conflict zones. Finally, the State mentioned that the study "Metropolis of Mexico 2020" and the characterization report in Chihuahua were presented as part of the efforts to collect data on internal displacement and participated in technical training workshops, strengthening the State's capacity to design effective policies to address displacement.<sup>210</sup>

242. For their part, civil society organizations stressed that a comprehensive national policy that covers the entire Mexican territory and guarantees a coordinated and effective response for all people affected by internal displacement has not yet been adopted. The diagnoses and studies carried out so far have focused on specific regions, such as Chihuahua, leaving out other areas of the country where internal displacement continues to be a critical problem.<sup>211</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

243. The IACHR observes that there is no unified national framework and the limited implementation of effective measures in other regions indicate that progress remains partial. Although efforts have been made to document and characterize displacement, a broader and more cohesive approach is required to comply with the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement and provide adequate protection to all affected persons. Therefore, this recommendation is considered to remain in substantial partial compliance, reflecting the progress made, but highlighting the need for a comprehensive national policy harmonized with international standards.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

244. To make progress in full compliance with this recommendation, the State must implement a comprehensive and harmonized national policy that covers the entire Mexican territory and is in line with the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement. This includes extending the diagnosis to the national level, strengthening inter-institutional and civil society collaboration, and providing effective monitoring and evaluation mechanisms to adjust policies according to identified needs. It is crucial to train public servants and local authorities in a human rights-based approach, to ensure a coordinated and effective response that prioritizes the protection and assistance of displaced persons.

Recommendation No. 58 Adopt specific legislation at the federal and state levels to address internal displacement, in accordance with the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement.

245. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR learned that the Draft Decree of the General Law to Prevent, Address, and Comprehensively Redress Internal Forced Displacement was pending discussion in the Senate, while several states had already approved specific regulatory frameworks on the subject. Civil society organizations reported that federal legislation had not yet been approved and that the lack of specific instruments remained a problem. The IACHR appreciated the efforts that made it possible to achieve partial compliance, highlighting the need to make progress in the approval and publication of the law and in the creation of institutions for its implementation.<sup>212</sup>

Compliance Information

246. In 2024, the State reported that the proposal for a General Law to Prevent, Address, and Comprehensively Redress Internal Forced Displacement, which has already been approved by the Chamber of Deputies and is currently pending discussion in the Senate of the Republic, is currently in the legislative process. This bill would have been prepared with the participation of multiple actors and would be aligned with the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement; and aims to provide a comprehensive framework for the protection and care of displaced persons in the country. At the state level, states such as Chiapas, Guerrero, and Michoacán have implemented specific regulatory frameworks to address internal displacement. For example, the Law for the Prevention and Attention of Internal Displacement in Chiapas and the Law for the Prevention, Accompaniment, Follow-up and Attention to Internal Forced Displacement in Michoacán, which create state programs and councils to coordinate prevention and comprehensive care efforts, prioritizing vulnerable groups such as women, minors, indigenous people and people with disabilities<sup>213</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

247. The State has made progress in creating legislative frameworks at both the federal and state levels. The proposal for a General Law to Prevent, Address and Comprehensively Redress Internal Forced Displacement has been approved by the Chamber of Deputies and is awaiting discussion in the Senate, which shows a commitment to the protection of the rights of internally displaced persons. Several states, such as Chiapas, Guerrero, and Michoacán, implemented specific regulatory frameworks to address internal displacement, such as state programs and comprehensive care councils. However, the lack of final approval of federal legislation and the need for regulatory harmonization among the states limit the impact and coverage of the measures adopted. It is still necessary to strengthen institutions and ensure the effective implementation of existing legal frameworks to adequately address the needs of displaced persons and comply with the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement. The recommendation therefore moves to substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

248. To achieve full compliance, it is necessary for the Senate to approve and publish the General Law to Prevent, Address and Comprehensively Redress Internal Forced Displacement. The State must ensure the harmonization of State laws with international principles and promote the training of the actors involved for effective implementation. It is essential to strengthen inter-institutional coordination mechanisms and provide sufficient resources to programs for the care of displaced persons, as well as to develop a monitoring and evaluation system to measure the impact of these measures and adjust them according to the identified needs of the affected population.

Recommendation No. 59: Ensure that at the federal level there is an institution in charge of protecting people from forced displacement.

249. Within the framework of Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that the Unit for Migration Policy, Registration, and Identity of Persons (UPMRIP) was the federal focal point for Internal Forced Displacement, in charge of coordinating the Working Group on the subject and having held 12 sessions to date. The UPMRIP, which is part of the Ministry of the Interior's Undersecretariat for Human Rights, Population and Migration, is responsible for proposing migration policy at the national level, while the National Institute of Migration and the Mexican Commission for Refugee Assistance manage implementation. Although UPMRIP had developed diagnostics and assisted in the enactment of local laws, the IACHR concluded that more information was needed on the adequacy and coordination of UPMRIP and other entities to comply with the recommendation. Consequently, the recommendation advanced to partial compliance<sup>214</sup>.

Compliance Information

250. In 2024, the State reported the development of a specific microsite on internal forced displacement, registering a significant increase in visits, indicating a growing awareness and relevance of the issue. Among the documents prepared, the "Guide for the Prevention, Humanitarian Assistance, Comprehensive Attention and Durable Solutions of Internal Forced Displacement" and an analysis of local laws, in collaboration with IOM and GIZ, stand out. At the judicial level, the Supreme Court of Justice, in collaboration with UNHCR and ICRC, published a manual to sensitize judges on the protection of internally displaced persons.<sup>215</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

251. The IACHR concludes that challenges persist in consolidating a robust and centralized institution that guarantees comprehensive protection for displaced persons. Although there has been progress in raising judicial awareness and creating guides and diagnoses, there is still a lack of a comprehensive national policy that harmonizes federal and state actions, as well as an adequate infrastructure for the effective implementation of these measures. In this regard, the IACHR concludes that the recommendation remains in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

252. In order to make progress in complying with the recommendation, the Commission invites the State to continue reporting on the progress made in the process of publishing and implementing the General Law on forced displacement, and the definition of the competent authority in its application, in order to strengthen the institutional framework in this area. Progress is needed towards the creation of a coherent national policy, which integrates both federal and state efforts and ensures effective coordination with local authorities.

7. Human rights defenders

Recommendation No. 60 Strengthen the bodies responsible for the protection of human rights defenders and journalists, so that they can adequately guarantee their life and integrity. In turn, the Mexican State is urged to incorporate gender and multicultural perspectives in the design and adoption of protection measures for women defenders and journalists.

<sup>215</sup> SIMORE Inter-American, Progress report of the Mexican State on compliance with and follow-up to the IACHR's recommendations. Recommendation 59, Chapter V, September 30 and October 1, 2024.

253. For Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR was informed that the State was working on the creation of a National System of Prevention and Protection for human rights defenders and journalists, based on the General Law on Prevention and Protection against Grievances. This system would include a National Prevention Model, a National Registry of Aggressions and a National Protection Protocol. By January 2023, 27 states had specialized regulatory instruments. The Protection Mechanism for Human Rights Defenders and Journalists (Protection Mechanism) registered 2,059 protected persons. The State reported that the Working Group for the Strengthening of the Mechanism had complied with 66% of the 75 recommendations issued by the UN in the Diagnosis on the Functioning of the Mechanism<sup>216</sup>. The IACHR considered that the recommendation was in partial compliance due to the persistence of attacks and intimidation against human rights defenders and journalists, and the ineffectiveness of protection measures in cases of disappearances and murders. She stressed the need to implement more robust prevention policies and specific measures with a gender and multicultural approach<sup>217</sup>.

Compliance Information

254. In 2024, the State reported that the Protection Mechanism was strengthened through strategies designed in coordination with civil society and international organizations, consisting of: guidelines with a gender perspective; creation of a specialized roundtable for attention with a gender perspective, known as "La Equipa"; attention to collective cases; and the development of digital protection measures. She highlighted the incorporation of a risk analysis with a differentiated approach, which takes into account the gender perspective when conducting interviews with beneficiaries, which would make it possible to identify: (a) conditions of vulnerability by gender; (b) situations in which people have been victims of psychological, institutional, patrimonial, structural or cultural violence; and (c) additional risk factors such as forced displacement, caregiving, pregnancy, or migration<sup>218</sup>.

255. The State also reported that the Mechanism's budget had increased by 599 million pesos for 2024; from 2012 to 2018 there was an increase of 780 million pesos, and 2,606 million in 2019-2023. Other shared progress this year included: (i) the increase in the Mechanism's staff from 42 to 72 personnel; and ii) the implementation of a social security program for independent journalists. The Ministry of the Interior also reported that it had trained 2,672 public servants from the three levels of government in the right to freedom of expression, the right to protest, gender violence and the pursuit of justice. In support of environmental defenders, the State highlighted the implementation of the Escazú Agreement, ratified in December 2020, by holding a working group "Regional Action for Environmental Defenders" in February 2024 to integrate a local perspective into the Regional Action Plan for Environmental Defenders. Approved in April 2024<sup>219</sup>. It was specified that, as of July 31, 2024, the Mechanism has 2,340 under protection.

256. Civil society organizations, for their part, reported the insecurity suffered by human rights defenders and journalists in the exercise of their functions, evidencing the inadequacy of the prevention measures implemented by the Mechanism. In relation to searches for missing persons, the organizations reported that they continue to be carried out without the necessary conditions to guarantee the safety of searchers and without a differentiated protection scheme, which resulted in the murder of two women searchers and the disappearance of another person in 2024. They reported that, on some occasions, the Mechanism denies protection by stating that they are not human rights defenders<sup>220</sup>.

257. The Commission appreciates the measures reported by the State to strengthen and guarantee the Mechanism's budget, as well as the measures aimed at guaranteeing its work with a differentiated approach<sup>221</sup>. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Commission notes with concern the information on murders and disappearances of defenders and journalists; 92 murders from December 2018 to December 2023<sup>222</sup>, of which at least 13 would have been committed in the last year<sup>223</sup> and 7 in 2024, according to information from the OHCHR<sup>224</sup>, one of which was a beneficiary of Precautionary Measures before the IACHR.<sup>225</sup> The IACHR highlights the important work and leadership of the searchers for disappeared persons, who must be recognized as human rights defenders and protected by the State with a gender perspective.<sup>226</sup> The information received by the IACHR reflects pending challenges and areas of opportunity for strengthening the Mechanism and the protection measures to guarantee the life and integrity of human rights defenders and journalists, recognizing the role of the different sectors of the population that have taken on tasks in the defense of rights. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Commission appreciates the efforts reported by the State in relation to the need for intersectional, multicultural measures with a differentiated approach, and therefore the IACHR concludes that the recommendation is progressing to substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

258. The Commission welcomes the implementation of risk analysis with a gender perspective and asks the State to report on the adoption of protection measures with a differential approach in cases of searchers, such as human rights defenders, and on the measures adopted in response to the persistence of threats, murders, and disappearances. The State mentioned in the 2023 report the implementation of the National Prevention Model, the National Registry of Aggressions, the National Protection Protocol, the guidelines with a gender perspective, the specialized roundtable for attention with a gender perspective, and digital protection measures. However, in 2024, there was no information that would allow us to know the specific actions for its implementation and its results, so we invite you to share this information.

8. Freedom of expression

Recommendation No. 61 To recognize, from the highest levels of the State, the legitimacy and value of journalistic work and to condemn the aggressions committed in retaliation for the exercise of freedom of expression.

259. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported on the launch of the "Facing Freedom" campaign on May 2, 2023, in collaboration with the European Union and the Office in Mexico of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to recognize the work of human rights defenders and journalists. and raise awareness about the risks they face. For the report, civil society organizations reported that the campaign was overshadowed by cases of espionage with the Pegasus malware and stigmatizations against the press. Despite efforts to promote a favorable environment, the IACHR highlighted the persistence of serious allegations of espionage and stigmatization, which negatively affect freedom of expression and the security of the press. The recommendation was considered to be pending implementation, with the need for further efforts to ensure effective protection and eliminate stigmatizing messages.<sup>227</sup>

260. In 2024, the State said that citizen protection strategies have evolved towards an approach focused on crime prevention and the comprehensive protection of people, based on the use of intelligence as the main tool to combat crime and dismantle criminal structures.<sup>228</sup> For their part, civil society organizations stressed that no progress has been made in the investigations into espionage against journalists and human rights defenders through the use of the Pegasus malware.<sup>229</sup> Likewise, the Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE) note that the Attorney General's Office has acknowledged that, between 2015 and 2016, journalist Carmen Aristegui was spied on using the Pegasus software in retaliation for her investigations into the then-president and his inner circle<sup>230</sup>. However, Juan Carlos García Rivera, an employee of a subsidiary of Grupo KBH and prosecuted for the interception of Aristegui's communications, was acquitted.<sup>231</sup> The SCJN ordered the Ministry of Finance and Public Credit (SHCP) to make public the contracts related to the acquisition of the Pegasus software, allegedly used to spy on journalists and human rights defenders.<sup>232</sup>

261. The organizations reported that the stigmatizing messages and the delegitimization of the work of human rights defenders and civil society organizations by the government continued. In 2024, the Office of the Special Rapporteur learned about the disclosure of journalists' personal data, especially in the context of official statements. The Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression warned that this practice has the potential to "accentuate or exacerbate situations of hostility, intolerance or animosity" on the part of sectors of the population towards journalists or the media, particularly in a country like Mexico that registers high rates of violence against the press.<sup>233</sup> They stressed that, even with the new administration of the President of the Republic, who took office on October 1, 2024, the narrative in front of the media and civil society would be the same as in the previous administration; since the President announced that once a week she will be including in her morning conference a section called "Lie Detector", replacing the section "Who's Who of Lies" of the previous administration.<sup>234</sup>

262. The Commission notes with concern the absence of concrete information from the State regarding the measures implemented to comply with this recommendation. The IACHR reiterates the information from 2022<sup>235</sup> and 2023<sup>236</sup> to the effect that stigmatizing and harmful messages by public officials against the press do not contribute to the recognition of the value and legitimacy of journalistic work; on the contrary, they reduce the impact of measures adopted by the State in compliance with this recommendation<sup>237</sup>. In the face of the current administration's determination to include a section analogous to "Who's Who in Lies" in the morning conferences of the federal executive, the Commission remains attentive to information that accounts for how this section would be in compliance with standards in terms of freedom of expression.

263. In relation to the allegations of espionage made by civil society organizations, a response from the State is essential with respect to the investigation, identification, and punishment of those allegedly responsible for the acts of espionage against journalists and defenders<sup>238</sup>. In light of these allegations, the IACHR calls on the Mexican State to redouble its efforts to promote an environment favorable to the right to freedom of expression and of the press and to eradicate any type of pronouncement by public authorities that could legitimize or send a permissive message to violence against the press. In this regard, and pending information on measures to adequately respond to the allegations of civil society, the IACHR concludes that compliance with the recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

264. The purpose of this recommendation is based on the premise that in a context of increasing violence against the press, it is important that the institutional framework as a whole contributes to an environment favorable to freedom of expression and public deliberation. The information received to determine whether or not there is progress in complying with the recommendation contrasts with the records of acts of violence against the press and the repeated stigmatizing messages from the public power towards journalistic work. The IACHR requests information on the actions reported in 2023 and 2024 to create a safe environment for the defense of human rights and freedom of expression. The Commission invites you to submit information on how intelligence is being used as the main tool to combat crime and dismantle criminal structures, as well as the progress of investigations into the use of Pegasus malware to spy on journalists and human rights defenders.

Recommendation No. 62 Define a single methodology for generating and publishing detailed and disaggregated statistics on violence against journalists and investigations of attacks, as well as on the protection measures adopted. Define a state authority as the one in charge of capturing information and publishing statistics and informing the different actors about the challenges that arise in the application of this methodology.

265. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported on the Specialized Prosecutor's Office for Crimes against Freedom of Expression (FEADLE),<sup>239</sup> the entity in charge of investigating and prosecuting crimes against freedom of the press and expression, which had generated specific indicators on crimes, differentiated by sex, and which are published periodically. Civil society organizations reported that, although there are records of violence against the press by FEADLE, there is no national information, with data from state prosecutors' offices, which makes it difficult to analyze violence against the press in a national way. The recommendation was considered to be partially complied with, and the State was urged to move forward in the systematization of data and in the creation of a unified methodology.<sup>240</sup>

Compliance Information

266. In 2024, the State reported that the Ministry of the Interior is preparing an official registry of the Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and Journalists, without further specification to know the particularities of said registry. Civil society organizations said that there would be no systematization, nor homologation of the existing figures with the states<sup>241</sup>. The State added in its observations to this report that FEADLE carries out the systematization of information contained in preliminary investigations and investigation files related to crimes against freedom of expression, issuing monthly statistical reports on the complaints filed.<sup>242</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

267. The Commission notes with concern the absence of concrete information on actions taken to comply with this recommendation and notes that, unlike in previous years, the State did not report statistical information from FEADLE<sup>243</sup>, nor figures related to the registration of violence committed against journalists and possible investigations in the states. In the absence of information, the IACHR concludes that the recommendation remains in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

268. The IACHR invites the Mexican State to develop a national statistical registry of the information that prosecutors' offices can provide on investigations into violence against journalists, as well as on national mechanisms for the protection of this population and human rights defenders. Similar to what was referred to in its 2023 follow-up report, the Commission urges the Mexican State to strengthen coordination between the different levels of government in this area.

Recommendation No. 63 Remove all obstacles so that, in practice, the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Crimes against Freedom of Expression (FEADLE) can attract the investigation of crimes committed against journalists and against freedom of expression. In this way, it will make effective the exercise of federal jurisdiction over crimes within its jurisdiction and guarantee that the most serious violations of freedom of expression are always investigated by that prosecutor's office.

269. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, based on the constitutional reforms and the Federal Code of Criminal Procedure, the FEADLE obtained the power to attract cases from the common jurisdiction related to crimes against freedom of expression. From May 2013 to July 2023, FEADLE took on 140 cases under this authority. However, civil society organizations indicated that only 35.30% of the registered homicides of journalists were determined to be related to their journalistic work and reported that FEADLE has shown reluctance to attract investigations; and that it is crucial for this entity to establish clear guidelines and improve coordination with local prosecutors' offices to reduce impunity. The IACHR concluded that, despite the legal power, challenges persisted in its effective application, concluding that substantial progress towards partial compliance was made. It was recommended that the State define and apply objective and transparent criteria for attracting cases.<sup>244</sup>

Compliance Information

270. In 2024, the State said that the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Crimes Committed against Freedom of Expression of the Attorney General's Office would have defined, objective, and transparent criteria to guarantee impartial processes in the framework of requests to attract cases and coordination with local prosecutors' offices in crimes that affect freedom of expression. Article 21 of the National Code of Criminal Procedure establishes the cases in which the FGR can exercise its power of attraction in cases related to crimes that affect freedom of expression<sup>245</sup>. Civil society organizations reported that, according to the FEADLE Statistical Report of September 2024, from 2013 to 2024 the FEADLE would have only exercised the power of attraction in 129 cases;<sup>246</sup> 9 in 2013, 21 in 2014, 14 in 2015, 4 in 2016, 1 in 2017, 8 in 2018, 5 in 2019, 7 in 2020, 25 in 2021, 30 in 2022, 28 in 2023, and 29 in 2024. The organizations express a constant resistance of the FEADLE in the exercise of the power of attraction and a lack of effective collaboration between the investigations of the local jurisdiction and the FGR to promote the progress of the investigations in matters of crimes against freedom of expression.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

271. The Commission stresses that the criteria used to accredit paragraphs (iv)<sup>247</sup> and (vi)<sup>248</sup> of Article 21 of the National Code of Criminal Procedure (CNPP) must be made transparent, and the coordination between local prosecutors' offices and the FGR for the investigation of all cases involving journalists and social communicators must be strengthened. Notwithstanding the foregoing, recognizing the content of the criteria for determining the exercise of FEADLE's power of attraction, and the practice sustained over the years, the IACHR determines that the recommendation is in full compliance.

Recommendation No. 64 Maintain the character of the FEADLE as a specialized prosecutor's office and provide it with sufficient economic and human resources to enable it to carry out its work.

272. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Annual Report, the FEADLE increased the number of agents of the Public Ministry of the Federation. However, civil society organizations reported that FEADLE's budget was reduced to less than half of its budget in 2014. The organizations stressed that their current budget project would be one of the lowest among the FGR's special prosecutors' offices. The IACHR expressed concern about the budget reduction and determined that the recommendation remained pending compliance. The State was urged to guarantee budgetary sufficiency and the strengthening of human resources for FEADLE.<sup>249</sup>

Compliance Information

273. In 2024, the State reported that, since 2019, the budget went from 12,889,904 million pesos to 18,688,427 million pesos by 2024, which would represent an increase of 44.98%. The State reported that courses, conferences, seminars, and workshops have been scheduled to create a culture of crime prevention and respect for freedom of expression and the right to information<sup>250</sup>. Civil society organizations stressed that, although an increase in FEADLE's budget can be seen in recent years, it comes after a budget cut of more than 50% compared to the budget granted to the institution in 2013, which amounted to 38,084,788 million pesos<sup>251</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

274. The IACHR observes with concern that there is no guaranteed and constant minimum budget allocated to FEADLE in the Federal Expenditure Budget in recent years. In this way, although the State reports an increase in the budget from 2019 to 2024, according to public information, the FEADLE budget for 2015 was 28,891,583; 25,121,369 in 2016; 18,433,763 in 2017; 17,989,600 in 2018; 12,889,904 in 2019; 14,491,400 in 2020; 15,033,230 in 2021; 14,813,521 in 2022; 16,272,944 in 2023 and; 18,688,427 in 2024<sup>252</sup>. shows an inconstancy in the budget item assigned to the FEADLE. Thus, from 2015 to 2018 there was a tendency to reduce the institution's budget. Subsequently, although from 2019 to 2021 there was an increase, in 2022 the budget was reduced again. In this regard, in terms of the provisions of the recommendation, in contrast to the budget granted since the publication of the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Mexico in 2015 to date, there has been a reduction in the budget, therefore, the IACHR concludes that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

275. To move forward with the fulfillment of the recommendation, it is necessary to guarantee budgetary sufficiency in a constant manner within the framework of the Expenditure Budget of the Federation each year and to ensure the human resources of the institution. In this regard, the IACHR invites the State to provide information on how it is working to guarantee budgetary continuity and sufficiency; and to report information on how it would be guaranteed that the FEADLE has sufficient human resources to carry out its functions.

Recommendation No. 65 Adopt special investigation protocols by virtue of which the hypothesis of the relationship between the homicide or aggression and the journalistic profession must be completely and sufficiently exhausted.

276. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State did not provide information on compliance with the recommendation. However, the FEADLE's 2023 Statistical Report highlighted the creation in 2017 of a multidisciplinary group of analysts to strengthen the investigation of crimes against freedom of expression, following the Homologated Investigation Protocol. Civil society organizations reported that, despite the protocol, its implementation has been deficient by state prosecutors' offices and that FEADLE faces structural problems that limit the effectiveness of its investigations, resulting in an impunity rate of 98.26% in cases of crimes or human rights violations against the press. The State stressed that not all complaints have sufficient elements to be prosecuted and highlighted the progress made in criminal proceedings against public servants. The IACHR observed that the recommendation remained partially complied with due to problems in the implementation of protocols and the administration of justice. The State was urged to strengthen and effectively apply the investigation protocols and provide information on these actions.<sup>253</sup>

Compliance Information

277. In 2024, the State reported that the FEADLE is responsible for investigating and prosecuting crimes that affect, limit, or violate the freedom of expression of journalists and that it maintains constant communication with the Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and Journalists. The State said that, since 2020, it has been collaborating with the FGR's Special Unit on Gender and Violence against Women to identify whether there are gender factors in the cases it investigates. Between 2018 and 2024, 138 files were opened for crimes committed against women journalists. The State reported that there is an Approved Protocol for the Investigation of Crimes Committed Against Freedom of Expression, which includes specialized guidelines with a gender perspective. The State reported that, with the aim of promoting priority human rights issues at the local level, the first session of the National Human Rights Coordination Agenda was held on February 29, 2024, which addressed the protection of human rights defenders and journalists, among others<sup>254</sup>. The State added in its observations to this Report that Competency Standard EC1103 was developed to certify agents of the Public Prosecutor's Office in the investigation of these crimes with a specialized approach; and that courses were also given on the subject.<sup>255</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

278. The Commission welcomes the development of specialized protocols that guarantee an investigation with differentiated approaches in crimes against freedom of expression. In this regard, the first section of the recommendation would be addressed. However, the State did not report information on how these protocols would guarantee the exhaustion of hypotheses regarding the relationship between the homicide or aggression and the journalistic profession, for which reason the IACHR concludes that the recommendation remains partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

279. In order to comply with this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to report information on how the 2019 protocol would guarantee that investigations into crimes against journalists determine the hypothesis of the relationship between the homicide or aggression and the journalistic profession.

Recommendation No. 66 Improve the relationship between federal and state jurisdictions in order to prevent conflicts of jurisdiction from hindering or delaying investigations.

280. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the IACHR learned about the cooperation between the two jurisdictions and about the requirements that the SCJN has developed to enable the power of attraction in important and transcendental cases. Civil society organizations stressed that a comprehensive public policy is still lacking and that FEADLE continues to have discretion in the application of the power of attraction, without an adequate structural capacity for context analysis. The IACHR observed that, although there is a regulatory framework and a recent decision by the SCJN, additional information is needed on conflicts of jurisdiction and the effectiveness in the exercise of the power of attraction. The recommendation advanced to substantial partial compliance and the State was urged to provide details on strengthening objective criteria to ensure fair investigations and reduce conflicts of jurisdiction.<sup>256</sup>

Compliance Information

281. In 2024, the State reported that it would be implementing concrete measures to use objective criteria in the exercise of the power of attraction, with the aim of ensuring effective investigations and expeditious justice in cases of crimes committed against freedom of expression. He reiterated that Article 21 of the National Code of Criminal Procedure provides for the cases in which the FGR can exercise its power of attraction in these crimes.<sup>257</sup> Civil society organizations expressed that, even with certain criteria for exercising the power of attraction, it would be at the discretion of the FEADLE to determine whether any normative hypothesis is specified to exercise said power. To this end, in accordance with the regulatory framework, they indicated that the application of context analysis would be necessary. However, they stated that, from the information they have been able to collect, the prosecutors' offices do not have the structural capacity to create special units that comply with this aspect.<sup>258</sup>

282. The State added in its observations to this Report that from May 2013 to January 2025, FEADLE has exercised its power of appeal in 195 cases, ensuring a solid legal framework for the protection of the right to information and freedom of the press.<sup>259</sup>

283. The IACHR reiterates the need for additional information that indicates the updated figures on conflicts of jurisdiction surrounding these investigations, that is, the statistics of requests for attraction compared with the number of attractions that come from, specifying how the application of the criteria for determining the admissibility or inadmissibility of this power of attraction operates and the progress of the investigations,<sup>260</sup> therefore, it concludes that the recommendation maintains substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

284. To guide the implementation of this recommendation, the IACHR reiterates its invitation to the State to provide information on how it has strengthened the establishment and use of objective criteria for the exercise of the power of attraction to ensure expeditious investigations and justice, as well as the reduction of conflicts in matters of jurisdiction.

