INTRODUCTION

1. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR), in compliance with its mandates and the provisions of Article 59 of its Rules of Procedure, presents its Annual Report, which compiles the work carried out comprehensively through its mechanisms and the most relevant results achieved by this principal body of the Organization of American States (OAS), from January 1 to December 31, 2024.

2. Like other regions, the Americas and the Caribbean face old and new challenges to democratic institutions and the rule of law. These include persistent structural discrimination against historically marginalized and exploited population groups, authoritarianism, restrictions on civil society activism, and even challenges to approaches to reparations, truth and justice for historical and egregious human rights violations.

3. The power and influence of organized criminal groups, with access to weapons, affect political processes, distort economies, threaten the land and livelihoods of communities, as well as the lives and safety of individuals. Governance institutions are overwhelmed, can be co-opted through corrupt practices and undermined by economic inequalities.

4. Disinformation and hate speech spread in the media and social networks contribute to extreme political polarization and affect consensus-building processes, which are essential for the guarantee and respect of human rights for all people.

5. Climate change is having a disproportionate impact on the small island developing states of the Caribbean, whose economies are severely affected by the increasing frequency and ferocity of hurricanes. Climate change increases inequalities between countries.

6. However, this is a region that faced dictatorships and civil wars during the 1970s and 1980s and built strong democracies during the 1990s and 2000s. States have strengthened their capacities and understanding of their commitments to uphold human rights, seeking fairer and more egalitarian societies.

7. Thanks to the decision of the Member States to strengthen the capacities of the principal bodies of the Inter-American Human Rights System, increasing their budgets, and to the commitment and dedication of the Commissioners, as well as the staff of its Executive Secretariat, led by Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum Panszi, the IACHR has been able to consolidate and strengthen its presence in the region through the attainment of outstanding achievements and results.

8. During 2024, the IACHR continued to implement its 2023-2027 Strategic Plan, which is developed through nine objectives and 34 strategic programs, with which it seeks to achieve substantive changes in the greater enjoyment of all human rights by all persons in the hemisphere -the Commission's ultimate goal- and to make an essential contribution to the inter-American public interest. As reported in this Annual Report, the IACHR has made significant progress in meeting the goals and objectives defined in this Strategic Plan.

9. Particularly noteworthy are the achievements in terms of overcoming the procedural backlog and offering the users of the Inter-American Human Rights System a more rapid and efficient response. Among other results detailed in Chapter II of this Annual Report are the initial study of 80.54% of the 2,883 petitions received, the approval of 133 admissibility reports (74 on admissibility and 59 on inadmissibility) and 121 reports on the merits, and the referral of 26 cases to the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

10. Also, in relation to the system of petitions and cases, there was a significant boost in the use and follow-up of cases in friendly settlements, with the signing of 19 new agreements and the homologation of another 13. Likewise, progress was made with the total fulfillment of 11 friendly settlement agreements and the implementation of measures in another 67.

11. Through the work of the petition and case system, the IACHR deepened and consolidated its jurisprudence, reinforcing the predictability and definition of clearer human rights standards, and achieving reparations for victims of human rights violations.

12. As part of the commitments of the Strategic Plan, the Commission made progress in the implementation of the prioritization policy approved in December 2023 through Resolution 4/23, to adequately and clearly manage pending matters, with a view to addressing the issues that so merit it in a more timely manner. During 2024, while continuing to advance chronologically in the study of matters, priority was given to those related to serious human rights violations, without prejudice to the other categories established in Resolution 4/23, which have allowed the IACHR to pronounce itself on situations that are circumstantial, structural and related to the inter-American public order. At the same time, priority has been given to urgent cases, such as those related to the international return of children and adolescents, and the possible imposition of the death penalty.

13. Regarding the precautionary measures mechanism, the Commission was able to guarantee at least one supervisory action in 100% of the precautionary measures in force, as well as to ensure that the reports sent by the parties are transferred in 100% of its portfolio of precautionary measures in force at least once a year. It also analyzed 94.83% of the 1,412 requests for precautionary measures received in the same year, granting and/or extending 77 precautionary measures through 73 resolutions, providing protection to more than 7,430 individuals and identifiable groups or collectives. The IACHR adopted 10 follow-up resolutions with respect to 11 precautionary measures in force and decided to completely lift 28 precautionary measures in force and partially lift one precautionary measure in force. It submitted one new request for provisional measures and two requests for extensions to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

14. It is worth highlighting the progress made in 2024 in the implementation of GAIA, the new central system for the processing of petitions, cases and precautionary measures. This software streamlines the Commission's internal processes. Thanks to GAIA, the IACHR has been able to take significant steps towards a more modern and efficient inter-American justice system.

15. The Commission continued to strengthen its work with the member states of the region in order to reinforce coordination in the measures it has adopted to overcome the procedural backlog. It held 17 meetings to review portfolios of petitions, cases, precautionary measures, friendly settlements and follow-up on recommendations related to 15 countries.

16. The IACHR continued to consolidate its timely and relevant monitoring of the human rights situation in the region by producing and enriching standards through the publication of three country reports on the human rights situation in Bolivia, Honduras and El Salvador, a compendium on "Comprehensive reparations with a gender perspective and transitional justice," and the study "Inter-American Standards on Freedom of Religion and Belief". It also issued 112 press releases and agile and timely positions in social media on relevant human rights situations in the region, and sent 88 requests for information to 35 States on human rights situations.

17. The IACHR observed the human rights situation in 12 countries by conducting two on-site visits to Colombia and Guatemala (April 15-19 and July 22-26, respectively), and 12 working, promotional and/or cooperation visits, namely: a working visit to Costa Rica from February 6 to 9; a promotional visit to Honduras from May 13 to 17; a promotional visit to Costa Rica from May 19 to 21; a working visit to Honduras from August 12 to 15; a virtual working visit to Colombia from September 3 to 11; a working visit to Chile from September 5 to 6; a working visit to Chile from September 5 to 7; a working visit to Bolivia from September 9 to 13; a working visit to Guatemala from September 12 to 16; a promotional visit to the Dominican Republic from October 1 to 5; a technical cooperation, promotion and follow-up visit to Barbados from October 8 to 11; and a technical cooperation, promotion and follow-up visit to Belize from October 15 to 18.

18. Among the innovations of the 2023-2027 Strategic Plan is the development of early warnings and preventive monitoring in the area of democratic institutions. Significant progress was made during 2024, laying the groundwork for the next phase of the project in 2025. Among the main achievements are: the methodological update and approval of reference documents, the development and implementation of technological tools, the development of the first working versions of predictive models and interpretability techniques and interfaces, and the integration and evaluation of data sources, as well as the identification of the required technological infrastructure and its compatibility with the OAS information technology rules.

19. In 2024, the IACHR continued with the implementation of the work plans of the follow-up mechanisms established with respect to Colombia, for the recommendations issued following the working visit to the country in June 2021; for Chile, regarding the recommendations of the Country Report issued in 2022, following the working visit to the country on the occasion of the social protests of late 2019 and early 2020, and regarding Bolivia, through the Roundtable for the Follow-up of the Implementation of the recommendations of the GIEI Bolivia (MESEG), on the recommendations issued in the Final Report of the GIEI-Bolivia. With regard to the Joint Follow-up Mechanism for Colombia, the continuity of the spaces for dialogue with civil society organizations, the holding of the public hearing “Follow-up to the recommendations on the investigation of human rights violations during the national strike” during the 190th Period of Sessions, and the progress made in the preparation of the second follow-up report on the 33 recommendations included in the Mechanism’s work plan are highlighted. With regard to the Joint Follow-up Mechanism on Recommendations for Chile (MESECH), the working visit to the country between March 18 and 20 and the progress in the preparation of the first follow-up report on the recommendations in the areas of i) progress on structural, institutional and regulatory reforms (with 32 recommendations); ii) investigation (with 13 recommendations, and iii) reparations (with 4 recommendations) are noteworthy. Regarding the MESEG, in 2024, one working visit was carried out (from July 1 to 5) and progress was made in the preparation of the Second Follow-up Report on the Recommendations of the GIEI Bolivia. In addition, regarding follow-up on recommendations, the importance of the high-level visit to Peru on August 12 and 13 is underlined. During 2024, the IACHR maintained its public presence and relevance in the region. In addition to conducting the abovementioned visits, it held three sessions (189th, 190th, and 191st) in a hybrid format, for a total of 98 public hearings.

20. During 2024, the IACHR maintained its public presence and relevance in the region. In addition to conducting the aforementioned visits, it held three sessions (189th, 190th and 191st) in hybrid format, with a total of 98 public hearings.

21. It is worth emphasizing the IACHR’s sustained outreach to the Caribbean countries, within the framework of the Strategy for the Caribbean, which is implemented as part of Program 17 of the Strategic Plan 2023-2027. Meetings were held with the group of Caribbean States in the framework of the sessions, working visits to Barbados and Belize, bilateral meetings with States, and training activities for officials, civil servants and representatives of civil society organizations from Caribbean countries.

22. The Commission continued to consolidate its promotion and training activities aimed at both officials of member states and civil society organizations, students and other social sectors. In 2024, the IACHR conducted 69 training activities and 210 promotional activities on the Inter-American Human Rights System in order to increase knowledge about the system, its mechanisms and standards, as well as about priority issues and rights. These activities reached 38,238 people, of whom 4,152 received training.

23. In the area of technical cooperation, the Commission formalized its partnership with different institutions through the signing of three new inter-institutional cooperation agreements in 2024 and the implementation of existing agreements. Also noteworthy are the efforts made to strengthen ties with National Human Rights Institutions (NHRIs).

24. The IACHR continued to strengthen its presence before the political bodies of the OAS, making 27 presentations to them in 2024, thus fulfilling its conventional mandate to advise the States.

25. Also noteworthy was the participation of the States in all the activities carried out by the Commission during the year, including public hearings, consultations, training workshops, bilateral and multilateral meetings, among others. Most of the States of the region participated in the hearings held during the three sessions. The IACHR also held regular meetings with regional groups of States during its sessions.

26. In 2024, the IACHR celebrated its 65th anniversary. Two commemorative events were held, with the participation of the States of the region: the first, during the 54th Regular Session of the OAS General Assembly in Asuncion, Paraguay; and the second, during the 190th Session, in Washington, D.C.

27. The participation of civil society in the activities carried out by the IACHR is also noteworthy. Numerous civil society organizations participated in the public hearings held during the 189th, 190th, and 191st sessions. A hybrid meeting was also held with civil society during the 189th session to learn about technological information systems for monitoring democratic institutions and issuing early warnings, and a virtual meeting was held with the RegionaR network to learn about its work agenda during the 190th session. The IACHR also held meetings with civil society organizations as part of the two on-site visits and the 12 working visits it conducted. It also held periodic meetings with civil society organizations in the framework of its rapporteurships and mechanisms for follow-up on recommendations, as well as with coalitions and networks of human rights organizations in the region.

28. The participation of States and civil society is essential for the IACHR to be able to fully comply with its mandate to promote and protect human rights. The IACHR values and thanks the States and civil society for their active collaboration.

29. The IACHR maintains its conviction to strengthen its ties of collaboration and respect with other international and regional human rights organizations. Under Program 30 of the Strategic Plan 2023-2027, during 2024 it maintained a strong relationship with the United Nations system, engaging in dialogue and cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). Of particular note was the meeting between Commissioner José Luis Caballero and Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum Panszi with the High Commissioner for Human Rights, Volker Turk, on June 19, in Geneva, the periodic meetings with representatives of the various regional and national offices of the OHCHR and the participation of its representatives in the hearings of the 189th, 190th and 191st sessions.

30. The IACHR also continued to promote collaboration with the United Nations Human Rights Council, including the participation of the President of the IACHR, Commissioner Roberta Clarke, in the high-level segment of the 55th session of the Council (February 26) and a meeting between Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum Panszi and the President of this body, on June 18 in Geneva. The IACHR also continued its practice of sending its contributions to the Universal Periodic Review, in this case to Nicaragua, Dominica, Uruguay, Bolivia and El Salvador. It also continued to collaborate with the working groups and special procedures of the United Nations Human Rights Council. It also held a meeting of the plenary of the IACHR with the chairpersons of the treaty bodies on May 30.

31. In 2024, the IACHR carried on deepening its ties with other regional bodies in 2024. Of particular note was the visit of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights to the IACHR headquarters from July 11 to 16, for the purpose of exchanging and discussing its mandates and mechanisms. Also noteworthy was the sixth inter-American human rights forum, organized jointly with the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. In addition, the IACHR hosted the annual meeting of focal points of regional human rights mechanisms on November 13 and 14.

32. The IACHR kept on increasing its efforts in the area of transparency, accountability and access to information. In this regard, it responded to more than 9,000 requests from users received through different channels and provided responses to 131 requests for access to information during 2024.

33. It is important to highlight the continuity of the Inter-American SIMORE, an online computer tool with more than 7,746 classified and systematized recommendations. In 2024, the publication of the "First booklet on SIMORE Inter-American: Report of measures by Honduras”, the first of a collection that seeks to make visible and encourage the use of this tool, stands out.

34. As part of the strategy to disseminate the various reports, themes and rapporteurships that the Commission works on, 21 digital campaigns were carried out to disseminate standards with a total of 2,447,132 impressions and 39,709 interactions on the IACHR's social media accounts. Throughout the year, the Commission generated and published 330 press releases; these addressed priority issues in the region, containing statements on alert situations and human rights violations, as well as recognition of good practices and institutional issues relevant to the fulfillment of the IACHR's mandate.

35. The achievements of the Special Rapporteurships for Freedom of Expression (RELE) and on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA) in 2024 should be highlighted, which are detailed in the respective annexed reports.

36. Mention should also be made of the continuity of the Co-Labora Program, Construyamos nuestro espacio, to improve the work environment and change the organizational culture. In the second year of the program, there was a reduction in the concerns expressed by the personnel, an increase in the transparency of communication, higher levels of trust between areas and collaborators, and greater openness to feedback from the leaders. The qualitative results highlighted a high level of gratitude towards these spaces for listening and reflection, consolidating a more open, collaborative and development-oriented work culture.

37. During 2024, public competitions continued to be held to fill 12 vacant positions: eight financed by the Regular Fund and four by specific funds.

38. The Commission continues to work to have an IACHR that is more transparent in its processes, more predictable in its objectives and goals, and planned and managed for concrete results. It will also continue to promote a management based on a posture of dialogue and a common disposition to solve problems, keeping in mind the interests of the victims, their families, and citizens, at the center of its attention and commitments.

39. The IACHR recognizes the inter-American human rights civil society, OAS Member States and observers, international and regional organizations, the Secretary General of the OAS, Luis Almagro and his team, as well as the team of its Executive Secretariat for all the support provided to achieve the accomplishments presented in this Annual Report. It is grateful to the States for strengthening the IACHR by maintaining the increase in the regular fund; and to the member countries, observers and donors whose voluntary contributions have been decisive in achieving the results presented: Canada, Costa Rica, Honduras, United States, Mexico, Panama, Peru, European Commission, Spain, France, Ireland, Italy, Monaco, Norway, Netherlands, Switzerland, Sweden, Arcus Foundation, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), Ford Foundation, New Venture Fund, and Pan American Development Foundation (PADF).

40. The IACHR dedicates its work to the memory of the victims and recognizes the leading role of civil society organizations and social movements in building societies that are more fair and respectful of human rights.

A. Progress Achieved

41. Pursuant to Article 59 of its Rules of Procedure, in Chapter IV.A of this report the Commission provides a descriptive overview of the human rights situation in the region, highlighting the main trends, progress, and challenges in the area of human rights based on the cross-cutting themes and topics prioritized in its Strategic Plan. Below, the Commission identifies the main progress observed in the member states in 2024. The actions referred to stand out for being aimed at promoting and protecting the human rights of individuals in accordance with the international obligations assumed by the States and contained in the American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, the American Convention on Human Rights, and other inter-American instruments on the subject.

42. The IACHR annually highlights a series of measures, policies, practices, and programs adopted by States in the Americas as examples of progress and/or best practices consistent with inter-American human rights standards. The information contained in this report is taken from the overview of the human rights situation in the countries referenced, which can be consulted in detail in Chapter IV.A of this report.

43. The measures identified in this section are classified into three groups. The first refers to cross-cutting and intersectoral issues that have a multidimensional impact on human rights protection guarantees. Within this group are those actions that the States have taken to strengthen democratic institutions, engagement, access to justice, citizen security, and efforts to combat torture, forced disappearance of persons, and violence. The second group refers to measures implemented by States to protect priority populations including those in vulnerable circumstances and those who have historically been victims of discrimination. Lastly, the third group includes actions taken to strengthen public policies in a number of areas that are strategic for human rights.

44. With regard to the progress made in strengthening democratic institutions, the IACHR recognizes the swearing in of the elected President and Vice President of the Republic of Guatemala as an achievement for democracy and respect for the will of Guatemalans freely expressed at the ballot box. It also highlights the new government's openness to international monitoring. In particular, it notes the invitation to the IACHR to conduct an on-site visit in July, as well as the commitment of the highest authorities to implement its recommendations and ensure the human rights of the population.

45. In Haiti, the Commission took note of the reappointment of the Prime Minister and the President of the High-Level Transition and Constitutional Council, as well as the appointment of the members of the Provisional Electoral Council, both necessary to hold elections. In addition, the Multinational Security Support Mission (MSS) has been deployed in the country since June to restore security. In Panama, the Commission notes the high level of participation of women in the voting stations during the general elections. It also acknowledges as positive the election of Mexico's first female President. In addition, the Plurinational Constitutional Tribunal of Bolivia ratified the prohibition of indefinite reelection in the executive branch. In the Dominican Republic, the Commission welcomes the constitutional reform and the increased participation of women in positions of public office. With regard to Colombia, the IACHR considers that the State has made progress in the areas of citizen security and democratic institutions, promoting the rights of Afro-descendants and indigenous people; it has taken steps under the Development Plan to transform territories with a low state presence; and it has passed the pension reform as part of a comprehensive response to the armed conflict and violence in the country. In Suriname, the Commission highlights the passage of the reform of the Electoral Regulation Act and the decision of the Constitutional Court on guarantee deposits for political parties.

46. In the area of anti-corruption, the Commission highlights the approval of the Whistleblower Protection Act in Trinidad and Tobago, as well as the creation of the Special Organised Crime Unit in the Guyana Police Force. The Commission continued to monitor the possible installation of an International Commission against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (CICIH) under the auspices of the United Nations. In Suriname, the Commission took note of the creation of an Anti-Corruption Commission and the enactment of an anti-corruption decree in 2023.

47. Regarding access to justice, a new Court Case Management System has been implemented in the Magistrates Courts of Barbados to modernize the justice system and reduce delays in the administration of justice. Likewise, the Commission highlights the regulatory changes to reduce the case backlog and delays in the High Court of Trinidad and Tobago. It also takes note of the laws on criminal procedure in Guyana aimed at speeding up proceedings, reducing the backlog in the courts, and lowering the number of people in pretrial detention.

48. With regard to the extension of the scope of justice services, offices of the Attorney General's Office were set up in the province of Darien, Panama, to assist individuals in migration contexts. Furthermore, three offices of the Victim Assistance Center, prosecutorial mediation centers, and working groups on violence against women were opened in the interior of Paraguay. In addition, a council was created to manage the resources of the Union's Public Defense Fund to enable the expansion of free comprehensive legal assistance services in Brazil's interior regions. Also notable is the Support for Indigenous Victims of Crime initiative to improve the availability of, and access to, culturally safe and informed victim services in Canada.

49. With respect to measures to strengthen the human rights institutional framework, the Commission welcomes the passage of the Ombudsman Act in the Bahamas, the primary function of which is the advancement and protection of all human rights. It also highlights the restructuring of the Office of the Ombudsman of Belize, including the expansion of its mandate to protect and promote human rights. It also commends the Ombudsman's Office of Paraguay on its "A" status rating from the Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI). The IACHR takes note of the proposal to strengthen the legal framework of the Panamanian Ombudsman's Office in accordance with international human rights standards and the UN Paris Principles. In Peru, the National Multisectoral Human Rights Policy 2040 (PNMD) was approved in a following participatory process; its aim is to address inequality and structural discrimination in the country. The Commission notes that in St. Kitts and Nevis an amendment was introduced to the Freedom of Information Act to allow the Ombudsman or Special Prosecutor to act as Information Commissioner; this, in an effort to increase transparency and improve operational and budgetary efficiency.

50. Regarding citizen security, Argentina reported on the continuation of training programs for security forces on human rights and prevention of institutional violence. In Bolivia, human rights training was provided to police, particularly on limits on the use of force under the law. In turn, the Police issued memorandum 17/2024 on ensuring the rights of LGBTI persons during police operations. With respect to Brazil, the State reported on the National Guidelines on the Use of Force by Public Security Agents. Colombia saw the entry into effect of the Public Policy and the Permanent Action Plan for dismantling criminal conduct or organizations that attack human rights defenders, members of grassroots movements, political movements, and persons involved in the implementation of the peace agreements and peace-building efforts. The State reported a decrease in the rate of homicides and other crimes against the civilian population. With respect to El Salvador, the IACHR has also noted a significant reduction in the homicide rate in that country. In addition, based on available information, it observes that in Dominica there has been a 44 percent drop in homicides over the last year, Jamaica has seen a decline in its homicide rate of around 17 percent.

51. The IACHR welcomes the creation in the United States of the Emerging Firearms Threats Task Force, which instructs federal agencies to develop and publish information on school safety protocols. In addition, the Department of Justice issued model legislation and guidelines for states to conduct more comprehensive background checks on individuals seeking to obtain firearms. In El Salvador, the Urban Centers for Welfare and Opportunities (CUBOs) have been set up to train and educate young people in areas previously under gang control, and the "Territorial Activation" program has been implemented, bringing the services of 15 state institutions closer to communities affected by gang violence.

52. Uruguay passed a law criminalizing cybercrime, including aggravating circumstances and specific protections for the most vulnerable victims. In addition, guidelines were prepared for dealing with sexual crimes against children and adolescents, as well as for incorporating a gender and sexual diversity approach.

53. With regard to the second group of actions for protecting priority and especially vulnerable populations, the Commission takes note of measures adopted to ensure the universal, indivisible, and interdependent nature of human rights, including the principles of equality and non-discrimination. Such measures seek to mitigate actions that may accentuate human rights violations against different individuals, groups and communities in the hemisphere.

54. With regard to human rights defenders, the Commission welcomes Colombia's ratification of the Escazú Agreement and its commitments to protect environmental defenders. Also noteworthy is the 85 percent increase in resources allocated to the implementation of the Program for Protection of Human Rights Defenders (PPDDH) in Brazil. In addition, the regional technical teams were expanded and a headquarters set up in Porto Seguro, Bahia, strengthening the program's coverage in the south of the state. The IACHR also welcomes the actions aimed at strengthening the Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and Journalists in Mexico, including increasing its budget and staff. It also noted the identification of more than 20,000 missing persons. The approval of the Protocol for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders in Chile, which seeks to strengthen the State's response and establish protection measures for those who face risks or threats to their fundamental rights due to their work as rights defenders is also recognized. For its part, Guatemala reported having resumed the development of its Public Policy for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders. It also announced that two sections of the Specialized Criminal Investigation Division (DECI) had been given the function of investigating, advising and reporting on crimes against the lives and integrity of human rights defenders. In this regard, the IACHR recognizes Honduras' efforts to strengthen the National Protection Mechanism through human rights training for public officials.

55. In relation to the situation of the rights of indigenous peoples in Brazil, the IACHR highlights the actions taken to combat racial discrimination against Quilombola communities and recognize their territories. It also notes the approval by the Amnesty Commission of the Ministry of Human Rights and Citizenship—for the first time since its creation—of a request for collective reparations for serious violations of the rights of indigenous communities during the military regime (1964–1985), which included massacres, torture, and forced displacement. In addition, the State took steps to contain and remove squatters and garimpeiros (illegal gold miners) from the Yanomami Amazon reserve, reinforcing the protection of this indigenous territory. With respect to Canada, the Commission welcomes the launch of the Indigenous Victims of Crime Support initiative, as well as information regarding the availability of funds to improve access to justice for indigenous and “racialized” communities in British Columbia. In Colombia, a decree granted indigenous authorities powers over environmental matters within their territories. The Commission also highlights the restitution, in compliance with court orders, of at least 55,000 hectares of land to indigenous communities in the departments of La Guajira, Cauca, Valle del Cauca, Chocó, and Antioquia. Similarly, land titles were granted to seven indigenous communities in Guyana.

56. With respect to Guatemala, the Commission takes note of actions to ensure access to water, housing and education by the Guatemalan Indigenous Development Fund (FODIGUA), in addition to projects on intercultural education, sustainable agriculture, and access to potable water and health services for these communities. In addition, the Commission takes note of the curriculum designed for the Initial Training Program for Aspiring Lower Court Judges, which, among other things, prioritizes training in human rights of indigenous peoples. The Commission welcomes the creation of the National Council of Indigenous Peoples of Mexico as a participatory body enabling engagement between those peoples and the executive branch for public policy design and implementation. It also highlights the constitutional recognition of indigenous and Afro-Mexican peoples as subjects of public law, including legal personality and their own heritage, following the reform of Article 2 of the Constitution.

57. Regarding Honduras, mention should be made of the creation of the “First National Plan to Safeguard Indigenous and Afro-Honduran Languages,” which seeks, through joint actions with these communities, to revitalize and preserve their linguistic wealth. The adoption of an early warning protocol to address risks to the rights of peoples in voluntary isolation in Ecuador is also noteworthy. In addition, El Salvador has set up the Observatory of Violence against Indigenous Women, a civil society initiative run by women indigenous leaders to raise awareness and highlight cases of violence. In Suriname, the Commission welcomes the judicial decision on the State's obligation to undertake free, prior, and informed consultation with indigenous and tribal peoples before allowing economic activities in their territories.

58. With respect to women's rights, and in relation to the measures adopted by States to eradicate all types of violence, Brazil has defined the crime of femicide as an autonomous offense and amended regulations to ensure that priority and adequate assistance is provided by the health care systems and law enforcement to women in situations of domestic and family violence. It also launched the Plan of Action of the National Pact for the Prevention of Femicide. In Chile, regulations were adopted on prevention, punishment and eradication of gender-based violence against women that recognize such forms as vicarious, symbolic, and gynecological-obstetric violence. A follow-up mechanism was also established to ensure compliance with measures ordered in favor of the victims.

59. For its part, the IACHR welcomes the approval of the National Gender Policy 2024-2030 in Belize, which addresses different areas, including health, education, employment, prevention of gender-based violence, and female participation in decision-making positions. In Canada, the IACHR welcomes the continuation and/or adoption of new measures to ensure sexual and reproductive rights. With regard to attention to gender violence, Costa Rica has relaunched its 1125 hotline, which provides free legal, psychological, and social assistance to women. In Ecuador, the State enacted the Law of Containment, Accompaniment, and Transformative and Integral Reparation for Daughters, Sons, Mothers, Fathers and other Relatives of Victims of Femicide and other Gender-Based Violent Deaths; it also enacted the Organic Law on Equal Pay for Women and Men. As for the United States, the IACHR values the measures announced at the federal level to improve care and protection for victims of gender-based violence, through the allocation of new funds for the care of survivors; addressing violence in the digital sphere and artificial intelligence; curbs on access to weapons by aggressors, and other measures.

60. In Guatemala, the reactivation of the National Coordinator for the Prevention of Domestic Violence and Violence against Women in Guatemala and the creation of the Interagency Commission against Sexual Violence which will make decisions on prevention, comprehensive care, justice, and reparations for victims, are noteworthy. In Guyana, the IACHR highlights the increase in female representation in the judiciary. According to information provided by the State, 8 new female judges were appointed in June, bringing women's overall representation in the judicial branch to 70 percent. In addition, the Commission welcomed the enactment of the Law on Domestic Violence, which strengthens protection for victims of violence in domestic or intimate partner contexts. It also highlights the creation of the Secretariat for Women in Mexico, as well as the constitutional reform on the substantive equality of women, gender perspective, and the right of women to a life free of violence.

61. The IACHR also welcomes the approval of the Shelter Law in Honduras for women violence survivors. In El Salvador, the IACHR values the measures adopted to promote gender equality in the economic sphere, such as the reform of the Law Creating the Solidarity Fund for the Microentrepreneurial Family and the creation of the Interagency Care Commission to implement the National Policy of Co-responsibility for Care. In Panama, the IACHR highlights the criminal law reforms aimed at punishing sexual violence online, as well as the approval of the National Plan against Sexual Exploitation 2024-2028. Likewise, it highlights the approval of the law institutionalizing the National Care System and establishing the right to receive and provide care under equal conditions; the updating of the Public Policy on Equal Opportunities for Women 2024-2034; and actions to promote women's political participation. In Peru, a working group was created to strengthen attention to cases of femicide and attempted femicide at Women's Emergency Centers, as was a working group for the promotion and protection of the rights of women sex workers. In addition, a working group and pilot plan for the coordination of sectoral interventions in the area of care were set up with the aim of improving conditions for caregivers.

62. The Commission notes the recent amendments to Jamaica's Domestic Violence Act, which have broadened the categories of individuals who may apply for a protection order. The Commission also appreciates the creation of a working group on gender-based violence in St. Vincent and the Grenadines whose objective is to support coordination among providers of essential services for dealing with gender-based violence. In the same vein, Dominica has developed a National Action Plan against Domestic Violence to ensure that frontline service providers, including the police, judiciary, and civil society, are fully aware of the provisions of the updated Domestic Violence Act.

63. With respect to the Dominican Republic, the IACHR takes note of the creation of 14 Comprehensive Care Units for Victims of Domestic Violence and Sexual Crimes (UVGs) and the implementation of the National School for Equality for gender mainstreaming in the public, private, and community sectors. It also welcomes the increased representation of women in public office. Likewise, it highlights that Trinidad and Tobago launched the National Strategic Action Plan on Gender-Based Violence and Sexual Violence (2023-2027), which establishes a comprehensive framework aimed to prevent and respond to all forms of gender-based violence, as well as the Survivor Transformation and Empowerment Programme, which is designed to provide essential life skills, educational opportunities, and business training to women who have suffered gender-based violence.

64. With respect to measures to protect the rights of people experiencing human mobility, including migrants, refugees, internally displaced persons, stateless persons, and victims of trafficking, Argentina adopted a special migration regularization regime for Venezuelan nationals. The IACHR also recognizes that Brazil approved an amendment to the Migration Law that expands legal protections, facilitating access to the labor market and education for refugees and migrants, especially those in situations of socioeconomic vulnerability. It also notes that in Chile the Second Chamber of the Supreme Court voided an expulsion order against a Venezuelan citizen with family roots in the country, setting an important precedent in the protection of the rights of migrants. In Ecuador, the granting of an immigration amnesty and the establishment of a special regularization process for Venezuelan nationals and their families are notable. The Commission also welcomes the decision of Mexico's Supreme Court ordering the creation of a registry of detained migrants.

65. Measures worth highlighting in Canada include the Temporary Foreign Worker Program (TFWP) to protect migrant workers. Furthermore, with respect to prevention of statelessness, the Ontario Superior Court of Justice declared that the first-generation limit for foreign-born individuals is unconstitutional. For its part, Colombia created the Special Permit to Stay for Legal Representatives or Guardians of Children and Adolescents for Venezuelan nationals responsible for minors with temporary protection permits issued before December 31, 2023. The IACHR also takes note of the Comprehensive Migration Policy 2024-2034 in Costa Rica and the adoption of Executive Decree 44.501, which incorporated protection against the refoulement of asylum seekers. The IACHR takes note of the presentation of the National Reintegration Plan (2024-2025) in Honduras, which incorporates actions that will allow returnees to re-establish economic, social, and psychosocial ties in order to preserve their lives and livelihoods, as well as to contribute to the sustainable development of their communities. The IACHR also notes the presentation of three community and family guides prepared by the Ministry of Social Development of Panama and welcomes the approval of the Protocol for the Identification and Care of Unaccompanied and/or Separated Children and Adolescents in mobility contexts.

66. In the area of statelessness, the Commission noted the Dominican Republic's efforts to restore the nationality of at least 26,000 persons, as well as the naturalization of another 799 persons affected by Constitutional Court ruling TC/0168/13, which resulted in hundreds of thousands of persons being arbitrarily stripped of Dominican nationality and rendered stateless those not considered nationals of another State. In Peru, a law was passed that extends the temporary coverage of the Comprehensive Health Insurance to migrants and refugees living with HIV or diagnosed with tuberculosis without the need for official residency documentation. The Commission notes the amendment to the Immigration Act and the passage of the Anti-Smuggling of Migrants Bill in St. Kitts and Nevis. In Uruguay, a pilot plan was approved that will recognize prima facie refugee status for Venezuelan asylum seekers, prioritizing those at risk or with specific needs, such as families with children, gender violence survivors, people with disabilities, the elderly, and the economically vulnerable. The IACHR also welcomes the Trinidad and Tobago's decision to extend the work permit exemption for Venezuelan nationals.

67. With regard to trafficking in persons, the Commission notes that in Bolivia, the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Human Smuggling reactivated the technical commission in the area of criminal prosecution for human trafficking, which seeks to strengthen coordination among council members on prevention and investigation. With respect to Canada, the Committee takes note of the entry into force of the Fighting Against Forced Labour and Child Labour in Supply Chains Act, which includes amendments to the Customs Tariff. The State of Ecuador created the Mechanism for the Detection and Referral of Cases of Trafficking in Persons for Labor Exploitation which is designed to enable labor inspectors and public servants to act in a comprehensive and coordinated manner in dealing with such cases. In the United States, the House of Representatives passed the Human Trafficking Detection Improvement Act, which is designed to provide Department of Labor personnel with tools and resources to identify, prevent and prosecute cases of exploitation. Furthermore, the Commission welcomes the steps taken in Jamaica to protect children from child trafficking, including the establishment of a national referral mechanism to interview child victims and witnesses with a child-friendly approach to avoid re-victimization of child victims. In Guyana, the Combating of Trafficking in Persons Act 2023, which aims to comprehensively address this scourge, came into force. The Commission takes note of the signing of the Framework Collaboration Agreement between public entities of the Dominican Republic to strengthen assistance to Dominicans identified as victims of human trafficking abroad upon their return to the country. In Uruguay, the Interagency Action Guide for Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons was approved; it introduces specific procedures for effective detection and coordination between agencies in such cases.

68. With regard to the rights of children and adolescents, the IACHR welcomes the Child Protection Act passed in Barbados and the reestablishment of the National Child Labour Committee. In Brazil, the adoption of Laws 14.811 and 15.032 introduced measures against violence in schools and child sexual abuse, in addition to earmarking public funds for anti-child abuse policies. In Canada, the Commission takes note of the Online Harms Act, aimed at holding digital platforms liable for harmful content. The Commission welcomes the adoption of the Law on Prevention, Early Detection, and Response to Violence against Children and Adolescents in Costa Rica, which is aimed at generating measures for prevention and early detection of all forms of violence against children; it also applauds the National Policy for Children and Adolescents 2024-2036, which was drawn up with input from children and adolescents. In Chile, the new Policy on Children and Adolescents was approved, together with its Action Plan 2024-2032, prioritizing the comprehensive wellbeing of children and adolescents.

69. The IACHR takes note of the launch of the Crime Prevention Programs for children and adolescents in Guatemala and highlights the launch of the plan for the prevention and response to violence against children. The Commission welcomes the introduction of the International Measures for the Protection of Children (Hague Convention) Bill (2024) in Guyana, which aims to strengthen child safety in the country. The IACHR also hails the adoption of the law creating the National Children's Congress in Honduras. In addition, it values the amendment of Article 58 of the General Law on Tourism in Mexico, which aims to combat the sexual exploitation of children.

70. The IACHR welcomes the creation of a commission to evaluate the functioning and operation of the special protection system for children and adolescents in the Dominican Republic. Likewise, it highlights the adoption of a national education policy and the formation of multidisciplinary working groups to ensure high-quality, inclusive education in Suriname. It also notes that in Uruguay, the State enacted the Law on Guarantees for Early Childhood and Adolescence and created the Uruguay Amber Alert system to ensure a rapid community response to the abduction of minors.

71. Regarding the rights of persons deprived of liberty, the IACHR appreciates Mexico's efforts to guarantee the right to vote for persons in pretrial detention. For its part, Chile implemented measures under the Prison Infrastructure Master Plan with the aim of increasing the holding capacity of the system, including holding tenders for infrastructure maintenance and the construction of new facilities. In Uruguay improvements were also made in women's prison conditions, including the construction of new housing facilities and a specific unit for trans women. The Commission welcomes the approval of immigration detention center regulations in the Bahamas which establish standards for the administration of detention centers with a human-rights approach. It also highlights the implementation of a prison census of 29,000 people in Bolivia and social reintegration programs for women. The efforts in that regard in Saint Lucia, through the Community Reentry Program, are also noteworthy. As regards Guyana, the Commission takes note of efforts to improve the infrastructure of the prisons of New Amsterdam, Lusignan and Mazaruni, in order to provide better environments for the rehabilitation and security of inmates. Paraguay inaugurated the Minga Guazú penitentiary center with the aim of promoting reintegration and reducing overcrowding. The Commission welcomes "LinkUp" program in Trinidad and Tobago, a collaborative initiative between the College of Science, Technology and Applied Arts of Trinidad and Tobago (COSTAATT) Regency Recruitment and Resources Limited to support inmates' transition into society and the workforce, in which private companies have committed to supporting inmates by providing on-the-job training.

72. In the area of combating torture, the Commission welcomed the ratification by Honduras of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture and the creation of the National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture and Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, while Colombia ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Commission also welcomed the judgment of the Supreme Court of Grenada declaring corporal punishment by flogging or whipping unconstitutional.

73. As for measures to protect the human rights of people of African descent and combat racial discrimination, the Commission highlights the efforts of the Barbados to move forward with a reparations program linked to the era of slavery. Canada adopted the Anti-Racism Strategy 2024-2028. Brazil and Colombia made progress on a binational program on Afro-descendent Peoples of the Americas, which seeks to strengthen their role as guardians of biodiversity and promote their access to cooperation funds for projects in this area. In addition, Brazil demarcated and titled land for more than 19 Quilombola communities and promoted a reparations agenda with the Portuguese government for damages caused during the time of slavery. As part of the implementation of Law 21.151, the State of Chile enacted regulations on prior consultation for the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people. In addition, Chile and El Salvador included a self-identification question for Afro-descendants in the Population and Housing Census. In the United States, the State of California allocated a budget of US$12 million for reparations to address historical “harms and atrocities” against the black population. This decision marks an important milestone in recognizing and atoning for the legacy of systemic racism.

74. The State of Mexico reformed the Federal Law to Prevent and Eliminate Discrimination, identifying indigenous and Afro-Mexican peoples and communities as priority groups for affirmative action. In addition, it created the National Council of Indigenous Peoples as a body for participation, consultation, and defense of the rights of those communities, including representation by indigenous and Afro-Mexican advisors. For its part, the Peruvian Congress approved a constitutional reform recognizing Afro-Peruvian people and made progress in the implementation of the National Policy for Afro-Peruvian People 2030 (PNPA). In Uruguay, the National Plan for Racial Equity and Afro-descendants was unveiled, and the Observatory for Monitoring the Implementation of Affirmative-Action Measures for People of African Descent was created. In Honduras, the Afro-descendant Intangible Cultural Heritage Safeguarding Project was implemented, which focuses on protecting heritage and implementing countermeasures against racism and racial discrimination.

75. On the rights of LGBTI people, the Commission noted the judgment of Federal Criminal Court No. 1 of La Plata, Argentina that recognized the systemic nature of persecution and repression of trans women and convicted 11 people for crimes against humanity committed during the last military dictatorship in which 8 of the victims of those crimes were trans women. The Commission also took note of the first LGBTI pride march in the Bahamas. In Brazil, the Federal Supreme Court unanimously ratified the decision that the Unified Health System (SUS) should modify its platforms so that trans people can access consultations, examinations, and procedures according to their specific needs; in addition, the Committee for the Follow-up of the National Strategy to Combat Violence against LGBTQIA People was established. In Ecuador, the State set up the Interagency Panel on the Diversity Action Plan. The Commission welcomed the judgment of the High Court of Dominica declaring Sections 14 and 16 of the Sexual Offences Act, which prohibit “gross indecency” and “sodomy,” respectively, to be unconstitutional and void. The IACHR highlights the jurisprudential advances in the recognition of “transfeminicide” by the Supreme Court of Justice Mexico. The Constitutional Court of Peru ordered the rectification of the registered sex for an intersex person. The National Registry of Persons of Honduras announced the implementation of processes to allow the rectification of official documents, in accordance with the judgment of the Inter-American Court in the Vicky Hernandez case.

76. With regard to the rights of persons with disabilities, the Commission acknowledges Saint Lucia’s signing of the Inter-American Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities. Also, it welcomes the adoption of the declaration on global action for the rights of persons with disabilities deprived of their liberty for institutional strengthening, as well as the networking effort launched by a number of States in the hemisphere. This declaration calls for strengthening protection for the rights of incarcerated persons with disabilities and the exchange of good practices, knowledge, experiences, and challenges. Progress has also been made in Costa Rica's National Survey on Disability, which includes disaggregated data and the creation of an updated registry on the situation of this population, facilitating the formulation of policies and laws. The IACHR also welcomes the creation of the National Registration System for People with Autism Spectrum Disorder, which simplifies the issuance of credentials to facilitate access to public policies for people in Brazil. Also noteworthy is the approval of Law 31781, which strengthens care for elderly persons with disabilities in situations of family neglect or at risk of social exclusion in Peru with measures to ensure their health, safety, education, work, and participation, among other rights, with an equality and non-discrimination perspective. It is also worth mentioning initiatives to strengthen access to justice for people with disabilities by Argentina's National Registry of Communication Facilitators.

77. Regarding the rights of older persons, the IACHR welcomes the ratification by Belize of the Inter-American Convention on Protecting the Human Rights of Older Persons. For its part, the State of Chile made progress in the implementation of its Chile Cuida National System of Support and Care (SNAC), which has led to the opening of 20 new community day centers for the elderly. The Commission welcomes the presentation of the public policy "For Healthy Aging" in Panama, and the enactment of Law 423 establishing free health care services in the public system for economically deprived older persons.

78. The Commission also welcomes the implementation of the Activando Abuelos program, led by the National Directorate for Integration of El Salvador, through which paid internships are offered to people over 60. Also positive is the constitutional recognition of the right to a universal non-contributory pension for all senior citizens and the publication of a guide to an inclusive care model in Mexico, as is the Pension Program for the Wellbeing of the Elderly, which provided pensions to more than one million people residing in indigenous or Afro-Mexican municipalities or localities. The Commission also welcomes the creation of the Royalties for All program by Suriname to distribute profits from the country's energy sector, with a priority on the elderly and people with disabilities.

79. Finally, with regard to the third group of measures, the Commission highlights measures taken to advance memory, truth and justice policies and practices in the region. One example is the enactment in Colombia of Law 2364 of 2024, which recognizes and comprehensively protects the work and rights of women and persons searching for victims of forced disappearance. Another example is the compensation provided to at least 853 victims of political violence during the dictatorship in Bolivia and the creation of the Interagency Special Review Commission to reassess more than 4,000 reparations claims. The creation of the National Institute of Historical Memory in Honduras is also welcomed, as is the announcement of the expropriation of land for the construction of memorial sites in Chile. Also noteworthy is the conviction of a former police commissioner for acts of torture during the military dictatorship in Paraguay by that country's by the Court of Criminal Appeals, as well as the creation in the National Archive of Uruguay of a section to collect, organize, and preserve documents relating to the recent past and human rights violations.

80. In Mexico, the IACHR welcomes the amendment to the General Law on Disappearances incorporating the right to memory and the designation of the basement of the headquarters of the former Federal Security Directorate, where torture and other serious human rights violations were committed between 1960 and 1990, as a memorial site. It also values the decision of the Supreme Court that determined that the application of the statute of limitations, atypicality, and non-retroactivity to the investigation of crimes against humanity committed during the so-called "dirty war" contravenes the rights to truth and access to justice. The IACHR also notes that the Mechanism for Truth and Historical Clarification (MEH), published its Final Report entitled "It was the State (1965-1990)," which recognized 8,594 victims of serious human rights violations.

81. The IACHR notes that El Salvador strengthened the Investigation Unit for Crimes Committed During the Armed Conflict, under the Attorney General's Office, which led to the identification and arrest of senior military commanders involved in different cases, including the Massacre of El Calabozo, Dutch Journalists, and the Massacre of the Universidad Centroamericana José Simeón Cañas. In that connection, the IACHR notes that in August 2024, a Salvadoran court began the trial of five members of the armed forces for the murder of four Dutch journalists during the armed conflict in the country. In Brazil, the State reported the reinstatement of the Special Commission for Political Murders and Disappearances to search for people killed and disappeared for political reasons during the military dictatorship. The country also announced a plan to resume the search for and identification of the victims of the Araguaia guerrilla group. In Peru, the Commission welcomes the adoption of the Amended Consolidated Text of Legislative Decree 1428 on Strengthening the Missing Persons Search System and its Implementing Regulations.

82. In conclusion, the Commission observed noteworthy efforts by States to develop policies, practices, and legislative and judicial measures to advance the promotion and effective protection of the human rights of their inhabitants. It acknowledges these efforts and urges the States to continue to formulate and implement the human rights approach in public policies in response to recommendations by the bodies of the inter-American human rights system and to disseminate this approach in all State institutions and in society as a whole. The Commission places itself at the disposal of the States to provide the technical assistance required to achieve these goals.

2. Progress made with the Ratification and Signature of Instruments of the Inter-American System in 2024

85. The IACHR has stressed the importance of universal ratification of the instruments of the inter-American system as a critical element in ensuring full respect for and guaranteeing human rights in the Americas.

86. The Inter-American Commission applauds the states of Saint Lucia, Honduras, Ecuador and Belize for their adhesion to the international instruments for the protection of human rights identified below, in chronological order.

87. On June 28, 2024, Saint Lucia signed the Inter-American Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities.

88. On July 23, 2024, Honduras deposited the instrument of ratification of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

89. On August 5, 2024, Ecuador deposited the instrument of ratification of the Inter-American Convention against All Forms of Discrimination and Intolerance.

90. On December 16, 2024, Belize deposited the instrument of accession to the Inter-American Convention on the Protection of the Human Rights of Older Persons.

C. Origin, legal basis, structures, purposes and mandates

91. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights ("IACHR" or "Inter-American Commission") is an autonomous organ of the Organization of American States (OAS), headquartered in Washington, D.C. Its mandate is established in the OAS Charter, the American Convention on Human Rights ("American Convention") and its Statute. The IACHR is one of two organs of the Inter-American system responsible for the promotion and protection of human rights; the other is the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, based in San José, Costa Rica.

92. The IACHR is composed of seven members who act independently, without representing any country. Its members are elected by the OAS General Assembly for a four-year term and may be reelected once. The Inter-American Commission meets in regular and special sessions several times a year. The Executive Secretariat, in accordance with Article 13 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR, carries out the tasks delegated to it by the IACHR and provides the latter with legal and administrative support in the performance of its functions.

93. In April 1948, the OAS adopted in Bogotá, Colombia, the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man ("American Declaration"), the first general international human rights instrument. The IACHR was created in 1959 and held its first session in 1960.

94. In 1961, the IACHR began making visits to various countries to observe the human rights situation in situ. Since then, it has conducted numerous visits to the Organization's Member States. Partly on the basis of these on-site investigations, the Inter-American Commission has published 135 country and thematic reports to date.

95. In 1965, the IACHR was expressly authorized to examine complaints or petitions related to specific cases of human rights violations. The final reports published by the IACHR, in relation to these individual cases, can be found in the Annual Reports of the Inter-American Commission and are also available on the IACHR website, in the section on petitions and cases.

96. The American Convention on Human Rights was adopted in 1969 and entered into force in 1978. As of December 2024, 24 Member States are party to this treaty: Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay and Venezuela.

97. The American Convention defines the human rights that States agree to respect and guarantee by virtue of ratification. It also created the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and defined the functions and procedures of the IACHR and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. In addition to considering complaints alleging responsibility for violations of the American Convention with respect to States parties to that instrument, the IACHR is competent, under the OAS Charter and its Statute, to examine alleged violations of the American Declaration by OAS Member States that are not yet parties to the American Convention.

98. In compliance with its mandate, the Inter-American Commission:

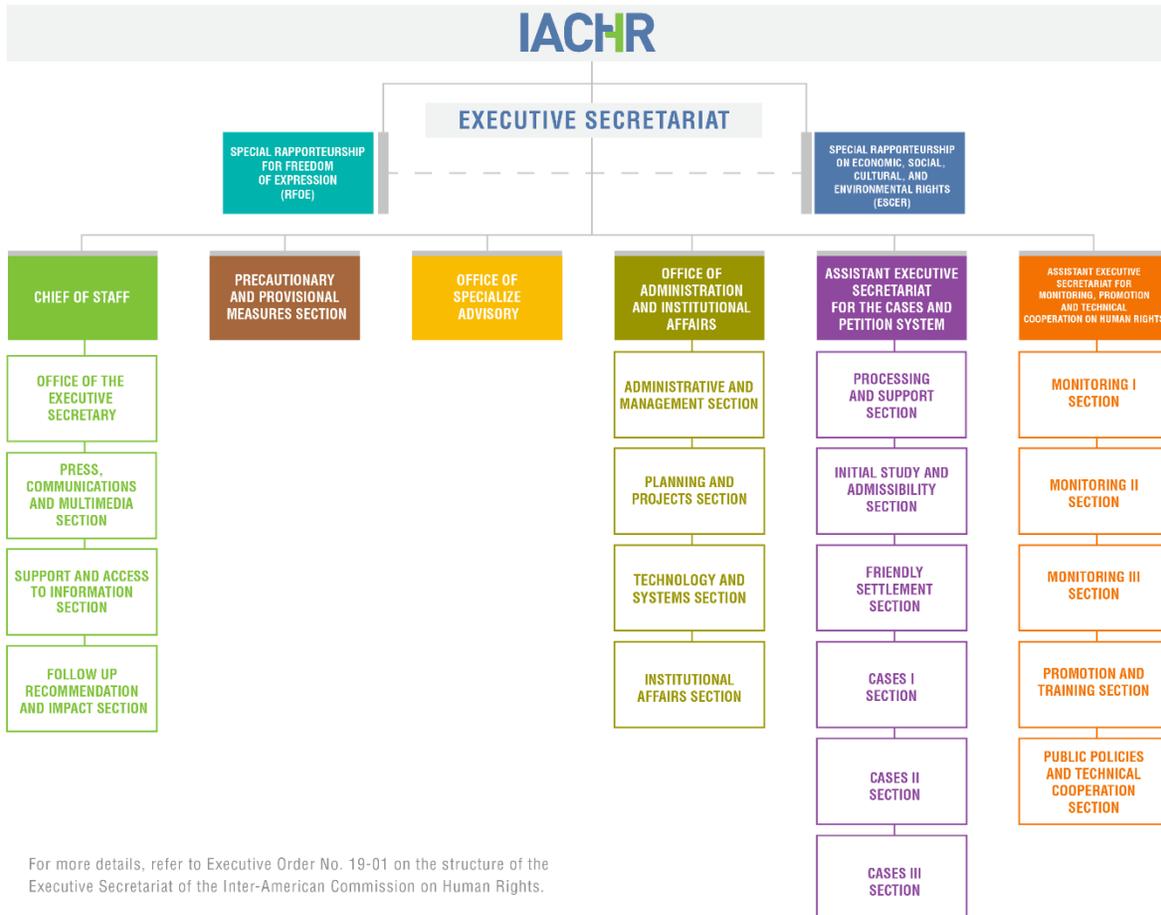

- a) Receives, analyzes and investigates individual petitions alleging human rights violations, in accordance with Articles 44 to 51 of the American Convention, Articles 19 and 20 of its Statute and Articles 23 to 52 of its Rules of Procedure.
- b) Observes the general human rights situation in Member States and issues special reports on the situation in a particular Member State when it considers it appropriate in accordance with Rule 60 of its Rules of Procedure.
- c) Conducts on-site visits to countries to conduct in-depth analyses of the general situation and/or to investigate a specific situation in accordance with Article 18 of its Statute and Article 53 of its Rules of Procedure. In general, these visits result in the preparation of a report on the human rights situation of the country in question, which is published and submitted to the Permanent Council and the OAS General Assembly.
- d) Stimulates public awareness of human rights in the Americas. To this end, the Inter-American Commission conducts and publishes studies on specific topics in accordance with Article 15 of its Rules of Procedure, such as the measures to be adopted to ensure greater access to justice; the effects of internal armed conflicts on certain groups of people; the human rights situation of children, women, LGBTI persons, people on the move, including migrants, refugees, asylum seekers, internally displaced persons and victims of human trafficking, persons deprived of liberty, human rights defenders, indigenous peoples and Afro-descendants, racial discrimination, freedom of expression, and economic, social, cultural and environmental rights.
- e) Organizes and holds visits, conferences, seminars and meetings with representatives of governments, academic institutions, non-governmental entities and others, to disseminate information and promote broad knowledge of the work of the inter-American human rights system in accordance with the provisions of Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 18 of its Statute.

- f) Recommends to the OAS member states the adoption of measures that contribute to the protection of human rights in the countries of the Hemisphere in accordance with the provisions of Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 18 of its Statute.
- g) It requests Member States to adopt precautionary measures in accordance with the provisions of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, to prevent irreparable harm to human rights in serious and urgent cases. Likewise, in accordance with the provisions of Article 76 of its Rules of Procedure, it may request that the Inter-American Court order the adoption of provisional measures in cases of extreme gravity and urgency to prevent irreparable harm to persons.
- h) Submits cases to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and appears before the Court during its processing and consideration in accordance with the provisions of Article 61 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Articles 45 and 74 of its Rules of Procedure.
- i) It requests advisory opinions from the Inter-American Court, in accordance with the provisions of Article 64 of the American Convention and Article 19 of its Statute.

99. Any person, group of persons or non-governmental entity legally recognized in one or more of the OAS Member States may lodge petitions with the Inter-American Commission regarding violations of a right recognized in the American Convention, the American Declaration or other relevant instrument, in accordance with their respective provisions and its Statute and Rules of Procedure. Likewise, in the situation described and regulated by Article 45 of the American Convention, the IACHR may consider communications in the nature of an inter-State complaint. Complaints may be submitted in any of the four official languages of the OAS (Spanish, French, English or Portuguese) by the alleged victim of the violation of rights or by a third party; and in the case of interstate complaints, by a State.

CHAPTER I

ACTIVITIES OF THE IACHR IN 2024

A. IACHR Strategic Plan 2023 - 2027

1. In 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) implemented its Strategic Plan 2023 - 2027 adopted at its 185th regular session, held in Washington, D.C., from October 24 to November 4, 2022. This plan constitutes the main institutional management tool setting out the strategic priorities to address current and future challenges on promoting and protecting human rights in the Americas.

2. The strategy of the 2023-2027 Plan continued to unfold in 2024 covering nine strategic objectives that encompass 34 programs aimed at achieving substantive long-term changes in terms of greater enjoyment of all human rights by all persons in the Hemisphere, which is the ultimate aim of the IACHR, and making an essential contribution to the inter-American public interest. Those objectives and programs are organized into three pillars geared to achieving the following medium-term results. The first pillar corresponds to the Petitions and Cases, Precautionary Measures, and Follow-up of Recommendations mechanisms, which are expected to result in greater protection and defense of the victims of human rights violations, with special attention to people from historically excluded groups. The second pillar is related to Monitoring, Promotion, and Technical Cooperation mechanisms, with actions aimed at inducing States to increase their observance of, and guarantees for, human rights in the Hemisphere. The third pillar is aimed at enhancing the institutional culture of the IACHR through the inclusion of gender, intersectionality, and diversity approaches and results-based management.

3. During 2024, the IACHR implemented the five-year Action Plans approved in 2023, which establish activities, products, and resources needed to achieve the goals of the 34 programs of the Strategic Plan. These plans, drawn up in accordance with OAS project methodology, have guided the Commission's actions and made it possible to mobilize funds during the year for carrying out projects aligned with at least 25 of the 34 programs of the Strategic Plan, which has contributed significantly to execution of the activities planned for the year and the achievement of concrete results in priority areas.

4. In addition, during 2024, the Executive Secretariat of the IACHR (ES/IACHR) has been keeping track of 29 indicators included in the monitoring and evaluation plan of the Strategic Plan. These indicators made it possible to measure progress every six months through data recording instruments, baselines, and goals defined for 2027. This process has ensured transparency with regard to implementation of the Strategic Plan and has facilitated the constant evaluation of the results achieved. For that, detailed progress analyses were carried out and included in the 2023 Report on the Current Status of the Strategic Plan and the first half-yearly outcomes report for 2024.

5. Regarding the first pillar of the Strategic Plan, during the first half of 2024, progress was observed in the implementation of the Case Prioritization Policy, with the classification of two thousand cases in the portfolio of cases at the merits stage and the beginning of the classification of the admissibility portfolio. With the adoption of Resolution 4/23 on prioritization, these guidelines were implemented in 2024 to expedite the resolution of cases with a structural impact and improve timely access to justice. During 2024, there was a substantial increase in the number of admissibility and merits reports prepared and approved, as well as in the number of IACHR decisions on these processes and the expansion of friendly settlement agreements. Additionally, the IACHR managed to maintain a high proportion of precautionary measure evaluations within 90 days, surpassing the figures reported in 2023, which reflects a sustained improvement in the efficiency of protection mechanisms. This also made it possible to consolidate the GAIA System in 2024 as a key tool for monitoring precautionary measures and processing petitions. The Commission made progress in the special follow-up mechanisms established with Bolivia, Chile, and Colombia, as well as in the agreement for the implementation of the Independent Expert Group (GIEI) in Honduras, in which it worked actively with State institutions, civil society, and other interested parties to comply with the Commission's recommendations. Finally, the IACHR maintained close dialogue and collaboration with OAS member states through regional meetings, presentations to OAS political bodies, portfolio meetings, and bilateral meetings. This ongoing dialogue with the States was fundamental to improving the effectiveness of the Commission's work, especially in the implementation of its recommendations.

6. Regarding the second pillar, the IACHR strengthened its capacity to monitor and promptly address human rights crises that occurred during 2024, by issuing alerts and key pronouncements on critical situations and emerging crises in Argentina, Bolivia, Cuba, Ecuador, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Peru, and Venezuela, through statements to report on the deterioration of human rights or risks to democratic institutions. Particularly worth noting is the implementation of the risk assessment methodology and the creation of the Risk Factors Matrix as instruments integrated with data analysis tools that allow the IACHR to move forward in the consolidation of a more efficient monitoring system with a preventive approach, which expands its capacity to react to new crises and processes pointing to the erosion of democratic institutions.

7. The Commission also strengthened its monitoring of the human rights situation with two on-site visits, one to Colombia in April and the other to Guatemala in July 2024. The preliminary observations derived from those visits were published and widely disseminated. The Commission continued to play an important role in denouncing the deterioration of human rights in the countries of the region that suffered the most severe ruptures in the democratic order and in transmitting key information to the inter-American and international community. For example, the Commission provided detailed information to the Human Rights Council in connection with the Universal Periodic Review of Nicaragua.

8. Through its follow-up mechanism, the Commission was able to record some tangible results. For example, the Commission noted that four States (Bolivia, Guatemala, Honduras, and Peru) had adopted measures in response to the appeals and recommendations made in the thematic or country reports, touching on issues such as the functioning of democratic institutions, the separation of powers, and judicial independence. The Commission also noted that five States (Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominica, Mexico, and Uruguay) had adopted measures or decisions to address structural issues that give rise to human rights violations. These include judicial decisions and regulatory and administrative reforms to protect the rights of refugees and asylum seekers in Colombia, Costa Rica, and Uruguay, measures to facilitate obtaining citizenship in Mexico, and a judicial decision to decriminalize same-sex relations in Dominica.

9. In the second pillar, the IACHR also significantly strengthened its monitoring and training activities. With regard to monitoring, it updated its "General Guidelines for Follow-up on Recommendations and Decisions," establishing more precise criteria for evaluating compliance with the recommendations issued to the member states. It also consolidated implementation of the Inter-American SIMORE, which facilitates public access to recommendations and promotes participation in their follow-up. Finally, it promoted the inter-American human rights system through 76 dissemination activities that reached more than 20,000 people, and 28 training activities that benefited more than 1,900 people, mainly from Central America and the Caribbean.

10. With regard to the third pillar, actions undertaken have continued to improve inclusion and accessibility to the IACHR and its outreach to users, with a 32% increase (compared to last year) in the number of people who consulted IACHR reports and press releases in English, French, and Portuguese, and a 47% increase in the number of visits to the website by Caribbean users. The IACHR began publishing the French version of its press releases and translated the microsite on the IACHR in the Caribbean into French. This was achieved with significant changes in the contents of the IACHR's web page and digital platforms, through the use of technological tools such as automatic subtitles and sign language interpreters in public hearings and meetings, thereby facilitating the participation of persons with disabilities. There was also an increase in the use of inclusive tools such as UserWay and the provision of content translated into English, French, and Portuguese was expanded to overcome language barriers. Finally, the functions of the GAIA tool were expanded in 2024, by incorporating new modules to improve the user experience and increase the operational efficiency of the IACHR team through automatic notification in the processing of more than 34,000 actions and documents in record time.

11. Finally, the IACHR Executive Secretariat carried out actions to improve the work environment through integration, coaching, and organizational alignment sessions as part of the Co-Labora Program. Under this program, more than 80% of the agreements established by the team were complied with in 2024, which allowed an increase in the level of internal satisfaction compared to the results of the work environment survey applied in 2023.

12. All of the activities carried out in 2024 and presented in this Annual Report were possible thanks to the support of inter-American human rights civil society, OAS member states and observers, international and regional organizations, and the committed work of the team of the Executive Secretariat and the Commissioners. In particular, the IACHR expresses its gratitude to the member states: Canada, Costa Rica, Mexico, Panama, Peru, and the United States for their voluntary contributions and project support; to the observer states and donor countries: The European Commission, Spain with its various sources, such as the Spanish Agency for International Development Cooperation (AEICD) and the Basque Agency for Development Cooperation, France, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, the Principality of Monaco, Sweden, and Switzerland. The IACHR also expresses its appreciation for ongoing contributions from the Arcus Foundation, the Ford Foundation, the Wellspring Philanthropic Fund through the Foundation for the Americas, the Pan American Development Foundation (PADF), the United Nations Refugee Agency (UNHCR), and the New Venture Fund. All of these inputs and contributions were crucial for implementation of the 2023-2027 Strategic Plan and the results achieved in 2024.

13. In short, 2024 marked significant milestones in the progress of the Strategic Plan 2023-2027, with methodological strengthening and the incorporation of technological innovations that provided the IACHR with greater responsiveness and operational efficiency in all its pillars. The prioritization policy began to yield tangible results by streamlining processes, and technological tools facilitated progress in complying with recommendations and managing cases in a more structured manner. In addition, progress was made towards a more inclusive and results-oriented institutional culture, while effective efforts in financial management were maintained, reflecting a healthy budget and medium- and long-term sustainability. The achievements attained in 2024 show that sustained progress is being made towards accomplishment of the objectives of the 2023-2027 Strategic Plan, along with significant improvements in the efficiency and impact of the IACHR.