Recommendation No. 67 Allow victims, their families and, where appropriate, their co-adjuvants to participate in criminal proceedings with full guarantees, both in the search for the truth and the clarification of the facts and when demanding reparation.

285. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the Commission learned of the creation of the Standardized Protocol for the Investigation of Crimes Committed Against Freedom of Expression, highlighting the certification and training of FGR personnel and the strengthening of the Executive Commissions for Attention to Victims. However, civil society organizations reported limited participation of victims in criminal proceedings and problems with care commissions, such as revictimization and lack of adequate reparation. The IACHR appreciated the progress reported, but considered that significant problems persisted in the effective participation of victims, maintaining the recommendation as partially complied with. The State was asked to ensure real participation of victims and to address the deficiencies reported by civil society.<sup>261</sup>

Compliance Information

286. In 2024, the State reported that the CEAV actively promotes the participation of direct and indirect victims in the processes of access to justice and reparation. The State said that victims would have a crucial role in the formulation of solutions and in the implementation of mechanisms that ensure their rights; and stressed that family members would have the right to actively participate in the design, implementation and monitoring of search actions, as well as to receive information and provide key evidence. The State reported that the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Crimes of Disappearance (FEIDDF) would facilitate the active participation of families in the investigation processes and in keeping them informed of the progress of the cases<sup>262</sup>. For their part, civil society organizations stated that the participation of families and victims in investigation processes is not only limited, but has been reduced by the rotation of personnel within State institutions, which makes it impossible to continue the processes and generates delays in investigations.<sup>263</sup> The State added in its observations on this Report that FEADLE implements the Standardized Protocol for the Investigation of Crimes Committed Against Freedom of Expression, with the objective of guaranteeing the protection, legal guidance, and safety of journalists at risk, as well as their direct family members.<sup>264</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

287. The organizations continue to report a limited power of participation of victims in criminal proceedings and in reparation actions, which is why it is necessary for the State to provide an adequate response and provide precise information on how this participation is guaranteed. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that the recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

288. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to guarantee, in practice, the participation of victims and their families in criminal proceedings and in reparation proceedings. In this sense, it invites to identify the cause of the allegations reported by civil society and to propose measures that provide an adequate response. The Commission requests information on the participation of victims by law enforcement authorities and victim care agencies. In response to the allegation that the victims' commissions do not guarantee the participation of victims, the IACHR invites the adoption of measures to ensure that representation before this entity does not impede victims' access to investigations.

9. Access to information

Recommendation No. 68 With regard to the attribution conferred by the Law on Access to Information on the Office of the Legal Counsel of the Presidency, it is recommended that this power be regulated in accordance with international principles relating to access to public information and national security.

289. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR took note of the SCJN's resolution on the unconstitutionality of the Agreement that limited access to information on projects and works of the Government of Mexico, and the subsequent decision that found no violation in a new similar decree. However, civil society organizations expressed that this decision will not resolve the opacity surrounding these projects and the continued denial of access to information. The IACHR stressed that, despite the SCJN's resolutions, concerns persist about the application and interpretation of Article 157 of the General Law on Transparency and Access to Public Information (LGTAIP) to restrict access to information of public interest and additional information continues to be requested for the application of this rule. Therefore, the recommendation was deemed to have advanced to substantial partial compliance and the State was invited to provide additional details on how to ensure that this attribution is not used to limit access to public information.<sup>265</sup>

Compliance Information

290. By 2024, neither the State nor civil society organizations provided information related to this recommendation.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

291. The IACHR notes with concern the lack of information from the State and civil society regarding this recommendation. However, according to public information, the IACHR learned that on November 29, 2024, a constitutional reform was approved in the Senate of the Republic through which several autonomous constitutional bodies, including the National Institute of Transparency, Access to Information, and Protection of Personal Data (INAI), will be extinguished. Meanwhile, the recommendation under analysis highlights the need to regulate the powers of the Legal Counsel of the Presidency in matters of access to information, aligning them with the international principles of transparency and access to public information; the recent disappearance of the INAI, the institution responsible for guaranteeing transparency, accountability, and protection of the rights of access to information, puts compliance with this recommendation at risk. The elimination of the INAI will further concentrate the powers in the Executive, weakening the independent oversight mechanisms on the use of the powers of the Legal Counsel in relation to the classification and reservation of public information. According to the international principles set out in the Lima Principles on Access to Public Information<sup>266</sup>, external and independent oversight is essential to ensure transparency and accountability.

292. The IACHR does not have information that accounts for which institution will be responsible for assuming the functions of the INAI, and warns that this could generate an institutional vacuum that would make it difficult to oversee the decisions of the Legal Counsel of the Presidency. The elimination of the INAI represents a significant setback in terms of transparency and access to information. Consequently, as long as it is not defined how another body will guarantee access to public information and regulate the powers of bodies such as the Legal Counsel, this recommendation falls back to pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

293. In order to comply with this recommendation, it is necessary to establish a body that guarantees access to public information and the protection of personal data, ensuring its independence from the Executive. This body must have technical and operational autonomy to supervise information classification decisions by the Legal Department, ensuring its alignment with the principles of maximum publicity, necessity and proportionality. It is necessary to prepare and approve a specific regulation that delimits the attributions of the Legal Counsel in the classification of information as reserved or confidential, based on international standards such as those established in the Lima Principle on Access to Public Information.

Recommendation No. 69 Strengthen laws, policies, and practices to ensure that judicial authorities have full access to relevant information when investigating and prosecuting cases of human rights violations attributed to members of the security forces.

294. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the Commission took note of the enactment of the Federal Law on Transparency and Access to Public Information, which replaced the previous law and has been the subject of reforms to strengthen the right of access to information, as well as on the publication of a decree that highlights transparency in the Organic Law of the FGR. However, the IACHR considered that this information was insufficient to fully comply with the recommendation, given that there was still a lack of transparency and access to information on serious human rights violations in investigations and judicial proceedings. The recommendation remained partially complied with, and the IACHR reiterated the need to adopt measures to ensure that judicial authorities have adequate access to information in the context of the investigation process.<sup>267</sup>

295. In 2024, the State said that it has implemented a set of technological tools that guarantee judicial authorities' access to accurate and timely information within the framework of investigation processes. Among these tools is the Homologated Police Report (IPH), a platform that allows police institutions to document in detail the interventions and made available, supporting due process and promoting the efficient use of information in intelligence actions that benefit ministerial and judicial procedures. In addition, the State reported that the National Registry of Judicial Orders (RNJM) is a fundamental instrument in strengthening justice in Mexico. This registry includes detailed information on arrest warrants issued by federal and state courts, providing judicial authorities with access to data such as the type and modality of the crime, the date of issuance of the warrants, among other crucial aspects for the follow-up of the cases. The RNJM would ensure the permanent capture of data through cyber units of the 32 states, based on an approved catalog of incidents.<sup>268</sup>

<sup>268</sup> SIMORE Inter-American, Progress report of the Mexican State on compliance with and follow-up to the IACHR's recommendations, Recommendation 69, Chapter V, September 30 and October 1, 2024.

296. For its part, as already stated, the Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression learned about the approval of the constitutional reform that provides for the elimination of the National Institute of Transparency, Access to Information, and Protection of Personal Data (INAI). Once the reform is implemented, the function of reviewing complaints about the denial of access to information would be fragmented and the entity in charge of filing legal actions against laws that violate the right to information and privacy would disappear. This could lead to inconsistencies in transparency regulations<sup>269</sup> and further weaken the powers of judicial authorities investigating cases of human rights violations to access information from security forces<sup>270</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

297. The Commission concludes that the information reported by the State does not account for the process and implementation of the records and reports to which it refers. Knowing the process is important for the Commission to evaluate whether full access to relevant information is effectively guaranteed when judicial authorities investigate and prosecute cases of human rights violations attributed to members of the security forces. Pending detailed information on this process, the IACHR believes that the recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

298. To comply with this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to work in coordination with the Attorney General's Offices, in order to address the challenges and areas of opportunity in access to information in the processes and investigations under its responsibility. The Commission also respectfully requests Mexico to provide details on how the functions of INAI will be replaced once dissolved.

Recommendation No. 70 Adopt the pertinent measures so that the security forces collect, systematize and periodically publish information referring to the effects on life and integrity as a result of the fight against organized crime. The information relating to such effects must describe the place where they occurred, the date, the details of the security sector unit that was present when they occurred, and information on its mandate and control. Also, what were the causes of the affectation and the inability to prevent them.

299. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the creation of the National Information Center was highlighted, aimed at publishing periodic data on crime incidence, including the effects on life or integrity in collaboration with various entities, civil society and academia. Although the IACHR welcomed this initiative, it said that the recommendation was partially complied with due to the lack of specific information on the role of law enforcement agencies in the collection and publication of data. The IACHR urged the State to ensure that these bodies carry out these tasks in a transparent, up-to-date manner, and disaggregated by ethnic-racial origin, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity and/or expression, and that they are used for reparation actions<sup>271</sup>.

Compliance Information

300. In 2024, the State said that the Homologated Police Report plays a fundamental role in the fight against organized crime by facilitating the collection of strategic data that supports the intelligence and operational actions of the authorities, as it allows members of police institutions to record detailed information on interventions and generates a centralized database that becomes a resource for the identification of criminal patterns and tracing links between criminal activities. The State reported that the General Law of the National Public Security System establishes the obligation for security and law enforcement institutions to document and record the actions carried out during the transfer of persons allegedly responsible for crimes, including those related to organized crime.<sup>272</sup>

301. The IACHR recognizes the importance of the measures adopted by the State to strengthen the collection and systematization of data related to violations of life and integrity as a result of the fight against organized crime. Among these measures, the use of the IPH stands out, which allows the collection of strategic information on the interventions of security institutions. However, while these initiatives represent significant progress, significant gaps remain in compliance with the specific terms of the recommendation. In particular, there is a lack of detailed information on the systematization and periodic publication of data in a disaggregated and accessible format that allows identifying the role of the security forces in the documented affectations. Nor is it specified how these measures ensure transparency and compliance with the principle of maximum disclosure, nor whether the data includes key details such as the place, date, units involved, their mandate and control, as well as the causes of the effects and the inability to prevent them.

302. The IACHR reiterates the need for published data to include adequate disaggregation by ethnic-racial origin, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity and/or expression, in accordance with the State's duty to provide priority attention to groups in vulnerable situations.<sup>273</sup> This lack of information limits the State's ability to fully comply with the recommendation, as it does not ensure a comprehensive and transparent approach that allows for both accountability and reparation for victims. By virtue of the foregoing, and although important advances in the collection and recording of data are recognized, the recommendation advances to substantial partial compliance, due to the absence of complete information on the systematization and publication of the data in the specific terms referred to in the recommendation.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

303. To move toward full compliance with the recommendation, the IACHR suggests implementing a centralized and standardized system that unifies the records of public security and justice institutions, ensuring uniform and reliable data collection. It is essential that the State specify whether there is a periodical publication that includes information disaggregated by place, date, unit involved, causes of the affectations, and data on the victims, according to criteria of ethnic-racial origin, sex, age, among others.

G. Protection Mechanism for Human Rights Defenders and Journalists

Recommendation No. 71 To require the competent authorities to take into consideration international standards on protection, especially the considerations developed in the "Second Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders in the Americas" and the "Report on Violence against Journalists and Media Workers of the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the IACHR."

304. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported that OHCHR presented a diagnosis of the Protection Mechanism with 104 recommendations, and that a Working Group had been formed for its implementation. He also maintained that a campaign had been launched on the importance of human rights defenders and journalists. However, civil society organizations indicated that significant breaches of international standards persisted, including the lack of a global policy of protection and continued stigmatization of the press by the authorities. The IACHR appreciated the creation of the Working Group and the participation of international organizations, but determined that the recommendation remained partially

Compliance Information

305. In 2024, the State reiterated that in 2019 a diagnosis was made on the functioning of the Mechanism, which issued 104 recommendations and 127 sub-recommendations with the aim of guiding the institutional strengthening of the Mechanism. The State reported that these recommendations would focus on improving inter-institutional effectiveness and coordination and the implementation of protection measures adapted to the needs of the beneficiaries. The State said that, as a result of this process, the Working Group for the Strengthening of the Mechanism was established, which would function as a space for collaboration with the participation of various government institutions, international organizations, and civil society organizations. The Working Group would hold monthly meetings to assess progress in the implementation of the prioritized recommendations. The State concluded that this Group would ensure that the protection measures are aligned with Mexico's global human rights commitments<sup>275</sup>. For their part, civil society organizations and international organizations have expressed to the IACHR their interest in the Mexican State maintaining and deepening both the progress made and the efforts of the Working Group.<sup>276</sup>

306. In its observations on this Report, the State added that in 2024, key strategies were consolidated in five priority areas: guidelines of the Governing Board, temporary relocation of beneficiaries, mainstreaming of the gender perspective, attention to collective cases, and digital measures. To strengthen the gender approach, the "gender team" was created, made up of representatives of each unit of the mechanism, with the aim of eradicating gender stereotypes and prejudices in all processes.<sup>277</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

307. The Commission welcomes the creation and implementation of the Working Group for the Strengthening of the Mechanism. However, although its functioning and operability represent progress in the framework of the work of the Mechanism, the information provided does not account for how the Working Group would be guaranteeing the adoption and implementation of international parameters in the field of protection; nor is information sent related to the specific measures that this Group would be implementing. In view of the foregoing, the Commission determines that the recommendation remains in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

308. The IACHR reiterates the invitation made in the 2023 Annual Report, in the sense that the State provide information that allows it to account for how the standards provided for in the "Second Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders in the Americas" and the "Report on Violence against Journalists and Media Workers of the Special Rapporteurship for Freedom of Expression" have been adopted. The Commission emphasizes that it will be useful for the measures adopted by the Group of Experts to refer to how the implementation of the recommendations issued by the IACHR in both reports is resumed.<sup>278</sup>

Recommendation No. 72 Provide all the necessary political support for the proper functioning of the protection mechanism, which includes the necessary economic resources so that they can efficiently develop their protection competencies and make it sustainable over time.

309. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the extinction of this trust was announced, transferring the resources and logistics of the Protection Mechanism for Human Rights Defenders and Journalists to the SEGOB, which civil society organizations highlighted as a weakening of accountability and transparency. Despite the fact that the budget of the Facility had increased, it was found to be insufficient in relation to the growing number of beneficiaries. The IACHR welcomed the budget increase, but stressed the need to strengthen the Mechanism in the face of persistent violence, urging the State to adopt measures to guarantee financial sustainability and evaluate whether the resources allocated are sufficient for the performance of the Mechanism. It was therefore concluded that the recommendation continued to be partially complied with.<sup>279</sup>

Compliance Information

310. In 2024, the State reiterated the information reported in recommendation 71, in the sense of highlighting the preparation of a diagnosis of the Mechanism, in order to ensure that the resources allocated are sufficient and effective. This process would have had the active participation of civil society and international human rights organizations. The State emphasized that the Mechanism's Governing Board includes representation from various government entities such as the Attorney General's Office, the CNDH, and the Consultative Council. With regard to financial sustainability, the State said that it had made efforts to increase the Mechanism's budget; and reported that, during the current six-year term, the budget allocated would have increased. Thus, from January 2019 to December 2023, 2,606 million pesos were disbursed, which would represent a substantial increase compared to the 780 million allocated in the period from 2012 to 2018. The State pointed out that, for 2024, a budget of 599 million 155 thousand 516 pesos was authorized, as well as an increase in the number of collaborators, going from 42 to 72 people; which would have improved response capacity and reduced service times,<sup>280</sup> As for the beneficiaries, as of January 31, 2025, the Mechanism incorporated 668 journalists, of which 188 are women and 480 men, as well as 1,256 human rights defenders, of which 714 are women and 542 men.<sup>281</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

311. The Commission appreciates the information reported by the State regarding the Mechanism's budget increase and the increase in the institution's staff. In this regard, in view of the fact that the content of the recommendation under analysis focuses on ensuring sufficient resources for the operation of the Mechanism, the Commission concludes that this recommendation has been fully complied with.

Recommendation No. 73 Adopt all necessary measures to assign and train all personnel necessary for its proper operation.

312. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the State reported on the implementation of training programs for the civil servants of the Protection Mechanism and 22 states. At the same time, civil society organizations highlighted that staff still lacked adequate training in human rights and gender perspective, and reported problems such as workplace harassment and sexual violence, as well as gender or race discrimination. The IACHR appreciated the State's efforts and the progress made in training, considering that the recommendation had been substantially partially complied with, but emphasizing the need to ensure the regularity and obligatory nature of these training programs.<sup>282</sup>

313. In 2024, the State reported that it has implemented permanent regulated programs, so that the personnel responsible for the operation of the Mechanism are properly trained. These trainings integrate approaches such as the gender perspective, intersectionality and a comprehensive differentiated analysis, which would guarantee that the staff has the necessary skills to offer effective care<sup>283</sup>. On the other hand, civil society organizations recognize the execution of courses, talks and workshops; however, they warn that the mere implementation of these activities does not ensure that officials adequately acquire the knowledge imparted or that they incorporate it effectively into risk analysis processes. In its observations on this Report, the State stated that Mexico and the United States signed a letter of understanding with USAID to implement a training program from 2021 to 2023.<sup>284</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

314. The Commission insists on the need for training spaces to be held regularly and sustainably over time, as well as to be mandatory, as highlighted in 2023<sup>285</sup>. However, the State did not provide timely information on the training, its methodology, the periods in which it is carried out, and the curriculum taught. This information is crucial to evaluate the impact of the trainings and their effectiveness in the operation of the Mechanism. In view of the foregoing, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation remains with a substantial level of partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

315. The Commission reiterates the need to have information that shows whether the programs are regulated to be carried out on a permanent and mandatory basis, where they would be regulated, and to report whether the training would be provided to all the personnel necessary for the proper operation of the Mechanism. With a view to declaring full compliance with the recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to report on whether the training is duly evaluated, as well as its effectiveness and impact on the operation of the Mechanism.

Recommendation No. 74 Ensure that risk studies and the implementation of prevention and protection measures are carried out appropriately and in accordance with the urgency of the issues. Therefore, in the processes of risk assessment, assignment of protection schemes, and review of their suitability, adequate participation, communication, and consultation with the persons covered by the protection mechanism, as well as as beneficiaries of precautionary measures requested by the IACHR, should be guaranteed.

316. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Monitoring Report, risk assessments are carried out individually or collectively, applying a gender and intersectionality perspective, and must be approved by the Governing Board. However, civil society organizations criticized these assessments, noting that they are often carried out under inadequate conditions and without taking into account the full context of the beneficiaries. They reported that the times to collect information have been reduced, affecting the quality of evaluations and leading to the unjustified withdrawal of protection measures, which has put beneficiaries at risk. The IACHR observed that the unjustified withdrawal of measures and irregularities in risk assessments have compromised the integrity of defenders and journalists. It therefore determined that the recommendation was in partial compliance, suggesting the need to apply risk assessments based on clear and objective standards.<sup>286</sup>

317. In 2024, the State reported that the Mechanism would guarantee that risk studies and the implementation of prevention and protection measures are carried out appropriately and in response to the urgency of each case; and reported that the operation of the Mechanism guarantees a participatory approach of civil society and international human rights organizations. The State reported that, in the risk assessment process, the Mechanism's Governing Board is responsible for discussing and approving the protection plans. The State stated that about 90% of the proposed protection plans are approved by consensus in the Board. The State emphasized that the operation of the Mechanism allows for a rapid assignment of protection schemes and continuous reviews of the adequacy of the measures adopted, which would be complemented by the Working Group for the Strengthening of the Mechanism.<sup>287</sup>

318. Civil society organizations argued that the Protection Mechanism has faced criticism in relation to the evaluation and withdrawal of security measures from beneficiaries in recent years; and stated that risk assessments are often carried out under inadequate conditions, without taking into account the context of the beneficiaries. This, in their opinion, results in inaccurate and unrealistic analyses and they indicated that the time allocated for the collection of information would have been significantly reduced, affecting the quality of the evaluations and that crucial measures, such as shelters, would have been withdrawn based on the current location of the beneficiaries, exposing people to greater risk.<sup>288</sup> Other challenges identified by civil society organizations are the lack of elements that allow analyzing the contexts of the risks, the lack of analysis of all risk variables, and not foreseeing all the affectations, events, and security incidents within the chain of violence that defenders and journalists have suffered.<sup>289</sup>

319. The State did not submit information on specific measures that would account for how risk assessments would be carried out, guaranteeing compliance with standards in this area. This, despite the fact that in the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR highlighted the need to have objective criteria that make it possible to determine the conditions under which the granting and withdrawal of protection measures would operate, and to report on them and their application by the Protection Mechanism<sup>290</sup>. Although the information reported by the State states that "the risk analyses would be carried out in an appropriate manner in view of the urgency of each case,"<sup>291</sup> this statement is not accompanied by a justification for how and on the basis of what it is concluded that the evaluations are adequate and are carried out in compliance with established and objective criteria. beyond the urgency of the case. The sense of urgency in the abstract would be subjective in the absence of criteria that determine from what conditions such urgency would be accredited. In this regard, the Commission maintains partial compliance with the recommendation.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

320. To guide compliance with the recommendation, the IACHR reiterates its invitation to the State to guarantee the application of risk assessments based on relevant standards. The Commission urges the State to establish objective criteria to determine the conditions under which the granting and withdrawal of protection measures would operate, and to submit information on these and their application by the Protection Mechanism.<sup>292</sup>

Recommendation No. 75 Evaluate and adopt differentiated protection measures for women, indigenous leaders, and environmental defenders.

321. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Monitoring Report, the Protection Mechanism conducts risk assessments based on a matrix that includes components of gender, ethnic and social identity, and other conditions of vulnerability, conducting 311 risk assessments between January and August 2023. However, civil society organizations criticized the lack of effectiveness in the implementation of measures and risk assessment. Although a gender analysis is incorporated, it is not adequately reflected in protection measures, and a high turnover of staff and a lack of knowledge in human rights and gender perspective have been documented. It has been referred to that measures for indigenous people can cause significant cultural ruptures. The IACHR thanked the information provided, but determined that the recommendation remained in partial compliance, since detailed information on the practical application of the differentiated protection measures was lacking.<sup>293</sup>

Compliance Information

322. In 2024, the State said it would have adopted a comprehensive approach to ensure differentiated protection for women, indigenous leaders, and environmental defenders, recognizing the particular needs of each group based on their specific vulnerabilities. The State reported that one of the advances was the creation, in January 2024, of the Specialized Table for Attention with a Gender Perspective, known as "La Equipa." This space would seek to strengthen the protection of women human rights defenders and journalists, from a comprehensive perspective. "La Equipa" would provide protection and promote the creation of safe environments for these women to continue their work. In the case of indigenous leaders, the State reported that it had developed specialized measures that take into account their fundamental role as defenders of the rights of their communities and the environment. The State explained that, in 2024, 184 indigenous defenders are incorporated into the Mechanism. The State highlighted the ratification of the Escazú Agreement in December 2020 and that, in follow-up to the international obligations arising from the Agreement, in February 2024, the government convened the working group "Regional Action for Environmental Defenders", in which representatives of 28 states participated, with the aim of integrating a local perspective into the Regional Action Plan for Environmental Defenders. adopted in April 2024 during the Third Meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Escazú Agreement (COP3).<sup>294</sup>

323. The State maintained that, in addition, significant progress had been made to extend social security to the most vulnerable journalists, in collaboration with the Mexican Social Security Institute (IMSS) and the Ministry of the Interior, with an investment of 45.7 million pesos until December 2023. The State said that this program would have allowed more than 1,500 journalists who previously lacked access to these benefits to now have voluntary coverage within the social security system. On the other hand, the State stated that the differentiated approach has been adopted by 26 states, which already have specialized regulations for the protection of human rights defenders and journalists. In turn, the Gender Equality Unit of the FGR collaborates with various prosecutors' offices to ensure that crimes committed against women journalists are investigated with a gender perspective, which represents an advance in the impartiality and effectiveness of justice procedures.<sup>295</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

324. The Commission insists that although it values the information in the abstract that the State submits to this IACHR, it is necessary to indicate through which specific and punctual measures and/or actions the recommendation would be complied with. In this regard, by affirming that the State guarantees "the adoption of a comprehensive approach to differentiated protection and the strengthening of the protection of women human rights defenders and journalists, from a comprehensive perspective," it is essential that specific information be submitted on those actions or measures through which such an approach would be adopted. In the same vein, the IACHR values the information reported on the creation of "La Equipa" However, there is also no information on how or from what actions "La Equipa" would be promoting safe spaces, nor the specialized measures that would be implemented in relation to defenders of the rights of their communities and the environment. By virtue of the foregoing, the Commission maintains the recommendation in partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

325. In order to guide full compliance with this recommendation, the Commission reiterates the need to have information that accounts for how the differentiated measures of protection for the persons provided for in the recommendation are determined or established in practice. In this regard, the Commission urges the State to submit more information on the methodology implemented for the risk assessment, how it is carried out with a differentiated approach, and how the latter determines the protection measures that are granted.

Recommendation No. 76 Urge the State to implement strategies so that the different institutions, at the various federal and state levels, work in an articulated manner in order to provide a comprehensive response on all issues related to the protection of human rights defenders, as well as journalists.

326. In Chapter V of the 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR observed that the State reiterated the creation of the Governing Board of the Protection Mechanism for Human Rights Defenders and Journalists, which coordinated actions to address cases and organized three national meetings with the participation of federal and state authorities. The State reported the signing of an agreement with the Mexican Social Security Institute to incorporate 925 independent journalists into the Social Security Regime. However, civil society organizations reported that, despite these efforts, coordination problems and the lack of additional measures persisted. The IACHR valued the information provided, but concluded that the recommendation remained partially complied with due to the lack of details on the effectiveness of inter-institutional coordination.<sup>296</sup>

Compliance Information

327. In 2024, the State reiterated the information submitted in 2022<sup>297</sup> and 2023<sup>298</sup>. In this regard, he referred to the creation of the Protection Mechanism for Human Rights Defenders and Journalists, which would have encouraged effective coordination between the Federation, the states and autonomous bodies, such as prosecutors' offices and human rights commissions. The State stated that the Mechanism operates under a structure that involves multiple actors and reaffirmed that the composition of the Governing Board includes various entities of the Federal Government, such as the Ministry of the Interior, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the National Guard, the FGR, the CNDH, and representatives of civil society, which would guarantee a multidimensional approach. The State reported that coordination between levels of government and the implementation of protection measures in a uniform and coherent manner throughout the country would be guaranteed. In addition, the Working Group for the Strengthening of the Mechanism, made up of international organizations such as the OHCHR and specialized civil society organizations, would have collaborated in the strengthening of the Mechanism. The State referred to the increase in the allocation of resources from the Mechanism, reiterating the information reported in the previous recommendations<sup>299</sup>. In its observations on this report, the State reported that the Mechanism provided 46 training courses to State authorities with the aim of raising awareness of the right to defend human rights.<sup>300</sup>

328. For their part, civil society organizations reported that they would continue to document cases in which there is no effective coordination between the request for protection measures by the Mechanism and its implementation. Specifically, with regard to the patrols of the police authorities, the beneficiaries report that, although they are fulfilled for a few months after the government meetings, they are rarely maintained continuously throughout the assigned accompaniment period.<sup>301</sup> According to civil society organizations, the lack of coordination between the mechanism and the municipal authorities continues to be a challenge, as well as the absence of coordination between the internal units of the Mechanism.<sup>302</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

329. The Commission does not have information that accounts for how in practice articulated work is guaranteed between the institutions at the federal and state levels. Pending further details on the coordination measures implemented, the IACHR considers that the recommendation continues to be partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

330. In order to guide the full implementation of this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to report on the actions and strategies implemented to guarantee coordinated work between institutions at the federal, state, and municipal levels. The Commission invites the State to continue reporting details on how, in practice, this articulation would be materialized to provide a comprehensive response for the protection of human rights defenders and journalists.

Recommendation No. 77 Encourage the protection mechanism to implement a dissemination strategy on its competencies, the requirements for entry into the program, among other necessary information, so that human rights defenders and journalists are aware of the protection that the mechanism can provide. Similarly, and in accordance with international standards, provide access to the necessary information on the protection mechanism, in order to provide greater transparency about the work being carried out.

331. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, a dissemination and awareness-raising strategy was implemented on the Protection Mechanism and the defense of human rights, including training in 19 states and official accounts on social networks were set up, and the "Facing Freedom" campaign was launched in collaboration with the European Union and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. Human Rights in Mexico, which reached 22 states. However, civil society organizations reported that, although the Mechanism uses Twitter for dissemination, the communication strategy was still limited and did not reach the entire population. The IACHR appreciated the additional efforts, but concluded that the recommendation remained partially complied with, highlighting the need for a more inclusive and coordinated communication strategy.

Compliance Information

332. In 2024, the State reported that, through the General Coordination of Social Communication and Spokesperson of the Presidency, the SEGOB, in collaboration with the Delegation of the European Union (EU) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, had implemented a comprehensive dissemination strategy on the Mechanism, and said that the campaign entitled "Facing Freedom" aims to make visible the risks faced by women and women. human rights defenders and journalists, and to raise awareness of available protection measures. These materials would be disseminated in public spaces and social networks, so that the information reaches all regions of the country, facilitating access for potential beneficiaries. Finally, the State reported that the authorities, including the Secretariat of Security and Citizen Protection (SSPC), the Unit for the Defense of Human Rights of the Interior, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, are actively participating in the dissemination and implementation of this strategy to ensure that defenders and journalists have clear and accessible information on the protection mechanisms available<sup>303</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

333. The Commission welcomes the dissemination of the "Facing Freedom" campaign and welcomes the fact that the campaign is replicated not only on social networks, but also in public spaces, and that the authorities are involved in the process of disseminating the content of the campaign that would make visible the protection measures available to the State. By virtue of the foregoing, the Commission concludes that the recommendation is fully complied with.

Recommendation No. 78: Encourage the protection mechanism to adopt a procedure that allows it to order ex officio protection measures in those cases that, due to their seriousness and urgency, require them immediately.

334. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the Commission took note of the work of the Case Reception and Rapid Reaction Unit, which is responsible for issuing and implementing Urgent Protection Measures immediately, in accordance with the Law for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and Journalists. However, civil society organizations indicated that no specific measures had been put forward to address urgent cases, and that there had been a significant delay in the incorporation of journalists into the Protection Mechanism. They highlighted the case of Gustavo Sánchez Cabrera, a journalist murdered in 2021, who had faced delays in the evaluation and application of protection measures. The IACHR concluded that, although the law establishes procedures for urgent measures, these are initiated only from a request and not ex officio, concluding that the recommendation was still partially complied with. The State was urged to report on the implementation of a procedure to grant ex officio protection measures.<sup>304</sup>

Compliance Information

335. In 2024, the State said that the Mechanism grants preventive protection measures through a rigorous and technical process that evaluates the level of risk faced by applicants. This process is carried out through a comprehensive assessment that examines the context in which they operate, the nature of the threats received and the degree of vulnerability of the person in question. Depending on the results of this assessment, specific protection measures would be put in place, which could include escorts, bulletproof vests and surveillance cameras, or the temporary relocation of affected persons. The State reported that the measures are decided jointly by government institutions, beneficiaries, and civil society through its Advisory Council.

336. For their part, civil society organizations reported that the Mexican State has not presented measures or guidelines to address serious and urgent cases, and that there is a delay in the process of joining the Mechanism. In some accompanying cases, the organizations indicated that they had registered a delay in the incorporation of journalists into the Mechanism, which would make it inefficient and ineffective in situations of risk to the press.<sup>305</sup> Similarly, the IACHR and the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression have received reports alleging a lack of timely response by the Mechanism to situations of gravity and extreme urgency affecting the beneficiaries.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

337. The Commission values the information reported regarding the analysis of the context, nature of the threats, and degree of vulnerability of the person in question, in the Mechanism's risk analysis process. However, this process does not account for how protection measures are being granted ex officio, guaranteeing immediate implementation. In this sense, although the process and criteria reported by the State would be objective, they do not differentiate between the protection measures granted as a result of an ordinary procedure vis a vis those measures that would be granted ex officio. In this regard, and pending specific information regarding the protection measures granted ex officio, the Commission maintains the recommendation as partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

338. In order to guide full compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to report on the difference in the processes for granting protection measures at the request of those granted ex officio. It is necessary for the State to inform whether the reported process is provided for in any regulation or ordinance that allows its permanence over time to be verified.

Recommendation No. 79 To urge the State to redouble its efforts to investigate the facts that led to the entry and stay of persons covered by the protection mechanism, with a view to establishing the investigation as a preventive measure as a State policy.

339. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the Commission noted that, although the Protection Mechanism does not have the authority to investigate crimes, it encourages collaboration with state prosecutors' offices and works to strengthen a national network of authorities to improve attention to the problem. Civil society organizations, however, reported that impunity in cases of violence against the press remains high, with more than 97% of FEADLE cases unsentenced between 2012 and 2022. The IACHR observed difficulties in coordination between authorities and the lack of progress in investigations and prevention, maintaining the recommendation as partially complied with. The State was urged to strengthen institutional measures for the investigation of the facts that led to inclusion in the Mechanism and to provide information on the progress and results of these investigations.<sup>306</sup>

340. In 2024, the State reported that risk analyses are carried out once a beneficiary is incorporated and protection measures are granted; then, when the Risk Assessment Unit has the file, it would be scheduled to carry out the risk assessment or re-evaluation, as the case may be. as well as the generation and approval of the protection plan by the Governing Board. In this way, it argues, the risk analyses take into consideration the vulnerability of human rights defenders and journalists and seek to generate protection plans that have suitable, effective, and temporary measures and that, in no case, such measures restrict the activities of the beneficiaries, nor do they imply surveillance or unwanted intrusions into their work or personal lives<sup>307</sup>.

341. In turn, civil society organizations alleged impunity in cases of violence against the press and highlighted that, of the FEADLE cases, more than 97% would not have a sentence (between 2012 and December 2022). The organizations indicated that the Federal Protection Mechanism would have rejected any investigative act, arguing that it is not within its powers to investigate the facts, relegating the investigations to the state Prosecutor's Offices and the FGR<sup>308</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

342. The Commission warns that there is still a challenge in the coordination between authorities at different levels to assist in investigations and prosecutions, and that this has hindered progress and the development of effective processes that guarantee the right of access to justice. In this sense, there is no information that accounts for progress in coordination between authorities to contribute to the investigation processes, or in prevention strategies. The Commission therefore maintains the recommendation as partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

343. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the Commission invites the State to adopt institution-building measures to ensure the investigation of the events that lead to the entry of persons into the Protection Mechanism, and to report on the results of these measures and on the progress made in the investigation processes related to the cases that are part of the Protection Mechanism. It is also suggested that you report on the actions taken to ensure that the investigation is carried out in an impartial, exhaustive and expeditious manner and that they lead to the proper prosecution and punishment of the persons responsible.

Recommendation No. 80 Encourage the mechanism to adopt tools that allow it to measure the effectiveness of the measures implemented, as well as to increase the transparency of all actions taken to increase the confidence of the beneficiaries. This must be accompanied by the development of a policy of prevention and participation of the target population.

344. According to the information reported by the State for the 2023 Follow-up Report, the Commission took note of the work of the Prevention, Monitoring, and Analysis Unit of the Protection Mechanism, which is responsible for evaluating the measures implemented and proposing modifications and improvements. However, civil society organizations reported deficiencies in the risk analyses prepared by the Mechanism, which do not adequately provide for the context and updated information, and reported an increase in amparos, complaints, and denunciations against the Mechanism and its staff. The organizations also highlighted that, in 2022, out of 291 applications for incorporation, 152 were inadmissible without clear explanations. The IACHR, since it did not receive detailed information on the results of the evaluations carried out by the Prevention Unit, maintained the recommendation as pending compliance. It was suggested that the State adopt measures to have evaluation indicators that verify the effectiveness of the measures implemented, incorporating the perspective of users.<sup>309</sup>

Compliance Information

345. In 2024, the State reported that Mexican authorities, including the Secretariat of Security and Citizen Protection (SSPC), the Unit for the Defense of Human Rights of the Interior, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs are participating in the dissemination and implementation of this strategy to ensure that defenders and journalists have clear and accessible information on the protection mechanisms available. The State reported that the risk analysis of a differentiated approach guarantees the gender perspective when conducting interviews with the beneficiaries. The State emphasized that the methodology has variants that are applied with this approach, which are the following: Discrimination and exclusion based on gender expression, gender condition, condition based on sex-gender orientation, age condition, indigenous condition and appearance, religious beliefs, socially stigmatized groups, disability conditions, and it would identify if they have faced any type of violence. Similarly, those situations that influence their work would be recorded. With all the information provided, it would be indicated if the beneficiaries have been affected by gender or violence.<sup>310</sup>

346. The information reported by the State shows how a differentiated approach in the work of the Mechanism is being strengthened. However, no information related to measurement processes and evaluation of the effectiveness of the measures implemented is reported, as established in the recommendation. Nor is there any information on measures implemented to increase the confidence of beneficiaries. Consequently, the IACHR concludes that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

347. In order to guide compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to adopt initiatives that allow it to have evaluation indicators to verify the effectiveness of the measures implemented in their entirety. The Commission suggests that this assessment should include the perspective of the users of such measures.

III. SUMMARY TABLE OF THE LEVEL OF COMPLIANCE WITH THE RECOMMENDATIONS

IV. CONCLUSIONS

349. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has carried out an exhaustive and detailed follow-up analysis of the recommendations presented in the 2015 Country Report with respect to Mexico. This analysis accounts for certain advances and commitments on the part of the Mexican State to comply with its international human rights obligations. However, multiple challenges and obstacles remain that must be overcome to ensure effective compliance with the recommendations issued.

350. In the 2024 analysis, of the 80 recommendations provided for in this Report, it is observed that: 22.50% are in full compliance, 21.25% in substantial partial compliance, 40.00% in partial compliance, 12.50% remain pending compliance, 1.25% are not complied with, and 2.50% have a follow-up closure. These data represent a significant advance compared to the 2023 report, where 11% of the recommendations were in full compliance and 17% in substantial partial compliance. However, significant challenges remain in the effective implementation of the recommendations. In particular, there are key areas where the actions of the State have not been sufficient to guarantee a substantial improvement. The IACHR reiterates the need for concrete structural measures that ensure sustained progress and fully respect human rights, overcoming the limitations that have hindered more significant progress in previous years.

351. The 2024 follow-up report reveals a mixed picture in relation to progress in complying with the recommendations issued by the IACHR to the Mexican State. On the one hand, there has been some progress in areas such as the professionalization and strengthening of police forces and the adoption of public policies for mental health and addiction care, as well as in the establishment of disaggregated information systems that address violence against vulnerable groups. In these areas, the State's commitment has made it possible to achieve substantial levels of total or partial compliance, highlighting the implementation of national strategies and training programs that contribute to the improvement of institutional capacities and the attention to social problems.

352. However, significant challenges remain, particularly in the area of the militarization of public security and the lack of effective implementation of independent accountability mechanisms. The transfer of the GN to SEDENA and the persistent participation of the Armed Forces in citizen security tasks represent a setback in the application of international standards, which contravenes the recommendations to limit military action in civilian functions. The lack of progress in creating an independent body of accountability, as well as mass dismissals in key institutions such as the CNB, have raised concerns related to institutional weakness in addressing the country's disappearance crisis.

353. With regard to the mechanisms for searching for and identifying disappeared persons, there is an institutional weakening that affects the State's ability to guarantee the implementation of the General Law on Disappearances. The lack of adequate regulation, the failure to create forensic records and the fragmentation in coordination between authorities prevent significant progress and aggravate the situation of uncertainty for the relatives of disappeared persons.

354. Finally, although there are efforts to update public policies with a focus on human rights, worrying setbacks persist in critical areas such as the investigation of serious human rights violations, transparency in the operation of national registries, and cooperation with international justice mechanisms. Resistance to implementing structural reforms and the lack of concrete actions to ensure the effective participation of victims and their families limit progress in achieving justice and comprehensive reparation.

355. In conclusion, although some progress is recognized, the 2024 report shows a worrying trend of regression in fundamental areas, which forces the IACHR to maintain most of the recommendations in partial or pending compliance. It is essential that the Mexican State strengthen its commitment to human rights through the effective implementation of the recommendations issued, prioritizing institutional strengthening, transparency, and comprehensive protection of the rights of all people, particularly those most vulnerable groups.

FOLLOW-UP TO RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY THE IACHR IN ITS COUNTRY OR THEMATIC REPORTS

FIRST FOLLOW-UP REPORT ON THE RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY THE IACHR IN THE 2023 REPORT ON THE SITUATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN PERU IN THE CONTEXT OF SOCIAL PROTESTS

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The purpose of this chapter is to follow up on the recommendations issued in the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Peru in the Context of Social Protests, which was approved on April 23, 2023 by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (hereinafter "Commission", "Inter-American Commission" or "IACHR"), in compliance with paragraph 9 of Article 59 of its Rules of Procedure. In accordance with this provision, the Commission will follow-up, through Chapter V of its Annual Report, on the measures adopted by the member states of the Organization of American States (hereinafter "OAS") to comply with the recommendations made in the IACHR's country or thematic reports.

2. With respect to the background to this follow-up report, in the context of the 2022 crisis of democratic and social institutions in Peru, the IACHR carried out a working visit to the country from January 11 to 13, 2023, which was preceded by a preparatory technical mission of the Executive Secretariat, which took place from December 20 to 22, 2022.

3. In 2023, the IACHR issued the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Peru in the Context of Social Protests (hereinafter "Country Report").<sup>1</sup> In accordance with the provisions of Article 59(5) of its Rules of Procedure, in preparing this report, the Commission relied on the findings and information obtained before, during, and after the aforementioned visit and, in the investigations carried out ex officio, information provided by the State, inputs from the different mechanisms through which the IACHR has followed up on the situation in the country, as well as journalistic articles, decisions and recommendations of specialized international organizations, among others.

4. In the Country Report, which includes events that occurred between December 7, 2022 and January 23, 2023, the Commission addressed the human rights situation in Peru, in the context of numerous and massive peaceful demonstrations, as well as acts of violence that occurred outside the right to protest. The Commission recorded complex situations of social conflict that ended with dozens of deaths and hundreds of injuries, reporting acts of disproportionate use of force, attacks on journalists, as well as mass arrests of demonstrators. The IACHR's findings were recorded in the context of the country's structural problems, such as inequality or historical discrimination against certain groups.<sup>2</sup>

5. Based on the IACHR's findings, the Country Report issued 36 recommendations addressed to the State, in accordance with the following six thematic axes: (i) Dialogue and overcoming the crisis, (ii) citizen security, (iii) reparation and attention to human rights victims, (iv) fight against impunity, (v) democratic institutions, and (vi) freedom of expression, meeting and partnership.

6. This is the first IACHR report to follow up on compliance with the recommendations of Peru's latest Country Report. In particular, it identifies the State measures adopted to comply with the Commission's recommendations, as well as the pending challenges in terms of implementation, based on the information provided by the State, civil society organizations, and publicly available information.

7. In the process of following up on the recommendations of the Country Report, on May 3, 2023, the IACHR requested information from the State of Peru on their compliance, which it received from the State on January 8, 2024 and which it published through the Inter-American SIMORE. In addition, on the occasion of the preparation of this follow-up report, on November 8, 2024, the IACHR again requested the State to submit, within 30 days, information on compliance with the recommendations contained in the Country Report. Consequently, the State provided the requested information on December 11, 2024<sup>3</sup>, which it also published through the Inter-American SIMORE, so it can be consulted by anyone through this computer tool<sup>4</sup>. The Commission appreciates and is grateful for the information received, which, as relevant, was included in the present report.

8. In addition, the IACHR conducted a high-level visit to the Peruvian State on August 12 and 13, 2024, to hold meetings with the Executive Branch, the Congress of the Republic, the Judiciary, the Ombudsman's Office, the Public Prosecutor's Office, the electoral bodies, and the Constitutional Court. These meetings allowed the IACHR to gather information on the progress and challenges in implementing the recommendations.

9. For its part, the IACHR also sent a questionnaire to civil society organizations in order to provide relevant information for the follow-up to the recommendations. Part of these responses were published through the Inter-American SIMORE, so they can also be consulted through this computer tool<sup>5</sup>. The IACHR is grateful for the information provided, which was taken into account as pertinent to the follow-up to the recommendations of the Country Report.<sup>6</sup>

10. On February 14, 2025, the Commission transmitted to the State a copy of the preliminary draft of this report, in accordance with Article 59(10) of its Rules of Procedure, and requested that its observations be forwarded. On March 14, 2025, the Commission received the State's comments; which, as appropriate, were incorporated into this version and whose document is annexed to this Report. The final version of this Report was approved by the Commission on 26 March 2025.

11. This follow-up report analyzes the measures adopted by the State to comply with the Commission's recommendations and the challenges pending their implementation. The level of compliance with the recommendations is evaluated in accordance with the General Guidelines for Follow-up on Recommendations and Decisions of the IACHR,<sup>7</sup> following the thematic structure incorporated in the Country Report. The preparation of this document is consistent with the IACHR's practice in following up on recommendations.

12. This report is divided into four sections in accordance with the thematic axes of the recommendations being followed. With respect to each recommendation under follow-up, the report presents: (i) the information that has been known to the IACHR since the publication of the Country Report reported by the State and civil society organizations, as well as that collected in the monitoring of the general human rights situation in the country;<sup>8</sup> (ii) the analysis of the level of compliance and refers to the main progress and implementation challenges identified by the Commission, according to the information known since the publication of the Country Report until 2024; (iii) a diagnosis by the IACHR of the specific information that the State has not submitted or of the measures that remain to be adopted to determine progress in the level of compliance with the recommendation; and (iv) its conclusions regarding the progress and challenges of compliance with the set of recommendations of the Country Report analyzed.

13. Full compliance with the IACHR's recommendations is essential to ensure the full observance of human rights in the OAS member states and to strengthen the Inter-American Human Rights System (hereinafter "IAHRS"). The current international scenario requires that the actors involved actively participate by reporting information on measures to comply with the decisions adopted by international organizations.

14. The IACHR reiterates the importance of full compliance with the recommendations made in the report and that the follow-up make it possible to establish a process of dialogue with the State of Peru in order to achieve suitable, timely, and effective measures that achieve the objectives of each recommendation that the Commission has formulated for the promotion and protection of human rights.

II. FOLLOW-UP TO RECOMMENDATIONS

A. Dialogue and overcoming the crisis

Recommendation No. 1. Design and implement, from the highest level of the State, a strategy of genuine dialogue, with an ethnic and territorial approach, which allows listening to all sectors and levels of the political and administrative division, especially those that have been most affected by historical, social and structural discrimination in the country.

Compliance Information

15. In 2024, the State reported on the implementation of the Together for Peace and Governance Strategy<sup>9</sup>, at the time of the political crisis, which included the preparation of an intervention guide called "Dialogue Tables: Together for Social Peace and Governance".<sup>10</sup> It also stated that, between January and March 2023, spaces for Dialogues for Peace and Governance were installed in the regions of Huancavelica (February 10), Pasco (February 9), Huánuco (January 17), Junín (January 23), Loreto, San Martín, Ucayali, Amazonas (January 31), Ica (February 9) and Lambayeque (February 24). These spaces were convened in response to the need to work together to recover social stability and initiate efforts to address the main challenges of the territories. At a later time, these spaces for dialogue focused on addressing the department's priorities on public policies, public investments or other types of interventions, which was called the "departmental agenda".

16. Peru noted that, for these dialogues, the "Guidelines for the Promotion of Women's Meaningful Participation in Dialogue Processes for the Attention of Social Conflicts" (2021)<sup>11</sup> and the "Guidelines and protocols for the intervention of the Executive Branch, regional and local governments in matters of social management and dialogue" (2021)<sup>12</sup> were used. The State has reported that the latter are in the process of being updated through the organization of a working group made up of public entities<sup>13</sup>. The State also reported that an update of the "Protocol for Monitoring and Management of Commitments of the Secretariat of Social Management and Dialogue" has been approved.

17. In relation to the implementation of a policy of permanent dialogue, the State reported that in 2024 around 1900 meetings had been promoted; this includes those of a preventive nature, coordination, and dialogue with local authorities in Apurímac, Cusco, Puno, Arequipa, and Lima. In addition, the meetings of Committees for the Prevention and Management of Social Conflicts in Amazonas, Callao, Lima Provinces, Ayacucho, Pasco, Junín, Arequipa, Lambayeque, Piura and other regions, which aim to develop an articulated analysis between the Executive and local authorities of the conflict scenarios in each region, propose preventive actions and jointly address the specific problems of these regions. In the same vein, the Commission was informed that efforts were made to strengthen and create Dialogue Offices in the Regional Governments.

18. The State reported to the IACHR that the process of formulating the National Multisectoral Policy for the Prevention and Management of Social Conflicts was formalized, which created the Multisectoral Working Group (GTM) in charge of preparing the policy proposal, which was installed on December 3, 2024.<sup>14</sup> Likewise, with regard to capacity-building in conflict prevention and social management, it indicated that the development of a Diploma Program in Dialogue, Prevention and Management of Social Conflicts aimed at public officials of the central and regional governments had begun.

19. For its part, civil society reported the importance of designing spaces for dialogue that have the institutional capacity to address the demands identified in each region; To this end, efforts must be made to implement the agreements reached, particularly in relation to public services that are essential to meet social demands, such as health, education, justice and economic development. Likewise, the lack of participatory follow-up mechanisms for the results that emerge from these tables was stressed, and the necessary strengthening of the autonomy of local and regional governments to lead the dialogues in each of their territories and specific contexts was highlighted.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

20. The IACHR thanks the State and civil society for the information provided and recognizes the State measures adopted within the framework of the Together for Peace Strategy to generate channels of dialogue, based on the normative instruments approved and updated (Guides and Guidelines), and the spaces for dialogue organized. In this regard, the IACHR identifies that the actions implemented seek to address issues such as social peace, governance, conflict prevention, and social management.

21. The IACHR identifies the need for more information about the contents of the dialogues that have taken place since 2023 in the different regions, the objectives they have addressed, which sectors have been heard and whether they belong to groups that have historically been discriminated against, what their demands have been, and the agreements reached, and whether they have had an impact on the formulation of public policies.<sup>15</sup> It is essential that the dialogues are carried out in a decentralized manner and that the strategy includes not only the organization of spaces for exchange but also actions so that these have a tangible impact on decision-making processes and public policy formulation,<sup>16</sup> with concrete agreements and clear, transparent and participatory mechanisms or monitoring instruments. Likewise, although the dialogue strategy is an obligation of means, and not of results, for the Commission it is essential that its main motivation is an adequate approach to the prevention and resolution of conflicts, as well as genuine channels of encounter between actors and institutions.

22. Recognizing the State's actions and taking into account that the IACHR needs additional specific information on the development of the qualities required to guarantee a genuine and effective dialogue strategy with results, it calls for the strengthening of the mechanisms for monitoring the agreements and the impact of these channels on effective decision-making. In the meantime, the Commission identifies that the recommendation has been partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

23. The Commission urges the State to continue strengthening decentralized channels of dialogue, focused on groups particularly affected by the protests that occurred between 2022 and 2023. It also highlights the need for these spaces of dialogue to generate agreements that allow an adequate approach to conflicts between public institutions and citizens. In order to move forward with the fulfillment of the recommendation, it will be necessary to have the text of the Together for Peace Strategy, as well as its instruments and the details of the actions implemented; in particular, to know the regional or local authorities with which these dialogues have been carried out, and how the presence of those who have been the most affected by historical, social and structural discrimination in the country has been ensured.

Recommendation No. 2. Guarantee the participation of indigenous peoples and peasant communities in decision-making spaces on policies, programs, and other measures related to matters of national interest, including those related to development.

Compliance Information

24. In 2024, the State reported that, since 2023, three working meetings have been organized within the framework of the "Permanent Multisectoral Commission in charge of proposing, monitoring, and overseeing the implementation of strategic measures and actions for the comprehensive development of indigenous or native peoples in the country."<sup>17</sup> The Multisectoral Commission is made up of 12 sectors of the Executive Branch and seven indigenous organizations of national scope, which seeks to articulate and develop proposals for actions between indigenous organizations and public entities.

25. The State reported the creation of the Multisectoral Commission in charge of proposing and overseeing the implementation of strategic measures and actions for the sustainable and integral development of the indigenous or native peoples of the Central Jungle,<sup>18</sup> in which 13 sectors of the Executive Branch, four regional governments, and two regional indigenous organizations participate. This commission held internal coordination meetings and prepared its Work Plan.<sup>19</sup>

26. The State also highlighted the request for the incorporation of organizations representing indigenous or native peoples and the Afro-Peruvian people into the National Accord Forum held by the Executive Branch. This forum is a space for dialogue and consensus-building, which seeks to represent the interests of different sectors of the country. In response to this request, indigenous peoples' organizations were invited to the Second Decentralized Meeting of the Agreement.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>17</sup> As reported, it was created by Supreme Decree No. 005-2021-MC and has as its antecedent the Working Group of a permanent nature, in charge of coordinating, proposing and monitoring public policies that involve indigenous peoples and/or require an intercultural approach, in a participatory manner, between representatives of the Vice Ministry of Interculturality and indigenous peoples. through its national representative organizations - GTPI, which was created with Ministerial Resolution No. 403-2014-MC of November 6, 2014.

<sup>19</sup> The Work Plan was approved at a meeting held in the city of Satipo, on July 18, 2024.

<sup>20</sup> It was held on November 2, 2023 in the city of Iquitos, department of Loreto.