14. The IACHR expresses its deep appreciation to those who inspire the Commission's work: the petitioners, the victims, and those who defend human rights in often adverse conditions. Their constant drive, resilience, and confidence in the inter-American human rights system are the driving force behind the Commission's commitment to continue working for the protection and promotion of human rights in the Americas.

B. Sessions of the IACHR held in 2024

15. During 2024, the IACHR held three sessions in a hybrid format-which involves one week in person and one week virtually: the 189th, 190th, and 191st. Holding sessions in this format allowed the IACHR to bring the mechanisms for the defense, protection and promotion of human rights closer to the victims and peoples under its jurisdiction, expand the body's public presence in the region, and stimulate the democratization of access to the inter-American human rights system.

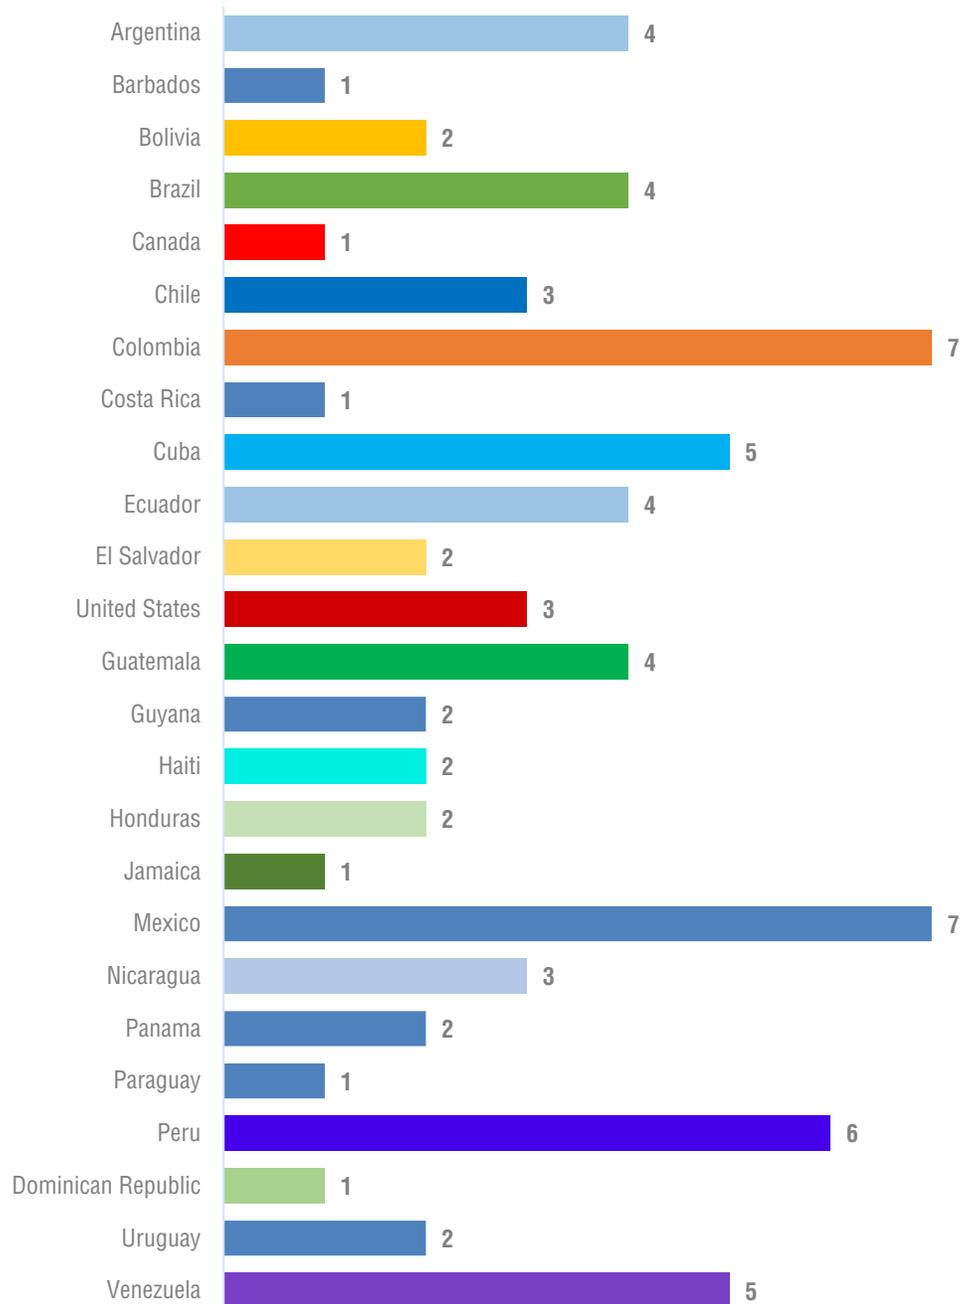

16. During these sessions, the IACHR followed up on and made visible a significant number of human rights situations by holding 98 public hearings and 34 working meetings. Of the 98 hearings, 29 took place in the 189th Session (23.9% of the total number of hearings requested), 34 in the 190th Session (36.1% of the total number of hearings requested), and 35 in the 191st Session (22.8% of the total number of hearings requested). The hearings addressed issues related to the monitoring of regional and subregional situations, particularly in 25 countries: Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, United States, Uruguay, and Venezuela. New trends or recent challenges in human rights were also addressed.

17. The IACHR also met with regional groups of States at the 189th session and held an event to commemorate its 65th anniversary with the presence of the States at the 190th session. It also met with civil society organizations at the 189th and 190th Sessions to address various human rights issues.

C. Approved Resolutions

19. During 2024 the IACHR approved Resolution No. 1/24 "Election Observers as Human Rights Defenders". In this Resolution, adopted on April 30, the Commission recognizes national and international election observers as human rights defenders given the intrinsic relationship between the respect and protection of rights and the defense of democracy. It also highlights the importance of the role of election observers in the defense of democracy and the rule of law, given that, through their activities, they carry out a series of determinations and considerations related to the defense of civil and political rights, such as the rights of association, assembly, expression, access to information, equality before the law and non-discrimination, as well as judicial guarantees and protection.

20. It also approved Resolution No. 2/24 on Human Mobility caused by Climate Change, which aims to address the phenomenon of climate mobility in a comprehensive manner, with the objective of guiding the States of the region in the development of regulations, programs and public policies to protect the rights of people who move due to the adverse effects of climate change.

E. The Social Participation Agenda

26. In 2024, the IACHR maintained its practice of establishing regular channels of dialogue with civil society and academia.

27. Numerous civil society organizations participated in the public hearings held during the 189th, 190th and 191st Sessions, which were carried out in hybrid format. A hybrid meeting was also held with civil society during the 189th Session to learn about technological information systems for monitoring democratic institutions and issuing early warnings, and a virtual meeting was held with the RegionaR network to learn about its work agenda during the 190th Session.

28. During the on-site visit to Colombia, which took place between April 15 and 19, 2024, the IACHR met with civil society organizations and victims of human rights violations. It also met with civil society organizations and victims of human rights violations during the on-site visit to Guatemala, which took place from July 22 to 26, 2024.

29. The IACHR also held meetings with civil society in the framework of the 12 working, promotional and technical cooperation visits carried out in 2024, namely: Costa Rica, from February 6 to 9; Honduras, from May 13 to 17; Costa Rica, from May 19 to 21; Honduras, from August 12 to 15; Colombia, from September 3 to 11; Chile, from September 5 to 7; Bolivia, from September 9 to 13; Guatemala, from September 12 to 16; Dominican Republic, from October 1 to 5; Barbados, from October 8 to 11; and Belize, from October 15 to 18.

30. On the other hand, from May 14 to 17, the Central American Forum was held jointly with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the European Union and Pro Derechos. The purpose of the event was to provide a space for exchange, reflection, analysis and identification of challenges and proposals to address the common problems faced by Honduras and other Central American countries in the area of human rights. This activity was attended by 120 people from civil society.

31. During 2024, the dialogue "Organized Crime, Corruption and Human Rights: Progress and New Challenges for the Inter-American Human Rights System" was held within the framework of the 190th Session, with the participation of experts from civil society and academia.

32. In addition, the IACHR conducted 9 public consultations through the publication of online questionnaires, namely: for the construction of the REDESCA Work Plan for the period 2024-2026; for the preparation of the report on the exile of journalists in the Americas and its impact on freedom of expression, by RELE; for the development of a thematic report on the disappearance of persons in Mexico; for the preparation of a thematic report on the interaction between freedom of expression, equality and non-discrimination of groups historically marginalized from public debate, by RELE; for the preparation of a thematic report on the use of digital surveillance technologies in the Americas, by RELE; for the development of a study on the challenges in guaranteeing the rights of children and adolescents in the face of different movements that aim to roll back the enjoyment of these rights in the different countries of Latin America and the Caribbean; to prepare a resolution on the link between human mobility, climate change and socio-environmental disasters in the Americas; to gather relevant inputs on successful experiences, achievements and lessons learned, as well as to identify replicable models that can be used to strengthen public policies and collective actions on climate justice and human rights, by REDESCA; and to prepare a report on strategic litigation against public participation (SLAPPs) and the applicable standards to address this phenomenon, by RELE.

33. Furthermore, during 2024 the IACHR held periodic meetings with coalitions and networks of human rights organizations in the region, both during and outside its sessions, as well as with civil society organizations in the countries for which it monitors human rights situations. Particularly noteworthy are the periodic meetings held within the framework of SACROI Venezuela, the meetings of the Caribbean Monitoring Network, the network of organizations in Cuba and the Dialogue Network to Confront Human Trafficking.

34. With regard to the 2024 Annual Report, the IACHR once again invited civil society organizations and other actors from the 35 OAS Member States to send information on the human rights situation in the region for the preparation of Chapters IV. A, IV.B y V.

35. Within the framework of the Special Follow-up Mechanism for Nicaragua (MESENI), the IACHR highlights the importance of collaboration and the continuous exchange of information with civil society organizations and victims. It also highlights its strategy of technical assistance and capacity building for Nicaraguan civil society organizations through training. Finally, the Special Follow-up Mechanism for Venezuela (MESEVE) has also worked in coordination with different key actors, including civil society organizations.

36. Regarding the Joint Follow-up Mechanism for Colombia, during 2024, collective meetings were held with organizations to learn about the progress and challenges identified regarding the implementation of the prioritized recommendations. In addition, during the year, the second follow-up report was prepared, still pending presentation, taking into account the information provided by civil society and victims at the virtual hearing "Follow-up to the recommendations on the investigation of human rights violations during the national strike", on July 8, 2024 at the 190th Session of the IACHR, requested by organizations from southwestern Colombia.

37. In the context of the Follow-up Mechanism for Chile (MESECH), between March 18 and 20, 2024, a second working visit was made to the country, during which face-to-face meetings were held with four civil society organizations, who addressed the challenges for access to justice in cases of social unrest, the lack of comprehensive reparations policies and the need for profound reforms in the police, along with a legislative agenda that prioritizes human rights as a way to guarantee non-repetition. For the preparation of the first follow-up report, inputs from four civil society organizations, as well as from two autonomous human rights organizations, were also considered.

38. Civil society participation was also considered during the working visit to Honduras between October 30 and November 1, 2024, carried out with the objective of advancing the Work Plan for the creation of a Follow-up Mechanism. On this occasion, the Commission met with 17 civil society organizations to receive information on compliance with the recommendations included in the 2024 Country Status Report on Honduras.

39. Along the same lines, during the Commission's visit to Brazil in June 2024 on the UNIVAJA, Bruno Pereira, Dom Phillips and Maria da Penha cases, the Chairwoman Roberta Clarke, Rapporteur for Brazil, held meetings with civil society to discuss the impact of economic and social policies on the human rights of individuals, as well as cases of disinformation, censorship and violations of freedom of expression.

40. In parallel, on October 31, 2024, the Caribbean Dialogue Network (CDN) held a technical meeting on the follow-up of recommendations, with more than 26 participants from civil society. The meeting discussed ways of collaboration between Caribbean civil society organizations and the IACHR Section for Follow-up on Recommendations and Impact, including information on questionnaires, working meetings, hearings, working groups, technical assistance, special follow-up mechanisms and the Inter-American SIMORE. On the other hand, within the framework of the technical visit to follow up on the recommendations of the report on Preliminary Observations of the on-site visit 2024, on November 27, thematic dialogues were held with civil society in Guatemala City, where nearly 80 participants communicated their main follow-up interests on the recommendations of the instrument.

41. Regarding the activities carried out by the Follow-up Committee on the Recommendations of the GIEI Bolivia-MESEG Bolivia Report, five virtual meetings and one face-to-face meeting were held in 2024, with the participation of victims, victims' associations and civil society organizations, in order to learn about the progress and challenges in complying with the recommendations of the GIEI Report. In this line, in July, the technical visit of the MESEG team took place, where meetings and face-to-face trainings were held for victims, victims' associations and civil society organizations, to advance in the follow-up of the recommendations on reparation, among others.

42. Throughout 2024, the IACHR continued to strengthen its training activities aimed at civil society, giving priority to virtual training through self-managed courses, developed in accessible language that allow adaptation to different audiences, with the aim of reaching more people throughout the hemisphere. During 2024, 1960 people took the two massive open online courses (MOOCs) offered. In addition, two virtual classrooms and three micro courses were developed during the year, in which a total of 464 people participated.

43. In addition, the seventh edition of the International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights, implemented jointly with the MERCOSUR Institute of Public Policies on Human Rights, was held in 2024. This course offers the possibility of exchanging and networking among public sector officials responsible for the design, management, implementation and evaluation of public policies and people from organizations and social movements, academics and academics working on the issue.

44. The Commission has also consolidated and expanded its activities in the Caribbean as part of its new strategy for the region, which seeks to strengthen cooperation with both States and civil society. The participation of civil society representatives in the following training sessions held in 2024 is noteworthy: on the Inter-American system, for State officials and civil society from Barbados; on the Inter-American system with a focus on indigenous peoples, for State officials and civil society from Belize; on hearings before the IACHR, for the Caribbean Network; on women's rights in the context of persons deprived of liberty in the Caribbean; and the Strategic Litigation Seminar: Food, Nutrition and the Law in the Caribbean.

45. In addition to these wide-ranging activities, the Commission also continued its activities aimed at specific countries or subregions. With regard to Mesoamerica, in 2024, the following training sessions with the participation of representatives of civil society stood out: to law students at the Universidad del Istmo (Guatemala), with a special focus on the System of Petitions and Cases and the Monitoring Mechanism; a class for the Instituto Tecnológico de Estudios Superiores de Monterrey on the mandate and functioning of the IACHR; and training for individuals from non-governmental anti-trafficking organizations in Panama on the mechanisms for precautionary and provisional measures.

F. Technical cooperation

46. The priority attached to technical cooperation has been reflected in the IACHR's strategic planning since 2017. Pursuant to this priority and to reinforce work in this area, the 2023-2027 Strategic Plan includes Program 22 on institutionalism and public policies with a human rights approach, through which the IACHR seeks to collaborate with States, civil society, academia, and other actors, such as international and regional organizations, in order to contribute, based on its mandate, to compliance with international obligations and the implementation of inter-American standards in the Americas. The objective is to support, based on a positive agenda, efforts aimed at protecting and guaranteeing human rights, as well as to avoid the repetition of violations and to support the development of public policies with a human rights approach that pave the way for advancing a culture of human rights and the strengthening of democratic institutions and the rule of law in the region.

47. During 2024, the IACHR continued to consolidate cooperation by disseminating the Catalog of Forms of Cooperation available to users of the inter-American system. It did so, inter alia, by holding a series of meetings and events to promote its contents and distributing the document upon request.

48. The IACHR has continued to make progress in the negotiation and processing of cooperation agreements for member states, civil society, human rights institutions, regional organizations, and other institutions. As regards cooperation agreements, the IACHR signed three broad interagency agreements,<sup>1</sup> with the Law School of the University of Chile, the Universidad del Externado de Colombia, and the Caribbean Court of Justice. With these agreements, the IACHR seeks to promote the standards and work of the inter-American system in the hemispheric human rights agenda.

49. Within the framework of the implementation of existing agreements and through specific agreements, progress was made in expanding the Scholarship Program and the Associated Personnel Program. During the year, five professionals served at the Executive Secretariat as associate personnel under cooperation agreements with the National Council of the Public Prosecutors' Office, the Public Defender's Office of the Union, the Public Defender's Office of the State of Rio de Janeiro, all in Brazil, and four professionals worked at the Secretariat thanks to grants provided under cooperation projects with academic and civil society institutions.

50. One of the agreements implemented is the Both Ends Believing initiative, which promotes the right of children and adolescents to live in a family through the adoption of a software system that creates digital profiles of children living in institutions as a way of encouraging advocacy on their behalf. Within the framework of this triangular cooperation agreement, States such as Ecuador and Paraguay made progress with the adoption of the software and technical support from the Commission. Presentations on the subject were also conducted in Caribbean States such as Guyana, Belize, and Saint Kitts and Nevis. In implementing the agreement with the Pan-Amazonian Ecclesial Network (REPAM), high-level follow up meetings were held to consider possible joint initiatives.

51. With respect to the agreement signed with the International Center for the Promotion of Human Rights (CIPDH), the Executive Secretariat helped promote the IACHR Thematic Hearings Competition and, based on its mandate, train the participating teams to disseminate the mechanism. The 2024 competition was the fifth and took place in virtual format from October 13 to 17, on the theme of human mobility.<sup>2</sup>

52. As regards activities with the Mercosur Institute of Public Policies on Human Rights (IPPDH), the seventh International Course on Public Policy on Human Rights<sup>3</sup> was held following the signing of a specific letter of agreement. Based on a perspective that recognizes the progress made and still pending challenges in the region, the course provides concrete conceptual training on the subject, an opportunity for sharing practical experiences, insight into the challenges that the implementation of the human rights approach poses for state institutions, and a chance to discuss opportunities for developing this approach in the region. More details on this initiative can be found in Chapter III of this report.

53. In addition, the IACHR moved ahead with the publication and dissemination of the seventh compendium of standards in the series initiated in 2019.<sup>4</sup> This latest compendium deals with "Integral Reparation with a Gender Perspective in Transitional Justice Contexts."<sup>5</sup> Its purpose is to systematize the standards developed by the Inter-American Commission in this area and within the framework of its various mandates, as well as to highlight developments with a differentiated approach applicable to reparations in these contexts.

1. Cooperation with States

54. During the year, the Commission also moved ahead with the consideration, development, and implementation of various proposals for technical cooperation with States and national institutions.

55. At the request of the State of Bolivia, the IACHR engaged in a technical cooperation process with the Plurinational Legislative Assembly regarding the pre-selection procedure for candidates for positions as court judges and members of the composition of the Courts and the Judicial Magistrates Council (Consejo de la Magistratura del Órgano Judicial).<sup>6</sup> The cooperation process included the preparation and submission of a document systematizing the inter-American standards relevant to the justice sector, as well as a technical note on the merit criteria for the evaluation of candidacies, which were discussed with the Country Rapporteur, Commissioner José Luis Caballero, with a view to strengthening the process. The cooperation also includes a country visit to the State in order to present the country report resulting from the on-site visit carried out in 2023 and published in 2024, focusing on the recommendations on the justice system contained in the report. To this end, the IACHR will meet with representatives of the Plurinational Legislative Assembly and with judicial authorities.

56. In the case of Colombia, cooperation has focused on strengthening the work of the institutions of the Integral System of Truth, Justice, Reparation, and Non-Repetition. In particular during 2024, three high-level meetings were held with the Special Jurisdiction for Peace (JEP), on February 27, April 25, and June 5, to address technical issues related to the mandate of both bodies and the exchange of relevant standards. The IACHR also participated by invitation in promotional events organized by the JEP.<sup>7</sup> In addition, the points of contact with the Unit for the Search for Missing Persons were updated and a meeting was held.

57. As part of the IACHR's advisory role, at the request of Costa Rica, a technical note was prepared and sent with inter-American standards and best practices in the area of strengthening juvenile criminal justice policies, with special emphasis on alternative sanctions and addressing recidivism. Along the same lines, at Paraguay's request, a technical note was prepared with standards on the de-institutionalization of children and adolescents in particular, stressing the importance of such public policies adopting a comprehensive approach to human rights and specialized protection.

58. In the case of Ecuador, various coordination activities were carried out with the Council of the Judiciary, providing information on the usefulness of cooperation and on opportunities for training and institutional strengthening. It is important to note that the IACHR was invited to participate in a training course on violence against LGBTI persons, which was attended by the Thematic Rapporteurship. In the same vein, the technical team provided advice to the Ministry of Social Development in Uruguay and lent support for a training course organized by the State in Montevideo on public policies and the rights of LGBTI persons.

2. Cooperation with the Caribbean

59. The 2023-2027 Five-Year Strategy for the Caribbean is being implemented in line with Program 17 of the IACHR Strategic Plan 2023-2027, which focuses on technical cooperation initiatives in the Caribbean. Based on this high-priority program, the IACHR has stepped up collaboration with the various actors in the region in order to increase the Commission's knowledge of the human rights situation and contribute to the formulation of recommendations specifically targeting these countries on the protection of human rights. The IACHR also intends to contribute with concrete actions to the promotion of the universalization of inter-American human rights instruments. Thus, in response to various requests, progress has been made in holding events and conducting activities for updating and promotion, as well as in launching an updated newsletter on the IACHR microsite on the Caribbean.

60. As regards cooperation, the IACHR provided technical assistance to the States of Suriname, Saint Lucia, and Saint Kitts and Nevis. In the case of Suriname, a technical note on relevant inter-American human rights standards on domestic violence was prepared and submitted for the State's consideration. A technical note was also sent to Saint Lucia containing a comparative analysis of the international and Inter-American conventions on the rights of persons with disabilities. On June 28, 2024, the State signed the Inter-

American Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities, which is now pending ratification. Likewise, at the request of the State of Saint Kitts and Nevis, the same technical note was also shared for study and consideration.

61. During 2024, technical cooperation visits were made to two Caribbean States; to Barbados, from October 8 to 11; and to Belize, from October 15 to 18. The visits reflect the IACHR's commitment to intensify and prioritize its work in the Caribbean by increasing technical cooperation offers, such as capacity building in the use of IAHRs mechanisms and standards; as well as to promote the ratification of inter-American human rights instruments. The purpose of the visits was to identify best practices, needs, and challenges faced by state agents and civil society in order to explore opportunities for cooperation by the IACHR using all available options for increasing collaboration in the area of human rights.

62. In Barbados, the visit was headed by Commissioner Gloria Monique de Mees, Country Rapporteur. The delegation held meetings with the executive, legislative, and judicial branches, as well as with non-state actors representing civil society. The delegation met with the Speaker of the House of Assembly, the Vice President of the Senate, the President of the Supreme Court, the Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Attorney General, and authorities from the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, People Empowerment, Labor and Interior, among others, and the Ombudsman's Office. The IACHR also met with various representatives of civil society organizations and held training workshops on the IAHRs for public authorities and representatives of civil society. Finally, the delegation also held meetings with the United Nations Resident Coordinator and various international and European Union agencies to discuss possible areas of joint collaboration.

63. The visit to Belize was headed by Commissioner José Caballero Ochoa, Country Rapporteur. Meetings were held with the executive and legislative branches, as well as with representatives of civil society. The delegation met with the Governor-General, the Prime Minister, the Minister and senior officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministers of Human Development, Families and Indigenous Peoples' Affairs, the Interior, Sustainable Development and Climate Change, and the Attorney General, as well as the Office of the Ombudsman. During the visit, the State expressed his willingness to ratify the Convention on the Protection of the Human Rights of Older Persons, and followed up with the ratification on December 16th. The delegation also met with the Executive Director of the Caribbean Community Climate Change Center. In addition, a training workshop was held on the inter-American human rights system for civil servants and civil society organizations.

64. Dissemination of Inter-American standards and of the IACHR's working mechanisms is an essential component of the strategy for the Caribbean. The IACHR provided opportunities for follow-up and dialogue for people who participated in training sessions during technical cooperation and promotion visits in 2023. Civil society representatives from Suriname, Saint Lucia, and Guyana participated in those forums aimed at sharing detailed information on the various ways in which the Commission provides technical cooperation.

65. In 2024, the IACHR continued to work closely with the Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ). During the year, one promotional meeting was held, along with two high-level dialogues between the institutions (on March 6 and November 7). At these meetings, experiences were shared on the application of inter-American human rights standards and challenges encountered in the development of regional jurisprudence on issues related to police violence, human mobility, protection of indigenous peoples and persons with disabilities, as well as access to justice for groups in situations of discrimination and vulnerability. In addition, on February 6, both organizations held a technical working session to share their experiences with the mechanisms used to follow up on the recommendations made to the States. The IACHR also listened in, as an observer, to a session of the Court.

66. The IACHR will continue to bolster its commitment to the Caribbean through ongoing implementation of its strategy for the region. The Commission hopes that, through its various mechanisms, including technical cooperation initiatives, both States and non-State actors will be better informed about the IAHRs and in a position to move towards greater compliance with, and guarantees for, human rights.

3. Cooperation with National Human Rights Institutions (NHRIs)

67. As part of the actions undertaken by the IACHR to strengthen ties with National Human Rights Institutions (NHRIs), a series of activities were carried out to strengthen inter-agency communication channels and to explore opportunities for joint actions and cooperation. Notable initiatives in this area include support provided for the monitoring of the human rights situation in the region, visits carried out by the IACHR, and technical cooperation with the NHRIs of: Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Guatemala, Honduras, and Panama. The IACHR also continued to follow up on the Declaration of Commitment on Technical Cooperation and the creation of a Mechanism of Points of Contact with the signatory NHRIs.

68. The annual meeting of the IACHR with the NHRIs was held in October. The purpose of the Dialogue was to generate a forum for the exchange of best practices, challenges, and analysis regarding regional trends in the human rights situation in the region. In addition, a specific consultation was held on the challenges surrounding the impact of organized crime on human rights and the opportunities for advancing standards to protect human rights in the face of those threats. The event, which was headed by Commissioner Caballero, took place on October 29 in the city of Asunción, Paraguay, and was attended by representatives of 12 NHRIs: Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, and Uruguay. Human rights institutions from Dominican Republic, Mexico and Brazil also participated. The event was held with the support of the French cooperation agency and the Ibero-American Federation of Ombudsmen (FIO).

69. At the regional level, the IACHR highlights the rapprochement and quest for opportunities for collaboration<sup>8</sup> with the Americas-Network of the National Human Rights Institutions (RINDHCA) through participation in promotional activities on the rights of older persons<sup>9</sup> and DESCA. FIO also participated in the Congress held in Asunción, Paraguay, on October 30.

70. The IACHR also continued to work with the Caribbean Ombudsman Association (CAROA). In this regard, from May 16 to August 30, 2024, the IACHR held eight bilateral meetings with Ombudspersons from Barbados, Belize, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, and Trinidad and Tobago, to share with the offices the forms of cooperation and the content of the Compendium of Standards on democratic institutions, rule of law and human rights.

71. The IACHR expresses its gratitude for the active participation and commitment of NHRIs and stresses the importance of continuing to work together with a positive agenda to strengthen cooperation and address emerging human rights challenges. In this regard, the IACHR calls on the NHRIs of the Americas to continue to go about their work with their habitual independence and autonomy in line with the Paris Principles and applicable inter-American standards.

4. Meetings with civil society and academia

72. With regard to partnerships with civil society organizations and academic centers, the IACHR stepped up its cooperation activities. Particularly worth noting is the joint organization of a Structured Dialogue with the Due Process of Law Foundation (DPLF) through the signing of a specific letter of agreement. The event took place from July 16 to 18,<sup>10</sup> as an opportunity for consultation and reflection with experts and representatives of international organizations and academics on organized crime, corruption, and human rights. The objectives of the dialogue were to identify and update the information available to international and regional human rights protection bodies on recent reports and studies establishing the link between organized crime, corruption, and human rights. In particular, the idea was to address in greater depth new developments to address the negative impact of corruption and organized crime on the enjoyment of human rights, as well as to analyze the need to advance and adapt the standards developed by the IAHR to address situations where organized crime impairs the enjoyment and exercise of human rights with a view to the IACHR preparing a resolution on the matter.

73. In addition, within the framework of the agreement signed with American University, the IACHR provided support to the Inter-American Human Rights Moot Court Competition<sup>11</sup> as envisaged in that agreement. The IACHR was also invited to take part in a series of promotional events organized by the university's Academy of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law. Also, in September, pursuant to the agreement in force with the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM), the XII "Hector Fix Zamudio" Diploma Course on the Inter-American Human Rights System was held, with the participation of the IACHR. More details on these academic initiatives can be found in Chapter III of this report.

74. In addition, dialogues were held to explore collaboration with the Inter-American Institute of Human Rights with respect to public policies and the institutional framework for human rights in the Caribbean. Implementation of the agreements with the University of the West Indies and the Universidad del Externado also progressed. In the same vein, exchanges with the Max Planck Institute were promoted, especially with regard to the possibility of involving academic bodies in the work of the Observatory of Impact of the Inter-American Human Rights System. It is also worth mentioning the participation of the IACHR in actions to promote inter-American principles on migrants with the support of Cornell University. The IACHR was also invited to participate and promote its 2023 annual report at the Ibero-American Week of International Justice organized by the IberoAmerican Institute of The Hague for Peace, Human Rights, and International Justice.

5. Cooperation with international and regional organizations

75. In connection with its cooperation with regional bodies, the IACHR received a visit from the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (ACHRP), from July 11 to 16, 2024,<sup>12</sup> in order to exchange and discuss mandates and mechanisms, with a view to enhancing efforts to achieve greater effectiveness, as well as to promote the exchange of knowledge, experiences, and best practices. During the visit, the two Commissions held meetings with each other to discuss working methods within the framework of their mandates. This initiative continued a long-standing history of dialogue and provided an opportunity for both institutions to present their views on progress and challenges regarding the human rights situation in their respective regions. As a result of the meeting, the organizations signed a joint declaration to continue strengthening inter-agency work on matters of mutual interest.

6. Special cooperation and assistance mechanisms

76. The IACHR can collaborate with the inclusion and formation of groups of international experts with experience in different areas of international human rights law. These groups can complement state efforts to promote the investigation and clarification of facts related to human rights violations. In this regard, during 2024, the IACHR led the negotiation and signing of a cooperation agreement for the establishment of an interdisciplinary group of independent experts (GIEI) in Honduras for international technical assistance from a human rights perspective in the investigation of the instigators of the murder of Bertha Cáceres and related crimes. The composition of the GIEI is based on the responsibilities assigned in the agreement signed by the parties within the framework of a precautionary measure in force and it operates autonomously as long as its mandate is extended.

77. The IACHR underscores its willingness and readiness to provide technical assistance to States, regional agencies, social organizations, and other institutions for the purposes of institution-building and the formulation, implementation, and assessment of public policies on strengthening and observance of human rights, based on inter-American standards.

G. Relations with member states and political bodies of the OAS

78. One of the functions of the IACHR is to provide advice to States on human rights matters, which is accomplished, among others means, through the IACHR's relations with the political bodies of the OAS: the General Assembly (GA) and the Permanent Council (PC) and its Committees, in particular, the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs (CAJP) and the Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Affairs (CAAP). The IACHR supports the political bodies of the OAS in promoting minimum human rights standards in resolutions, declarations, treaties, conventions and other inter-American instruments. It also maintains relations with other areas of the OAS.

79. During 2024, the IACHR was continuously represented at meetings of the Permanent Council and the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs (CAJP), participating in several sessions of the aforementioned political bodies. The Commission also responded to requests to present information to the political bodies of the OAS on the implementation of resolutions, as well as other specific requests from the Member States, with the participation of Commissioners, the Executive Secretariat, and Special Rapporteurs. These presentations are detailed below, and are a reflection of the IACHR's fulfillment of its mandate to serve as a human rights advisory body to the OAS:

- XXVII. Presentation by Commissioner Roberta Clarke, President of the IACHR, at the Session of the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs on December 12, 2024, which followed up on the topic of Gender Parity, Balanced Geographic Representation, and Representation of Different Legal Systems in the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

80. The IACHR's participation in the OAS political bodies enables the Commission to raise public awareness of human rights in the Americas. In 2024, the presentations focused on topics such as the following: the human rights situation of women, persons with disabilities, LGBTI persons, Afro-descendants, indigenous peoples; the right to freedom of conscience and religion or belief; the ESCR; the Inter-American Democratic Charter and Human Rights, among others. The IACHR also called the attention of the Organization's political bodies to the human rights situation in Haiti, Venezuela and Guatemala.

81. Notably, the IACHR has been increasing its participation in the political bodies of the OAS, as a result of a growing rapprochement with the Member States and the recognition of the IACHR as a relevant actor in human rights debates in the Hemisphere.

82. During 2024, 17 meetings were held to review the portfolio of petitions, cases, precautionary measures, friendly settlements and follow-up on recommendations with the following States: Argentina (May 8 and 9/October 2 and 3); Bolivia (April 4); Brazil (September 25 and 26); Canada (February 25); Colombia (July 23); Costa Rica (September 19); Ecuador (March 25 and 26); United States (March 28); Guatemala (June 26 and 27); Mexico (May 13 and 14 / October 23 and 24); Honduras (May 28 and 29); Panama (November 18); Paraguay (February 20 and 21), Peru (September 17 and 18) and the Dominican Republic (January 31 and February 1). Likewise, specific meetings to review the portfolio of precautionary measures were held with Colombia (October 7) and El Salvador (April 4). The importance of the portfolio meetings is underscored as part of the culture of access to information implemented by the IACHR to ensure transparency and accountability of its System of Cases and Petitions and Precautionary Measures.

83. It is also essential to emphasize the value of the meetings held with groups of countries during the IACHR sessions, which have become consolidated as a practice of rapprochement, dialogue and cooperation between the IACHR and the Member States, allowing for a more fluid exchange and giving effect to the mandate to provide human rights advisory services to the Organization of American States and the States.

84. In this context, it is noteworthy to mention two significant events commemorating the 65th anniversary of the IACHR. The first event took place on June 25, during the 54th Regular Session of the OAS General Assembly in Asunción, Paraguay. The second event was held on July 15, during the Commission's 190th Period of Sessions, where Member States reflected on the IACHR's achievements and reaffirmed their dedication to promoting and protecting human rights across the Americas. Below are some of the statements made by the Permanent Representatives of OAS Member States during the latter event:

85. Argentina: "Throughout these years, the Commission has played a fundamental role in monitoring and protecting human rights, facing significant challenges, and promoting justice and equality across the region. Its work has been essential in ensuring that the values of human dignity, freedom, and justice prevail in our societies. Its impact on the promotion and protection of human rights has been significant and deserves the recognition and gratitude of all the Member States of the Organization of American States."

86. Chile: "In Chile, the IACHR was present on the ground one month after the coup d'état in 1973. From that moment on, there were four country reports and several inclusions in Chapter IV of the annual reports. In this way, the Commission, as it has done so many other times before and since, confronted the 'everything is fine' narrative of the official discourse to reveal the reality of barbarism, imprisonment, torture, and disappearance in daily life. It also shed light on precariousness, such as the destruction of basic labor rights, strikes, and collective bargaining."

87. Costa Rica: "Since its creation, the IACHR has made significant contributions through the monitoring of the human rights situation in countries of the region, the issuance of reports and recommendations, and the strengthening of the international normative framework for human rights in the Americas."

88. United States of America: "The Commission's many reports have also been crucially important in promoting and protecting human rights, providing a key source of international accountability. The Commission's documentation of human rights abuses and violations in Cuba, Nicaragua, and Venezuela in particular inspires us to reaffirm our collective commitment to uphold the principles of the Inter-American Democratic Charter, and to engage in collective action through the OAS."

89. Mexico: "Mexico wholeheartedly acknowledges the fundamental role that the IACHR has played in the promotion and protection of human rights and in the building of democracy and the rule of law in our region."

90. Panama: "The Commission's team has worked tirelessly to improve human rights practices and provide protection to our citizens, thereby enhancing the quality of life in the region—especially for those in vulnerable situations. In this regard, it is important to highlight that the IACHR has been a pioneer in defending emerging rights, expanding its mandate to adapt to the changing needs of our society—an indispensable element to ensure that no one is left behind. This delegation particularly applauds the inclusion of the protection of economic, social, and cultural rights in its agenda, recognizing that human dignity cannot be separated from equal opportunities and access to basic services. The Commission's monumental efforts over these 65 years have greatly contributed to the consolidation of democracy and respect for the rule of law in our hemisphere, ensuring that civil and political rights, freedom of expression, the right to a fair trial, and protection against torture are respected in every corner of the Americas."

91. Dominican Republic: "Since its creation in 1959, the IACHR has played a fundamental role in the promotion and protection of human rights in the Americas. The Commission's work is evident not only in strengthening protection mechanisms for victims in vulnerable situations but also in the many standards that today serve as important and useful references for States in their efforts to protect human rights."

92. Suriname: "The IACHR and the Court spoke out against human rights violations during the military dictatorship in Suriname and during a short internal war. We thank you for those moments, which assisted in getting our nation back on a democratic track with respect to basic human rights."

H. Activities of the IACHR with other regional and universal human rights bodies

93. In 2024, the IACHR continued strengthening its collaboration with other international human rights bodies under Program 30 of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027. The main objectives of this coordination are to increase the exchange of good practices, jurisprudence, and standards, and to provide strategic coordination, ensure consistency between human rights bodies and strategic interventions for effective promotion and protection of human rights in the Americas.

1. Office of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR)

a. Coordination mechanisms

94. The Platform of Independent Experts on Refugee Rights (PIERR) was launched at the beginning of 2024 with the objective of coordinating joint defense initiatives to increase protection and promotion of the human rights of refugees and asylum-seekers. The platform is composed of the different mandates of the UN Special Rapporteurs on the human rights of migrants and on trafficking in persons, especially women and children; the Working Group on arbitrary detention; the UN Committee against Torture; the Special Rapporteur on refugees, asylum-seekers, internally displaced persons and migrants in Africa of the African Commission on Human and People's Rights; and the Rapporteurship on Human Mobility of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and has the support of UNHCR and OHCHR.

95. On June 27, Commissioner Andrea Pochak participated in a meeting of this platform in Geneva to coordinate strategies for working together to improve protection of the human rights of asylum-seekers and refugees. Participating in the meeting were Ms. Siobhán Mullally, United Nations Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children; Mr. Gehad Madi, United Nations Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants; Ms. Priya Gopalan, Vice-Chair of the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention; Ms. Selma Sassi, Special Rapporteur on refugees, asylum-seekers, internally displaced persons, and migrants in Africa of the African Commission on Human and People's Rights., with the support of the platform's Technical Secretariat, comprised of specialists from OHCHR and UNHCR.

96. During her visit to Geneva, Commissioner Pochak also participated in the "Working Together to Advance the Human Rights Protection of Asylum-Seekers and Refugees" event, whose objective was to present the work in which the platform of experts is engaging, the main global and regional challenges, and the strategic work objectives.

97. Finally, Commissioner Pochak, as IACHR Rapporteur on Human Mobility, endorsed the following press releases promoted by PIERR:

- In commemoration of World Refugee Day: Laws and practices on asylum must resist politics of fear and exclusion: UN rights experts.<sup>13</sup>
- At the launch of the Global Alliance to End Statelessness: States must protect stateless refugees and asylum-seekers.<sup>14</sup>

98. The Platform of Independent Expert Mechanisms on Discrimination and Violence against Women (EDVAW), comprised of seven mechanisms, was created in March 2018 to strengthen institutional ties and cooperation between mechanisms, develop strategies, and engage in joint action. By improving collaboration, the platform seeks to ensure more effective implementation of the standards developed to end discrimination and violence against girls and women, lend visibility to existing mechanisms, and provide access to them. A virtual meeting of the platform's member bodies was held on January 18, 2024.

99. Following the assassination of human rights defender Berta Cáceres, the IACHR and OHCHR created a coordination mechanism to promote and protect the rights of human rights defenders in the hemisphere. This platform for human rights defenders connects focal points of the different OHCHR and ACNUR national offices, who are in constant communication, sharing information and strategies on protection measures. In April, the IV regional meeting on policies for the protection of human rights defenders was held in Bogotá, Colombia. In two days of sessions with members of civil society and States with national mechanisms for the protection of defenders or an interest in creating one, good practices were identified and roadmaps developed to continue exploring how to improve their operation.

100. In April, also in Bogotá, a regional forum, organized with OHCHR and IACHR, was held on mechanisms for investigating murders and assaults on human rights defenders in Latin America to provide an opportunity for dialogue between public ministries, operators of the criminal justice system, and experts in international standards on important aspects of prosecutors' activities related to defenders' access to justice. The forum enabled the participants to identify, share, and analyze the investigative methodologies and tools necessary to effectively handle cases of homicide and other crimes against human rights defenders – this, to secure a commitment and develop a regional standard for the promotion of differentiated investigative methodologies with a human rights approach to such cases and to review the existing national criteria to align the criminal prosecution of human rights defenders with international standards.

101. On October 30, the Secretariat participated in a meeting in Paris, France: the annual Inter-Mechanisms Meeting of human rights defenders, focused on the protection of environmental defenders. Participating in the meeting were the United Nations Special Rapporteur on human rights defenders; the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Environmental Defenders; the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, the Department of Human Rights, and the Office of the Department of Human Rights from the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (OSCE/ODIHR).

b. Meeting of focal points of regional human rights bodies

102. In 2015, the Human Rights Council issued resolution 52/15,<sup>15</sup> requesting that the General Assembly, the United Nations Secretary-General, and OHCHR organize annual meetings of the focal points of regional human rights mechanisms. This resolution was preceded by dialogues between the IACHR and the Council's Advisory Committee, represented by Mario Coriolano. Since then, the various human rights bodies meet once a year to exchange information on the implementation of recommendations, plan future events, share information and good practices, and coordinate strategies to strengthen jurisprudence and human rights norms and standards.

103. In 2024, the IACHR hosted this annual meeting at its 191st Regular Session. On November 13 and 14, the Inter-American Commission received representatives from every region in the world during a forum focused on coordinating strategies for the implementation of recommendations; sharing recent developments and challenges in jurisprudence; and providing mutual support for the development of human rights standards and practices consistent across all regions. For two days, more than 10 representatives of organizations from Africa, Asia, Europe, and the Middle East engaged in dialogue and attended the public hearings of the IACHR.

c. Activities

104. In the United Nations sphere, the IACHR continued to strengthen its cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). The IACHR and the Executive Secretariat held periodic meetings with representatives of the different OHCHR regional and national offices to keep apprised of the principal human rights issues in the region. The IACHR also invited representatives from the offices to participate in the hearings of the 189th, 190th, and 191st Regular Sessions.

105. In April, the Secretariat participated in a meeting in Panama City between regional United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and civil society organizations that offer advisory services and legal representation to victims of human trafficking in Latin America through the OHCHR Project for the Human Rights of Venezuelan Refugees and Migrants.

106. On April 25, the Executive Secretariat and OHCHR held a joint training event for civil society organizations in Haiti on the Inter-American System for the protection of human rights, focused primarily on precautionary measures.

107. On May 17, 2024, Commissioner Gloria Monique De Mees participated in the interagency and civil society dialogue preparatory to the 22nd meeting of the United Nations intergovernmental group created for implementation of the Durban Programme of Action. This virtual meeting enabled the parties to offer input on the draft Declaration on promotion and full respect for the human rights of Afro-descendant people during the 22nd Regular Session of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action (Geneva, May 20–24, 2024), based on their understanding of the general framework of Afro-descendant rights in the international human rights system.

108. On June 15, the Executive Secretariat participated in a forum of human rights experts organized by OHCHR on the human rights of older persons. This virtual forum responds to the IACHR's strategic objective of raising the awareness of state agents about the structural problems that give rise to human rights violations in the hemisphere and Program 14 (Attention to the structural factors that give rise to discrimination and violence against persons in situation of exclusion, in this case older persons).

109. On May 30, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the United Nations Treaty Bodies held a meeting, whose main objective was to share their experience with joint activities and explore new cooperation strategies for the promotion and protection of human rights in the region. In addition to the IACHR and the management team of the Executive Secretariat and its Special Rapporteurships, the heads of the following treaty bodies were present: the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), the Human Rights Committee (HRC), the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), the Committee against Torture (CAT), the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture (SPT), the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families (CMW), the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD), and the Committee against Enforced Disappearances (CED).

110. Commissioner José Luis Caballero and Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum were in Geneva from June 17 to 20. The agenda for their visit had been prepared in collaboration with the OHCHR focal point and included meetings with Volker Turk, High Commissioner for Human Rights; Ambassador Omar Zniber, President of the Human Rights Council; Federica Donati, of the Special Procedures subdivision; Marlene Urscheler, of the Emergency Response Section; Mahamane Cisse-Gouro, Director of Human Rights and the Treaty Mechanisms Division (CMTD); Christian Salazar, Director of the Field Operations and Technical Cooperation Division (FOTCD) and Humberto Henderson, Chief of the Americas Section; Vladlen Stefanov, of the National Institutions and Regional Mechanisms Section; Nicolas Levrat, Special Rapporteur on Minority Issues; Graeme Reid, Independent Expert on sexual orientation and gender identity; CED President Olivier de Frouville; Experts from the UN Treaty Bodies; CED Chair Olivier de Frouville and former CED Chair Carmen Rosa Villa, and a technical meeting with the desk officers of the Americas. These meetings resulted in the preparation of a work plan with specific activities programmed for the year.

111. As part of the relations with the Special Procedures subdivision of the United Nations Human Rights Council, on June 25, Commissioner Andrea Pochak participated in the presentation of the report of the UN Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children and Ms. Siobhán Mullally on trafficking in persons, mixed migration, and protection of the sea to the Human Rights Council. Commissioner Pochak had the opportunity to express the Inter-American Commission's concerns about the challenges of protecting persons in human mobility at sea, particularly with regard to the boats carrying migrants in the Caribbean. At the same time, she noted the development of norms that, while soft law standards, facilitate compliance with the international obligations of States regarding the protection of persons in human mobility, including the victims of trafficking, when they are transported by sea. Finally, she stressed the importance of adopting protective responses based on the principle of shared responsibility and regional cooperation as one of the priority lines of action in the Strategic Plan 2023-2027.

112. During the IACHR's promotional and technical cooperation visit to Barbados from October 8 to 11, Commissioner Gloria De Mees had meetings with the United Nations Resident Coordinator for Barbados and the Eastern Caribbean countries, nine United Nations agencies (ECLAC, IOM, UNAIDS, UNDP, UNDRR, UNESCO, UNFPA, UNICEF, and UN Women), and the head of the European delegation.

d. Joint press releases

113. The IACHR issued the following joint press releases with the United Nations and other bodies:

- IACHR, Press Release 252/24: Brazil: IACHR and UN Human Rights Condemn Violence Against Indigenous Peoples and Urge the State to Protect Their Territorial Rights.<sup>16</sup>
- Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression R214/24 - States must urgently protect civic space in the face of globally harmful "foreign agent/influence"-like laws: UN and regional experts urged.<sup>17</sup>

2. Human Rights Council

114. The IACHR also continued its previous years' practice of sending its contributions to the Universal Periodic Review – in this case, with respect to Nicaragua, Dominica, Uruguay, Bolivia, and El Salvador.

115. The IACHR participated in the Council's 55th Regular Session through a video presentation by IACHR President Roberta Clarke during the high-level segment. In her presentation, she reviewed the human rights situation in the Americas. IACHR Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum participated in the opening session.

116. During the 57th Regular Session, the IACHR participated in interactive dialogues on Nicaragua (September 10) and Venezuela (September 20). In both, it shared with the Council the comments and recommendations it had made concerning these countries, as well as the work of its special mechanisms.

117. In June, Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum met in Geneva with the President of the Human Rights Council, Ambassador Omar Zniber. In September, the President of the Council received the Assistant Secretary of the Secretariat, María Claudia Pulido.

3. United Nations Development Programme

118. Gloria Monique De Mees, Rapporteur on the Rights of Afro-Descendants, participated in an event held by UNDP in Paramaribo, Suriname to consider the standards governing the human rights of Afro-descendants, especially Afro-descendant women in the Caribbean.

4. United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR)

119. The Inter-American Commission and UNHCR have been working together as strategic partners in recent years. This collaboration has prioritized comprehensive protection of the human rights of migrants, refugees, internally displaced persons, asylum-seekers, returnees, victims of human trafficking, stateless persons, and others in human mobility found in countries of transit, destination, and return – this, through the identification and introduction of measures focused on prevention and the promotion and protection of human rights.

120. In addition, Andrea Pochak, Rapporteur on human mobility, participated in the launch of an analysis of the jurisprudence of Chile's higher courts on protection, organized by UNHCR and the Supreme Court of Justice in Santiago, Chile. The presentation of the report was a timely way of providing information on the lines of jurisprudence on the protection of persons in human mobility in Chile (migrants, refugees, asylum-seekers, and stateless persons) and at the same time, served as an opportunity to consider the role that judiciary personnel – judicial operators in general – play and/or should play in protecting human rights.

121. On June 3, Commissioner Pochak participated with UNHCR in an event held with Oxford University to introduce Resolution No. 02/23 on protection of the right to nationality and the banning of statelessness and arbitrary deprivation of nationality.

122. In 1984, the Cartagena Declaration on Refugees was adopted, marking a new milestone in the generous tradition of solidarity, asylum, refugee protection, and regional cooperation in the Americas. The declaration constituted an innovative flexible framework for an integral response to regional legal and humanitarian problems in international protection for people. In particular, it recommended the adoption of a broader definition of “refugee,” extending protection to people forced to flee in situations other than those covered by the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of 1951. Through this declaration, the region established the tradition of decennially commemorating its adoption, launching the Cartagena Process and inspiring what has been called “the Spirit of Cartagena,” characterized by a priority focus on refugee protection and solutions; convergence with existing mechanisms and frameworks; a peaceful and humanitarian approach to the challenges of protection; the evolving, pragmatic, flexible, and visionary nature of the protection of refugees and stateless persons; a human rights approach, recognizing the connections between international human rights law and international refugee law, including the contributions of the Inter-American Human Rights System to the development of standards and principles; the principles of solidarity, shared responsibility, and distribution of the burden among States. Every 10 years since then, a declaration and action plan have been issued: Costa Rica (1994-2004), Mexico (2004-2014), and Brazil (2014-2024). This year, three consultations have been held to prepare the action plan 2024-2034, (Cartagena +40) under the leadership of Chile and with the support of UNHCR. The IACHR has contributed to this process from the outset and has actively participated in the consultations.

123. On November 12, the IACHR held an event to look back on the five years since the adoption of the Inter-American Principles on the Human Rights of All Migrants and reflect on the future. During the event, the panelists agreed on the importance of the Inter-American Principles for strengthening comprehensive practical protection of the human rights of persons in human mobility. At the same time, they stressed that the Principles promote a multilateral coordinated response that recognizes the interdependence of migration challenges and underscores the need for cooperation among the States of the region. The meeting’s participants included UNHCR.

124. On November 19, the IACHR participated in a workshop on the right to nationality and citizenship, organized by the Ministry of Foreign Relations of Uruguay, the National Human Rights Institute and Ombudsman’s Office (INDDHH), and UNHCR.

125. IACHR’s participation in this type of event responds to the strategic lines included in the Strategic Plan 2023-2027 – particularly, dissemination of the Inter-American standards and the prioritization of an agenda for coordinated protection to interact with the various bodies and promote dialogue with civil society organizations, groups in human mobility, local communities, and persons deprived of liberty.

5. Red Cross

126. Representatives from the International Red Cross met with the Executive Secretariat in Washington, D.C. and Geneva to share information and strategies related to the human rights situation in the Americas.

6. Regional mechanisms

a. African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights

127. The plenum of the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights (hereafter “the African Commission”) visited IACHR headquarters from July 11 to 16 to promote closer ties and collaboration between the two bodies. During the visit, the African Commission met with all teams of the Executive Secretariat and shared practices, experiences, and strategies on various issues. This dialogue was intensified during a coordination meeting between the two plena that stressed the importance of maintaining the autonomy, independence, and transparency of the two regional protection bodies.

b. African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights

128. On October 8 and 9, the Executive Secretariat of the African Court visited IACHR headquarters in Washington D.C. During those two days, Dr. Robert Eno held meetings with the teams of the Office of the Assistant Executive Secretary of petitions and cases to share experiences and procedures in case processing, jurisprudence, and recommendation follow-up. Dr. Eno also met with the precautionary measures team and the team of the Executive Secretariat that coordinates litigation in the Inter-American Court.

c. Inter-American Court of Human Rights

129. In April, the sixth Inter-American forum on human rights was held, organized jointly by the Court and the Inter-American Commission to provide a venue for reflection and exchange on the main accomplishments and challenges of the Inter-American Human Rights System 75 years since the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man was adopted, 45 years since the American Convention on Human Rights, and 65 years since the creation of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. The two bodies' plena participated in the forum, leading to a dialogue and enriching reflection on democracy, the Rule of Law, and human rights.

d. Caribbean Court of Justice

130. On February 6, a dialogue between President Roberta Clarke and members of the Court was held in Port-of-Spain, Trinidad and Tobago. The object of the encounter was to share methods for following up on and implementing IACHR recommendations, such as the use of SIMORE, and assessing the impact of the human rights standards on the States of the region.

131. On June 5, the IACHR held a meeting with the Caribbean Court in which Commissioners José Luis Caballero and Gloria Monique De Mees shared inter-American standards on access to justice, equality, and nondiscrimination.

132. During the 191st Regular Session, the IACHR plenum participated in a dialogue with the magistrates of the Court on the rights of persons with disabilities and Indigenous Peoples.

I. Follow-up activities on recommendations and impact

133. In 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights continued to improve its strategies for monitoring compliance with the recommendations it issues via all its mechanisms by implementing Programs 8 (Strengthening of recommendations follow-up and Inter-American SIMORE) and 9 (Multilevel dialogue and work agenda with States) of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027, and per Article 48 of its Rules of Procedure.

134. These efforts were driven by the Recommendations and Impact Follow-up Section (hereinafter, SSRI for its acronym in Spanish), which has been operating since 2018. This year, the SSRI continued to develop and consolidate strategies to evaluate and promote the effective implementation of the Commission's recommendations and to ascertain their impact on the respect for and protection of human rights in the region. Executive Order No. 19-01 placed the SSRI under the direct supervision of the Executive Secretariat, thereby making it possible to integrate, align, and coordinate the monitoring work carried out by the entire IACHR Executive Secretariat in all its areas. In particular, the Commission undertook the following six strategic lines of work in 2024 to follow up on recommendations and impact:

135. Strengthening the methodology for following up on recommendations: Among other actions, the Commission promoted implementation of the November 2023 update of the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, which were presented in 2019 as a technical and public tool to explain the processes for monitoring recommendations issued through different mechanisms. In doing this, the IACHR improved its use of the criteria described in this tool to: (i) evaluate the information it receives from States, civil society, victims, representatives, and other stakeholders in connection with monitoring recommendations; and (ii) analyze and determine the degree to which its decisions have been implemented.

136. Continuation of the special follow-up mechanisms for Colombia, Chile, and Bolivia: The Commission carried out activities set forth in the work plans of these three mechanisms. In the case of Colombia, the IACHR closely monitored the recommendations stemming from its June 2021 working visit to the country in the context of that year's general strike. As to Chile, the Commission continued to monitor the recommendations made in its 2022 Country Report following its on-site visit in the wake of the social protests that took place from October 18, 2019 to early 2020. Regarding MESEG Bolivia, the Commission kept up the activities planned in connection with the recommendations issued in the Final Report of the GIEI-Bolivia 2022.

137. Promotion and dissemination of the Inter-American SIMORE \(Recommendations Monitoring System\): The IACHR continued to enhance this online computer tool, which is aimed at better engaging all those involved in following up on recommendations. The Inter-American SIMORE seeks to ensure universal access to the recommendations issued by the Commission in different areas and with respect to different populations, based on search criteria that have been tailored to user interests and needs. It also enables OAS member states, civil society organizations, autonomous agencies, and academics to post information on progress, challenges, and/or opportunities for compliance with the recommendations issued by the Commission in its country and thematic reports, Chapter IV.B of its annual reports, and resolutions, as well as with the decisions issued by the interdisciplinary groups of independent experts (GIEIs).

138. Development of the Impact Observatory: The Commission continued to implement this interdisciplinary project, which was launched on July 2, 2021 as a collaborative platform for interested stakeholders to reflect on, systematize, raise the visibility, and evaluate the impact of actions to defend and protect human rights in the Americas. In particular, it has fostered synergies with similar initiatives, promoted coordinated dialogues with Inter-American Human Rights System stakeholders, and published documents within its lines of work.

139. Analysis of compliance with the recommendations contained in country and thematic reports: The IACHR conducted compliance monitoring activities related to the decisions specified in the reports on the human rights situation in Peru (2023), Brazil (2021), El Salvador (2021), and Mexico (2015), the specific results of which can be found in Chapter V of this Annual Report. The Commission also published the Follow-up report on its recommendations on the rights of persons deprived of their freedom in Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador and carried out activities in connection with the recommendations from the regional thematic report entitled Advances and Challenges towards the Recognition of the Rights of LGBTI Persons in the Americas (published in 2018), which will, in turn, enable publication of the first follow-up report on recommendations with a regional scope. The IACHR further carried out activities related to the Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders and Social Leaders in Colombia (published in 2019), which will pave the way for a second follow-up report on this topic. The Commission likewise made a technical visit to Guatemala in November to follow up on the recommendations it made in the preliminary observations from its July 2024 on-site visit to the country.

140. Analysis of compliance with the recommendations contained in published merits reports: The IACHR continued to examine compliance with the recommendations it has made in specific cases with merits reports that have been published pursuant to Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure. Some of these activities involved enhanced monitoring for specific and strategic cases. The results of these activities are shared in detail in Chapter II.E of this Annual Report.

141. The following is a list of the initiatives being pursued along the aforementioned strategic lines: (A) strengthening the methodology for following up on recommendations; (B) continuation of the special mechanisms; (C) development of the Impact Observatory; and (D) the Inter-American SIMORE. Reference is also made to the (E) analysis of compliance with thematic and country report recommendations, although it is advised to consult Chapter V of this Annual Report for specific details on the recommendations being monitored from the reports on the human rights situations of Peru, Brazil, El Salvador, and Mexico. Lastly, the activities noted above with respect to cases with published merits reports, as well as the results of that analysis, are presented in Chapter II.E of this Annual Report, which also provides access to updated information for each case currently in the recommendation monitoring stage.

1. Strengthening the methodology for following up on recommendations

142. In 2024, the IACHR implemented the update of the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, which had been approved in November 2023. The Guidelines are a technical and public tool that explains the processes for monitoring recommendations issued through different IACHR mechanisms. The updated criteria are intended to be used for: (i) evaluating the information the Commission receives from States, civil society, victims, representatives, and other stakeholders in connection with the monitoring of recommendations; and (ii) analyzing and determining the status of compliance of each recommendation. Additionally, as part of its training and dissemination activities, the Commission shared these criteria with those involved in monitoring processes in an effort to encourage them to both effectively engage and to disclose information helpful for assessing compliance.

143. The IACHR likewise worked to devise internal guidelines aimed at improving processes for issuing and formulating recommendations, specifically in the context of merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention or Article 47 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, thematic reports, country reports, reports that form part of Chapter IV.B of the annual reports, and Commission resolutions. These guidelines are intended to enhance the guidance the Commission offers to States on how to address previously identified human rights needs or issues and to improve its own monitoring assessments.

144. The Commission also worked on developing methodological guidelines for discussions on including the recommendations from country reports, thematic reports, or Chapter IV.B in the follow-up it does in Chapter V of its annual reports. This internal tool aims to provide the IACHR with criteria for determining whether it is appropriate to use Chapter V of its annual reports or other tools to follow up on recommendations in specific cases.

145. Additionally, the IACHR carried out activities aimed at ensuring the incorporation of a gender perspective into the follow-up and implementation of the recommendations it issues via its various mechanisms. To this end, the Commission first prepared internal guidelines on incorporating a gender perspective into the follow-up on its decisions and then developed training for public officials in different countries, with a view to socializing the use of a gender perspective in the implementation of recommendations, especially those aimed at combating discrimination and violence against women, girls, and adolescents.

146. Regarding the above, during a working visit to Brazil in June 2024, the IACHR began its first training for public officials from the Ministry of Human Rights and Citizenship, Ministry of Women, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Program for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, and the National Council of Justice's Monitoring and Oversight Unit. The training will be completed in Brazil in 2025 and then replicated in three additional countries.

147. Also under this strategic line, Commissioner Andrea Pochak participated in the international seminar "National Mechanisms for the Implementation of Structural Decisions" held in Brasilia on May 21, 2024. The event was organized in partnership with the Federal Supreme Court, the National Council of Justice, the Max Planck Institute, and the Konrad Adenauer Foundation. During the panel "Dialogues with the Inter-American Human Rights System," Commissioner Pochak addressed strategies to strengthen compliance with the system's recommendations, including guidelines for their formulation, the creation of special mechanisms, and monitoring strategies. She also discussed the main findings of the report "National Mechanisms to Implement International Recommendations and Decisions Concerning Human Rights," published in 2023.

2. Continuation of the special follow-up mechanisms for Colombia, Chile, and Bolivia

148. As part of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027, the IACHR is promoting the establishment of special mechanisms to follow up on implementation of its recommendations as a novel practice in the context of international human rights law and as specialized tools aimed at providing complementary and targeted follow-up to the recommendations issued in the context of specific and prioritized human rights situations.

149. Mechanisms for following up on recommendations coordinate enhanced efforts around an identified series of recommendations in order to promote implementation and examine levels of compliance. They also facilitate comprehensive analyses of IACHR decisions and recommendations by drawing public attention to cases or situations and provide for periodic and systematic monitoring, resulting in a more in-depth and targeted follow-up by the Commission in keeping with the methodologies established by the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the IACHR. These mechanisms are set up after the Commission has formulated recommendations through the various tools for action it has at its disposal. One of the ways the mechanisms operate is by targeting and prioritizing recommendations according to a planned work timeline.

150. In 2024, the IACHR continued to develop work plans for the follow-up mechanisms for Colombia, focusing on the recommendations made as a result of its June 2021 working visit there; for Chile, regarding the recommendations made in the 2022 report on the human rights situation in the wake of the working visit relating to the social protests in late 2019 and early 2020; and for Bolivia, through the MESEG, with respect to the recommendations contained in the Final Report of the GIEI-Bolivia.

a. Mechanism to Follow up on the Implementation of the Recommendations (MESEG) of the Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts for Bolivia (GIEI-Bolivia)

151. The MESEG Bolivia pursues actions to support and follow up on the recommendations issued in the Final Report of the GIEI-Bolivia. It coordinates and carries out activities via which the IACHR provides guidance to State authorities on implementation of the recommendations being monitored and employs special methodologies to analyze compliance therewith from a programmatic standpoint. The MESEG Work Plan includes the following objectives:

- Develop and employ methodologies for following up on recommendations that lay out procedures and criteria for recommendations focused as a priority on the rights of victims of serious human rights violations.
- Collect and analyze information on the implementation of recommendations subject to follow-up.
- Identify State measures for implementing recommendations subject to follow-up and, specifically, implementation-related progress and challenges.
- Provide technical assistance for implementing the recommendations subject to follow-up identified in the work plan, including quantitative and/or qualitative indicators to measure implementation levels and progress.