27. The Commission received information from civil society regarding the alleged lack of dialogue or consultation for the approval of Law No. 31973<sup>21</sup>, which amends the Forestry and Wildlife Law (Law No. 29763). According to information provided by civil society organizations, this law would reduce the mechanisms of control and oversight of illegal activities and would make it possible to legalize the territory of those who exploit forests without permission, affecting the collective rights of indigenous peoples, as well as biodiversity in the Amazon. Likewise, the UN Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples pointed out, in a press release of January 31, 2024, that this law "could legalize and encourage the dispossession of indigenous peoples' lands and even threaten their physical and cultural survival."<sup>22</sup> In the same vein, it was pointed out to the IACHR that Supreme Decree No. 005-2024-MINAM,<sup>23</sup> which would limit the work of the National Environmental Certification Service (SENACE)<sup>24</sup> with respect to the approval of investment projects, had been approved without consultation or participation of indigenous organizations.

28. In relation to the quality of the participation of indigenous peoples' organizations, civil society expressed concern about the questions that exist about the timing of prior consultation, the interlocutors who are summoned, or the scope of what is being discussed; especially in relation to extractive activities and their impact on the exercise of indigenous peoples' rights. In this way, the IACHR was told that, although the right to consultation and participation of indigenous peoples in different public projects involving their communities has been recognized<sup>25</sup>, these mechanisms of indigenous participation are perceived as a formal or symbolic process, rather than as a central pillar in the country's governance. This, to the extent that they would not guarantee the inclusion of the protection of the collective rights of indigenous peoples in the norms or in the adoption of public policies.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

29. The IACHR has taken note of the spaces for dialogue with registered indigenous peoples' organizations, and of the requests made for the incorporation of the organizations into the National Agreement, and thanks the State for the information reported. The Commission has also received information provided by civil society on the laws that have been approved and that affect the collective rights of indigenous peoples, without allegedly implementing adequate and timely mechanisms for consultation or dialogue with indigenous peoples.

30. For the purposes of analyzing the guarantees of participation of indigenous peoples in the decision-making processes on measures of national interest established in the recommendation, it is relevant to note that the jurisprudence of the IAHRs has established, as part of the obligations of the States, the importance of implementing mechanisms for consultation and participation with indigenous peoples, whenever measures are taken that affect their collective rights.<sup>26</sup> The main function of these mechanisms is the adequate protection of the rights affected, and their inclusion in the construction of national development models. Therefore, these must have some essential characteristics: (i) that they are prior to the decision, (ii) free of pressure, (iii) with adequate information on the measure to be adopted. Likewise, the mechanisms of participation must be carried out in good faith; that is, they are aimed at reaching agreements or obtaining the consent of members of indigenous peoples.<sup>27</sup> This obligation would not only be an obligation of result; rather, in order to be achieved, it must have measures that demonstrate that the needs and interests of indigenous peoples have been valued and incorporated at the time of adopting such measures.<sup>28</sup>

31. Although the IACHR recognizes the information provided by the State, it does not have specific data after the protests that occurred between 2022 and 2023 that would corroborate the adoption of strategies, or the strengthening of existing ones, aimed at guaranteeing the participation of indigenous peoples and communities. Therefore, pending information indicating progress in guaranteeing the participation of indigenous peoples, it considers that compliance with the recommendation is pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

32. The Commission recalls the importance of guaranteeing mechanisms for the participation and prior consultation of indigenous peoples and communities in decision-making spaces, the omission of which was one of the factors that favored the escalation of the social conflicts that led to the protests between 2022 and 2023. The Commission urges the State to improve existing channels of dialogue and generate new ones, that allow for the effective inclusion of the needs and interests of indigenous peoples in decision-making processes, and that comply with the characteristics determined in the judgments of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and in the framework of Convention No. 169 of the International Labor Organization.

Recommendation No. 3. Design a public policy with a national scope and with a human rights perspective, which is aimed at the elimination and prevention of discrimination and stigmatization of persons based on their ethnic-racial origin or socioeconomic condition. This public policy must include, among others, the design and implementation of a pedagogical plan that is integrated into the country's permanent education policy.

Compliance Information

33. In 2024, the State reported the approval of the 2023 "Peru without Racism" Strategy<sup>29</sup>; which contained a plan of activities that included: (i) technical assistance for the preparation of ordinances; ii) development of "Peru without racism" fairs; (iii) development of actions for the strengthening of intercultural capacities; (iv) technical assistance to police stations for dealing with cases of ethnic-racial discrimination; v) recognition of "Good Intercultural Practices in Public Management"; (vi) "Peru without racism" communication strategy; and (vii) strengthening of the Guidance Service against Ethnic-Racial Discrimination (ORIENTA).<sup>30</sup> In the same vein, the State reported that, for 2024, it formulated a proposal for a Multisectoral Strategy "Peru without Racism" for 2030, which is being evaluated by the different sectors of the Executive Branch before its approval.

34. The State indicated that, since 2013, it has implemented an Alert Platform against Racism that aims to generate information on acts of ethnic-racial discrimination and encourage active citizens to report these acts. It also stressed that the ORIENTA service was established<sup>31</sup> to provide attention to people who report cases of discrimination. In addition, the implementation of capacity-building actions for the intercultural approach of public servants through MOOC courses, and for school audiences, with recreational educational activities, was reported.

35. In addition, the State highlighted the preparation and submission to Congress of the Bill for the Promotion of Cultural Diversity for the Prevention, Eradication, and Punishment of Ethnic-Racial Discrimination, promoted by the Executive Branch, which seeks to promote positive recognition of the identities and contributions of the different ethnic-cultural groups, to implement mechanisms with cultural and differentiated relevance, to promote and disseminate the worldview, history, culture, traditions, knowledge and traditional knowledge and to guarantee bilingual intercultural education.<sup>32</sup> The project is still being discussed, without yet having a favorable pre-opinion from the commissions that review it.

36. The State reported on the preparation of the National Policy on Indigenous or Native Peoples (PNPI), which contains intercultural public services. The policy is being debated in working meetings with indigenous organizations, prior to the development of a prior consultation process.<sup>33</sup> The State also referred to the process of updating the Intercultural Bilingual Education Policy (EIB), which incorporates cultural and linguistic diversity into the educational system as a learning opportunity, and the construction of a plural society free of racism.

37. Likewise, the State stated that, on December 4, 2024, it approved the National Multisectoral Human Rights Policy,<sup>34</sup> which seeks to reduce inequality and structural discrimination, guaranteeing the full exercise of people's rights. It was prepared through a participatory process with public entities, the Roundtable for Poverty Reduction, civil society and private sector institutions, as well as the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), which were part of the Multisectoral Working Group organized for the approval of the Policy. According to the information received by the State, the contribution of inputs was reportedly requested from civil society organizations that are part of the Group, but none had been received. Likewise, at the last meeting of the Plan in the Working Group, the entity representing civil society voted against its approval.

38. For its part, the IACHR took note of information sent by civil society on the "Peru Without Racism" strategy and the process of approval in the Legislative Branch of the bill on the Promotion of Cultural Diversity. According to civil society, both the implementation of the strategy and the approval and implementation of this bill require the strengthening of effective monitoring and evaluation mechanisms to measure its impact, and the necessary participation mechanisms.

39. In relation to the National Policy on Indigenous or Native Peoples (PNPI) and the approval of the National Multisectoral Human Rights Policy (PNDH), civil society emphasized the alleged lack of real dialogue for its approval. This is particularly true in the case of the PNDH, since the lack of attention to the observations submitted by civil society and its limited participation in the Multisectoral Commission in charge of preparing it were questioned. In addition, civil society criticized the fact that the process of developing these policies had been marked by the acts of violence included in the Country Report, as well as the approval of norms that go against Peru's international obligations in the field of human rights, such as the release of Alberto Fujimori.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

40. The IACHR has insisted that the principle of non-discrimination is one of the pillars of any democratic system and one of the fundamental foundations of the system for the protection of human rights, particularly in relation to groups that have historically been discriminated against.<sup>35</sup> In this sense, discrimination constitutes a way of perpetuating a situation of social vulnerability against a group based on its ethnic, racial origin or socioeconomic condition. For this reason, a policy aimed at the elimination and prevention of discrimination and stigmatization must have mechanisms for reporting and punishing specific situations of violence and must address situations of structural racism through awareness-raising and information plans, in particular their inclusion in the educational policies that are taught in education systems in general.

41. The Commission welcomes the approval of the 2024 National Multisectoral Human Rights Policy and the approval of the 2023 "Peru without Racism" Strategy. In this regard, the Commission notes the need for information that would make it possible to know the scope of the implementation of these documents. In addition, it takes note of the existence of the "Alert Against Racism" program and ORIENTA; and notes the progress made in the approval of national policies on indigenous or native peoples and on bilingual intercultural education, in addition to the process of approval of the bill on the Promotion of Cultural Diversity.

42. The Commission identifies that, although work is being done to strengthen the methodology of Intercultural Bilingual Education (EIB), this policy is specifically aimed at the indigenous population who study in EIB schools distributed in different regions of the country, but not in a general way for all educational centers through their curriculum. Considering that the implementation of this recommendation can be strengthened with measures of a more general scope for the population, the Commission qualifies this recommendation as partially compliant.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

43. To move forward with compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR emphasizes that the objective is to design a public policy with a national scope and with a human rights perspective, aimed at eliminating and preventing discrimination and stigmatization of persons based on their ethnic, racial, or socioeconomic status. In this regard, the IACHR expects to learn about the update of the strategy implemented in 2023, and the adoption of the measures of the National Multisectoral Human Rights Policy aimed at meeting this objective in accordance with the principles of the human rights approach to public policies.<sup>36</sup>

44. The recommendation also establishes the need for public policy to include the design and implementation of a pedagogical plan that is integrated into the country's continuing education policy. In this regard, the IACHR urges the State to work on ethnic, racial discrimination, or socioeconomic status in its educational curriculum. Likewise, to maintain and expand pedagogical actions to address cases of discrimination, and to address the structural discrimination still present in society.

B. Citizen Security

Recommendation No. 4. Adopt a permanent and mandatory training and evaluation plan for the security forces involved in the development of demonstrations and in the context of social protests so that their actions prioritize the defense of the life and integrity of all people.

Compliance Information

45. In 2024, the State announced the approval of the "Guidelines for Strengthening the Capacities of Police Personnel in the Use of Force Aimed at Continuous Improvement with a Human Rights Approach" (2023).<sup>37</sup> This initiative includes two instruments for the training of police personnel by instructors in human rights applied to the judicial function: (i) a virtual module on human rights and the use of force in the exercise of police functions; and ii) a methodological guide for instruction in police techniques and procedures with a human rights approach. The first of them is carried out asynchronously and contains interactive videos, mandatory and complementary readings. At the end of the module, you must pass a written exam, for which you have up to two opportunities. If approved, it grants an accreditation for one year. Likewise, the methodological guide is based on the fact that training development is a practical training with activities that recreate the police service and serves as the basis for the approval of updating programs by each territorial training secretariat of the Police.

46. The State reported that the General Command of the National Police of Peru appointed the Permanent Coordinator on Issues Related to Human Rights and the Use of Force, in order to assume control over the preparation, review, evaluation, and execution of training courses for instructors in human rights applied to the police and public order function.<sup>38</sup> In addition, it created the Human Rights Directorate of the General Staff of the National Police of Peru.<sup>39</sup>

47. In the same vein, the State reported the implementation of the "Refresher Program aimed at strengthening capacities in police interventions and operations against criminal acts," and other training and capacity-building courses in this area<sup>40</sup>, in collaboration with the International Committee of the Red Cross. In addition, it reported on the implementation of the "Strategic Plan for the Mainstreaming of Human Rights in the Police Function of the National School of Police Professional Training 2023", with workshops held at the decentralized level,<sup>41</sup>

48. For its part, civil society expressed concern that the training and plans approved by the Peruvian National Police had not developed independent and technically competent monitoring mechanisms to supervise their application during the protests.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

49. The Commission welcomes the approved Guidelines for Capacity Building, the creation of the Human Rights Directorate of the Police General Staff, and the training programs implemented for police agents and officers with a reach of approximately 150 people in 2024. However, it also identifies the lack of mechanisms for transparency of information that allows monitoring the use of such knowledge during the exercise of the use of force. In this regard, the IACHR observes that the information provided by the State indicates that this recommendation has a level of substantial partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

50. The IACHR requests the State to provide information on the mechanisms and instruments used to ensure the publication of information on the training of police officers, the mechanisms for monitoring the human rights policies used by police officers, and the results.

Recommendation No. 5. Adopt measures to ensure that the use of force by state agents is in accordance with the principles of legality, necessity and, especially, proportionality. Likewise, adopt the necessary measures to permanently train and evaluate all state agents involved in the protests on the implementation of the protocols for the use of force.

Compliance Information

51. For the year 2024, the State reported the validity of various norms that regulate the use of force such as Legislative Decree No. 1186<sup>42</sup> (2015), Legislative Decree No. 1095<sup>43</sup> (2010) and their regulations. In addition, it reported on the validity of the Manual of Operational Law for the Armed Forces (2022)<sup>44</sup> and the

52. The State informed the IACHR of the approval of the "Directive for the Appropriate Use of Non-Lethal or Less-Lethal Police Means in Police Operations to Control, Maintain, and Restore Public Order" (2023),<sup>46</sup> with the aim of strengthening the legal framework that regulates police action, particularly in the context of social protests. In addition, it indicated that the Joint Manual of Rules of Operational Conduct of the Armed Forces<sup>47</sup>, which contains the Rules of Engagement and the Rules of Use of Force, has been updated.

53. The State reported the existence of a methodological guide for instruction in police techniques and procedures with a rights-based approach, which promotes practical training, with activities that recreate the police service, and serves as a basis for the design of refresher programs in each territorial training secretariat (see para. 44).

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

54. The IACHR takes note of the approval of the "Directive for the Appropriate Use of Non-Lethal or Less-Lethal Police Means in Police Operations for the Control, Maintenance, and Restoration of Public Order" and of the updating of the Joint Manual of Rules of Operational Conduct of the Armed Forces. It also recognizes the norms indicated by the State, although it observes that these were approved prior to the acts of use of force that occurred during the protests of 2022 and 2023. It also notes the existence of a methodological guide that seeks to apply the contents in situations that recreate the police service.

55. The IACHR emphasizes that progress in the level of compliance with this recommendation depends on the State adopting and applying a clear and coherent regulatory framework that guarantees the principles of legality, necessity, and proportionality in the context of social protests. In this sense, the regulations must not only include the mention of these principles, but must also be adapted to their contents to generate the appropriate prevention mechanisms, which should include the implementation of specific training aimed at updating and applying the conditions in which security mechanisms occur in the context of social protests, the mechanisms to ensure the inclusion of these principles in the operational plans that are designed for each intervention, and the institutional mechanisms that guarantee that the documents and protocols are reviewed periodically, in a transparent and participatory manner, taking into account the new logistical and social conditions in which they are applied. Consequently, pending specific information on compliance measures adopted after the events recorded in the Country Report and the formulation of this recommendation, the Commission identifies that compliance is pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

56. The IACHR asks the State to report on the implementation of the "Directive for the Appropriate Use of Non-Lethal or Less-Lethal Police Means in Police Operations for the Control, Maintenance, and Restoration of Public Order" and the Joint Manual of Rules of Operational Conduct of the Armed Forces. In addition, to report on the measures that have been adopted to respond to the concern expressed in the Country Report, in relation to the use of force and detentions in the context of protests, such as the strengthening of capacity-building mechanisms for the agents who are in charge of controlling social protests, the mechanisms for the application of this regulatory framework, in accordance with the needs in each context, and the periodic updating of these documents, carried out in a participatory manner.

Recommendation No. 6. Take the regulatory or other measures that are necessary to ensure that firearms are excluded from the devices used to control social protests, as well as establish guidelines aimed at guiding the use of potentially lethal weapons.

<sup>47</sup> Ministerial Resolution No. 1098-2024-DE, October 5, 2024.

Compliance Information

57. In 2024, the State reported that, in accordance with Legislative Decree No. 1095 (2010), which regulates the rules for the employment and use of force in the context of protests, police personnel would only use firearms when strictly necessary to defend their own lives or those of third parties; otherwise, it would be an arbitrary use of force. In turn, the State pointed out that the update of the Joint Manual of Rules of Operational Conduct of the Armed Forces, cited in the framework of the follow-up to recommendation 5 of the Country Report, includes details and actions on the principles of the use of force, the use of less lethal means, the exceptional use of firearms and the protection of public or private property.

58. The State referred to the IACHR the approval of the "Directive for the Appropriate Use of Non-Lethal or Less-Lethal Police Means in Police Operations for the Control, Maintenance, and Restoration of Public Order" (2023),<sup>48</sup> in order to strengthen the legal framework that regulates police action, particularly in the context of social protests. This Directive establishes that "Body protection equipment and police means for the control, maintenance and restoration in public order operations includes lethal and non-lethal firearms, as well as other non-lethal means to be used by duly trained personnel and according to the function they perform".

59. For its part, civil society conveyed that the practical implementation of these rules would be controversial and ineffective since they were the ones in force at the time of the protests that were the subject of the IACHR Country Report, in which the disproportionate use of force, including the use of firearms, was documented, resulting in injuries and deaths<sup>49</sup>. In the same vein, as mentioned in recommendation 5, Law No. 32181<sup>50</sup>, approved in 2024, prevents the Public Prosecutor's Office, under functional responsibility, from requesting preliminary judicial detention or preventive detention against police personnel in a situation of activity when they use their weapons or means of defense in a regulatory manner, even if injuries or deaths of third parties have been caused. According to civil society, this measure affects the lack of independent and technically trained mechanisms to monitor the use of weapons in protest control operations.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

60. With regard to the use of force, the IAHR has cited the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials in the case of Women Victims of Sexual Torture in Atenco v. Mexico<sup>51</sup>. In this regard, it noted that law enforcement officials will refrain from using firearms when dispersing gatherings "except in self-defense or defense of others, in case of imminent danger of death or serious injury, or for the purpose of preventing the commission of a particularly serious crime involving a serious threat to life, or for the purpose of arresting a person who represents such a danger and resists his authority, or to prevent his escape, and only in the event that less extreme measures are insufficient to achieve those objectives."<sup>52</sup> In this regard, considering that the use of lethal weapons constitutes an exception based on the seriousness of the human rights impact of the crime to be prevented, and the absence of other less extreme measures; the Commission has indicated that States must implement mechanisms to effectively prohibit the use of lethal force as a means of public demonstrations, and guarantee the appropriate and proportionate use of less-lethal weapons, through the development of clear protocols of action that respect inter-American standards in this area.<sup>53</sup> That is why the recommendation aims to analyze all the regulatory or other measures necessary to exclude the use of firearms for the control of social protests, that is, those aimed at preventing their use, and punishing those agents who do not comply with them.

<sup>49</sup> According to the information provided by civil society, the facts contained in the Country Report in question show the use of firearms during the use of force by security agents.

61. Along these lines, the Commission values the adoption of the "Directive for the appropriate use of non-lethal or less-lethal police means in police operations for the control, maintenance and restoration of public order" which seeks to influence the exclusion of firearms from the devices used to control social protests. However, the regulatory framework approved (Law No. 32181) could make it difficult to adopt sanction measures against those agents who make improper use of firearms. Consequently, the Commission considers that this recommendation is pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

62. The IACHR will declare progress in the level of compliance with this recommendation when the State presents measures that have been adopted to prohibit the use of firearms in the use of force in the context of social conflicts, considering the facts and complaints in the context of the facts contained in the Country Report. These measures should be aimed at generating mechanisms to sanction those agents who use them, which allow the chain of command and execution of this type of order to be identified within the security institutions, if applicable.<sup>54</sup> To this end, the IACHR remains attentive to the implementation that may be given to Law No. 32181 in accordance with the corresponding national and international framework on the use of force and the right to protest.

Recommendation No. 7. Adopt the necessary regulatory or institution-strengthening measures to ensure that the maintenance of internal public order and citizen security is primarily reserved for civilian security forces.

Recommendation No. 8. Ensure that the participation of the armed forces in security tasks is extraordinary, subordinate, and complementary to the work of civilian authorities. Similarly, adopt regulatory or institutional strengthening measures to ensure that this participation is regulated and supervised by competent, independent, and technically capable civilian bodies.

Compliance Information

63. In 2024, the State reported that the Political Constitution of Peru establishes that the purpose of the National Police is to guarantee, maintain, and restore internal order,<sup>55</sup> and that the Armed Forces can only act in the control of internal order in support of the National Police, when the Presidency of the Republic so provides through the declaration of a State of Emergency.<sup>56</sup> In view of the foregoing, the State asserted that the participation of the Armed Forces in the control of internal law and order constitutes an exceptional measure and of last resort.

64. In addition, Peru highlighted the creation of the "Multisectoral Commission of Temporary Nature in charge of monitoring the implementation of Legislative Decree No. 1095 and its Regulations",<sup>57</sup> in which different sectors of the Executive Branch, the National Police and the Armed Forces participate, and whose function is to propose and recommend specific measures and actions for its implementation and to monitor it.

65. The State also reported on the approval in 2023 of various regulations that strengthen the role of the Peruvian National Police<sup>58</sup>: (i) Legislative Decree No. 1604, which modifies Legislative Decree No. 1267, Law of the National Police of Peru<sup>59</sup>; (ii) Legislative Decree No. 1605<sup>60</sup>, which modifies the New Code of 66. The State reported that states of emergency with the participation of the Armed Forces in the context of social protest had only been used once after the issuance of the Country Report. In this sense, it stressed that states of emergency are employed with the use of the Armed Forces not in the context of social protest but in the fight against crime.

67. For their part, civil society organizations told the IACHR that the use of states of emergency has been repeated and recurrent, and that on certain occasions it includes the participation of the Armed Forces, including in operations to control protests, especially in regions such as Ayacucho and Puno<sup>62</sup>. This comment is consistent with the conclusions of the Country Report, where the IACHR stated that: "in regions characterized by a considerable presence of indigenous and peasant populations, as well as by accentuated challenges in guaranteeing their ESCERs, the episodes of greatest lethality were recorded, as well as the most serious allegations of excessive use of force. The main deployments also took place within the framework of the declaration of states of emergency, arrests and preventive identity control tactics."<sup>63</sup>

68. The Commission appreciates the information provided by the State, in particular the creation of the Multisectoral Commission for the implementation of the rules on the use of force. In this regard, it identifies that the constitutional framework reported by the State was in force at the time of the occurrence of the events included in the Country Report in 2022 and 2023, and of the issuance of the recommendation under follow-up.

69. In addition, the IACHR emphasizes that none of the measures indicated by the State, in relation to the regulatory modifications described, are intended to guarantee that the maintenance of internal public order and citizen security is primarily reserved for civilian security forces. In the same vein, no measures have been identified that would allow us to know the state of progress to ensure that the participation of the armed forces in security tasks is extraordinary, subordinate and complementary to the work of the civilian authorities. In addition, no measures have been highlighted aimed at adopting normative or institutional strengthening measures to ensure that this participation is regulated and supervised by competent, independent and technically capable civilian bodies.

70. It should be noted that the Inter-American System has coincided with the two main international instruments to specifically regulate the use of force:<sup>64</sup> the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials<sup>65</sup> and the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials,<sup>66</sup> in affirming that the participation of the Armed Forces in the maintenance of public order should be limited as much as possible, since "the training they receive is aimed at defeating the enemy, and not at the protection and control of civilians, training that is typical of police entities."<sup>67</sup>

71. The IACHR has expressed its concern over the report of the use of states of emergency in the context of social protests. In this regard, the IACHR has maintained that "states of emergency should be reserved exclusively for truly exceptional cases, situations of extreme gravity, that endanger the life of the Nation. For other situations, ordinary administrative measures must be adopted."<sup>68</sup> In this regard, in light of the information available, the Commission identifies that this recommendation is pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

72. The IACHR will declare progress in the level of compliance with this recommendation when the State proves that it has adopted the necessary normative or institution-strengthening measures to ensure that the maintenance of internal public order and citizen security is primarily reserved for civilian security forces. In addition, in order to evaluate compliance with the recommendation, the IACHR will evaluate that the support of the Armed Forces has not been used, in any case, in the context of social protests. In this way, the Commission requires that it be able to report on the states of emergency that have occurred in Peru after the events included in the Country Report. In particular, it is necessary for the information to explain the development of the requirements needed for the proper use of states of emergency and the temporary suspension of rights that it entails (norm that approves it, justification of the measure, time frame that is applied, definition of the rights that are going to be restricted, among others), as well as the application of the criteria of complementarity and exceptionality when deciding on the support that the Armed Forces provide in such contexts.

C. Reparation and care for victims of human rights violations

Recommendation No. 9. Adopt comprehensive reparation measures for victims of human rights violations in the context of social protests, which should include measures of compensation; satisfaction; medical and psychological rehabilitation; social rehabilitation; truth and justice, and guarantees of non-repetition.

Compliance Information

73. In 2024, the State reported that the "Multisectoral Commission of temporary nature was created to follow up on actions and measures aimed at assisting the relatives of the deceased, as well as for the people who suffered serious injuries in the mobilizations that occurred between December 8 and 21, 2022,"<sup>69</sup> which extended its purpose and functions until January 26, 2023<sup>70</sup>, due to subsequent mobilizations. In this way, it pointed out that, on August 1, 2023, the Multisectoral Commission ended its mandate, although the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights has continued its efforts with different sectors to guarantee the timely care of those seriously injured in the context of the protests, until their full recovery.

74. The State reported that the Multisectoral Commission identified a total of 111 relatives of 63 deceased people and 155 seriously injured people. In this regard, he remarked that, in order to identify the beneficiaries, the National Institute of Family Welfare (INABIF) interviewed the families of the deceased on aspects such as family composition, economic situation, housing, health, education, among others. The State said that this registry made it possible to have comprehensive information on families to specify the services and programs with which they can benefit, including health, education, housing, development and inclusion in social programs, agrarian development, among others.

75. With regard to the number of persons killed, according to the State, the following figures were determined: (i) 49 persons died as a direct result of the protests; (ii) seven people died as an indirect result of the protests (traffic accident or health complications due to road blockades); (iii) one PNP officer deceased, and (iv) six members of the Army deceased.

76. The State affirmed that the Multisectoral Commission established five criteria to determine the seriously injured persons who would be beneficiaries of its actions; namely, those who: (i) remained in the Intensive Care Unit; (ii) were hospitalized for more than 10 calendar days; (iii) have required or require major surgical intervention; (iv) have acquired a permanent disability as a result of the injuries; as well as (v) other cases that are approved by the Commission such as those of those persons who, due to the type of injury suffered or its severity, will have sequelae that will limit normal performance in daily or work activities.

77. The State indicated that, on February 21, 2023, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights was authorized to grant, on an exceptional and one-time basis, economic support in favor of the beneficiaries determined by the Multisectoral Commission; namely, relatives of civilians or police officers who died and were seriously injured in the mobilizations that occurred between December 8, 2022 and February 10, 2023<sup>71</sup>. The amount to be delivered is 50,000 soles per deceased person, and 25,000 soles for each seriously injured person, having budgeted a total of 7,025,000 soles. In addition, the State reported that this economic support is not compensatory or reparative in nature, and that the benefit has no implications for the determination of possible administrative, civil, or criminal responsibilities.