- Evaluate compliance with recommendations subject to follow-up, including quantitative and/or qualitative indicators to measure implementation levels and progress.
- Provide technical assistance to the State for developing tools to promote compliance with the recommendations made in the Final Report of the GIEI-Bolivia, which will involve, inter alia, technical assistance for implementing reparation and investigation measures and for developing and evaluating public policies and institutional and legislative reforms in the area of human rights.
- Provide technical assistance to ensure that civil society organizations and victims' organizations are actively involved in processes to follow up on measures implemented by the State to comply with recommendations subject to compliance.

152. Pursuant to the MESEG Work Plan, the main issues that have been addressed, per the Final Report of the GIEI Bolivia, are reparations, investigations, and structural measures in connection with reforms to the justice system, racism, indigenous peoples, and gender violence.

153. The in-person and virtual follow-up strategy has involved different activities over its three years of implementation, including, meetings with victims' organizations, civil society organizations, and public agencies; support during legal hearings for cases included in the GIEI Report; requests for information; capacity-building opportunities for stakeholders, etc. In the last year of work alone, there were more than 40 interventions aimed at assisting and following up on the corresponding recommendations, including meetings with different actors, training, and attendance at hearings for local legal prosecutions.

154. Likewise, in keeping with the objectives set for the MESEG, the IACHR conducted a working visit to Bolivia from July 1 to 5, 2024. During the visit, a series of workshops were held for public servants from agencies involved in implementing or following up on the GIEI-Bolivia Report's recommendations. Preparation of the Second Follow-up Report on the Recommendations of the GIEI Bolivia also moved forward. This report evaluates progress made in compliance with recommendations and identifies the main challenges to implementation. The report is divided into three chapters: the first presents the background, purpose, and methodology. The second addresses the recommendations on reparations (recommendations 1, 2, and 3) and investigation (5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 13), as well as structural recommendations. Finally, the third chapter presents the conclusions, roadmap, and observations of the Inter-American Commission.

b. Joint Follow-up Mechanism for Colombia

155. This Joint Mechanism closely monitors implementation of the recommendations issued by the Commission in June 2021 following its working visit to Colombia to observe the social protests, and, more specifically, the human rights violations reported in the context of demonstrations that began on April 28, 2021. The Mechanism was set up on June 9, 2023 by the IACHR, including its Special Rapporteurship for Freedom of Expression (RELE), together with the State of Colombia and civil society organizations. Additionally, the Mechanism has carried out the activities set out in work plan signed by the IACHR and the State of Colombia, which prioritized 33 recommendations pertaining to social protest, freedom of the press, and racial and ethnic issues.

156. In 2024, the Mechanism continued to monitor progress and challenges in the implementation of measures to comply with the recommendations, which will be presented in a follow-up report. To this end, a first round of dialogues with civil society organizations was completed. Two virtual sessions were held in the first two months of the year—one on reparations and care for victims of eye-related trauma, and the second on protection of journalists, freedom of expression, and internet access, this latter session with the support of RELE. These sessions closed out the seven dialogues with State authorities and five dialogues with more than 20 organizations on different topics that had been held in 2023.

157. Likewise, the Mechanism continued to create spaces for dialogue with approximately 12 civil society organizations, thus enabling a deeper dive into the issues of eye-related violence; discrimination and ethno-racial violence; shortcomings in investigations of events related to the 2021 social protests at the regional level; and the situation of persons detained in the context of the 2021 general strike. The public hearing "Follow-up on recommendations concerning the investigation of rights violations during the 2021 general strike" was held on July 8, 2024 during the Commission's 190th Period of Sessions. The hearing had been requested by organizations from southwestern Colombia in order to share information on human rights violations in Cauca, Valle del Cauca, and Nariño.

158. Additionally, in April 2024, the Mechanism sent requests for information to the State of Colombia, its Ombudsman's Office, and civil society organizations, with specific questions about efforts to comply with the recommendations. The IACHR received the respective responses in May and June. In the case of civil society, 18 organizations provided written responses to the IACHR containing information helpful for evaluating the implementation of the recommendations.

159. The Joint Mechanism also engaged a consultant-expert from the organization Justice Rapid Response, who provided some essential guidelines on psycho-social reparations for victims of eye-related violence in the context of social protests in Colombia. This information will be conveyed to the State to help it move forward in granting reparations to affected individuals.

160. The IACHR is currently in the final stages of preparing the second follow-up report on the 33 recommendations included in the Joint Mechanism's work plan. This report will be presented publicly so as to evaluate and promote implementation of the recommendations.

c. Joint Mechanism for Follow-up on Recommendations for Chile (MESECH)

161. The purpose of the MESECH is to carry out actions to follow up on the recommendations formulated by the IACHR in its Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile. The MESECH employs special methodologies to examine progress in the implementation of the Report's recommendations and coordinates and carries out activities to provide specialized assistance for implementation. To this end, the MESECH has set out the following objectives:

- Develop and implement methodologies to follow up on recommendations that define the procedures and criteria for the recommendations.
- Provide assistance to the State of Chile in developing strategies to advance in implementing the recommendations made in the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile, which include developing public policies and reforming the institutional culture.
- Advise the State of Chile on inter-American human rights standards in order to ensure the effective implementation of the recommendations.
- Work jointly with civil society organizations and victims, to encourage dialogue and participation in compliance with recommendations.
- Strengthen communication channels with civil society organizations to facilitate information sharing on progress in monitoring recommendations using the Inter-American SIMORE as the main tool.
- Evaluate compliance with the recommendations, including indicators to measure level of implementation.

162. The MESECH's work mainly addresses comprehensive reparations and identification of the universe of victims; progress in investigations and judicial proceedings in cases of serious human rights violations; regulation and guarantee of the right to social protest; and institutional police reforms to guarantee the principles of citizen security and respect for human rights.

163. The MESECH conducted its second working visit to Chile on March 18-20, 2024. Commissioner José Luis Caballero Ochoa, the country rapporteur for Chile, led the delegation and was accompanied by the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression, Pedro Vaca, as well as the Chief of Staff and the technical team. During the visit, high-level meetings were held with the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Justice and Human Rights, Interior and Public Security, and Health, as well as with the Supreme Court, the National Prosecutor's Office, the Human Rights Committees of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate, the Office of the Ombudsperson for Children, the National Human Rights Institute, and the Committee for the Prevention of Torture. The delegation also met with representatives of victims of the protests and civil society organizations, as well as with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

164. The Joint Mechanism also engaged a consultant-expert from the organization Justice Rapid Response, who provided some essential guidelines on psycho-social reparations for victims of ocular-related violence in the context of social protests in Chile. This information will be conveyed to the State to help it move forward in granting reparations to affected individuals.

165. In addition, per the Joint Mechanism's work plan, in 2024 the IACHR is set to complete the first follow-up report on the recommendations pertaining to: (i) progress on structural, institutional, and regulatory reforms (32 recommendations); (ii) investigations (13 recommendations); and (iii) reparations (4 recommendations). To this end, the Commission sent a follow-up questionnaire to the State, civil society organizations, and autonomous agencies containing specific questions aimed at identifying measures for complying with the recommendations. In June 2024, the State responded to the IACHR's request for information. In May, the Commission received responses from five civil society organizations and the Office of the Ombudsperson for Children (on May 9). And in July, it received a response from the National Human Rights Institute (July 8).

3. Inter-American System for the Monitoring of Recommendations (Inter-American SIMORE)

166. On June 10, 2020, the IACHR made the Inter-American SIMORE—an online computer tool that systematizes the recommendations formulated through its different mechanisms—available to the public. This system is a prime conduit for receiving and sharing information concerning the monitoring of recommendations. Its objectives center on promoting transparency in efforts to follow up on IACHR recommendations and encouraging the actors interested in compliance with these decisions to participate in the supervision of their implementation based on comprehensive dialogues about compliance that lead to tangible progress.

167. The Inter-American SIMORE pursues the objectives described above in two main ways. First, it allows anyone interested to search and identify, within the universe of decisions adopted by the Commission over the years, the recommendations of interest to them. Secondly, this tool encourages relevant stakeholders, such as OAS Member States, civil society organizations, autonomous agencies—including national human rights institutions—and academic institutions to share information on compliance with the recommendations issued by the Commission in its thematic and country reports, Chapter IV.B of its annual reports, and its resolutions.

168. In this way, the tool offers an accountability mechanism for compliance with international human rights obligations that promotes transparency and the democratization of monitoring processes. At the same time, the compliance-related information shared in it enables the Commission to better monitor the measures States adopt and to identify progress and challenges concerning the guarantee and protection of human rights in the region.

169. The development and implementation of the Inter-American SIMORE has involved different phases, namely, the design and preparation of the tool; systematization of data; development, launch, and socialization of the system; and user training. The entire implementation process involved the participation of the SSRI, the Technology and Systems Section (STS), and the OAS Department of Information and Technology Services (DOITS). Implementation of this tool was likewise supported by the cooperative relationship between the IACHR and the State of Paraguay, which was formalized through a memorandum of understanding adopted in 2017. The support provided by the State of Paraguay included permission for the Commission to use Paraguay's SIMORE Plus source code and technical advice from authorities with experience in the use of the system.

170. Standing out among the actions taken in 2024 to consolidate the Inter-American SIMORE is the classification of 602 additional recommendations, with a total of more than 7,746 decisions uploaded and available in this system.<sup>22</sup> Each recommendation was classified based on different search criteria associated with the following categories: year of issue, mechanism and sub-mechanism, population involved, issue or right addressed, geographic scope or country to which they are addressed, recommended measures, and level of compliance.

171. As part of its strategy regarding training and guidance on using SIMORE, in 2024 the Commission continued to hold training sessions aimed at potential users of the tool on behalf of OAS member States, civil society, autonomous agencies, and academic institutions. Over the course of the year, the Commission organized and conducted virtual training sessions on how to use the Inter-American SIMORE for the State of Bolivia (July 17 for 6 State officials); the Committee for the Prevention of Torture of Chile (May 9 for 1 official); the Caribbean Dialogue Network (October 31); the State of Peru (December 3); and, in person, for civil society organizations in Guatemala (November 28).

172. With respect to the results of the strategy to disseminate and provide training on the system, as of October 2024, the Commission had a total of 228 active user accounts, which enable interested parties to post information concerning follow-up on the Commission's recommendations.<sup>23</sup> Among these accounts, 53 were created for 12 OAS Member States (4, for the State of Bolivia and 2 for Peru in 2024). There are 143 active accounts for civil society organizations and universities, 1 of which was activated in 2024 for an organization in Colombia. Lastly, there are currently 32 active accounts for 14 autonomous agencies, 1 of which was activated in 2024 for Chile's Committee for the Prevention of Torture. These numbers are quite significant considering they provide an important base of strategic actors allied with the Inter-American SIMORE who can upload information on compliance with recommendations through the platform.

173. Regarding the posting of follow-up information to SIMORE, as of December 2024, a total of 441 follow-up factsheets had been uploaded—409 corresponding to the States of Mexico, Honduras, and Peru, 2 from civil society, and 30 from Mexico's National Human Rights Commission. Of this total, 131 were posted in 2024—70 from the State of Mexico, 36 from the State of Honduras, and 25 from the State of Peru. The IACHR is pleased the Inter-American SIMORE is being used for uploading information because it means it is becoming an increasingly essential platform for follow-up on recommendations and, therefore, for the effectiveness of the recommendations the Commission issues.

174. In 2024, the IACHR's SSRI and STS modified the platform to make it more user friendly. The changes aim to simplify the file uploading process for States, civil society organizations, academic institutions, and autonomous agencies and to facilitate access to these files and allow information related to recommendations issued by GIEIs to be added. The adjustments will be available soon. In 2024, both Sections also worked closely with the Treaty Body Capacity Building Programme of the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to link the Inter-American SIMORE with the National Recommendations Tracking Database (NRTD). Such cooperation endeavors to strengthen States' implementation mechanisms with respect to international human rights recommendations.

<sup>22</sup> The recommendations systematized in the Inter-American SIMORE are those issued by the Commission in merits reports, friendly settlement agreements, country reports, Chapters IV.B of its annual reports, thematic reports, precautionary measures, and resolutions published since 2001. Additionally, in 2023, recommendations issued by groups of independent experts formed within the framework of the Inter-American Human Rights System were added.

<sup>23</sup> The number of accounts may not match those reported in 2023 because some account applications were revoked and, in other cases, activation was requested but not granted due to missing data.

175. The IACHR published the Inter-American SIMORE Report: Measures Reported by Honduras. This is the first in a series of documents that seek to raise the visibility and encourage the use of the Inter-American SIMORE. In this first edition, the report presented measures posted by the State of Honduras in the Inter-American SIMORE concerning compliance with the recommendations made in the 2019 Country Report and identified by the IACHR in Chapter V of its 2020, 2021, and 2022 Annual Reports. These measures are considered significant for making substantial progress in the levels of compliance with several of the recommendations.

176. It is worth noting that the Commission has done significant work to make the Inter-American SIMORE a core mechanism for monitoring compliance with recommendations. Specifically, the IACHR is working to position this tool as the central repository of helpful information for identifying and evaluating progress and specific challenges in implementing its decisions by the States of the region. Therefore, since 2023, States with follow-up reports in Chapter V of the Annual Reports have been encouraged to submit information on compliance with the recommendations through this platform.

177. The Inter-American SIMORE is expected to be a highly valuable tool for promoting effective compliance with the Commission's recommendations. The Commission plans to continue its efforts to consolidate the platform as an important mechanism for monitoring compliance with international human rights obligations in the region.

4. IACHR Impact Observatory

178. The Inter-American Commission created the Impact Observatory via Resolution No. 2/19 of September 22, 2019. This initiative aims to create opportunities for reflection, systematizing, raising the visibility, and evaluating the impact of the IACHR's mandate with respect to defending and protecting human rights in the region. The Observatory fosters synergies with similar initiatives and promotes coordinated dialogues with universities, research centers, academic networks, and other communities interested in the Inter-American Human Rights System. To that end, in 2024, the Impact Observatory focused on continuing its strategic line of work.

179. The IACHR Timeline was launched in 2024. This interactive resource is available on the Observatory's website and offers a chronological overview of the Inter-American Human Rights System's main events and evolution, highlighting key moments in the history of the Commission and their impact or noteworthy contributions. This initiative primarily aims to highlight the Commission's work, progression, and impact with respect to the protection, promotion, and guarantee of human rights in the Americas; offer the public an innovative tool for facilitating and encouraging an understanding, analysis, and examination of IACHR efforts; and promote a culture of human rights protection consistent with the standards of the Inter-American Human Rights System through a universally accessible tool. The timeline highlights milestones since the IACHR's creation in 1959, including the entry into force of the American Convention on Human Rights in 1978, the first friendly settlement agreement in 1985, the first precautionary measure issued in 1995, and the first IACHR public hearing held in an indigenous language in 2004.

180. The Observatory also published "Impact: Stories of the IACHR"—a series of accounts about the role and impact of the Commission in promoting and protecting human rights in the Americas since 1959. The interviews included highlight how the IACHR has become a key institution at a regional level by contributing to the reestablishment of democracy as well as to memory, truth, and justice processes over more than six decades. Interviews with relevant figures from the history of the Commission and human rights in the region will be published on a continual basis on this page.

181. In this regard, Mark Schneider—a human rights expert who played key roles in the IACHR's historic onsite visits to Nicaragua in 1978 and Argentina in 1979—was interviewed. He addressed the impact the resulting reports had on the region, including the release of individual political prisoners. The second person interviewed was former Commissioner Roberto Goldman (1995–2004), who highlighted the Commission's role in Fujimori's removal from power and in the dissolution of his regime in Peru, as well as the importance of the IACHR's visits and reports during the military dictatorships in countries such as Chile, Argentina, Paraguay, Uruguay, and Peru, which were key to exposing human rights violations.

182. In addition to the foregoing, the Second Compendium on Progress and Compliance with Recommendations and Other Decisions was prepared in 2024. The Compendium endeavors to highlight the main progress made and measures adopted by OAS Member States in 2023 in response to IACHR recommendations and decisions. The Compendium is framed within the objectives of the IACHR's Strategic Plan 2023-2027, particularly Strategic Objective 1.3, which calls for the Commission to promote compliance with its recommendations and the standards of the Inter-American Human Rights System. It is also aligned with Program 8 (Strengthening of recommendations follow-up and Inter-American SIMORE), and Program 9 (Multilevel dialogue and work agenda with States). This version also includes thematic reports and the Inter-American SIMORE as new sections and examines best practices in the implementation and monitoring of these mechanisms.

183. During 2024, two newsletters were prepared and published, in February and June, that seek to highlight some of the publications of this collaborative platform. In this way, the IACHR Impact Observatory is being presented as an initiative designed to help consolidate and improve institutional mechanisms for compliance with recommendations, and also to develop advocacy strategies, public policies, and legislation for States that positively influence justice and social transformation processes in the region.

5. Analysis of compliance with the recommendations from country and thematic reports

184. In 2024, the IACHR continued its strategy of following up on recommendations from both country and thematic reports, including recommendations that are thematic in scope. In this way, the Commission is seeking to evaluate regional progress and challenges with respect to compliance and to highlight areas for improvement and challenges in the implementation of these decisions.

- Follow-up report on recommendations regarding persons deprived of liberty Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador

185. On June 7, 2024, the IACHR published a follow-up report in which it identified recommendations from the latest country reports addressed to the States of Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador regarding persons deprived of liberty. In the case of Guatemala, the Commission chose seven recommendations from the 2017 Situation of Human Rights Report. For follow-up on Honduras, it selected four recommendations from the 2019 Report after deciding the most recent recommendations from the 2023 on-site visit would be addressed in future reports. In the case of El Salvador, the Commission considered five recommendations from the preliminary observations that came out of its December 2019 on-site visit, which were reiterated in the 2021 Report on Human Rights.

186. The Commission also took into account information provided by civil society organizations, compiled at thematic hearings and included in Chapter V of its Annual Reports, prior to and including 2022, in which it monitors compliance with the recommendations made in the country or thematic reports. The IACHR also requested supplementary information from the three States and examined official sources, intergovernmental organization reports, academic studies, and communiqués from non-governmental organizations. The follow-up report noted that, beyond their differences, Honduras, El Salvador, and Guatemala share historical challenges in implementing international recommendations concerning the rights of persons deprived of liberty and called for effective actions for compliance therewith.

- Follow-up reports on the recommendations from the country reports for Brazil, El Salvador, Mexico, and Peru included in Chapter V of this Annual Report

187. Pursuant to Article 59(9) of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, by means of Chapter V of its Annual Report, the Commission is to prepare follow-up reports in which it highlights progress and challenges related to the effective observance of human rights. In fulfillment of this mandate, in 2024 the IACHR published follow-up reports on Brazil, El Salvador, Mexico, and Peru, which have been incorporated in Chapter V of the present Annual Report.

188. These reports discuss 251 recommendations monitored over the course of the year: Brazil – 98 recommendations; El Salvador – 38; Mexico – 77; and Peru – 36. The decisions in question address matters that include economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights (ESCR); citizen security; access to justice; Afro-descendants; indigenous peoples and traditional communities; women; children and adolescents; LGBTI persons; persons with disabilities; persons deprived of liberty; human rights defenders; human trafficking; forced internal displacement; migration, refuge, and statelessness; memory, truth, and justice; militarization; disappearances; torture; the situation of freedom of expression and journalists, among others.

189. Of the 251 recommendations examined, the IACHR confirmed that 170 are at some level of compliance other than pending, accounting for 67% of the total. Along these lines, 42% (106 recommendations) show partial compliance, 14% (37 recommendations) show substantial partial compliance, and 10% (27 recommendations) have reached full compliance. It was possible to verify an overall progress in the level of compliance with 50 recommendations among the three reports: 26 recommendations in Brazil, 4 in the case of El Salvador and 20 recommendations in Mexico. It is not yet possible to determine progress on Peru because it is the first follow-up report published.

190. The conclusions drawn from follow-up on these recommendations focus mainly on the need to improve disaggregated data collection systems and to implement programs that target vulnerable groups such as women, indigenous peoples, and persons with disabilities. In some of these countries, the IACHR has identified certain progress in the creation of infrastructure and public policies to protect human rights, such as programs against gender violence, the search for missing persons, and improvements to training and professional development at institutions in charge of guaranteeing these rights. The follow-up reports do, however, continue to highlight the need to promote policies to address structural human rights issues in these countries.

- Chapter V – Brazil

191. In 2024, the Commission published a third follow-up report on the recommendations contained in the report on the Situation of Human Rights in Brazil, which was approved in 2021. For this, it requested information from the State, which responded on October 22, 2024. The Commission reviewed the information and included contributions from civil society organizations as well as data collected through its own monitoring, public hearings, and precautionary measures and from international sources. The final version of this follow-up report was approved by the Commission on March 7, 2025.

192. As noted in Chapter V of this Annual Report, in 2024 the IACHR observed improvements to compliance with its recommendations. While none of the 98 recommendations had reached full compliance in 2023, 2024 saw seven at full compliance (7%). In addition, the percentage of pending recommendations decreased from 42% to 33%; and those with substantial partial compliance remained the same, but because some recommendations progressed to full compliance.

193. Some of the achievements noted in the follow-up report include the development of disaggregated data collection systems like the ObservaDH platform, which, with more than 500 indicators, facilitates policy development for vulnerable groups. With respect to gender violence, programs like the "National Femicide Prevention Pact" and "Women Living without Violence," with Brazilian Women's Houses and Referral Centers, stand out. In the case of indigenous peoples, the IACHR noted the creation of the Ministry of Indigenous Peoples and the increase of its budget. Other standouts include programs like "Bolsa Familia" and "Mi Casa, Mi Vida," which seek to reduce inequalities. Thus, while the Commission does acknowledge the persistence of structural barriers and challenges to the implementation of the aforementioned measures, it also notes some progress in the development and expansion of policies aimed at protecting and promoting human rights.

- Chapter V – El Salvador

194. This report followed up on the recommendations contained in the report on the Situation of Human Rights in El Salvador, approved by the IACHR on October 14, 2021. Since publication of that report, follow-up reports have been included in the 2022 and 2023 Annual Reports; these evaluated State compliance measures and pending challenges based on information provided by the State, civil society organizations, and public sources. This third report leaves out the analysis of recommendations 1, 2, 3 (concerning citizen security) and recommendations 12, 13, 14, 15, and 20 (concerning the rights of persons deprived of liberty) because the IACHR published two specific reports in 2024 that impacted follow-up on those decisions.

195. For preparation of this chapter, the IACHR requested up-to-date information from the State of El Salvador, which it received in October 2024. The Commission also gathered input from civil society organizations, valuing their participation in the process. The final version of this report was adopted by the Commission on March 3, 2025.

196. A comparison of compliance from 2023 to 2024 shows slight improvement in the reduction of pending recommendations, which went from 16 to 14, or 37% of the total. Recommendations at partial compliance rose from 18 to 19, or 50%, while those at substantial partial compliance decreased to 4, or 10%. The number of recommendations evaluated that had reached full compliance rose from 3 to 4, or 3% of the total. These numbers reflect progress in partial compliance, but also some setbacks in the degree of substantial compliance.

197. In the follow-up report, the IACHR identified the setback of recommendation 17. This stemmed from the lack of details on the current budget of the Attorney General's Office.

198. The main advances identified in 2024 include a report from the State on progress made by the Ministry of National Defense in systematizing, identifying, and digitizing documents from 1980-1992, which are now available for requests for justice and for victims and family members, in accordance with the law. In addition, the National Missing Children and Adults Search Committees signed an agreement with the Supreme Court of Justice to facilitate access to adoption files and court records and to provide support in exhumations and genetic profiling. These Committees have reviewed archives—including military and police archives—locating more than 1,500 unidentified persons in cemeteries in San Salvador and Santa Ana and have digitized historical records.

- Chapter V – Mexico

199. This chapter followed up on the recommendations contained in the report on the Situation of Human Rights in Mexico, which the Commission approved on December 31, 2015. Since publication of that report, the IACHR has prepared annual follow-up reports, all which were included in Chapter V of its Annual Reports (2016 through 2023) and contained observations from the Mexican State and civil society. In the case of this follow-up report, the IACHR requested information from the State of Mexico on September 4, 2024 regarding compliance measures adopted over the past year. Responses were received on September 30 and October 1 through the Inter-American SIMORE. This follow-up report was ultimately approved by the IACHR on March 19, 2025.

200. In the 2024 analysis, of the 80 recommendations being monitored, 3% were found to be in full compliance, 3% substantial partial compliance, and 3% partial compliance, while 61% remain pending compliance. These results point to limited progress compared to the 2023 report, where the numbers showed

11% full compliance, 17% substantial partial compliance, 57% partial compliance, and 15% pending compliance. Despite some progress, the overall analysis shows a lack of effective implementation in several key areas and, in certain cases, significant setbacks in the protection of human rights. The IACHR reiterates the need for concrete and structural actions to address these deficiencies and advance toward full implementation of its recommendations.

201. In this report, the Commission identified significant and persistent challenges, such as the militarization of public security and a lack of independent accountability mechanisms. It noted with concern the transfer of the National Guard to the Secretariat of National Defense and military involvement in citizen security tasks. In addition, institutional weaknesses with respect to addressing the disappearances crisis, as reflected by layoffs from the National Search Commission and shortcomings in the enforcement of the General Law on Disappearances, show a lack of effective coordination as well as fragmentation in the fulfillment of human rights. At the same time, progress was made in police force professionalization, the adoption of policies for mental health care and addictions, and the development of disaggregated data systems for addressing violence against vulnerable groups.

- Chapter V – Peru

202. This chapter is a follow-up to the report, Human Rights Situation in Peru in the Context of Social Protests, which was published by the Commission in May 2023 following a working visit to Peru on January 11-13, 2023 and which addresses the democratic and social institutions crisis. To prepare the report, the IACHR requested information from the State on November 8, 2024; that information was furnished on December 11, 2024. Additionally, the Commission adopted the final version of this document on March 26, 2025.

203. In 2024, the IACHR found that, of the 36 total recommendations, 23 (64%) remain pending; 11 (30.6%) are at partial compliance; 1 (2.7%) are at substantial partial compliance, and 1 (2.7%) have reached full compliance. The main progress evidenced by the IACHR are the increase in the number of prosecutors specialized in human rights, and the adoption of a permanent and mandatory training and evaluation plan for the security forces involved in the development of demonstrations and in the context of social protests; and the most significant implementation challenges are the need to initiate the process of implementing comprehensive reparations for all persons affected by the events described in the Country Report and to advance in the process of investigation, sanction and reparation for human rights violations.

- Progress in 2024 with respect to implementation of the recommendations included in the Chapter V follow-up reports for Brazil, El Salvador, Mexico, and Peru

204. The table below compares the degree of compliance with the recommendations from these country reports as determined by the IACHR in 2023 and 2024. The idea is to highlight implementation-related progress and setbacks for each country.

Categories/ Percentage of compliance	Brazil		El Salvador		Mexico		Peru

Substantial partial compliance	15%	15%	8%	10%	16%	40%	N/A	3%

<sup>24</sup> In its 2023 Annual Report, the IACHR discontinued its follow-up of recommendations 44 and 45, meaning that in 2024, 40, rather than 42, recommendations were considered. See: IACHR, 2023 Annual Report, Chapter V: El Salvador, December 31, 2023, paras. 353 and 389.

- First Follow-up Report on Recommendations with a Thematic Scope: Advances and Challenges towards the Recognition of the Rights of LGBTI Persons in the Americas.

205. In December 2018, the IACHR published the report, Advances and Challenges towards the Recognition of the Rights of LGBTI Persons in the Americas, which was based on its monitoring of the rights of persons with diverse sexual orientations, gender identities, and gender expressions. The report addresses the challenges faced by LGBTI people in the region, including high levels of structural discrimination and violence. Along these lines, in 2024, the Commission prepared the "First Follow-up Report on Recommendations with a Thematic Scope: Advances and Challenges towards the Recognition of the Rights of LGBTI Persons in the Americas," the first exclusively thematic follow-up report with a regional scope prepared by the IACHR.

206. To prepare the report, the IACHR sent requests for information to the 35 OAS member states and to civil society organizations. Based on the information gathered, the Commission identified the main advances and challenges with respect to compliance with the recommendations, organized by thematic area, as well as obstacles to implementation.

- Second Follow-up Report on the Recommendations from the Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders and Social Leaders in Colombia, published in 2019

207. In 2024, the IACHR carried out a number of activities connected to the preparation of the second follow-up report on the recommendations from the Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders and Social Leaders in Colombia, originally published in 2019. For example, the Commission held a series of dialogues with civil society organizations operating in Colombia and sent them questionnaires. These tools seek to gain access to reports that will make it possible to identify compliance measures adopted by the State in connection with the recommendations contained in the thematic report and to pinpoint the most significant challenges to implementation.

- Technical visit to follow up on the recommendations made by the IACHR in its preliminary observations from the 2024 onsite visit to Guatemala

208. The technical team from the IACHR's Recommendations and Impact Follow-up Section visited Guatemala on November 26-29, 2024 for in-person dialogues with civil society organizations designed to follow up on recommendations. The team held six technical meetings with approximately 30 civil society organizations during which it gathered valuable information for identifying both progress and challenges in implementing the preliminary recommendations made by the IACHR following its onsite visit in July of this year. The team also met with the Presidential Commission for Peace and Human Rights (COPADEH) to share strategies for following up on recommendations and promoting compliance with the recommended measures.

209. Creating opportunities for coordination like these is essential for ascertaining the degree of progress made in implementing recommendations and identifying thematic areas where significant challenges and even setbacks persist in terms of compliance measures. The IACHR plans to continue to pursue this strategy of dialogue to encourage States' progress in complying with its recommendations.

CHAPTER II

THE SYSTEM OF PETITIONS AND CASES, FRIENDLY SETTLEMENTS, AND PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES

A. Introduction

1. This chapter reflects the work of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (“the Commission”, “Inter-American Commission”, or “IACHR”) in 2024 with respect to its system of petitions, cases, friendly settlements, and precautionary measures, as well as its work involving the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. It contains the sections described below.

2. First, Section II describes the work related to the initial review of petitions, the admissibility and merits stages, and the archiving of petitions and cases. This section contains summaries of the most important decisions adopted by the Commission in 2024 in both its admissibility and merits reports, and the final reports published pursuant to Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights (ACHR). Next, it describes the activities carried out by the Commission within the framework of its policy of prioritization of petitions and cases, implemented as part of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027. It likewise describes the hearings and working meetings held by the IACHR, as well as the active transparency and information measures undertaken with the States. Finally, it indicates the steps taken for referral to the Inter-American Court.

3. Secondly, Section III develops the Commission's tasks in its friendly settlement mechanism. This part includes an analysis of the status of compliance with the recommendations in approved friendly settlement reports.

4. Third, Section IV describes the interventions made by the Commission before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. It highlights the matters sent to this court, as well as the written observations presented in cases in process and in supervision of compliance with the judgment. Finally, it mentions appearances and participation in public and private hearings.

5. Fourth, Section V deals with the status of compliance with the recommendations issued by the Commission in the merits reports, published based on Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure and Article 51 of the ACHR.

6. Fifth, Section VI recapitulates the activities conducted by the Commission in its precautionary measures mechanism, as well as its mandate to follow up on provisional measures requested to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

7. Finally, Section VII presents the most representative annual statistics of the work carried out.

B. Petitions and Cases

8. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights is the only international body in the region with the capacity to receive and process individual complaints. Its recommendations, through its articulation with the Inter-American Court, result in binding decisions for States. Beyond individual justice, these decisions have a transformative impact. Through the system of petitions and cases, the Commission has facilitated access to justice for victims of the most serious human rights violations, such as forced disappearance, torture, and extrajudicial executions. It has also declared the incompatibility of impunity figures, such as amnesty laws and statutes of limitation in the region. In addition, it has established the limitation of military criminal jurisdiction for human rights violations, while stimulating the creation of public policies and protection mechanisms for vulnerable and historically discriminated groups. This has made it possible to deal with both structural and situational issues in the region and to achieve the progressive development of the inter-American public order. Thus, the system of petitions and cases not only benefits victims in specific matters but also has the capacity to change situations that affect human rights and generate transformative impacts, through the recommendations of the IACHR, the friendly settlement agreements approved by it or, eventually, the judgments issued by the Inter-American Court.

9. Under the terms of Articles 23 to 48 of its Rules of Procedure, proceedings before the Commission are structured by the following procedural stages: initial study or review, admissibility and merits. Under Article 40 of the Rules of Procedure, at any time during the examination of a petition or case, the parties may reach a friendly settlement based on respect for human rights. Likewise, after issuing the merits report, the Commission may decide to publish it in accordance with Article 47 of the Rules of Procedure and Article 51 of the ACHR, or to send the case to the IACHR Court for the States under its jurisdiction, in accordance with Article 51 of that treaty. Finally, during the processing of a petition or case, the Commission may decide to archive it, as provided in Article 42 of its Rules of Procedure.

10. The following is a description of the work carried out by the IACHR during 2024 in the initial review, admissibility and merits stages. It also provides information on the decisions to close the case.

1. Initial study or review

11. The Commission evaluates the petitions received in accordance with Articles 26 to 34 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure. Under Article 26 of the Rules of Procedure, the initial review of petitions is conducted by the Executive Secretariat, which is responsible for the examination and initial processing of petitions.

12. In the initial review stage, using a general or prima facie standard, the Commission verifies that the petition meets the same admissibility and jurisdictional requirements that will be verified in the admissibility report (Article 27), the difference being that the initial review is based solely on the information provided by the petitioner, because the State is not yet a participant at this stage, since the petition has not yet been opened to proceeding. Thus, this first review is preliminary to the subsequent admissibility review. Furthermore, Article 26.2 of its Rules of Procedure authorizes the Executive Secretariat to request additional information from petitioners, if necessary, to complete a specific aspect of its petition before making a decision at this first stage.

13. Through Resolution 1/19, the IACHR has established rules providing for the possibility that in cases where a decision has been reached not to allow a petition to proceed, the petitioners may request the Executive Secretariat to reconsider it, as long as they do so under the terms specified in the resolution. The Executive Secretariat prioritizes the initial review of new petitions, periodically granting these requests for reconsideration in chronological order, as resources permit.

14. In 2024, the IACHR received a total of 2,883 petitions. In total, at the end of the year, 2,322 petitions were evaluated (80.54%), with 323 decisions to open (14%), 1,923 rejections (83%) and 76 requests for additional information (3%). This rigorous analysis enables the Commission, through its initial evaluation decisions, to safeguard the subsidiary and complementary nature of the Inter-American System, both from a procedural standpoint (when domestic remedies have not been exhausted or the granting of an exception does not apply) and a substantive one (when the acts in question clearly do not constitute a violation of rights recognized in the instruments under its jurisdiction).

15. With respect to the regular flow of new petitions, a pace of work has been maintained that allows for their evaluation within one year of receipt, thus avoiding the accumulation of delays in this first phase of the procedure. This progress is attributed to the methodology currently used by the team since the establishment of the Initial Study Section, which allows for a more agile review of cases. In addition, this section conducts periodic reviews of portfolios from previous years to ensure that no claims are left behind and to prevent the accumulation of unstudied matters.

16. Likewise, considering that there has been more rapid progress in the initial evaluation of petitions, since previous years, the Commission has implemented measures to carry out an orderly and progressive notification of petitions with a decision to process. On this occasion, the IACHR continues to report progress related to the significant reduction of delays in the notification of petitions with a decision to process. In fact, the IACHR closes the year 2024 with 238 petitions pending notification, concerning 20 Member States of the Organization, 64% less than those reported at the close of 2023<sup>1</sup>. This was achieved thanks to the notification of 714 initiations for processing, as established in Article 30 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure. In addition, the Commission decided to archive 153 petitions at this stage, in accordance with Article 42 of the same instrument. Additional information on decisions to archive at this procedural stage will be found under the heading in this chapter devoted to the matter.

17. Chronology was the criterion primarily applied in the notifications under Article 30 of the Rules of Procedure. In turn, the prioritization criteria provided for in Article 29.2 of the Rules of Procedure continued to be applied, with one or more criteria being identified in 19% (136) of the petitions notified in that year.

18. These important achievements are the natural results of the strengthening and specialization of the team, the stabilization of the new GAIA System, the constant evaluation and improvement of internal processes, and the increasingly frequent submission of complaints by electronic means. For example, in 2024, the Commission, through its Executive Secretariat, implemented a new format for acknowledgment of receipt of new petitions that, in accordance with Article 29.1 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, provides relevant information to the petitioning party about the filing of its complaint. Similarly, the preparation of relevant parts of recently received petitions through digital means -either through the Individual Petitions System Portal or the e-mail address intended for such purposes (CIDHDenuncias@oas.org)- was crucial for the more expeditious processing of the cases.

2. Admissibility and merits

19. During 2024, in accordance with Articles 30 to 36 of the Rules of Procedure and 44 to 48 of the American Convention, the Commission approved a total of 133 admissibility/inadmissibility decisions<sup>2</sup> (74 (56%) admissibility and 59 (44%) inadmissibility). In addition, 43 admissibility decisions were taken in cases where the admissibility review was deferred to the merits stage. The latter decisions are confidential, in accordance with Article 44 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure and Article 50 of the ACHR.

20. Likewise, in accordance with the provisions of Articles 37 of the Rules of Procedure, 20 of the Statute and 50 of the American Convention, the Commission adopted a total of 121 reports in which it ruled on the merits of the case. In them, it examined the international responsibility of the States in light of the international treaties under its jurisdiction and issued, when appropriate, its recommendations to make full reparation for the violations caused. Such reports are confidential, in accordance with Article 44 of the Rules of Procedure and Article 50 of the ACHR.

21. In 2024, the IACHR continued to implement Resolution 1/16, on Measures to Reduce the Procedural Backlog in the Petition and Case System, adopted on October 18, 2016. Thus, based on the provisions of Article 36.3 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission notified the deferral of the processing of admissibility to the merits stage in 200 petitions, in which some of the six assumptions provided for in that resolution were met. The failure of the State concerned to submit a first response at the admissibility stage continues to be the predominant criterion applied, with 89,5% (179) of these notifications.

<sup>2</sup> Two of these reports (135/24 y 121/24) accumulate respectively 16 and 3 requests, which means that in the 133 reports of admissibility/inadmissibility approved in 2024, 150 requests were effectively analyzed.

b. Important decisions

• Admissibility

23. Below are summaries of matters declared admissible and currently in the merits stage, based on the gravity of the acts alleged, issues new to the jurisprudence of the Inter-American system, or their relevance in the specific context of the State in question.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> All of these reports are available at OAS: IACHR: Admissibility Reports \(oas.org\).

- Report No. 3/24, P-776-20, Laura S. and Family, United States.

24. The petition concerns the circumstances under which Laura S. (an undocumented migrant) was allegedly taken from the United States to Mexico, after which she was murdered by an abusive ex-partner and is filed on behalf of Laura and her surviving children, known as E.H.F, S.H.F. and A.S.G. It alleges that the State is responsible for the violation of multiple rights of the alleged victims, including the right to life, the right to due process, the right to seek asylum, and the right to protection of family life.

25. By way of background, as alleged in the petition, on June 9, 2009, Laura S. was driving a car in Pharr, Texas, a small city on the U.S.-Mexico border, with three passengers. A local police officer stopped them for an alleged minor traffic violation and demanded that they show proof of citizenship or immigration status. Laura S. and two of her passengers had no such documents as they were living in the United States without authorization at the time. They were subsequently transported to a U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) processing center. Laura S. told CPB agents that she was at risk of being killed by her ex-partner if she was returned to Mexico. She explained that she had previously obtained a protection order against her ex-partner (due to domestic violence). According to the petition, Laura S. was forced to sign a "voluntary return" form before being returned to Mexico in the early morning hours of June 10, 2009. A few days later, the victim was found dead. Her ex-partner was subsequently convicted of her murder.

26. The Commission considered that the expulsion of Laura S. and her subsequent murder could give rise to violations of Articles I (right to life, liberty and security of person), II (right to equality before law), XVIII (right to a fair trial), XXV (right of protection from arbitrary arrest), XXVI (right to due process of law) and XXVII (right of asylum). The Commission also considered that these facts could also establish prima facie violations of the right to a family (enshrined in Articles V and VI) to the detriment of the surviving family of Laura S. At the merits stage of this case, the IACHR will have the opportunity to analyze in depth the State's obligation to protect the fundamental rights of undocumented migrants, particularly those who are at risk of harm if returned to their countries of origin.

- Report No. 19/24, P-449-10, San Pablo Amalí Community, Ecuador.

27. The petitioner alleges that the members of the peasant community of San Pablo de Amalí were affected by a concession granted in 2003 for the construction of a hydroelectric plant known as "San José del Tambo" in a watershed - Dulcepamba River - that they had used ancestrally. They allege that the concession to Hidrotambo was made without community participation, with illegal expropriations and without environmental or water impact studies. On this last point, the petitioners assert that due to the change in the course of the river made by the company and the heavy rains in 2015, 2019 and 2023, there were overflows and floods, as a result of which three people died; the community was isolated for weeks; and there was damage to farms. Although they filed appeals to address these situations, the alleged victims are concerned about Hidrotambo's failure to comply with judicial decisions.

28. There are also allegations of attacks and threats against community members by the Ecuadorian Army Corps of Engineers, who were contracted in 2006 for the construction of the hydroelectric plant. Also, since the protests against the concession granted in 2003, community members have been accused of various crimes, such as sabotage, terrorism, illegal possession of weapons, assaults, and destruction of property against Hidrotambo workers and members of the Corps of Engineers. The criminalization of protests by community leaders and human rights defenders Manuel Cornelio Trujillo Secaira and Manuela Narcisca Pacheco Zapata is denounced.

29. In the admissibility report, the Commission considered that it could be characterized as violations of Articles 4 (right to life), 5 (right to humane treatment), 8 (right to a fair trial), 21 (right to property), 25 (right to judicial protection) and 26 (progressive development) of the American Convention in relation to its Article 1.1 (obligation to respect rights). Likewise, the IACHR reiterated the need for protection for leading human rights defenders that takes into consideration that the attacks against them have a special impact, given that they have an effect that goes beyond the direct victims.

30. Finally, in relation to the right to a healthy environment and access to water, the IACHR recalled the broad definition of these rights. It emphasized that Article 26 contemplates the right to a healthy environment, which protects the components of the environment, such as forests, rivers, seas and others, as legal interests in themselves. In addition, it was noted that the petitioners allege that access to water for the community of San Pablo de Amalí was reduced, which would not only cause harm to personal consumption, but also to their livelihood by affecting livestock and agriculture.

- Report No. 60/24, P-1995-14, San Carlos de Guaroa Massacre, Colombia.

31. In the case of the San Carlos de Guaroa massacre, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights admitted the violation of Articles 4 (right to life), 5 (right to humane treatment), 8 (right to a fair trial) and 25 (right to judicial protection), for the murder of eleven public servants and the attack perpetrated against 43 officials during a paramilitary ambush, in the framework of a drug seizure operation, in which the Army's Seventh Brigade allegedly failed to provide the air reinforcements requested by the officials.

32. The petitioner recounted that the prosecutor's office organized an operation to seize drugs on a farm located in the municipality of San Carlos de Guaroa, department of Meta, in coordination with the army, the DAS, the Attorney General's Office, and the Technical Investigation Corps ("CTI"). It reported that on October 3, 1997, when the Judicial and Military Commission was returning from the operation, it was confronted by armed men who said they belonged to the paramilitary group "Los Buitragueños" and warned them that another 150 armed men were on their way to the site to attack the judicial mission. The petitioner stated that the Judicial and Military Commission requested that helicopters from the Army's Seventh Brigade be sent to provide air support to repel the attack; however, despite their insistence, that Brigade reportedly failed to send reinforcements and, as a result, eleven persons died and another fourteen were wounded, out of a total of 54 officers who participated in the operation.

33. The Commission determined the existence of an unjustified delay in the resolution of the criminal proceeding, since it is a case of partial impunity in which only three of the perpetrators have been convicted, and given that more than thirteen years have elapsed since the defendants were charged, without the process being taken to the trial stage.

- Report No. 75/24, P-1776-20, A.R.H., Colombia.

34. In the report of Mrs. A.R.H. regarding Colombia, the Inter-American Commission admitted for its in-depth analysis possible violations of Articles 5 (right to humane treatment), 8 (right to a fair trial), 24 (right to equal protection) and 25 (right to judicial protection) of the American Convention, and Article 7 of the Convention of Belém do Pará, due to the unjustified delay in initiating a criminal trial for the rape suffered by the alleged victim at the hands of three indigenous men.

35. The petitioner states that Mrs. A.R.H. is a British citizen who was on vacation in Colombia with a group of friends, when on the night of October 21, 2012, she went for a walk at night through the Cabo de la Vela trail, in the department of La Guajira, and got lost. She arrived at a Wayuu Rancheria where she asked for directions and at the exit was intercepted by three men who insisted on accompanying her on her way, but physically assaulted her and gang raped her. The petitioner indicates that they then took her back to the Rancheria, from where she was able to escape in the morning hours the following day. Mrs. A.R.H. reported the incident as soon as possible on October 22, 2012.

36. According to the petition, twelve years after the events, the prosecutor's office has already fully identified the alleged perpetrators, but has not taken steps to capture and charge them. The Commission determined the existence of an unjustified delay in the initiation of the trial, and considered that the allegations made by the State, according to which the delay is mainly due to the lack of collaboration of the indigenous community in the criminal process, the absence of the suspects and the special indigenous jurisdiction over one of the alleged perpetrators who was under eighteen years of age at the time of the events, are elements that should be studied in the merits stage. This case will allow the IACHR to address the collision of rights between the reinforced obligation to investigate violence against women and respect for the indigenous community's native law.

- Report No. 62/24 (inadmissibility), P-2281-17, Associates of Asonacriga, Costa Rica.

37. The Inter-American Commission did not admit petition 2281-17, filed by the National Association of Rooster Breeders (hereinafter "ASONACRIGA") on behalf of 40 persons dedicated to the breeding and fighting of roosters, for the alleged violation of their rights to culture and equality before the law, on the occasion of the issuance of the Animal Protection Law in 2017 that prohibited both activities and established criminal sanctions against those who exercise them.

38. Although the IACHR determined that the petitioner exhausted domestic remedies by filing two unconstitutionality actions, the last of which was rejected on the merits on August 30, 2017, it considered that the petitioner's allegations did not characterize violations of the rights invoked, in the terms of Article 47(b) of the American Convention. The IACHR considered that the claims of the petitioner fall under the doctrine of the fourth instance, since the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice examined the matter on the merits and determined that there was no violation of the rights invoked. In this context, since 1924, Costa Rica has considered that cockfighting offends national public morals, since it does not demonstrate the skill of the gambler, does not respond to a social value and affects the right to a healthy environment and incurs in the crime of animal cruelty.

39. The Commission concluded that the complaint filed by the alleged victims was duly addressed and received a reasoned and lawful denial decision. The Commission also noted that the prohibition of this type of activity was a legitimate restriction of the right to culture because: i) the prohibition of cockfighting is provided for in several laws enacted by the State since 1922; ii) it pursues a legitimate purpose which is the protection of the right to a healthy environment and the care of fauna, and the prevention of other illegal activities that would be generated around this activity; iii) it is necessary for the protection of roosters bred in private establishments; and iv) it is proportional in that it keeps balance and responds directly to the purpose pursued. In this sense, with this decision, it is observed that, in view of the analysis made by the State itself regarding such restriction, the intervention of the Inter-American system was not appropriate, due to the principle of complementarity, since there were no prima facie violations of rights protected by the American Convention.

- Report 94/24, P-170-17, Alan Raí Rehbeim de Oliveira and others, Brazil.

40. The case concerns the tragic fire at the Kiss nightclub in Santa Maria, Brazil, on January 27, 2013, which resulted in 242 deaths and injuries to more than 600 people. The fire was caused by pyrotechnic devices used during a band's performance that set fire to flammable material on the roof. The petition, filed by several associations and councils representing the victims and their families, alleges multiple human rights violations. The petitioners claim that the State is responsible due to the failure to take the necessary measures to prevent the incident, as well as delays in domestic proceedings, impunity and lack of civil compensation for the damages caused. They also complain that three fathers and a mother of the victims of the fire were criminally prosecuted for defamation and slander after publicly questioning the conduct of prosecutors investigating the fire at the Kiss nightclub.

41. The arguments in the case focus on the State's negligence in enforcing safety regulations at the discotheque, which was overcrowded and lacked adequate emergency measures. The petitioners also point to inadequate emergency response and numerous irregularities in the operation of the discotheque, such as lack of proper permits and failures of the authorities to address these problems despite being aware of them.

42. Regarding the exhaustion of domestic remedies and the timeliness of the petition, the project argues that, despite the complexity of the case and the prompt initiation of the investigations, the criminal proceeding was remarkably slow, taking more than ten years without a final resolution. If proven, these facts could constitute violations of the rights protected under Articles 4 (right to life), 5 (right to humane treatment), 8 (right to a fair trial) and 25 (right to judicial protection) of the American Convention.

- Report No. 140/24, P-264-14, Ana Isabel Rivera Narváez and another, Colombia.

43. The petitioners allege grave human rights violations in the "Chinulito Massacre" or "El Parejo Massacre". According to the facts, between September 12 and 15, 2000, 60 paramilitaries with state support massacred eleven people, including women and children, perpetrated murders, torture, arson and forced displacement. The State is accused of direct participation, as well as connivance and lack of preventive action despite alerts and requests for protection. Unjustified delay was alleged in the criminal investigation, with the first sentences delivered only in 2018 and 2019 and no significant progress since then. Although the State mentioned the complexity of the case, the IACHR considered that it is not justified that more than 23 years have passed without concrete results in the criminal process.

44. The Commission noted that the petition focuses on kidnappings, arbitrary detentions, torture and killings, including of a pregnant woman, as well as other acts of violence and harassment, in addition to the allegation of a lack of investigation, punishment and comprehensive reparations. The Commission considered that the facts raised could constitute violations of the rights established in Articles 4 (right to life), 5 (right to humane treatment), 7 (right to personal liberty), 8 (right to judicial guarantees), 17 (right of the family), 19 (rights of the child), 21 (right to property), 22 (freedom of movement and residence) and 25 (right to judicial protection) of the American Convention, in relation to its Article 1(1) (obligation to respect rights); Article 7 of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention and Eradication of Violence against Women (Convention of Belém do Pará); and Articles 1, 6 and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

- Report No. 98/24, P-504-14, Carlos Sánchez Ríos et al.; and Report No. 228/24, P-1204-14, María Elia González Jiménez et al., Mexico.

45. The alleged victims denounce violations of their rights as a result of flooding that occurred in September 2009 in the Valle Dorado subdivision, Tlalnepantla de Baz, State of Mexico. After extensive rains, a section of the water channel called "Túnel Emisor Poniente" collapsed, causing material damage to their homes and cars. The sewage flooded their homes, reaching a height of up to 1.80 meters.

46. The plaintiffs argue that the National Water Commission (CONAGUA) failed to comply with its duty to regulate and supervise rainwater tunnels, by allowing the tunnel to carry sewage when it was originally designed to carry drinking water, and for not having provided the necessary maintenance to prevent its rupture. Also, that the State violated their right to equality before the law and to compensation, since others affected by the same facts, and who followed equivalent administrative and judicial procedures, did receive compensation.

47. On this point, they cited a technical report prepared by the Engineering Institute of the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM), with which they claimed that CONAGUA was negligent. In the judicial proceedings related to both petitions, the judgments unfavorable to the alleged victims interpreted this report as evidence that there had been no omission on the part of CONAGUA. However, in other cases, the same ruling was used to award compensation to other affected parties.

48. Both petitions were admitted by the IACHR, because it was observed that the alleged victims exhausted the same administrative and judicial remedies as in the case of the third parties who did receive reparations; and that the aforementioned report was presented as decisive evidence. Thus, taking into account the similarities identified, the Commission did not consider that the petitioners' complaints were limited to evoking divergent judgments or that they were manifestly unfounded complaints, concluding that the consideration of whether the alleged differential treatment of the alleged victims really existed corresponds to the analysis of the merits of both cases.

- Report No. 66/24, Petition 111-21, A.S.A.H., Mexico.

49. In the instant case, it is alleged that the alleged victim, following an appendectomy performed in a military hospital, was raped while under anesthesia and was infected with a sexually transmitted infection. The petitioner reported the incident, but despite her efforts, including requests for tests to be performed on the nurses, the Public Prosecutor's Office decided not to prosecute, alleging lack of evidence to prove the responsibility of the nurses. The National Human Rights Commission (CNDH), for its part, concluded that there was no evidence of violations of the petitioner's human rights, based on the fact that her infection was not exclusively sexually transmitted. In turn, the Mexican State argued that the petitioner did not exhaust the available domestic remedies and that she filed the petition out of time.

50. The IACHR emphasizes that, despite the steps taken by the authorities, the investigation has been marked by unwarranted delays and appears to lack the due diligence required in cases of sexual violence. The Commission recognizes in the report that the petitioner's allegations regarding the lack of adequate investigation are not unfounded and could constitute possible violations of Articles 5 (right to humane treatment), 8 (right to a fair trial), 11 (right to privacy), 17 (right of the family), 24 (right to equal protection) and 25 (judicial protection) of the American Convention, in relation to its Article 1.1 (obligation to respect rights) and Article 7 of the Convention of Belém do Pará.

- Report No. 35/24, Petition 2658-18, Rigoberto Zárate Luna et al, Ecuador.

51. The alleged victims are the inhabitants of the Rica Playa hamlet, represented by various organizations that allege that the Ecuadorian State is responsible for the contamination of the waters of the Puyango-Tumbes rivers, which has affected their health and quality of life. Ecuadorian mining companies dump toxic waste into the Puyango River, creating a flow of contaminated water that reaches the Tumbes River in Peru. Health authorities have established that this water is unfit for human consumption, with high levels of heavy metals, which also harms local biodiversity and agriculture.

52. In the terms of the report, the Inter-American Commission observed an unjustified delay in the investigation of the contamination of the river, derived from complaints filed since 2017 that as of the date of the report have not had significant progress. Although the Ecuadorian State alleges that it has acted diligently in the investigation, the IACHR considers that more than 14 years without concrete results is not justifiable. The petition was filed in 2018, and the effects of the alleged violations are still present to date.

53. Regarding the characterization of the alleged facts, the Commission noted that the petition focuses on environmental contamination affecting the health of the population, with high concentrations of metals in the blood of the inhabitants, in addition to the complaint about the lack of adequate investigation, punishment and reparation. The IACHR considered that these facts could constitute violations of the rights established in Articles 4 (right to life), 5 (right to humane treatment), 26 (progressive development) and 25 (right to judicial protection) of the American Convention, in relation to its Article 1.1 (obligation to respect rights).

• Merits

54. The following is a description of some of the pronouncements and advances in inter-American standards developed by the Commission in 2024, in the merits reports. These reports are confidential after adoption, in accordance with Articles 50 of the American Convention and 44 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR. Such reports may be made public until the Commission decides whether to send them to the Inter-American Court for those States that have recognized its jurisdiction, or to publish them in accordance with Article 51 of the ACHR and 47 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure.

- Right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection against the removal of judicial authorities.

55. The case refers to the illegal and arbitrary removal of a judicial authority of a high court through an impeachment trial. The IACHR referred to the standards on judicial independence, and in particular, to the guarantee of stability and irremovability in the position of jurisdictional authorities. In this regard, the Commission established that, following the jurisprudence of the Inter-American Court, it is prohibited for the organ or organs that intervene in their processing, deliberation and resolution to review the grounds or content of the decisions issued by the judicial authorities and that their dismissal responds to the legal criteria they upheld in the cases before them. The Commission also emphasized that, in accordance with the "principle of maximum severity", the sanction of dismissal of a judge implies that it should only proceed for "clearly reprehensible" conduct or "truly serious reasons of misconduct or incompetence", since the protection of judicial independence requires that the dismissal of judges be considered as the last resort in judicial disciplinary matters.

- Selection and appointment of judges.

56. In a case related to the selection process of justice operators, the Commission ruled on the applicable standards in this area. Basically, it noted that the Commission and the Court have recognized that by virtue of Article 8.1 of the American Convention, all persons have the right to independent and impartial courts established in accordance with the law. From this right of those being prosecuted, it follows the correlative right of judges to be independent, in such a way that they enjoy reinforced guarantees that are materialized in: adequate selection and appointment processes, irremovability in office, and protection against external pressures. On the other hand, Article 23 of the American Convention obliges States to guarantee conditions of equality in access to public office as part of the content protected by political rights. Thus, from both rights (8.1 and 23 of the Convention), the Commission understood that it follows the obligation of the States to ensure that their selection and appointment processes ensure as a whole the right to judicial independence and equal treatment to those who participate in such processes.

57. In its report, the Commission recognized that the Convention does not establish a single model, and that States have the power to design and organize the appointment and selection processes. However, they are not entirely exempt from examination by the Inter-American system because, as explained above, they are intrinsically related to the rights to judicial independence and political participation under conditions of equality. For this reason, the Commission can make a pronouncement on whether such procedures have been detrimental to those rights in a specific case. Thus, the Commission can examine whether "as a whole" the aforementioned rights were guaranteed, which entails analyzing the manner in which such proceedings were carried out, but, above all,]] [the response given by the State through its courts to the alleged irregularities that could have been denounced in order to safeguard judicial independence and the division of powers. In the specific case, the Commission observed a series of shortcomings, among which were the lack of compliance with its own internal regulations, lack of objectivity and transparency in the processes and lack of adequate and effective resources to address the claims presented, which led it to conclude that the State did not comply with these obligations.

- Right to health of workers engaged in hazardous activities.

58. In a case related to State workers who suffered serious damage to their health as a result of the precarious and unhealthy working conditions to which they were exposed, derived from their work as fumigators and the use of chemical substances, the Commission referred to the standards of the right to work and fair and satisfactory conditions in the area of hazardous activities. The IACHR remarked that States have the obligation to supervise and oversee the working conditions of those who perform these activities, as well as to guarantee acceptable, available and quality medical care to workers. It also established that neither workers nor their families should have the burden of proving the cause of their illness or disability in order to have access to an effective remedy. Finally, the Commission recognized that the right to health includes the obligation to have effective complaint mechanisms available in case of violation in order to guarantee the right of access to justice and effective judicial protection.

- Right to collective property of indigenous peoples.

59. In the context of a claim by indigenous peoples regarding the ownership of their territory, the Commission emphasized that they have the right to be legally recognized as holders of property rights over the lands and resources they have historically occupied, to obtain formal legal title to their lands, and to have such titles duly registered. The IACHR established that the mechanisms related to collective property must imply a real possibility for the people or communities to exercise effective control over their territory. In this sense, the issuance of individual titles to traditional territories claimed by an indigenous people is contrary to the State's international obligations to guarantee the right to collective property. From an approach of equality before the law and its relation to the cultural rights of indigenous peoples, the Commission highlighted the importance of the State providing property titles that recognize the ethnic and cultural specificity of the communities and the effective availability of natural resources for their subsistence.

- Rights of pregnant women deprived of their liberty.

60. The Commission ruled on the case of a pregnant woman who was subjected to acts of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, including acts of sexual violence and forced isolation by State agents while she was deprived of her liberty. The Commission established that States have the obligation to prohibit the application of isolation measures for pregnant women, as they are in an aggravated situation of vulnerability. In addition, the IACHR highlighted the importance of applying a gender perspective when investigating acts of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment against pregnant women and women deprived of their liberty. Finally, it emphasized that the request to submit to a search involving nudity of a woman deprived of liberty before a male official agent is degrading and humiliating and constitutes a form of sexual violence against women.

- Right to due process. Persons sentenced to death penalty and gender stereotypes.

61. The IACHR ruled on gender stereotypes in criminal proceedings and the resulting violations of the right to due process in the case of a woman sentenced to death. The Commission emphasized that the intersection between gender and the socioeconomic conditions of the victim placed her in a situation of vulnerability that, motivated by gender stereotypes on motherhood, obtained her confession through coercion, without the possibility of gathering evidence in the process itself that would allow for an effective defense in relation to such behaviors that were intended to be attributed. The Commission emphasized the prohibition of using coercion to break the expression of a person's will. In the absence of a gender perspective in national courts, the IACHR underscored the obligation of States to judge capital cases with a gender perspective as a key tool to combat these stereotypes and discrimination against women.

- Right to due process. Admission and evidentiary value of evidence produced illegally or irregularly in the context of a criminal proceeding.

62. In a case involving illegal detention and sentencing for terrorism offenses, the Commission developed standards relating to the admission and probative value of evidence produced unlawfully or irregularly in the context of criminal proceedings. In its analysis, the Commission explained that admitting this type of evidence and, in turn, granting it weighty probative value, may constitute a violation of the rights protected by the American Convention, in particular, those related to due process, such as the right of defense or the principle of innocence, even when the production of such evidence did not involve torture or coercion. In line with the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights, the Commission assessed the following elements: i) the weight that the evidence had to support the conviction of the court; ii) the quality and authenticity of the evidentiary material and the existence of doubts about its authenticity; iii) the degree of unlawfulness with which the challenged investigative diligence was carried out, as well as the level of intrusion on the rights of the person concerned; iv) the procedural opportunities that the accused person had to challenge the evidence obtained in an irregular manner; v) whether such challenges were adequately examined; vi) the good faith of the public officials in gathering the challenged evidence; and vii) the general interest of society in investigating and prosecuting this type of crime and its balance with the particular interest of the accused person. In this regard, the Commission emphasized the importance of States adopting appropriate regulatory frameworks that, among other things, dissuade State agents from committing illegal or irregular acts in order to make progress in the investigation of judicial cases and, in turn, strengthen public confidence in the procedures for the administration of justice.

- Victims' right to an adequate and effective remedy in criminal proceedings.

63. In the context of an investigation and punishment of a violent death, the Commission analyzed various human rights treaties, decisions of international courts and bodies, and soft law instruments, as well as the domestic legislation of the States Parties to the American Convention in relation to the ownership and grounds for the right to appeal a judgment in criminal proceedings. Based on the aforementioned sources, in consideration of the provisions of Article 31(1) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and Article 29 of the American Convention and in the development of a teleological, evolutionary and systematic interpretation, the report highlights that the scope of protection of victims in the framework of criminal proceedings has been progressively expanded and their right to access to justice under equal conditions has been recognized. It also highlights the bilateral nature of the right to an effective remedy and the importance that the rights of victims are not diminished in relation to those of the defendant. By virtue of this, the Commission held that the victims or complainants of a crime in criminal proceedings must have adequate and effective remedies that allow them to challenge decisions that affect their interests in terms of truth, justice and reparation and that, to that extent, they must have the possibility of appealing a first instance ruling.

- Children's rights and the State's duty to supervise and oversee day care centers.

64. In the case of a fire in a daycare center that resulted in the death and injury of children, the IACHR recognized that the rights to life and personal integrity of children are reinforced when they are in early childhood. The Commission established that the State has the following duties: i) to adopt the necessary measures to create an adequate regulatory framework to deter any threat to the right to life and personal integrity by State agents or private individuals against children; ii) to design and implement a policy to prevent critical situations that could jeopardize their rights in custody; and iii) to supervise the provision of public interest services when they are provided by private persons. The Commission emphasized that the obligation of supervision is of fundamental importance when it comes to services provided by private institutions responsible for the protection, custody, care and education of children.

- Rights to personal autonomy and health in cases of hunger strike.

65. The Commission made a pronouncement in the case of a person who protested to authorities through various hunger strikes and was subjected to forced feeding in a hospital, where he died. The IACHR stressed that the responses of States to the various forms of protest must be framed within the framework of dialogue and negotiation, as the most effective tools for managing protests and avoiding the use of force. The Commission established that force-feeding can be considered an act of torture, particularly when it is carried out violently. The Commission stressed that the decisions of patients to accept or refuse medical treatment must be respected.

- Rights to movement and residence of human rights defenders.

66. The case refers to the prevention of a human rights defender from leaving the country as an eyewitness to the facts of a homicide. The Commission emphasized that the States are obliged to comply with the requirements of legality, necessity and proportionality for the application of the measure of prohibition from leaving the country, as well as to define precisely and through a law the exceptional cases in which it may proceed. The IACHR established that the States must establish a legal framework, purpose and specific circumstances for the application of the ban on witnesses leaving the country, as its application should not be equated to that of prosecuted persons.

- Children's rights in the school environment.

67. In a case investigating the expulsion of a student from a private school, the IACHR stressed the importance of States promoting non-violent forms of discipline that respect the rights of children in the school environment. The Commission recognized that learning must be based on the recognition of children and adolescents as full subjects of rights and respect for their dignity. The Commission emphasized that States must guarantee effective judicial remedies in the educational sphere, including against acts committed by private parties, such as private schools, and ensure the enforcement of such judgments.

- International adoption of children and adolescents in a situation of human mobility.

68. The Commission developed standards related to international adoption, with special emphasis on its impact on children and adolescents in a situation of human mobility. To this end, it evaluated treaties on the subject, jurisprudence of regional courts, conclusions of United Nations bodies and statements of the Hague Conference on Private International Law. Based on the international corpus juris on the subject, the report indicates that, in international adoptions, as in domestic adoptions, the best interests of the child must be prioritized. In addition, it is necessary to: i) confirm that adoption is the last option and that the biological relatives cannot ensure the best interests of the child in their country; ii) apply the law of the child's domicile or habitual residence regarding adoption requirements; iii) that the adoption be authorized by a competent authority and in accordance with applicable law; iv) guarantee the child the same rights as those applicable in a national adoption; and v) ensure that the child is part of a secure adoption system that respects the best interests of the child.

- Principles of diligence and exceptional celerity in international child restitution proceedings.

69. In the context of a request for the international return of a child, the Commission recalled that judicial proceedings involving the protection of the rights of children and adolescents, particularly those related to their international return, must be processed with exceptional diligence and speed in order to protect the rights at stake. In particular, it held that, when there is a final judgment ordering the return of a child, its execution must be urgent since the passage of time may bring about irreversible consequences in the bond between the child and his or her parent with whom he or she does not live as a result of the retention or wrongful removal. In addition, with regard to reunification, the Commission noted that, in this type of case, the States must immediately implement a visiting regime in accordance with the interests of the children or adolescents and their due protection, which guarantees access to their mother or father and extended family in appropriate conditions, without unnecessary restrictions, in an environment that guarantees the maximum possible normality in the relationship.

- Duty of enhanced due diligence in the investigation of sexual violence against children and adolescents.

70. In a case related to sexual violence suffered by an adolescent girl, the Commission developed the standards on enhanced due diligence and the duty of special protection in investigations and criminal proceedings related to sexual violence against girls and adolescents. In particular, in application of the corpus iuris on children's rights and women's rights, the Commission emphasized that the investigation cannot depend on the existence of an absolute degree of certainty as to whether or not the act to be investigated constituted violence against women. It also stressed that girls and adolescents who are victims of crimes of sexual violence can experience serious physical, psychological and emotional consequences and, sometimes, a new victimization by State bodies when they participate in criminal proceedings, whose function is precisely the protection of their rights. In this regard, it held that, once the facts are known, the States must provide, free of charge, immediate and professional assistance, both medical and psychological and/or psychiatric, by a professional specifically trained in the care of victims of this type of crime and with a gender and child perspective. It also noted that it is essential that in the development of the judicial process and in the implementation of support services, the age, level of maturity and understanding, gender, sexual orientation, socioeconomic status, skills and abilities of the girl or adolescent, as well as any other factor or special need in which she finds herself, be taken into account without any discrimination whatsoever.

- Right to life. Obligations of States with respect to children and adolescents deprived of their liberty in privately run detention centers.

71. In a case concerning the death of an adolescent deprived of his liberty in a detention center for children and adolescents, the Commission reiterated the inter-American standards on the obligations of States regarding the comprehensive protection of children and adolescents deprived of liberty, and evaluated the duties of States when they delegate security tasks in the aforementioned detention centers to private providers. In this regard, it recognized that States are obliged to respect and promote the rights of children and adolescents - which includes the duty to ensure that private service providers act in accordance with the corpus iuris on the matter - and indicated that allowing the private sector to provide services or run institutions whose duties are related to children or adolescents does not in any way reduce the State's obligations; on the contrary, this circumstance requires the State to rigorously inspect, control and monitor these institutions and/or companies.

- Right to life. Use of force by state agents in maritime territory.

72. In a case related to the use of force by State agents against an unflagged vessel, based on Article 29 of the American Convention, the Commission invoked international instruments, such as the treaties on the Law of the Sea, to complement and strengthen the interpretation of the human rights recognized in the treaties of the Inter-American System. In its Report on the Merits, the IACHR formulated considerations on the obligations of States regarding the use of force, incorporating, where relevant, principles developed in normative instruments on the Law of the Sea and the jurisprudence of the Tribunal of the Sea and the European Court. In relation to preventive actions to the deployment of force, the report indicates that the legislation on the matter should: (i) ensure that the use of force is compatible with the rights to life and integrity, in accordance with the standards developed in the Inter-American System; (ii) establish that the use of force at sea should not be applied during innocent passage; (iii) indicate the obligations of assistance to those in distress at sea; (iv) set limits to the right of pursuit at sea; and (v) establish that the use of force in maritime surveillance operations is limited to the exercise of the right of defense. Regarding concomitant actions, the Commission reiterated the requirements of legality, legitimate purpose, necessity and proportionality. Likewise, in relation to subsequent actions, the IACHR evaluated the duty of States to provide assistance to vessels in critical conditions that require assistance, and the right of coastal States to pursue in light of the obligations derived from the rights to life and personal integrity. On the other hand, the Commission recognized that, although State agents may act firmly in the face of suspicions of crimes, the provisions of the Law of the Sea must be interpreted in a manner consistent with international human rights law, and may not be used to justify the excessive use of force.

- Right to life. Principle of maximum restriction on the use of lethal force in the context of protests.

73. In a case of deprivation of life and personal injury caused by the actions of state agents in the context of a social protest, the Commission indicated that the general principles on the use of force, applied to the context of protests and demonstrations, require that the management of security operations be carefully and thoroughly planned by persons with specific experience and training for this type of situation and under clear action protocols. The decision to use, or not, all types of force require consideration of the risks involved, which may contribute to an escalation of tension levels. Specifically, the Commission noted that the principles of moderation, proportionality and progressiveness must be observed, among others, in cases of police operations in demonstrations or mass gatherings that generate situations of violence or affect the rights of third parties. In addition, the IACHR emphasized that potentially lethal force cannot be used only to maintain or restore public order or to protect legal assets less valuable than life, such as property, and that the protection of life and physical integrity in the face of imminent threats may be a legitimate objective for the use of such force.

c. Published merits reports

74. During 2024, in accordance with the provisions of Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure and Article 51 of the American Convention, the Commission decided to publish the following two merits reports:

- Report No. 8/24, Case 13.083, Akawaio Indigenous Community of Isseneru and its members (Guyana).
- Report No. 1/24, Case 12.549, Nasry Javier Ictech Guifarro (Honduras).

75. In addition, progress was made in processing the reports that the IACHR decided not to send to the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court (see infra para. 114), in accordance with Article 47 of the Rules of Procedure. In the first half of 2025, the Commission will prioritize the publication of such reports.

d. Activities involving petition and case management

76. As part of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027, the Commission continued to adopt measures to promote access to more timely inter-American justice. These actions are aimed, on the one hand, at increasing productivity in final decisions on pending cases and reducing the portfolio; and, on the other hand, at implementing Resolution 4/23 to improve the management and speed up the decision of the most urgent and serious cases that have an impact on the inter-American system, given the existing procedural backlog.

77. The IACHR strengthened the administrative structure of its Deputy Secretariat for Petitions and Cases, consolidating the initial study and admissibility of petitions into a single technical team. This, following the implementation of a pilot program with favorable results that demonstrated that specialization optimizes human talent and favors greater consistency between the analysis of the initial study and the criteria adopted by the Commission in its admissibility decisions. At the same time, to improve the management and productivity of cases at the merits stage, the Commission increased the number of case coordinators from one to three, which began operating in May 2024, developing their work methodologies and organization. A focal point has also been created to deal with cases that have reached a decision on the merits and are being followed up for publication or eventual referral to the Inter-American Court.

78. The purpose of these measures is to maintain an adequate initial evaluation of the petitions during the same year in which they are received, to achieve greater consistency between the preliminary study and the admissibility decisions, and to gradually increase the production of substantive reports. It is also expected to increase the number of follow-up actions, working meetings or technical advice that may be required in cases that are in the transition stage, as well as to expedite the processing of Article 47 of the Regulations for the adoption of published reports.

79. Likewise, in order to continue strengthening the technical capacity of the human talent in charge of managing petitions and cases, in 2024 the Human Rights Continuing Education Program that began in 2023 was continued. This program has included a series of training activities given by experts, aimed at the staff of the Executive Secretariat, to strengthen and update their knowledge on relevant topics and standards. It has also continued to produce an informative Bulletin of the Deputy Executive Secretariat for Petitions and Cases, to share information among the technical teams on the inter-American standards developed in the approved merits reports and the judgments issued by the Inter-American Court, among other topics.

80. In application of Resolution 4/23, the Commission has progressively implemented its Policy on Prioritization of Petitions and Cases. A review of the portfolio of cases in the merits and admissibility stage was carried out. The purpose of this process was to homogeneously categorize the cases into main and subsidiary issues. Next, between February and March 2024, the IACHR set up a space to receive contributions from States and civil society acting as petitionary parties. Its purpose was to identify cases with the potential to develop the inter-American public order and consolidate the scope of human rights standards relevant to the region, in compliance with the provisions of paragraph seven of Resolution 4/23. A total of 114 contributions were received.

81. In this context, during the first months of the year, the Commission carried out a study of the portfolio of cases and considered the inputs received in the consultation, those provided by the special, thematic and country rapporteurships, as well as those from the precautionary measures and follow-up of recommendations teams. With this, the IACHR carried out the annual planning of the issues to be studied.

82. During 2024, while continuing to advance chronologically in the study of cases, priority was given to those related to serious human rights violations, without prejudice to the other categories established in resolution 4/23, which have allowed the IACHR to pronounce itself on situations that are circumstantial, structural, and related to the Inter-American public order, such as those recapitulated in the section on relevant decisions in this report. At the same time, priority has been given to the advancement of urgent cases, such as those related to the international restitution of children and adolescents, and the possible imposition of the death penalty. The Commission will continue with this planning exercise during 2025, in order to be able to verify the results obtained with respect to this first planning exercise. It should be noted that next year, the IACHR will extend the application of this policy to the portfolio of cases in the admissibility stage, which will enable it to have a broader and more strategic vision of its entire portfolio of petitions and cases.

83. In order to manage more efficiently the progressive increase in the adoption of decisions, and in alignment with the Strategic Plan 2023-2027, particularly with the objectives SO1/P1 on Streamlining processes and progressively reducing the procedural backlog and SO7/P29 on Improving accountability and transparency of institutional processes, the IACHR instructed the Executive Secretariat to preliminarily inform the parties about the adoption of the merits reports. This measure will close the dispute between the parties pending formal notification, in accordance with the provisions of Article 44 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure. It should be clarified that the communication that will be sent will not trigger the time limit established in Article 51 of the American Convention, with respect to the States that have accepted the contentious jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court, nor will it affect the confidential nature of the report issued in accordance with Article 50 of said instrument. This practice, which is intended to give predictability to the parties that they will be notified of a decision on the merits, will begin to be implemented as of 2025.

84. On the other hand, in implementation of Resolution 1/16<sup>4</sup> on measures to reduce the procedural backlog, in order to give effect to Article 36.3 of its Rules of Procedure, 2024, the Commission approved 43 reports in which the treatment of admissibility was deferred until the debate and decision on the merits. These assumptions are based, on one side, on the need to implement decisive measures to reduce the procedural backlog, to ensure that the passage of time does not prevent the Commission's decisions from having a useful effect and; on the other, on the objective of acting more expeditiously in cases of gravity and urgency, as provided for in Article 36.3.b of the Rules of Procedure.

85. For its part, with a view to optimizing the management of physical files of active petitions and cases, the Executive Secretariat implemented a new easy-access tool designed to enable the staff of the Deputy Executive Secretariat for Petitions and Cases to request physical files and manage their timely return.

86. Finally, as regards the use of better technologies to speed up case management, 2024 was a period of stabilization of the new central system for processing cases of the System of Petitions and Cases and Precautionary Measures (Sistema de Peticiones y Casos y Medidas Cautelares -GAIA-), and of strengthening the capacities of the members of the Executive Secretariat. During this year, the sending of duly foliated pertinent parts became an increasingly frequent practice in the processing processes. It is important to highlight that the initial challenges in processing times, derived from the gradual implementation of the new system in 2023, have been overcome. As a result, the year 2024 concludes with a reduction in the number of communications pending processing in active contentious cases, compared to the situation prior to the launch of GAIA. Taking advantage of the new functionalities offered by the GAIA system, the Commission, through its Executive Secretariat, also established a new format for acknowledging receipt of new petitions that, in compliance with Article 29.1 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, provides relevant information to the petitioning party on the filing of its complaint.

3. Archiving

87. Regarding the petitions under initial review, the Commission, as part of its annual portfolio management exercise, individually examined the cases in which, having previously advised the petitioning party of the possibility of archiving based on the provisions of Article 42.1 of the Rules of Procedure<sup>5</sup>, no response had been obtained. Consequently, on December 31, 2024, the IACHR decided to definitively archive 153 petitions under initial review.

88. On December 4, 2024, the Commission archived 152 cases in contentious proceedings, in accordance with Article 42 of its Rules of Procedure. Except in those situations in which the withdrawal was expressed by the petitioning party in accordance with Article 41 of the same Rules of Procedure, the IACHR notified the archiving without having received any response.

89. Pursuant to Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, the members of the Commission did not participate in the debate or in the decision to archive the matters in respect of which they are nationals. In turn, Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido and Commissioner Andrea Pochak, based on Article 17.3 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, expressed their willingness to abstain from participating in the study and decision to archive the cases presented regarding the United States of America and petition P-2744-19 (Bolivia), respectively. The Inter-American Commission accepted their decision to excuse themselves, and therefore said Commissioners did not participate in respective examinations.

90. It is important to remember that, since 2018, the Commission has considered it necessary to confirm the interest of the petitioning party in continuing with a proceeding when a period of inactivity is registered for a period of three years. In the absence of such confirmation, the Commission may proceed to close the case. In turn, the Commission has understood the petitioning party's failure to submit observations on the merits, a requirement set forth in Article 37.1 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, as a serious indication of lack of interest that may result in the case being closed under the terms set forth in Article 42.1.b of the same instrument.

91. The following is a list of the petitions in process, in which during 2024 the IACHR decided to archive them.

a. Petitions under initial review

No.	Country	Petition	Year	Procedural stage
1	Argentina	P-2137-17	2017	Initial Review
2	Argentina	P-455-21	2021	Initial Review
3	Argentina	P-520-21	2021	Initial Review
4	Argentina	P-774-21	2021	Initial Review
5	Argentina	P-654-22	2022	Initial Review

<sup>5</sup> With respect to the criterion set forth in Article 42.1.b of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR considers as unjustified the procedural inactivity of the petitioning party of more than 2 years in the petitions under initial study, with a decision to process them. Another serious indication of lack of interest in the processing of a petition, in the terms of the aforementioned article, is the failure to respond to a request to complete the relevant parts of a complaint for its eventual notification to the State.

4. Portfolio meetings and information for member states

92. In order to guarantee access to information related to the fulfillment of its mandate and to foster a culture of active transparency of the information under its control, the Assistant Executive Secretariat for Petitions and Cases, at the request of the Commission, provided information on the status of the portfolios of petitions and cases pending before the IACHR on 24 occasions, with respect to 17 Member States of the Organization of American States (OAS).

93. Of these 24, 17 consisted of virtual, in person and hybrid (virtual and in person) meetings for detailed review of their portfolios, which were sought with respect to the States of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, United States of America, and Bahamas. The remaining six dealt with specific requests on the status of portfolios of petitions and cases presented by Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Mexico and Paraguay.

94. This unprecedented volume of interactions reported by the Executive Secretariat in 2024 required a strategic approach to identify the portfolios that, due to their complexity or volume, would benefit the most from the synergies generated in these meetings between the technical teams of the Executive Secretariat of the Commission and the States. It also required exhaustive updating, verification and transparency of data, which resulted in significant progress towards a more efficient management of the portfolio of cases before the Inter-American Human Rights System.

5. Hearings on contentious cases

95. During 2024, in accordance with Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission held a total of eight public hearings on pending cases. In such hearings, the Commission received testimonial or expert evidence and heard arguments from the parties involved.

96. Some of the hearings were held at the request of the parties, while others were called ex officio by the Commission, since they were related to matters under its review and deliberation. This allows the Commission to have more evidence on the issues under debate between the parties, as well as updated information before issuing its pronouncement.

97. The Commission held hearings on the following cases:

- Case 13.159, Communities of the Maya Q'eqchi' People v. Guatemala, February 26, 2024.
- Case 13.583, League of Displaced Women v. Colombia, February 26, 2024. <sup>6</sup>
- Case 12.325, Community of San José de Apartadó vs. Colombia, July 8, 2024. <sup>7</sup>
- Case 14.950, José Miguel Vega Bas et al. v. Chile, July 10, 2024.
- Case 15.169, Michael Brown Jr. and Lesley Mcfadden v. United States, July 11, 2024. <sup>8</sup>
- Case 13.811, Carlos Pizarro Leongómez v. Colombia, November 12, 2024. <sup>9</sup>
- Case 14.712, Martín Ezequiel Bustos Concone v. Mexico, November 13, 2024. <sup>10</sup>
- Case 14.838, PRM. JS et al. v. Brazil, November 14, 2024.

6. Cases in transition

98. Article 51.1 of the ACHR establishes that, after having been notified of the report issued in accordance with Article 50 of the same instrument, the Commission may submit it to the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court within a period of three months. However, based on the requirements established in Article 46 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR may suspend this term and extend it for a specific period, provided that the State has demonstrated its willingness and ability to implement the recommendations, and expressly and irrevocably accepts the suspension of the term. This has led to the implementation of the Commission's recommendations in the merits reports of several cases, in which it plays an active role in monitoring the status of compliance with the recommendations. The IACHR currently has 101 cases at this stage, which are reviewed periodically to decide in a timely manner on whether to send them to the Inter-American Court or to publish them.

99. As part of the Commission's active role in this phase, it continued to hold working meetings on the issues in transition, which were chaired by the commissioners and rapporteurs of each country. During 2024, the IACHR held 27 working meetings with the parties, both in person and virtually. The purpose of the meetings was to obtain information on the progress made by the State to comply with the recommendations issued by the IACHR in its merits reports and to support the parties in the dialogue on the measures necessary for compliance. As a result of these meetings, among other specific progresses, the creation of roadmaps for the implementation of the recommendations, the elaboration of proposals and counterproposals to reach compliance agreements, the beginning of the implementation of rehabilitation measures, and the delivery of schedules of actions to be taken in the short and medium term were obtained. The working meetings also served to evaluate the possibilities of continuing to follow up on compliance in the transition stage or submitting the case to the contentious jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court.

100. The Commission recognizes and appreciates the goodwill of the States that participated in these meetings, which were attended by delegations that included authorities from the various institutions involved in compliance with the recommendations and provided updated information on progress in the implementation of various measures. It also appreciates the participation of the victims and their representatives and the information they have provided.

101. In 2024, the IACHR continued to send written communications during this stage, requesting specific information or preparing technical notes to promote compliance with the recommendations and ensure comprehensive reparations in accordance with the standards of the Inter-American system. Within this framework, the Commission prepared four technical notes. Three of them included precedents on compensation or satisfaction measures, based on cases decided by the Inter-American Court, with the objective of facilitating dialogue between the parties. The IACHR also evaluated a specific proposal for pecuniary reparation presented by the State, verifying its conformity with Inter-American standards. Another technical note had the purpose of clarifying the inclusion of certain victims in relation to the right to residence and freedom of movement, in accordance with a Report on Admissibility and Merits, which allowed the State to identify the universe of victims and advance in compliance. Finally, the Commission issued an additional note in which it analyzed the scope of the obligation to investigate diligently, effectively, with a gender perspective and within a reasonable period the human rights violations declared in the report, considering the effects of res judicata and the statute of limitations.

102. When granting an extension under the terms of Article 46 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, the States involved have had to demonstrate their willingness and ability to comply with the recommendations of the respective merits report for the Commission to extend the deadline again. In 2024, the Commission adopted a total of 362 decisions in which it evaluated the granting of a new extension, publications or referrals of cases to the Inter-American Court.

103. During 2024, information was received on progress made by some States in complying with the merits reports. In particular, the Commission recorded 340 measures taken by the States, including the payment of compensation amounts to victims or negotiation processes between the parties based on the principle of agreement; progress in judicial proceedings in the domestic jurisdiction to investigate the human rights violations declared in the report, including the identification and conviction of some perpetrators; progress in identifying the fate or whereabouts of missing victims; measures to provide health services to victims by State institutions; the allocation of housing and the signing of compliance agreements with measures of economic reparation, satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition. The IACHR noted favorably that some States carried out the trainings recommended in the merits report. The topics include, among others, standards related to the use of force, effective judicial protection for persons in vulnerable conditions, due diligence in the investigation of cases of gender-based violence and disappearance of persons.

104. Within the framework of such compliance, the Commission actively sought to promote the negotiation processes and compliance agreements with the recommendations contained in the merits reports. During 2024, the Commission took note of the signing between the parties of 15 agreements on compliance with cases in transition and continued to follow up on the progress of 11 agreements that had been signed in previous years. The IACHR also participated in person as a guest at two events in which the State apologized to the victims and acknowledged international responsibility at this stage.

105. These activities allow the Commission to advance in the implementation of the strategic plan, adopting measures to ensure that more victims of human rights violations obtain justice by complying with the decisions of the merits reports and guaranteeing comprehensive reparation, which implies strengthening the management and attention capacities of the cases that are in transition in its Deputy Secretariat for Petitions and Cases.

C. Advances and challenges on negotiation and implementation of friendly settlements agreements

1. Introduction

106. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, presents in this chapter the work of promoting negotiations and compliance with friendly settlement agreements, as well as for the visibility of the efforts made by the IACHR in the framework of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027, to potentiate the friendly settlement mechanism, as an effective tool for the attention of matters that fall under the system of individual petitions and cases, as well as for obtaining full reparation by victims of human rights violations and to expand the use of the friendly settlement procedure as a strategy to address the procedural backlog<sup>11</sup>.

107. The Commission addresses in this chapter first the relevant results in the negotiation processes and implementation of friendly settlement agreements, including the agreements fully complied with in 2024; the specific advances in the implementation of measures of friendly settlement agreements; the new agreements signed during the year; and the new friendly settlement follow up processes. On the other hand, the activities for the promotion of friendly settlement agreements carried out during the year are addressed, which includes the actions taken to promote negotiations and compliance with agreements; as well as the steps taken to promote the exchange and dissemination of good practices on the mechanism. Likewise, the compliance status of the friendly settlement reports approved by the Commission is presented in the light of article 49 of the American Convention and the good practices and setbacks observed in 2024 regarding friendly solutions are raised.

108. Lastly, it should be noted that in accordance with the provisions of Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Regulations, the Commissioner President Roberta Clarke, a national of Barbados, did not participate in the discussion or decisions of the reports concerning said country; nor did Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido, First Vice-President, or Commissioner José Luis Caballero, Second Vice-President, nationals of Colombia and Mexico, respectively, in matters concerning said countries; nor did Commissioners Andrea Pochak, with respect to Argentina, and Gloria Monique de Mees, in matters concerning Suriname, nor did Commissioner Edgar Stuardo Ralón Orellana, in matters concerning Guatemala.

<sup>11</sup> In this regard, the Commission notes that, starting in 2019, it has published the progress and setbacks regarding friendly settlements as an independent chapter in its Annual Report for greater visibility of the mechanism and its transformative impact. See IACHR, 2019 Annual Report, Chapter II, Section G, Friendly Settlements.

2. Relevant results on negotiation and implementation of friendly settlement agreements

a. Friendly settlement agreements fully implemented in 2024

109. The Commission notes with satisfaction that, in 2024, progress was made in terms of full compliance with eleven friendly settlement agreements. Listed below are the matters that reached full compliance this year:

- Case 14.770, Report No. 211/23, Alicia María Jardel, Argentina
- Case 14.781, Report No. 212/23, Luis Carlos Abregu, Argentina
- Case 14.714, Report No. 215/23, Francisco Naishtat, Argentina
- Petition 799-06, Report No. 93/18, Isidoro León Ramírez Ciro, and others, Colombia
- Case 13.370, Report No. 80/20, Luis Horacio Patiño Agudelo, Colombia
- Case 13.642, Report No. 41/21, Edgar José Sánchez Duarte, Colombia
- Case 13.758, Report No. 337/21, Franklin Bustamante Restrepo and relatives, Colombia
- Case 13.775, Report No. 63/22, Gabriel Angel Gómez Martínez and family, Colombia
- Case 13.436, Report No. 67/22, José Oleaguer Correa Castrillón, Colombia
- Petition 735-07, Report No. 110/20, Ismael Mondragon, México
- Petition 494-04, Report 20/08, Romeo Edgardo Vargas Romero and others, Perú

110. The Commission considers that this progress is very important, and commends the states of Argentina, Colombia, Mexico and Peru for advancing in the full implementation of friendly settlement agreements and urges them to continue making use of the mechanism for resolving matters that are pending in the system of individual petitions and cases by having recourse to this non-contentious procedure.

b. Progress toward implementing measures of friendly settlement agreements in 2024

111. The Commission is pleased to share the progress in the implementation of measures in 67 friendly settlement agreements. In addition, it was observed in the Commission's analysis that, in 2024, 11 petitions and cases reached total compliance, and 16 cases advanced towards partial compliance.

112. On the other hand, the Commission verified that progress was made in implementing 143 measures, attaining total compliance with respect to 85 measures of reparation; partial substantial compliance with respect to 25 measures of reparation; and partial compliance with respect to 33 measures of reparation. Of the 143 measures that saw progress in 2024, 55 are structural and 88 are individual in nature.

113. In this regard, the Commission noted that the countries that registered the highest levels of progress in the implementation of measures were, in the first place, Colombia, with 82 advanced measures in 2024, of which 43 achieved full compliance, 20 partial substantial compliance and 19 partial compliance. Likewise, Argentina made progress in complying with 40 measures (25 with full compliance, 2 with partial substantial compliance, and 13 with partial compliance). Additionally, Mexico advanced in 7 measures, 5 with total compliance, 1 at the partial substantial level of compliance and 1 at the partial level.

114. Other States that showed progress in the implementation of friendly settlement agreements were Chile, who managed to achieve total compliance with 3 measures and substantial partial compliance with 1 measure; Ecuador, who fully implemented 3 measures, and Brazil, who fully complied with 2 measures. The States of Guatemala, Honduras, Panama and Peru achieved total compliance with 1 measure each, respectively, and finally, Paraguay made progress with substantial partial compliance with 1 measure.

115. The following is a detail of the specific progress in each case by country in the levels of total, partial substantial, and partial compliance with the clauses of the friendly settlement agreements as of 2024:

116. The Commission values the efforts of the states of Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay and Peru, and welcomes the progress they have made with implementing the clauses in the friendly settlement agreements that contain commitments to victims and their next of kin and on their compliance with the settlement agreements approved by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. The Commission reiterates that said compliance is vital for legitimization of the friendly settlement mechanism and for forging trust in the agreements and in the good faith of States wishing to comply with their international commitments. At the same time, the Commission wishes to take this opportunity to urge all States using the friendly settlement mechanism to complete compliance with measures currently being implemented, so that the IACHR can certify total compliance with the friendly settlement agreements and stop monitoring them.

c. Charts on progress with friendly settlement agreements

117. Based on the above, following is a graphic description of progress observed with the implementation of friendly settlement agreements in 2024:

d. New friendly settlement agreements signed

118. In 2024, a total of 19 new friendly settlement agreements were signed. They are listed next, in chronological order by the date they were signed:

119. The Commission commends the states of Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Mexico and Paraguay for their openness to engage with dialogue with the various victims and their representatives to find, together, formulas for making reparation to the victims of human rights violations in the aforementioned matters, taking account of their needs and interests by reaching a friendly settlement.

e. New friendly settlement monitoring processes

120. The Commission announces with satisfaction that, in 2024, 13 reports approving friendly settlements were published, for which these matters came to be monitored, for the first time, in the follow up mechanism of the Annual Report of the IACHR. They are listed next, in alphabetical order by the state concerned and chronological order based on the date the Commission’s decisions were issued:

Report No.	Petition/Case	Country
27/24	Caso 14.835 Lilia Ana Villagra	Argentina
28/24	Caso 14.836 Lydia Cristina Vieyra	Argentina
29/24	Caso 14.940 Horacio Ricardo Neuman	Argentina

164/24	Caso 14.802 José Alirio Cañas Morales and Family	Colombia
162/24	Caso 14.073 Zenon Alberto Medina López and Relatives	Mexico

121. Consequently, the Commission commends the states of Argentina, Colombia, and Mexico and urges them to continue taking actions to comply with those friendly settlement agreements that remain under follow up stage, for the next Annual Report in 2025. For more information on the content of these agreements and the levels of implementation achieved, visit to the IACHR Friendly Settlement Reports website.

3. Activities carried out to promote friendly settlements in 2024

a. Activities to foster the negotiation and implementation of FSAs

122. As regards the line of work that involves actively facilitating the negotiation of and compliance with friendly settlement agreements, in 2024 the Commission held 23 working meetings to foster the negotiation and implementation of friendly settlement agreements in different matters from Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and Paraguay. Moreover, the Commission facilitated 36 technical meetings to foster friendly settlement efforts and/or preparatory meetings over the year, in various matters from Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Guatemala, Mexico, Paraguay and Dominican Republic. Accordingly, in 2024 a total of 59 dialogues tables were facilitated with the parties to advance in friendly settlements.

123. Throughout 2024 the Commission held 14 periodic meetings to review the portfolios of negotiation and monitoring of friendly settlements with Argentina (1); Bolivia (1); Brazil (1); Colombia (2); Ecuador (1); Guatemala (1); Honduras (1); Mexico (2); Panama (1); Paraguay (1); Peru (1) and Dominican Republic (1).

124. In 2024, the Commission issued 9 press releases on friendly settlements<sup>15</sup> and maintained the practice of making visible the progress in the homologation and total compliance of friendly settlement agreements to encourage the authorities in charge of the execution of those measures to follow through on the commitments assumed by the States in friendly settlement agreements.

125. In 2024, the IACHR cleared up 23 matters under the friendly settlement mechanism through 13 homologations, 3 instances of ending negotiations at the request of the parties, 1 matter decided motu proprio under Resolution 3/20 and 6 matters archived in the monitoring phase due to inactivity, loss of contact with victims or at the request of the petitioner.<sup>16</sup>

126. The Commission also provided technical advice to the parties in 9 matters subjected to the friendly settlement mechanism involving Bolivia, Colombia and Peru providing information on the mapping of victims, general guidance to draft FSA and/or objective criteria on relevant background of financial compensation under friendly settlement agreements and judgments of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

127. Lastly, the Commission participated in 9 ceremonies for signing and/or acknowledgements of responsibility in compliance with various friendly settlement agreements involving Bolivia, Chile and Colombia,<sup>17</sup> including:

No.	Case/ Petition	Name	Country	Date MM/DD/YY

128. The Commission appreciates and welcomes the good will of the States of Bolivia, Chile and Colombia in implementing these important measures of redress—in face-to-face, virtual and hybrid modalities—and for disseminating them via various media and networks.

b. Activities to promote the sharing and dissemination of best practices in friendly solutions and to develop tools to facilitate access to information regarding the friendly settlement procedure for users of the Inter-American Human Rights System (IAHRS)

129. Relating to the IACHR’s line of action on the promotion and dissemination of good practices in friendly settlements, it is worth noting that, in 2024, different training activities were carried out, as well as the dissemination of good practices regarding friendly solution.

130. Accordingly, in January 2024, dialogues were held with the African Court of Human Rights to provide technical support in building its capacity to develop its friendly settlement mechanism and to prepare internal guidelines and handbooks for users of the mechanism within said institution. This initiative demonstrates the positioning of the friendly settlement procedure in the Inter-American Human Rights System and the work of the IACHR as an international benchmark in alternative dispute resolution and mediation.

131. Likewise, from May 21 to 24, 2024, a working visit to Colombia was conducted, led by the Commissioner Country Rapporteur, with the main objective of promoting the implementation of concrete measures of comprehensive reparation within the framework of petitions and cases of friendly settlement and cases in transition. In this context, Commissioner Caballero and the technical team of the IACHR Executive Secretariat participated in important events, including the signing of friendly settlement agreements and acknowledgements of responsibility, and also facilitated working meetings to follow up on the implementation of friendly settlement agreements approved by the IACHR.

132. On the other hand, on July 12, the Dialogue between the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) was held, during which the Friendly Settlement Mechanism of the IACHR was presented. The meeting addressed the concerns of the members of the African Commission about the mechanism, conceived as a process that allows the parties to negotiate an agreement for the resolution of the situation brought before the IACHR and its consequences, according to the needs and interests of the victims and separate from the contentious procedures. This space for dialogue highlighted the importance of fostering innovative practices in alternative dispute resolution, promoting comprehensive reparations for victims, and strengthening inter-regional collaboration on human rights. This dialogue reflected the mutual commitment to advance methods that prioritize restorative justice and strategic cooperation between the two institutions.

133. Finally, on November 13, 2024, a meeting was held with the focal points of the United Nations, the European Court of Human Rights, and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, with the aim of exchanging experiences on the progress and best practices in friendly settlements and identifying areas for cooperation.

4. Status of compliance with reports on friendly settlement agreements, approved pursuant to article 49 of the American Convention on Human Rights

134. In compliance with its conventional and statutory attributes, and in accordance with article 48 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR makes the follow-up to its own decisions regarding friendly settlements. This Commission practice began in 2000 and from this moment onwards, information has been requested annually from parties of different petitions and cases to follow-up on friendly settlement reports published in light of article 49 of the American Convention and update the status of compliance of each of the matters under the supervision of the IACHR. Additionally, the IACHR receives information at hearings or working meetings held during the year, and which is also taken into consideration for the analysis of the state of compliance with friendly settlement proceedings as appropriate in each case.

135. For the elaboration of this Chapter, the Commission requested information to the users of the follow up of friendly settlement tool and analyzed in this report the information submitted by the parties until October 15, 2024. Any information received thereafter did not make it into the Chapter could be taken into consideration for the 2025 Annual Report. The parties were duly advised of this information in the context of the requests for information for the preparation of this Chapter of the Annual Report. It should also be noted that the Commission took into account on exceptional basis information received after the closing date in those cases, where working meetings were held in the framework of the working meeting days as well as during the Period of Sessions that generated subsequent actions carried out based on the work lines developed in those meetings or in those matters in which the parties sent partial information within the term provided and after the period they added complementary or clarifying information.

136. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights continues to make efforts to communicate more clearly the progress made toward implementing friendly settlement agreements. To that end, the Commission prepared detailed compliance monitoring sheets on each active case, identifying both the individual and structural impacts in each case. In the table listed below the link to the record analysis of compliance with each one of the friendly settlement agreements that are currently under follow up stage can be accessed, and the level of general compliance of each case can be observed along with the percentage of execution of the agreements. This allows the parties to see the level of implementation of the agreement beyond the most categories of compliance, partial and pending. Finally, it should be pointed out that in this opportunity the Commission maintained the categories of analysis of the information supplied by the parties,<sup>18</sup> as well as the categories for the individualized analysis of the clauses of the friendly settlement<sup>19</sup> and the categories of the general analysis of the fulfillment of the friendly settlement agreements traditionally used.<sup>20</sup>

- Relevant information provided: the information provided is relevant, updated and extensive on measures adopted related to compliance with at least one of the clauses of the friendly settlement agreement, within the period specified by the IACHR.

- Information provided that is not relevant: the information was provided within the period specified by the IACHR but does not refer to the measures adopted regarding compliance with at least one of the clauses of the friendly settlement agreement pending compliance, is outdated, or is repetitive to the information presented in previous years without presenting new information.

- Information not provided: information on measures adopted to comply with clauses of the friendly settlement agreement was not provided; The IACHR is expressly informed that the information will not be presented; or extension(s) to provide information were requested and, in the end, the information was not provided.

- Total compliance: a FSA clause in which the State has begun and satisfactorily completed the measure for compliance.

- Partial Substantial compliance: a FSA clause in which the State has adopted relevant measures for compliance and has provided evidence thereof, but the Commission finds that the measures for compliance thereof have still not been completed.

- Partial compliance: a FSA clause in which the State has adopted some measures for compliance, but it still must adopt additional measures.

- Compliance pending: a FSA clause in which the State has not adopted any measure to comply with the measure; or the steps taken have still not produced concrete results; or the measure(s) adopted is/are not relevant to the situation under examination.

- Non-compliance: a FSA clause in which, due to the State's conduct, it is not possible for the State to comply, or the State has expressly advised that it will not comply with the measure.

<sup>20</sup> The Commission decided to maintain the traditionally used categories of comprehensive examination of petitions and cases, which are:

137. In light of the above, the commission observes that the status of compliance with friendly settlement agreements in 2024, is as follows:

1. Case 11.307, Report No. 103/01, María Mericiadri de Morini (Argentina) <sup>23</sup>		X			100%	Closed
2. Case 11.804, Report No. 91/03, Juan Angel Greco (Argentina)	Link to monitoring sheets on matters related to reports of friendly settlement agreements of Argentina that are subject to monitoring		X		63%	Active
3. Case 12.080, Report No. 102/05, Sergio Schiavini and María Teresa Schnack (Argentina)			X		50%	Closed 2024
4. Case 12.298, Report No. 81/08, Fernando Giovanelli (Argentina) <sup>24</sup>			X		60%	Closed
5. Case 12.159, Report No. 79/09, Gabriel Egisto Santillan			X		100%	Closed

• Total compliance: those cases in which the State has fully complied with all of the FSA clauses published by the IACHR. The Commission considers as complied with all the clauses of the FSA in which the State has started and satisfactorily completed the measures for compliance of all the clauses of the agreement.

• Partial compliance: those cases in which the State has partially complied with the FSA clauses published by the IACHR, either by having complied with only one or some of the FSA clauses, or through incomplete compliance with all of the FSA clauses; those cases in which the State has fully complied with all of the FSA clauses published by the IACHR except for one of them, with which it has been unable to comply.

• Compliance pending: those cases in which the IACHR considers that there has been no compliance with the FSA clauses published by it, because no steps were taken to that end; or the steps taken have still not produced concrete results; because the State has expressly indicated that it will not comply with the FSA clauses published by the IACHR; or the State has not reported to the IACHR and the Commission has no information from other sources to suggest otherwise.

<sup>21</sup> The cases in which there is a repetition of the matter number followed by a letter refer to negotiation processes in which the figure of the disaggregation was applied due to the existence of different beneficiaries of separate FSA; to address different claims according to the interests of the victims and/or petitioners, or because of the loss of contact and/or lack of will of any of the victims and/or petitioners to advance through the friendly settlement procedure, among other scenarios.

<sup>24</sup> See IACHR, Annual Report 2019, Chapter II, Section G. Friendly Settlements. At the petitioner's request, the Commission decided, in accordance with Article 42 and 48 of its Regulations, to cease monitoring compliance with the friendly settlement agreement and close the matter. The IACHR considers that the State failed to comply with the justice measures and legislative reforms enshrined in the friendly settlement agreement.

The Commission notes the lack of progress in compliance with the friendly settlement agreement since its approval. Therefore, on January 8, 2019, the IACHR decided, in accordance with Articles 42 and 48 of its Rules of Procedure, to conclude its monitoring of compliance with the friendly settlement agreement and to close the matter. The IACHR considers that the State did not comply with any of the measures set forth in the friendly settlement agreement and therefore compliance with it is pending.

5. Good practices in implementing Friendly Settlement Agreements observed in 2024

138. On this occasion, the Commission learned that the State of Brazil has created, within its National Attorney General's Office for International Affairs, a specialized team to advance friendly settlement agreements and compliance with recommendations. Within this framework, dialogues have been held with the State to bring together the experiences of other States in the region in the use of the friendly settlement mechanism and thus contribute to efforts to install institutional capacity to move forward more quickly in the use of the FSP. The aforementioned is consistent with the Commission's pronouncements through which it has highlighted as a good practice, in terms of administrative frameworks or structures for the negotiation and implementation of friendly settlement agreements, the creation of specialized groups or units to promote negotiations, with personnel trained in human rights, the Inter-American Human Rights System and alternative dispute resolution.<sup>158</sup> The Commission hopes that this will soon translate into greater participation by the Brazilian State in the use of the friendly settlement mechanism and invites it to continue to develop actions to this end.

139. On the other hand, the Commission recognizes as a good practice of the Colombian State that its National Agency for Legal Defense (ANDJE) designed a microsite, as part of an impact strategy, through a specialized section on its website dedicated to friendly settlements and compliance with the recommendations issued by the IACHR. The site has a modern, innovative, and accessible design so that people can consult and follow up on the measures of satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition agreed upon in the framework of the FSAs. Likewise, the Commission learned that the Colombian State launched a series of podcasts on the friendly settlement mechanism, to provide information to the public on What are friendly settlement agreements?: How to access a friendly settlement agreement? and, Are friendly settlement agreements fulfilled? Through this initiative, as reported by the State, it aims to disseminate the friendly settlement mechanism to victims, their representatives and State entities, in everyday and simple language, to educate the public about this procedure. The director of International Legal Defense, as well as the friendly settlement group and the ANDJE communications team participated in its preparation. Furthermore, the Colombian State announced the launch of the *"Informative Newsletter on Friendly Settlements and Compliance with Recommendations in Colombia: a mechanism for reconciliation"* developed by ANDJE itself, which will be published annually, in order to monitor the implementation of high-impact measures.

140. To this regard, the Commission values and welcomes these initiatives presented by the Colombian State and considers that these efforts not only allow for greater visibility of the work carried out by Colombia in the area of friendly settlements, but also contribute to the preservation of the historic memory of the cases, to the dignity of the victims, and to the non-repetition of the events that gave rise to these friendly settlements.

141. Similarly, the Commission positively highlights the signing of FSAs and/or recognition of responsibility in a hybrid format in the following cases with respect to the Colombian State: *Case 13.711, Levis Elcener Centeno Cuero*, *Case 12.843, Luis and Leonardo Caisales Dogenesama*, *Case 12.842, Brainer Alexander Oquendo Santana*, *Case 13.892, Denys del Carmen Olivera and family*, *Case 13.602, Nelson Enrique Giraldo Ramírez and family* and in the *Case 14.802, José Alirio Cañas Morales and family*. Regarding the latter, the State also *produced an audiovisual piece on the dignity of the victim*. To this respect, the Commission again highlights that this good practice of using electronic media and social media, which has allowed for greater participation of the victims, their families and their representatives, as well as the participation of the Commission, through its country rapporteur and the technical team of the IACHR, in these spaces that are very important in the friendly settlement mechanism and allowing for greater proximity with the States and the victims.

6. Challenges and setbacks in implementing Friendly Settlement Agreements observed in 2024

142. The Commission has identified the persistent lack of inter-institutional coordination as one of the main challenges in some States in the region. The Commission has noted the lack of consultations that must be held prior to the expression of interest by the State to initiate a friendly settlement process, with the entities that are responsible for the negotiation and implementation of friendly settlement agreements. The Commission has also noted the lack of efforts by States to design transition mechanisms for outgoing and incoming authorities in the contexts of changes of administration. In this regard, during the current year, the Commission noted a significant delay in the time taken by some States to provide a response on the viability of the victims' requests within the framework of the FSA negotiations, despite the fact that these matters had already been transferred to the negotiation portfolio, and on which the round of consultations on the technical viability of the negotiation and confirmation of the willingness of the authorities involved should have been carried out before deciding to initiate the process of dialogue. This has resulted in an unnecessary drain on the technical and material resources of both the State and the victims of human rights violations, who have placed their trust in the friendly settlement mechanism and are awaiting a resolution within this framework.

143. The Commission again regrets the lack of progress in the implementation of the friendly settlement agreement signed in the Case 13.017A (Relatives of Victims of the Military Dictatorship, October 1968-December 1989), despite that five years have elapsed since its approval. In this regard, the Commission once again urges the State of Panama to make efforts to implement these measures, reminding it that, as subjects of international law, States have the obligation to comply with the decisions of the bodies of the Inter-American system.

144. Furthermore, in relation to Case 14.093 Ernesto Ramírez Berrios of Colombia, the Commission observed, in the framework of the follow-up carried out this year, that the 135th Judicial Prosecutor's Office II for Administrative Affairs of Bogotá filed an appeal against a decision issued by the Administrative Tribunal of Cundinamarca, through which the conciliation agreement was approved in the process of Law 288 of 1996, to comply with the economic compensation measure agreed upon in the FSA reached in that case and which was the subject of Approval Report No. 285/22 of the IACHR. Among the arguments of the Prosecutor's Office were issues of alleged incompetence of the ANDJE to assume international State responsibility in these instruments, and the appeal is currently pending a decision before the Council of State.

145. The Commission regrets that the State, through the actions of the Office of the 135th Judicial Prosecutor II for Administrative Matters of Bogotá, has not recognized the commitment made in this friendly settlement agreement, and it expresses its concern about the legal effects that this stance could have in this case in particular, and in other proceedings of this nature. The Commission recalls that Law 288 of 1996 arose precisely as a measure of reparation within the framework of the friendly settlement reached in the Case of the Trujillo Massacre, and in such a way that the Colombian State recognized the need that existed, at the time, to create a mechanism that would allow the victims of human rights violations access to fair and timely compensation.

146. The Commission further notes that the repeated practice of the Colombian State has been to include a standard clause in almost all of the friendly settlement agreements it has signed in the last decade, which includes the procedure of Law 288 of 1996 for economic compensation. This has achieved significant compliance levels that are a benchmark for other States in the region, which is why the actions of the Office of the Attorney General are surprising and disregards the work that the Colombian State has done in the area of friendly settlements through the ANDJE.

147. The Commission recalls that the mechanism of Law 288 of 1996 has been highlighted as a good practice due to the positive results achieved by the Colombian State in the execution of this type of measures<sup>159</sup>, but also because it has the effect of allowing the depersonalization of the negotiations and the management of expectations that might not otherwise be met in the framework of these dialogues when the parties become entangled in the negotiation regarding the amounts for economic compensation. By establishing an independent and regulated procedure, legal certainty is given to the victims that the economic compensations will be set in accordance with the applicable jurisprudential criteria for the type of violation suffered. This allows the friendly settlement processes to advance more promptly, both in the stage of defining the content of a FSA, and in its implementation, with the exception of the situation observed in this case, which is manifestly exceptional.

148. In addition, it should be noted that the Commission's experience shows that building a relationship of trust between petitioners and States is essential, both in the negotiation phase and in the phase of compliance with friendly settlement agreements. This implies that the States must comply fully and in good faith with the commitments assumed within the framework of the friendly settlement agreement<sup>160</sup>.

149. Therefore, the Commission urged the Colombian State to move forward as soon as possible with the ruling on the appeal pending before the Council of State, so that the substance of this end of the agreement materializes as soon as possible.

150. From another part, the Commission reiterates that the greatest challenges to moving forward with friendly settlement processes involve some States' lack of willingness to execute the measures of reparation contained in the agreements, particularly the measures related to issues of justice. It is therefore crucial for States to develop mechanisms for independent, impartial, and specialized investigation to enable them to make it a priority to comply with completing the investigations derived from international decisions.

151. The Commission also emphasizes that many of the clauses subject to supervision through this monitoring process are too broad and require the parties to hold a mutual dialog and keep minutes or memoranda of understanding to determine the content and definition of what was agreed upon, establishing components for clear measurement and roadmaps for short-term work to complete execution. The Commission makes itself available to users of the friendly settlement mechanisms to facilitate dialogue focused on securing that consensus.

152. Lastly, the Commission reminds that it is fundamental for States to move forward in establishing administrative, legislative, or other mechanisms to streamline the processes to negotiate and implement friendly settlement agreements and guarantee that the commitments made are fully executed.

D. Cases before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights

153. The Commission continued to exercise its conventional and statutory mandates before the Inter-American Court during 2024, which included the following areas: i) submission of contentious cases; ii) appearance and participation in public and private hearings; iii) observations on requests for advisory opinions submitted by the States, and iv) submission of written observations on State reports in cases in monitoring of compliance.

154. Likewise, as of September 1, 2022, the Court began notifying its rulings in a public manner. In the acts of notification of the judgment, the Court reads the main points and resolutions of the corresponding judgment. During 2024, the Commission participated in 26 acts of judgment reading.

155. The activities and results obtained during the year are described below.

1. Submission of contentious cases

156. The referral of cases to the Inter-American Court is based, in accordance with Article 45 of the Rules of Procedure, on the criterion of obtaining justice, which is determined based on the status of compliance with the recommendations issued and other criteria established in said Article<sup>161</sup>, including the position of the petitioning party.

157. In accordance with Article 51 of the American Convention and Article 45 of the Rules of Procedure, during the year 2024, the Commission submitted 26 cases to the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court. In those cases, when evaluating the request for additional extensions, the Commission observed that, despite the existence of State efforts in some cases, substantive progress had not been made in complying with the recommendations, and therefore, taking into account the need for justice and reparation for the victims, it decided to proceed with the submission.

158. The referral of these cases allows the Inter-American Court to rule on the responsibility of the States and issue the corresponding reparations in favor of the victims. In addition, the Court will have the opportunity to develop or deepen its jurisprudence in relation to the aspects of Inter-American public order raised by these cases, as well as on the scope of the rights recognized in the American Convention on Human Rights and other Inter-American instruments, with an impact that transcends the interest of the parties involved.

159. The Commission has 60 active cases that have been processed by the IACHR Court. In the proceedings before the Court, the IACHR participates in all matters, in accordance with the provisions of the American Convention and the Court's Rules of Procedure. Among other actions, the Commission presents its observations in relation to possible preliminary objections and acknowledgements of responsibility, offers expert evidence when the inter-American public order is affected in a relevant manner, and presents its oral and written observations in relation to the arguments of the parties, as well as with respect to the evidence that may be presented subsequently. Likewise, the IACHR participates in the hearings in those cases in which the Court summons it.

160. Among the public policy aspects of the matters submitted to the Inter-American Court in 2024 are the following: i) the obligation of States to investigate with due diligence affectations to the right to life, integrity and health of children in the framework of the care provided in health centers; ii) the measures that States must adopt to comply with their obligations of supervision and oversight of cultural activities carried out by private individuals in public spaces; iii) the requirements to be observed in contentious electoral processes in order to be compatible with the American Convention, in particular, with respect to reasonable time, the participation of the parties and third parties involved, as well as with respect to the precautionary measures that may be imposed in these circumstances; iv) the standards applicable to the protection of the right to freedom of expression in the face of public interest speech and the incompatibility of strategic lawsuits against public participation (SLAPP); v) the criteria relating to the use of lethal force in the framework of the obligation of States to guarantee security and maintain public order within their territory in situations of protests and demonstrations; vi) the right of the elderly with disabilities in the area of health and the duty of States to guarantee the rights of persons under their custody in geriatric institutions; vii) the principles applicable to the sanctioning processes against justice operators; viii) the obligations of States to guarantee the right to collective ownership and control of lands and resources, as well as the cultural rights of indigenous peoples in voluntary isolation and initial contact, with respect for the principle of self-determination of peoples and the principle of no contact; ix) the duties of States with respect to the labor-related business activities of workers, including those who are members of trade unions; x) the obligations of States with respect to the right to associate in non-governmental organizations or non-profit associations for the defense of human rights; and xi) the general obligations of States with respect to the right to autonomy or self-government of indigenous and tribal peoples.

<sup>161</sup> Such complementary criteria are: a. the position of the petitioner; b. the nature and gravity of the violation; c. the need to develop or clarify the jurisprudence of the system; and d. the possible effect of the decision on the legal systems of the member states.

161. With regard to the number of cases sent to the Court this year, it should be noted that, as stated above, the Commission found that in several of the cases in the transition stage, the requirements for granting an extension in the terms of Article 46 of the Rules of Procedure had been met, so that at the time it did not consider it necessary to send the case to the Inter-American Court. Additionally, the Commission emphasizes that it decided not to send 13 cases to the Inter-American Court and to proceed with their publication, since it did not consider that there was a need to obtain justice in such cases that merited sending them to the Inter-American Court, in the terms of Article 45 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR and 51.1 of the ACHR, fundamentally, given the substantive progress of the recommendations of the merits report.

162. The following is a description of the cases that were submitted to the Inter-American Court, including a breakdown by date of submission and by country.

- Carlos Alberto Lopez de Belva and Arturo Jorge Podestá vs Argentina.

163. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Argentine State for violations of due process committed in the criminal proceedings against Arturo Jorge Podestá and Carlos Alberto López de Belva, in the exercise of their professional duties as attorneys representing a third party in a civil suit for damages that their client brought against the Municipality of La Matanza.

164. Mr. Podestá and Mr. López de Belva were linked to a criminal proceeding in the framework of case No. 22,2040, which was processed before the First Instance Criminal Court No. 5 of the Judicial Department of San Martín for the crime of attempted fraud, which was initiated as a result of a criminal complaint filed by the General Counsel of the Government of the Province of Buenos Aires for alleged unlawful acts committed during the process of execution of a civil judgment in which the petitioners acted as attorneys.

165. The petitioners acted as counsel for Mr. Amilcar Cascales in a suit for damages initiated as a result of the interruption of the concession he enjoyed over the Municipal Slaughterhouse of the Municipality of La Matanza. In June 1987, the Municipality of La Matanza was found liable for breach of contract and ordered to pay a sum of money to Mr. Cascales. During the process of execution of the judgment, which lasted several years, the victims processed on behalf of their client a series of partial settlements according to a methodology of updating the amount of money owed due to the hyperinflationary process that the country was going through, which were consented to by the legal representatives of the municipality. In November 1990, the intervening judge decided to carry out an expert accounting appraisal of all the settlements made. The result of this expert appraisal was a financial loss for the municipal government's coffers due to the inaccurate calculation of the liquidations, which resulted in an accumulative effect of interest that caused the debt to grow disproportionately.

166. On May 7, 1991, Criminal Court No. 5 of San Martín, headed by Judge Juan Carlos Sorondo, issued an indictment against the petitioners for the crime of attempted fraud against the public administration. In the indictment, the intervening magistrate made assertions that implied an advanced opinion regarding the criminal liability of the petitioners. On October 8, 1991, the magistrate issued a remand order, in which he again expressed his opinion regarding the criminal liability of the petitioners, stating that "there is semi-evidence of the criminally responsible co-perpetration in the facts described of Arturo Jorge Podestá, Carlos Alberto López de Belva...". The same magistrate, on March 1, 1993, sentenced Mr. López de Belva and Mr. Podestá to 2 years and 9 months imprisonment.

167. In response to the decision of March 1, 1993, the petitioners' attorneys filed an appeal and a motion for annulment in which they alleged that the proceedings were null and void due to the prejudgment allegedly incurred by the trial judge in advancing his opinion during the preliminary investigation. On December 26, 1995, Chamber I of the Court of Appeals of the Judicial Department of San Martín decided to dismiss the nullities and uphold the conviction imposed on the victims. The petitioners also filed an appeal of inapplicability of the law alleging the unconstitutionality of Article 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in that it established only "the applicability of the extraordinary appeal for cases in which the final judgment reverses an acquittal or imposes a sentence of more than three years' imprisonment."

168. On March 21, 1996, Chamber I of the Criminal and Correctional Court of Appeals of San Martín decided not to uphold the claim of unconstitutionality of section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and denied the appeal of inapplicability of the law. On December 16, 1997, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Province of Buenos Aires declared "well denied" the appeal of inapplicability of the law and the appeals for annulment filed in favor of Mr. Podestá and Mr. López de Belva. Against this decision, the petitioners' attorneys filed an extraordinary federal appeal, which was denied by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Province of Buenos Aires and their subsequent appeal was dismissed by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation through a decision dated March 31, 1999. On December 29, 1999 the Supreme Court of Justice of the Province of Buenos Aires held that the sentence imposed had the authority of res judicata.

169. On the other hand, two magistrates who intervened in the case Municipalidad de La Matanza v. Amilcar Cascales, sued the petitioners for damages related to the complaint and request for impeachment that the petitioners filed against the judges for allegedly improper performance of their duties. In the context of these proceedings, on October 31, 2000, the Judge in charge of Civil and Commercial Court No. 1 of La Plata ordered Mr. Podestá and Mr. López de Belva to pay 40,000 and 50,000 pesos, respectively, in compensation. Both sentences were confirmed by the First Chamber of the First Court of Appeals and the federal extraordinary appeals were declared inadmissible by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation.

170. In its Merits Report 291/21, the Commission noted that, although the successive intervention of the same judicial authority in the preliminary investigation stage and subsequently in the plenary or trial stage is not in itself incompatible with the guarantee of an impartial judge, judges who - in accordance with the judicial organization of the jurisdiction in which they serve - are called upon to intervene in both the pre-trial and trial stages must exercise their functions with special care not to perform acts that could be seen as advancing an opinion or that could give rise to a well-founded fear of partiality on the part of the parties. In the instant case, the Commission considered that in the resolutions of May 7 and October 8, 1991, the examining magistrate included evaluations on the degree of conviction of the evidence gathered in the case file and with respect to the merits of the proceeding. The Commission indicated that the judge recorded various opinions on the criminal responsibility of the petitioners that would be more appropriate for a pronouncement at the trial stage and that these resolutions deprived the judge of his necessary objective impartiality and should have disqualified him from continuing to hear the case during the plenary or trial stage, especially considering that, at the end of this second stage, the judge imposed prison sentences on Mr. Podestá and Mr. López de Belva.

171. In this regard, the Commission considered that it is possible that the participation of Judge Juan Carlos Sorondo during the investigation may have generated reasonable doubts in the petitioners regarding his impartiality at the time of intervening in the trial or plenary stage. Consequently, it considered that the guarantee of an impartial judge was affected in its objective aspect and that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the right to due process.

172. Likewise, the Commission indicated that the normative limitation in Article 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the Province of Buenos Aires for the applicability of the law to a sentence of less than three years' imprisonment in force at the time of the facts constituted a restriction incompatible with the right to judicial protection, since as a consequence of having been sentenced to a sentence of less than three years' imprisonment, Messrs. Podestá and López de Belva did not have at their disposal the remedy of inapplicability of the law that was the key to access to the courts of the highest provincial court. The Commission considered that this circumstance meant that the petitioners did not have an effective remedy to protect the rights they alleged were violated by the conviction handed down by the Court of Appeals.

173. In addition, the IACHR emphasized that neither the Supreme Court, at the time of declaring the inadmissibility of the petitioners' appeal for inapplicability of the law, nor the Argentine State, throughout the proceedings, gave reasons that would allow for adequately justifying the existence of the difference in treatment between the universe of persons sentenced to more than three years in prison vis-à-vis those sentenced to less than three years in prison. Likewise, it pointed out that no reasons have been provided to explain why the three-year prison term was used as a parameter and requirement for the admissibility of the appeal for non-applicability of the law. In this sense, the Commission considered that the rejection of the appeal for non-applicability of the law based exclusively on the amount of the sentence imposed on the petitioners affected the principle of equality before the law.

174. Based on said considerations of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the rights to be tried by an impartial judge, to judicial protection and to equality before the law enshrined in Articles 8(1), 25 and 24 of the American Convention, respectively, in relation to Article 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Mr. Carlos Alberto López de Belva and Mr. Arturo Jorge Podestá.

- Jason Puracal and family members vs. Nicaragua.

175. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Republic of Nicaragua for the illegal and arbitrary detention of Mr. Jason Puracal, his deprivation of liberty in prison conditions that constituted cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and his subjection to criminal proceedings in violation of due process as a result of which he was deported from Nicaragua.

176. At the time of the facts, Mr. Puracal was 33 years old, born in the State of Washington in the United States and worked in real estate in Nicaragua. On November 11, 2010 he was in his office in the city of San Juan del Sur, when he was raided by the National Police. The officers seized Mr. Puracal's assets and proceeded with his arrest. Simultaneously, the police raided his home. These acts were carried out without a warrant. On November 12, 2010, the Chief of Judicial Assistance of the National Police, under Article 246 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (CPPN) requested the validation of the acts under investigation before the competent judge, which was granted on the same day.

177. On November 13, 2010, Mr. Puracal was transferred to the Rivas prison and on November 15, 2010, he entered the "El Chipote" prison, where he remained until he was transferred to the "La Modelo" prison on November 17, 2010. According to the victim's statement, once in "El Chipote", he was placed in an "individual cell of 8" x 10" with 8 feet high" dark and dirty, without access to natural light, without clothing or bedding. Similarly, during his stay in the Modelo prison, he was in a cell of approximately 3.6 x 4.5 meters with 8 or 9 other people, among other inhumane conditions. Mr. Puracal stated that he was not provided with treatment for the various health problems he presented, including his asthma condition.

178. On November 13, 2010, the Prosecutor presented the accusation against Puracal before the Criminal District Judge of Rivas, which led to the opening of the trial for the crimes of organized crime, international transportation of narcotics, psychotropic and controlled substances, money laundering, property and assets. On November 14, 2010, the Judge held the preliminary hearing with the presence of the accused, being this the first opportunity in which the detainee would have been presented before a judicial authority after his arrest.