78. In addition, the State reported the following actions taken:

- The Public Defender's Service of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights provided 112 legal orientations and 20 sponsorships in 11 regions or areas of Peru (Apurímac, Arequipa, Ayacucho, Cusco, Huancavelica, Ica, La Libertad, Lima, Madre de Dios, Puno and Selva Central).
- The Ministry of Education included the affected people in the National Cooperation Management Scholarship (Peru Scholarship) – 2023 Call and assigned them additional points in the calls.
- The Ministry of Housing, Construction and Sanitation evaluated the affected people in order to identify the potential beneficiaries of the housing programs, providing them with information and guidance so that they can access them.
- The Ministry of Agrarian Development and Irrigation has been providing attention to families incorporated in the Registry of Agricultural Producers (PPA) so that they can access the bonuses of that program.

79. Civil society informed the IACHR that the criteria for qualifying and identifying the victims included in the registry had not been determined in a transparent manner, since there was no information mechanism on the criteria that have been used for this purpose. Civil society also highlighted the lack of an independent system to monitor the process of identifying affected people. In addition, civil society requested that the measures adopted aim to cover the comprehensiveness of reparations aimed at addressing the damage caused to the victims.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

80. The IACHR thanks the State for the information it has submitted and takes careful note of the creation of the Multisectoral Commission, and the current role of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights in continuing its mandate, as well as the financial support granted to the families of the deceased and seriously injured. It also notes the efforts to identify affected persons and incorporate them into sectoral policies in education, housing and agrarian development.

81. The State's obligation to provide reparations to victims of human rights violations derives from the obligation to ensure, that is recognized in Articles 1(1) and 63(1) of the American Convention on Human Rights. In this regard, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has mentioned that "the duty to make reparation is proper to the State, so that although the victims or their relatives must also have ample opportunities in the search for fair compensation, this duty cannot rest exclusively on their procedural initiative or on the private provision of evidence."<sup>72</sup> In this regard, the Commission has maintained that the "principle that should guide the implementation of reparations for human rights violations is that of effectiveness, both in the sense of achieving full compliance with the measure, and in that of duly taking into account the needs of the beneficiaries"<sup>73</sup>. Therefore, in order for states to comply with this obligation, the IACHR has contemplated that "in serious, systematic, and prolonged situations of human rights violations, States may create administrative reparation programs that allow affected persons to have recourse to expeditious and effective mechanisms."<sup>74</sup> Thus, "both organs of the inter-American system (IACHR Commission and Court) have understood that the administrative and judicial remedies are complementary and not exclusive, making it possible for the two to converge and allowing the judicial channel to discount or compensate what has already been paid in the administrative channel"<sup>75</sup>.

82. In relation to the nature of the reparations and the provisions of Emergency Decree No. 006-2023, it should be noted that the reparations referred to in the Country Report are of an administrative nature, without prejudice to those that may be determined by a court. Thus, in previous situations, the Commission has differentiated between administrative and judicial reparations, so that the State's mandate for reparation can be developed through a Comprehensive Care Plan for victims and their families, regardless of the reparation measures for the damages caused by such violations ordered by national and international courts. In this regard, the IACHR has specified that reparation mechanisms of an administrative nature have the capacity to compensate a wider number of beneficiaries and to incorporate reparation measures of a different nature that allow for comprehensive and transformative reparation. To that end, they must cover the damage suffered by all victims, even if the State's responsibility for such damage has not been legally established<sup>76</sup>.

83. In relation to the amounts provided as one-time financial support, the IACHR identifies that this aid is essential to respond to the emergencies of the victims. However, the Commission considers it appropriate to emphasize that the right to reparation is not exhausted and cannot be confused with humanitarian aid or the satisfaction of other shortcomings that victims have,<sup>77</sup> so it is crucial to address comprehensive reparation mechanisms.

84. In addition, with regard to the additional measures reported, the IACHR identifies that these have not yet led to concrete actions for reparation, since only evaluation mechanisms, incorporation into calls for proposals, or information processes to access additional benefits have been reported. Considering that the information provided indicates that reparation measures have not yet been granted to the victims referred to in this recommendation, the Commission concludes that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

85. In order to move forward with compliance with this recommendation, the Commission would like to have detailed information on the registry of persons who are being identified as victims within the facts included in the Country Report. It also needs to have information on the comprehensive reparation mechanisms that are being designed and applied within the framework of the instruments generated by the Multisectoral Commission reported. In this regard, the IACHR emphasizes that the State must adopt effective and timely administrative measures to guarantee access to comprehensive reparation for the persons affected by the events recorded in the Country Report. To this end, it is essential that the competencies for the identification and determination of the damages to be repaired, and for the coordination mechanisms between the relevant sectors for their award be strengthened. It should be noted that these mechanisms must be designed and implemented in a participatory manner, considering the particular characteristics of the victims, taking into consideration the intersectional approach, and the types of individual damages of the victims and the types of collective damages of the communities.

Recommendation No. 10. Provide comprehensive reparations to victims of human rights violations in the context of social protests. This requires that all those who may be held responsible for human rights violations be investigated, prosecuted, and punished.

Compliance Information

86. In 2024, the State reported that it created the Special Team of Prosecutors for Cases with Victims during Social Protests (EFICAVIP)<sup>78</sup>, which investigates the cases of victims during the protests between December 2022 and March 2023. In this regard, it indicated that this team has national and exclusive competence for the investigation of crimes committed during social protests, including those against humanity, provided for in chapters I, II and III of Title XIV-A of the Penal Code, or common crimes that have constituted cases of violation of human rights and others. It also pointed out that the EFICAVIP has a specialized group of experts and another for the accompaniment and protection of victims and relatives, including psychologists. In addition, the State reported on the operation of the Program for Protection and Assistance to Victims and Witnesses, through a District Unit for Protection and Assistance to Victims and Witnesses (UDAVIT) or a Unit for Protection and Immediate Assistance to Victims and Witnesses (UAIKIT).

87. Civil society highlighted some challenges that would be occurring in the processing of investigations. On the one hand, it reported delays and lack of information on procedural progress. In addition, it underlined the high level of rotation that prosecutors and special team personnel would be having, making it difficult to continue in the development of investigations. With regard to barriers to access to justice for the persons affected, the Commission was informed that, in the case of virtual hearings, there would be limited access to the internet and, in the case of face-to-face hearings in Lima, there would be economic obstacles to physical travel, in addition to the fact that some proceedings are canceled on the same day.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

88. The Commission thanks the State for the information presented and takes careful note of the creation of the EFICAVIP to investigate the cases of the victims during the protests of December 2022 and March 2023. In this regard, it recalls that having a serious investigation that leads to a pertinent sanction and adequate reparation is part of the basic content of the obligation of States to guarantee human rights.<sup>79</sup>

89. This recommendation focuses on analyzing the institutional measures that would have been implemented to address the need for investigation, prosecution, and punishment of the facts, and the determination of responsibilities. It should be emphasized that a detailed analysis of the judicial processes will be addressed in recommendation 15 of this report.

90. In this regard, the Commission stresses the importance of having the institutional conditions in place to carry out the investigations and proceedings referred to in this recommendation and takes note of the concerns that exist in relation to remedies and the need to strengthen transparency mechanisms in the progress of judicial proceedings. It is also important to address in a timely manner the barriers to access to justice that are reported by the people affected, in particular, by members of groups in situations of particular vulnerability. For all these reasons, the Commission understands that this recommendation has a partial level of compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

91. The IACHR warns that compliance with this recommendation must be accompanied by a diagnosis of the barriers to access to justice that the affected persons report in relation to the relevant judicial processes and prosecutorial investigations. Likewise, the mechanisms for transparency of information in relation to the progress of investigations must continue to be strengthened, so that the reasons and difficulties can be known in the event that judicial delays are reported.

Recommendation No. 11. Provide immediate and comprehensive medical care to victims of human rights violations and their families, both specialized medical and psychological.

Compliance Information

92. In 2024, the State informed the IACHR that the Multisectoral Commission of Temporary Nature to follow up on actions in favor of the relatives of the deceased and of the people who suffered serious injuries as a result of the mobilizations carried out at the national level, from December 8 until the end of the state of emergency<sup>80</sup>, identified 111 relatives of 63 deceased people, and 155 people seriously injured. In this regard, the State verified that, of the 111 family members, 91 are affiliated to the Comprehensive Health Insurance (SIS) in active status, and that, of 155 injured persons, 117 are affiliated in active status. Therefore, as of December 2024, the State registered 414 services for the relatives of the deceased victims, and 882 services for the seriously injured. It should be noted that the State explained that registered persons are guaranteed free access to the preventive, promotional, recuperative and rehabilitation health benefits they require, which includes medical and sanitary procedures, pharmaceutical products, medical devices and health products.

93. In addition, the State indicated that five virtual macro-regional meetings were held for health professionals to provide psychosocial support and mental health care to relatives of the deceased and injured during social conflicts, in which a total of 345 people from the South, Center, East, North, and Lima regions participated.

94. The State reported that the "Sectoral Working Group of a temporary nature, under the Ministry of Health, was created to assist in actions regarding the strategic defense of the Peruvian State in cases in which the Health Sector is linked; which is being carried out by the Public Prosecutor's Office of the Ministry of Health, in coordination with the Supranational Specialized Public Prosecutor's Office."<sup>81</sup>. And that this Group has prepared the draft "Guidelines for health care for persons affected by violations of the Right to Health, Personal Integrity and Dignified Life, declared by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights through a judgment."

95. For its part, civil society expressed its concern about the alleged gaps in health care that exist in the affected regions, which would be related to insufficient resources and lack of medical specialization. These would have generated delays in critical procedures and deficient care for many victims, even having to transfer people to Lima without considering their economic and cultural needs. In addition, the organizations reported on the absence of comprehensive psychological care for victims and their families.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

96. The IACHR notes positively that the State has been concerned about the provision of health services for a group of victims and their families. In this sense, since the provision of health is a fundamental public service, it calls on the State to guarantee this right through timely and appropriate care in accordance with the principles of availability, accessibility, and acceptability.<sup>82</sup> With regard to accessibility, it should be noted that its elements require that health facilities, goods and services be within geographical reach of all sectors of the population, especially vulnerable or marginalized groups<sup>83</sup>.

97. Based on the information received, the IACHR concludes that the information provided does not provide evidence of whether the State has guaranteed immediate and comprehensive medical care to all victims or whether differentiated care has been guaranteed based on particular economic, social, and cultural conditions. The Inter-American Court of Human Rights has established that health reparations must involve "differentiated treatment in relation to the process and procedure that should be carried out to be treated in public hospitals."<sup>84</sup> In addition, it has indicated that "treatments should be provided, as far as possible, in the centers closest to their place of residence [that of the victims]."<sup>85</sup> For the Commission, it is essential to highlight this criterion in order to note that, as long as the public health network does not have prioritization mechanisms for victims, these services will be inaccessible to people who are in a situation of vulnerability. Along the same lines, information is required on the psychological care provided to victims, since there would only be information of the five Macro-Regional virtual meetings, aimed at health professionals, to provide psychosocial accompaniment and mental health care. Therefore, the Commission warns that, based on the information to which it has had access, this recommendation has a partial level of compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

98. In order to determine that progress has been made in complying with this recommendation, it is essential that the State ensure the provision of immediate and comprehensive medical care, including physical and psychosocial health, which implies the satisfaction of the essential elements of availability, accessibility, acceptability, and quality. In this regard, the IACHR urges the State to establish specific measures of access and follow-up for each of the affected persons and their families, weighing up any economic, social, and cultural barriers that may exist. It is essential that these measures include adequate, sustainable psychological support mechanisms with an intercultural approach, and that information is provided that accounts for compliance with these criteria.

Recommendation No. 12. Ensure that reparation measures have a focus on cultural, gender, and intersectional relevance in human rights, taking into account both the individual harms suffered and the differentiated collective effects on their respective families, communities, and peoples, as well as the differentiated impacts on women; children; and adolescents; indigenous people; older people; and people with disabilities.

Compliance Information

99. In 2024, the State reported that the entity in charge of implementing measures with a focus on cultural relevance is the Ministry of Culture, which has various regulations previously designed for the implementation of the intercultural approach in the provision of public services, namely: (i) National Policy for the Mainstreaming of the Intercultural Approach (2015)<sup>86</sup>; (ii) Guide for the application of the intercultural approach in the management of public services (2015)<sup>87</sup>; (iii) Guidelines for incorporating the intercultural approach in the prevention, care and protection against sexual violence towards children, adolescents and indigenous or native women (2019)<sup>88</sup>; and (iv) the Indigenous Peoples Database (2011).<sup>89</sup>

100. The State stated that it made a list of beneficiaries of reparations, taking into account the particularities of each person, with the aim of designing and implementing mechanisms that respond to their characteristics. In this regard, it pointed out that criteria such as family composition, economic situation, housing, health, education, among others, were taken.

101. For its part, the Commission received information from civil society according to which there are no known measures for reparation purposes that respond to the specific challenges of women, children, the elderly, or persons with disabilities. The Commission was also informed that there is no known mechanism that responds to the collective demands of the affected groups, including the communities. In addition, civil society insisted on the absence of independent mechanisms to monitor the measures to be adopted in relation to reparation mechanisms.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

102. The Commission identifies that no specific measures have been reported to conclude progress in compliance with this recommendation. The information reported by the State regarding the various norms for the implementation of the intercultural approach is pertinent to the framework in which the recommendation should be applied, but not to analyze compliance in itself, since they were approved prior to the events that are the subject of the Country Report and the issuance of this recommendation. Finally, it is important to highlight that for the advancement of this measure it is crucial to have reparation mechanisms designed or implemented. In view of the foregoing, the Commission notes that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

103. The IACHR asks the State to ensure that the reparation measures that are implemented in an adequate and timely manner are designed and adopted taking into account the approaches of cultural relevance, gender, and intersectionality in human rights. To this end, there must be a consideration of the dimension of the damage caused to each person, taking into account their particular characteristics.

Recommendation No. 13. Ensure that reparation measures adopt a gender approach that recognizes the differentiated impacts of the loss of human life on women who, as a result of the events, were left in charge of family support and the search for justice.

Compliance Information

104. For the year 2024, the State informed the IACHR that the Economic Assistance Task Force of the Ministry of Women and Vulnerable Populations registered 53 deaths in the context of the mobilizations carried out nationwide: six in Apurímac; four in Arequipa; 10 in Ayacucho; three in Cusco; three in Junín; three in La Libertad; two in Lima, and 22 in Puno. Of these cases, 33 children and adolescents (NNA) were identified as orphans as a result of the death of their mother, father, both, or legal guardian in the context of the mobilizations that began in December 2022, so that they can have the information to submit requests for economic assistance in compliance with the law that promotes the protection and comprehensive development of girls, children and adolescents.<sup>90</sup> The State indicated that, to date, they have accepted the applications of 19 of the 33 children and adolescents to be beneficiaries of economic assistance, for administrative reasons, such as: having reached the age of majority, receiving an orphan's pension from another institution, errors in the application, or lack of socioeconomic classification. The State stressed that the information is being provided so that the families can correct the observations.

105. According to the information provided by the State, the 19 beneficiaries of the economic assistance and their families, listed in the previous paragraph, have the prioritized professional accompaniment, which consists on helping to guarantee access to health, educational continuity, protection services and the development of the life project of the child and adolescent. To this end, according to the State, the identification of actors, the application of diagnostic instruments, the measurement of vulnerability, the application of family welfare plans and the management of access to services are carried out. In addition, it was reported that the follow-up of the measures granted is carried out through face-to-face and non-face-to-face visits by a professional trained to provide accompaniment.

106. For its part, civil society told the IACHR that it is not aware of reparation measures provided by the State that respond to the specific needs of women and children.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

107. The Commission appreciates the information provided by the State and takes note of the progress made in covering the 19 children and adolescents who were orphaned as a result of the events related to the protests that took place between December 2022 and March 2023. In this regard, the IACHR welcomes the adoption of protection measures and economic assistance due to the particular situation in which these people find themselves.

108. However, the IACHR stresses the State's obligation to adopt urgent measures to ensure that all affected children and adolescents are covered, taking into account the economic, social, cultural, or other barriers that restrict their access. This implies not waiting for the submission of specific applications, since it is a group in a situation of vulnerability such as children and adolescents in a situation of orphanhood. The IACHR also stresses that comprehensive reparation measures must be adopted, which do not consist only of essential economic assistance. Therefore, considering that they are reparation mechanisms implemented for a particular group of high social vulnerability, the Commission notes that this recommendation is partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

109. In order to make progress in complying with this recommendation, it is important to report on the design and implementation of the comprehensive reparation measures that will be granted to respond to the particular situation of the people affected. The State must also specify how these measures have been adapted to the needs of the women who, as a result of the events, were left in charge of supporting their families and seeking justice. Finally, the IACHR hopes to collect information on the progress in the coverage of children and adolescents who have been identified as orphans due to the events that occurred in the protests of 2022 and 2023.

Recommendation No. 14. Adopt the necessary measures to incorporate the approach of the best interests of children both in policies, protocols and operational plans relating to the control of citizen security, and in their practical application, particularly in cases of attention to social conflict.

Compliance Information

110. For 2024, the State reported the approval of the "Protocol for joint action by the State for the articulation of services in contexts of detention, retention, and police intervention for women and people in vulnerable conditions" (2023),<sup>91</sup> which establishes that, in situations of negligence and violation of rights by parental care in social protests, the affected children and adolescents must be transferred to the Special Protection Unit. It also indicated that an annual course has been held since 2022 on the Rights of Persons in Vulnerable Situations for police personnel in a decentralized manner, where the situations of people with disabilities, senior citizens, LGBTI and children and adolescents are discussed, as well as their repercussions on the exercise of their fundamental rights and police work.

111. The State stated that, within the framework of the "Administrative and Operational Guidelines for the Planning, Direction, Conduction, and Execution of Police Operations for the Control, Maintenance, and Restoration of Public Order" (2022),<sup>92</sup> police personnel have criteria in accordance with international obligations to adopt the most appropriate means of deterrence, protection, and/or controls in the context of social protests, where the participation of women, children, the elderly, people with disabilities or other vulnerable groups within the demonstrations is evaluated.

112. For its part, the Commission learned of information provided by civil society according to which there had been no evidence of concrete policies to protect children and adolescents in the context of social protests. On the contrary, the approval of a bill on a legal reform that allows adolescents of 16 and 17 years of age to be tried as adults for serious crimes, including the crimes of terrorism, aggravated homicide, kidnapping, extortion, among others,<sup>93</sup> was reported. In this regard, the Commission was informed that the approval of this reform aggravates situations of detention of children and adolescents and stigmatizes certain groups in vulnerable situations (indigenous people, Afro-Peruvian population, adolescents in situations of mobility, among others). According to what has been reported by civil society organizations, this law would show a lack of comprehensive vision in juvenile justice policy.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

113. The IACHR appreciates the information provided by the State. However, it observes that the "Protocol for joint action by the State for the articulation of services in contexts of detention, retention and police intervention of women and people in vulnerable conditions" is applied when these people are detained by the police, in any type of context, but once the person is detained. However, it would not be specifically designed to prevent situations of detention from occurring in the context of the use of force in protests or demonstrations. In this sense, in the context of the recommendation, the measure applies only to the cases of people detained in the context of protests. The IACHR also takes note of the application of the "Administrative and Operational Guidelines for the Planning, Direction, Conduction, and Execution of Police Operations for the Control, Maintenance, and Restoration of Public Order" and its regulation on specific measures for the protection of vulnerable populations during and after the aforementioned operations, although it identifies that these were approved in the months prior to the protests between December 2022 and March 2023.

114. The Commission has established that "a public policy on citizen security with a human rights approach is one that incorporates the development of simultaneous actions in three strategic areas: the institutional area, the normative area, and the preventive area." In this sense, the normative area of the public policy on citizen security refers to the "adaptation of the legal framework, both to the needs for the prevention or repression of crime and violence, and for the development of criminal procedure or prison management".<sup>94</sup>

115. For this reason, the IACHR expresses its concern over the information provided by civil society regarding the normative measures that are in the process of being approved and that indicate that minors should be tried as adults for serious crimes. The IACHR identifies that this measure could contradict international human rights standards, which establish that any person under 18 years of age at the time of the alleged commission of a crime must receive differentiated treatment from persons of legal age<sup>95</sup>. The IACHR calls on the State to avoid adopting laws that criminalize minors. In view of the foregoing, the Commission concludes that compliance with this recommendation is pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

116. The IACHR maintains that in order to move forward with this recommendation, it is necessary to incorporate special State measures related to the best interests of children in the policies, protocols, and operational plans related to the control of citizen security, particularly in cases of attention to social conflict. To this end, it is essential that the norms that are approved, related to the exercise of the right to protest or the criminal responsibility of children, are in accordance with international standards on the matter.

D. Combating impunity

Recommendation No. 15. Investigate all the facts recorded in this report, in particular the alleged violations of human rights, in a prompt, serious, effective, independent manner, and with attention to due judicial guarantees. To this end, the State may evaluate and request technical assistance from the IACHR through training for public officials, mechanisms for follow-up on recommendations, or even the creation of an interdisciplinary group of independent experts.

Compliance Information

117. For the year 2024, the State reported the creation of the Special Team of Prosecutors for cases with victims during social protests (EFICAVIP)<sup>96</sup> and the following progress indicators as of December 2024:

- a. 72 fiscal folders: 20 formalized, 46 in the preliminary investigation stage and six in the qualification process. In this regard, he pointed out that the files refer to 50 deceased people and 729 people aggrieved by other crimes (injuries, abuse of authority, torture, etc.). In addition, it was noted that the Task Force is in charge of 16 emblematic and highly complex cases.
- b. 338 defendants, of which 35 are members of the Armed Forces of Peru and 303 are members of the National Police of Peru.
- c. 14,611 investigative acts carried out, including statements, inspections, expert opinions, recreations, exhibitions, seizures, among others.
- d. It was noted that the prosecutors of the Special Team have traveled to the places where the events occurred, including the regions of Ayacucho, La Libertad, Cusco, Puno, Apurímac, Junín, Arequipa and Ucayali.

118. The State reported that the Office of the Area of Illicit Enrichment and Constitutional Complaints of the Office of the Attorney General of the Nation filed a constitutional complaint with the Presidency of the Congress of the Republic for crimes against the lives of the persons affected in the context of the protests against the current President of the Republic and other high-ranking officials of the State. In addition, it reported 19 administrative-disciplinary files related to the death or injuries of civilians and police personnel, in the context of the social protests updated to October 2023, namely:

- a. Eight pending in "Previous Actions": one in the Apurimac region, two in Arequipa, two in Junín, two in Cusco and one in Puno.
- b. Seven were referred to the MININTER's Office of Internal Affairs: three in the Apurimac region, one in Ayacucho and three in Puno.
- c. Four resolved and filed in the Disciplinary Offices and Archive Area: two in La Libertad, one in Arequipa and one in Lima.

119. With respect to the technical assistance component referred to in the recommendation under follow-up, the State stated that the "Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on a Work Plan between the Republic of Peru and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights" was signed<sup>97</sup>. In this regard, he pointed out that, within the framework of this measure, training for prosecutors has been carried out focused on human rights, international standards for prosecutorial action, procedural techniques, interculturality and approaches in investigations into the abuse of force. In addition, the State reported on other capacity-building actions for officials of the Public Prosecutor's Office.

120. For its part, civil society sent the IACHR the following information on the follow-up it has given to the ongoing judicial proceedings for the events related to the protests recorded in the Country Report:

Table 1. Summary of case-by-case information submitted by civil society in the context of the follow-up to the recommendation

121. Based on the above information, civil society told the IACHR that the vast majority of the investigations are in the preliminary stage, and only some have been formalized. As a result, it noted that no public official had yet been criminally charged and that the investigations had excluded elements of the chain of command, particularly with regard to the highest positions.

122. In relation to the constitutional complaint filed, civil society remarked to the IACHR that it would suffer from errors of form and substance, since the total number of fatalities and serious injuries would not be included, although there would be sufficient evidence to do so. According to what was expressed to the Commission, this would respond to the lack of a serious investigation, since it would have been presented prior to the suspension of the prosecutor who filed it for accusations of corruption. It was clarified that the constitutional complaint was rejected in July 2024 by the Subcommittee on Constitutional Accusations of the Congress of the Republic of Peru. However, in July 2024, a new constitutional complaint was filed against President Dina Boluarte, former Premier Pedro Angulo and former Premier and former Minister of Defense Luis Otárola, and three other former ministers, which was admitted for processing in November 2024 by the same Subcommittee of Congress.

123. In turn, the Commission learned of information provided by civil society according to which, in January 2023, a Multiparty Investigative Commission was created in Congress to determine the alleged criminal and political responsibilities for the serious violations of human rights committed since December 7, 2022. However, there is still no progress in the results of the Congressional Commission.

124. Civil society, for its part, reported that regulations continue to be approved or discussed that would result in the reduction of mechanisms for controlling the actions of the police, both in the context of protests and demonstrations, and in the framework of investigations against detainees. In this regard, it was reported that Law No. 32130 had been approved,<sup>98</sup> which grants the PNP the power to carry out a preliminary investigation of the crime, subordinating the prosecutor's work to police activity, as has been expressed in the request for unconstitutionality filed by the Attorney General against that law.<sup>99</sup> Also noteworthy was the approval and enactment of Law No. 32181<sup>100</sup>, by which the Public Prosecutor's Office, under functional responsibility, may not request preliminary judicial detention or preventive detention against police personnel in a situation of activity when they use their weapons or means of defense in a regulatory manner, even if injuries or deaths have been caused to third parties.

125. Civil society also informed the Commission about the Council of State held in November 2024 between the different branches of government and public institutions, in which it was agreed, as a measure to combat crime and organized crime, to formulate a legal framework that would allow the Police and the Armed Forces to use force in the performance of their functions. And that it would establish courts in the military police jurisdiction when its regulation weapons are used, under the control of the Inspector General of the Police. Based on this, a bill that is under debate in Congress was presented.<sup>101</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

126. The Commission appreciates the information received from the State and civil society on the status of the various judicial processes and fiscal investigations. In this sense, it values the progress in each of these processes. However, it is important to emphasize that access to justice for victims must be given quickly, considering the complexities of the cases, and seeking to determine the corresponding criminal responsibilities. Therefore, it is essential that the State be able to take measures to guarantee the logistical and personnel resources essential to move forward with these investigations.

127. The Commission also identifies that the legislative measures approved highlighted by civil society would have the effect of reducing the mechanisms of external and internal control of the actions of the police in the context of social conflicts, while reducing the capacity to ensure the application of the principles of legality, necessity and, especially, proportionality. In this way, they have a direct impact on compliance with the recommendation under analysis.

128. At the same time, it should be noted that one of the objectives of the investigations is to provide a mechanism of truth, justice and reparation to the victims, within a reasonable time, so it is essential that they participate in the investigation stages and have clear and accessible information on the progress of the process. Consequently, the Commission concludes that this recommendation is considered to be pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

129. The IACHR will consider progress in complying with this recommendation when it has sufficient and clear information to conclude that the State is making progress in the process of investigating the different cases, identifying those responsible, and opening judicial proceedings. To this end, the IACHR requests that detailed information be sent on all judicial processes and their progress. In addition, for the IACHR, it is essential that the State address the logistical and personnel needs that may generate delays in the processing of these cases and that it has mechanisms in place to foresee economic or technological barriers for the affected persons to participate actively in the development of the processes. Finally, the IACHR recalls that, in a democratic state governed by the rule of law, military criminal jurisdiction must be "restrictive and exceptional so that it applies only to the protection of special legal rights of a military nature that have been violated by members of the military forces in the exercise of their functions..."; and that "it is not the competent forum to investigate and, where appropriate, judge and punish the perpetrators of human rights violations, but rather the prosecution of those responsible always corresponds to the ordinary justice system."<sup>102</sup> Therefore, it remains attentive to the information on the bills presented in this regard.

Recommendation No. 16. Increase the resources of the Public Prosecutor's Office to ensure the full performance of its functions of crime prevention and investigation.

Compliance Information

130. For the year 2024, the State reported that, in 2023, it made an additional transfer of items<sup>103</sup> in the Public Sector Budget amounting to 99,001,010 soles in favor of the Public Prosecutor's Office, to finance the creation of Human Rights and Interculturality Prosecutor's Offices in each Fiscal District at the national level. It also reported that the budget for the EFICAVIP is 474,135 soles, as well as an additional 25,865.02 soles.

131. For its part, civil society conveyed to the IACHR the importance of EFICAVIP being able to have a greater presence in all the regions where the investigations are carried out, particularly in rural and indigenous areas where the victims are located. It also indicated that there would be difficulties for the Public Prosecutor's Office to coordinate with key institutions such as the National Police and the Judiciary, and pointed out that these shortcomings would have an impact on the speed and quality of the investigations.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

132. With regard to the creation and specific budgetary allocation for the EFICAVIP, the IACHR considers that this measure constitutes a step forward in ensuring the performance of its functions of crime prevention and investigation. As mentioned above, for the Commission, it is essential that the resources granted are sufficient and adequate. In this way, the State must guarantee the correct use of these resources or that the pertinent budgetary adaptation is developed to cover possible logistical and personnel shortages for the investigation of cases. Therefore, it is concluded that the recommendation has partial compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

133. The IACHR requests that the allocation of resources be strengthened to ensure that attention is paid to the obstacles that have arisen in the investigation and prosecution processes, taking into account the particularities of the people affected in the different regions where the investigation processes take place. Likewise, that their adequate participation in the different acts of the processes can be guaranteed.

Recommendation No. 17. Adopt institution-building measures aimed at providing security conditions to officials of the Public Prosecutor's Office for the full performance of their functions of crime prevention and investigation.

Compliance Information

134. In 2024, the State stated that, after the attacks suffered in the protests, the Public Prosecutor's Office issued instructions on security measures to the guards in charge of covering the entry and exit control posts of the main and central headquarters of the Public Prosecutor's Office, as well as the headquarters of this entity in each fiscal district. It was also reported that the private security personnel who are in charge of the security of the fiscal headquarters are being evaluated and that talks are being given with personnel trained in security, registrations, control, verifications and identifications.

135. In addition, the State reported on the Regulations on Security and Protection of Public Officials, Dignitaries, and Personalities,<sup>104</sup> which establishes three types of protection aimed at guaranteeing the security of various authorities, such as the President of the Republic, the President of the Congress of the Republic, the President of the Judiciary, the Vice Presidents of the Republic, the Ministers of State, and the heads of Autonomous Constitutional Bodies. In addition, it can be extended to other public officials, dignitaries and personalities, upon request and evaluation.

136. For its part, civil society told the Commission that, for some years now, justice operators have been facing a hostile context in the exercise of their work, exposing themselves to threats, attacks, sit-ins, disinformation campaigns, among other risks. Faced with this situation, it alleged an alleged lack of capacity to carry out concrete actions aimed at improving the physical and psychological security conditions of the Public Prosecutor's Office in situations of high polarization.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

137. The Commission thanks the State for the information reported and takes note of the internal security measures that have been adopted to protect the headquarters of the Public Prosecutor's Office, both at the central and decentralized levels, which show a first step towards providing security conditions for officials of the Public Prosecutor's Office. In this regard, the IACHR emphasizes the need for security that the officials of this entity must have in order to fully carry out their functions of crime prevention and investigation.

138. In this regard, the IACHR expresses its concern over the reports of threats that have been made against prosecutors who are investigating cases of great public importance, both in the physical space of the prosecutor's office and outside of it. In this regard, the Commission recalls that various precautionary measures have been granted related to the protection of these prosecutors. For the Commission, it is necessary to know the actions that have been taken to implement the precautionary or protective measures already granted in favor of the prosecutors who have suffered the threats, as well as those that have been taken to prevent any future action. Pending this information, the Commission considers that this recommendation has been partially implemented.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

139. The IACHR warns that progress in complying with this recommendation requires additional detailed information on the measures adopted to guarantee the safety of officials of the Public Prosecutor's Office; in particular of those people who hold positions that may be sensitive for high-risk cases and who have suffered or may suffer threats against them or their relatives outside the space of the Public Prosecutor's Office. In this sense, it requests to know the measures promoted to identify the levels of risk of people, as well as the mechanisms both to report such actions and to respond and those that are activated after the complaint is filed.

Recommendation No. 18. Increase the number of specialized human rights prosecutors' offices so that they have a presence throughout the country.

Compliance Information

140. In 2024, the State reported that, in order to strengthen the prosecutorial work team, the Board of Supreme Prosecutors created 29 prosecutors' offices, including superior and provincial, and 216 prosecutorial positions on a permanent and temporary basis.<sup>105</sup> In this regard, the State confirmed that specialized prosecutors' offices on human rights and interculturality have been implemented in the largest number of prosecutorial districts in the country. It also pointed out that those positions on a provisional basis will be filled by incumbent prosecutors through three competitions.

141. The State also reported that six Supraprovincial Criminal Prosecutors' Offices Specializing in Human Rights have been inaugurated (Arequipa, Lambayeque, La Libertad, Loreto, Ica, and Cusco); although it affirmed that, currently, prosecutorial offices specialized in human rights and interculturality are in operation in the 34 fiscal districts.

142. For its part, civil society stressed to the Commission that, although specialized prosecutors' offices have been created, there are still barriers to access to justice related to the absence of prosecutors' offices in remote places in the territory, or the need to improve training mechanisms for members of the Prosecutor's Office.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

143. The IACHR observes that the State has made progress in covering specialized human rights prosecutors' offices in a decentralized manner. In this regard, it has reported the presence of Supraprovincial Criminal Prosecutor's Offices Specialized in Human Rights in seven regions; and that, in all 34 fiscal districts, there are specialized fiscal offices. In addition, the IACHR notes positively that, with the creation of the EFICAVIP, it has been possible to deal with complex cases in situations that go beyond specific jurisdictions. In this regard, the IACHR welcomes the progress made in relation to the objective of the recommendation. Therefore, it maintains that this recommendation is in full compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

144. The IACHR welcomes the State's efforts to comply with this recommendation and highlights the need to ensure and maintain a budget adequate to the needs of the Subsystem for Human Rights and Interculturality.

Recommendation No. 19. Adopt additional measures to strengthen the institution of the Institute of Legal Medicine and Forensic Sciences in order to provide it with human, technical, and scientific resources for the full performance of its functions in the various provinces of the country and, especially, with respect to the investigations corresponding to the facts contained in this report.

Compliance Information

145. In 2024, the State stated that the budget allocated for the institutional strengthening of the Institute of Legal Medicine and Forensic Sciences (IMLCF) amounts to 26,832,820 soles.<sup>106</sup> In this sense, he indicated that, currently, there are 285 professionals incorporated at the national level in 32 fiscal districts, including doctors (auditors, psychiatrists, pathologists, radiologists), anthropologists, archaeologists, biologists, psychologists, pharmaceutical chemists, administrative specialists, computer operators, computer analysts, medical technologists and administrative operators.

146. The State also reported that training was provided to IMLCF officials on the Istanbul Protocol, which has made it possible to schedule evaluations using this instrument, to carry out post-facto case studies in Lima and in regions of the country, and to carry out forensic medical examinations physically and in hospitals.

147. For its part, the Commission learned of information provided by civil society according to which, during a session of the Congressional Oversight and Comptroller Commission on May 24, 2024, the National Head of the IMLCF informed the congressmen about the lack of supplies for the processing of samples in the toxicology laboratory, as well as deficiencies in infrastructure and maintenance of various services.<sup>107</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

148. The IACHR thanks the State for the information sent and takes note of the budget allocated to the IMLCF, which was used to hire personnel at the decentralized level. It also welcomes the implementation of training related to the Istanbul Protocol. However, in order to measure the progress of the recommendation, the Commission needs to know how working conditions have changed over time. It also considers that institutional strengthening actions can be adopted, such as budget allocations, training, and cooperation with other entities, in particular, to help address the investigations corresponding to the facts contained in the Country Report. In the meantime, the Commission concludes that the recommendation is pending implementation.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

149. In order to make progress in complying with the recommendation, the IACHR needs to know comparatively, with respect to previous years, the strengthening of the institution. To this end, it is necessary to have comparative information in recent years (at least since the adoption of the recommendation) on the strengthening of staff capacities, on the situation in human resources, on budgetary resources, infrastructure, among others. It is important that the comparative information makes it possible to know, in a decentralized manner, the needs in each region, considering the prioritization of cases related to responsibilities for the disproportionate use of force.

Recommendation No. 20. Systematize through a comprehensive registry the data on deceased, injured, detained and victims of gender violence in the context of social protests in a transparent, updated, clear, concise and contrasted manner with the information provided by civil society. The registry must be specific and take into account data disaggregated by ethnic-racial origin, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity and/or expression.

<sup>107</sup> IMLCF requests more specialists and equipment.

Compliance Information

150. In 2024, the State reported on the implementation of the Public Prosecutor's Office's Data Registry of Victims of Social Protests (REDAVIP), which must contain data disaggregated by racial ethnic origin, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity and/or expression of all affected persons. In addition, the EFICAVIP Fiscal Action Bulletin was published, where the proceedings and statistical data of the victims by gender, age, place and year were recorded.

151. On the other hand, the State highlighted that, in 2023, the Monitoring and Alert Center of the Crime Observatory of the Public Prosecutor's Office prepared reports on institutional monitoring, which detail the number of detainees in the context of the latest protests.

152. The State also stated that the Ministry of Health consolidated the details of the 1,398 citizens affected in the context of the development of social conflicts, of which 1,335 correspond to injured and 63 to deaths. In addition, MINSA has established an application called "System for the Registration and Monitoring of People Affected in Health by Social Conflicts (SISREMACS)", which systematizes information on citizens affected during the development of social conflicts. In this regard, it was specified that this application interoperates with RENIEC, for the registration of personal data, and with the National Death System (SINADEF).

153. For its part, civil society informed the Commission that REDAVIP does not have an update and verification mechanism accessible to human rights organizations and the general public. He also stated that the aforementioned registries have not collected data disaggregated by ethnic origin or others, which would limit the ability to analyze the particular conditions of the victims; therefore, in his opinion, an intersectional approach needs to be incorporated in the collection of this information.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

154. The IACHR appreciates the information provided and appreciates the creation of REDAVIP as an action aimed at having a consolidated registry of victims. It also takes note of the efforts of other entities, such as the Ministry of Health, to consolidate information to verify and supplement the Register.

155. This recommendation is not only aimed at having a comprehensive data registration system, but also establishes some characteristics that must be taken into account for its implementation. Firstly, it must identify those who have died, been injured, detained and victims of gender-based violence. In relation to this matter, the IACHR notes that it is important for REDAVIP to expand its coverage to include other human rights violations committed (such as those perpetrated against detainees).

156. Second, the registry must be transparent, updated, clear, concise and contrasted with the information provided by civil society. In this sense, the exchange of information between public institutions, and between them and third parties, is essential to guarantee the due inclusion of the different people affected in the framework of the protests. However, in the specific case, mechanisms for transparency of information or contrast between different entities have not been reported and cannot be verified.

157. Finally, thirdly, the registry must be specific and take into account data disaggregated by ethnic-racial origin, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity and/or expression. This will allow the appropriate reparation measures to be designed and implemented to respond to each of the types of damage that may have been generated. From the information presented, it can only be identified that one variable has been used by biological sex and by household, with some variables still pending.

158. Considering that the established registry requires several actions to meet the objective of the recommendation, the Commission concludes that this recommendation is partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

159. To move forward with compliance with this recommendation, it is essential that the State implements a Registry that includes all affected persons, which includes, at least, the types of violations included in the Country Report. Likewise, that this instrument be implemented in a transparent and collaborative manner with victims' organizations and other civil society entities. It should be noted that, in addition, it must have a clear regulatory mechanism, which regulates the way to request inclusion in the registry, and the clear criteria to determine who is going to be included in it. Finally, it is essential that this tool complies with having disaggregated data that allows for the design and implementation of comprehensive reparation mechanisms that respond to the needs detected.

Recommendation No. 21. To take measures in order to reinforce and strengthen the confidence of citizens in the State based on the separation and practical, real and effective independence of the public powers, control entities and the Electoral System.

Compliance Information

160. In 2024, the State reported that the Council for the Reform of the Justice System<sup>108</sup> was created in 2019 in order to promote a reform of the justice system. The State indicated that, in this space, the highest representatives of the three branches of the State (Executive, Legislative and Judicial Powers), and the heads of entities such as the Constitutional Court, the Public Prosecutor's Office, the Ombudsman's Office, among others, participate. In this regard, the State reported on the meetings and measures carried out by the Council in 2024, including the beginning of the process of updating the Justice System Reform Policy<sup>109</sup>, or the beginning of the process of formulating the National Multisectoral Policy of the Justice System<sup>110</sup>.

161. In addition, the State detailed the organization of the Council of State, with the participation of the Presidency of the Republic and its ministers, and the heads of the Congress of the Republic, the Judiciary, the Office of the Ombudsman, the Office of the Comptroller General of the Republic, and the Office of the Attorney General, where various measures aimed at improving the justice system were agreed upon (see para. 52).

162. For its part, the Commission learned of information from civil society that highlights that various measures have been approved or proposed that would constitute political interference against different bodies that are fundamental to guaranteeing the rule of law, such as the Public Prosecutor's Office, the National Board of Justice (JNJ), the National Jury of Elections (JNE), the Ombudsman's Office and the Constitutional Court. In relation to the above, regarding the JNE, Congress would have promoted at least 29 legal initiatives aimed at changing the electoral rules, and that some would propose reforming the Constitution to modify the mechanism for electing the President of the JNE or incorporate the heads of the electoral system into the functional prerogative of impeachment and preliminary immunity process.

163. On the other hand, with regard to the JNJ, civil society reported two constitutional complaints and summary motions aimed at massively removing its entire composition, which resulted in the removal of two of its members, although it was specified that this decision has been questioned by the Judicial Branch. In view of this, the Legislative Branch filed a competence lawsuit against the Judicial Branch, which was rejected by the Constitutional Court, however, the process on the precautionary measure that leaves them in their functions remains in force. In addition, it was reported to the Commission that there is a constitutional reform initiative with a favorable opinion that proposes to deactivate the JNJ and replace it with a National School of Magistracy. In this sense, civil society affirmed that it has insisted on the lack of transparency, meritocracy and participation in the selection process of the new JNJ, who will take office in January 2025.<sup>111</sup>

164. Likewise, in relation to the Constitutional Court, whose members were elected by the current Congress, civil society informed the IACHR that this body would have ceased to act as a counterweight in decisions that weaken the protection of human rights, such as in the decision that allowed the release of Alberto Fujimori in December 2023,<sup>112</sup> even in contempt of the decisions of the Inter-American Court.

165. As for the Public Prosecutor's Office, civil society affirmed that this entity would have been subject to attacks and undue external interference through unjustified dismissals or disqualifications of prosecutors in charge of high-impact cases, particularly during the management of a Prosecutor of the Nation with serious questions of corruption. For its part, it was alleged that the Judicial Branch had been affected by laws that affect its independence, such as those that increase penalties for prevarication,<sup>113</sup> the amount of compensation for judicial error and the catalog of serious offenses that may lead to its dismissal.

166. Finally, civil society expressed to the Commission its concern about the constitutional reforms approved; Specifically, those that were directly rejected through a referendum in 2018, such as the approval of bicamerality and the functions of each of its chambers, while measures are being adopted that would not respond to the interests of society as a whole.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

167. In various statements, the Commission has expressed its concern about the situation of the separation and practical independence of the powers in the Peruvian State<sup>114</sup>, which have been compromised by various normative measures and decisions that have been adopted in recent years. These have been aimed at promoting investigations against justice operators or officials of the electoral system<sup>115</sup> or to seek to determine the political responsibilities of representatives of other branches or institutions of the State,<sup>116</sup> or to modify the powers of the entities through mechanisms for electing the heads of such entities, as in the case of the Ombudsman's Office or the National Board of Justice.

168. In this regard, the IACHR has established, in various pronouncements, that representative democracy is the form of organization explicitly adopted by the member states of the Organization of American States and expressly included in Article 3(d) of its Constitutive Charter<sup>117</sup>. In this sense, the Commission has insisted on the intrinsic relationship that exists between democracy and the validity and respect of human rights<sup>118</sup>. Likewise, with regard to the basic characteristics that representative democracy must have, the Commission has determined that, in order for its consolidation, it is essential to have an institutional framework guided by the separation, independence, and balance of powers; as well as for the effective exercise of political rights, through free and fair elections, and respect for and promotion of pluralism in society.<sup>119</sup>

169. Therefore, the Commission considers that no measures have been reported by the State aimed at reinforcing and strengthening the confidence of citizens in the State based on the separation and practical, real, and effective independence of the public powers, control entities, and the electoral system. The Commission also expresses its concern about the various measures that have been observed (mentioned in the present recommendation) that could affect the independence and balance of powers.

170. In this sense, it is necessary that, within the framework of the principle of separation of powers, the legal norms that are presented or approved do not have the objective or effect of restricting the action of said entities or their decisions. On the other hand, it is essential that real control be exercised over the norms that are to be approved through existing constitutional mechanisms, such as the power to observe norms that violate these principles. In addition, for the IACHR, it is essential that oversight entities such as the Constitutional Court or the Ombudsman's Office comply with the application of international criteria and standards for the protection of human rights in the framework of their actions. Finally, that the entities of the justice system and the electoral system can exercise their powers, in accordance with their internal and external independence, so that citizens' confidence in the institutions is strengthened. Consequently, the Commission identifies that this recommendation is pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

171. The IACHR will conclude progress in the level of compliance with this recommendation when it has information that accounts for the adoption of measures that guarantee the separation and independence of the different branches and organs of the State.

Recommendation No. 22. Refrain from adopting legislative or constitutional reforms that weaken the autonomy and independence of the National Electoral System or the Judiciary.

Compliance Information

172. In 2024, the State reported that no legislative initiative has been approved in Congress that weakens the autonomy and independence of the Electoral System.

173. The Commission received information provided by civil society according to which various legislative initiatives or judicial decisions had been presented that would contravene this recommendation. In this regard, it expressed concern about Law No. 32153,<sup>120</sup> approved on November 5, 2024, which incorporated modifications that could harm the independence of the Judiciary, limiting the diffuse control of the rules, modifying the majority requirement for rulings in competency processes or limiting the ability of the Supreme Court to issue binding precedents, regardless of the interpretations of the Constitutional Court.

174. On the other hand, civil society expressed its concern in relation to the functioning and independence of the electoral bodies; since, in the first vote, a constitutional reform was approved that would change the form of election of the President of the JNE and that would reduce his term to two years.<sup>121</sup> According to what was transmitted to the Commission, the foregoing would have generated a pronouncement against the President of the JNE himself. In addition, the IACHR was informed that at least 29 bills have been promoted that seek to change electoral rules.

175. In addition, the IACHR learned of other laws that could have the effect of weakening the independence and autonomy of the justice system, such as Law No. 32182<sup>122</sup>, which establishes sanctions for prosecutors and judges, modifying the laws on judicial and prosecutorial careers. Law No. 32108<sup>123</sup>, which excludes crimes such as extortion and illegal mining from the definition of organized crime and introduces new categories that make it difficult to classify and punish criminal activities, requiring more detailed evidence. Law No. 32130,<sup>124</sup> which grants the National Police of Peru the conduct of preliminary investigations of the crime. Law No. 31990,<sup>125</sup> on effective collaboration, which reduces the time to corroborate information from effective collaborators, making investigations in complex cases more difficult. Law No. 31751,<sup>126</sup> which cuts the statute of limitations in the Penal Code. Law No. 32107,<sup>127</sup> which redefines the application of crimes against humanity, restricts the ability to guarantee final sentences in cases of serious human rights violations.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

176. The Commission considers that no information has been provided on concrete measures by the State that would make it possible to identify progress in complying with this recommendation. The IACHR expresses its concern considering that this recommendation was prepared after identifying a context of questioning and weakening of the national electoral system and the judiciary. In this regard, the IACHR has warned that regulations that directly affect its functioning have continued to be discussed or approved<sup>128</sup>, and therefore maintains that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

177. To guide compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR emphasizes the importance of the State refraining from adopting legislative or constitutional reforms that weaken the autonomy and independence of the National Electoral System or the Judiciary. In this regard, the IACHR awaits the results of the pronouncements of the internal oversight bodies in relation to the measures already promoted, such as the extension of the constitutional accusation to the authorities of the electoral system, or those aimed at restricting diffuse control by justice operators.

Recommendation No. 23. To delimit the figures of constitutional impeachment, presidential vacancy due to permanent moral incapacity and unilateral dissolution of Congress, so that they specify, with clear and objective parameters, the punishable conducts and their corresponding consequences.

Compliance Information

178. In 2024, the State reported that the Legislative Branch has presented various bills in order to regulate the figures of constitutional impeachment, presidential vacancy due to permanent moral incapacity, and unilateral dissolution of Congress. It pointed out that, in all cases, the bills are in the process of discussion within the mechanisms established by the Congress of the Republic of Peru.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

179. The IACHR believes that no concrete measures have been taken to comply with this recommendation and that the reported efforts are in their infancy. Therefore, it concludes that this recommendation is pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

180. The IACHR will declare progress in complying with this recommendation when it learns of the outcome of the discussions in the Legislative Branch, through the approval of these norms and their

Recommendation No. 24. Adopt measures to strengthen the institutional structure of the Office of the Ombudsman, taking into account the important work it performs; and provide it with adequate human and material resources for the full performance of its functions in the various provinces of the country.

Compliance Information

181. For the year 2024, the State reported that, on May 17, Law No. 32028 was enacted<sup>129</sup> with the objective of promoting the institutional strengthening of the Ombudsman's Office (DP), including its functions of monitoring and preventing social conflicts and the peaceful resolution of such conflicts. In this regard, the State reported that a supplementary credit was approved in favor of this entity to finance the supervision and monitoring of agreements within the framework of conflict prevention and management and that the new remuneration scale for servants included in the labor regime of Legislative Decree No. 728 of the DP was approved.

182. For its part, civil society expressed to the IACHR its concern about the different questions that have been raised about the management of the current Ombudsman. These would be linked to the use of the institution's resources in international representation trips or in the organization of regional activities that are not part of the entity's competencies. Likewise, the resignation of several high-profile officials, the alleged appointment of people with political ties close to political parties that appointed the current Ombudsman, the lack of transparency in personnel contracts, and the priorities shown in the pronouncements that have been made in recent months<sup>130</sup> were reported. According to what was pointed out to the IACHR, this would be generating concern about an alleged loss of legitimacy of the entity and an alleged lack of independence and autonomy.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

183. The IACHR appreciates the information provided by the State and welcomes the approval of an amendment that strengthens the powers of the Office of the Ombudsman, the granting of a supplementary loan for this purpose, and the approval of a new remuneration scale. The Commission highlights the role played by national human rights institutions, in particular in generating mechanisms that strengthen the international obligations of States regarding the rights of their citizens. In this sense, it recalls that entities such as the Ombudsman's Office of Peru must have adequate logistical and personal resources for the fulfillment of their functions, guaranteeing their work throughout the territory, and generating mechanisms for coordination and dialogue with civil society.

184. For the IACHR, it is important that the strengthening measures referred to in the recommendation under follow-up be aimed at improving confidence in the institution's role in the protection of human rights; therefore, it is important to continue observing the role of the Ombudsman's Office, and its full fulfillment of its functions in the different provinces of the country. Consequently, the Commission considers that this recommendation has been partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

185. The IACHR identifies that progress in complying with this recommendation requires specific measures and reported information that make it possible to know whether the human and material resources that have been assigned to the Ombudsman's Office are sufficient for the adequate fulfillment of the entity's role in a decentralized manner. Therefore, the State is requested to prepare a diagnosis on what resources the entity must have to ensure an adequate exercise of functions. It is also essential to have information that allows us to evaluate how these resources have helped to improve the levels of trust of citizens in the work of the Ombudsman's Office, improving the channels of dialogue between all actors.

Recommendation No. 25. Adopt measures to ensure that the selection process for the head of this entity (Ombudsman's Office) is participatory, transparent, pluralistic, and based on the merits and professional qualities of the applicants.

Compliance Information

186. For the year 2024, the State reported the presentation of various legislative initiatives on the selection process of the Ombudsman, some of which are still under debate. It also indicated that, on May 17, 2024, Law No. 32028 was published,<sup>131</sup> which amended the Organic Law of the Ombudsman's Office, which established that the Ombudsman will cease to hold office due to the expiration of the term, provided that his successor has been elected, to facilitate the continuity of the position, despite the fact that there has not been an election within the Congress of the Republic. In addition, the regulation added the function to the Ombudsman's Office of preventing and monitoring social conflicts, as well as mediating to promote dialogue and its solution.

187. The Commission received information provided by civil society according to which no concrete progress has been observed in the reform of the selection procedures referred to in this recommendation. In this regard, it was reiterated that they have been criticized for limited social participation and for having a political focus, prioritizing obtaining votes over meritocracy.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

188. The IACHR believes that no specific progress has been reported to ensure that the selection process for the head of this entity is participatory, transparent, pluralistic, and based on merit and professional qualities. In this regard, the Commission is attentive to the progress of the legislative initiatives that have been presented, so that the content of the measures that are approved can be analyzed. Pending this information, the Commission understands that this recommendation is pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

189. The IACHR identifies that progress in complying with this recommendation depends on the legislative initiatives that are approved containing mechanisms for electing the person in charge of the Ombudsman's Office, which reinforce participation and transparency, and are based on merit and objective professional qualities. In this way, the selection must have the appropriate procedures to prevent this election from being perceived as merely political, that it has criteria that can be objectively applied, avoiding phrases that can be interpreted arbitrarily, and that it has instruments of transparency and exchange of information with other civil society entities.