179. On September 6, 2011, the District Trial Court of the city of Rivas, sentenced Jason Puracal for the crimes of Organized Crime, money laundering and illegal international transportation of narcotics. This sentence was appealed on October 5, 2011. On September 12, 2012, the Court of Appeals of the Southern District, Criminal Chamber, decided that the appealed sentence lacked motivation and grounds, and therefore declared the nullity of the trial and ordered the release of the defendants. Faced with this decision, on July 23, 2015, the Supreme Court of Justice, in the Criminal Chamber, decided "to deny the appeals of Criminal Cassation of form and substance".

180. On September 14, 2012, the Directorate of Migration and Aliens by Resolution No. 090/2012 ordered the deportation of Jason Puracal "for considering that he constitutes a danger to public safety and public order and the State reserves the right not to allow his entry into the country".

181. During the years he was detained, his relatives filed a series of appeals, including a motion to exhibit the risks to Mr. Puracal's physical and psychological integrity in the facilities of "El Chipote", as well as complaints and requests before the Ministry of the Interior due to the lack of specialized medical assistance, isolation and denial of conjugal visits.

182. In its Merits Report No. 389/22, the IACHR first referred to the circumstances in which Mr. Puracal was detained. Regarding the legality of the detention, the Commission observed that, in the arrest record issued by the National Police, the officers simply checked the box designated for flagrante delicto offenses, without recording the reasons that, in application of the grounds established by law, would have justified his detention or the constituent elements of flagrante delicto. Therefore, the Commission concluded that the detention was illegal. The Commission also considered that the victim was not informed of the reasons for his detention and that the State did not provide information that would allow it to conclude that Mr. Puracal was notified of his right to communicate with a consular official of his country in order to seek the assistance recognized in Article 36.1.b of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

183. Regarding the judicial review of the detention without delay, the Commission noted that Mr. Puracal's appearance before a judicial authority did not take place until three days after his detention and that the State did not present any justification as to why he was not taken immediately, without delay, before a judge. Furthermore, under the remedy of habeas corpus, the judicial authority did not carry out an adequate judicial control over the victim's detention.

184. In this sense, the IACHR considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal liberty, in various aspects, namely: the legality of the detention, information of the reasons for detention, the right to be informed about the right to consular assistance and the right to judicial control without delay of the detention.

185. With regard to the preventive detention measure, the Commission observed that the judge who imposed Mr. Puracal's detention did so based on Article 173 of the CPPN, which establishes this measure on the basis of the seriousness of the crime, without allowing an analysis of the procedural purposes of preventive detention and whether it is appropriate, necessary and proportional, and that, in fact, the judge did not conduct such an analysis in his decision. The Commission also noted that the preventive detention lasted 22 months, which, considering the arbitrariness and disproportionality of the measure, was unreasonable. The Commission also observed that no evidence was provided to establish that Mr. Puracal's preventive detention was duly and periodically reviewed by the competent judge and that the remedy of habeas corpus was not effective in determining his whereabouts, nor the legality of his detention, and therefore the protection afforded through this remedy was illusory.

186. Regarding the presumption of innocence, the Commission reiterated that the decision of the judge who ordered the preventive detention was neither justified nor motivated and that he simply applied article 173 of the CPPN, which was arbitrary. Therefore, the Commission considered that the prolongation of the deprivation of liberty until the decision of the Grenada Court of Appeals was tantamount to an anticipated sentence, contrary to the presumption of innocence.

187. In this regard, the IACHR concluded that the Nicaraguan State, by establishing that pretrial detention is the rule and not the exception in the cases provided by law, and by failing to provide sufficient motivation regarding the achievement of a legitimate aim compatible with the Convention when decreeing pretrial detention, is responsible for the violation of the right to personal liberty and the presumption of innocence.

188. On the other hand, the Commission observed that, during Mr. Puracal's stay at the "El Chipote" prison, his personal integrity was affected and that he suffered cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. It also noted that the State did not indicate that it had conducted an exhaustive investigation into these circumstances, in addition to the particular conditions of Mr. Puracal's detention, as he was an arbitrarily detained person, a foreigner and was not guaranteed consular assistance, elements that aggravated his situation.

189. Regarding the prison conditions in "La Modelo" prison, the IACHR observed that Mr. Puracal remained 22 months deprived of liberty in this center under prison conditions that were not in accordance with the minimum principles for persons deprived of liberty, suffered from overcrowding, lack of access to drinking water, and did not have sufficient access to sunlight. It also considered that these conditions of detention meant an affectation of Mr. Puracal's right to live in a detention regime compatible with his personal dignity, and included forms of punishment in addition to the deprivation of liberty itself, which entailed serious injuries, suffering and damage to his health.

190. The Commission noted that the victim, his next of kin and his attorney informed the various prison, judicial and executive authorities of the situation in which Mr. Puracal was being detained; however, the State did not provide evidence to demonstrate that an investigation had been opened to clarify the facts. Likewise, the IACHR considered that the medical examination upon Mr. Puracal's admission to the "La Modelo" prison was untimely, that he did not have a medical examination upon admission after the transfers to which he was subjected, and that he did not receive proper medical attention during his stay in the prisons, without being able to have a check-up by his private physician. The Commission also noted that the victim shared a cell with persons who had already been convicted and with persons who were still being prosecuted, for which reason the State failed to comply with its obligation to keep the accused separate from the convicted. In light of these considerations, the IACHR concluded that the State of Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of the right to humane treatment for the events that occurred during his detention in both prisons.

191. Additionally, it determined that the State is responsible for the violation of the guarantees of due process and judicial protection in the framework of the criminal proceedings against Mr. Puracal. In particular, the IACHR noted that: (i) the State did not guarantee the right to be informed of his right to consular assistance because he was a foreign citizen; (ii) the length of the criminal proceeding was contrary to the guarantee of reasonable time; (iii) the restrictions on communication with his attorney did not allow him to exercise his right to have adequate means of defense; iv) the remedy of habeas corpus was not effective, since the enforcement judge did not accurately determine where Mr. Puracal was; v) the State has not investigated, tried or punished those responsible for the cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment to which the victim was subjected.

192. On the other hand, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to the protection of honor and dignity, specifically the protection of the home, since there was no motivation or just reasons for the search of Mr. Puracal's offices and home. Likewise, the State is responsible for the violation of the right to property because the decision to validate the seizure of the assets was arbitrary and no evidence was provided to demonstrate the return of the assets that were seized and/or occupied in the criminal investigation against Mr. Puracal, nor the payment of fair monetary compensation for these assets.

193. Finally, the Commission emphasized that the minimum guarantees for Mr. Puracal's expulsion or deportation procedure were not complied with and that, in particular, he was not notified of the procedure before the General Directorate of Migration and Alien Affairs nor of the charges against him, the reasons for the expulsion or deportation; nor was he informed of his rights during the process. In this sense, the Commission indicated that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to movement and residence.

- José Luis Parada Sánchez vs. Venezuela.

194. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Venezuelan State for the deprivation of liberty of José Luis Parada Sánchez in the context of a criminal proceeding that was not conducted in accordance with the guarantees of due process, as well as for the lack of medical care while he was deprived of liberty.

195. Mr. Parada Sánchez held various positions within Petróleos de Venezuela S.A. (PDVSA) since 1990. Specifically, between January 2007 and September 2008 he served as General Manager of Exploration and Production West. On May 21, 2008, Mr. Parada was denounced by members of the workers union called "SINUTRAPETROL" for allegedly committing irregularities in the bidding and contracting of services.

196. On May 23, 2009, the Twenty-fifth Prosecutor's Office of the Zulia State Public Prosecutor's Office initiated an investigation. On February 1, 2015, in compliance with an arrest warrant issued by the Eighth Criminal Control Court, the victim was detained by SEBIN officers at the "La Chinita" International Airport in Maracaibo when he was about to board a private flight Maracaibo-Valencia. The SEBIN members went to the place of detention in a van with no visible license plates. The petitioner claims that the SEBIN officers did not identify themselves as such at the time of the arrest, nor did they inform the victim of the reasons for the arrest or of the existence of the arrest warrant.

197. On February 3, 2015, the victim was presented before the Court, which decreed ordinary proceedings for the crimes of fraudulent embezzlement in degree of continuity and association to commit a crime and imposed a measure of preventive judicial deprivation of liberty, in addition to the preventive blocking and immobilization of bank accounts. On March 20, 2015, the Public Prosecutor's Office filed a formal accusation.

198. The preliminary hearing was postponed by the Court up to 35 times due to the SEBIN's failure to transport the victim to the Court's headquarters, despite the Court's express and repeated requests. The concurrence of these non-attendances led to the fact that the preliminary hearing, initially scheduled for April 15, 2015, ended up taking place on September 22, 2017 after the victim submitted a brief to the Court, by means of which he declared himself contumacious with the justice system and delegated his representation to his private defense in order to allow the preliminary hearing to take place without his presence.

199. In the preliminary hearing, the Eighth Court of Criminal Control decided to order the order to open a trial against the victim for the crime of continuous fraudulent embezzlement, to declare the dismissal of the crime of criminal association, and to maintain the alternative precautionary measure to the deprivation of liberty.

200. According to the information provided by the petitioner, between August 4 and September 17, 2015, the Eighth Criminal Control Court issued at least six requests to the Director of SEBIN, so that Mr. Parada could be transferred from Helicoide to different health centers where he was to undergo medical evaluations related to his hypertension problems and other suspicious pathologies.

201. On September 23, 2015, the Dr. Jiménez Rojas Surgical Medical Institute issued a medical report diagnosing the victim with various pathologies, which was complemented with the result of a biopsy performed on Mr. Parada. According to the information available in the case file, the Eighth Criminal Control Court reportedly sent up to eight times to the SEBIN to order the transfer of the victim to the different health centers where he could receive the appropriate treatment for his condition. However, the SEBIN permanently showed its refusal to carry out these transfers, which limited Mr. Parada's possibilities of receiving timely attention.

202. On October 2, 2015, the victim's legal defense filed an amparo action together with a request for a humanitarian measure before the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, explaining his situation, particularly Mr. Parada's diagnosis of colorectal cancer and the risk factors he was facing. There is no record in the case file that the Constitutional Chamber has pronounced on the admission or admissibility of the amparo action or resolved the merits of the appeal.

203. On May 18, 2016, the Eighth Court of Criminal Control, replaced the preventive detention measure by one of house arrest with prohibition to leave the country, considering the seriousness of the victim's illness, which became effective on June 15, 2016. On March 1, 2017, the Eighth Criminal Control Court agreed the substitution of the house arrest for a measure of periodic presentation, which was notified to SEBIN on the same day, ordering the immediate release of the victim, and reiterated up to eight times between April 21 and August 8, 2017. This court order was not complied with by SEBIN officials.

204. During the month of March 2017, the legal representation of the victim filed two writs of amparo in the form of habeas corpus before the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice and before the Court of First Instance in Guard Functions of the Criminal Judicial Circuit of Caracas, which received no response. On December 30, 2017, Mr. Parada took advantage of an oversight in SEBIN custody to flee from his residence.

205. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 393/22, the Commission noted that there is no document or evidence in the case file to prove that the victim's detention was carried out in a manner consistent with the American Convention. In particular, the Commission noted that the SEBIN officials failed to identify themselves as such and that they did not inform the victim at the time of his arrest of the existence of an arrest warrant against him, nor of the grounds on which it was based. The victim indicated that she had the opportunity to access the arrest warrant two days after her arrest, when she was brought before the court. The Commission determined that this constituted a violation of the victim's personal liberty.

206. Regarding the preventive detention measure, the IACHR observed that it took into account a presumption of danger of flight provided for in Article 237 of the Organic Code of Criminal Procedure of Venezuela, which is incompatible with inter-American standards on the matter, and that the court used other types of reasoning that were also incompatible with the procedural purposes that preventive detention should pursue. In view of the foregoing, the Commission considered that from the beginning the preventive detention was arbitrary and constituted a punitive and not a precautionary measure, in violation of both the right to personal liberty and the principle of the presumption of innocence.

207. On the other hand, the Commission noted that pretrial detention was replaced by house arrest and that on March 1, 2017, the Eighth Court replaced house arrest with periodic presentation of the victim. However, SEBIN repeatedly refused to comply with the order issued by the court. Consequently, the Commission found that, at least from the time the March 1 decision came into effect, the victim's deprivation of liberty not only lacked a normative basis, but also became arbitrary because it lacked any justification whatsoever.

208. The IACHR also found that the victim did not have an effective remedy to obtain his release and that, despite the fact that the habeas corpus remedy would be suitable to protect the right to personal liberty against arbitrary detentions, neither of the two amparos initiated by the victim's defense resulted in the release order being complied with by SEBIN. On the contrary, the IACHR found that, despite the urgency of the situation, more than four years having elapsed since their filing, neither of the two appeals had been resolved on the merits. Consequently, the IACHR considered that the State did not provide the victim with an effective remedy that would allow him access to judicial control of his detention, once it became illegal and arbitrary.

209. Based on these considerations, the Commission indicated that the State of Venezuela is responsible for the violation of the right to personal liberty in its various dimensions, as well as the right to the presumption of innocence, to judicial guarantees and to judicial protection.

210. In addition, the Commission observed that the victim did not have the possibility of receiving timely and adequate health care while in the custody of the State and that the State did not provide the victim with an adequate and effective remedy to protect her from the harm she suffered. In this sense, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to humane treatment, to health and to judicial protection.

211. Finally, the Commission observed that the criminal proceeding against the victim began on May 21, 2008 and that, despite the fact that more than 10 years had passed since the criminal complaint was filed, the proceeding had not only not concluded, but did not even have a first instance judgment. In view of this, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to due process and judicial protection.

212. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violations of Articles 5(1) and 5(2) (right to humane treatment), 7(1), 7(2), 7(3), 7(4), 7(5) and 7(6) (right to personal liberty), 8(1) and 8(2) (right to fair trial), 25(1), 25(2)(c) (right to judicial protection) and 26 (progressive development) of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to the obligations established in Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument.

- Clínica Pediátrica Da Região Dos Lagos vs Brazil.

213. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Brazilian State for violations that occurred in the context of the investigations into the deaths of 96 babies between June 1996 and March 1997 as a result of medical negligence by employees of the Clínica Pediátrica da Região dos Lagos.

214. CLIPEL was created in 1995 as a private for-profit clinic. It was located in the internal area of the Santa Izabel Hospital, in the city of Cabo Frio, in the state of Rio de Janeiro. CLIPEL received funds from the State within the scope of SUS for the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit (UTI).

215. The victims were born in the state of Rio de Janeiro as healthy babies, and most of the mothers had no health problems during pregnancy that could have put the babies' lives at risk. Due to different circumstances, including respiratory complications, prevention reasons, prematurity or lack of places in other hospitals, the babies were taken to CLIPEL's neonatal ICU.

216. Once the victims were hospitalized at CLIPEL, their relatives declared to authorities that they had observed irregularities in the medical treatment and lack of hygiene, among other issues of concern. In particular, one of the victims stated that: (i) when she went to visit her daughter, the health professionals gave her a gown that had already been used by other people, a fact that she saw repeated with the parents of the other hospitalized babies; (ii) when entering the ICU, she was not told to cover her mouth with a mask; (iii) nurses and doctors had contact with several children without washing their hands when passing from one to another; (iv) doctors wore the same clothes that had been worn by other doctors before entering the ICU and also did not wear a mask; and (v) some doctors leaving the ICU, hung up their gown, smoked cigarettes, put on the same clothes and entered the ICU again.

217. According to the Regional Council of Medicine of the State of Rio de Janeiro (CREMERJ), the competent body to supervise the ethical conduct of the medical professionals involved in the events, between 1995 and 1997, the mortality rate of the children hospitalized at CLIPEL was approximately 21.20% and of these deaths, at least 37 were said to have been caused by "sepsis". On the other hand, according to the Fernandes Figueiroa Institute of the Oswaldo Cruz Foundation (IFF/Fiocruz), a body attached to the Ministry of Health, between May 1996 and April 1997, the infant mortality rate in the neonatal ICU of CLIPEL was "totally abnormal". In particular, this institute indicated that during that period there was neonatal sepsis in at least 60.8% of the deaths and that in December 1996 alone, 10 of the 11 infants who died had sepsis. In this context, between April 1996 and March 1997, more than 80 newborn babies died at CLIPEL.

218. These deaths were allegedly caused by hospital infections and medical negligence. The death certificates indicated as causes of death neonatal sepsis, pulmonary hemorrhage, prematurity, respiratory distress, cardiopulmonary arrest, respiratory distress syndrome or rubella. In particular, one of the death certificates indicated that the baby was "the newborn of a diabetic mother". According to the statements of the mothers and fathers of the babies, and the results of the blood tests performed by the Osmani Sobral Rezende Clinical Biochemistry Laboratory, it was found that the babies had been infected by a germ of hospital origin, and the presence of the Klebsiella Pneumoniae bacterium was recognized in the blood of the victims. In this regard, the expert report of IFF/Fiocruz concluded that it was impossible to attribute the abnormal mortality rate at CLIPEL to factors other than hospital contamination.

219. Several experts affirmed that, once the outbreak of hospital infection was confirmed, the doctors and directors of CLIPEL should have ordered the interdiction of the clinic and the sterilization of the place. According to the police investigation report, the findings led to the conclusion that there was negligence on the part of CLIPEL's directors, and that the health professionals treated the neonatal babies in a negligent and careless manner.

220. As a consequence of the facts described above, at least five administrative proceedings were initiated: (i) before the Health Inspection Coordination of the Health Secretariat of the State of Rio de Janeiro (COFISA), in which the victims' relatives did not obtain answers about the events that occurred; (ii) before CREMERJ which was initiated in 1997 to investigate the conduct of the medical director of CLIPEL, and in 2000 concluded that the referred physician had not committed wrongdoings; (iii) before the Ministry of Health, which was initiated in 1998 to determine the responsibility of the physician Luiz Cavalcanti Lopes, and which in the same year concluded that he was not responsible for the deaths of the victims; (iv) before the Cabo Frio City Council; and (v) finally a civil investigation before the Public Prosecutor's Office, which was closed in 2006 because it was considered that the complaints constituted administrative offenses and were not within the competence of the Criminal Prosecutor's Office.

221. Also, on April 7, 1997, Mrs. Marilucy Dias de Souza and other relatives of the deceased babies denounced to the Public Prosecutor's Office the death of more than 30 newborns at CLIPEL, as well as the suspicion of an outbreak of hospital infection and staff negligence. On April 8, 1997, the Public Prosecutor's Office of the state of Rio de Janeiro requested the 4th Regional Division of the Civil Police to initiate an investigation into the facts. The police investigation report of September 4, 1997 concluded that the Director of the CLIPEL neonatal ICU should be charged with homicide because of causality between his conduct and the deaths in question.

222. On December 21, 1999, the Public Prosecutor's Office presented its complaint to the judge of first instance of the Criminal Court of Cabo Frio. It indicated that eight doctors were responsible for negligent homicide of the newborns due to hospital infection.

223. On February 23, 2000, the first hearing was held before the Cabo Frio Criminal Court, in which the defendants were interrogated and statements were taken from two experts. On February 24, 2003, a sentence was issued by which, based on Article 386, paragraph II of the Criminal Procedure Code, the defendants were acquitted of the charge of manslaughter. The Judge considered that, due to the absence of negligent behavior and causal nexus, the typical act of negligence did not exist, but that the deaths occurred due to force majeure. However, the Judge warned that "we need to comment on the complaint, because despite the brilliance of the undersigned, it is practically inept, since it did not individualize the conduct of each of the defendants, attributing to all the same conduct, without bothering to discriminate the defendants who had contact with the victims as doctors on duty".

224. The parties appealed the sentence on June 5, 2003 and July 28, 2003. On March 15, 2005, the Fourth Criminal Chamber of the Court of Justice of the State of Rio de Janeiro upheld the acquittal.

225. Some of the victims filed direct reparation actions against CLIPEL for the death of their sons and daughters. However, all were declared inadmissible. In addition, the Public Prosecutor's Office opened an investigation for a public civil action to inquire into the petitioners' allegations. As part of this investigation, on June 28, 2002, it made a technical visit to CLIPEL to determine irregularities, and concluded that in 2002 the infrastructure of the clinic was adequate for care. On April 4, 2006, the prosecutor in charge of the civil investigation requested that it be closed, because the allegations would constitute, in principle, administrative offenses, and therefore it was not within the jurisdiction of the Criminal Prosecutor's Office to conduct the investigation.

226. In its Merits Report 267/22, the Commission noted that, at the time of the facts, there was an abnormal incidence of hospital infections in CLIPEL, factors of overcrowding and lack of professionals, as well as situations associated with poor hygiene and cleanliness of the environment, which constituted a situation of real and imminent risk to the rights of children that the State knew or should have known about if it had complied with its duties of supervision and oversight. Faced with this situation, the Commission concluded that the State did not adopt effective measures to prevent the occurrence of the health effects and subsequent death of the 96 infant victims in this case, with respect to whom it had a particularly reinforced duty, taking into account their extremely vulnerable situation as newborns. Consequently, the IACHR determined that the Brazilian State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, health and personal integrity to the detriment of the 96 newborns who died inside CLIPEL in relation to its duty to guarantee the rights of the child.

227. With respect to the investigation of the facts and the proceedings in the domestic jurisdiction, the Commission first observed that, in the criminal proceedings, as noted by the judge who heard the case, the Public Prosecutor's Office did not identify the criminal conduct attributable to each of the accused physicians and that this omission, which reflects the failure to observe a fundamental element of individual criminal responsibility, was decisive in the judicial outcome that acquitted the defendants.

228. With regard to the first instance judgment, the IACHR noted that the judge considered, in essence, that there were no elements to determine that the doctors were at fault and that there was no causal link between the deaths of the babies and the conduct of the defendants. The Commission considered that the judge based his decision mainly on reports issued by the competent health entities that did not carry out regular and effective control tasks. In this regard, the Commission noted that, despite the fact that the petitioners denounced before the Public Prosecutor's Office the technical soundness of the technical reports of the health authorities and that other specialists expressly mentioned their serious shortcomings, the State did not show that it had conducted an exhaustive investigation aimed at contrasting or questioning their validity. The Commission indicated that the decision to acquit the doctors was reached in the context of serious irregularities in the investigation, including the failure to incorporate the blood tests offered by the petitioners with the diagnosis of infection of the children, the failure to incorporate technical expertise, as well as the loss of testimonial statements of the accused.

229. Regarding the second instance decision, the Commission noted that the ruling recognized a series of irregularities in the CLIPEL but concluded that a causal nexus had not been accredited due to the omission of the physicians involved in the absence of further evidence that would offer greater certainty. The Commission noted that precisely this lack of certainty resulted from the lack of sufficient evidence to clarify what happened. In this sense, the Commission considered that the ruling established a conclusion that was not the product of a diligent investigation.

230. With respect to the administrative and civil proceedings, the IACHR considered that the State did not provide sufficient information to indicate that steps were taken by the health authorities to clarify the facts, nor information that would allow it to conclude that the victims' next of kin were heard in the context of these administrative proceedings. In particular, it emphasized that within the framework of the investigation that it processed before the Ministry of Health, the aforementioned body stated that the manifestations of the victims' next of kin were "uproar, sensationalism, lack of attention and hasty attitudes".

231. The Commission also noted that all the civil actions brought by family members against CLIPEL were declared inadmissible and that, in at least two cases, the decision was based on the fact that the fault of the doctors had not been proven, without any actions to establish liability in this area having been demonstrated and despite the fact that civil liability is independent of criminal liability under Brazilian domestic law. The Commission also noted that the decisions in the civil sphere did not adequately consider that adulterated antibiograms and medical reports were performed. Thus, the Commission noted that there was a lack of due diligence on the part of the authorities in charge of these proceedings.

232. On the other hand, the IACHR asserted that the civil investigation before the Public Prosecutor's Office was filed under the argument that the alleged facts could constitute an administrative offense, which were not within the competence of the Criminal Prosecutor's Office. In this regard, it emphasized that, under the terms of Law 7.347 of July 24, 1985, the Public Prosecutor's Office has the authority to file "public civil actions" in cases of damages in matters of diffuse or collective interest, such as the right to health. In this sense, the Commission considered that the Public Prosecutor's Office could have acted diligently and evaluated the possibility of filing a public civil action before the investigation was closed.

233. In addition to the above, the Commission considered that the delay of almost ten years to obtain a final decision in criminal proceedings was linked to the conduct of the authorities in charge and that, beyond the complexity of the case, it was unreasonable that the Public Prosecutor's Office only in June 2002 had carried out proceedings on events that occurred in 1996 and 1997, and therefore determined that the State violated the guarantee of reasonable time.

234. In light of the foregoing considerations, the IACHR concluded that the Brazilian State failed to comply with its duty to investigate and prosecute with due diligence, within a reasonable time and in accordance with its duty to provide reasons, to the detriment of the children's next of kin.

235. It also considered that the State did not adopt concrete measures to investigate the facts from an intersectional gender perspective that would consider the situation of vulnerability of the mothers in a state of puerperium and the race of these women and families. On the contrary, the Commission observed that the authorities of the Ministry of Health and the judicial system acted by applying gender stereotypes referring to the lack of prenatal care and previous health conditions of the mothers as a cause of the death of the babies, and that the application of these gender stereotypes affected, in general, the State's duty to investigate. In this sense, the Commission concluded that the State of Brazil is responsible for the violation of the principle of equality and non-discrimination to the detriment of the victims' mothers.

236. Finally, the Commission considered that the loss of their loved ones and the absence of truth and justice caused suffering and anguish to the members of the families of the victims of the infectious outbreak, in violation of their right to psychological and moral integrity.

237. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the Brazilian State is responsible for the violation of the rights to personal integrity, to life, to judicial guarantees, to equality before the law and non-discrimination, to judicial protection and to health, as well as the rights of children, enshrined in Articles 4(1), 5(1), 8(1), 19, 24, 25 and 26 of the American Convention on Human Rights with respect to the obligations established in Article 1(1) of said instrument, as well as Article 7 of the Convention of Belém do Pará.

- Marcela Brenda Iglesias et al. v. Argentina.

238. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Argentine State for the violation of the rights to life, to personal integrity, to the protection of children, to judicial guarantees and to judicial protection for the death of Marcela Brenda Iglesias Ribaudó and for the impunity in the investigation of the facts.

239. The child Iglesias Ribaudó was born on October 19, 1989 and, at the time of the facts, she was 6 years old. On February 15, 1999, Marcela Brenda participated in an activity for the sons and daughters of the Hipotecario Nacional bank which consisted of a walk to the "Paseo de la Infanta" recreational complex. Most of the children were playing in the area designated for pedestrian traffic and in this same space was located a 250 kg iron sculpture called "Elements" created by the artist Danilo Dazinger. Suddenly, the sculpture collapsed, causing the immediate death of Marcela Iglesias.

240. On the occasion of Marcela Brenda's death, the National Court of First Instance in Correctional Matters N° 11 intervened in the criminal proceedings in which the sculptor of the work, the person in charge of the art gallery "Der Brücke" who had the custody and care of the work, the General Director of the National Police, the Director of Routine Inspections of the Municipality of Buenos Aires, the Head of Department of Zone III of the Municipal Police and the official who signed the resolution that allowed the commercial activities on the premises were charged.

241. The process was developed for the crimes of culpable homicide, culpable injuries, and omission of the duty of care of public officials. During the investigation it was proved that the "metallic structure was in an evident state of oxidation and corrosion; that, in spite of its large part and weight, it was only fastened at two ends with a single welding point; and that it had never been properly secured, taking into account its weight and proportion".

242. On March 1, 1999, the Prosecutor requested that the case be referred to trial and on November 19, 1999, the case was referred to oral trial before National Correctional Court No. 3. During this stage, the petitioner reported that the accused filed "multiple motions for annulment, requests for extensions of time, recusals and objections to jurisdiction, with the purpose of delaying the continuation of the proceedings and consequently slowing down the conduct of the oral trial".

243. On March 10, 2003, the magistrate in charge of Correctional Court No. 3 declared the criminal action for the crime of failure to perform the duties of a public official extinguished with respect to one of the accused. Subsequently, according to the petitioner, the defenses of the other defendants filed nullity and prescription of the criminal action and appeals for cassation, which were rejected and, at the same time, a trial date was set on one occasion.

244. On March 15, 2005, the Federal Chamber of Criminal Cassation decreed the extinction of the criminal action due to the statute of limitations and acquitted the rest of the accused persons. According to the information provided by the petitioner and the public information on the reason for the decision, the judicial authority retroactively applied a new regulation that established another way of counting the statute of limitations, which was more favorable for the defendants. On December 14, 2005, Chamber IV of the Chamber of Cassation rejected the cassation appeal filed by the plaintiff.

245. On November 8, 2006, Attorney Esteban Righi filed an opinion before the Supreme Court requesting that the case be reopened. In this regard, he requested that the extraordinary appeals filed by the petitioner be declared well-founded and that the declaration of extinction of the criminal action due to the statute of limitations be annulled. On December 11, 2007, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation declared the extraordinary federal appeal inadmissible, maintaining the statute of limitations of the criminal action for the wrongful death of Marcela Iglesias.

246. In its Merits Report No. 266/22, the Commission considered that the State did not adopt measures in the face of the actions of third parties and that its omission was of such magnitude that it did not attempt to prevent the damage caused by risky activities, despite the fact that persons of special protection, such as children who went to the Promenade for recreational purposes, were passing through the place. The Commission pointed out that the State should have been aware of the logical situation of risk implied by the exposure of large weighty structures in a public space, and yet it did not adopt any reasonable measure to avoid the configuration of such risk.

247. In particular, it considered that the Argentine State did not adopt measures of supervision and oversight of the companies that developed their Art Galleries in a public space with transit of people, including children, which would have identified effective measures to prevent the risks of the poorly secured and welded "Elements" structure, whose fall caused the death of Marcela Brenda Iglesias. For this reason, the Commission considered that it was responsible for the violation of the right to life and personal integrity and protection of children.

248. Likewise, the IACHR observed that after the death of the girl Brenda Iglesias, a criminal investigation was initiated that progressed until the summons to trial of individuals and State officials on December 13, 1999; however, years later, the judicial authorities declared the statute of limitations on the criminal action by applying a new regulation on the calculation of the statute of limitations. In this regard, the Commission analyzed whether the proceedings were conducted in accordance with inter-American standards on due diligence in the investigation.

249. The Commission also pointed out that the petitioner presented a series of proceedings in the trial that demonstrate that multiple appeals and challenges were filed by the defendants' defense attorneys. Some of these appeals were resolved by the trial court and others were processed before the Chamber of Cassation. The Commission also noted that there was a change of judicial authority, as in 2000 a new judge took over the case. The Commission noted that the requests for statute of limitations by the defense were frequent, appealed and prevented the trial from being carried out, which ended with the application of the statute of limitations due to the passage of time.

250. In turn, it considered that, although the investigation was not a complex matter, the multiplicity of defendants and the different petitions that they made to the administration of justice had an unquestionable impact on the passage of time without the criminal trial for the death of Marcela Brenda Iglesias. It also noted that the judicial authorities had not adopted measures to prevent the diversity of appeals from leading to a delay in the process that would culminate in its statute of limitations due to the passage of time.

251. Likewise, the Commission found that the appeals filed at various levels by the defendants in succession, as well as the time taken by the administration of justice to resolve them and return the case, prevented the aforementioned trial from being held on several occasions. Therefore, the Commission considered that this lack of conduct of the process to bring it to a conclusion with a trial decision implied a violation of the due process rights and judicial protection of the Iglesias Ribaldo family. In this sense, it determined that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to due process and judicial protection.

252. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State of Argentina is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, humane treatment and protection of children established in Articles 4, 5 and 19 of the American Convention in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of Marcela Brenda Iglesias. Likewise, that the State of Argentina is responsible for the violation of the rights to due process and judicial protection set forth in Articles 8 and 25 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of Eduardo Iglesias and Nora Esther Ribaldo.

- Leonela Zelaya vs. Honduras.

253. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Honduran State for the death of Leonela Zelaya, who was a trans woman, and for the situation of impunity of the facts.

254. Leonela Zelaya was born in the department of Cortés and was registered at birth as Oscar Zelaya. She attended only elementary school and grew up in an environment of violence and discrimination by her family members because of her gender identity. According to the petitioner, Leonela was diagnosed with HIV in the early 1990s.

255. At the time of the facts, Leonela was 34 years old, she was a sex worker and lived with Talía Rodríguez in a room in the city of Tegucigalpa. Talía said that Leonela was like her sister, they shared festivities and celebrations together, and gave each other emotional and economic support.

256. According to the petitioner, on August 15, 2004, Leonela Zelaya was beaten with truncheons and pistol butts by agents of the Preventive Police of Police Station Number 4 of Comayagüela. The petitioner reported that as a result of this aggression, Leonela had bruises and swelling on her legs, face, back and arms, fever and headache.

257. Talía Rodríguez stated that on the night of September 6, 2004, she went out to work with Leonela and that, although she asked her to return home together, she indicated that she would "wait a little longer". Around 5:00 a.m. the following day, Leonela's body was found on a public street in the city of Comayagüela, by a woman selling candy in the area.

258. On September 7, 2004 at 6:45am, the prosecutor of the Public Prosecutor's Office performed the removal of the body. The coroner concluded that Leonela was killed by a knife. Her identity was recorded as "a male person whose name is unknown (Homosexual)".

259. The death was registered at the center for the reception of complaints at the General Directorate of Criminal Investigation (DGIC) on September 8, 2004 under file number 963-04 to the detriment of "unknown victim". On September 20 of the same year, an order was issued requesting an investigation for the crime of homicide. However, the petitioner indicated that the authorities did not take any steps to identify witnesses or gather any other type of evidence at the scene of the facts in order to determine the cause, manner and time of the events. In fact, the Commission did not have any documentation on the performance of procedural steps or acts between that date and January 2017

260. On August 28, 2019, the State told the Commission that the Secretary of State's Office conducted an investigation and determined that the person responsible for the homicide was Luis Alberto Sosa Ardón and that the motive was an attempted robbery. It also informed that Mr. Ardón died in 2007.

261. In its Merits Report No. 450/21, the Commission considered that the nature and conditions in which the body of Leonela Zelaya was found, and the additional evidence that emerges from the context of violence in which the events occurred, allows characterizing what happened as a murder based on prejudice regarding gender identity and expression as a trans woman and, therefore, a transfemicide. In particular, the Commission noted that the judicial file of the case contained a photograph showing that the victim's body was found with her chest uncovered, which could be indicative of sexual violence, despite the fact that there is no information on the respective analyses carried out to rule out the possibility that Leonela Zelaya was a victim of sexual violence. Likewise, the Commission observed that Leonela Zelaya was killed with a knife and that her body was found in the street; elements consistent with the findings of the IACHR in relation to how most hate crimes are committed against trans women, on several occasions in situations related to sex work, as in the present case.

262. It also warned that the Honduran State was aware of the existence of the context of historical discrimination against LGBTI persons, particularly against trans persons and sex workers at the time of Leonela's murder. This context has also been known by the Court in the case of Vicky Hernandez v. Honduras. Despite this, the State did not adopt measures to confront it and prevent its continuation. On the contrary, from the information provided, the Commission highlighted that, on at least one occasion, Leonela was the victim of aggressions by State agents, in such a way that her death, in addition to having developed in a situation of great vulnerability and exposure to risk created by the State itself, even suggests the possible participation of State agents, which was not disproved in the internal investigation.

263. In this sense, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, personal integrity, privacy, honor and dignity, freedom of expression, equality and non-discrimination, as well as the right to live free from violence.

264. With respect to the criminal investigation, the IACHR observed that the State did not design or implement logical lines of investigation derived from the evidence and context surrounding the facts of the case, following only the line of investigation consisting of the hypothesis that the homicide of Leonela Zelaya was the result of an argument or confrontation with an unknown civilian and completely omitting from the investigation the analysis of the multiple elements that indicated that the act could be framed within the concept of hate crime and the possible participation of state agents.

265. In addition, it considered that the internal investigative process was deficient and the evidentiary activity was minimal. In particular, the IACHR observed that, in the notes of the investigation of the case contained in the judicial file, it was stated that the body found was "supposedly called Leonela". The Commission considered that this shows that the authorities who carried out the removal of the body were aware of its identity from the moment the first steps were taken. However, this information was not recorded in any of the reports of the removal of the body, nor in the record of the complaint. Instead, Leonela was registered as an "unknown person", which resulted in a serious omission in the State's due diligence activities, and reinforces gender stereotypes.

266. In relation to the reasonable time period, the Commission observed that more than 17 years had passed since the investigation into Leonela's death without any steps having been taken to clarify the facts and punish the persons responsible, and even that the State acknowledged that the case file had been lost for more than a decade. The Commission considered that from the available information it is evident that the State has not complied with its duty to investigate with due diligence and within a reasonable period of time.

267. Consequently, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, to equality and non-discrimination, and to judicial protection.

268. Finally, taking into account that the concept of family should not be restricted exclusively to the nuclear family, and that in particular those who are part of the trans community, due to the factors of economic and social vulnerability to which they are exposed, build community networks and bonds of friendship, sisterhood, economic support and creation of forms of common lives, the Commission recognized Talía Rodríguez as a relative of Leonela Zelaya. In this sense, it held that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity to the detriment of Talía Rodríguez due to the loss of her loved one, the seriousness of the events that occurred, in addition to the lack of clarification and adequate and timely judicial response.

269. Based on the findings of fact and law of the report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, personal integrity, judicial guarantees, honor and dignity, freedom of expression, equality and non-discrimination, and judicial protection established in Articles 4.1, 5.1, 8.1, 11, 13, 24 and 25.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument; and Article 7 of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women, to the detriment of Leonela Zelaya and Talía Rodríguez.

- Héctor René Reyes Pérez and family v. Guatemala.

270. The case refers to the international responsibility of the State of Guatemala for the violation of the rights to life, personal integrity, personal liberty, judicial guarantees and judicial protection due to the disappearance of Mr. Reyes Pérez in September 2003.

271. At the time of his disappearance, Mr. Reyes Pérez was 52 years old and had been working since 1995 as general manager of the Nueva Linda farm located in the town of Retalhuleu, where he lived with his wife and 6 children. Mr. Reyes Pérez was also a member of a peasant organization called "Mayas sin Tierra", in the framework of which he had been awarded a plot of land for cultivation and housing on the Montecristo farm, in response to which he decided to request his dismissal from the Nueva Linda farm and the respective labor indemnity from his employer, Mr. Carlos Vidal Fernández Alejos.

272. Mrs. Floridalma Toledo Chávez, wife of Mr. Reyes Pérez, stated that on September 5, 2003, at 4:00 a.m., a security guard named Víctor de Jesús Chinchilla Morales went to her home and left with her husband in a vehicle owned by the Nueva Linda farm to leave fertilizer at the San Miguel Mapán farm located in Santa Lucía Cotzumalguapa. Since then, the whereabouts of Mr. Reyes Pérez are unknown.

273. On September 6, 2003, Mrs. Toledo Chávez reported the disappearance of her husband to the citizen's attention office of the Retalhuleu substation of the National Civil Police, and on September 8, she ratified the complaint before the District Prosecutor's Office of Retalhuleu. On September 24, 2003, Mrs. Toledo Chávez gave a new statement in which she expressed her suspicions regarding Mr. Chinchilla Morales and Mr. Vidal Fernández Alejos, owner of the Nueva Linda farm.

274. Based on the facts of this case, the national authorities carried out several investigations, including i) an investigation by the District Prosecutor's Office of Retalhuleu since September 2003; ii) an investigation by the Special Prosecutor's Office for Human Rights of the Public Ministry since November 2003; iii) an investigation by the District Prosecutor's Office of Coatepeque since May 2004 and iv) an investigation by a Special Prosecutor appointed by the Attorney General of the Republic on December 2, 2004.

275. The State carried out a series of diligences as part of the investigation. A luminol test was carried out on the vehicle in which Mr. Reyes Pérez was last seen, resulting positive for blood stains inside the cab, and interviews were taken from the wife of Mr. Reyes Pérez and leaders of the Coordinadora de Comunidades Indígenas y Campesinas Sur Occidente, who held Mr. Vidal Fernández Alejos and Mr. Chinchilla Morales responsible for the disappearance. Also, the exhumation of a body buried in Finca Santa Clara Las Arenas and of unidentified bodies buried in the General Cemetery of Santa Lucía Cotzumalguapa was carried out, concluding that none of them corresponded to that of Mr. Reyes Pérez. At the date of approval of the report, the investigation remained open without having been able to identify and punish those responsible or locate the remains of Mr. Reyes Pérez.

276. In addition, in the Peace Court of the Municipality of La Gomera, Department of Escuintla, a proceeding was initiated on September 20, 2003 for the presence of a male corpse located on the beach of the Pacific Ocean, at the mouth of the Coyolate River. According to the visual inspection report, the body had no identification and had several holes from firearm projectiles in different parts of the body. The body was buried in the General Cemetery of Santa Lucía Cotzumalguapa and the case was filed on March 18, 2004, without any other steps being taken to facilitate the identification of the body.

277. The Assistant Prosecutor of the Special Prosecutor's Office that heard the case stated that there were many similarities between the body found in the Coyolate River and buried in the General Cemetery of Santa Lucía Cotzumalguapa with the existing data on Mr. Reyes Pérez. He also stated that it was not possible to find the photographs of the body in the archives of the Criminal Investigation Service of the National Civil Police of Escuintla, even though they were registered, and that it was very difficult to search for the body because "the notebook of the administrator of the cemetery of Santa Lucía Cotzumalguapa, which was used to keep the registry of the persons buried, only contained blank spaces for the period from August to November of two thousand three".

278. In its Merits Report No. 398/21, the Commission considered that, from an overall analysis of the manner in which the investigation has been conducted, it can be concluded that it has been characterized by the lack of immediate adoption of timely and effective evidentiary measures, as well as by the existence of numerous negligence and irregularities. The Commission noted that, for many moments, the investigation lacked a comprehensive strategy that would allow an effective search for the whereabouts of Mr. Reyes Pérez and the identification and punishment of those responsible for his disappearance.

279. Likewise, the IACHR verified that the constant changes in the conduct of the investigation and the long periods of inactivity that occurred between each transition from one prosecutor's office to another harmed the progress of the investigations. In particular, it highlighted the delays that occurred when ended the intervention of the Special Prosecutor and the case returned to the District Prosecutor's Office of Retalhuleu, where the case was assigned for three months without the prosecutor's knowledge. Likewise, the overlapping of investigative bodies and the lack of coordination between them caused some proceedings to be repeated on several occasions, such as the taking of Mrs. Toledo Chávez's testimony, increasing the risk of causing her a revictimizing situation.

280. The Commission also noted that the officials of the Public Prosecutor's Office in charge of the investigation did not take appropriate measures to determine whether the body of Mr. Reyes Pérez had been located in other jurisdictions and buried as an unidentified person. Reyes Pérez had been located in other jurisdictions and buried as an unidentified person and highlighted the informality existing in the General Cemetery of Santa Lucía Cotzumalguapa during those months regarding the records of burials of unidentified corpses and the lack of measures to try to correct such omissions, which made the forensic investigation tasks in the cemetery and the successive exhumations of corpses very difficult.

281. All of these circumstances engaged the international responsibility of the Guatemalan State for the violation of the duty to investigate the facts with due diligence and explain to a large extent the failure to clarify the fate of the victim. In this sense, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the failure to comply with its obligation to investigate, prosecute and punish, within a reasonable time and with due diligence, the disappearance of the victim and is therefore responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

282. The IACHR also found that the State knew from the first hours of Mr. Reyes Pérez's disappearance that he was at risk, that the very nature and seriousness of the facts reported by Mrs. Toledo Chávez could reasonably lead to the conclusion that Mr. Reyes Pérez was in danger of his life, and that the authorities in charge of the investigation did not act diligently during the first days of the disappearance or throughout the entire process. In this sense, the Court determined that the State is responsible for having violated its duty to protect the rights to life, liberty and personal integrity of Mr. Reyes Pérez.

283. Finally, the Commission considered that the disappearance of Mr. Reyes Pérez has generated a deep sense of pain, anguish and uncertainty in his next of kin, who have appealed to various authorities and have undertaken multiple judicial and extrajudicial search actions that have proved fruitless; feelings that have deepened due to the lack of an effective and diligent investigation. Likewise, the Commission emphasized that - as a result of the multiple changes in the conduct of the investigation and the lack of coordination among the investigators - the wife of Mr. Reyes Pérez has been called to testify on numerous occasions, a circumstance that has undoubtedly generated feelings of revictimization and anguish. Accordingly, the Commission considered that the State violated the right to humane treatment to the detriment of the next of kin.

284. Based on the findings of fact and law in the report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the Republic of Guatemala is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, humane treatment, personal liberty, fair trial and judicial protection enshrined in Articles 4, 5(1), 7, 8(1) and 25(1) of the American Convention on Human Rights, respectively, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument. Likewise, the Commission concluded that the State is internationally responsible for the violation of the right to humane treatment enshrined in Article 5(1) of the American Convention with respect to the wife of Mr. Reyes Pérez and their six children mentioned in paragraph 63 of the report.

- Julio Haron Ygarza et al. v. Venezuela.

285. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Venezuelan State to the detriment of Norma Estela Guarulla Garrido, Julio Haron Ygarza and Romel Edgardo Guzamana for the violation of their right to be tried without undue delay and of their political rights, after having been elected as deputies to the National Assembly.

286. On December 6, 2015, elections Venezuela held election for deputies for the 2016-2021 constitutional term. The voting results, published on the official website of the National Electoral Council (CNE), showed the election of a total of 167 deputies, of which 109 belonged to the political organization "Mesa de la Unidad Democrática" (Democratic Unity Roundtable), in opposition to the government, 55 to the ruling political party "Partido Socialista Unido de Venezuela" (United Socialist Party of Venezuela), and 3 to indigenous representation.

287. This distribution not only granted an important parliamentary majority to the government opposition but also allowed the elected deputies of the opposition and those elected for the seats of indigenous representation to reach the qualified majority of two thirds of the deputies of the National Assembly established by the Constitution for the exercise of certain constitutional powers. In the voting, Norma Estela Guarulla Garrido and Julio Haron Ygarza were elected for the state of Amazonas, both belonging to the political organization Mesa de la Unidad Democrática, as well as Romel Edgardo Guzamana as main deputy for the indigenous representation for the Southern Region.

288. Each of the candidates was proclaimed as such by the CNE as indicated in the Organic Law of Electoral Processes, and, on December 8, 2015, they were issued the corresponding credential. On the same date, in addition, they began to enjoy parliamentary immunity within the framework of the provisions of Article 200 of the Constitution of the Venezuelan State.

289. On December 29, 2015, former candidate Nicia Marina Maldonado Maldonado, filed a brief of electoral litigation appeal before the Electoral Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice (TSJ), together with a request for precautionary measure for the protection of constitutional rights and a measure of suspension of effects against the voting act held in the electoral circuit of the state of Amazonas. The appellant questioned the validity of the voting act of the parliamentary elections, "for being vitiated of ABSOLUTE NULLITY, being the product of the manipulation of the free and secret voting of the voters of the State of Amazonas and that as a whole constitutes a structural and massive fraud that affects the Venezuelan electoral system".

290. On January 4, 2016, the day before the installation session of the new National Assembly, the Electoral Chamber published on the website of the TSJ Decision No. 260 dated December 30, 2015, by which it declared itself competent to hear and decide the electoral litigation appeal together with a request for precautionary action for the protection of constitutional rights and declared it to be admissible. Consequently, the Chamber ordered "provisionally and immediately the suspension of the effects of the acts of totalization, adjudication and proclamation issued by the subordinate bodies of the National Electoral Council with respect to the candidates elected by uninominal vote, list vote and indigenous representation in the electoral process held on December 6, 2015 in the state of Amazonas for the election of deputies to the National Assembly".

291. Despite the notification of Decision No. 260, the National Assembly swore in the victims as deputies on January 6, 2016. This act motivated that on January 11, 2016, the Electoral Chamber declared the Board of Directors of the National Assembly and the victims in contempt. By means of the same resolution, the Electoral Chamber ordered the National Assembly to leave without effect the act of swearing in the victims and to proceed to their immediate disincorporation. Furthermore, the Electoral Chamber added that, as long as the incorporation of the victims as deputies of the Assembly is maintained, all acts issued and issued by said institution would be considered absolutely null and void.

292. The victims filed an opposition against the precautionary measure declared admissible by the Electoral Chamber through its Decision No. 260. In accordance with the deadlines established by the Organic Law of the TSJ, the Electoral Chamber should have issued a decision on the opposition to the precautionary measure no later than January 26, 2016, but failed to do so.

293. Regarding the merits of the electoral litigation appeal, on February 25, 2016, the Electoral Chamber opened the case for the submission of evidence and should have set the opportunity for the oral hearings on April 7, 2016 at the latest. However, this did not happen either, therefore the electoral litigation proceeding has been paralyzed at least until October 15, 2020, a situation that has been replicated with the precautionary measure ordered within its framework.

294. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 407/21, the Commission noted that the victims were unable to assume the positions to which they were elected based on the proceeding promoted in December 2015 and which remains unfinished to date. Based on this, the IACHR evaluated the duration of the electoral proceeding in light of the elements of reasonable time and its impact on the political rights of the victims.

295. With respect to the complexity of the case, it was considered that the inherent characteristics of the electoral litigation appeal, as well as those present in the case, demonstrate that it was not of notable complexity. In particular, the Commission noted that elements such as the complexity of the evidence presented in the proceeding, the plurality of the procedural parties or the number of victims, the time elapsed since the infringement heard by the Court, the particularities of the proceeding regulated in the internal regulations of the State or the very context in which the facts took place, do not clearly demonstrate that the appeal to be resolved by the Electoral Chamber involved a high level of complexity to the point of requiring more than 4 years to be decided.

296. Regarding the procedural activity of the interested party, the Commission noted that the petitioner claimed not to have incurred in any dilatory conduct in the proceedings and that, from the information in the file, it does not appear, for example, that the victims have filed a variety of appeals in the proceeding that could justify a certain delay in it, or that it has been engaged in obstructive procedural conduct.

297. With regard to the conduct of the judicial authorities, it was noted that, according to the provisions of the Organic Law of the TSJ, as well as the arguments of the petitioner, the Electoral Chamber had exceeded all the deadlines set for conducting the measures necessary for the development of the proceedings. Specifically, the Electoral Chamber did not rule within the legal time limit on the brief opposing the precautionary measure filed by the victims, nor did it set a date for oral arguments within the time limit provided for by the Organic Law.

298. With respect to the effects on the legal situation of the person involved in the proceeding, the IACHR noted that the delay in the actions of the Electoral Chamber has been seriously affecting the rights of the victims, who, despite having been elected as deputies, have been prevented from joining the National Assembly due to the effects of the precautionary protection granted by the Electoral Chamber. In this regard, it stressed that, in the two opportunities in which the Assembly decided to swear in the elected and proclaimed deputies, the TSJ declared this legislative body in contempt in order to block any possibility for the victims to occupy their positions, which simultaneously meant a limitation to the exercise of the constitutional mandate of the Assembly.

299. In view of these considerations, the IACHR considered that the duration of the electoral proceeding that prevented the victims from finally taking office was contrary to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, also impacting both the right to active and passive vote and, ultimately, affecting the right of the victims to hold office.

300. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State of Venezuela is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection protected by Articles 8(1) and 25(1) of the American Convention on Human Rights, and of the political rights contained in Article 23(1) of the same treaty, in relation to Article 1(1) of the American Convention, to the detriment of Julio Haron Ygarza, Nirma Estela Guarulla Garrido and Romel Edgardo Guzamana.

- José Segundo Zambrano and Pablo Marcelo Rodríguez vs. Argentina.

301. This case concerns the international responsibility of the Argentine State for the forced disappearance and subsequent execution of José Segundo Zambrano and Pablo Marcelo Rodríguez.

302. At the time of the facts, José Segundo Zambrano and Pablo Marcelo Rodríguez were 28 and 25 years old respectively and were friends. There are several statements in the case concerning Mr. Zambrano's relationship with police officers. In particular, several witnesses indicated that he was in contact with members of the Mendoza Police.

303. Stella Maris, mother of Mr. Zambrano, stated that on March 25, 2000, in the morning hours, he left her house in a blue Peugeot 205, informing her that he was going to the Automobile Section of the Police Investigations Department. In turn, Sonia Veronica Fernandez, Pablo Rodriguez's wife, indicated that he left his house around 12:30 pm in the company of José Zambrano. That was the last day they were seen alive by their relatives.

304. The bodies of the victims were found on July 3, 2000, half-buried in the foothills of the department of Godoy Cruz, a few kilometers from the center of Mendoza. The necroscopic report determined that the victims died from bullet wounds. Although according to the prosecutor's investigation the murders allegedly occurred on the same day of their disappearance, according to forensic reports of July 18, 2000 and May 2004, the death allegedly occurred between April 5 and 6, 2000.

305. According to what is stated in the brief for elevation to trial, on March 25, 2000, the victims, accompanied by an individual identified as Mario Díaz, and on board a blue Peugeot car, arrived at the Los Barrancos racetrack in the foothills of the department of Godoy Cruz. Mr. Díaz allegedly guided them to that place on the instructions of police officer Felipe Gil, who was waiting for them at the racetrack in the company of four other people. Mr. Gil approached the left window of the vehicle and shot José Zambrano, who was in the driver's seat, in the head, while two other people shot Pablo Rodríguez, who tried to flee and was hit in the abdomen and head. The Public Prosecutor's Office qualified the facts as double homicide with the involvement and premeditated joinder of more than two persons. For his part, Mr. Diaz made several statements in which he maintained that there was police participation in the facts.

306. The case file shows that the victims' next of kin filed two habeas corpus petitions on June 1, 2000, before the Ninth Preliminary Examining Court in connection with the facts of this case. According to the information provided by the petitioner, two files were established as a result of these habeas corpus; however, both petitions were rejected because the police authorities reported that neither Zambrano nor Rodríguez were being held in police custody.

307. Also, on March 29, 2000, a report of the disappearance of the two victims was filed with the police authorities, giving rise to the file "Av. Paradero" in the Fourth Examining Court of the First Judicial District. On May 11, 2004, the Seventh Criminal Court issued Ruling No. 987, by which it acquitted the two defendants, Mario Díaz Rivero and Felipe Gil Fernández "as the degree of absolute certainty required for this procedural stage had not been reached". The chamber pointed out, in particular, that Mr. Díaz's right not to testify against himself had been violated, which constituted a violation of Article 296 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

308. In spite of the above, the Court pointed out the existence of elements that “contribute to the positive suspicion that both the accused Diaz and the accused Gil are not alien to the facts that they are accused of”. Stella Maris Loria and Elsa Colucci filed an appeal for cassation as private plaintiffs. On December 16, 2004, the Supreme Court of Mendoza rejected the appeal.

309. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 330/22, the Commission considered that in the face of the indications according to which State agents had participated in the facts related to the disappearance and death of the victims, the State did not provide an alternative hypothesis based on a diligent and effective investigation. In this regard, it held that this gives probative force to the evidence of the participation of State agents, in the absence of clarification and investigation. In this sense, the Commission considered that the legal qualification that corresponds to the facts is that of a forced disappearance that ceased with the execution of the victims.

310. In this regard, the IACHR noted that the elements of forced disappearance of persons were established since the victims were deprived of their liberty on March 25, 2000, and continued until their remains were found on July 3, 2000. It emphasized that, during this period of time, there was a refusal to recognize their whereabouts, which was evidenced by the deficient response and ineffectiveness of the appeals and complaints filed. In addition, it considered it relevant to recall that, according to a newspaper article offered as evidence, the public authorities of Mendoza had allegedly characterized José Zambrano and Pablo Rodríguez as fugitives, and not as missing. In light of this, it concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to life, to personal integrity and to personal liberty.

311. With respect to the investigation of the facts, the Commission considered, first, that the omission to carry out a search for 48 hours after the State became aware of the serious and imminent risk in which the victims could find themselves through the first report of disappearance, constitutes, in itself, a breach of the duty to investigate with due diligence. Likewise, the Commission observed that, as the State itself acknowledged, there was a lack of diligence in the investigation carried out by the Fourth Examining Court, which led to the annulment of the testimony given by the main witness, and according to which the prosecutor’s hypothesis was sustained. The Commission emphasized that these faults in the proceeding resulted in the acquittal of two of the accused, one of them a police officer, and that a new investigation of the facts as ordered by the court was not carried out.

312. In addition, the IACHR noted that another component of the failure to comply with the duty of due diligence in the present case is related to the lack of follow-up of logical lines of investigation, a situation that, according to Inter-American standards, is particularly serious in the case of a hypothesis that involved State agents.

313. With regard to the duration of the proceedings, the Commission found that more than 22 years had passed since the facts occurred and that, despite an express order from the Seventh Criminal Court to resume the investigations of the case, the State has not, according to the information available, taken any additional steps, and the proceedings have stalled without any substantive action since 2004. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

314. Finally, it concluded that the State violated the right to psychological and moral integrity of the victims’ next of kin.

315. Based on the findings of fact and law in the report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to life, to humane treatment, to personal liberty, to fair trial and to judicial protection enshrined in Articles 3, 4(1), 5(1), 7(1), 8(1) and 25(1), in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of José Segundo Zambrano and Pablo Marcelo Rodríguez. The Commission also concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of Articles I(a) and (b) of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons.

- Aldo Zuccolillo Moscarda vs Paraguay.

316. This case concerns the international responsibility of Paraguay for violations of the right to freedom of expression, the principle of legality and judicial guarantees to the detriment of Aldo Zuccolillo Moscarda.

317. Aldo Zuccolillo Moscarda was director of the newspaper “ABC Color”, a newspaper of large circulation in Paraguay, founded by himself in August 1967. He was a renowned journalist in Paraguay and internationally; he held executive positions in the Inter-American Press Association, as well as in other professional associations committed to journalistic activity.

318. On December 24, 1998, Juan Carlos Galaverna, a Paraguayan politician and former senator of the Republic, filed a criminal complaint against the newspaper “ABC Color” and Mr. Zuccolillo Moscarda, for the crimes of slander, defamation and libel, before Criminal Court No. 7 of the city of Asunción. In his filing he claimed that the newspaper “ABC Color” had published at least 15 “manipulative, lying, distorted and biased” publications. In support of his claim, the plaintiff attached various clippings from publications of the newspaper “ABC Color” which, he argued, were intended to discredit and ridicule him.

319. On April 30, 2001, the judge in charge of Criminal Settlement and Sentencing Court No. 7 sentenced Aldo Zuccolillo Moscarda, as editor of the newspaper “ABC Color”, for the crimes of defamation, slander and libel to the maximum non-custodial sanction established in the Paraguayan Criminal Code: 360 days-fine. On May 16, 2001, an appeal was filed against this decision.

320. On February 11, 2002, the First Chamber of the Court of Criminal Appeals modified the final judgment of first instance, since it considered that the facts could not be subsumed within the criminal types of slander and libel, but constituted the crime of defamation, this being an “aggravated species of the genus libel”. On the other hand, it was decided to increase the amount of the fine, due to the fact that “the offense investigated and judged was materialized through an organ of the written press of wide circulation, a vehicle that has a powerful influence as a generator of public opinion [...] therefore the pernicious effect inferred by the punishable act and the unlawful conduct is greater”.

321. The plaintiff Galaverna filed an extraordinary appeal for cassation, through which he requested that the sentence issued by the Court of Criminal Appeals be annulled, and that Mr. Zuccolillo be sentenced to a prison sentence, to pay the penalty of composition, and that he be obliged to publish the sentence. At the same time, he filed an action of unconstitutionality before the Supreme Court of Justice.

322. For his part, on February 22, 2002, Mr. Zuccolillo filed an action of unconstitutionality before the Supreme Court of Justice of Paraguay against the decision issued by the Court of Criminal Settlement and Sentencing No. 7 and that issued by the First Chamber of the Court of Appeals. In his brief he alleged the violation of the rights to defense, due process of law, freedom of expression and thought and requested his acquittal. Likewise, he indicated in the unconstitutionality appeal that one of the violations was the determination of the sum of the fine without the expression, reasonable and founded, of the parameters to determine Mr. Zuccolillo’s income.

323. On December 28, 2005, the Supreme Court decided not to uphold the unconstitutionality action filed by the parties. However, with respect to the extraordinary appeal for cassation filed by the plaintiff, on December 28, 2005, by majority, it declared it admissible and qualified the facts attributed to Mr. Zuccolillo again as constituting the crimes of slander, defamation and libel, despite the fact that the Court of Appeals had classified them only as defamation. In this regard, the Supreme Court concluded that Mr. Zuccolillo had engaged in conduct that evidently met the elements to qualify as slanderous and that he had performed acts to injure Mr. Galaverna’s honor, since he had repeatedly disseminated false writings over a prolonged period of time. By decision of the majority, the Court imposed on Mr. Zuccolillo the additional penalty of composition, for which he was ordered to pay in total the sum of two hundred and ninety-five thousand six hundred and eighty-seven dollars.

324. In its Merits Report No. 398/22, the Commission considered that the criticisms made by Mr. Zuccolillo referred to issues of obvious public interest, since they pointed out possible acts of corruption of a senator of the Republic of Paraguay, and therefore his expressions were protected in a special way, being of high importance in the framework of a democratic society, and therefore criminal law was not applicable, since it is contrary to the American Convention to protect the honor of public officials by framing them in conducts typified by criminal law.

325. It also noted that the criminal definitions of defamation, slander and libel contained precepts that did not provide the necessary clarity with respect to the conduct that could constitute an act contrary to the Criminal Code. Thus, the Commission pointed out that expressions such as “to affirm or divulge...a fact referring to another, capable of injuring his honor...” implies a broad range of conducts that is neither precise nor clear, in contravention of the requirement of maximum clarity pursued by the requirement of legality. The Commission also emphasized that statements such as “expressing a negative value judgment to another or to a third party with respect to the former...” are too broad and can cover a multiplicity of expressions and activities, which is contrary to the precision and exhaustivity that restrictions to freedom of expression must observe, especially if it is taken into account that restrictions to freedom of expression were contained in criminal legislation, the greatest manifestation of the punitive power of the State.

326. For these reasons, the IACHR concluded that, although the crimes of slander, defamation and libel were previously established in the Paraguayan Criminal Code, the ambiguity and breadth of the cited articles imply a breach of the requirement of strict legality in the imposition of restrictions on the right to freedom of expression.

327. Similarly, the Commission considered that the sanction imposed on Mr. Zuccolillo constituted an undue restriction on his right to freedom of expression, as it failed to comply with the criteria of legality, necessity and proportionality, in addition to inhibiting democratic debate and citizen control over public officials on matters of public interest.

328. Additionally, it noted that in the judicial decisions issued against Mr. Zuccolillo, it was pointed out that the last conduct charged had taken place on January 5, 1999; while the penalty of composition was incorporated into Paraguayan criminal law on November 28, 1998, so that only one publication reported would fall within the period in which the additional penalty of composition would already be in force. In this sense, the IACHR considered that the Supreme Court of Paraguay made a retroactive application of criminal law, sentencing Mr. Aldo Zuccolillo to the additional penalty of composition, with respect to facts that had taken place prior to the entry into force of the legislation establishing such penalty. Therefore, it concluded that Paraguay violated the principle of legality and non-retroactivity of criminal law.