Recommendation No. 26. Ratify the Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination, and Related Forms of Intolerance.

Compliance Information

190. For the year 2024, the State reported that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is preparing the report on the referral of the Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination, and Related Forms of Intolerance and the file for ratification to be sent to the Legislative Branch. To this end, he indicated that the different sectors of the Executive Branch have presented technical reports and have held coordination meetings.

191. For its part, the Commission received information provided by civil society according to which there are no known measures to ratify the Convention, despite having been signed by the State on October 25, 2016.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

192. The IACHR appreciates the State's reporting regarding the coordination that is being carried out in the Executive Branch. With regard to the Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination, and Related Forms of Intolerance, the IACHR recalls that this instrument consolidates international standards on the subject set forth in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and advances in the legal definition of contemporary forms of racism<sup>132</sup>.

193. On the basis of the information sent, the Commission finds that no measures have been transmitted to ratify the Convention in question and therefore considers that compliance with this recommendation remains pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

194. In order to make progress in complying with this recommendation, the IACHR invites the State to ratify the Convention in question. To this end, it warns that it is necessary to present the progress of the parliamentary process, including the presentation of the legislative initiative, the discussion in specialized commissions, the issuance of opinions, the scheduling in the Plenary and, finally, its approval and promulgation.

Recommendation No. 27. Adopt measures aimed at improving and guaranteeing the representative political participation of indigenous peoples and peasant communities in the different regions of Peru.

Compliance Information

195. In 2024, the State highlighted that the National Elections Jury (JNE) prepared the document "(Sub)Political Representation of Indigenous Peoples in Peru, a proposal for reserved seats in the Peruvian Congress," which seeks to contribute to the debate on the need to strengthen the political representation of these actors. In this sense, on December 14, 2023, it organized an event to present the study in the Congress of the Republic.

196. For its part, civil society informed the Commission about the existence of electoral quotas in favor of indigenous peoples and communities in the case of regional and municipal elections. According to the information, the application of quotas has had some implementation problems that have not made it possible to meet the following objectives: (i) to address structural barriers such as institutionalized racism or inequalities in access to resources; and (ii) to incorporate the demands and needs of indigenous peoples into municipal and regional management. Likewise, civil society stated that there are no known efforts to contemplate a mechanism for the representation of indigenous peoples and communities in the Legislative Branch.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

197. The Commission recalls that the follow-up to this recommendation is aimed at establishing whether the State has adopted measures to promote the representation of indigenous peoples and peasant communities in the system of political representation at the national and regional level. In this regard, the IACHR requests information that will allow it to learn about the measures that have been taken to guarantee the active participation of members of indigenous peoples in electoral political representation and in mechanisms aimed at incorporating the indigenous peoples' agenda into the public debate.

198. The IACHR thanks the State for the information on the document prepared by the JNE to encourage discussion on the system of political representation of indigenous peoples, as well as for the inclusion of a formula of reserved seats as an option to guarantee their representation. It also notes the existence of electoral quotas in the regional and municipal representation system (existing since 2002), identifying that this precedes the Country Report presented<sup>133</sup>. In this regard, the Commission considers that no effective measures have been reported that seek to take concrete steps towards compliance with the recommendation and therefore concludes that compliance with the recommendation is pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

199. In order to analyze the progress of this recommendation, the Commission considers it important to know the scope of the discussion on the electoral system for the political representation of indigenous peoples and peasant communities in the Legislative Branch. In addition, it expects to know the contents of these proposals, and the discussion and approval processes that are taking place in Congress. On the other hand, the Commission requests specific information that will make it possible to identify, if applicable, how the objectives of the electoral quotas established in the regional and municipal representation system are being met.

F. Freedom of expression, assembly and association

Recommendation No. 28. Design and implement a permanent national public policy aimed at protecting the rights to peaceful assembly, freedom of expression, and freedom of association. Such a policy must have the participation of all sectors of society and contemplate the updating of protocols and training programs in State institutions; the design and implementation of negotiation, mediation and other alternative means of conflict; and the implementation of measures to protect human rights defenders and journalists.

Compliance Information

200. In 2024, the State reported on the approval of the Intersectoral Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders<sup>134</sup> (hereinafter "Intersectoral Mechanism"), with the aim of protecting, recognizing, and guaranteeing access to justice for human rights defenders. According to the State, this mechanism covers the protection of journalists as long as they carry out activities in defense of human rights. This mechanism carries out permanent monitoring that generates a report of possible risk situations, and receives requests for the activation of the Early Warning Procedure (PAT). According to the State, as a result of this measure, 373 situations of risk have been registered that directly involved 656 human rights defenders and family members, in 20 departments and one constitutional province, between June 2019 and May 2024. Of the 373 risk situations, 27 involve 30 journalists (4.84%), whose cases have been dealt with within the framework of the Intersectoral Mechanism.

201. The State also reported on the approval of the "Protocol of Prosecutorial Action for the Prevention and Investigation of Crimes against Human Rights Defenders."<sup>135</sup>

202. For its part, in relation to the Intersectoral Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, civil society highlighted the installation of Regional Roundtables for the Protection of Human Rights

Defenders, as a territorial strategy that allows for coordination and articulation of decision-making. However, he expressed his concern about the alleged budgetary problems that would exist, which would affect the implementation of protection measures for the attention of risk situations.

203. Civil society commented that, since the approval of the Report, policies for the protection of human rights defenders and journalists have not been updated or strengthened. According to what was stated to the Commission, this would be aggravated by the alleged increase in attacks against defenders belonging to civil society organizations, demonstrators, journalists, justice operators, and public authorities, who would be publicly accused of being "terrorists" or "terrucas" by government authorities and civil society groups<sup>136</sup>, inciting violence against them in order to intimidate and frighten them. The Committee to Protect Journalists has indicated that repeated accusations of defamation of journalists have been used to prevent them from reporting on matters of public interest.<sup>137</sup>

204. In addition, civil society expressed concern about the legislative initiatives for the weakening of civil society organizations, which would seek to restrict and control the work of those that receive funds from abroad, which could generate arbitrary sanction mechanisms against civil society organizations and their members.<sup>138</sup>

205. The IACHR appreciates the information provided by the State and welcomes the approval and implementation of the Intersectoral Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, as well as the installation of Regional Roundtables for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders. The Commission also recalls that the objective of the follow-up to this recommendation is to learn about the measures adopted after the approval of the recommendations contained in the Country Report under analysis, so that they respond to the challenges exposed during the political and social crisis in the time frame covered by the Report.

206. Considering the above, the Commission observes that the Intersectoral Mechanism was approved in 2021 and has been implemented before, during, and after the crisis analyzed. In this regard, the State must strengthen the measures adopted with the aim of adapting the Mechanism and its instruments to the contexts of social protest that may arise in the future. It is also essential that the Intersectoral Mechanism, and its decentralized tables, have the institutional resources essential to respond to the urgencies of protection in situations of risk.<sup>139</sup>

207. On the other hand, the IACHR considers it essential to have more details on when the Intersectoral Mechanism considers that a journalist or other person is carrying out human rights defense activities, in order to determine the framework for effective protection in the context of social protests.

208. In addition, in the context of the follow-up to this recommendation, the IACHR has taken note of the information provided by the State and positively values the existence of the Mechanism. However, it does not find specific compliance measures that show that progress has been made in the design, discussion, approval or application of a permanent national public policy aimed at protecting the rights to peaceful assembly, freedom of expression and freedom of association, which includes the implementation of measures of negotiation, mediation and other alternative means of conflict; and the implementation of measures to protect human rights defenders and journalists. In this regard, it concludes that this recommendation is still pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

209. The IACHR urges the State to approve or strengthen a permanent national public policy that includes training programs in State institutions and contains alternative means of conflict resolution, and mechanisms for the protection of human rights defenders and journalists in the context of the defense of the rights to peaceful assembly, freedom of expression and freedom of association. This would imply clearly delimiting the scope of the mechanism's protection in the context of social protests and determining the protection of journalists and the role they play in such contexts.

Recommendation No. 29. Develop educational campaigns of national scope so that citizens know their rights and protection alternatives and create inter-institutional missions so that, in the context of protests and demonstrations, they observe and, if necessary, provide support to people who require some type of assistance or protection.

Compliance Information

210. In 2024, the State reported that, within the framework of the "Peru without Racism" Strategy for 2023, six information and awareness fairs were organized in Arequipa, Huancavelica, Huánuco, Loreto, and Puno. In addition, it indicated that an information stand against racism was set up in 22 fairs or festivals. In addition, as part of the Intersectoral Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, the State indicated that training workshops were organized for indigenous defenders in seven regions with the highest risk alerts, namely, in San Martín, Ucayali, Huánuco, Madre de Dios, Loreto, Pasco, and Amazonas.

211. For its part, civil society stressed to the Commission that it does not know of information on the activities promoted by the State to comply with this recommendation.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

212. The Commission appreciates the information provided by the State. In this regard, it recalls that the purpose of this recommendation is to learn about pedagogical actions on rights and protection mechanisms, as well as the creation of inter-institutional missions aimed at observing and providing care to people in the context of protests and demonstrations. Therefore, it warns that the training on the intersectoral mechanism of defenders, and the fairs on racial discrimination reported contribute to the fulfillment of this recommendation, considering that they strengthen knowledge about some of the rights of people and their protection alternatives. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considers that this recommendation has been partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

213. To move forward with compliance with this recommendation, the IACHR stresses that there must be institutionalized mechanisms aimed at promoting educational campaigns of national scope, such as fairs, workshops, advertising spots, or others, aimed at addressing the rights of citizens and protection mechanisms, and that include the fight against discrimination as one of their components. It also recalls that it is necessary to implement inter-institutional actions aimed at observing and paying attention to people in the context of protests and demonstrations, which must include various public actors and civil society, and involve entities such as the Ombudsman's Office.

Recommendation No. 30. Refrain from making statements that stigmatize or incite violence against people participating in the protests. In this regard, adopt pedagogical measures aimed at socializing with the state authorities their duty to refrain from making stigmatizing statements or statements that incite violence against people participating in the protests.

Compliance Information

214. In 2024, the State indicated that, since 2013, an Alert Platform against Racism has been implemented, which aims to generate information on acts of ethnic-racial discrimination and promote active citizenship that reports these facts. The State also indicated that has established the ORIENTA service<sup>140</sup>, to provide attention to people who report cases of discrimination. In this context, it stated that 39 capacity-building activities on the identification and prevention of ethnic-racial discrimination were carried out at the decentralized level, aimed at public servants and officials. and that a free virtual MOOC course called "Let's Talk About Racism" was implemented.

215. For its part, civil society informed the Commission of the alleged issuance of statements that stigmatize and incite violence against people who participate in the protests. In this regard, the IACHR was informed of statements issued by members of the Council of Ministers,<sup>141</sup> spokesmen for the Executive Branch,<sup>142</sup> and congressmen<sup>143</sup> who would have issued qualifiers such as "urban terrorism," "traitors to the interests of the homeland," or "criminals" linked to the demonstrators in the context of the October 2024 mobilizations. Likewise, civil society stressed that, in the context of the protests of these mobilizations in October 2024, the Ombudsman's Office issued a statement stating that "the obligation to contribute to the national interest" is above the right to protest.

216. On the other hand, civil society commented that it does not have public information on specific campaigns or educational programs aimed at training authorities on the importance of avoiding statements that incite violence or stigmatize demonstrators, human rights defenders or journalists.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

217. The Commission is grateful for the information provided by the State regarding the training provided to public servants and public officials on ethnic-racial discrimination. In this regard, the IACHR emphasizes that the purpose of this recommendation is to strengthen educational measures aimed at state authorities regarding their duty to refrain from making statements that stigmatize or incite violence against people who participate in the protests. In this regard, the IACHR has said that "officials have the duty to ensure that when exercising their freedom of expression they do not incur in the disregard of fundamental rights, which includes that they do not harm or inhibit the right to social protest."<sup>144</sup>

218. The IACHR is also concerned about the stigmatizing statements made by various State officials in relation to people who participated in the protests of 2022 and 2023. Pending further information, the Commission concludes that compliance with this recommendation is pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

219. On the one hand, the Commission considers it essential that authorities and officials refrain from making stigmatizing statements about people who participate in the protests. In addition, it recalls that, in order to move forward in complying with this recommendation, not only must it stop issuing this type of assessment, but the State must seek mechanisms of accountability in the face of the latter, as well as provide pedagogical measures so that the authorities and officials know and apply this prohibition.

Recommendation No. 31. Ensure that limitations on the right to peaceful assembly are exceptional and observe the principles of legality, legitimacy, necessity, and proportionality.

Compliance Information

220. For the year 2024, the State reported that Article 12 of the Political Constitution of Peru, the rulings of the Constitutional Court<sup>145</sup> and the Administrative and Operational Guidelines applicable to operations to control, maintain, and restore public order<sup>146</sup> recognize the right to protest. In this regard, it stated that the legal framework applicable to policing in the context of protests provides that limitations on this right must be expressly set by law and be aimed at achieving legitimate authorized objectives, including the protection of national security, public safety, public order, public health, public morality and respect for the rights and freedoms of all members of the community.

221. The State also indicated that the legislation in force provides that, during expressions of violence in social conflicts, it is essential to take the strictly necessary and proportionate measures to control individual or collective conduct that endangers public order or the rights of individuals, without restricting or limiting the free exercise of the right to protest by those who demonstrate peacefully.

222. For its part, the Commission learned of information provided by civil society, according to which the government has resorted to declaring states of emergency in various demonstrations, allowing the intervention of the armed forces in the control of public order. In this regard, it was indicated that an example of this would have occurred in September 2024, when the government declared a state of emergency in eleven districts of Metropolitan Lima and Callao for 60 days in response to a transport strike.

223. In turn, the State remarked that the declaration of the State of Emergency in September 2024 was based on the increase in criminal actions and citizen insecurity (commission of crimes of homicide, contract killings, extortion, among others), as indicated in Supreme Decree No. 100-2024-PCM<sup>147</sup>.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

224. The Commission considers that no information has been provided on any measure that could signify progress in complying with the recommendation, since the measures referred to do not take place after the issuance of the Country Report. The IACHR has also observed that the State has declared states of emergency on several occasions, allowing the temporary restriction of some rights, as a mechanism to address protests or demonstrations. As commented in the analysis of compliance with recommendation number 7 of this report, the Commission recalls that "states of emergency should be reserved exclusively for truly exceptional cases, situations of extreme gravity, that endanger the life of the Nation. For other situations, ordinary administrative measures must be adopted."<sup>148</sup> In light of the foregoing, the Commission concludes that specific measures must be taken to ensure that limitations on the right to peaceful assembly are exceptional and observe the principles of legality, legitimacy, necessity, and proportionality. Therefore, compliance with this recommendation is pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

225. The IACHR notes that the analysis of compliance with this recommendation lies in identifying the concrete State measures that implement inter-American standards related to the exceptional nature of limitations on the right to peaceful assembly, based on the principles of legality, legitimacy, necessity, and proportionality. Therefore, not only must the existence of these principles be established in the regulatory framework, but regulation and practice must be sought in accordance with their content.

Recommendation No. 32. Adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the dissolution of protests is of an exceptional nature, so that it only proceeds in the event of a serious risk to the life or physical integrity of people and when other less restrictive measures are not possible.

Compliance Information

226. For the year 2024, the State reiterated the rules detailed in recommendation 31. The State also stressed that domestic legislation provides that, during expressions of violence in social conflicts, it is essential to take the strictly necessary and proportionate measures to control individual or collective conduct that endangers public order or the rights of individuals, without restricting or limiting the free exercise of the right to protest by those who demonstrate peacefully.

227. For its part, the IACHR learned from civil society about the enactment of Legislative Decree No. 1589 of December 2023<sup>149</sup> which increases prison sentences to 15 years for crimes such as rioting and obstructing public services, and which would represent a possible criminalization of social and peaceful protest by criminalizing acts such as blocking roads. In addition, the Commission was informed that, in May 2023, the Constitutional Court issued a ruling that would criminalize demonstrations, prohibiting peaceful protests by declaring that they are not protected by the Constitution<sup>150</sup>. In the same sense, it was pointed out that the Supreme Court ratified a criminal conviction stating that the occupation of roads constitutes a crime, especially when it affects third parties and there are no alternatives.

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

228. The Commission notes that no measure has been provided that could mean progress in complying with the recommendation, since no measure is subsequent to the issuance of the recommendation. It is also concerned about the enactment of laws and judicial decisions that reduce the protection of persons participating in protests and demonstrations, such as Legislative Decree No. 1589 or the ruling of the Constitutional Court. In this regard, it should be mentioned that the objective of the recommendation is to guarantee the exercise of the right to protest and to establish, in a clear manner, that the adoption of measures for its dissolution should only be carried out if there is a serious risk to the life or physical integrity of people, and provided that other less restrictive measures are not possible. Therefore, the Commission considers that compliance with this recommendation is pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

229. The Commission calls on the State to take concrete measures aimed at protecting the right to protest, avoiding criminalizing or creating a regulatory framework that makes the protection of the people who participate in them precarious. In this regard, it is requested that the normative measures and judicial decisions issued be evaluated in relation to international standards. In this way, the protection framework in relation to protests and the protection of human rights defenders can be strengthened.

<sup>150</sup> Cassation Judgment 1464-2021/Apurimac, May 15, 2023, Twenty-first "It is not possible, under the pretext of assembly or dissent (to think or think differently), to justify the impediment, hindrance or hindrance to transport or the provision of public or private service, much less the endangerment of life, integrity or personal liberty or damage to public or private property".

Recommendation No. 33. Respect and guarantee the right to record and disseminate any incident in the context of protests, especially taking into account the role that cameramen, photojournalists, and journalists who cover protests play in the social control of events in demonstrations and the actions of the State.

Compliance Information

230. For the year 2024, the State reported that the National Police of Peru has indicated, through its communication channels, that anyone who is part of a police intervention or witness to it can take photographs and/or videos, without interfering with police work. It also reiterated that journalists are included in the protection framework of the Intersectoral Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and in the Protocol of Prosecutorial Action for the Prevention and Investigation of Crimes against Human Rights Defenders (see recommendation 28).

231. For its part, the Commission was made aware of the concern of civil society regarding the normative, jurisprudential, and social framework that criminalizes and stigmatizes social protest (see recommendation 30), since it affirms that not only would the protests be delegitimized, but also the media coverage and objective recording of the facts. In this sense, the report of the Office of Human Rights of Journalists (OFIP) of the National Association of Journalists (ANP) registered, between January and May 2024, 119 attacks on journalists, which include threats (62), physical or verbal aggression (23), judicial intimidation (10), and obstacles to access to information (9), among others.<sup>151</sup>

232. The IACHR welcomes and appreciates the report by the National Police of Peru regarding the right to record and disseminate any incident in the context of the protests. However, the Commission notes that, according to the facts gathered in the Country Report, situations arose that made it impossible to exercise these rights due to actions carried out by the security agents themselves.<sup>152</sup> Therefore, in order to follow up on compliance with this recommendation, it is important to know the subsequent concrete actions that have been adopted to guarantee the protection of cameramen, photojournalists, and journalists who cover the protests. In fact, the Commission considers that the recommendation still requires concrete actions to be implemented. Therefore, it concludes that compliance is still pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

233. The IACHR will assess progress in complying with the recommendation when the State reports on actions taken to ensure the dissemination and recording of events during social protests. These actions may include the implementation of specific public policies, measures to strengthen the institutions of both security agents and the entities in charge of protecting the rights of journalists, the accountability of those officers who violate these rights, or pedagogical actions aimed at knowing and promoting their exercise.

Recommendation No. 34. Review and update the protocols for the protection of journalists, communicators, and media workers from persecution, detention, intimidation, harassment, and aggression of any kind; as well as cease state actions that interfere with the free functioning of the media. Protocols must be endowed with institutional capacity, human and financial resources for the protection of journalists.

Compliance Information

234. In 2024, the State reported the approval of the Protocol of Action for the Legal Guidance and Sponsorship of Journalists and Social Communicators<sup>153</sup>, with the aim of establishing guidelines for the provision of services for the public defense of these people. In this regard, the State reported that, since its approval, the victim defense service has been provided to seven journalists, and the criminal defense system to 26 people. In addition, the State pointed out that the victim defense service has 497 public defenders nationwide and 1262 criminal public defenders distributed in 34 District Directorates, Public Defense and Access to Justice nationwide. The State also explained about the free legal assistance service by telephone through the "Fono Alegra 1884," where you can receive guidance, answer questions, and, if necessary, have the case referred to the corresponding district directorate.

235. In addition, the State announced the preparation of the draft "Protocol for Inter-Institutional Action for the Coordination and Assistance of Journalists and Social Communicators in the Context of Disturbance of Public Order,"<sup>154</sup> which proposes mechanisms for attention and coordination on security, health, and public defense. This project is under review by the different sectors of the Executive Branch.

236. For their part, civil society organizations reported that the draft "Protocol of inter-institutional action for the coordination and attention to journalists and social communicators in the context of disturbance of public order" was criticized by various civil society actors for placing journalistic coverage of the protests under state supervision, representing an attack on freedom of expression. Likewise, the National Association of Journalists questioned that the document would not delimit the scope of the concept of "alterations to public order"; it would not consider the mechanisms to deal with cases in which the aggression is carried out by members of the Police; and it would not include non-collegiate journalists or members of the foreign press.<sup>155</sup>

237. Civil society also expressed its concern about various legislative initiatives promoted by the Congress of the Republic in relation to freedom of the press. In fact, it highlighted the initiative to modify the structure of the National Institute of Radio and Television of Peru (hereinafter "IRTP"), incorporating representatives of Congress and the Judiciary as part of its board, which could be a risk to the editorial independence of state media. On the other hand, it emphasized a legislative initiative that would seek to sanction journalists who publish information from statements of effective collaborators in judicial cases, which would be aimed at protecting people related to cases of corruption and criminal organization.

238. Likewise, in 2024, the Commission and its Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (SRLE) learned of legislative initiatives that could unduly restrict the rights to freedom of expression and association. Among them, a proposal to create the "Professional College of Communicators of Peru" was known, which would establish a mandatory registry for the practice of journalism<sup>156</sup>. In addition, on April 2, 2024, a bill was presented that would seek to prohibit journalists and their relatives up to the second degree of consanguinity from signing contracts with the Peruvian State.<sup>157</sup>

239. The IACHR appreciates the information provided by the State and welcomes the approval of the Protocol of Action for Legal Guidance and Sponsorship of Journalists and Social Communicators, as well as the implementation of legal defense services. In addition, it takes note of the preparation of the draft "Protocol for inter-institutional action for the coordination and assistance of journalists and social communicators in the context of disturbance of public order"; although, taking into account the concerns expressed by civil society about the independence of the role of journalism, especially in situations of high conflict such as in the case of protests, and the implications of allowing control of the media for their protection, it requests information from the State that allows it to understand the scope of state supervision to which journalistic activity would be subject. In turn, the IACHR believes that it is essential that these instruments be developed in a participatory manner, with the aim of collecting and incorporating the needs of the actors it seeks to protect.

240. In this regard, the IACHR recalls that the protection of freedom of information and expression is based on the construction of a regulatory framework that guarantees their independence and the protection of the sources of information they use, emphasizing that "access to public information must always be governed by the principle of maximum disclosure, according to which the right of access to information is the rule and secrecy is the exception."<sup>158</sup> Considering the importance of guaranteeing this protection in order to achieve the objective indicated in the recommendation, the IACHR identifies that this recommendation has been partially complied with.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

241. The Commission believes that it is important for progress in complying with this recommendation that progress can be made in the adoption and strengthening of a regulatory framework that includes the adoption of protocols that respond to the needs of journalists, communicators, and media workers in the face of persecution, detentions, intimidation, harassment, aggressions of any kind; as well as to cease state actions that intervene with the free functioning of the media.

Recommendation No. 35. Carry out campaigns and other measures to influence the institutional culture on the duty of officials to refrain from stigmatizing and hindering the work of human rights defenders and journalists, as well as the importance of publicly recognizing the role of their work in contexts of social protests.

Compliance Information

242. In 2024, the State reported that various workshops<sup>159</sup> on the operation of the Intersectoral Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders were held for police officers, judges, and prosecutors. Among the topics addressed in the workshops were the role of press workers, and the right to freedom of expression and opinion. The State also reported on spaces for dialogue with national journalists and international specialists in the field of freedom of expression. In addition, the State highlighted the organization of commemorative events for three indigenous women leaders who are human rights defenders, granting them recognition as "meritorious personality of Culture."

243. The State also transmitted the approval of the National Multisectoral Human Rights Policy in 2024,<sup>160</sup> which establishes a "training service on prevention and protection for human rights defenders with cultural relevance aimed at civil society organizations and indigenous or native peoples and the Afro-Peruvian people, officials and public servants."

244. For its part, civil society indicated that the Intersectoral Mechanism would be focusing mainly on threats from illegal activities, excluding other contexts such as cases related to social protest and its criminalization.

245. In addition, in 2024, the Commission and its Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression received various reports on alleged cases of judicial persecution against human rights defenders in the context of social protests, as well as journalists and press workers. They also referred to alleged obstacles to journalistic coverage, restrictions on access to information and stigmatizing statements by state officials against the press<sup>161</sup>. In this context, the decision of the Constitutional Court of Peru was taken cognizance, which instructed the Presidency to respond to the recommendations issued by the Ombudsman's Office, with the aim of guaranteeing the free exercise of journalism.<sup>162</sup> In addition, it was reported that security schemes were implemented at official events, which included the installation of perimeters and barriers, which would have limited journalists' access and their ability to ask questions during coverage.<sup>163</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

246. The IACHR appreciates the information provided and highlights the organization of spaces for capacity building and dialogue with members of the press and human rights defenders. It also takes note of the concern of civil society in relation to the protection of these actors in the context of social protest, which is one of the contexts where situations of greater vulnerability occur. In this regard, the IACHR recalls that contexts of social protest and its criminalization are one of the obstacles faced by human rights defenders<sup>164</sup>, so it is essential to assess and understand the role and risks suffered by journalists and human rights defenders in the context of social protests. The Commission also takes note of the numerous reports received in 2024, both from civil society organizations and journalists, which point to the persistence of stigmatizing statements, including by State officials, and of alleged obstacles to the exercise of the work of journalists and human rights defenders. For this reason, the IACHR maintains that compliance with this recommendation is pending.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

247. For the IACHR, in order to evaluate the progress made in complying with this recommendation, it is important that the role that human rights defenders and journalists play in contexts of social protest be strengthened and specified in campaigns and other institutional advocacy measures, so that future violations in the exercise of their rights can be avoided. In this way, the State must promote the use of

G. Other

Recommendation No. 36. Adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the life, personal integrity, and security of each and every one of the persons who spoke and testified before the Inter-American Commission during its visits. Likewise, refrain from retaliating and/or allowing retaliation to be taken by third parties against them.

Compliance Information

248. During 2024, the State affirmed that, within the framework of the various investigations conducted by the Supraprovincial Criminal Prosecutor's Offices specializing in Human Rights and Interculturality, it has been arranged that the affected persons be incorporated into the Program for the Protection and Assistance of Victims and Witnesses, managed by the Office of the Central Unit for the Protection and Assistance of Victims and Witnesses (OUCAVIT), and implemented by the District Units (UDAVIT). In this regard, the State reported that, as of August 9, 2024, 68 aggrieved persons have been included in said Program. In addition, the State reported that 3,359 psychological interventions have been carried out on behalf of victims of social protests and their families.<sup>165</sup>

249. For its part, civil society expressed its concern about the alleged lack of concrete measures for the people who testified or spoke with the IACHR during the visits, and through other means, such as public hearings. In this regard, it pointed out that stigmatization and "terrorization" campaigns have been carried out, which, according to what was expressed to the Commission, are fomented by authorities and civil society groups (groups such as "La Resistencia" or "La Insurgencia") against human rights defenders, both against victims of human rights violations during the 1980-2000 armed conflict. and against members of civil society organizations that work for the protection of human rights (see recommendation 30).<sup>166</sup>

Analysis and level of compliance with the recommendation

250. The Commission emphasizes that the protection of those persons who spoke and testified with the IACHR in the context of the preparation of the Country Report is an essential element for the fulfillment of the international obligations of the States contained in the OAS Charter and the American Convention on Human Rights, and the fulfillment of the role assigned to the IACHR. Consequently, the State must not only avoid violating the life, integrity and security of people; but, in addition, to adopt measures to prevent, investigate and punish any action carried out by third parties to violate these rights.

251. The IACHR welcomes the inclusion of the victims in the context of the facts contained in the Report in the Program for the Protection and Assistance of Victims and Witnesses. However, it expresses its concern over the above-mentioned complaints from civil society regarding the continuation of attacks and harassment against human rights defenders by civil society groups, without mechanisms for control, investigation, or punishment by security agents. Therefore, it calls on the State to respond in a timely and effective manner to the complaints, implementing mechanisms for prevention, protection, and guarantee of access to justice, in accordance with the particularities of each case.

Response to the follow-up questionnaire to the Report on the situation of human rights in Peru, December 17, 2024.

252. Considering the concerns expressed and the urgency of protecting human rights defenders and journalists, the Commission identifies that the information sent by the State needs to be complemented with actions aimed not only at the victims of the events contained in the report, but must also include all those persons and organizations that supported the report with information and their testimonies, and those that provide information for the current monitoring process. Pending specific information on compliance measures, the Commission notes that this recommendation is pending compliance.

Measures and information to advance the implementation of the recommendation

253. The IACHR emphasizes that progress in complying with this recommendation requires the adoption of practical measures that: (i) protect the right to life, integrity, and security of the persons who spoke and testified before the IACHR; (ii) avoid their stigmatization as human rights defenders, and (iii) protect them from the actions of civil groups that seek to intimidate or attack them.

IV. CONCLUSIONS

255. Full compliance with the IACHR's recommendations by OAS member states is essential to ensure the full observance of human rights in the region and to strengthen the effectiveness of the inter-American human rights system. In the exercise of its mandate to follow up on these decisions, the Commission prepares reports in which it identifies the progress, challenges, and setbacks in the adoption of compliance measures that, through its various working mechanisms, it has requested from the States.

256. This follow-up report develops the implementation of the recommendations that the Commission issued in the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Peru in the Context of Social Protests, which was approved on April 23, 2023 by the IACHR. The recommendations contained therein were formulated based on the findings and information obtained by the IACHR before, during, and after its on-site visit carried out in the context of the crisis of democratic and social institutions in Peru between January 11 and 13, 2023, which was preceded by a preparatory technical mission of the Executive Secretariat. which took place from December 20 to 22, 2022.

257. In the aforementioned Country Report, the IACHR included 36 recommendations addressed to the State, in accordance with the following six thematic axes: (i) Dialogue and overcoming the crisis, (ii) citizen security, (iii) reparation and attention to victims of human rights, (iv) fight against impunity, (v) democratic institutions, and (vi) freedom of expression, assembly, and association.

258. Based on the IACHR's General Guidelines for Follow-up on Recommendations and Decisions, this follow-up report identifies the compliance measures adopted, progress made, and challenges in the implementation of the recommendations analyzed<sup>167</sup>. For its preparation, the IACHR received information from the State on January 8, 2024, which it published through the Inter-American SIMORE. In addition, on November 8, 2024, the IACHR again requested information from the State. Consequently, the State provided the requested information on December 11, 2024 and published it through the Inter-American SIMORE. For its part, the IACHR also sent a questionnaire to civil society organizations in order to provide relevant information for the follow-up to the recommendations. Part of these responses were published through the Inter-American SIMORE.

259. For this follow-up report, the Commission concluded that, of the 36 recommendations analyzed, one has a level of total compliance (2.7%); one has a level of substantial partial compliance (2.7%); 11 are partially fulfilled (30.6%), and 23 are pending compliance (63.9%). The IACHR reiterates to the State the importance of effectively complying with recommendations that have not been fully complied with. The following are the main findings of the IACHR regarding compliance with the recommendations, according to the following thematic axes.

260. Regarding the recommendations on dialogue and overcoming the crisis:

<sup>167</sup> IACHR, General Guidelines for Follow-up on Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, OEA/Ser.L/V/II. Doc.385/23 (second edition), November 20, 2023.

- A genuine and effective dialogue strategy with results must be guaranteed, for this purpose the mechanisms for monitoring the agreements and the impact of these agreements on effective decision-making must be strengthened.
- New or improved channels of dialogue between indigenous peoples and the State should be created to effectively include the needs and interests of indigenous peoples in decision-making processes, and to comply with the characteristics determined in the judgments of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and in the framework of Convention No. 169 of the International Labour Organization.
- The implementation of the National Multisectoral Human Rights Policy and other reported measures aimed at combating ethnic and racial discrimination are still unknown. In addition, work must be done in their educational curriculum with regard to ethnic and racial discrimination or socioeconomic condition.

261. Regarding the recommendations on citizen security:

- The mechanisms for training and evaluating the security forces must be strengthened so as to guarantee the defense of the life and integrity of all people. In addition, public information on these training mechanisms must be ensured.
- The regulatory framework must adapt its contents to implement the principles of legality, necessity and proportionality. To this end, the use of force and the right to protest must be regulated, guaranteeing adequate prevention and punishment mechanisms for the actions of the security forces, the prohibition of firearms in the context of protests, the exceptional nature of the use of "states of emergency", the protection and non-criminalization of people who participate in demonstrations, and to guarantee the transparency, impartiality and control of such actions by competent and independent actors.

262. With respect to the recommendations on reparation and attention to victims of human rights:

- The process of implementing comprehensive reparations for all those affected in the context of the facts set out in the Country Report must begin as soon as possible. To this end, reparation mechanisms must be put in place to accompany the non-reparative economic assistance that was delivered, and to implement the additional measures that have been reported. Likewise, the State must guarantee health support to the affected people, which is not fulfilled only by their affiliation to a universal national health insurance.
- It is important to implement a registration mechanism that collects information from public entities, and that coordinates with victims' associations and their representatives, to provide adequate information for registration.
- Psychosocial support mechanisms should be adopted for victims and their families.

263. With regard to the recommendations on combating impunity:

- It is necessary to move forward in the process of investigation, punishment and reparation for the human rights violations committed in the context of the events included in the Country Report.
- The State's strategy to guarantee the investigation must be analyzed, so as to avoid unjustified delays, or lack of attention to the possible barriers to access to justice that may arise, especially for those people with greater difficulties in appearing at the procedural acts (people who live very far away, or in a situation of poverty, who do not speak Spanish, women with care work, among others).

264. With respect to the recommendations on democratic institutions:

- There have been no actions aimed at strengthening the lack of confidence in the separation of powers. On the contrary, various measures have been reported that would have an inverse effect.
- Within the framework of the principle of separation of powers, the legal norms that are presented or approved must not have the objective or effect of restricting the action of other entities or their decisions. In addition, it is essential that real control be exercised over the norms that are to be approved through existing constitutional mechanisms, such as the power to observe norms that violate these principles.
- Control entities such as the Constitutional Court or the Ombudsman's Office must fulfill their role, applying international criteria and standards for the protection of human rights.

265. Regarding the recommendations on freedom of expression, assembly and association:

- The State should work on the design, discussion, approval, or application of a national public policy aimed at protecting the rights to peaceful assembly, freedom of expression, and freedom of association, including the implementation of measures of negotiation, mediation, and other alternative means of conflict; and the implementation of measures to protect human rights defenders and journalists.
- Authorities and officials should refrain from issuing stigmatizing statements about people who participate in protests, and seek accountability mechanisms when they occur. In addition, it is necessary to provide pedagogical measures so that the authorities and officials are aware of and apply this prohibition.
- Measures must be taken to guarantee the exercise of the right to protest and clarify that the adoption of measures for its dissolution should only take place when there is a serious risk to the life or physical integrity of people, provided that other less restrictive measures are not possible.
- Concrete measures are required with the aim of protecting the right to protest, avoiding criminalizing or generating a regulatory framework that makes the protection of the people who participate in them precarious.
- It is essential to adopt and strengthen a regulatory framework that responds to the needs of journalists, communicators and media workers in the face of persecution, detention, intimidation, harassment, aggression of any kind; as well as to cease state actions that intervene with the free functioning of the media.
- It is necessary to strengthen, in campaigns and other measures of institutional advocacy, the role that human rights defenders and journalists play in the contexts of social protest, so that future violations in the exercise of their rights can be avoided.

266. Finally, the Commission appreciates the information provided by both the State and civil society organizations for the preparation of this follow-up report. It also reiterates its willingness to provide technical assistance to promote the implementation of the recommendations analyzed, in accordance with applicable inter-American standards.

4. During 2024, we continued to hold public competitions to fill 12 vacant positions: eight financed by the Regular Fund and four by specific funds. Currently, there is one vacant position at the P05 level, which is scheduled to be open for competition during the first half of 2025.

5. As for the positions financed by the Regular Fund, three positions were filled at the P03 level for the Coordination of the Case Sections, one P02 position in the Information Systems and Technology Section, one G06 and one G05 position for the Attention and Access for Information Section. Appointments are expected in early 2025 for a G05 position in the Assistant Executive Secretariat for Monitoring, Promotion and Technical Cooperation and a G06 position in the Administrative Management Section.

6. As for positions financed by specific funds, two positions were filled at the P02 level in the Case Sections, one P02 in the Office of the Executive Secretary and one P02 in the Monitoring Section III.

7. The reclassification processes for two positions at the Coordination level were completed: Initial Study and Admissibility and that of Precautionary and Provisional Measures. Audit processes were requested for two positions by a United Nations expert classifier in the Office of Administration and Institutional Affairs.

8. After conducting the performance evaluation process corresponding to the first mandate of the Executive Secretary, Tania Reneaum, on November 27, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights announced the renewal of said mandate, for an additional period of four years, until May 31, 2029. The renewal proposal was adopted in accordance with Article 11, paragraph 3, of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Commission, by an absolute majority of votes; and was submitted to the Secretary General of the OAS, Luis Almagro, who proceeded to the appointment for the new period, in terms of the provisions of Article 21 of the Statute of the Commission.

9. During 2024, the staff of the ES/IACHR continued to work in person on Tuesdays at the Washington, DC offices in accordance with the "Policy on Telework and Other Alternative Work Schemes of the GS/OAS".

A. Consultants, Interns, Trainees, Scholarship Holders and Associates

10. At the beginning of 2024, a standardization of payments to consultants was carried out in order to unify these procedures.

11. During the first half of the year, three call for resumes processes were completed for the selection of consultants in various areas, which has contributed to the strengthening of capacities and services within the Executive Secretariat of the IACHR.

12. As of June, a consultant was hired to provide style editing services from Spanish to English at the Assistant Executive Secretariat for Petitions and Cases, which has resulted in a reduction in the cost of these services for the ES/IACHR.

13. In October, a consultant was hired to provide organizational development services to conduct a study to review and define the basic staffing structure, which will enable the ES/IACHR to fulfill its mandate efficiently, with excellent performance and financially sustainable. The recommendations of this study are expected to be available by the end of April 2025.

14. During the period, the hiring of consultants to provide services to the different sections of the ES/IACHR continued. As of December 31, 2024, the ES/IACHR had 70 consultants.

15. In addition, three distance internship sessions were held, coordinated by the GS/OAS Department of Human Resources, in which a total of 77 interns joined the IACHR Executive Secretariat.

16. Through the support of different institutions, the ES/IACHR received 15 fellows who worked remotely or at headquarters during the year:

No.	Nationality	Fellowship	Assignment
1	Saint Vincent and the Grenadines	Fellowship for citizens from CARICOM countries	Monitoring Section III
2	Mexico	UNAM	Case Section I
3	United States	Fellowship for the Rapporteurship on the Rights of People of African Descent and against Racial Discrimination	Monitoring Section II

13	Trinidad y Tobago	Fellowship for the Rapporteurship on the Rights of LGBTI Persons	Monitoring Section II
14	Mexico	University of Coahuila	Monitoring Section I
15	Mexico	UNAM	Case Section I

17. In addition, thanks to the support of the following institutions, during 2024, the ES/IACHR received seven of its staff members as associate personnel:

No.	Institution	Assignment
1	Public Defender's Office of the State of Rio de Janeiro (Brazil)	Precautionary and Provisional Measures Section
2	Public Defender's Office of the Union of Brazil	Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA)

7	Public Ministry of Labor of Brazil	Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA)

B. Collectively developed work environment plan in the process of implementation

18. During 2024, various activities were carried out in the second year of the Co-Labora Program, Let's Build our Space. At the beginning of the year, informative sessions were held with the management team and the coordination teams to achieve a clear understanding of the objectives and key strategies based on the seven pillars of the new organizational vision established in 2023. At the same time, Executive Coaching and team alignment sessions were scheduled to establish a solid path for leadership and integration.

19. In April 2024, for the first time in the ES/IACHR, a hybrid integration session was held with the entire staff. During this event, strategic agreements were reached, reflecting the commitment to the pillars of transparency, trust and co-responsibility, which are essential for the new organizational culture.

20. A work environment survey was conducted in which 118 people participated. The study evaluated 12 key dimensions of the organizational climate, obtaining an average satisfaction rate of 73%.

21. Between April and September, team alignment sessions were held to strengthen trust and transparency in the workplace. These meetings made it possible to raise participants' awareness of the relevance of these values and to establish concrete agreements aimed at promoting actions to reinforce them. In addition, they focused on identifying and strengthening labor co-responsibility within each team, achieving 80% compliance with the commitments.

22. In May, the second management alignment session was held, aimed at strengthening team integration and addressing challenges related to labor welfare. In October, the first Coordination Alignment session was held, aimed at consolidating the team and optimizing personnel management. These workspaces facilitated the definition of both individual and collective commitments, with the aim of strengthening leadership at both levels and promoting a more collaborative and efficient organizational culture aligned with institutional values.

23. Throughout the year, the internal communication plan was continued through various initiatives, such as the dissemination of newsletters, quarterly meetings with all staff, biweekly meetings with the management team, periodic meetings with the coordination team and the creation of a virtual suggestion box accessible to all interested parties. The Open Door Policy continued to be implemented, providing staff with the opportunity to meet directly with the Executive Secretary to discuss issues of interest and foster an open and close dialogue.

24. In the second year of the program, we observed a reduction in the concerns expressed by the personnel, an increase in the transparency of communication, higher levels of trust between areas and collaborators, and a greater openness to feedback from the leaders. The qualitative results highlighted a high level of gratitude towards these spaces for listening and reflection, consolidating a more open, collaborative and development-oriented work culture.

II. FINANCIAL RESOURCES AND BUDGET EXECUTION

25. In June 2023, the General Assembly, during its 53rd regular session, approved a regular fund budget for the IACHR of $10,727,900 for the year 2024, of which $7,808,900 is for personnel expenses and $2,919,000 for operating expenses.

26. The General Assembly also approved an indirect cost recovery (ICR) fund budget for the IACHR of $128,000 for the year 2024, of which $85,400 corresponds to staff costs and $42,600 to operating expenses.

27. The following figure shows the distribution of the approved regular fund budget within the OAS for 2024. The IACHR was approved 12% of the annual amount.

(Amounts in thousands of US$) <sup>1</sup>

28. As of December 31, 2024, the modified appropriation from the original regular fund budget was $10,649,900, with a distribution of $7,435,957 for personnel expenses and $3,213,943 for non-personnel expenses. The portion corresponding to personnel expenses appears to be under-executed due to the fact that, during the year 2024, the ES/IACHR had several vacant positions which are still in the process of being filled. In turn, the portion corresponding to operating expenses appears with a higher amount than approved, since the Secretary General approved transfers (known as reinforcements) from the budget line for personnel expenses to the operating expenses line due to vacant positions. In addition, under this same line item, the GS/OAS Administration transferred $50,000 in accordance with the provisions of resolution II. 6 of AG/RES.3011 (LIII-O/23).

29. As of the same date, the indirect cost recovery fund budget allocation was $121,950, the distribution of which was $79,350 for personnel expenses and $42,600 for non-personnel expenses.

30. With regard to fundraising, as a result of the resource mobilization strategy and thanks to the trust placed in the IACHR, as of December 31, 2024, USD $11,319,789 had been raised. The following chart shows the distribution of funds received by the IACHR, by funding source.

<sup>1</sup> The distribution of the program budget for the period from January 1 to December 31, 2024, was approved by the General Assembly at its 53rd regular session in June 2023 through AG/RES.3011 (LIII-O/23).
The value indicated under Administration corresponds to the Secretariat of Administration and Finance (Chapter 11).

<sup>2</sup> The IACHR signed an assistance agreement with the United States for USD 14.2 million for the period between 2018 and 2024 and another agreement for USD 19.7 million for the period 2021 - 2026. Both agreements are implemented under the modality of sending disbursements against the financial execution of the project. The Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression has an allocation of USD 1.2M (direct costs) under the first agreement and USD 1.4M (direct costs) under the second agreement.

<sup>3</sup> Spain's contribution of USD $108,921 was received before December 31, 2023 but was pending with the Department of Financial Services (DFS), which is why it is included in the 2024 report.

<sup>4</sup> This report is by funding source and by Special Rapporteurships / sections within the IACHR.

- u. Project to strengthen the institutional capacity of the IACHR for the timely and efficient analysis of threats to the independence of powers and the rule of law. Submitted to the United States for $1,400,000 USD (Approved).
- v. REDESCA project to strengthen access to IACHR mechanisms for the protection of the environment and environmental defenders, especially those of historically marginalized groups submitted to the United States for US$220,000 (Approved).

IV. TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCES

38. With the innovation efforts made in three of the IACHR's core systems, GAIA, E-Vote and SIMORE Inter-American, during 2024, the Commission took a cutting-edge and innovative step, raising the bar for new technologies in the organization and advancing digital capabilities through robust implementations, ensuring that IT resources are used in a manner aligned with IT governance and the Commission's objectives, with clear parameters and a culture of continuous improvement, where each initiative was designed to bring tangible value and strengthen the growth of IACHR digital automation.

39. The IACHR, after a transformative change in the development of the first phase of the GAIA central system, experienced a stabilization phase in the use of the new and modern tool, which uses cutting-edge technologies and has allowed the Commission to carry out operational processes in a secure, stable and continuous manner. As a result of this implementation, 34,100 documents were successfully notified through the system, in a fully automated manner, without human intervention dedicated to the execution of this work, opening space to focus on activities of a substantial nature. Also, thanks to the implementation of the GAIA system, transparency, efficiency and speed in the processing of petitions, cases and precautionary measures were improved. For the first time, 3,327 procedures were carried out automatically, saving months of manual work by the staff of the ES/IACHR, updating the views of the users through the Individual Petitions System Portal, facilitating the reading of each file, reflecting the memorandum submitted to the IACHR, the decision adopted and the press releases in its two working languages (Spanish/English). This will ultimately contribute to the preservation of the procedural history of the petitions included in Resolution 1/22 and better management of the petitions submitted to the organization. During the year, the Commission's actions have been aligned with the shared vision of the Executive Secretary, highlighting the importance of closely following the development of new trends to maximize their positive impacts and minimize their possible adverse effects, noting that the structural and cultural changes promoted by the ES, together with innovative tools such as early warnings, will strengthen organizational transformation.

40. Following the stabilization of GAIA, a phase of maintenance, support and training began, aimed at the evolution of technologies in the IACHR, where recommendations and guidelines of the organization were applied in digital terms, integrating OAS information security tools. Also, in a joint coordination effort, the migration to a new tool for sending e-mails in the central systems was developed. Strategically, specific training sessions were developed and organized for each specialized work group that uses the system, reinforcing knowledge and best practices and presenting the new functionalities implemented over the course of the year, providing customized solutions that strengthened the specialists' skills in handling the tool. These system knowledge management activities have been comprehensive and effective, complemented by detailed technical documentation of the platform, which ensures transparency and accessibility for technical people who require it. Also, during this stage, 11 production implementations were carried out in GAIA, representing more than 30 redesigned functionalities and other new additions, which were focused on the continuous improvement of the central system, facilitating its use and optimizing the technical performance of the platform for the SE/ICIDH staff. At the same time, we worked on the requirements definition stage for phase 2 of the GAIA system, carrying out a requirements selection analysis exercise with the teams through work meetings, where a proposal was created that encompasses everything requested by the SE/IACHR for this new phase.

41. During 2024, the Inter-American SIMORE 2.0 proposal was launched, where 2 projects to improve the system were successfully completed, in response to feedback from member states and civil society. Ten basic requirements were structured, developed and deployed for the continuous refinement of the platform. A modification was made to make it easier to find the latest updates to the recommendations contained in SIMORE. A new functionality was also incorporated to allow users to upload documents when creating a new file. In addition, the uploading of reports from the External Persons Group Mechanism was enabled. Likewise, after strategic conversations with the team in charge of monitoring the tool, an Application Programming Interface (API) was built, which will allow SIMORE to connect with the NRTD (National Recommendations Tracking Database) system of the United Nations. In addition, reinforcing good practices and facilitating knowledge sharing, technical documentation material was created to summarize SIMORE's operation.

42. The E-Vote, created in 2020 as the key system for internal consultations with the Commission, was also part of the process of improvements made to the IACHR's central systems during this cycle. To keep the digital environment at the forefront of current demands, seven new requirements were analyzed, developed and implemented, resulting in new functionalities. In addition, a technical requirement was developed that is based on updating the platform at the technological level, maintaining the firm path towards a greater capacity for digital competence.

43. With the need to strengthen the Commission's capacity to contribute to the prevention of human rights violations in the Americas, with mechanisms to identify, process and analyze in a timely manner situations potentially threatening to democratic institutions and the rule of law, the Early Warning project is being developed. As part of this effort, rigorous analyses were conducted on various technological components for the implementation of this great system, oriented to the requirements, advice and digital recommendations, promoting the exchange of key information. Among the different engineering that will be unified, exhaustive research was conducted on different Application Programming Interfaces (API), Hardware and Software as the fundamental basis of this process, prioritizing high-performance equipment that is scalable, as part of the essential resources for the development and training of Machine Learning algorithms, which will support the system, certifying its efficiency and robustness, ensuring compliance with the high standards of governance, infrastructure and IT security of the organization. The infrastructure proposal was also reviewed and examined, complying with the defined requirements, and work continues on the acquisition of the tool to develop advanced machine learning and monitoring systems for the Commission.

44. During this period, the Commission made progress in multiple technological areas, reinforcing its purpose of safeguarding the dignity of individuals and promoting the strengthening of the rule of law in the digital sphere. The modernization of the platforms and technological planning of the 189th, 190th and 191st sessions (PS), deployed in a total of 15 days, according to their schedule, facilitated access to live transmissions of the PS, demonstrating the continuous digital adaptation, encouraging more active participation and generating as a result the broadcasting of 98 hearings on 25 countries. In addition, real-time translation, subtitling and sign language solutions were implemented for simultaneous transmissions, generating a significant impact on the inclusion and participation of a wider audience, enriching interaction, eliminating barriers, promoting audiences and events with equitable broadcasting, reinforcing our commitment as a Commission, providing accessible and diverse communication.

45. Through a collaborative digital tool, we achieved the automation and maximization of internal flows. We implemented a technological solution that modernized the process of managing civil society visa applications for sessions at headquarters, facilitating quick and organized access to provide important data and support them in managing the process and their face-to-face participation in the PS. This operational systematization was key to optimizing response times, reducing human errors, improving process accuracy and acted as a great digital resource for unifying information in a single system. In addition, a centralized technological tool was developed and implemented that significantly enhanced collaboration and information exchange within the ES/IACHR. When integrated with this digital collaborative tool, this allowed teams to interact and collaborate in an active and structured manner, mitigating data dispersion and improving communication between teams. This integration also promoted a more intuitive user experience by providing seamless navigation between documents, projects and work areas. In addition, it strengthened data security by managing access and permissions in a controlled manner, ensuring that information is available only to those who need it. Together, these platforms increased productivity and fostered a culture of open collaboration, aligned with the Commission's strategic objectives. By creating an online work environment with both platforms, a digital ecosystem accessible to everyone at the IACHR was consolidated.

46. The tool developed to manage the requirements of the central systems has been fundamental in optimizing the reception of the Secretariat's needs, becoming a strategic asset for the IACHR. The platform has evolved constantly, adapting to the productivity demands of users, facilitating the scalability of processes and enriching the management of operational flows. A total of 507 requests were handled in nine areas, consolidating its impact on the efficiency of IT resources. At the same time, the system for the logistics and administration of technological resources has transformed the response capacity throughout the organization, managing 281 requests in 25 areas and allowing us to address technological requirements in an agile manner. Both solutions, aligned with the integration of innovative advances, are continuously monitored to ensure optimal performance.

47. The constant improvement of technology within the ES/ICDH has been a strategic pillar in the process of modernizing the organization's IT equipment, consolidating a more efficient operating environment adapted to current demands. This approach allowed the progressive implementation of advanced solutions, refining resources and providing constant updating of the specialists' technical tools. Thanks to this transformative vision, the organization has not only strengthened its digital ecosystem, but also laid the foundations for greater agility, productivity and sustainability in its infrastructure.

48. With the responsibility towards the Portal's users, support was provided, attending to more than 9,175 queries on the use of the platform; notable growth was achieved with 3,913 new user subscriptions and six accounts activated by States; 55,785 additional information documents were processed in an automated manner through the system.

49. To facilitate access to information, increasing operational efficiency in the response times of the ES/IACHR, in line with the optimization in standardization and automation of processes, the following public announcements were uploaded through digital media: requests for Hearings and Meetings from the 189th to the 191st PS in four official languages; announcements of fellowships and consultancies on: Human Rights Consultant; Rapporteurship on the Rights of LGBTI Persons; Applications Systems Developer Consultant; Planning and Project Monitoring Consultant; Meetings with Civil Society - IACHR on-site visit to Guatemala; Meeting with Civil Society Organizations - Colombia; Course Registration Form; and Scholarship for the Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women.