329. Finally, the Commission considered it proven that the State of Paraguay violated the reasonable time limit, taking into account that the entire criminal proceeding lasted from 1998 to 2005, without the State having been able to justify such a long period of time, as well as the violation of the duty to give reasons for a judgment due to the lack of clarity regarding the reasons on the basis of which the amount of the pecuniary penalty imposed on Mr. Zuccolillo was determined.

330. Based on the considerations of fact and law contained in the report, the IACHR concluded that the State of Paraguay violated the rights recognized in Articles 13 (freedom of thought and expression), in relation to Article 8 (right to a fair trial) and 9 (freedom from ex post facto law) of the American Convention; all of these, in relation to Articles 1(1) (obligation to respect rights) and 2 (domestic legal effects) of said instrument, to the detriment of Mr. Aldo Zuccolillo.

- Ángel Eduardo Gahona López vs. Nicaragua.

331. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Nicaraguan State for the extrajudicial execution of journalist Ángel Eduardo Gahona López by State agents, as well as for the situation of impunity in which such acts remain.

332. The present case is framed in the context of serious human rights violations that occurred during the mass protests that began in mid-April 2018 and expanded throughout the country in the following months.

333. At the time of the events, Mr. Gahona López was 42 years old, a journalist by profession and director of the independent news program “El Meridiano”. In mid-April 2018, young environmentalists carried out protests as a consequence of the measures taken by the State to address the severe forest fire that affected the Indio-Maíz Biological Reserve. Days later, massive protests began throughout Nicaragua against the approval of proposed reforms to the Social Security Law. Although the Government withdrew the reform proposal a few days later, the protests continued and extended to other demands.

334. On April 21, 2018, a demonstration took place in the city of Bluefields, which turned violent in the afternoon hours. Several journalists went to cover the events, including Ángel Gahona and Engels Downs. Around 18:00 hours, a confrontation between a group of youths and a group of riot police in front of the judicial complex took place. Engels Downs, together with Mr. Gahona crossed from Reyes Park to the mayor’s office, while transmitting live in order to record the damage caused. Angel Gahona climbed the stairs of the mayor’s office, a detonation was heard and he fell to the right onto the sidewalk, with a visible wound to his head. According to the videos provided by the petitioner and the testimony of Engels Downs, Neyda Dixon and Jessileth Henríquez, a second detonation was heard seconds later. In other videos, up to two more shots were recorded.

335. Mr. Gahona López was assisted by civilians. Various testimonies provided to the IACHR are consistent in indicating that the National Police did not assist the victim. The victim arrived at the Ernesto Sequeira Blanco hospital with vital signs, dying at 19:00 hours due to irreversible severe cranial encephalic trauma.

336. On May 7, 2018, the Prosecutor in charge charged two individuals, Brandon Lovo and Glen Slate for their responsibility as perpetrators and necessary cooperators of the crime of murder to the detriment of Ángel Gahona, respectively. According to the accusatory thesis the responsibility on the facts corresponded to the two young men, whose intention would have been to shoot at the police, hitting the journalist by mistake. On May 8, 2018, the Judge of the Sixth Criminal District of the Managua District Court admitted the accusation formulated by the prosecutor, ordered the preventive detention of the accused and referred the case to oral trial.

337. On August 14, 2018, the oral trial began. On August 30, 2018, the Titular Judge of the Sixth Criminal District Trial Court Managua District, issued Judgment No.103-2018 by which he considered that it had been proven beyond reasonable doubt that defendants Brandon Lovo and Glen Slate were perpetrator and necessary cooperator of the murder, in addition to other charges related to the injuries caused to officer Anselmo Rodriguez, exposure to danger of the journalists and possession of weapons. Brandon Lovo was sentenced to 20 years and six months in prison, and Glen Slate to 12 years and six months.

338. The State reported that on June 10, 2019, Law No. 996, Amnesty Law, was published, which “granted broad amnesty to all persons who participated in the events that took place throughout the national territory from April 18, 2018 until the date of entry into force. This Amnesty was extended to persons who have been investigated, who are in the process of investigation, in criminal proceedings to determine responsibilities and in execution of sentences.” On June 11, 2019, the Ministry of the Interior of the State issued a press release by which it announced that, in compliance with the provisions of the Amnesty Law, the General Directorate of the National Penitentiary System released 56 people who were being held in prison for crimes against common security and public tranquility. Among those released were Brandon Lovo and Glen Slate.

339. The petitioner complained that since the death of Ángel Gahona, his family members began to be victims of intimidation and threats, which continue to this day.

340. In its Merits Report No. 37/23, the Commission first noted that numerous evidentiary elements point to the fact that the shot that caused the death of Mr. Gahona López came from a State agent and that there are elements of conviction to conclude that the murder was related to his journalistic work, since at that very moment, he was carrying out that work: he was reporting live on the protests organized against the State. The Commission pointed out that this is in addition to the threats he had previously received and the highly relevant public issues that the journalist was investigating.

341. In relation to the use of force by police officers, the IACHR observed that the State did not present information on compliance with the requirements of legitimate purpose, absolute necessity, and proportionality. On the contrary, the Commission remarked that the exercise of journalistic work carried out in the context of a demonstration does not constitute, in any case, a legitimate purpose that justifies the use of force by the security forces. It also indicated that the audiovisual records available to the Commission indicate that the victim did not present any type of danger or threat and that it was up to the State to demonstrate that it adopted the strictly necessary and proportional measures to control any perceived risk to public order or to the rights of individuals.

342. Likewise, it emphasized that the responsibility of the State for the excessive use of force also arises from the omission of the authorities to prevent these violations and that, in the instant case, the State did not present information on how it adequately regulated the use of force, including the participation of anti-riot groups, nor the type of adequate training provided to its different police forces so that they could carry out their work of maintaining public order with due professionalism and respect for human rights, and that there is no evidence that the State has adopted the protection measures that the special risk posed by the exercise of journalistic activity merited.

343. With respect to the investigation into the death of the victim and the subsequent trial and punishment of the alleged perpetrators, the Commission considered that this was not compatible with the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection. In particular, it pointed out that the expert opinions in the case were not carried out with due diligence and that the State did not exhaust the lines of investigation linked to the practice of journalism, which implicated State agents as the material authors of Ángel Gahona's death.

344. Additionally, it considered that by issuing Law 966, Amnesty Law, whose purpose was to prevent the investigation, prosecution, capture, prosecution and conviction of the human rights violations perpetrated in the context of the protests, the State violated the articles of the right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

345. Finally, the IACHR considered that the loss of their loved one, the absence of justice and truth about what happened, as well as the constant threats have caused deep suffering and anguish to Ángel Gahona's family, in violation of their right to psychological and moral integrity.

346. Based on the findings of fact and law of the report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, to a fair trial, to freedom of expression and to judicial protection established in Articles 4(1), 8(1), 13 and 25(1), in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Ángel Gahona. It also concluded that the State violated Article 5(1) of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of Ángel Gahona's next of kin.

- Andrés Trujillo et al. v. Bolivarian Republic v. Venezuela.

347. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Venezuelan State for the illegal repression of a demonstration in April 2002 and the disproportionate use of lethal force by State agents that resulted in the injury of five people and the death of seven people.

348. The Venezuelan Federation of Chambers of Commerce and the Venezuelan Workers' Confederation called for a demonstration on April 11, 2002, as a result of the layoffs made by the then government to employees of the state-owned oil company Petróleos de Venezuela (PDVSA).

349. On April 11, 2002, this demonstration took place, where the victims were present. The demonstration began at the PDVSA headquarters, in the Chuao neighborhood of the city of Caracas, and at around 11:30 a.m. they proceeded along the Francisco Fajardo Highway towards the Miraflores Palace. According to the photographic material in the file before the Commission, dozens of agents of the National Guard were on said highway and launched tear gas towards the demonstrators. The demonstration continued towards the Miraflores Palace and near the "El Silencio" subway station, agents of the National Guard and other unidentified persons fired shots and threw stones at the demonstrators.

350. In this context, according to the information provided by the petitioner, Jhonny Palencia, Juan David Querales and Víctor Emilio Reinoso died and Fernando Joel Sánchez Colmenares was shot in his left arm, which was not disputed by the State. According to the photographic record provided, near the lifeless body of Jhonny Palencia there were National Guard agents carrying firearms, as with Mr. Querales and Mr. Reinoso. The IACHR took note of the statement of the then Chief Inspector of the Directorate of the Preventive Intelligence Services, who acknowledged that, in that area, the National Guard "repelled them with firearms, pistols, sub-machine guns and shotguns".

351. After such events, the demonstrators continued advancing towards the Llaguno Bridge. The Caracas Metropolitan Police placed armored trucks at the "La Pedrera" corner. According to the documentation provided, the state agents threw tear gas bombs, and a confrontation with weapons and stones took place between the authorities, some people who had infiltrated the demonstrations, and other unidentified people who allegedly were part of the "Círculos Bolivarianos" (Bolivarian Circles).

352. According to the audiovisual documentation provided, in that area, Jesús Orlando Arellano was shot in the chest by an unidentified person who was behind a tree, which caused his death. The petitioner also reported that Jesús Mohamad Capote, Orlando Rojas, and José Antonio Gamallo died as a result of gunshot wounds, and that José Antonio Dávila Uzcátegui, Elías Belmonte Torres, and Jean Carlos Serrano were shot and wounded. Likewise, Andrés Trujillo was wounded by firearm in the right inguinal region, was transferred by ambulance and was ordered to undergo surgery and hospitalization.

353. Statements by public agents indicated that in the coordination meetings prior to and during the demonstration, there was coordination with members of the "Bolivarian Circles" to counteract the march. For example, then General Manuel Rosendo explained that in the coordination meetings "the use of the Bolivarian Circles (...) in the areas where the concentrations would take place was highlighted" and that "the Minister of Defense was coordinating via telephone the summoning of the Bolivarian Circles to move towards Miraflores".

354. In view of the events that occurred in the present case, several complaints were filed, including a formal imputation action against the then President of the Republic, the Minister of Defense and the Attorney General of the Republic filed on June 25, 2002, before the Full Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice due to their acts and omissions during the violence of April 11, 2002, which resulted in the death and injuries of the victims. On December 5, 2006, the indictment was extended against four Generals of the National Guard. On July 6, 2006, the Court of Proceedings of the Plenary Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice declared the indictment action inadmissible.

355. An investigation was also initiated against three private individuals who allegedly participated in the violence against the victims. On October 3, 2003, the Court decided to absolve these individuals of criminal responsibility, stating that the defendants "made use of the weapons they were carrying in legitimate self-defense".

356. On August 29, 2005, Mohamad Merhi, in his capacity as President of the Civil Association VIVE, requested access to the files related to the deaths of Jesús Mohamad Capote, Orlando Rojas, Jesús Orlando Arrellano, Johnny Palencia and Juan David Querales. On September 12, 2005, the corresponding Prosecutor's Offices denied such request.

357. In addition, other investigations were initiated before the Public Prosecutor's Office. The State indicated that on June 20, 2007, the Criminal Investigations Division of Regional Command No. 5 reported that, as a result of the events of April 11, 2002, five National Guard officers were charged by the Thirty-ninth Prosecutor's Office of the Public Prosecution Service and that a preliminary hearing was pending. The Commission did not have updated information on the status of the investigations that remain open.

358. In its Merits Report No. 313/23, the Commission considered that in relation to the events that occurred near the "El Silencio" subway station, there is no dispute that State agents used lethal force, and that Jhony Palencia, Juan David Querales and Víctor Emilio Reinoso died as a result of gunshots; and Fernando Joel Sánchez Colmenares was wounded as a result of gunshots.

359. Regarding the events that occurred near the "La Pedrera" area, the IACHR noted the lack of controversy that State agents and the "Bolivarian Circles" used lethal force, and that Jesús Orlando Arellano, Jesús Mohamad Capote, Orlando Rojas and José Antonio Gamallo died as a result of gunfire; and José Antonio Dávila Uzcátegui, Elías Belmonte Torres, Jean Carlos Serrano and Andrés Trujillo were wounded as a result of gunfire. Regarding these events, visual material was observed of State agents and other unidentified persons who were allegedly part of the "Bolivarian Circles" armed and shooting at the demonstrators. In this regard, the Commission considered that there are sufficient elements to determine that the facts of this case attributable to the "Bolivarian Circles" occurred with the collaboration or at least the acquiescence of the Public Force.

360. In view of this situation, the Commission noted that in the instant case the State did not demonstrate that its agents had made a legitimate, necessary and proportionate use of lethal force and concluded that Venezuela is responsible for the violation of the right to life and the right to humane treatment.

361. In relation to the right to assembly, the IACHR noted that the purpose of the demonstration was to protest against the then government's decision to dismiss workers from a company. In this regard, it noted that all the victims, except José Antonio Dávila Uzcátegui who was on the roof of his building, were participating in the demonstration and, consequently, were exercising their right to assembly.

362. In this regard, it pointed out that although during the demonstration some persons who participated or infiltrated the demonstration resorted to violent means, the victims were engaged in peaceful activities, and that the State did not present any documentation to prove that the victims were armed or engaged in any type of attack against the State authorities, nor did it demonstrate the legitimate, necessary and proportionate use of lethal force by its agents against the victims. Therefore, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to assembly.

363. In addition, taking into consideration that after more than two decades the facts have not been clarified and no one has been convicted, the IACHR affirmed that to date there is still a situation of impunity for the facts of the case. It also noted that the State has failed to comply with its duty to guarantee an adequate investigation to identify and, if applicable, punish all persons responsible for the death and injuries of the victims in this case. For these reasons, it concluded that the State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

364. With respect to the guarantee of reasonable time, the Commission found that in the instant case, more than 20 years have passed since the facts occurred without a resolution in the criminal justice system. To date, the facts have not been clarified, and no person has been punished. In this regard, the Commission noted that the State did not allege elements that justify the complexity of the case, that there were various shortcomings and irregularities in the investigation, and that the State did not report on multiple periods of procedural inactivity. The Commission also noted that there was no information that the victims had in any way obstructed the investigation and emphasized that, given the injuries to the surviving victims, the harm to their physical integrity could constitute an element to be considered to accelerate the investigations in order to clarify what happened. In this sense, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to a fair trial.

365. Finally, it considered that the death and injury of a person in a context such as the one described in the instant case, as well as the absence of a complete and effective investigation, which in turn causes suffering and anguish for not knowing the truth, constitutes in itself an infringement of the psychological and moral integrity of the members of the victims' families. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to psychological and moral integrity to the detriment of the members of the victims' families.

366. Based on the considerations of fact and law contained in the report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State of Venezuela violated the rights enshrined in Articles 4 (right to life), 5 (right to humane treatment), 8(1) (right to a fair trial), 15 (right to assembly) and 25(1) (right to judicial protection) of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of said instrument, to the detriment of the persons identified in the various sections of the report.

- Leandro Héctor Parpaglione et al. vs Argentina.

367. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Argentine State for violations of the right to appeal a judgment and to judicial protection to the detriment of twelve victims.

368. The petitioners in the instant case were all tried and sentenced to various prison terms in the context of criminal proceedings governed by the rules of the Argentine Code of Criminal Procedure (CPPN) enacted by Law No. 23.984 of August 21, 1991. Pursuant to Section 456 of said Code, an appeal for cassation against a first instance judgment may only "be filed on the following grounds: 1°) Non-observance or erroneous application of the substantive criminal law and 2°) Non-observance of the rules established by this Code under penalty of inadmissibility, lapse or nullity, provided that, with the exception of cases of absolute nullity, the appellant has timely claimed the correction of the defect, if possible, or reserved the right to appeal in cassation". In those cases in which the oral courts of first instance denied the admissibility of the appeal for cassation and the appeal to the National Chamber of Criminal Cassation was not successful, the extraordinary federal appeal to the Supreme Court of the Nation was available, regulated in articles 14 of Law 48 and 6 of Law 4055.

369. In September 2005, the Supreme Court of Justice issued a decision in the case "Casal Matías Eugenio y otros/ robo simple en grado de tentativa" (Casal Matías Eugenio and others/ attempted simple robbery). In this case law precedent, the Supreme Court referred to the restrictive way in which the judges of the lower courts interpreted the scope of the subject matter reviewable by the appeal for cassation and, in particular, with respect to the differentiation between questions of interpretation of the substantive law and questions of facts and evidence. Although the Supreme Court did not declare the unconstitutionality of any rule in the "Casal" decision, said precedent established an interpretative guideline that extends the scope of the subject matter reviewable by appeal for cassation.

370. All of the convictions imposed on the petitioners in this case occurred prior to the Supreme Court's issuance of the "Casal" decision.

371. In its Merits Report No. 96/22, the Commission observed that the normative reforms and jurisprudential changes adopted by the Argentine State were not applicable to the specific situation of the victims in the instant case. In particular, the Commission noted that it has not been demonstrated that the "Casal" judgment is a criterion that has general and binding effects beyond the specific case and that said judgment was subsequent to the proceedings against the victims. Furthermore, the Commission noted that until the enactment of the Federal Code of Criminal Procedure in December 2014 - which to date has not yet been fully implemented - there were no legal reforms that incorporated the doctrine of the “Casal” ruling into the text of the criminal procedure nor was any provision enacted that extends the effects of the ruling to those proceedings already concluded previously.

372. The IACHR emphasized that, from a reading of the various judgments handed down by the National Criminal Cassation Chamber, it is clear that it applied a restrictive interpretation of Article 456 of the CPPN, which according to its literal wording was not designed to guarantee “factual, evidentiary and legal issues on which the contested judgment is based”. It also highlighted that the prevailing judicial practice at that time that understood the appeal for cassation with this type of limitations explained the decision to reject any review of grievances related to the way in which the evidence was incorporated and assessed by the court of first instance. In this sense, it considered that the decisions adopted by the National Chamber of Criminal Cassation in the proceedings against the victims in this case reflect the fact that they did not have a remedy that would guarantee a comprehensive review of the conviction.

373. In the case of Mr. Alberto Ricciardi, the Commission noted that his defense attorneys, when appealing the conviction before the Chamber of Cassation, argued that the statute of limitations had expired at the time the conviction was handed down and that there had been a violation of the principle of consistency between the indictment and the conviction. In this regard, it noted that, despite the fact that Mr. Ricciardi’s legal representation expressly invoked Article 8(2)(h) of the Convention and that the Oral Court granted the appeal for cassation, the Criminal Cassation Chamber did not enter into the study of the issues raised by the defense, alleging that they lacked sufficient motivation.

374. With respect to the situation of Mr. De Priete, the IACHR noted that the Oral Court denied the appeal for cassation on the grounds that the grievances were related to a discrepancy with the way in which the judges interpreted the facts and applied the law and stated that “the powers of the court with regard to establishing the convincing force of the evidence in the proceedings are not subject to the control of cassation”, which was confirmed by the Chamber of Cassation on the occasion of resolving the appeal of complaint for denial of the appeal for cassation.

375. In the case of Mr. Parpaglione, the Commission noted that the allegations made by his defense in the appeal for cassation were essentially related to a possible error in the way in which the trial court interpreted and applied the substantive law, as well as an alleged arbitrary assessment of the evidence available in the case. The Commission verified that Chamber IV of the National Chamber of Criminal Cassation did not enter into the study of the grievances formulated since, in the opinion of that court, they dealt with questions of fact “not reviewable” in that instance.

376. With regard to the case of Mr. Barraza, the IACHR observed that the victim’s defense went to the Chamber of Cassation alleging an error in the application of the substantive criminal law and, on the other hand, a violation of the rules of sound criticism in the evaluation of the evidence; however, these grievances were not addressed by the Chamber of Cassation.

377. With respect to Messrs. Franco and Roldan, the Commission verified that their counsel also raised a violation of the rules of sound criticism in the judges’ evaluation of the evidence and understood that the judges had reversed the burden of proof; however, both the Oral Court and the Chamber of Cassation itself pointed out that such grievances exceeded the scope of the cassation appeal.

378. Regarding Mr. Grego’s situation, the defense appealed for cassation alleging that an inadequate evidentiary assessment by the trial court had affected the rights of defense in trial and presumption of innocence, but the Court of Cassation decided to consider the appeal as “poorly granted” since from the reading of said brief “it is evident that all the criticisms fall unflinchingly on questions of fact and evidence whose review is beyond the scope of this extraordinary remedy”.

379. With regard to the case of Mr. Sánchez, the Inter-American Commission noted that his technical defense invoked in all available instances the right to full review of the conviction enshrined in Article

8(2)(h), using a similar argumentation to the one subsequently used by the Supreme Court of Justice in the “Casal” decision. However, the Court of Cassation understood that “all the criticisms inevitably fall into questions of fact and evidence whose review is beyond the scope of this extraordinary remedy” and, consequently, decided to reject the appeal.

380. Regarding Mr. Mutuverría’s claim, the Commission verified that his defense attorney, when filing the appeal for cassation, raised the existence of arbitrariness in the decision on the amount of the sentence imposed due to the assessment of a prior criminal record, as well as alleging the violation of the right to defense in trial, the erroneous application of substantive criminal law and the violation of the rules of sound criticism. The Commission found that, although some aspects of the appeal were duly analyzed and contested by the Oral Court and the Chamber of Cassation, there was no comprehensive review of the conviction, since both courts refused to review the decision on the grounds that they were “points that were outside the scope of the cassation instance”.

381. With regard to Mr. Hidalgo’s situation, his attorney appealed to the Cassation Chamber invoking a discrepancy with the way in which the Oral Court evaluated the testimonial and expert evidence in the case and the decision to classify the reproached conduct as aggravated homicide. The IACHR noted that, despite the fact that the Oral Court had granted the cassation appeal, the Cassation Chamber declared it “poorly granted” because it considered that the allegations of arbitrariness in the sentence “refer to the analysis of questions of fact and evidence outside the scope of cassation proceedings”.

382. The Commission noted, in the case of Mr. Romero, that the official defense counsel invoked at every possible procedural opportunity the right to a full review of the conviction as grounds for accessing the Chamber of Cassation and pointed out that the conviction was invalid because it suffered from arbitrariness in the evaluation of the evidence in light of the rules of sound criticism. The IACHR noted that the Court of Cassation, when declaring the appeal before it inadmissible, considered that the arguments offered by the defense were oriented “to provoke a new critical examination of the evidence on which the sentence was based, which - it is reiterated - is inadmissible in this extraordinary instance”.

383. Finally, with respect to the situation of Mr. Rainieri, the IACHR verified that his defense alleged that there was arbitrariness in the evaluation of the evidence since the witnesses for the prosecution and the victims of the illegal act had not identified his defendant. However, the Oral Court declared the appeal for cassation inadmissible, arguing that the complaints filed “only reflect a mere disagreement with the value assigned by the Court to the evidence”.

384. Finally, the Commission noted that in all the cases in which the petitioners’ attorneys explored the extraordinary federal remedy, said remedy was not granted by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation in application of Article 280 of the Code of Civil and Commercial Procedure of the Nation and, consequently, the limitations of the cassation remedy were not remedied by the Supreme Court.

385. Based on said determinations, it concluded that the legal framework in force at the time of the facts did not guarantee the right to appeal the conviction in accordance with the content of said right recognized by the Inter-American system. As a result, in the specific cases, said right was not guaranteed to the victims by the courts that ruled in their respective proceedings, nor did they have judicial protection in relation to such limitations.

386. Consequently, the Inter-American Commission determined that the Argentine State is internationally responsible for the violation of the rights to appeal the judgment and to judicial protection enshrined in Articles 8(2)(h) and 25(1) of the American Convention, respectively, in relation to the obligations established in Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Messrs. Alberto José Ricciardi, José Ángel De Priete, Leandro Héctor Parpaglione, Carlos Osmar Barraza, Oscar Franco, Carlos Roldán, César Alberto Grego, Alejandro Alcides Sánchez, Christian Walter Mutuverría, Miguel Félix Hidalgo, Fabio Walter Romero and Gustavo Rainieri.

- Santos Sebastián Flores Castillo vs. Nicaragua.

387. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Republic of Nicaragua for the subjection of Santos Sebastián Flores Castillo to acts of torture, as well as for his death while deprived of his liberty.

388. Mr. Flores Castillo was an attorney and notary public. According to the petitioner, Mr. Flores Castillo complained to non-governmental organizations such as the Nicaraguan Center for Human Rights (CENIDH) and the Permanent Human Rights Commission (CPDH), as well as to the office of the President, that in 2005 the current President of Nicaragua, Daniel Ortega Saavedra, had begun a relationship with his fifteen-year-old sister, with whom he allegedly had a daughter. This aspect was disputed by the State. The petitioner indicated that, as a result of these allegations, a persecution began against the entire family and, in particular, against Mr. Flores Castillo.

389. On February 4, 2013, the Public Prosecutor's Office filed an accusation against Mr. Flores Castillo for the crime of aggravated rape. On February 5, the judicial body issued an arrest and search warrant and, on June 19, 2013, the National Police placed the accused at the order of the office, ordering his internment in the National Penitentiary System of Tipitapa ("La Modelo"). After the oral trial, on August 14, 2013, the Second District Court Specializing in Violence of Managua handed down a conviction against him for the crime of aggravated rape against L.N.C.G., sentencing him to 15 years in prison. The petitioner alleged that the crime was fabricated out of revenge for the complaints made. Mr. Flores Castillo was held in La Modelo for eight years and almost five months, until November 8, 2021, when the state authorities reported his death.

390. In March and April 2015, Elpidia Castillo, the victim's mother, denounced to the Nicaraguan Human Rights Ombudsman and the Minister of the Interior that the victim was being subjected to inhumane conditions of detention and to torture. Both the victim and his mother made several complaints about inhumane conditions and acts of torture, as well as his health condition, including complaints to the Minister of the Interior, the Peace, Defense, Governance and Human Rights Commission of the National Assembly and to the Humanitarian Committee of La Modelo.

391. According to Elpidia Castillo, during her visit to her son on September 15, 2015, she saw him in very poor health, alleging that he had lost weight excessively, was pale, could not walk, had sores on his body, and fungus on his hands and feet. Mrs. Castillo also said that the victim had reiterated the torture to which he was subjected, pointing out that he was still in solitary confinement, bolted 24 hours a day, without access to the sun, handcuffed hand and foot, and that he was denied food and did not receive medical attention.

392. According to the petitioner, as a result of numerous requests and complaints, on October 30, 2015, he was able to have the victim transferred to Gallery 8. However, she indicated that he had been placed in cells with highly dangerous subjects, who threatened him with death, so the victim was afraid and asked to be removed.

393. On June 28, 2019 and February 18, 2020, Elpidia Castillo informed the IACHR that Mr. Flores Castillo continued to be subjected to torture. On those occasions, she pointed out that he was in a state of isolation, in maximum security cells, chained 24 hours a day, that he was being given medication against his will, that he was not being provided with food, that he was in a very delicate state of health and that the visiting schedule was not being respected.

394. Mrs. Elpidia Castillo indicated that on November 8, 2021, Néstor Moncada Lau, who claimed to be President Ortega's personal assistant, informed her daughter, Elvia Flores, that the victim had died of an alleged heart attack. According to the death certificate issued by the Ministry of Health, Mr. Flores Castillo died on November 8, 2021 at 11:00 a.m., establishing "acute pulmonary edema" as the direct cause of death. This was rejected by the petitioner, who stated that "[o]nce in the house, we undressed him and observed that he had injuries to his neck, thorax and left arm caused by a knife, bruises on his face, signs of bites on his stomach, his tongue was cut out, and he was hung by his feet, which indicated that his cause of death was not a heart attack, the signs show that he was strangled and that he was in a serious state of malnutrition”.

395. In its Merits Report No. 106/23, the Commission took note of the facts of prolonged isolation, the lack of access to adequate food and drinking water, the sanitary conditions and even the constant stomach ailments, diarrhea and vomiting suffered by the victim, as well as the lack of medical attention, the restrictions on visitation and the inhumane housing conditions to which Mr. Flores Castillo was subjected.

396. It also noted the petitioner’s repeated allegations of physical and psychological torture against the victim by state agents during his incarceration, including allegations that he was kept naked, deprived of food and water, forced to drink contaminated water, forced to consume substances against his will, kept chained hand and foot, kept awake, had his arm broken, beaten, and that inmates were brought into his cell to abuse him.

397. In particular, the IACHR observed in the photographs of the victim’s lifeless body provided by the petitioner that the neck area showed a dark purple color, an open wound on the left arm and multiple small marks on the arm and thorax. The Commission noted that the case file does not contain an autopsy that clearly explains what caused these marks and that the State did not provide a convincing and satisfactory explanation for the death of the victim in its custody, as required by its international obligations. By virtue of the foregoing, the Commission considered it proven that the victim was intentionally mistreated, causing him intense physical and mental suffering, and that said acts were associated with the complaints made by the victim, thus constituting the elements of torture.

398. The Commission also noted that Mr. Santos Flores died on November 8, 2021, while deprived of his liberty at the La Modelo penitentiary, and that the death certificate submitted to the proceedings, prepared by the Public Prosecutor’s Office, stated that the direct cause of death was “acute pulmonary edema”, without there being an autopsy in the file to clarify the causes of death and the circumstances that led to this certificate, which was essential in view of the marks on his body, as well as the fact that he died while deprived of his liberty. Consequently, the Commission indicated that, taking into account that there is a presumption that the State is responsible for the injuries sustained by a person who has been in the custody of State agents and that the State has not presented any explanation or sufficient evidence to refute the allegations of its responsibility in the death and mistreatment caused to Mr. Santos Flores, it must be concluded that the State is responsible for what happened to the victim.

399. In addition, it found that, despite the seriousness of the information provided by the petitioner at different times and the knowledge that State agents had through various communications, the State did not report that competent authorities initiated and conducted an ex officio investigation into the allegations of torture and ill-treatment. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, as well as the obligations contained in the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

400. Finally, taking into account that the State is responsible for subjecting Mr. Santos Flores to torture and cruel treatment during his incarceration and subsequent death, as well as for not having investigated with due diligence despite the petitioner’s repeated complaints, and taking note of the allegations of threats to several members of the Flores family, it considered that the State is responsible for causing suffering and anguish to the victim’s next of kin, in violation of their right to psychological and moral integrity.

401. Based on the findings of fact and law in this report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, to humane treatment, to protection of honor and dignity, to protection of the family, to a fair trial and to judicial protection established in Articles 4, 5, 11, 17, 8 and 25 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument and Articles 1, 6 and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture to the detriment of Santos Sebastián Flores Castillo and his next of kin, in the terms described in the report.

- Rosa Angela Martino vs. Argentina.

402. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Argentine State for the violations to personal integrity, judicial guarantees, judicial protection and health in the context of the internment of Mrs. Rosa Angela Martino in the Ayelén Geriatric Institute.

403. Mrs. Rosa Angela Martino suffered from “Alzheimer's type dementia with a history of progressive cognitive impairment”, for which her treating physician recommended her admission to the Ayelén Geriatric Institute located in the town of Villa Ballester, San Martín, province of Buenos Aires, in order to receive care and obtain a better quality of life. This public institute is attached to the Comprehensive Medical Program of the National Institute of Social Services for Retirees and Pensioners (INSSJP-PAMI). Mrs. Martino was hospitalized from November 26, 2005 to April 11, 2006.

404. Mrs. Martino's daughter, María Cristina González decided to remove her mother from said geriatric institution because she alleged that the victim suffered continuous abandonment and neglect by the institution's personnel, that “she lost 10 kilos, remained dirty and disheveled, sometimes without any clothes, and with excrement remains on her body”. She also indicated that there was only one nursing assistant for 44 people, that the nurse in charge of Mrs. Martino belonged to the Federal Police and treated her rudely, and that although she reported these problems to the nursing home managers, they did not take any action. As a result, Mrs. Martino was transferred to the private institute San Micael, where she was diagnosed with malnutrition, anemia, dehydration and urinary infection. The victim received care at that medical center and her condition improved.

405. On November 9, 2006, Mrs. González filed a criminal complaint with the Departmental Investigative Court No. 4, against the Ayelén Geriatric Institute, for the crime of abandonment of persons, typified in article 106 of the Argentine Criminal Code. On March 20, 2007, a report was submitted by the departmental medical expert indicating that it was not possible for her to carry out an expert opinion because she did not have the necessary documents. On May 21, 2007, on the basis of the expert report, the Departmental Investigative Court N°4 decided to archive the proceedings, arguing that there was not enough evidence to affirm the illicit materiality of the act.

406. On June 4, 2007, the petitioner filed a request for the case to be reopened, alleging that she had not had access to the file, and on September 19, 2007, she requested that the medical expert opinion presented be expanded, taking into account that the expert had not issued an opinion on the documentary evidence provided in the complaint. According to the State's allegation, on May 30, 2008, the prosecutor's office sent the proceedings again to the Expert Advisory Office so that the experts who had already participated in the case could report on the extensions made by the petitioner, and on July 21, 2008, both experts concluded that the new documentation provided did not modify the position adopted previously. The State also indicated that on July 25, 2008, the intervening Prosecutor ordered the proceedings to be closed.

407. On the other hand, in April 2009, Mrs. González filed an action for the protection of constitutional rights with precautionary measure before the National Court 5/10 against the National Institute of Social Services for Retirees and Pensioners, for the neglect suffered, requesting that said institution pay the victim's medical expenses at the San Micael Geriatric Hospital. The fifth court granted the precautionary measure and ordered the respondent institution to reimburse the petitioner for the sums paid for the expenses and fees for the hospitalization of her mother at the San Micael Institute. The petitioner indicated throughout the proceedings that the precautionary measure was never complied with by the State.

408. Finally, in February 2009, the petitioner sent a letter to the Superintendence of Health, requesting that it take all legal steps to ensure that the National Institute of Social Services for Retirees and Pensioners comply with its health care obligations to Mrs. Martino in her capacity as a member. According to the information contained in the file, the Superintendence did not take any action in this regard.

409. In its Merits Report No. 444/21, the Commission observed that the facts denounced occurred in a geriatric institution of a public nature, for which reason the conduct or omissions of the personnel of said institution engage the international responsibility of the State. It also noted that, during the processing of the petition, the State did not provide evidence or arguments to demonstrate that the medical personnel who treated Mrs. Martino at the Ayelén Institute complied with their obligation to care for her in an adequate manner, in accordance with her situation as an elderly person with a progressive degenerative mental illness, nor did it attach information on the regulation or audits carried out at the aforementioned public institution that would demonstrate that their actions were compatible with the State's obligations in this area.

410. In this regard, the IACHR considered that the State had the burden of demonstrating the medical treatments that the Ayelén Institute provided to the victim and their effectiveness on her health, taking into account that she was under its custody in a public geriatric institute and due to her condition as an elderly person with disabilities.

411. On the other hand, the Commission noted that, based on the complaint filed by the victim's daughter, the State's duty to investigate with due diligence what happened to Mrs. Martino was triggered. In this regard, the Commission found that the decision to close the case did not specifically and clearly determine the reasons and arguments that led the prosecutor's office to make such a decision. The Commission considered that this lack of individualization of facts, as well as the absence of a list of evidence, made it impossible to understand the assessment made by the Departmental Investigative Court, and that the lack of due motivation was not corrected by the Acting Attorney General who ratified the closing of the case on August 24, 2007.

412. Likewise, after a comprehensive analysis of the pieces of the case file available to it, the Commission observed that there were several shortcomings in the investigation, such as the lack of information for the performance of the expert opinions, the fact that the medical personnel or other persons who might have been hospitalized in the Institute were not questioned, and that Mrs. Martino's testimony was not even taken into account. Consequently, the Commission considered that it was not proven that the authorities acted in accordance with the special diligence required to guarantee the victim's rights by providing her with effective protection.

413. In this regard, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the impairment of Mrs. Martino's right to health and physical integrity, and that the State failed to investigate with due diligence the complaint of abuse and abandonment filed by Mrs. María Cristina González, in violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

414. In relation to the State's actions regarding social security benefits, the IACHR observed that the Superintendence of Health did not take any action to ensure that the National Institute of Social Services for Retirees and Pensioners complied with its duty to provide the medical services required by the victim. This omission was even more serious due to the situation of vulnerability in which Mrs. Martino found herself due to her advanced age and delicate state of health.

415. In addition, it noted that the precautionary measure requested by the petitioner in the action for the protection of constitutional rights she had filed against the National Institute of Social Services for Retirees and Pensioners was granted on August 27, 2009 by the judicial authorities. However, the State did not adopt any measures for the prompt and effective compliance with the order, in order to guarantee Mrs. Martino's medical coverage at the San Micael geriatric institute. The Commission considered that, in such circumstances, the precautionary measure requested, together with the action for the protection of constitutional rights, became ineffective and delayed remedies and did not have the possibility of preventing and restoring the infringement on victim's right to health and social security. The Commission also observed that the prolongation of the execution of the sentence had an impact on the medical and legal situation of Mrs. Martino and her daughter, Mrs. María Cristina González. Consequently, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, judicial protection and health.

416. Based on these findings, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the rights established in Articles 5 (personal integrity), 8(1) (right to a fair trial), 25 (judicial protection) and 26 (progressive development) of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of Mrs. Rosa Angela Martino and Mrs. María Cristina González.

- Mario Francisco Tadic Astorga et al. v. Bolivia.

417. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Bolivian State for the violations that occurred during a police operation at the Hotel Las Américas in the city of Santa Cruz.

418. On April 14, 2009, the Ministry of Government filed a complaint before the Departmental Prosecutor's Office of La Paz for serious crimes committed against the internal security of the State. Within the framework of this complaint, the prosecutor reported the initiation of preliminary investigations without determining specific facts or the identity of the perpetrators. In the early morning of April 15, 2009, a group of unidentified persons detonated an explosive device at the gate of Cardinal Julio Terrazas' house in the city of Santa Cruz de la Sierra, causing some damage to the façade of the building. On the same day the aforementioned representatives of the Ministry of Government extended the complaint they had filed the day before for the events occurred in the house of Cardinal Terrazas.

419. In the early morning of April 16, 2009, a contingent of the Unidad Táctica de Resolución de Crisis (UTARC), an elite group of the Bolivian Police, entered the Hotel Las Américas in the city of Santa Cruz, fired shots on the fourth floor and burst into the rooms firing their firearms. As a result of this operation Michael Dwyer and two other people were killed and Elöd Tóásó and Mario Tadic were arrested

420. Mr. Tadic and Mr. Tóásó stated that during their detention and transfer, their hands were tied, their heads were covered with cloth, while they were repeatedly beaten and subjected to various interrogations. This was disputed by the State. Almost at noon on April 16, 2009, from the city of Santa Cruz, the prosecutor Marcelo Soza issued the arrest warrant, arguing that there it was probable that the individuals were the perpetrators of the attack on the Cardinal's house and that there was a risk of flight because they were foreign citizens.

421. The victims reported that they have denounced that they were victims of torture in the hearing of precautionary measures that took place on April 18, 2009, but that the judge of the Seventh Court of Criminal Instruction of the city of La Paz rejected any request in this regard. In said hearing, the preventive detention of the victims was ordered, and they were subsequently transferred to the penitentiary center of San Pedro and locked in a punishment cell in the sector called "La Grulla". On April 11, 2017, the First Sentencing Court Judge issued a resolution by which he informed that the convicted persons underwent an abbreviated procedure, "being free and having returned to their country of residence".

422. Michael Dwyer was an Irish citizen who at the time was 25 years old. In the early morning of April 16, 2009, he was sleeping in room 457 of the Las Américas Hotel in the city of Santa Cruz. According to the report of the Special Multiparty Commission of the Chamber of Deputies, his body was found in that room.

423. The autopsy protocol identified six firearm projectile impacts in the thorax and abdomen and established that "the cause of death was hypovolemic shock and multiple wounds in the thorax by firearm projectiles". In several statements, Elöd Tóásó affirmed that Michael Dwyer had survived the police operation in the Las Américas hotel and that he was executed in one of the Santa Cruz airports, which was disputed by the State. When Michael Dwyer's body arrived in Ireland, a second autopsy was performed on April 27, 2009, which identified injuries not detected in the original autopsy, including the fatal heart injury.

424. Juan Carlos Guedes and Alcides Mendoza were detained by armed members of UTARC on April 28, 2009 in the city of Santa Cruz. The victims stated that they were forcibly put into a van and transported by land to the city of La Paz, with plastic bags over their heads, their hands tied and blindfolded with masking tape.

Five days later they were ordered to be placed under house arrest. Mr. Mendoza indicated that they were forcibly removed from their homes and transported to La Paz despite the precautionary measure in their favor and without a court order. Both were held in the San Pedro prison.

425. The victims denounced that on several occasions their cell was raided, that they were overcrowded and that they were punished with confinement in “La Grulla”. According to public information, Mr. Guedes and Mr. Mendoza remained in preventive detention for more than ten years. In November 2019 they requested the cessation of their preventive detention, which was accepted by the First Sentencing Court of La Paz. Subsequently, the Court issued the resolution to close the criminal proceedings for terrorism offenses and ordered the acquittal of the defendants.

426. In its Merits Report 394/21, the Commission first analyzed whether the death of Michael Dwyer was attributable to the State and whether it engaged its international responsibility for failure to comply with the obligations established in the Convention. In this regard, the Commission noted that there is a dispute between the parties as to the time at which the death occurred. On the one hand, the petitioner argued that Mr. Dwyer was executed arbitrarily at an airport in the City of Santa Cruz, after the operation took place at the hotel; on the other hand, the State argued that his death occurred as a result of the confrontation or crossfire that took place at the hotel itself when they tried to arrest him.

427. The IACHR emphasized that, due to the lack of an investigation and clarification of what happened, it is not possible to clearly establish the precise circumstances in which Mr. Dwyer’s death occurred, which is the responsibility of the State itself. However, it indicated that even assuming the hypothesis that his death had occurred in the context of the operation, the State did not comply with the obligations related to the respect and guarantee of the right to life that were required of it in the use of lethal force. In addition, it noted with deep concern the consistent statements of Mr. Tadic and Mr. Tóásó, which indicate that Mr. Dwyer’s death occurred after the operation, while he was in a situation of total defenselessness and subjection to the police agents of the UTARC. In view of the foregoing, the Commission concluded that the death of Michael Dwyer is attributable to the State and constituted an arbitrary deprivation of life, in violation of the duty to respect and guarantee the right to life.

428. It also considered it proven that, since the early morning of April 16, 2009, Mr. Tadic and Mr. Tóásó were in the custody of the State and that, according to the forensic medical reports, the victims had multiple contusions, bruises, edema and ecchymosis in different parts of their bodies as a result of their detention. By virtue of these facts, the Commission understood that the State, in its role as guarantor, should have provided a convincing explanation of what happened to rebut the presumption of its responsibility for the injuries of the victims who were in its custody. In this sense, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the injuries exhibited by Mr. Tadic and Mr. Tóásó while in its custody and consequently for the violation of their right to humane treatment.

429. The Commission also observed, with respect to Mr. Mendoza and Mr. Guedes, that, according to press reports, they arrived at the Prosecutor’s Office building in the city of La Paz handcuffed and blindfolded with masking tape and that, according to their statements, they were repeatedly beaten and threatened during the transfer, while firearms were pointed at their heads. In this sense, the Commission considered that the physical and mental mistreatment suffered by Mr. Guedes and Mr. Mendoza during their transfer constituted a violation of their right to personal integrity.

430. Additionally, it was determined that the acts perpetrated against Mr. Tadic and Mr. Tóásó, during and after their detention, and against Mr. Guedes and Mr. Mendoza, during their transfer to La Paz, constituted acts of torture, and that the conditions of detention in the San Pedro prison violated the right of the inmates to live in a detention regime compatible with their personal dignity, and included forms of punishment in addition to the deprivation of liberty itself, which entailed serious injuries, suffering and damage to their health. In this sense, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity and its obligations under the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

431. On the other hand, it was found that the arrests of Mario Tadic and Elöd Tóásó took place illegally and arbitrarily, that they were not informed of the reasons or motives for their detention and that they were not immediately brought before a judicial authority in the city of Santa Cruz, in violation of their right to personal liberty.

432. The commission established that the detention of Juan Carlos Guedes and Alcides Mendoza was carried out illegally and arbitrarily, that there is no evidence to prove that the victims had been informed orally or in writing of the reasons for the detention and that they were not immediately handed over to the Santa Cruz judicial authorities as established in the Constitution but were transferred to La Paz. In this sense, it indicated that their right to personal liberty was violated.

433. In addition, the IACHR noted that, despite the complaints made, no serious, diligent and immediate investigation was carried out into the torture suffered by Mr. Tadic, Mr. Tóásó, Mr. Guedes and Mr. Mendoza, violating the right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection of the four victims.

434. Finally, regarding the criminal proceedings against Mr. Tadic, Mr. Tóásó, Mr. Guedes and Mr. Mendoza for the crime of terrorism, the Commission found that without any legal basis, the victims were brought before a judge in La Paz instead of Santa Cruz and that the first two were held in preventive detention from April 2009 to March 2015, that is, for almost 6 years, while Mr. Guedes and Mr. Mendoza were held in preventive detention for more than 10 years. In this sense, it found a violation of the judicial guarantees of the four victims, including the right to be judged by the natural judge

435. It also considered that the right to the presumption of innocence was violated given that Mr. Tadic, Mr. Tóásó, Mr. Guedes and Mr. Mendoza were exhibited before the media as perpetrators of the crimes of terrorism and sedition, when they had not yet been legally prosecuted or convicted. The Commission concluded that as a result of its actions and omissions while the victims were deprived of their liberty, the Bolivian State violated their right to personal liberty, judicial guarantees, protection of their honor and dignity, and judicial protection.

436. Based on these findings, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the Bolivian State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, humane treatment, personal liberty, right to a fair trial, protection of honor and dignity, and judicial protection, established in Articles 4, 5, 7, 8, 11 and 25 of the American Convention in relation to the obligations established in Article 1(1) of the same instrument, as well as Articles 1, 6 and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, all to the detriment of the victims identified in the report.

- José Milton Cañas and other vs. Colombia.

437. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Colombian State for the death of seven people and the forced disappearance of twenty-five people by paramilitaries in 1998 in Barrancabermeja in the context of the internal armed conflict.

438. Barrancabermeja is a municipality in Colombia, located in the department of Santander, in the Magdalena Medio region. According to what the bodies of the Inter-American system have stated in various cases, in the mid-1980s in the Magdalena Medio region there was intense fighting by the Army and the self-defense groups against the guerrillas, in which the high military commanders of the area supported the self-defense groups. Many of these groups became criminal groups commonly known as “paramilitaries”, which spread to other regions of the country. According to a report by the Vice-Presidency of Colombia in the early 1990s, in the departments of Norte de Santander, Santander and Cesar, self-defense groups settled in the area with the aim of reducing guerrilla activities, particularly due to the existence of illicit crops and strategic corridors. In this context, the Autodefensas Unidas de Santander y Sur del Cesar (AUSAC), among others, was founded.

439. On May 16, 1998, between 8:30 and 9:00 p.m., a group of 20 to 50 AUSAC men entered the southwest area of Barrancabermeja in five vehicles. The men were dressed in civilian clothes, were hooded and wore bulletproof vests. They also carried machetes, bladed weapons, and short- and long-range weapons. According to Amnesty International, some of the vests worn by these individuals appeared to bear the insignia of the DAS. In addition, two witnesses stated that some were wearing green vests like those used by the army.

440. The AUSAC first stopped at the bar “La Tora” and proceeded to hold Juan de Jesús Valdivieso and Pedro Julio Rondón Hernández, whom they mistreated and forced to get into one of the vehicles in which they were traveling. Pedro Julio Rondón Hernández was later executed on the soccer field. Then, the AUSAC went to the Campestre neighborhood, to the home of José Libardo Londoño Avendaño, a 75-year-old carpenter, and forced him into one of the vehicles in which they were traveling.

441. Subsequently, they entered a party on the soccer field where hundreds of people were present and began shouting at them. Some of the people present at the party were hit with rifle butts. The AUSAC forced José Octavio Osorio, Orlando Martínez Castillo, José Milton Cañas Cano, Diego Fernando Ochoa Lopez, Alejandra María Ochoa Lopez Giovanni Herrera Cañas, Oswaldo Enrique Vázquez, Ender González Baena, José Reinel Campo Arévalo, Fernando Ardila Landinez, Oscar Leonel Barrera Santa, Luis Fernando Suárez Suárez, Robert Wells Gordillo Solano and José Javier Jaramillo Díaz, the latter 17 years old, into one of the vehicles. Pedro Julio Rondón Hernández, who was captured at the bar “La Tora”, tried to escape and the paramilitaries proceeded to slit his throat. José Javier Jaramillo Díaz, who was captured at the party, was found dead the following day on the road leading from Barrancabermeja to Bucaramanga.

442. They also entered a billiards establishment adjacent to the soccer field. Wilfredo Pérez Serna, manager of the establishment, was insulted and beaten by the paramilitaries, who put him in one of their vehicles. The AUSAC also detained Jaime Yesid Peña Rodríguez, 16 years old, who was outside his house.

443. They then went to the 9 de Abril neighborhood and split up to go to a mini-shuffleboard court and a billiards hall. There, Germán León Quintero tried to flee and was shot in the leg by one of the paramilitaries and subsequently shot and killed. The paramilitaries also forced Melquisedec Salamanca Quintero, Carlos Arturo Alaixt Prada and Carlos Enrique Escobar Jiménez, the latter 17 years old, into one of the vehicles in which they were traveling. In the billiards hall, the paramilitaries forced Daniel Campos Pérez, Juan Carlos Rodríguez Arenas, Luis Jesús Arguello Solano and Diomidio Hernández Pérez into one of the vehicles in which they were traveling.

444. They then continued towards the La Esperanza neighborhood and forced Eliécer Quintero Orozco, Nehir Enrique Guzmán Lázaro and Luis Fernando Suárez Suárez to get into one of the vehicles in which they were traveling. They also forced Ricky Nelson García and Wilson Pacheco Quiroz to get off their motorcycles and were also forced into one of their vehicles. Once they reached the La Esperanza neighborhood, the paramilitaries killed Nehir Enrique Guzmán Lázaro. After an hour and a half from entering Barrancabermeja, the AUSAC returned through the entrance where the El Retén base was to be located. The paramilitaries approached a restaurant where they captured Gary Pinedo Rangel and forced him into their vehicles. The paramilitaries killed Luis Jesús Arguello Solano, Diomidio Hernández Pérez, Eliécer Javier Quintero Orozco and José Javier Jaramillo Díaz, who were previously captured. Their bodies were found the following day. Finally, the AUSACs headed towards the city of Bucaramanga.

445. Several statements made reference to the link between the AUSAC and the Barrancabermeja Public Forces to commit the acts that occurred on May 16, 1998.

446. During the AUSAC raid, the relatives of the hostages denounced what had happened to police authorities, the DAS and the Colombian army. According to witness statements, the police agents “did not carry out any operation aimed at capturing those responsible and rescuing the hostages”.

447. On May 18, 1998, the National Human Rights Unit of the Attorney General’s Office opened an investigation into the events that occurred. On July 29, the Unit issued a resolution in which it opened the investigation and ordered that the Second Corporal of the National Army Rodrigo Pérez Pérez, member of the Artillery and Anti-Aircraft Defense Battalion No. 2 of Nueva Granada, who according to witness statements, was one of the persons who participated in the events together with the AUSAC, for the crimes of multiple aggravated homicide and kidnapping for extortion, be linked to the process. However, on November 29, 2001, the National Human Rights Unit issued a resolution of preclusion of the investigation against Mr. Perez.

448. For its part, the Unit refused to link various military agents who allegedly participated in the uprising at the “El Retén” base on the day of the events to the criminal proceedings in a timely manner. The Unit limited itself to pointing out that there was no evidence to prove that they knew what was going to happen.

449. On March 30, 2006, the Delegated Prosecutor’s Office before the Court ordered to link six military agents and two Administrative Department of Security (DAS) agents to the proceedings. On November 29, 2013, the Special Prosecutor’s Office for Human Rights and International Humanitarian Rights decided the legal situation of the eight members of the Public Force who had been linked to the investigation. The Prosecutor’s Office decided to impose preventive detention against the six military agents for co-perpetration of the crimes of aggravated homicide and forced disappearance and refrained from imposing a security measure against the DAS agents.

450. The petitioner argued that, although most of the Army and Police officers accused of these acts are deprived of their liberty, this is not the case of Colonel Joaquín Correa Lopez, with respect to whom the necessary actions to apprehend him were not taken.

451. On the other hand, between June 1999 and January 2001, the National Human Rights Unit of the Attorney General’s Office issued preventive detention orders for the crimes of multiple homicide, extortive kidnapping and paramilitarism against 4 members of the AUSAC. According to the information provided by the State, a group of paramilitaries were prosecuted under Law No. 975 of Justice and Peace, and several advance sentences were issued against them. The IACHR also noted that to date, other paramilitaries are still being prosecuted and are reportedly in the investigative stage.

452. In its Merits Report No. 141/21, the IACHR noted that there are various pieces of evidence that the AUSAC coordinated with military agents for the events of May 16, 1998, including the context declared by Inter-American bodies, witness and paramilitary statements, State reports, reports from civil society organizations, reports from international organizations, among others. It also noted that among the paramilitaries there were people wearing army and Administrative Department of Security (DAS) uniforms, and that some of the people who participated in the operation were allegedly state agents.

453. Consequently, for the events of May 16, 1998, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to life, to the detriment of Julio Rondón Hernández, José Javier Jaramillo Díaz, Germán León Quintero, Diomidio Hernández Pérez, Luis Jesús Arguello Solano, Nehir Enrique Guzmán Lázaro and Eliécer Quintero Orozco. The Commission also found the State responsible for the violation of the rights to personal liberty, personal integrity, life, and recognition as a person before the law to the detriment of Juan de Jesús Valdivieso, José Libardo Londoño Avendaño, José Octavio Osorio, Orlando Martínez Castillo, José Milton Cañas Cano, Diego Fernando Ochoa López, Alejandra María Ochoa López, Giovanni Herrera Cañas, Oswaldo Enrique Vázquez, Ender González Baena, José Reinel Campo Arévalo, Fernando Ardila Landinez, Oscar Leonel Barrera Santa, Robert Wells Gordillo Solano, Wilfredo Pérez Serna, Daniel Campos Pérez, Juan Carlos Rodríguez Arenas, Carlos Enrique Escobar Jiménez, Melquisedec Salamanca Quintero, Carlos Arturo Alaixt Prada, Ricky Nelson García, Luis Fernando Suárez Suárez, Wilson Pacheco Quiroz, Yesid Peña Rodríguez and Gary Pinedo Rangel.

454. Additionally, the IACHR noted that José Javier Jaramillo Díaz and Carlos Enrique Escobar Jiménez were 17 years old at the time of the facts and that Yesid Peña Rodríguez was 16 years old, for which reason it considered that the State ignored its obligation to provide special protection to children, especially in a context of armed conflict.

455. Regarding the investigation of the facts, the Commission noted that several family members and residents of the area immediately went to the police station to report the facts. However, during the first weeks, no State authority adopted measures to investigate the facts, locate the whereabouts of the missing persons, nor did it act with the minimum diligence to preserve evidence that directly linked the participation of members of the Armed Forces. In conclusion, it considered that from the first proceedings the State incurred in omissions and obstructions that hindered the knowledge of the truth of the facts and the punishment of those responsible. In addition, the Commission noted that, within weeks of the events, several witnesses received death threats without any specific measure of protection granted to protect the life and integrity of these persons, and to identify the causes of the risk.

456. Likewise, the IACHR observed that eight years after the events occurred, the Delegated Prosecutor's Office before the Court ordered the linking of six military agents and two DAS agents to the proceedings; and fifteen years after the events occurred, the Specialized Prosecutor's Office for Human Rights and International Humanitarian Rights decided to acquit the DAS agents, ordering the preventive detention of the other six military agents for the crimes of aggravated homicide and forced disappearance, with no information available on the status of the investigation.

457. The Commission also held that, despite the existing evidence, no effective action was taken to identify the criminal responsibility of other actors or to inquire into the participation of high-ranking members of the security agencies and other state agents in the events. Therefore, it considered that there was no effective line of investigation aimed at linking all the persons responsible, including the material and intellectual authors. In this sense, the Commission concluded that there was a clear lack of due diligence in the investigation, with which the State has perpetuated the situation of impunity in which the facts of this case are found.

458. On the other hand, with respect to the group of paramilitaries who were prosecuted under Law No. 975 of Justice and Peace, the Commission noted that to date the proceedings against other paramilitaries continue, and that they are still in the investigative stage, for which the Commission noted that there is an excessive delay in the proceedings that are still open, without any justification having been provided. The Commission emphasized that the confession of the accused cannot exempt the authorities from their obligation to diligently investigate the facts and establish the responsibilities to which they give rise, especially since, as indicated by the State, some 40 paramilitaries participated in the act. The Commission considered that the State has not complied with its obligation to investigate and pointed out that the case file does not contain information related to the proceedings carried out in the framework of the Justice and Peace Law in order to verify the statements of the paramilitaries prosecuted and convicted, in order to clarify the facts and, in particular, to identify the whereabouts of all the disappeared victims.

459. In addition, it considered that the lapse of approximately 23 years in which the criminal proceedings were before the ordinary jurisdiction exceeded a period that could be considered reasonable for the State to carry out the corresponding investigative procedures and constituted a denial of justice to the detriment of the victims' next of kin.

460. In addition, the Commission noted that several lawsuits were filed in the administrative litigation jurisdiction and that the proceedings were still pending at the time of the adoption of the report. Therefore, it considered that the administrative litigation jurisdiction would not have been an effective remedy to, in addition to the criminal proceeding, allow for reparations to the victims in the case.

461. In this sense, it concluded that the domestic investigations and proceedings have not been effective remedies to guarantee access to justice, to determine the truth of the facts, the investigation and punishment of those responsible, and reparations for the consequences of the violations, in violation of the right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

462. Finally, it pointed out that it is evident that the anguish experienced by the victims' next of kin in the search for justice for the murders and forced disappearance of their loved ones, the lack of effective protection and the profound suffering and radical change in their lives has affected their personal integrity.

Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to psychological and moral integrity of the next of kin.

463. Based on these findings, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to juridical personality, life, humane treatment, personal liberty, fair trial, rights of the child and judicial protection, established in Articles 3, 4, 5, 7, 8(1), 19 and 25(1) of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of the persons indicated in each of the sections of the report. Likewise, the State is responsible for the violation of Articles I(a), I(b) and III of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons, since said treaty entered into force for Colombia.

- María Cristina Aguirre vs. Argentina.

464. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Argentine State for the violation of María Cristina Aguirre's right to appeal a criminal conviction against her.

465. On June 27, 2002, the Oral Federal Criminal Court No. 3 of San Martín issued a sentence in a criminal case against Mrs. Aguirre. According to the sentence, the conduct reproached to Mrs. Aguirre was the possession for commercial purposes of 44.86 grams of marijuana and 0.70 grams of cocaine hydrochloride, which was allegedly discovered on September 14, 2000, when personnel belonging to the Dirección General de Investigaciones Complejas y Narcocriminalidad -Delegación Oeste- proceeded to the raid of the house where she lived.

466. The official public defender assigned to Mrs. Aguirre argued that the search had been carried out in violation of the constitutional guarantees of due process and the inviolability of the home. In its decision, the Oral Court rejected such arguments of unconstitutionality of the search, considered that the reproached conduct was typified as "possession of narcotics for commercialization purposes" and consequently imposed to Mrs. Aguirre a principal sentence of four years and two months of imprisonment, plus the legal accessory penalties and costs.

467. On July 15, 2002, an official public defender filed an appeal for cassation against the sentence that convicted Mrs. Aguirre, arguing that the search of the house should be equated to a search carried out in the absence of a warrant because the conditions required by the investigating judge were not met. The defense counsel also claimed that the conviction had validated the unlawfulness of the search based on the false assumption that the search took place because the police noticed that the people in the house were trying to escape, when in fact the statements of the police officers had indicated that they observed the escape attempt after they had begun their attempts to enter the property.

468. On August 5, 2002, the Oral Federal Criminal Court No. 3 of San Martín granted the appeal for cassation and ordered that the proceedings be sent to the National Chamber of Criminal Cassation. On September 11, 2002, the National Criminal Cassation Chamber decided to declare the appeal for cassation "wrongly granted", stating that the grievance alleged by the defense was "a question of fact in the resolution of which, in principle, the court of merit is sovereign and that it cannot be argued in this instance except in cases of arbitrariness or absurdity, violation of the defense in trial or due process of law, which are not observed in the case under examination".

469. In a brief filed on September 25, 2002, an official public defender filed an extraordinary federal appeal against said decision. In such brief, the public defender argued that the appealed decision had violated, to the detriment of Mrs. Aguirre, the internationally recognized right to a double judicial instance and the constitutional guarantees of the defense in trial and due process.

470. This extraordinary federal appeal was declared inadmissible by the National Chamber of Criminal Cassation on October 24, 2002. In support of its decision, the Chamber stated that "[T]he extraordinary appeal is clearly inadmissible" and that "the Chamber, in declaring the appeal for cassation to be improperly granted, complied with its legal obligation to examine the formal admissibility of the appeal without making any progress on the substantive merits of the exceptional remedy sought”.

471. Mrs. Aguirre sent from the center where she was deprived of her liberty a handwritten note dated November 21, 2002 and addressed to the National Chamber of Cassation in which she indicated “I appeal the sentence of the appeal of complaint”. This note was understood as the presentation in forma pauperis of a complaint appeal against the denial of the extraordinary appeal that had been filed in her favor. The complaint appeal was later founded by an official public defender. In the brief of substantiation, the public defender argued that the presentation made by Mrs. Aguirre should be considered temporary since any direct presentation by a justiciable person should be considered temporary when that person had not been informed by the attorney representing him/her of the decision that prejudiced him/her or of his/her right to appeal.

472. In the same brief, the public defender also argued that the regulations governing the criminal appeal for cassation at the federal level were incompatible with the State’s international obligations in terms of double jurisdictional instance because they regulated the appeal based on the principle of “intangibility of the facts established by the trial court”, thus preventing the Court of Cassation from reevaluating the facts. The public defender also denounced a tendency of the domestic courts to restrict the appeal for cassation even more than its already restrictive legal provision. On November 25, 2003, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation dismissed the complaint filed by Mrs. Aguirre as untimely, without expressly analyzing the arguments put forward by her defense to support that the appeal should be considered temporary.

473. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 329/22, the Commission considered it proven that Mrs. Aguirre’s right to appeal the conviction was materially violated because the cassation court automatically rejected her defense motions only because it considered them to be directed at questions of fact and evidence, a situation that was not remedied by the courts that heard the subsequently filed appeals.

474. The IACHR appreciated the information on jurisprudential developments that had occurred at the domestic level in relation to the right to appeal convictions. In particular, the Commission valued positively “the Casal ruling” as a first effort to make judicial practices compatible with Argentina’s international human rights obligations. However, the Commission emphasized that it took place after the facts of the case, and that limits have been identified as to its scope and enforceability. In view of the above, the Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the rights to appeal a judgment and to judicial protection.

475. With respect to the appeal filed in forma pauperis by Mrs. Aguirre and subsequently filed by a public defender, the Commission observed that the Supreme Court of Justice dismissed said appeal as untimely, without having conducted an explicit analysis or provided any type of response to the arguments that were raised by Mrs. Aguirre’s defense in an attempt to support the temporary nature of the appeal. On the contrary, the Commission noted that untimeliness was the only basis provided by the Court for the dismissal of the appeal.

476. On this point, it was indicated that the arguments raised by Mrs. Aguirre’s defense in support of the temporary nature could not be considered tangential or insubstantial, as they were directly and essentially related to the decision of the case, as well as to the guarantee of access to justice for a person who had been in a situation of vulnerability at the time she filed the appeal. Consequently, the IACHR considered that the decision adopted by the Supreme Court did not reflect a motivation that would allow it to consider that the victim and the arguments of her defense counsel had been effectively heard in a process that concerned her rights. In this sense, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights of access to justice, to be heard in proceedings related to the determination of her rights and to judicial protection.

477. Based on these findings, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the rights to a fair trial and judicial protection, established in Articles 8 and 25 of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Mrs. Aguirre.

- Eduardo José Antonio Moliné O'Connor vs. Argentina.

478. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Argentine State for the dismissal of Eduardo Moliné O'Connor as Judge of the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation.

479. On August 6, 1990, Mr. Moliné O'Connor assumed the position of judge of the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation of Argentina. Thirteen years later, on June 4, 2003, the then president of Argentina, Néstor Kirchner, requested the National Congress to initiate an impeachment trial against some members of the Supreme Court. Likewise, representatives of the Executive Branch issued statements referring to the need to recompose the Court of Justice of the Nation.

480. On June 10, 2003, Congressmen Julio Gutiérrez and José Mirabile filed a complaint against Justice Moliné O'Connor and other justices in their capacity as judges of the Supreme Court, for their decision in the "Magariños, Hector Mario" case, referring to the disciplinary sanction imposed on a judge. Similarly, on June 4, 2003, Congressmen Carlos Raúl Iparraguirre and Margarita Stolbizer requested the Chamber of Deputies to initiate an impeachment proceeding against them for poor performance in the exercise of their duties due to the decision they issued in the case "Meller Comunicaciones S.A.U.T.E. c/ Empresa Nacional de Telecomunicaciones". Likewise, on July 3, 2003, Congressmen Carlos Raúl Iparraguirre, Ricardo Nieto Brizuela and Juan Jesús Minguez requested the Chamber of Deputies to initiate an impeachment proceeding against Mr. Moliné O'Connor for poor performance in the exercise of his duties as Judge of the Supreme Court, due to his actions in the case called "Macri, Franciso y Martínez & Evación Fiscal y presunto Contrabando" (Macri, Franciso y Martínez & Tax Evasion and alleged Smuggling).

481. That same day, the Impeachment Committee of the Chamber of Deputies met with fourteen of its 32 members, analyzed the complaints and unanimously approved that they met the requirements to be declared admissible, and therefore ordered the initiation of an impeachment proceeding against him. On August 13, 2003, the Chamber decided to impeach Mr. Moliné O'Connor for malfeasance in office.

482. On August 21, 2003, the victim's representatives filed a recusal request before the Senate of the Nation against the senator and then president of the Senate Constitutional Affairs Committee, Cristina Fernández de Kirchner, due to the fact that she was related to the then President by virtue of their relationship as spouses; and for having stated on several occasions before public opinion her decision to request the impeachment of members of the Supreme Court of the Nation. However, on August 26, 2003, the referred Commission, by means of an opinion, advised the Senate of the Nation to reject the recusal.

483. On September 2, 2003, Mr. Moliné O'Connor's counsel filed a new recusal request, expanding on the grounds of lack of impartiality. On September 3 and 4, 2003, the Senate of the Nation confirmed the rejection of such recusal. In view of this decision, the victim's representatives filed an extraordinary federal appeal, which was dismissed on October 1, 2003 by the Senate of the Nation.

484. At the same time, on September 3, 2003, Mr. José Ricardo Falú and Mr. Carlos Iparraguirre, in their capacity as members of the Impeachment Committee and based on their majority opinion on the case, filed an accusation against Mr. Moliné O'Connor for malfeasance as a Supreme Court Justice. In such writ, they requested that he be suspended from the exercise of his functions while the impeachment trial is being substantiated, without pay; and that he be removed from his position for an indeterminate period of time to hold public office. On October 8, 2003, the Senate of the Nation resolved the preventive suspension of Mr. Moliné O'Connor from the exercise of his functions, without pay.

485. Pursuant to the provisions of Article 10 of the Rules of Procedure for impeachment proceedings, the Senate of the Nation began deliberating the case on December 3, 2003, and subsequently, at the same session, the Senate, by resolution DR-116/03, removed the victim from his position as a Supreme Court Justice for malfeasance in office, after approving two of the nine charges brought against him, both related to the "Meller" case.

486. Against this resolution, Mr. Moliné O'Connor filed an extraordinary federal appeal, which was rejected by the Senate of the Nation on February 24, 2004. In view of this, the victim filed a de facto appeal arguing the violation of his right to due process, due to the absence of judicial guarantees, and that he was being dismissed for the judgments he had signed. On June 1, 2004, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation dismissed the action, considering that there was no violation of the right to defense and that it did not have the power to analyze the merits of the impeachment trial.

487. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 30/23, the Commission first concluded that the norm used to initiate the impeachment trial against the victim was not compatible with the principle of legality, allowing it to initiate a proceeding aimed at removing him from office for his legal reasoning as a judge.

488. Likewise, with respect to the suspension measures adopted against the victim, the IACHR noted that the authorities never justified why the suspension was necessary to avoid a possible impact on the administration of justice. In this regard, the Commission considered that since this measure restricted the principle of judicial independence and the guarantee of Mr. Moliné O'Connor's stability, it was incumbent upon the Senate, in addition to respecting the principle of legality and arguing in a well-founded manner what was the legitimate end to be achieved, to demonstrate that the suspension was a suitable, necessary and proportional means. However, it observed that the decision to suspend the victim was never adequately justified, and the congressmen and congresswomen limited themselves to emphasizing that they had the competence to adopt such a decision. Therefore, the Commission considered that this measure affected the principle of judicial independence and the guarantee of stability.

489. On the other hand, with respect to the measure of dismissal, it was noted that, having used the legal reasoning issued by the victim in the so-called "Meller S.A." case as support for such determination, no argument was identified in the case file that explains to what extent the legal grounds used in the decision adopted by a collegiate court in the aforementioned case constituted truly serious conduct by Mr. Moliné O'Connor, for the purpose of justifying his dismissal. On the contrary, the IACHR noted that, according to Mr. Moliné O'Connor's defense, such decision only followed the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of the Nation regarding the admissibility of the remedy of complaint. Therefore, the Commission considered that the dismissal was not duly sustained.

490. The Commission also considered that the impeachment proceeding involved authorities with a pre-established position, given their ties to the governing party and the authorities of the Executive Branch. In this sense, it held that the impeachment proceeding to which the victim was subjected did not observe the guarantees of due process of law and, in particular, did not comply with the requirement of impartiality of the authority in charge of the proceeding.

491. It also noted that, at the time of the facts, domestic law did not have a specific procedure regulating the presentation of challenges before the Chamber of Deputies and/or the Senate, which partially caused all the challenges presented by the victim throughout the impeachment trial not to result in an outcome in his favor, given that they were rejected by resolutions that lacked a legal motivation. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to an impartial authority.

492. Similarly, it noted that the victim judicially challenged his suspension and dismissal as a judge and that the Supreme Court only analyzed the reasonableness of the deprivation of the victim's remuneration, without examining the legal basis for the suspension of his position as a judge. Therefore, in the Commission's opinion, Mr. Moliné O'Connor did not have a judicial pronouncement analyzing the reasonableness of the measure imposed against him, which meant that he did not have real access to justice.

493. Likewise, it considered that in the complaint in which the removal of Mr. Moliné O'Connor was questioned, the Court limited itself to analyzing whether the victim's right to judicial guarantees was respected, indicating that its power of review extended to that point, "without this meaning that it would issue an opinion on the merits of the substantive motives, since these are exclusive to the Congress of the Nation, which acts as a political body". Therefore, the Commission understood that he was denied the possibility of having an effective judicial review of his removal, particularly if the removal had been grounded on the judge's legal criteria.

494. For the IACHR, it was also clear that the Supreme Court decided not to analyze the specific arguments regarding the victim's right to an impartial body and the exercise of his right to a defense, and therefore it considered that this part of the decision also failed to provide an effective judicial analysis of the alleged violations of the rights invoked. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to judicial protection and the guarantee of due motivation.

495. On the other hand, the Commission pointed out that, because Mr. Moliné O'Connor was removed from office in a process in which violations of both due process and the principle of legality were committed, and because the impeachment trial was conducted in a manner incompatible with the principle of judicial independence, the State also violated the right of judges to have access to public office "under conditions of equality".

496. Finally, it noted that the Third Chamber of the Federal Administrative Litigation Chamber issued a decision that restored the life pension and ordered the State to pay the unpaid sums of money, and therefore considered that the State had complied with ceasing and remedying the situation denounced, with respect to the alleged violation of the rights to private property and social security. Notwithstanding, the Commission did not have information to prove that the sum of money had been effectively returned to the family of Mr. Moliné O'Connor and considered that the delay caused the victim to be unable to receive his pension, affecting his quality of life, and therefore considered that the State was responsible for the violation of the guarantee of reasonable time

497. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the principle of judicial independence, the right to an impartial authority, the right to an adequate motivation, the right to a reasonable time, the principle of legality, the right to political participation and the right to judicial protection enshrined in Articles 8(1), 9, 23 and 25(1) of the American Convention, in relation to the obligations established in Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Mr. Moliné O'Connor

- Elio Artola Navarrete vs. Nicaragua.

498. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Republic of Nicaragua for the violation of trade union rights against Elio Artola Navarrete.

499. Mr. Elio Artola is a physician specialized in plastic surgery who worked until his retirement for the Ministry of Health (MINSa), at the Antonio Lenin Fonseca Hospital (HEALF) and has served as a union leader in various organizations, including as president of the Board of Directors of the Union of said hospital. Since 2003, he has been working full time in his union duties, with the approval of MINSa.

500. On April 7, 2014, the doctors, in an Extraordinary General Assembly, elected the new Board of Directors of HEALF, which was formed by Mr. Artola as President, Roberto López as Vice President and Mauricio Vanegas as Organizing Secretary. On April 9, 2014, Elio Artola, in his capacity as President, sent a letter to the Head of Union Associations of the Ministry of Labor requesting that the certification of the new Board of Directors be approved, for which the corresponding information was attached. According to the information provided, Mr. Artola, together with other union leaders, filed an action for the protection of constitutional rights against the Ministry of Labor and others for having remained silent regarding the request for registration and obtaining the legal status of the new Board of Directors of the HEALF Union.

501. On February 4, 2015, the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice issued judgment No. 26 by which it declared the action for the protection of constitutional rights appeal well founded and, consequently, ordered the authorities of the Ministry of Labor to grant the certification and registration requested by the New Board of Directors of the Union. According to the HEALF Union, subsequent to the judgment, they made several approaches to the Directorate of Union Associations of the Ministry of Labor to issue the certification, however, this was denied. Subsequently, the union sent letters to various authorities requesting that, in compliance with the judgment, they comply with the registration and certification of the new Board of Directors, without obtaining a response.

502. According to the information provided by the petitioner, the dismantling of the trade union organizations that Mr. Artola led, in addition to the impossibility of continuing to perform his union work, had an impact on his physical and psychological integrity, which led him to undergo pharmacological treatment and suffer episodes of depression and suicidal ideas. According to the medical-psychological report provided in the file, he is facing old age with difficulties to take care of his health. According to this source, “he is forbidden to enter public hospitals, where he cannot even request medical assistance”. Additionally, there are medical reports in the file referring to his physical health that show hypothyroidism, problems in the lumbar spine and dupuytren’s disease in both hands.

503. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 308/23, the IACHR stated that Mr. Elio Artola’s rights were infringed in the case as a member of the union and that he was unable to exercise the position to which he was elected.

504. The Commission considered that the State, by not granting the certification of the Board of Directors, despite the order of the judicial body, and thus leaving the HEALF Union without representation, did not guarantee the functioning of the Union, affecting the victim’s rights of association and trade union freedom. Likewise, the Commission considered that more than 8 years after the judicial decision in favor of Mr. Artola without the execution of the sentence, as well as the ineffectiveness of the judicial mechanisms subsequently activated to achieve such compliance, constitute a violation of his right to effective judicial protection. Likewise, it understood that the excessive delay in complying with the judicial decision is not attributable to the complexity of the case or to the procedural activity of the victim or his representatives, but to the State authorities, being the duty of the State to enforce the final decisions, in such a way that the rights at stake are protected.

505. Based on these considerations, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to freedom of association, trade union freedom, judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

506. In addition, it observed that the facts of the case and, in particular, the failure to implement the decisions adopted by the authorities contributed to the infringement of Mr. Artola’s physical and psychological integrity. In this regard, the Commission noted that the petitioner alleged, without the State refuting it, that the disbanding of the trade union organizations led by Elio Artola, together with the impossibility of continuing to carry out his trade union work, had an impact on his physical and psychological integrity. In particular, the information available to the IACHR indicates that Mr. Artola underwent pharmacological treatment and that he suffers from episodes of depression and suicidal ideas, on which the State did not comment. Based on these considerations, it concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to humane treatment.

507. Based on said considerations of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State of Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of the rights to humane treatment, to judicial guarantees, to freedom of association, to judicial protection, to progressive development and to trade union rights, established respectively in Articles 5, 8, 16, 25 and 26 of the American Convention and Article 8 of the Protocol of San Salvador, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1(1) of the Convention, to the detriment of Elio Artola, in the terms established in the report.

- Indigenous Peoples Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca v. Peru.

508. The case relates to the international responsibility of the Peruvian State for the violation of rights to the detriment of the indigenous peoples in voluntary isolation and initial contact (hereinafter "PIACI") Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca.

509. The Mashco Piro are an indigenous people in voluntary isolation that inhabits various parts of the Peruvian territory, including the Purús River basin in southern Ucayali and the Las Piedras and Manu river basins in northern and western Madre de Dios. The Yora are an indigenous people in initial contact, whose presence has been recognized within the Kugapakori, Nahua, Nanti and other Territorial Reserves and is also present within the Madre de Dios Territorial Reserve. The Amahuaca are an indigenous people in initial contact, located in the Murunahua Territorial Reserve and also in the Madre de Dios Territorial Reserve.

510. Both the petitioners and the State agree that, in Peru, there are legal figures that serve to categorize the lands and territories of indigenous peoples in isolation and initial contact, one of these being that contemplated in the legal regime of Law No. 28736 of May 18, 2006. Article 2.d of this law establishes that the indigenous reserves are the "lands delimited by the Peruvian State, of transitory intangibility, in favor of the indigenous peoples in isolation or in initial contact, and as long as they maintain such situation, to protect their rights, their habitat and the conditions that ensure their existence and integrity as peoples". However, the law allows the granting of rights for the use of natural resources whose exploitation is of public necessity for the State.

511. The State recognized the Mashco Piro people through Supreme Decree N°001-2014-MC of April 4, 2014, and has established their existence in spaces such as the Madre de Dios Territorial Reserve, the Murunahua Territorial Reserve, and the Mashco Piro Indigenous Reserve. To adapt this territorial reserve to the provisions of Law No. 28736 and its regulations, the recategorization process began in 2014, in order to acquire the status of Indigenous Reserve, which would grant the quality of intangibility to their territories.

512. As part of the categorization process, in 2016, the non-governmental organization World Wildlife Fund Peru conducted an Additional Categorization Study (hereinafter "EAC"), which determined the need to expand the current area of the reserve, given the identification of the continued presence of various indigenous peoples in voluntary isolation in areas not considered as part of the reserve.

513. The EAC was approved on November 30, 2016, by the Multisector Commission. According to the petitioner, the presence of the PIACI in areas not included within the recognized territorial or indigenous reserves is a point of particular concern, since they are in proximity to various activities carried out by third parties, which places them at risk of contact with third parties and puts their integrity and life at risk. The State has indicated that due to the overwhelming evidence of the presence of isolated Mashco Piro indigenous people that have been living outside of the Madre de Dios Territorial Reserve in recent years, the study proposed expanding the reserve's area on the eastern side of the reserve. Both the State and the petitioner have reported that to date, the process of categorizing the Madre de Dios Territorial Reserve has not been completed.

514. Despite being peoples in isolation, in recent years, there have been several sightings of members of the Mashco Piro people, as well as incidents with members of other native communities, which have even resulted in the death of a community member by the impact of Mashco Piro arrows. For example, between December 2019 and July 2020 a report recorded at least 15 sightings of members of these indigenous peoples, in the regions of the Nueva Oecania Community and the Monte Salvado Native Community on the Tahuamanu River.

515. In addition, according to the information provided by the petitioner, several activities have been carried out within the Madre de Dios Territorial Reserve that have impacted the Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca peoples.

516. These include logging activities, illegal logging activities, mining activities and infrastructure projects. With respect to the granting of forest concessions, although according to the information contained in the file, there are currently no forest concessions, forest harvesting units or productive forests overlapping the indigenous territory, the EAC identified 13 forest concessions, of which 10 are still in force.

517. Due to these facts, on June 2, 2008, the petitioner filed an action for the protection of constitutional rights before the First Mixed Court of Tambopata against the Ministry of Women and Human Development, the National Institute for the Development of Andean Amazonian Peoples and the Regional Agrarian Directorate of the Ministry of Agriculture of Madre de Dios due to the imminent danger to the property and lives of the PIACI due to illegal logging, hydrocarbon and infrastructure activities. On May 31, 2012, the First Mixed Court of Tambopata declared the nullity of all the proceedings, concluding the process and ordering its definitive archiving. Finally, on June 20, 2012, the resolution declaring the nullity was declared consented and the process was ordered to be filed.

518. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 397/22, the Commission determined that the State has not adequately recognized the ownership of the territories inhabited by the Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca peoples, in non-compliance with its obligations regarding the right to property. In particular, although it took note of the progress made by the State in the recognition of the territories of the PIACI, it considered that the presence of indigenous peoples in voluntary isolation in areas of different legal categories demonstrates that the State has not guaranteed the full integrity of their territories and has generated in fact a kind of fragmentation that determines the existence of physical spaces that have greater protection than others.

519. Similarly, the IACHR noted that, in the initial delimitation of the Madre de Dios territorial reserve, the State did not demonstrate that it had adequately considered the movement and settlement patterns of the indigenous peoples, as well as their traditional mode of survival and ancestral practices, and that the process of recategorization of the reserve initiated in 2014 had not yet concluded, with the result that the expansion of the area has not been made viable by the authorities.

520. The Commission also observed that the current situation of the territories of the Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca indigenous peoples, especially in the Madre de Dios territorial reserve, in the absence of a freehold title, does not allow for a clear delimitation of the extensions of these territories, which shows a level of protection that does not correspond to the highest level provided for by the domestic regulations. In addition, the Commission indicated that the lack of determination of the buffer zones prevents the existence of safeguards to avoid the effects of various kinds that could be caused by contact or activities carried out in adjacent areas. The Commission considered that this omission affects the right to collective property due to the risk situation to which they are exposed.

521. Additionally, it pointed out that the provision contained in Article 5 paragraph c of Law No. 28736 is not compatible with the duty to adopt regulatory provisions to guarantee the rights of indigenous peoples in voluntary isolation and initial contact, since it establishes an exception for the performance of activities of natural resources susceptible of exploitation whose exploitation is of "public necessity", without considering the protection and subsistence of the PIACI and without establishing safeguards and regulations that define the contents and scope of the public necessity.

522. With respect to the projects developed in the territories of the PIACI, the IACHR concluded that the regulations in force, in their application in the specific case, did not effectively protect the intangibility of the territory of the Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca indigenous peoples, nor guarantee that any restriction to their property would be compatible with Inter-American standards on the matter. In particular, it noted that, despite the adoption of regulations developed by the State to protect the PIACI, the lands where they live face constant pressures due to the presence of outsiders and forestry and hydrocarbon concessions, illegal logging and drug trafficking in their territories.

523. The Commission also pointed out that there is evidence of hydrocarbon exploration activities in Lots 157 and 187, located in the department of Madre de Dios and that, between 2008 and 2012, Lot 157 was concessioned to the PETROPERÚ - DISCOVER Consortium, and was included in subsequent bidding processes until 2015, as well as that in 2016 road infrastructure projects were approved that crossed the departments of Madre de Dios and Ucayali, in territories where the Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca peoples carry out their traditional activities. The Commission noted that these concessions and bidding processes were granted without the State taking into account the intangibility that the PIACI territory should have and without taking the necessary measures to ensure a consultation process carried out in accordance with the no-contact principle. In this sense, the Commission considered that the State violated the right to prior consultation, the right to property and political rights.

524. On the other hand, the Inter-American Commission observed that, in the absence of protection of territorial rights, activities have been carried out by third parties that have had an impact on the territory of the victims. Therefore, it understood that the licenses granted, as well as the activities, even of an irregular nature, that are or have been carried out without the State having adopted the corresponding measures to protect the victims' territory, have affected their right to effectively control and have control and use of their territory without any type of interference.

525. The Commission found that the entry of state, private or third party companies into the Madre de Dios territorial reserve, and the fact that its territory has not been recognized by the State through the title that grants it the status of an indigenous reserve, prevents the Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca indigenous peoples from having free access to their lands and exposes them to a situation of contact, thus affecting their traditions and their cultural and spiritual survival. For these reasons, it found that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to property and self-determination.

526. Finally, with respect to the process initiated through the action for the protection of constitutional rights filed by the petitioner, the IACHR noted that it was extremely long, repetitive, delayed and formalistic, which in effect harmed the rights of the Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca communities. It also indicated that this delay cannot be justified by the complexity of the process and that, on the contrary, it can be explained by the conduct of the judicial authorities. In this sense, taking into consideration the lack of effectiveness of the constitutional appeal, the indications of lack of due diligence in the process, as well as the unjustified delay of justice, the Commission considered that the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection were violated.

527. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights established in Articles 8(1) (fair trial), 13 (freedom of expression), 21 (collective property), 23 (political rights), 25 (judicial protection) and 26 (cultural rights) of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of the Mashco Piro, Yora and Amahuaca peoples. The Commission also observed that the State violated Article 21 of the American Convention in relation to Article 2 of the same instrument.

- Workers of Empresa de Fertilizantes de Centroamérica (FERTICA) v. Costa Rica.

528. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Costa Rican State for the denial of justice in cases of dismissals and restrictions to union rights carried out by the company called Fertilizantes de Centroamérica (FERTICA) to the detriment of workers affiliated to the union Asociación de Trabajadores de Fertilizantes (ATFE).

529. The ATFE is an entity registered in the records of the Department of Social Organizations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security of Costa Rica since March 27, 1969. The ATFE Union and the FERTICA Company had entered into several collective bargaining agreements since the 1970s; the agreement in force at the time of the facts was signed on September 15, 1992, for a term of 2 years. On April 12, 1995, the representatives of FERTICA and the ATFE Union agreed to extend the collective bargaining agreement in force until September 15, 1996.

530. On September 9, 1995, the private company FERTICA dismissed all its workers, 265 of whom were members of the ATFE union, including all the members of the union's board of directors, and cancelled all of the workers' benefits. The decision to dismiss the workers was not previously submitted to the ATFE union. In this regard, the Costa Rican judicial authorities considered it proven that the purpose of the liquidation of FERTICA was to extinguish the collective bargaining agreement and "to avoid continuing to provide its employees with the privileges contained in said agreement"; and considered that it was not proven that "the dismissals of the workers were made entirely for economic, productive, marketing or administrative reorganization of the company".

531. As of that date, FERTICA ceased to apply the collective bargaining agreement and the committees created by it, such as the Labor Relations Board, Labor Liability Fund, Housing Fund, Supplementary Retirement Fund, Supply Warehouse and others were deactivated. Subsequently, as of September 10, 1995, the company rehired 357 people under new conditions, governed by the Labor Code, among those rehired were the members of the Board of Directors of ATFE.

532. According to the information provided by the petitioner, on November 30, 1995, the ATFE union went on strike at FERTICA. In addition, the union leaders initiated a judicial procedure of Conciliation in Economic and Social Conflict to avoid reprisals due to the strike; the petitioners point out that in the framework of this process, a precautionary measure prohibiting dismissals without judicial authorization was issued. However, on December 4, 1995, the members of the Board of Directors of the ATFE and the other strikers were again dismissed for "absences from work and serious misconduct" as a result of their participation in the strike.

533. On June 8, 1996, the workers' assembly appointed a new board of directors of the ATFE union and Mr. Marco Antonio Guzmán began to exercise the position of General Secretary, for which he requested FERTICA on several occasions in writing that the checks for union dues and other items be delivered to him. On June 21, 1996, a new board of directors was appointed, different from the one that was already legalized, and Mr. Tomás Cortés was appointed as General Secretary in the new parallel board of the union called SITRAFER.

534. In connection with the internal proceedings, on August 1, 1995, the then General Secretary of the ATFE Union filed a complaint for union persecution and unfair practices against FERTICA with the Costa Rican Labor Inspectorate. On September 11, 1995, he filed another complaint with the same entity for violation of several articles of the collective bargaining agreement. The report of the labor inspectors issued on November 20, 1995 verified that FERTICA had "annulled the collective bargaining agreement in its entirety in violation of labor regulations"; it also proved the existence of sufficient elements to determine anti-union actions of union persecution and unfair practices against ATFE. This resolution was confirmed in higher courts and on September 10, 1996, the National Director and General Labor Inspector filed a complaint against the company for violation of labor laws before the Civil and Labor Mayor's Office of Puntarenas.

535. On June 26, 1997, the mayor's office rejected the request of the union's representative to intervene as a party in the process, despite the fact that the initial complaint before the labor inspectorate was filed by the representatives of ATFE. In this process, a first instance judgment was issued on two occasions. First, the Civil and Labor Mayor's Office declared the action time-barred on November 5, 1997, and subsequently, on April 23, 1998, the Small Claims Court of Puntarenas ruled that the action for violation of labor and social security laws was time-barred, which was confirmed in the second instance.

536. Similarly, FERTICA's workers filed two lawsuits before the labor courts. The first was filed on February 9, 1996, by the members of the board of directors of the ATFE union, claiming the reinstatement of the workers, payment of back wages, as well as damages. On November 30, 2007, the Labor Court of the Second Judicial Circuit of San José partially allowed the claim for damages and rejected the other claims. Subsequently, on February 29, 2008, the Labor Court, Fourth Section, Second Judicial Circuit of San José, revoked the first instance judgment, declared the dismissals of the workers null and void, ordered the reinstatement in their positions, the payment of back wages and legal interest, and rejected the payment of damages. The petitioner pointed out that despite the existence of a judgment, the workers cannot enforce their rights, since due to the delay in the judicial process the company had time to dispose of its assets.

537. Also, the ATFE union filed a lawsuit on March 8, 1996, claiming the reinstatement of the Collective Bargaining Agreement and damages. On August 24, 2006, the Labor Court of the Second Judicial Circuit of San José ordered the reinstatement of the collective bargaining agreement, as well as the payment of salary increases to the workers. In addition, it denied the payment of damages to the workers and the union and rejected the request for a preventive seizure of the company's assets. This judgment was revoked on September 28, 2006, by the Labor Court, Fourth Section, Second Judicial Circuit of San José, which accepted the exception of lack of legal standing filed by the company. Finally, on March 30, 2007, the Second Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, hearing the cassation appeal, revoked the judgment and ordered the reinstatement of the collective bargaining agreement entered into in 1994 with the ATFE union and the payment of two million five hundred thousand colones to the plaintiffs. The petitioners indicated that, due to the excessive time taken by the judicial courts, the judgment was not enforced.

538. The petitioners also filed three constitutional appeals, denouncing the different situations generated by the mass dismissal and the annulment of the collective bargaining agreement. All the appeals were rejected by the Constitutional Chamber on the grounds that they should be filed and resolved through ordinary labor or administrative channels before the Ministry of Labor.

539. In its Merits Report No. 331/22, the Commission noted that, with respect to the complaints filed with the labor inspectorate, the decision adopted by the Puntarenas Civil and Labor Mayor's Office to reject the intervention of the secretary general of the ATFE union in the judicial process affected the right to due process of the FERTICA workers. In this regard, it recalled that the Committee on Freedom of Association of the International Labor Organization has established that neither legislation nor its application should limit the right of employers' and workers' organizations to represent their members, including in the case of individual labor claims. Furthermore, it noted that the aforementioned judicial authority did not make any assessment as to the relevance or otherwise of the possible participation or intervention of the workers whose rights were allegedly violated and limited itself to transcribing the procedural rules.

540. The IACHR also noted that this refusal disregarded the ATFE union representatives' status as complainants in the proceedings before the Labor Inspectorate, and led to their exclusion from a judicial process in which the existence of union persecution and the commission of unfair practices and violation of the collective bargaining agreement by the company were established.

541. On the other hand, it noted that the legal basis used by the Small Claims Court of Puntarenas to declare the statute of limitations of the case was the criminal law, specifically Article 82 of the Criminal Code, which establishes that the criminal action prescribes in eight months in the case of misdemeanors. This, despite the fact that the Labor Code itself, in force at that time, provided that the computation, suspension, interruption and other matters relating to the statute of limitations were governed by the provisions of the Civil Code. In this regard, it asserted that the classification of the facts denounced as contraventions, in light of the criminal provisions, as well as the application of a different regulation from the one contemplated by the Labor Code itself, determined the statute of limitations of the case and consequently severely affected the due process guarantees of FERTICA's workers.

542. In addition, the Commission considered that it was contradictory that the aforementioned judicial authority, when assessing the elements of the statute of limitations, considered that there was inertia on the part of the holders of the right, the workers of FERTICA, even though it expressly recognized that they had filed the complaint before the Labor Inspectorate on September 11, 1995, that is, two days after they had been dismissed. It pointed out that, given the previous procedure followed before the Ministry of Labor, any delay in the presentation of the case before the labor courts was attributable to said entity and not to the workers, who validly and in a timely manner went to the Labor Inspectorate with the purpose of finding a solution to the unjustified dismissal they had suffered. Therefore, it held that the State also failed to comply with its duty of due diligence in the labor proceedings.

543. It also warned that, despite the decision of April 2, 2001 by which the Small Claims Court of Puntarenas declared the company to be the author of labor practices to the detriment of the defendant ATFE, 22 years passed without any of the victims receiving the amounts due for the declared violation, for which reason it considered that there are sufficient elements to conclude that the State did not guarantee that the labor proceedings were processed within a reasonable period of time, particularly with regard to the enforcement of the judgments.

544. With respect to the ordinary labor lawsuits, the Commission observed that both proceedings lasted approximately 11 to 12 years from the filing of the lawsuits to the issuance of the final judgments that resolved the respective appeals and cassation appeals. The Commission noted that, although these rulings were favorable to the union's workers, they came with prolonged delays that were not duly justified and constitute, in and of themselves, violations of the guarantee of reasonable time.

545. It also noted that the State did not demonstrate that it had taken effective steps to achieve successful enforcement in these cases more than 15 years after the labor judgments were handed down. In this regard, the IACHR considered that the FERTICA workers were not guaranteed effective judicial protection, since, although they have been allowed to avail themselves of legally provided judicial remedies and obtain favorable decisions, these were not enforced due to unjustified delays on the part of the State.

546. In relation to the actions for the protection of constitutional rights filed, the Commission stated that these did not guarantee an analysis of the merits of the victims' claims of violations of rights such as labor, freedom of association, and strike. The Commission particularly noted that, in the case of the third action, the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court did not even clearly establish the means of resolution since it referred the case indistinctly to the ordinary labor jurisdiction and to the administrative sphere under the responsibility of the Ministry of Labor. Consequently, the Commission determined that the victims did not have effective access to judicial protection in a simple manner because of the lack of certainty and clarity regarding the appropriate remedies to be presented in the face of their unjustified dismissals and the annulment of the collective bargaining agreement.

547. With respect to labor stability, the Commission considered that, in the face of the arbitrary dismissal by the company, the State did not adopt adequate measures to protect the violation of the right to work attributable to third parties. The Commission also noted that the State did not guarantee that the labor proceedings, especially those related to the enforcement of judgments, were processed within a reasonable period of time, and therefore, on the occasion of the arbitrary dismissal of FERTICA's workers, it determined that the State did not protect the right to labor stability, violating the right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, as well as the right to work.

548. Finally, the Commission considered that the dismissal of the ATFE union representatives went beyond the violation of the individual right to freedom of association and deprived the FERTICA workers of the representation of their then union leaders. The Commission also found that the rejection of the union representative's request to intervene as a party in one of the judicial proceedings prevented the effective participation of the workers through their union representation. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to freedom of association in labor matters.

549. Based on said considerations of fact and law, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights established in Articles 8(1), 16(1) and 25 of the American Convention in relation to Articles 1(1) and 26 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the workers and the ATFE union of the FERTICA company.

- Juan Eduardo Cejas vs. Argentina.

550. The case concerns the international responsibility of Argentina for the violation of the right to appeal the conviction to the detriment of Mr. Juan Eduardo Cejas.

551. Mr. Cejas was arrested on January 23, 2001, while he was driving a car with another person. The police personnel who stopped the vehicle found four packages of marijuana inside. In its decision dated August 5, 2002, the Oral Court sentenced Mr. Cejas to four years imprisonment and a fine of $225 for being criminally responsible for the crime of transporting narcotics as a perpetrator as defined in article 5.c of Law 23.737.

552. In view of the conviction handed down by the Oral Court, Mr. Cejas' public defender filed an appeal for cassation. In this brief, the defense pointed out that, although the facts of the case were proven, the participation that Mr. Cejas may have had was not established. In this line, the defense counsel asserted that the conviction did not prove the presence in the case of the intent required by the criminal offense of drug trafficking. In the same appeal, the defense counsel stated that the crime of transportation of narcotics was not proven since it should have been proven not only that the action of taking the narcotics from one place to another was carried out, but also that such transportation was carried out "within the chain of illicit trafficking, integrating a phase of the distribution process and with the knowledge of its subsequent introduction into the illegal trafficking".

553. On August 29, 2002, the Oral Federal Criminal Court No. 1 of the City of La Plata decided "to dismiss the appeal for lack of grounds". To decide in this way, the Court first pointed out that the arguments raised by the defense were "reiterations of the allegations that were dealt with" in the conviction and "mere divergences on the assessment of the facts and what was resolved" by that oral court. Likewise, the court pointed out that "the way in which the Oral Courts characterize a conduct is exempt from a new study by the Chamber of Cassation [...] since it is the Oral Court itself that issued the conviction who has evaluated each and every one of the evidence offered, provided and ordered". Finally, it concluded by stating that "since there was no violation of the applicable norms and only a discrepancy with the application of the facts [...], the appeal is not available, since it is only limited to overcoming the errors of law that the trial courts may have made".

554. In response to this decision, Mr. Cejas' Public Defender filed a complaint for denial of the cassation appeal. On September 13, 2003, Chamber I of the National Chamber of Criminal Cassation dismissed the complaint filed by the defense. In its judgment, Chamber I pointed out that, with respect to the complaint for the failure of the Oral Court to establish the intent to transport the drug, said issue was directly linked to the factual and evidentiary material on which the first instance court ruled.

555. In view of this decision, the Official Public Defender before the Chamber of Criminal Cassation filed an extraordinary federal appeal on behalf of Mr. Cejas. On October 16, 2002, Chamber I of the National Chamber of Criminal Cassation decided to declare the extraordinary appeal inadmissible. Finally, on March 7, 2003, the defense filed a complaint before the Supreme Court of Justice for denial of the extraordinary federal appeal. On September 23, 2003, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation decided to declare "inadmissible" the extraordinary appeal filed, in application of the provisions of article 280 of the Code of Civil and Commercial Procedure of the Nation.

556. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 391/22, the Commission noted that the normative limitation in the Code of Criminal Procedure of the Nation for the admissibility of an appeal in cassation against a conviction in force at the time of the facts made it impossible, in the specific case, for Mr. Cejas to exercise his right to a full review of the judicial decision issued by the court of first instance. The Commission observed that the decisions adopted reflect the fact that the victim did not have a remedy that would guarantee a comprehensive review of the conviction.

557. The Commission considered that the decision reached by the Oral Criminal Court should have been subject to a review by a higher body, in line with inter-American standards regarding the comprehensive review of the conviction.

558. On the other hand, the Commission noted that, in response to the conviction, the defense raised a second grievance related to the subsumption of the criminal offense of transporting narcotics to the conduct committed by Mr. Cejas. On this point, the Commission noted that the judgment of the National

Chamber of Criminal Cassation of September 13, 2002, did indeed address the grievance raised and, citing previous jurisprudence of that court, rejected the defense's argument that the transportation of narcotics must be carried out in the context of a chain of trafficking. However, neither the Chamber of Cassation nor any other higher court independently analyzed whether the conduct attributed to Mr. Cejas constituted the crime of drug trafficking. In this regard, the Commission concluded that the Argentine State did not guarantee Mr. Cejas' right to obtain a full review of his conviction.

559. Based on these considerations of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to appeal the conviction and to judicial protection enshrined in Articles 8(2)(h) and 25(1) of the American Convention, respectively, in relation to the obligations established in Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Juan Eduardo Cejas.

- Members of CENIDH vs. Nicaragua.

560. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Nicaraguan State for the violation of the rights enshrined in the American Convention, as a consequence of the continuous acts of harassment, threats, criminalization, persecution, stigmatization and attacks against the members of the Nicaraguan Center for Human Rights (CENIDH), the arbitrary cancellation of the legal personality of CENIDH, the search and theft of its facilities, as well as the impossibility of accessing justice to the detriment of its members.

561. CENIDH is an organization for the promotion and protection of human rights in Nicaragua that was founded in May 1990 and obtained its legal status on September 26 of the same year. CENIDH and its members have been subjected to multiple attacks, accusations and harassment for more than a decade as a result of their work.

562. According to the information provided by the petitioner, this situation has worsened since April 18, 2018, and led to three main groups of infringements. First, since May 9, 2018, the State has carried out various acts of harassment, persecution and criminalization against the work of CENIDH and its members, which included, among others, stigmatization and disqualification on social networks and in the media, siege of the headquarters and monitoring by police officers, and cutting off internet service. The petitioner also reported aggressions committed particularly against sixteen members of the organization.

563. Secondly, CENIDH members suffered a series of attacks by police officers and members of the Sandinista Youth to the detriment of their right to social protest. Among others, these acts occurred on November 6, 2018, while accompanying the sit-in of the relatives of more than 500 political prisoners held outside the Central Judicial Complex in Managua, on December 9, 2018 when the National Police denied CENIDH authorization to hold a march in the framework of International Human Rights Day, when it denied authorization to hold the march "We are all April" called for April 17, 2019, during an activity commemorating Women's Day on the premises of the Nicaraguan feminist group "La corriente", and while accompanying journalist Carlos Fernando Chamorro on December 14, 2020, in commemoration of the raid on the media outlet "Confidencial".

564. Third, CENIDH suffered the cancellation of its legal personality, and the search and theft in its facilities. On December 10, 2018, CENIDH's facilities were surrounded by approximately 14 patrol cars with police forces that prevented CENIDH members from entering its offices, without explanation. According to allegations by both parties, on December 11, 2018, Sandinista deputy Filiberto Rodríguez filed, at the request of MIGOB, a petition for the cancellation of CENIDH's legal personality. As a result of such procedure, on December 12, 2018, the National Assembly issued the Decree of Cancellation of the Legal Personality of CENIDH, which was published in the Gazette of the Official Gazette on December 18, 2018. As a consequence of the cancellation of the legal personality of CENIDH, its assets were liquidated in accordance with the provisions of Article 25 of Law 147. On December 14, 2018, the Sixth District Criminal Court of the Managua District Court validated such decision.

565. In the framework of said cancellation, during the night of December 13, 2018 and the early morning of December 14, more than 40 members of the police force raided the CENIDH facilities, by entering through the roof and the back of the building. During the raid, the agents broke the locks on the doors of the offices and desks, and took at least 20 computers, two vans, printers and a photocopier, among other belongings. According to information provided by the petitioner, it was not until the afternoon of December 14, 2018, when the MIGOB notified CENIDH of the resolution to cancel the legal status of CENIDH, through which it was determined that, movable and immovable property and any other assets became the property of the State of Nicaragua, and CENIDH was urged to deliver within 72 hours the accounting books, minutes book and membership record book.

566. Faced with these facts, the members of CENIDH filed several appeals, both to claim for the cancellation of its legal personality, as well as against the raid of its offices and removal of assets. On January 25, 2019, an action for the protection of constitutional rights was filed against the Department of Registration and Control of Non-Profit Organizations of the MIGOB for ordering and executing the raid of CENIDH, without obtaining a response from the judicial authorities. On January 17, 2019, members of the organization filed a complaint against the Director General of the National Police, both for the theft of belongings of CENIDH members, as well as for the crime of simple kidnapping of Mr. José del Carmen Morales, guard of the offices, violation of domicile, illegal trespassing, aggravated robbery with force, usurpation of private domain and abuse of authority or functions. According to information made available to the Commission, to date, there has been no progress in the investigation of this complaint.

567. In its Merits Report No. 196/23, the Commission observed that in the framework of CENIDH's work in defense of human rights, its members have peacefully carried out and accompanied different demonstrations to demand the recognition and guarantee of various human rights. However, the Commission noted that these protests have been repressed and dissolved through the use of police force and that the legitimate exercise by CENIDH members of their right to freedom of association in favor of their work in defense of human rights was not guaranteed by the State and consequently led to the attacks they suffered to their personal integrity. The IACHR understood that this occurred, in general, through the dispersion of the demonstrations, the police belts that surrounded and pushed its members, and in particular, with the acts of physical violence suffered by Mr. SLM and Mr. Guillermo Gonzalo Carrión by members of the Sandinista Youth in front of agents of the National Police, which in turn, generated a violation to their detriment of their right to association.

568. Regarding the State's actions in relation to the exercise of the rights of assembly and freedom of expression exercised by the members of CENIDH, the Commission noted that, in addition to dissuading peaceful demonstrations, the State, through a resolution issued by the National Police, denied the holding of the march in commemoration of International Human Rights Day on the grounds that CENIDH was "defunct since April 25, 2018", making any action after that date "invalid". Similarly, the Commission noted that said resolution was based on Article 17 numeral 6 of Law 872, from which the National Police is empowered to issue licenses and permits for any event or activity in general and that it is incompatible with the Inter-American standards, since the requirement in itself of a prior permit to hold a demonstration unreasonably restricts the rights to freedom of assembly and freedom of expression. In addition, the Commission noted that the CENIDH was previously classified as a threat, thereby de facto restricting the right of its members to freedom of association and expression. By virtue of the foregoing, the Commission concluded that the State did not create the material conditions to guarantee the factual conditions in which the members of CENIDH could freely develop their right to association and personal integrity, nor their rights to assembly and freedom of expression. Consequently, the IACHR determined that the State is responsible for the violation of these rights.

569. Likewise, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the cancellation of the legal personality of CENIDH in an arbitrary manner, without due motivation, without guaranteeing their right to be heard and to be able to defend themselves, as well as for not having complied with its conventional obligations in favor of guaranteeing the development of their activities in a free manner without the imposition of obstacles. The Commission understood that there were sufficient elements to consider that the violations caused to CENIDH members in general and the cancellation of the organization's legal personality in particular, were related to its work in the defense of human rights. Thus, the Commission considered that the facts of the case had the consequence that they could not continue to exercise their freedom of association within the framework of that organization. As a result, the IACHR concluded that the State did not guarantee their freedom of association.

570. In addition, the Commission emphasized that the facts of this case implied a misuse of power, since a legal power of the State was used with the objective of silencing social dissidence through the cancellation of the legal personality of CENIDH. The Commission noted that this misuse of power had an impact on the exercise of freedom of expression, not only on the members of CENIDH, but also on the social dimension of this right, which not only restricted freedom of association and individual freedom of expression but also obstructed the work of promoting and defending human rights. Consequently, the Commission found it proven that the real purpose was to silence voices critical of the government, which in this case constituted an undue restriction on the exercise of the right to freedom of expression and association of the members of CENIDH. In view of the foregoing, the Commission concluded that the State was responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, the principle of legality, freedom of expression and the right to association to the detriment of all the members of CENIDH.

571. On the other hand, the IACHR observed that as a result of the raid, the confiscation of their assets and the freezing of their accounts, the defense work of CENIDH members has been hindered and they have had to request support from other organizations in order to continue accompanying individuals and groups in situations of vulnerability. In particular, the IACHR noted with concern that, due to the impossibility of liquidating their assets prior to the raid, many of the case files on which members were working both nationally and internationally were lost. In this sense, the Commission considered as proven the infringement of the rights of the members of CENIDH and therefore the violation of their right to property. Consequently, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the arbitrary dispossession of CENIDH's property, as well as for the lack of observance of judicial guarantees in light of the Inter-American standards, the right to legal guarantees and the right to property.

572. The Commission also warned that the State generally carried out actions of harassment, stalking and surveillance against CENIDH and its members between April and May 2018, as well as that in parallel to the acts of defamation and discrediting, the State additionally and specifically promoted and allowed a smear and criminalization campaign against Mrs. Vilma Núñez. In addition, the Commission warned that, despite the adoption and request for precautionary, urgent and protective measures granted in favor of the members of CENIDH by both the Commission and the Court, the State did not adopt the necessary measures for their protection and thus it did not prevent the violation of their personal integrity or their honor and dignity.

573. Finally, the Commission observed, from the information available to it, that during the raid on the CENIDH facilities, the National Police officers violently tied Mr. José Morales' hands and feet. Likewise, the IACHR noted that once tied up, they beat him, threw him to the ground and confiscated the money he was carrying without any justification, which constituted a violation of his personal integrity.

574. For these reasons, the IACHR concluded that with respect to the set of acts of violence, threats, harassment, persecution and criminalization that by their very nature are linked to the human rights activities of CENIDH, the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to personal integrity and to honor and dignity, to the detriment of the members of CENIDH and particularly responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity to the detriment of Mr. Morales.

575. On the other hand, the Commission found that the proven facts show that as a result of the constant acts of harassment, persecution and criminalization against CENIDH in general and its members in particular, as well as the context of repression in Nicaragua, SLM, Braulio Abarca, Yader Valdivia, Juan Guadamuz, Juan Arce, Gonzalo Carrión, as well as Mrs. Wendy Mercedes Quintero, Juana Bermúdez, and Wendy Flores, were forced to leave Nicaragua and in the case of Mrs. Francely Navarro from her place of residence in Nicaragua. For these reasons, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to residence and movement.

576. In relation to said displacement, the Commission also considered that due to the effects caused as a consequence of the displacement, and given the lack of information presented by the State that would allow it to conclude that the aforementioned victims had received comprehensive humanitarian aid as a result of their displacement; or that the State had adopted measures to lessen their living conditions abroad; or to guarantee their safe return to Nicaragua, the State is responsible for the violation of the right to residence and movement in relation to the right to personal integrity. Likewise, due to the effects that this displacement had on the family dynamics of the victims, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to family protection, as well as the rights of the child.

577. In relation to the constitutional appeals filed against the cancellation of CENIDH's legal personality and its withdrawal, the Commission considered that the lack of response to these appeals, filed almost four years ago, has been excessive and therefore in violation of judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

578. With regard to the criminal appeal filed for the raid of the CENIDH and the deprivation of liberty of Mr. José del Carmen Morales, the IACHR warned that, despite the filing of the complaint for the facts referred to, from the information provided by the parties, it does not appear that the Public Prosecutor's Office has conducted any investigation or brought any criminal action. Regarding the guarantee of reasonable time, the IACHR considered, after analyzing the corresponding elements, that the lack of action in the instant case, only in the investigation phase, excessively exceeds a period that could be considered reasonable for the State to carry out the corresponding investigative procedures and constituted a flagrant denial of justice to the detriment of Mr. José Morales and has contributed to the facts denounced remaining in impunity, thus affecting the situation of the interested parties.

579. For these reasons, the Commission considered that the authorities had failed to act with due diligence by not conducting and channeling the judicial proceeding in accordance with Inter-American standards, as well as by the delay in initiating a complete and effective investigation.

580. In relation to the acts of threats, harassment, persecution and criminalization exercised both by state agents and third parties related to the government against members of CENIDH, the Commission observed that the government did not carry out, according to information made available to it, any investigation, despite having knowledge of the facts at different times and by different means. For this reason, the IACHR indicated that it did not have elements that would allow it to conclude that the State had initiated any investigation into the acts of harassment, persecution, acts of criminalization and displacement. In sum, the IACHR concluded that the State did not guarantee the right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

581. Based on the findings of fact and law in said report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of Articles 5(1) and 16 of the Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) thereof, as well as Articles 13 and 15 of the Convention, in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument. Likewise, that it is responsible for the violation of the rights enshrined in Articles 8(1), 8(2), 9, 13 and 16 of the American Convention in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument. Additionally, it is responsible for the violation of the rights enshrined in Articles 8(1) and 21 of the American Convention in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument; for the violation of the rights contained in Articles 5 and 11 of the American Convention in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, as well as for the violation of the judicial guarantees and judicial protection enshrined in Articles 8(1) and 25(1) of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1), all to the detriment of members of CENIDH.

582. The Commission also concluded that the State of Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of Article 5(1) of the Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) thereof, to the detriment of Mr. José del Carmen Morales. On the other hand, the IACHR concluded that Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of Articles 5 and 22 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1), to the detriment of Mr. SLM, Braulio Abarca, Yader Valdivia, Juan Guadamuz, Juan Arce, Gonzalo Carrión, as well as Wendy Mercedes Quintero, Juana Bermúdez, Wendy Flores and Francely Navarro. Likewise, the IACHR concluded that Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of Article 17(1) of the Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of the core group of victims.<sup>1</sup> of the same instrument to the detriment of the nuclear family of Mr. Juan Guadamuz, Juan Arce, Gonzalo Carrión, as well as of Mrs. Wendy Mercedes and Wendy Flores, and particularly, in relation to Article 19 of the same Convention to the detriment of the two year old son of Mr. Juan Guadamuz, the 6 and 11 year old daughters of Mr. Juan Arce, the minor daughter of Mr. Gonzalo Carrión, the 7 year old and 7 month old children of Mrs. Wendy Flores and LKDQ, the 17 year old daughter of Mrs. Wendy Mercedes, at the time of the facts.

- Indigenous People of Muy Muy and its Uluse Community v. Nicaragua.

583. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Nicaraguan State for the violation of rights enshrined in the American Convention on Human Rights, as a consequence of the failure to recognize, respect and protect the indigenous people of Muy Muy (hereinafter "Muy Muy people" or "PIMM") and their community of Uluse to live and develop under their own forms of political, administrative, social and cultural organization in accordance with their traditions; as well as for failing to prevent and investigate various acts of violence against them and due to the obstacles to access to justice.

584. The Muy Muy people are located in the municipality of Muy Muy, department of Matagalpa. Its total indigenous population is about 12 thousand people, most of them distributed in the communities of Muy Muy, Matiguas, San Ramon and Uluse located in the municipality of San Ramon. Its basic economic activity is livestock and agriculture, besides being a major producer of dairy products.

585. The central governing bodies of the indigenous people of Matagalpa consist of: i) the Board of Directors; ii) the Council of Elders; iii) the Cacique Mayor; and iv) Alcalde de Vara. The Board of Directors is the main legal-political institution, which deals with administrative matters and the execution of the activities agreed upon by the Council of Elders. The Council of Elders is the ancestral and traditional body made up of former community leaders, and its highest authority is the Cacique Mayor. The Alcalde de Vara is in charge of territorial management.

586. From 2003 to date, it has been denounced that municipal authorities have denied the indigenous people of Muy Muy their right to elect the configuration of their Boards of Directors made up of traditional authorities through the imposition of local authorities by the Municipality of Muy Muy. In particular, the petitioner has denounced that, in accordance with its values, uses and customs, at 2003 the indigenous people of Muy Muy held elections to elect a new Board of Directors, but that after said process, the municipal government denied recognition to the persons elected to form said body and illegally imposed other authorities, which has been repeated in the 2006 and 2010 elections.

587. The imposition of authorities has caused disorder in the use of lands, threats, as well as the granting of communal titles for the same territorial area to more than one person. In this context, among other events, in 2007 the municipal police of Muy Muy entered the home of Mr. V.E.G., Secretary General of PIMM and President of the Indigenous Electoral Board, without a warrant and proceeded to arrest him on charges of theft of public documents; on August 9, 2009, the authorities declared the Council of Elders of PIMM non grato and prohibited them from celebrating the International Day of Indigenous Peoples.

588. Furthermore, in 2010, Mr. V.E.G. received several bullet wounds in his home, as well as threats to burn down his house by the Government Delegate in Muy Muy and by the Political Secretary of the Frente Sandinista party in the municipality of Muy Muy. In addition, the petitioner stated that, as a result of the increase in tensions and conflicts within the community related to the imposition of authorities, Mr. Dionisio López and Mr. Adolfo Maradiaga Rodríguez, both members of the Uluse community, were seriously wounded with machetes by persons who invaded their land. Likewise, as a consequence of the advance in the occupation of the Uluse community, on March 28, 2013, Mr. Bayardo Alvarado Gómez was murdered when he tried to oppose the invasion by third parties.

589. On April 7, 2017, CENIDH issued a statement on the accompaniment it has provided to the indigenous community of Uluse in denouncing the actions of demobilizing groups of the Nicaraguan resistance and the Nicaraguan Army. This communication shows that such actions were aimed at dispossessing them of their lands, using intimidating acts and violent actions that have resulted in deaths and injuries; as well as affecting their form of self-determination, imposition of authorities, affecting their way of life, harassment and murders of indigenous people, as well as obstacles to access to justice and thus contexts of impunity.

590. With respect to the territorial conflict in this community, since 2006, the PIMM has denounced that the Nicaraguan resistance, by means of certificates of assignment granted by the delegation of the Matagalpa Property Office, has invaded their lands, has prohibited them from planting their plots, has built houses next to theirs, has cut down the small forests and has even prevented them from accessing the water sources they have always used, in addition to destroying their crops with the arrival of cattle. It also denounces the burning of 40 ranches belonging to indigenous families, and the desecration of their cemeteries by the planting of corn by third parties. On March 1, 2016 and April 7, 2017, these facts were reported to CENIDH, and have been publicly reported in various media.

591. On November 3, 2015, the representative of PIMM, filed a lawsuit before the First Civil District Court of Matagalpa North District with an accumulated action of absolute nullity of the judicial proceeding, nullity of the judgment of declaration of heirs and cancellation of the registry inscription against Mrs. Griselda del Carmen González González. As a result of the lawsuit, on March 4, 2019, the First Civil District Court of Matagalpa North District decided the lawsuit in favor of PIMM and reinstated its right over the property, since it was proved that the process of declaration of heirs was not notified to PIMM and, therefore, that it could not participate; and given that, according to articles 1557 and 1529 of the Civil Code, the usufruct is extinguished by death of the usufructuary, therefore, it cannot be transmitted to any person. The defendant appealed the decision before the Civil Chamber of the North District Court of Appeals, which, on October 12, 2020, declared it unjustified, and the first instance judgment in favor of PIMM became final.

592. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 89/24, the Commission noted that the indigenous people of Muy Muy have been prevented from freely determining their traditional authorities in accordance with their own law and traditions. The IACHR particularly noted that, repeatedly, the municipal government of Muy Muy has refused to recognize the persons elected by the PIMM to form its Board of Directors, during the election processes of 2003, 2006 and 2010. This has been denounced to the authorities according to several writings elaborated by the PIMM and is of public knowledge.

593. On the other hand, the authorities of the municipality of Muy Muy, in addition to not recognizing the persons selected by the PIMM in the formation of the Boards of Directors, from 2003 until the process carried out in 2019, have carried out parallel calls for the formation of said body. The Commission noted that, as a result: i) they have imposed people other than those selected by the PIMM, ii) they have integrated the Boards with people who do not belong to that community; iii) they have caused the duplication of governing bodies within the indigenous people of Muy Muy; and iv) they have generated various consequences in the peaceful use and enjoyment of their territory. The IACHR noted that even during the designation period that began in 2006, the Municipal Council of Muy Muy modified the composition of the Board of Directors on three occasions. Through letters addressed to the President of the Republic, as well as to the President of the Board of Directors of the National Assembly, the PIMM denounced that parallel Councils of Elders were formed in 2006 and 2009 to cover the election processes of the Boards of Directors with a veil of legality.

594. In this regard, the IACHR noted that the actions of the Municipal Council were contrary to the obligations contained in domestic law and considered that the internal dimension of political rights related to the right to autonomy or self-government had been violated, as the State did not recognize or allow the PIMM to freely elect its traditional authorities. Likewise, the IACHR considered that there is a breach of the obligation to adopt internal practices in accordance with human rights standards, derived from the inadequate implementation of the process of election, determination, recognition and certification of the PIMM's Boards of Directors carried out by the MC, by having subordinated the decision-making power of the indigenous authorities to the decision-making bodies and processes of the Municipal Councils. This, in contravention of the State's obligation to guarantee the free exercise of the PIMM's right to elect their own authorities, based on traditional patterns that determine the ways in which the people organize themselves in different areas of their collective life.

595. In this same line, the Commission warned that, both for the disregard of the authorities elected by the people of MUY MUY, as well as for the realization of parallel processes and the imposition of authorities derived from these, as well as for the promotion of structures that disregard the right to self-determination of the indigenous peoples in relation to their right to determine their form of organization, the State is responsible for the violation of political rights.

596. Similarly, the IACHR considered that the lack of recognition and the State's failure to identify, delimit and ensure the ownership and peaceful possession by the PIMM through effective regulation did not allow for effective protection of the right to property and, therefore, constituted a violation of the right to property, as well as the State's failure to guarantee an adequate free, prior and informed consultation process on the titling and the entry of third parties to their territories, in the face of the issuance of property titles in favor of non-indigenous persons in the ancestral lands of the PIMM, which constituted a violation of the rights to private property, prior consultation and political rights.

597. In addition, the Commission considered that the lack of timely recognition and effective protection of the territory historically occupied by the indigenous people of MUY MUY has led to the generation of situations of insecurity and violence. In particular, the Commission observed that, as a consequence of these events, the PIMM have not been able to enjoy or live peacefully in their territory, not only because of the difficulties in enjoying the use of their natural resources, but also because they have not been able to peacefully carry out their subsistence activities. For these reasons, the Commission found that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to life with dignity and personal integrity, as well as to respect and protect the cultural values enshrined to the detriment of the indigenous people of MUY MUY, and that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to movement and residence to the detriment of the 15 families of the indigenous people of MUY MUY.

598. With respect to the right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, the Commission concluded that the State did not guarantee an effective remedy to remedy the human rights violations analyzed, nor did it provide judicial protection of the rights of the PIMM as a result of the actions they undertook to gain access to effective protection. In particular, the IACHR found that the State failed to ensure an effective remedy, under an apparently neutral requirement to protect their form of organization, which had a disproportionate effect on the access and enjoyment of their lands and natural resources. Nor did it provide an effective remedy in favor of the protection of their ancestral territories and natural resources, nor in favor of the protection of their personal integrity. For these reasons, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, to equality before the law and to judicial protection.

599. Finally, the Commission found that the State is responsible for the lack of prevention of the murder of Mr. Alvarado Gómez that occurred on March 28, 2013, in violation of the right to life. On the other hand, with regard to the investigations and criminal proceedings concerning the aforementioned death, the Commission indicated that, despite the fact that the murder of Mr. Alvarado Gómez occurred on March 28, 2013, to date, no person has been determined to be responsible, nor is it clear from the information provided that a serious investigation or procedural momentum has been carried out to determine the truth of the facts and to punish the persons responsible. For these reasons, the Commission considered that the right to life, to judicial guarantees and to judicial protection were violated to the detriment of Mr. Bayardo Alvarado Gómez.

600. Based on the findings of fact and law in the report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that:

601. The State of Nicaragua violated the political rights enshrined in Article 23 of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, by ignoring the authorities elected by the PIMM, conducting parallel processes and imposing authorities derived from these; as well as by promoting structures that ignore the right to self-determination of the indigenous peoples in relation to their right to determine their form of organization, all to the detriment of the PIMM, in the terms of the merits report.

602. The State of Nicaragua violated the right to private property enshrined in Article 21 of the American Convention in relation to Article 1(1) of the same treaty, as a consequence of the State's failure to effectively identify, delimit and protect the territory of the PIMM through effective remediation, in the terms of the merits report.

603. The State of Nicaragua violated the rights to private property, freedom of thought and expression and political rights enshrined in Articles 21, 13 and 23 of the American Convention in relation to the obligations contained in Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same international instrument by failing to guarantee an adequate, prior, free and informed consultation process on the titling and entry of third parties into the territory of the PIMM, as well as by issuing property titles in favor of non-indigenous persons on that territory, in the terms of the merits report.

604. The State of Nicaragua violated the rights to life with dignity, to personal integrity and to progressive development contained in Articles 4, 5 and 26 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of the indigenous people of Muy Muy; by not guaranteeing their physical and cultural survival as a people, in accordance with their ancestral ways of life. In particular, the IACHR determines that the State of Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of the right to freedom of movement and residence established in Article 22 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1), for failing to prevent the displacement of 15 families of the PIMM, identified in the report, as a result of the acts of violence and intimidation exercised both by State agents and third parties to their detriment, in the terms of the merits report.

605. The State of Nicaragua violated the rights to judicial guarantees, to equality before the law and to judicial protection established in Articles 8(1), 24 and 25(1) of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same treaty, due to the lack of an effective remedy that would allow the PIMM to protect the determination of its authorities, as well as the lack of an adequate and effective procedure to protect its right to property, and to live peacefully within the same, in the terms of the merits report.

606. The State of Nicaragua violated the rights to life, to judicial guarantees and to judicial protection enshrined in Articles 4, 8(1) and 25(1) of the American Convention, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of Mr. Bayardo Alvarado Gómez; by not preventing his murder and not carrying out a diligent investigation aimed at identifying and punishing the persons responsible, in the terms of the merits report.

- Agustín Jarquín Anaya vs. Nicaragua.

607. The case refers to the international responsibility of the Nicaraguan State for the dismissal of Mr. Agustín Armando Jarquín Anaya from his position as deputy, without respect for due process and without grounds on a cause previously established by law.

608. According to the information provided by the petitioner, the Christian Democratic Unity (UDC) signed agreements with the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN), and both, in September 2000, formed the Municipal Electoral Convergence (Convergencia Electoral Municipal) together with other political parties. Likewise, he informed that this alliance was maintained during the 2006 presidential elections. Both parties agree that Mr. Agustín Armando Jarquín Anaya, as president of the political party UDC, held on February 12, 2011 the "Directory Congress" where it was resolved to ratify the political position of remaining in the referred alliance with the FSLN, called Alianza Unida Nicaragua Triunfa (United Alliance Nicaragua Triumphs).

609. According to the State, and not disputed by the petitioner, on November 6, 2011, 18 political organizations participated in the general elections. Among them was the Alianza Unida Nicaragua Triunfa, headed by the FSLN party. Additionally, Mr. Jarquín Anaya was registered as a candidate for second deputy for the department of Managua, being elected and taking office on January 9, 2012. After one year of having started as deputy, Mr. Jarquín Anaya resigned from the Alliance with the FSLN and declared himself an independent deputy. In June of that same year, he joined the parliamentary bench called Bancada Democrática.

610. On April 9, 2013, the Supreme Electoral Council (CSE) notified Mr. Jarquín, in his capacity as president and legal representative of the UDC, the cancellation of the legal status of the political party, which they appealed to the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. On the following August 14, the Chamber decided that the appeal was dismissed.

611. On July 26, 2013, the CSE notified Mr. Jarquín of the cancellation of the certificate of inauguration and the credential with respect to the seat he occupied as a member of the United Alliance Nicaragua Triumphs bench and incorporated the alternate Alyeris Beldramina Arias Siezar. The parties stated that on August 23, 2013, Mr. Jarquín filed an action for the protection of constitutional rights before the Court of Appeals of Managua Civil Chamber No. 2, against the resolution of the CSE. On September 12, 2013, Mr. Jarquín was notified of the decision in which the Court rejected the appeal as notoriously improper according to the Law on Actions for the Protection of Constitutional Rights. This resolution states the violation of articles 2, 4, 5, 7, 25.3, 27, 34.8, 46, 47, 48, 49, 49, 50, 51, 50, 30, 183 and 188 of the National Constitution and article 55.5 of the Law on Actions for the Protection of Constitutional Rights.

612. In view of this decision, on September 13, 2013, Mr. Jarquín appeared before the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice and filed an action for the protection of constitutional rights against the magistrates of the CSE and the Board of Directors of the National Assembly “for violating the procedures to remove the deputies”. The information provided highlights that, based on the referred Article 43 of the Law on Actions for the Protection of Constitutional Rights, the Chamber considered under the supplementary application of Articles 477 and 481 of the Code of Civil Procedure (CPC) that, in order to file the appeal, the appellant should have requested, at his own expense, within the third day of the denial of the appeal, a copy of the documents. Likewise, the Chamber considered that the appeal should not have been filed against the magistrates of the CSE and the members of the Board of Directors of the National Assembly, but against the magistrates of the Court of Appeals of Managua Civil Chamber No. 2. According to information provided by both parties, the referred judgment was issued on November 27, 2013 declaring the appeal to be dismissed and was notified to Mr. Jarquín on March 25, 2014.

613. On August 13, 2013, Mr. Jarquín went to the National Assembly; however, the security guards did not allow him to enter, as instructed by their superiors. Given these facts, the petitioner indicated that he filed an actions for the protection of constitutional rights before Civil Chamber No. 1 of the Court of Appeals of Managua against the president of the National Assembly and that, on October 18, 2013, the Court of Appeals notified him of the decision of October 9, 2013 by which it declared the appeal inadmissible.

614. In response to this decision, Mr. Jarquín informed that on October 22, 2013, he filed a direct action for the protection of constitutional rights before the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, which was decided by resolution of November 27, 2013, which declared the appeal inadmissible; decision notified on January 16, 2014.

615. In its Merits Report No. 146/24, the IACHR highlighted that the legal controversy in the present case consists of determining whether the CSE's decision to cancel Mr. Jarquín's deputy status following his change of political party was in accordance with the State's obligations under the American Convention and, in general, the Inter-American standards on the matter. The Commission noted that it was after a constitutional reform in 2014 that the change of political party was included as a cause for the loss of deputy status. In this regard, the Commission considered that the CSE's decision restricting the victim's political participation was not in accordance with the principle of legality, since the ground for losing the status of deputy was not previously established in the law, being therefore arbitrary. Likewise, the Commission observed that the decision adopted entailed the removal of Mr. Jarquín from his functions as a deputy of the National Assembly, as well as from all his powers, attributions, duties and rights as a member of the Legislative Branch, and that he was prevented from exercising public functions in his country as an elected deputy.

616. The Commission also took note that it was as a consequence of his resignation from the Alianza and his joining the Bancada Democrática, that Mr. Jarquín was sanctioned with the loss of his status as a deputy by the resolution under analysis of the CSE. In this regard, the IACHR considered that the CSE's decision had the effect of preventing him from being able to freely decide whether or not to join the political association of his choice. For these reasons, the IACHR considered that the State of Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of the principle of legality and retroactivity, the right to freedom of association and political rights.

617. With respect to the duty to state reasons, the IACHR observed that the articles indicated by the State as the basis for the CSE's resolution do not include a legal precept that would make it possible to know the facts and the legal consequences of these actions. Therefore, the Commission considered that this decision did not have a sufficient legal basis in accordance with the facts. On the contrary, the Commission noted that the particular situation of Mr. Jarquín was not foreseen in any of the grounds of this law at the time of the occurrence of the facts; and, consequently, neither was a procedure for this purpose contemplated in Article 25 of Law No. 606.

618. In addition, the IACHR noted that Article 186 states that “[t]he Plenary of the National Assembly is empowered to fill any omission and resolve any issue not contemplated in this law,” from which it can be understood that, since the cause for which Mr. Jarquín's credential was cancelled was not foreseen for the occurrence of the facts, the competence to hear said case would correspond to the Plenary of the Assembly under the terms of Article 186 of Law No. 606. However, the Commission did not observe information provided by the State on the reasons why this procedure was not followed, nor does it have information on whether it would have allowed compliance with the guarantees of due process required by the Inter-American system in cases such as the present one.

619. Linked to this, the petitioner stated that during the proceedings before the CSE he was prevented from exercising his right to a defense, without the State providing any information to indicate that the victim was actually allowed to exercise his right to a defense during the proceedings, or to take part in the proceedings in general.

620. Regarding the action for the protection of constitutional rights, filed against the decision of the Court of Appeals Civil Chamber No. 2, the IACHR identified that the decision of the Constitutional Chamber addresses two aspects as a basis for declaring the appeal inadmissible: (i) alleged defects of form in its presentation in supplementary application of the Code of Civil Procedure and (ii) the authority against which it was filed. On the first point, the Commission observed that the Chamber reasoned that Article 43 of the Law on the Actions for the Protection of Constitutional Rights indicates that the rules of the CPC shall be followed in all matters not established in the law. The IACHR considered that the manner in which the provisions of the CPC were applied to resolve the appeal filed by the victim did not allow the required clarity to be observed. Therefore, the IACHR understood that in the case under review, the supplementary application of this requirement and the legal consequence of its non-compliance were not duly justified.

621. With respect to the second point, the IACHR found that the Constitutional Chamber's decision, in general, indicates that the appeal should not have been filed against the magistrates of the CSE and the members of the Board of Directors of the National Assembly, but rather against the magistrates of the Managua Court of Appeals Civil Chamber No. 2. The Commission noted that the decision does not support why the appeal was incorrectly filed by the victim, considering that Article 26 allows the appeal to be filed either against the authority that orders the alleged unconstitutional act or against the executing agent. The IACHR did not notice from the information provided that the decision rejecting the action as a matter of fact allowed the victim to know at least the legal basis of the decision and its application in the specific case. Therefore, the IACHR concluded that this decision was contrary to the guarantee of due motivation.

622. In relation to judicial protection, the Commission noted that in the present case there was no judicial remedy against the decision adopted by the CSE. This decision could not be reviewed, nor was there a form of jurisdictional control that would make it possible to determine whether the acts of this body were adopted in accordance with the law. The Commission considered that the possibility of judicially questioning the decision of the CSE was of particular importance in the present case, taking into account, among other aspects, that the act of inauguration and the credential that Mr. Jarquín held in the National Assembly were cancelled.

623. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State of Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

624. Based on the findings of fact and law in this report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, the principle of legality and retroactivity, freedom of association, political rights and judicial protection, established in Articles 8, 9, 16, 23 and 25 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Agustín Jarquín Anaya.

2. Requests for advisory opinions

625. During 2024, the Commission made no requests for advisory opinions to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

3. Submission of written observations in pending cases and in cases of supervision of compliance with the sentence

626. During 2024, the IACHR submitted 192 written observations to the Inter-American Court related to active cases in process and in the stage of supervision of compliance with the judgment in accordance with Article 69 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Court.

4. Appearance and participation in public and private hearings

627. In 2024, the Commission participated in a total of 30 hearings, of which 11 were related to ongoing contentious cases, 17 to supervision of compliance with a judgment, and two related to requests for advisory opinions. These hearings were:

E. Status of compliance with IACHR recommendations issued in the merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure

1. The mandate to follow up on the recommendations of the Inter-American Commission

628. Full compliance with the decisions of the Commission is essential to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights in the OAS member states and to strengthen the inter-American human rights system. For this reason, this section includes an analysis of the status of compliance with the decisions contained in the merits reports published by the Commission since 2001, as well as an analysis of the recommendations whose follow-up was activated upon request by one of the parties in the case of reports published before 2001.<sup>162</sup>

629. On several occasions, the OAS General Assembly has encouraged member states to follow up on compliance with the Commission's recommendations. For example, resolution AG/RES. 1701 (XXX-O/2000) urged States to make their best efforts to implement the recommendations of the Inter-American Commission based on the principle of good faith (operative paragraph 5.d). The OAS General Assembly spoke similarly in resolution AG/RES. 2672 (XLI-O/11), which addresses observations and recommendations on the Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (operative paragraph 3.b).

630. Likewise, the Commission considers that the effectiveness of the inter-American human rights system rests mainly on compliance with the decisions of its organs, which include orders, recommendations and agreements regarding comprehensive reparations for victims of human rights violations, both in the judgments of the Inter-American Court and in the merits reports issued by the Inter-American Commission. In this regard, the will of the States is fundamental to fulfill the objectives of the American Convention and the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man in the application of the principle of pacta sunt servanda, which establishes that States must meet in good faith the obligations assumed in treaties.<sup>163</sup>

631. Both the American Convention on Human Rights (Article 41) and the Statute of the Commission (Article 18) explicitly grant the Commission the power to request information from the member states and to produce such reports and recommendations as it deems appropriate. Specifically, Article 48 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR provides as follows:

2. Follow-up

632. Once the Commission has published a report on a friendly settlement or on the merits in which it has made recommendations, it may adopt follow-up measures as it deems appropriate, such as requesting information from the parties and holding hearings, to verify compliance with friendly settlement agreements and recommendations.

633. The Commission shall report as it deems appropriate on the progress made in complying with said agreements and recommendations.

3. Methodology for following up on recommendations: actions carried out in the year 2024

634. In compliance with its conventional and statutory powers, and in accordance with the aforementioned resolutions and Article 48 of its Rules of Procedure, the Inter-American Commission requests information from the States regarding compliance with the recommendations included in the merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 47 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure. This practice began in 2001, and, since then, on an annual basis, the Commission requests information from the parties to the cases with published merits reports to follow up on its decisions and update the compliance status of each case. The Commission also receives information on compliance with recommendations in hearings or working meetings held during the year. Based on all the information collected, the Commission analyzes the status of compliance with the recommendations in each case.

635. The Commission has strengthened and consolidated its methodologies for collecting, systematizing and analyzing the information considered in the follow-up of its recommendations to optimize the development of this process and thus identify and draw attention to the individual and structural results of compliance with its decisions. This progress was achieved within the framework of the Special Program to Monitor IACHR Recommendations (Program 21) of the Commission's 2017–2021 Strategic Plan and Programs 8 and 9 of the Commission's 2023–2027 Strategic Plan on strengthening the follow-up of recommendations and the inter-American recommendations monitoring system (SIMORE), and on multilevel dialogue and working agenda with States, respectively.

<sup>162</sup> The Inter-American Commission ex officio follows up on the recommendations of the merits reports that have been published since 2001. With respect to the merits reports that were published prior to that year, the Commission follows up and prepares a file when one of the parties explicitly requests the activation of this mandate.

636. To update the information contained in this chapter, since August 2024 onwards, the Commission has requested the parties to cases with published merits reports subject to follow-up to submit, within one month, information relevant to the implementation of the recommendations. To this end, the Commission has sent requests for information with specific questions regarding the recommendations in each case that have not been declared fully compliant. These questions were prepared based on the latest level of compliance determined by the Commission to obtain relevant information on the progress achieved and the areas of opportunity identified, considering the special features of each case. In this regard, since 2021, the Commission has begun to develop these specific questions in each request for information to guide the States involved and to ask the representatives of the victims to provide relevant, updated and valuable information to analyze compliance with each recommendation.

637. When each request for information was sent, the Commission gave the parties one month to submit information on the progress made and the challenges faced in complying with the recommendations. Although, in principle, that one-month time frame was considered to be the deadline for receiving inputs for the preparation of this chapter, the Commission considered information received after that date in the following situations: in cases in which, after that date, working meetings were held that led to additional actions agreed upon by the parties; when the Commission granted extensions requested by any of the parties; when the petitioner or the State sent complementary information to that provided on time; or in cases in which internal administrative situations allowed for processing information received after the closing date, considering the time limits set for the approval of this chapter. The information not included in the preparation of this chapter will be analyzed in the 2025 Annual Report of the Commission.

638. Following the monitoring model and methodology proposed in 2018, the Commission includes in this chapter:

- i) A summary of the follow-up activities carried out in 2024 concerning the published reports on the merits, which have included enhanced follow-up of some cases.
- ii) A table of the cases in the follow-up stage of recommendations that includes information sheets for each case and that, since 2018, includes with more detail the progress and challenges identified in 2024 concerning each of the recommendations subject to follow-up. In this regard, since 2023, the Commission has simplified the design and structure of the monitoring sheets to present the information in a more accessible and practical manner.
- iii) A comprehensive presentation of the progress that, by 2024, the Commission identifies in terms of compliance with all the recommendations issued in the published merits reports, which include the compliance clauses of compliance agreements for those cases in which it is applicable. To present the results in terms of follow-up of and compliance with recommendations, the Commission highlights the relevant results concerning recommendations and cases based on the categories of full, substantial partial and partial compliance, which are described in the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, which were published in 2019 (General Guidelines for Follow-up).<sup>164</sup>

<sup>164</sup> IACHR, General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (second edition) (only available in Spanish), OEA/Ser.L/V/II. doc.385/23, November 20, 2023.

639. Likewise, since 2023, in the exercise of its mandate to follow up on recommendations, the Commission identified that, during the follow-up of published merits reports, the lack of response to requests for information from the victims or their representatives, especially for prolonged periods, constitutes a serious obstacle to the development of this stage. In particular, the Commission has identified that this lack of response prevents the Commission from knowing the current status of implementation of the recommendations and, therefore, of the reparation measures; it delays follow-up procedures of cases as a whole, considering that the number of published merits reports that enter the follow-up stage increases over time; it also interrupts the optimization of the follow-up of recommendations, which hinders the strengthening of the exercise of this mandate in cases where the victim or their representatives have a clear interest in the follow-up.

640. Archiving is a procedural option under Articles 41 and 42.1 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure that is applicable to petitions and cases with files in process when the petitioner withdraws in writing or when its unjustified procedural inactivity constitutes a serious indication of lack of interest in the processing of the petition.<sup>165</sup> In this regard, the Commission has begun to alert the parties of the possibility of archiving or deactivating follow-up on their cases to optimize the monitoring of recommendations contained in published merits reports and to strengthen follow-up methodologies. The purpose for this is focusing the IACHR's efforts and institutional capacity on the cases in active monitoring phase in which victims' representatives have responded to the Commission's requests and show interest in the follow-up by providing clear, comprehensive and updated information that allows for an adequate evaluation of the levels of compliance with the recommendations.

641. In this context, in 2023, the Commission identified 19 cases in which the victims' representatives had not submitted information in the two years before June 30, 2023, and 45 cases in which the victims' representatives had not submitted information for three years or more. Based on that, the Commission sent a written communication to the relevant parties to alert them of the possibility of archiving their cases and grant them one month to submit updated information on the status of compliance with the recommendations.

642. In 10 out of these cases, the petitioners contacted the follow-up team to request the reactivation of the monitoring. Thus, the following files are reincorporated into the 2024 Annual Report along with their relevant monitoring sheet:

- Case 11.654, Riofrío Massacre, concerning Colombia
- Case 11.710, Report No. 63/01, Carlos Manuel Prada González and Evelio Antonio Bolaño Castro, concerning Colombia
- Case 12.414, Report No. 101/17, Alcides Torres Arias, Ángel David Quintero et al., concerning Colombia
- Case 12.780, Report No. 25/20, Carlos Arturo Betancourt Estrada and Family, concerning Colombia
- Case 12.477, Lorenzo Enrique Copello Castillo et al., concerning Cuba
- Case 12.525, Nelson Iván Serrano Sáenz, concerning Ecuador
- Case 12.158, Benedict Jacob, concerning Grenada
- Case 11.765, Paul Lallion, concerning Grenada
- Case 12.028, Donnason Knights, concerning Grenada
- Case 11.381, Milton García Fajardo et al., concerning Nicaragua

643. Finally, since its creation in 2018, the Commission's Follow-up of Recommendations and Impact Section (SSRI for its acronym in Spanish) has been tasked with analyzing the merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure. This has helped the Commission to conduct a more specialized follow-up on the matters under its responsibility. The following is a separate and detailed description of the progress made in complying with the recommendations issued in merits reports. This description helps users to identify more clearly and quickly the status of each issue, the actions taken in each case, their individual and structural impacts, and the challenges and issues in which it is still necessary to continue taking steps to achieve their full implementation.

4. Categories of analysis

644. To provide the parties with objective information on the type of review carried out in each case, the Commission published the General Guidelines for Follow-up on Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights,<sup>166</sup> a technical follow-up instrument that contains categories of analysis of the information provided in the follow-up processes. This document was updated in November 2023 to strengthen the criteria for: i) assessing the information received from the States, the civil society, victims, representatives and other stakeholders as regards the follow-up of recommendations; and ii) analyzing and determining the level of implementation of these decisions.

645. These categories help the Commission to make a more detailed analysis of the information available and the parties to know whether the information submitted is relevant and timely for the Commission to assess compliance with the recommendations issued in published merits reports. In this regard, the following are the categories of information analysis that were defined in the General Guidelines for Follow-up and that were applied to the updating of this chapter:

- Relevant information provided: when the information was submitted to the Commission within the time frame specified in the request—in the cases in which information was previously requested—and also the information was pertinent, comprehensive, objective and updated.
- Nonrelevant information provided: when the information was provided within the time frame specified by the Commission but does not refer to the measures adopted aimed at complying with at least one of the recommendations pending compliance, was incomplete or was outdated.
- Information not provided: when information on the measures adopted to comply with the recommendations issued was not provided; the Commission was expressly informed that the information would not be submitted; or the parties requested an extension(s) to provide information and, in the end, the information was not provided.

646. In addition, by means of its General Guidelines for Follow-up,<sup>167</sup> the Commission decided to expand the categories of analysis of its recommendations to raise the visibility of the States' compliance efforts and to classify the status of compliance with each recommendation. In this regard, the Commission approved the following categories for the individual analysis of recommendations:

- Full compliance: a recommendation is fully complied with when the State has initiated and successfully concluded the measures for its observance. Full compliance is achieved when the following phases are completed: i) initial phase, ii) discussion phase, iii) approval phase and iv) compliance measure execution phase.
- Substantial partial compliance: a recommendation reaches the level of substantial partial compliance when the State has adopted relevant measures for its implementation and has provided evidence of said measures, but the Commission considers that they have not been completed. In this case, the State has successfully completed the following phases: i) initial phase, ii) discussion phase and iii) approval phase. The iv) compliance measure execution phase is still in progress and is beginning to produce significant effects.

- Partial compliance: a recommendation is partially complied with when the State has taken some steps towards compliance, but additional measures are still required. This means that the State has successfully completed the following phases: i) initial phase and ii) discussion phase. The iii) approval phase is in the process of implementation.
- Pending compliance: compliance with a recommendation is pending when the State has not yet adopted any measures to implement the recommendation or when the measures are at an early stage and their adoption is very recent and have not yet produced concrete results.
- Noncompliance: a recommendation whose compliance was impossible because of the conduct of the State or because the State has explicitly indicated that it would not comply with the measure.

5. Status of compliance with the merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Commission

647. On the basis of the goals established in Program 8 of the 2023–2027 Strategic Plan on strengthening the follow-up of recommendations, the Commission made efforts to disclose and provide more accessible information on the progress achieved in implementing the merits reports it has published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure. In this regard, the Committee updated individual follow-up factsheets with the information received in each case throughout the year, including its analysis of the status of compliance with the recommendations that have not yet been declared fully complied with. The Commission analyzed each recommendation issued in the published merits reports and identified the compliance measures that were undertaken, the individual and structural results that were achieved and the challenges that persist, according to the information submitted by the parties involved in each case.

648. In addition, during 2023, merits reports were released for the following cases, which entered the follow-up stage in 2024 (the first follow-up factsheets thereof are included in the instant Annual Report):

- Case 14.196, Oswaldo Payá Sardiña and others, concerning Cuba.
- Case 13.352, Jurijus Kadamovas et al., concerning United States.
- Case 12.446, Tracy Lee Housel, concerning United States.

649. It should be noted that, although Report No. 298/23 (Case 11.464, Alberto Augusto Zalles Cueto, concerning Ecuador) was also published in 2023, it was not included in the follow-up portfolio, inasmuch as the Commission declared full compliance with the recommendations issued therein.

650. Finally, the Commission recalls that, when it comes to cases whose merits reports have been released prior to 2001, follow-up is only activated upon request of one of the parties concerned. Following a request from the victims' representatives in Case 11.010, Hildegard María Feldman et al., concerning Colombia, and Case 11.101, Caloto Massacre, concerning Colombia, the first follow-up factsheets on the relevant recommendations were included in this chapter.

651. Below is a list of the merits reports published since 2001, including those that are no longer subject to active follow-up, in addition to reports prior to that year for which the activation of follow-up has been requested with 81 factsheets updated for this annual report. Out of the total 147 cases, 80 continue open (54.4 percent); 13 are closed, including one that was closed in this annual report<sup>168</sup> (8.9 percent) and 54 are

6. Activities carried out in the follow-up process in 2024

652. With regard to the follow-up of individual cases provided for in Article 48 of the Commission’s Rules of Procedure, during 2024, the Commission focused on increasing the number of follow-up actions carried out throughout the year to build shared road maps for compliance with the recommendations and to re-establish or maintain contact with States, representatives of victims and victims of cases in relation to which it had not received information in recent years.

653. As part of the work to update the case factsheets to be included in the 2024 Annual Report, the Commission sent 162 letters to the States and petitioners (two for each of the 81 files under follow-up), requesting information on compliance with the recommendations this year. As a result, 92 response letters were received, which account for 56.7 percent of the total requests. Out of these responses, 42.39 percent were sent by States (39 letters) and 57.6 percent by petitioners (53 letters). In addition, 37 input documents were

<sup>184</sup> This is the only set of cases that, for methodological purposes, is classified as “in process of determining level of compliance,” inasmuch as the 2021 and 2022 follow-up factsheet prepared for the joint press release does not yet establish levels of compliance but aims to systematize the follow-up information as a step prior to determining levels of compliance.

submitted by the parties prior to the formal requests sent by letter —22 were sent by petitioners (59.4 percent) and 15 by States (40.5 percent)—. Consequently, 63 cases of the portfolio (78.75 percent of the total) were updated with new information this year.

654. Furthermore, during 2024, the Commission continued to promote reinforced strategies for cases that have a structural impact by closely monitoring the process of implementation of recommendations. Said strategies include the following:

- Joint Press Release No. 1193 concerning Peru. This refers to the reinforced follow-up strategy that was devised for the 159 merits reports included in sections (c) and (d) of Joint Press Release P-1193-CA, which was signed in 2001 by the Commission and the State of Peru.<sup>187</sup> It should be noted that, prior to the preparation of the factsheet on the joint cases, this chapter included the follow-up of three cases involving the State of Peru whose reports had been released from 2001 onwards.<sup>188</sup> Taking into account that these three cases are included in sections (c) and (d) of the aforementioned press release, for methodological reasons, the follow-up thereof will be carried out together with that of the other cases mentioned in the press release, and the information on compliance will be incorporated into the relevant factsheet. Unlike the follow-up factsheets for the other cases included in this report, the factsheet for the cases in the above-mentioned file does not establish levels of compliance with the recommendations, although it is expected that the Commission and the parties will lay down specific commitments to be assessed annually to have a clear picture of the progress made. The purpose of this stage is to introduce a mechanism for systematizing information to show the State's efforts to comply with the recommendations and, in addition, to collect, centralize and unify all the information arising from the reports submitted by the parties, taking into consideration the large number of cases under follow-up.

This strategy entailed holding regular meetings (at first, bimonthly and now quarterly), each time addressing a different thematic area (investigation, search for missing persons, reparations, health and social redress and rehabilitation). During 2024, working and bilateral meetings were held on February 21, May 17, May 20 and June 15, as well as a portfolio meeting on September 18. Moreover, on November 15, 2024, within the framework of its 191st regular period of sessions, the Commission held a public hearing requested by the Asociación Pro Derechos Humanos (APRODEH) and the Center for Justice and International Law (CEJIL), aimed at addressing the impact of Law No. 32,107 —the Law Governing the Application and Scope of Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes in Peruvian Legislation— on the cases included in the joint press release.

- Case No. 12.051, Maria da Penha, concerning Brazil. Since 2022 and in close coordination with the Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women, bimonthly follow-up meetings have been held to promote a more dynamic oversight of the recommendations issued by the Commission. The purpose of the case is to enable the application of objective criteria and parameters to measure compliance with the recommendations that have a structural impact (aimed at prevention and nonrepetition). This strategy was proposed considering the effect that this case has had on the structural issue of domestic violence and violence against women both in Brazil and at the regional level. During the Commission's visit to the country in June 2024, President Roberta Clarke, Rapporteur for Brazil and for the rights of women, convened a working meeting to discuss a road map towards reaching agreements that will allow for full compliance with the recommendations. Additionally, a bilateral meeting was held with the State on May 17 and a portfolio meeting was held on September 26, 2024.

655. Furthermore, as part of the follow-up of Case 12.053, Maya Indigenous Communities of the Toledo District, concerning Belize, in 2023, it was agreed that a road map would be created to review the commitments made by both parties and coordinate their work, with quarterly meetings to evaluate the progress achieved and the challenges faced in implementing the recommendations. In this regard, between October 15 and 18, 2024, the Commission conducted a follow-up visit to verify compliance with the recommendations of the case by means of a working meeting. This stage of the process is part of the priorities set forth in the Commission’s Five-Year Strategy for the Caribbean (2023–2027), a plan focused on the region.

656. Moreover, meetings were held with the State of Argentina in its capacity as amicus curiae in Case 12.254, Víctor Saldaño, concerning the United States. These actions were carried out as part of the portfolio meeting with the State of Argentina on August 3, 2024.

657. In addition, as part of its follow-up activities, the Commission held a significant number of bilateral online meetings with petitioners, victims and State representatives regarding the following cases: Case 11.010, Hildegard María Feldman, concerning Colombia (on January 5, 2024); Case 12.525, Nelson Iván Serrano Sáenz, concerning Ecuador (on January 29, 2024); Case 12.414, Alcides Torres Arias, Ángel David Quintero et al., concerning Colombia (on May 23, 2024); Case 12.487, Rafael Ignacio Cuesta Caputi, concerning Ecuador (on May 29, 2024); Case 12.553, Jorge, José and Dante Peirano Basso, concerning Uruguay (on June 6, 2024); and Case 11.625, María Eugenia Morales de Sierra, concerning Guatemala (on November 22, 2024). Furthermore, bilateral meetings were held in person to discuss cases involving Guatemala: Case 9.111, Ileana del Rosario Solares Castillo et al., and Case 9.961, José María García Portillo and Family (both on November 29, 2024). A working meeting was also held to address Case 12.469, Margarita Barbería Miranda, concerning Chile (on March 19, 2024), which was attended by both State and the petitioner representatives.

658. Throughout 2024, the Commission continued to promote portfolio review meetings, that is, coordination meetings with the States to discuss the progress achieved and the challenges faced in complying with the recommendations in the cases under follow-up. These meetings were held with the following States: Ecuador (March 26), Mexico (May 14), Guatemala (June 27), Brazil (September 26), Peru (September 18), Argentina (October 3) and Colombia (October 7).

659. By way of requests for information to the parties to each case, working meetings, bilateral and portfolio meetings, and the relay of information between the parties, in 2024, the Commission monitored compliance in 100 percent of the open cases whose merits reports were published after 2001 pursuant to Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure.

7. Relevant results

a. Progress achieved in 2024 in the implementation of recommendations issued in published merits reports

660. Progress in complying with the recommendations issued by the Commission has been significant thanks to the promotion of this mandate in the Commission’s work agenda, particularly within the framework of Program 8 of the 2023–2027 Strategic Plan. The Commission also acknowledges the valuable support and commitment that the States, the victims and their representatives have shown in the development of the follow-up process, which has led to favorable results in terms of levels of compliance. The following table shows the progress made each year in the implementation of the recommendations issued in all published merits reports that have been subject to follow-up.<sup>189</sup>

Full compliance	9	9	9	11	11	12	8%	7.8%	7.3%	7.9%	7.8%	8.2%

<sup>189</sup> It should be noted that, during 2023, no compliance analysis was performed with respect to the cases whose deactivation and archiving was appropriate; therefore, the number of cases under follow-up dropped from 139 in 2022 to 66 in 2023.

<sup>190</sup> The table shows the progress achieved since 2019. To learn about the 2018 compliance percentages, see the 2023 Annual Report or earlier reports.

661. The Commission notes that compliance with the recommendations and compliance agreements clauses is the result of a complex process that involves a sound and continuous interaction among the users of the inter-American human rights system. For this reason, the Commission reaffirms its commitment to implementing all measures within its reach to promote continuous and effective compliance with the recommendations issued to ensure greater enjoyment and safeguarding of human rights in the region. The progress made in the levels of compliance with the recommendations and the clauses of the compliance agreements signed by the parties is described below.

662. In 2024, the 80<sup>194</sup> cases whose merits reports were published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of the Commission’s Rules of Procedure and whose follow-up status was active comprised a total of 472 decisions under follow-up, which included 339 recommendations issued by the Commission and 133 clauses of compliance agreements signed by the parties. Moreover, out of the total 472 decisions, 241 (51 percent) have shown progress in their implementation (109 have reached full compliance, 33 have reached substantial partial compliance, 99 have reached partial compliance), 212 are pending compliance (44.9 percent) and 14 continue to be noncompliant (2.9 percent). In addition, five recommendations are classified as “under follow-up” (1 percent) because additional information is required to determine their status of compliance.

663. According to the information that the Commission received and analyzed in 2024, it was possible to determine that some progress had been made in the implementation of 22 recommendations included in published merits reports as well as of seven clauses of compliance agreements. To contribute to these results, the Commission reinforced the methodology applied to the analysis of compliance. Out of the 29 decisions—including recommendations and clauses—that experienced progress, as recorded in the follow-up analysis carried out in 2024, 17 are of individual impact and 12 are of structural impact. The Commission welcomes the progress achieved in complying with these measures during 2024.

664. Based on the follow-up carried out in 2024, the Commission determined that 13 reparation measures have reached full compliance, seven reparation measures have reached substantial partial compliance and nine reparation measures have reached partial compliance.

665. The following is a breakdown of the progress that the Commission observed in 2024 to determine full compliance with 13 reparation measures (including both recommendations and compliance agreement clauses).

<sup>191</sup> The table included in the 2022 Annual Report on the follow-up factsheets of the published merits reports comprised a total of 140 cases. It indicated that there was a total of 139 cases instead of 140 because the cases included in Joint Press Release P-1193-CA (Peru) were excluded. As explained above, this press release was not included in this table since the Commission has not yet determined levels of compliance with the recommendations issued in the reports contained therein.

<sup>192</sup> This figure showed the total number of cases whose merits reports were published after 2001, including those that are no longer subject to active follow-up plus cases whose reports are prior to 2001 and for which the activation of follow-up has been requested. However, in 2023, only 65 follow-up factsheets were updated, given that the other cases were closed or under analysis for archiving. Out of these, 64 files were taken into consideration to calculate the percentages of compliance with recommendations, since no levels of compliance have been determined for Joint Press Release P-1193-CA (Peru).

<sup>194</sup> Out of the total of 81 cases that remained open during the preparation of the instant Annual Report, the Joint Press Release concerning Peru is excluded, since grouping together several cases does not allow for determining levels of compliance.

Brazil
Case 12.001, Simone André Diniz (Brazil)	Structural	Recommendation No. 10	The State has requested local governments to create police stations that specialize in crimes of racism and racial discrimination, which have already been set up in Alagoas, the Federal District, Maranhão, Minas Gerais, Pará, Paraíba, Paraná, Piauí, Rio de Janeiro, Rio Grande do Sul, Sergipe, São Paulo and Rondônia. The Commission considers that the State complied with the recommendation by undertaking this measure. However, it stresses that the number of specialized police stations is still insufficient and urges the State to create additional ones to guarantee widespread action.	Full
Case 12.001, Simone André Diniz (Brazil)	Structural	Recommendation No. 11	The State issued official letters to the Attorneys General to verify the existence of specialized institutional bodies to combat racism and indicated that these are in place in 24 of the 30 federal districts. The Commission concludes that the State complied with the recommendation to request the Offices of the Public Prosecutors to create specialized units to tackle racism and racial discrimination. However, it urges the State to continue promoting the creation of such bodies in all states of the country.	Full
Case 10.301, Parque São Lucas (Brazil)	Individual	Recommendation No. 4	The State reported that compensation payments in court cases was terminated.	Full
Case 11.634, Jailton Neri da Fonseca (Brazil)	Structural	Recommendation No. 5	In 2024, the State reported that it has offered three free courses for agents of the Unified Public Security System (SUSP), thus reaching almost 26,000 police officers. In addition, in 2023, the Directorate of Education and Research (DEP) was created to upskill agents by offering continuing training programs in line with the National Public Security Plan. In 2023 and 2024, three new courses were launched under the PRONASCI 2 program —focused on racial inequality—, which were attended by nearly 18,500 persons. The Commission thus concludes that the State has implemented educational measures to prevent racial discrimination in the field of public security and considers that the recommendation has been fully complied with. However, it stresses that police violence continues to be alarming and should be addressed as a priority within the framework of the country’s public security policy, reinforcing human rights training to promote structural change and prevent institutional	Full

Case 12.880, Edmundo Alex Lemun Saavedra and Others (Chile)	Individual	Recommendation No. 3	The State reported that the person responsible for the victim's death was subjected to disciplinary and criminal law measures; also, after being convicted by the ordinary courts, he was discharged from the Carabineros, which impeded further disciplinary proceedings against him. In relation to the Nafin Retamal Law, the request to reduce the perpetrator's sentence was overruled by the Oral Trial Court of Angol; this ruling was confirmed by the Court of Appeals of Temuco on January 3, 2024, and upheld by the Supreme Court on January 18, 2024. The Commission welcomes the information submitted on the final judgments and sanctions issued in this case, noting that disciplinary and criminal law measures against the official responsible for obstructing access to justice have been exhausted. The Commission notes that this regulatory framework constitutes significant progress in the implementation of the clause, thus guaranteeing adequate standards to maintain law and order.	Full
Case 12.880, Edmundo Alex Lemun Saavedra and Others (Chile)	Structural	Clause D of the compliance agreement	The State reported on the online course Use of Force in Judicial Proceedings, targeted at high-ranking judiciary staff, and on two mandatory in-person seminars on international obligations held in January and July 2024 as part of the Judicial Academy Training Program. The Commission notes that the State has implemented a series of training programs for Carabineros officers in the Araucanía region, which address international standards on the use of force. Consequently, the clause has been complied with.	Full

In addition, on August 23, 2024, a resolution was issued providing for an additional economic compensation, which was arranged by the General Treasury and ready to be collected. The Commission notes that the State has complied with the agreed pecuniary reparations.	Full

The Commission notes that the State provided information that evidences the application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons in judicial rulings, which constitutes compliance with Recommendation No. 2.
Grenada

666. The Commission applauds the steps taken by the States of Brazil and Chile in 2024 to achieve full compliance with some measures of reparation, including recommendations issued in published merits reports and clauses of compliance agreements, and welcomes the progress made in the implementation of these decisions. Furthermore, the Commission acknowledges the level of compliance reached in the cases concerning Grenada, but calls on the State to submit relevant information for the follow-up of the open files and pending recommendations in its portfolio. The Commission reiterates that such compliance is crucial to legitimize the inter-American system of human rights and to build trust and promote the principle of good faith as the foundations for the fulfillment of international obligations by the States. Moreover, the Commission takes this opportunity to urge all OAS member states to comply with the recommendations issued in its merits reports published in light of Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights, so that full compliance can be attained and progress can be made towards ceasing the monitoring of such matters.

667. Conversely, seven cases included one recommendation that changed its status to noncompliant:

- Case 11.634, Jailton Neri da Fonseca (Brazil): Regarding Recommendation No. 2 on the duty to investigate the facts, the State reiterates that the investigation and criminal proceedings cannot be reopened. In this regard, the Commission recalls that the non bis in idem principle is not applicable when the proceedings were not carried out independently or impartially and reiterates what was stated by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Almonacid Arrellano et al. v. Chile. The Commission emphasizes that, in cases of serious human rights violations, such as the present case, even if the State argues that punishing those responsible is no longer possible due to its inability to reopen the investigation, international obligations on the matter prevail and remain in force. Thus, based on the reiterated argument that it is impossible to punish all persons who are responsible for the victim's death, the Commission determines that the State has failed to comply with the recommendation.

- Case 11.556, Corumbiara (Brazil): The State has failed to comply with Recommendation No. 1 for the same reasons as in Case 11.634.
- Case 12.019, Antonio Ferreira Braga (Brazil): The State has failed to comply with Recommendation No. 1 for the same reasons as in Case 11.634.
- Case 12.310, Sebastião Camargo Filho (Brazil): The State has failed to comply with Recommendation No. 1 for the same reasons as in Case 11.634.
- Case 11.517, Diniz Bento da Silva (Brazil): The State has failed to comply with Recommendation No. 1 for the same reasons as in Case 11.634.
- Case 12.213, Aristeu Guida da Silva and Family (Brazil): The State has failed to comply with Recommendation No. 1 for the same reasons as in Case 11.634.
- Case 11.740, Víctor Manuel Oropeza (Mexico): Regarding Recommendation No. 1, it is noted that the dismissal of the case is final, making it materially impossible to move forward with an investigation under the terms of the recommendation.

b. Cases with no information submitted in 2024

668. The Commission indicates that it did not receive information from any of the parties to the 17 cases below as of the closing date of the present report, neither in response to the Commission's requests for information to be used as input for the Annual Report nor prior to that request:

- Case 12.324, Rubén Luis Godoy (Argentina)
- Case 13.639, Yoani María Sánchez Cordero (Cuba)
- Case 13.361, Julius Omar Robinson (United States)
- Case 12.832, Gregory Thompson (United States)
- Case 12.505, Marlin Gray (United States)
- Case 10.573, José Isabel Salas Galindo and Others (United States)
- Case 11.140, Mary and Carrie Dann (United States)
- Case 12.833, Félix Rocha Díaz (United States)
- Case 12.864, Ivan Teleguz (United States)
- Case 12.831, Kevin Cooper (United States)
- Case 12.871, Virgilio Maldonado Rodríguez (United States)
- Case 12.865, Djamel Ameziane (United States)
- Case 12.719, Orlando Cordia Hall (United States)
- Case 13.478, José Trinidad Loza Ventura (United States)
- Case 13.339, Manuel Valle (United States)
- Case 13.352, Jurijus Kadamovas et al. (United States)
- Case 11.430, José Francisco Gallardo Rodríguez (Mexico)

669. The Commission urges the parties to submit updated information on the actions undertaken by the States to comply with the recommendations issued by the Commission in these cases.

c. New processes for follow-up of published merits reports

670. The Commission announces that the case below has entered the follow-up stage for the first time and is included in the 2024 Annual Report (Article 48 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure):

- Case 13.083, Report No. 8/24, Akawaio Indigenous Community of Isseneru and its Members (Guyana)

671. Although Report No. 1/24 (Case 12.549, Nasry Javier Ictech Guifarro, concerning Honduras) was released in 2024, it is not included in the follow-up portfolio, inasmuch as the report declared full compliance with the relevant recommendations.

672. The Commission thanks the parties for the information provided within the framework of the follow-up of recommendations up to the release of the instant report in 2024 and points out that it will continue to improve its follow-up processes to strengthen compliance with the recommendations issued in its published merits reports.

F. Precautionary Measures

1. Introduction

673. Precautionary measures in the Inter-American System of Human Rights are a protection mechanism of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR), through which it requests a State to protect one or more persons who are in a serious and urgent situation of suffering irreparable harm. Any person or organization may file a request for precautionary measures on behalf of a person or group of persons, identified or identifiable, who are at risk.

674. The precautionary measures mechanism has more than four decades of history in the inter-American system and has served as an effective tool to protect the fundamental rights of the inhabitants of the States under the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Commission. The power of the IACHR to request the adoption of precautionary measures shows a common practice in international human rights law. In the context of the region, it has operated as an effective instrument of protection and prevention in the face of possible serious and irreparable harm to persons or groups of persons facing situations that present an imminent risk.

675. The precautionary measures mechanism is part of the Commission's function of overseeing compliance with the human rights obligations set forth in Article 106 of the Charter of the Organization of American States. These general oversight functions are provided for in Article 41(b) of the American Convention on Human Rights, as well as in Article 18(b) of the Statute of the IACHR. The mechanism of precautionary measures is set forth in Article 25 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure. In accordance with that Article, the Commission grants precautionary measures in serious and urgent situations in which these measures are necessary to avoid irreparable harm to persons. In the process of reaching a decision, and in accordance with Article 25(2) of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission considers that:

- a. "serious situation" refers to a grave impact that an action or omission can have on a protected right or on the eventual effect of a pending decision in a case or petition before the organs of the inter-American system;
- b. "urgent situation" refers to risk or threat that is imminent and can materialize, thus requiring immediate preventive or protective action; and
- c. "irreparable harm" refers to injury to rights which, due to their nature, would not be susceptible to reparation, restoration or adequate compensation.

676. The nature and purpose of the precautionary measures granted by the Inter-American Commission are different from those available in domestic jurisdictions. Precautionary measures fulfill two functions related to the protection of fundamental rights enshrined in the norms of the inter-American system. The Inter-American Commission and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights ("the Inter-American Court" or "I/A Court H.R.") have established repeatedly that precautionary and provisional measures have a dual nature, both protective and precautionary.<sup>195</sup> Regarding the precautionary character, the measures may be intended to prevent the execution of judicial, administrative or other measures, when it is alleged that their execution could render ineffective an eventual decision of the IACHR on an individual petition. The purpose of these measures is to preserve the rights potentially at risk until the petition before the inter-American system is resolved. In this way, they seek to ensure the integrity and effectiveness of the decision on the merits and, in this way, avoid harming the alleged rights, a situation that could render the final decision innocuous or detract from its useful effect (effet utile). An example of this can be seen in those situations in which the IACHR has urged the State to suspend the application of the death penalty, in order to allow the Commission to analyze later in the petition or case the alleged violations alleged by the petitioners in relation to the applicable instruments.

677. With regard to the protective nature, the measures seek to avoid irreparable harm and thus preserve the exercise of human rights. These considerations have led to the issuance of precautionary measures in a wide range of situations, particularly in order to avoid irreparable harm to the life and personal integrity of the beneficiary(ies). To this end, the IACHR must assess the problem posed, the effectiveness of the State's actions in the situation described, and the degree of vulnerability of the persons for whom the measures are requested if they are not adopted.<sup>196</sup> For example, issues related to disappearances, access to medical treatment, situations of threats, harassment, and persecution, including in connection with the work or affiliation of the beneficiary, among numerous other cases.

678. The Rules of Procedure of the IACHR indicate that the granting of such measures and their adoption by the State shall not constitute a prejudgment on the violation of the rights protected in the American Convention on Human Rights and/or other applicable instruments. Likewise, the IACHR emphasizes that, in accordance with Article 25(6) of its Rules of Procedure, the analysis of a request for precautionary measures is carried out taking into account the context, the particularities of each specific situation, and the nature of the risk and the harm sought to be avoided.

679. Precautionary measures have been invoked to protect thousands of persons or groups of persons at risk. In 2024 these groups included indigenous peoples, journalists, justice operators, persons deprived of their liberty, missing persons, human rights and environmental defenders, Afro-descendants, political opponents, persons deprived of their liberty, persons sentenced to death, as well as children and adolescents and women at particular risk.

2. Requests for precautionary measures

680. In 2024, the IACHR continued implementing Resolution 3/2018 “Strengthening of the processing of requests for precautionary measures”, which allowed strengthening the methodology for the initial study of the requests received. Thus, requests for precautionary measures continue to be diagnosed<sup>197</sup> up to date and classified according to the information available on their respective urgency. This allows the IACHR to prioritize the requests in which greater elements of urgency are identified, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, favoring more expeditious decision-making with respect to matters that present indications of imminent risk.

<sup>195</sup> I/A Court H.R., Matter of the Yare I and Yare II Capital Region Penitentiary Center, Provisional Measures regarding the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Order of March 30, 2006, considerandum 5; Case of Carpio Nicolle et al. v. Guatemala, Provisional Measures, Order of July 6, 2009, considerandum 16.

<sup>196</sup> See in this regard: I/A Court H.R., Matter of Milagro Sala, Provisional Measures regarding Argentina, Order of November 23, 2017, considerandum 5 (Available only in Spanish); Matter of Capital El Rodeo I and El Rodeo II Judicial Confinement Center, Provisional Measures regarding Venezuela, Order of February 8, 2008, considerandum 9; Matter of the Criminal Institute of Plácido de Sá Carvalho, Provisional Measures regarding Brazil, Order of February 13, 2017, considerandum 6.

<sup>197</sup> The initial diagnosis evaluates what the matter is about and assesses its degree of urgency, allowing the Commission to prioritize situations posing greater risk. This diagnosis is different from the legal evaluation of the matter, which refers to the technical analysis of whether a request meets the procedural requirements for the granting of a precautionary measure.

681. During the year 2024, the Commission received 1,412<sup>198</sup> new requests for precautionary measures, managing to evaluate 94.83% of them per year. This number represents an increase of 279 more requests than those received in the previous year. The increase was generated by the requests received regarding missing persons in Venezuela since the intensification of persecution against human rights defenders and political opponents in the post-electoral context; the continuity of the human rights crisis in Nicaragua and Cuba; and different electoral contexts, which tend to impact the number of requests for precautionary measures. This is also explained by the weaknesses of national protection mechanisms to respond to urgent situations presenting a high risk of irreparable harm in different countries.

682. At the same time, in 2024, the IACHR continued to advance in the review of the requests for precautionary measures pending a final decision based on chronological criteria. In this sense, the processing was concluded, taking a final decision, of all the precautionary measures registered for 2021, as well as 98,74% of the requests registered in 2022.

683. In this same sense, by means of the referred Resolution 3/2018, there was more agility in the processing of matters that, historically and consistently, the Commission has considered that they are not susceptible to be analyzed through the mechanism of precautionary measures, since they would imply an analysis of the merits of the matter, which is better suited to the petition and case system.<sup>199</sup> In addition, Resolution 3/2018 established criteria that allow the deactivation of requests for precautionary measures in which no response was received from the applicants during the established deadlines.<sup>200</sup>

684. In 2024, the IACHR granted and/or extended 77 precautionary measures through 73 resolutions, for the protection of more than 7,430 individuals and identifiable groups or collectives. Of the requests for precautionary measures under analysis this year, the IACHR granted or extended an average of 5,45%.<sup>201</sup>

685. The increase in the number of requests for precautionary measures this year also implied an additional effort to ensure the success in the timeliness of responses to high-risk requests, such as those related to the protection of persons whose whereabouts or fate is unknown.<sup>202</sup> In this sense, the Commission was able to grant 76,62% of precautionary measures in less than 90 days after their registration, guaranteeing timely attention to imminent situations. In previous years, the figures were: in 2020, 63.8% of the measures granted were processed in less than 3 months; in 2021, 34.9%; in 2022, 48%; and 67.3% in 2023. In specific matters, where the imminence of the risk does not admit delay, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in even shorter periods, for example, some precautionary measures from Venezuela were deliberated in up to seven days from their registration. One matter of alleged forced disappearance was processed, evaluated, deliberated and notified in less than 48 hours (862-24 María Andreina Oropeza Camacho regarding Venezuela).

686. Finally, it should be noted that in 2024, the IACHR deliberated on precautionary measures in 1076 consultations.

<sup>198</sup> Figure only surpassed in the year of 2018, in the context of the human rights crisis in Nicaragua, in which the Commission recorded 1,618 requests received.

<sup>199</sup> In this regard, the Commission recalls that, in accordance with its consolidated practice, the precautionary measures mechanism is not suitable to address requests that deal strictly with matters or claims such as: i) alleged failures to due process and judicial protection in the framework of criminal or civil proceedings (Articles 8 and 25 of the ACHR and Article XVIII of the American Declaration); ii) determining the compatibility, in abstract terms, of a regulation with the American Convention or other applicable instruments; iii) payment of pecuniary compensations, which includes civil, commercial and pension proceedings; iv) allegedly unjustified dismissals of private or public companies of non-popularly elected officials, payment of salaries, determinations on promotions and vacations; v) commercial or civil attachment of property and evictions where no situations presenting a risk to life or personal integrity are alleged; vi) requests for economic resources or support; and vii) purely administrative procedures, including the issuance of certifications, expedited proceedings and declaratory rulings. For more information, see Resolution 3/2018 on "Strengthening the processing of precautionary measures".

<sup>202</sup> In 2024, 33.3% of granted/extended requests seek protection for persons whose whereabouts or fate is unknown.

3. Follow-up of precautionary measures in force

687. In light of Resolution 2/2020 - “Strengthening the follow-up of precautionary measures in force”, in 2024, the Commission continued its commitment to the States, beneficiaries and their representatives to strengthen the follow-up of precautionary measures in force, as well as to promote transparency, predictability and legal certainty of the decisions. Resolution 2/2020 foresees the possibility for the IACHR to issue Follow-up Resolutions that merit a pronouncement to promote compliance with the protection measures; as well as to hold working meetings outside the Sessions; and to conduct on-site visits to get closer to the beneficiary(ies) and their representatives and State authorities, and to learn directly about the status of the implementation of the measures and assess the current risk.

688. In light of the foregoing, and in order to continue improving the monitoring of the measures in force, the Commission adopted a working methodology that allows for a periodic evaluation of the precautionary measures in force, both on the adequacy and effectiveness of the protection measures adopted by the States, as well as on the persistence of the procedural requirements. In this way, it is hoped that the Commission can continue to focus on those matters that, due to the existence of the risk in the terms of Article 25, require its due attention.<sup>203</sup> In this sense, the IACHR continued to adopt, at the same time, the Lifting Resolutions in those cases in which it is no longer able to consider that the procedural requirements have been met.<sup>204</sup> It should be recalled that the IACHR has assigned, since 2020, specialized personnel on a full-time basis to follow up on the measures in force, making up the Special Protection Oversight Group.

689. In April 2024, the Commission reported on the four years of Resolution 2/20, publishing a balance of the results achieved and renewing its commitment to the beneficiaries of precautionary measures and the States with a view to seeking the mitigation and elimination of the risk factors identified.<sup>205</sup> The Commission emphasized that the follow-up carried out allows the IACHR to maintain closer contact with the parties in order to achieve the implementation of effective protection measures. Over four years, there was an increase of 134.12% of requests for information in precautionary measures in force from 2019 to 2023, and 86% of measures in force monitored per year. In the same period, there was a 37.7% increase in working meetings and the holding of 10 public hearings to follow up on precautionary measures out of a total of 141 precautionary measures. Similarly, up to 2023, the IACHR added 16 follow-up resolutions approved with respect to 10 countries, as well as six on-site visits to follow up on precautionary measures.

690. As of 2024, the Commission carried out at least one monitoring action on 100% of the precautionary measures in force.<sup>206</sup> This achievement shows a change in the supervision model for the measures in force, initiated in 2020, which allows for more periodic follow-up of the precautionary measures, as well as the updating of information to the IACHR in a timelier manner regarding the ongoing risk. Along the same lines, the IACHR also managed to ensure that the reports of the parties are transferred at least once a year for 100% of the precautionary measures in force.

691. In 2024, the IACHR was able to implement its strategy of conducting on-site visits to follow up on precautionary measures in force on five occasions:

- From February 12 to 13, 2024, the IACHR conducted a follow-up visit to PM 551-03 José Rubén Zamora Marroquín and family regarding Guatemala. Mr. Zamora Marroquín is the Subsequently, the delegation met with the State entities involved in the execution of the precautionary measures. The IACHR urged the institutions present to promote coordination spaces to continue the implementation of the precautionary measures in a frank, transparent and constructive dialogue.<sup>207</sup>

- From June 5 to 7, 2024, the IACHR conducted a working visit to Brazil. Focused on the follow-up to PM-449-22 on behalf of Bruno Araújo, Dom Phillips and members of the Union of Indigenous Peoples of Vale do Javari (UNIVAJA), the visit was aimed at the participation of the IACHR in the event “Act in memory of Bruno Pereira and Dom Phillips” as part of the two-year anniversary of their deaths. During the visit, the IACHR encouraged the State to give continuity to the investigations of the case, as well as to guarantee the effective protection of the 11 members of UNIVAJA, current beneficiaries of the precautionary measure. The Commission reiterated its commitment to continue monitoring the precautionary measure and participated in a meeting of the Joint Working Group of PM 449-22, in follow-up to the Plan of Action approved by the IACHR. In this meeting, it reinforced the need for transparency and the need to guarantee broad participation of all parties in the development of the activities of the Working Group.<sup>208</sup>
- From October 21 to 22, 2024, the IACHR conducted a working visit to the United States regarding PM 265-20 (persons deprived of liberty at the Northwest ICE Processing Center -NWIPC). In order to follow up on the precautionary measures, the delegation met with organizations representing the beneficiaries, as well as held meetings with civil society organizations, local authorities in Washington State, the Washington State Attorney General’s Office, staff from the offices of various federal and state senators, individuals who were detained at the NWIPC in the past, and family members of individuals detained today. The IACHR visited the center, toured its facilities and spoke with the authorities responsible for the NWIPC, as well as interviewed several beneficiaries.<sup>209</sup>
- On October 28, 2024, the IACHR conducted a follow-up visit to PM 1581-18 on behalf of Jorge David Glas Espinel regarding Ecuador. The Commission visited the beneficiary in his detention center and toured the prison facilities. It also held an inter-institutional meeting with the State entities responsible for the implementation of the precautionary measures.
- From October 30 to November 1, 2024, the IACHR conducted a working visit to Honduras. In Tegucigalpa, the Commission met with authorities executing precautionary measures, such as the Office of the Inspector General (Procuraduría General de la República); the Secretariat of State in the Offices of Human Rights and Security; the National System for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, Journalists, Social Communicators and Justice Operators; and the Office of the Attorney General of the Nation. Between October 31 and November 1, the Commission traveled to Tocoa, in the Bajo Aguán region. There it met with the beneficiaries of PM 50-14, in favor of leaders of peasant movements in Bajo Aguán, and PM 137-23, in favor of members of the Municipal Committee for the Defense of Common and Public Goods of Tocoa and the Justice for the Peoples Law Firm, as well as their representatives. The IACHR encouraged the strengthening of state institutions in Bajo Aguán.<sup>210</sup>

692. Likewise, the IACHR highlights additional follow-up actions in 2024 to provide greater rapprochement between the parties. A total of 2,776 letters were sent to States and representatives, requesting specific information to monitor the implementation of such measures. The IACHR also held bilateral meetings, working meetings and public hearings. In 2024, a high number of bilateral meetings were held with some of the parties, 106 meetings were held with respect to 141 precautionary measures. In 2023, there were 107 bilateral meetings on 111 precautionary measures and, in 2022, 75 bilateral meetings on 80 precautionary measures. In addition, in 2024, 47 working meetings were held on 42 precautionary measures, as well as four public hearings<sup>211</sup> on 60 precautionary measures. Likewise, in 2024, the practice of holding working meetings outside of the sessions continued, with 19 meetings having been held. In addition, the IACHR held 14 portfolio meetings with the States of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, and the Dominican Republic.

694. In 2024, the IACHR followed up on the Joint Working Group on the implementation of the precautionary measures in favor of Bruno Araújo, Dom Phillips and members of UNIVAJA in Brazil, created in 2023. The Joint Working Group is carried out in the framework of the follow-up process of Precautionary Measure 449-22 and aims to contribute to the full compliance with the precautionary measure, ensuring a space for articulation and complementarity between the national levels and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. The Working Group includes a Plan of Action prepared by the parties and approved by the IACHR through Follow-up Resolution 76/23.<sup>212</sup> The Working Group is scheduled to last for two years. During 2024, the IACHR accompanied three meetings of the Working Group, including a face-to-face meeting during the on-site visit to follow up on these precautionary measures held between June 5 and 7, 2024, in which the IACHR also participated in the event “Act in memory of Bruno Pereira and Dom Phillips” in the framework of the two-year anniversary of their deaths.

695. At the same time, in the context of the Joint Working Group of PM 449-22, the Commission held a Public Hearing at its 191st POS. The IACHR recognized the advances in the protection of the beneficiaries and in the investigation of the murders of Bruno Araújo and Dom Phillips, encouraging the parties to expand dialogue and transparency. It recalled the rights of indigenous peoples to the effective enjoyment of their territory and the duties of the State to protect them. It maintains its availability for technical cooperation, as foreseen in the Action Plan of the Working Group, and informed that it will continue to follow up on the precautionary measures.<sup>213</sup>

696. It should be noted that the granting of precautionary measures is of a temporary nature. For this reason, and under Article 25(9) of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR periodically evaluates, ex officio or at the request of a party, the precautionary measures in force in order to maintain, modify or lift them. In this regard, in 2024, the Commission issued 38 resolutions in relation to 39 precautionary measures in force (see details of each Resolution below).

697. Follow-up Resolutions are a practice that the IACHR decided to consolidate through Resolution 2/2020. They present an opportunity for the Commission to evaluate the implementation and mitigation measures adopted by the State and to delve into the particular aspects of each case, taking into account the criteria established in the aforementioned Resolution 2/2020. In 2024, the Commission established a historic number of follow-up resolutions, reaching the issuance of 10 resolutions regarding 11 precautionary measures, which are detailed below:

- Resolution No. 20/24 - PM 887-19 - Families of the Nueva Austria del Sira Community, Peru:

The Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State in favor of the beneficiaries and considered that a situation of risk persists, as well as making assessments regarding the scope of the measures. Consequently, in accordance with Article 25 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, the Commission decided as follows:

- a) to continue to monitor the precautionary measures granted in favor of the families of the Nueva Austria del Sira Community in the terms of Resolution 57/2019;
- b) to request the State to reinforce the protection measures adopted and send the requested information, in the terms of this resolution;
- c) to request the representation to provide updated information on the risk situation of the families of the Nueva Austria del Sira Community in the terms of this resolution;
- d) to require that both parties continue carrying out the relevant concerted actions, in order to reach agreements aimed at mitigating the identified risk factors and the protection of the families of the Nueva Austria del Sira Community;

- e) to continue to promote the appropriate follow-up measures in terms of Article 25.10 and other provisions of its Rules of Procedure.
- Resolution No. 26/24 - PM 438-15 - Members of the Venezuelan Program of Education-Action on Human Rights (PROVEA), Venezuela.

On April 29, 2024, the IACHR decided to follow up and extend precautionary measures in favor of members of the Venezuelan Program of Education-Action on Human Rights (PROVEA) in Venezuela. According to the request, the members of PROVEA are at risk in the context of their work as human rights defenders in the current situation in Venezuela, considering the visibility of the institution and its coordinators, the frequent stigmatizing remarks made by high-ranking state authorities in the media, and the surveillance and monitoring by state agents. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to request that Venezuela:

- a) adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the life and personal integrity of the persons identified as members of the PROVEA team;
  - b) adopt the necessary measures so that the beneficiaries can carry out their activities as human rights defenders without being subjected to acts of violence, threats, and harassment;
  - c) consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
  - d) report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to these precautionary measures, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.
- Resolution No. 27/24 - PM 484-11 - José Daniel Ferrer García, Cuba

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights adopted, on May 6, 2024, the Follow-up Resolution 27/2024, in relation to the situation of José Daniel Ferrer García, who is being held in inadequate conditions of deprivation of liberty in Cuba. The IACHR expressed particular concern about the State's unwillingness to engage in dialogue, noting that, on the contrary, all the information available, both in the instant matter and through the monitoring of the situation in the country, allows this Commission to affirm that State agents are taking actions that intensify the situation that places the beneficiary at risk, instead of mitigating it. Consequently, the Commission decided as follows:

- a) continue to follow up on the precautionary measures granted on November 5, 2012, in order to protect Mr. José Daniel Ferrer García's life and personal integrity;
- b) require that the State implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions comply with applicable international standards;
- c) request that the State adopt measures to protect the beneficiary's health in a timely and adequate manner;
- d) require the parties to consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented. The foregoing must include allowing the representation to access information regarding the detention conditions and welfare of the beneficiary, either via family members or other representatives; and
- e) request that the State report on the actions taken in order to investigate the events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

- Resolution No. 49/24 - PM 533-17 - Williams Dávila, Venezuela

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted on August 14, 2024, the Follow-up and Modification Resolution 49/2024 in relation to the situation of Williams Dávila in Venezuela. The IACHR expressed particular concern about the ongoing risk faced by the beneficiary since the granting of the PM, without the State having adopted protection measures in his favor, and that the risk has increased after his whereabouts have been unknown since August 8, 2024, following his alleged arbitrary detention by State agents in the Plaza de Los Palos Grandes, in Caracas, Venezuela. The IACHR took note of public information that a criminal complaint for “forced disappearance” was filed with the Public Prosecutor’s Office, highlighting the health situation of the beneficiary and recalling his status as an elderly person. After analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in light of the context of repression in the post-electoral protests in Venezuela, the Commission believes that the current situation of Williams Dávila is part of a cycle of events against him that seek to remove him from public debate. Therefore, pursuant to Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requests that the State of Venezuela:

- a) adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the life and personal integrity of Mr. Williams Dávila;
- b) take the necessary measures to guarantee that Mr. Williams Dávila can carry out his activities as a member of the National Assembly without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence in the exercise of his functions;
- c) report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and his circumstances, or the measures to determine his whereabouts or fate;
- d) consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- e) report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

- Resolution No. 51/24 - PM 359-16 - Americo de Grazia, Venezuela

On August 17, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights adopted Follow-up and Modification Resolution 51/2024 regarding the situation of Américo de Grazia in Venezuela. The IACHR expressed particular concern about the continued risk faced by the beneficiary since the granting of the PM, without the State having adopted protection measures in his favor, and that the risk has increased after his official whereabouts have been unknown since August 8, 2024, following his alleged arbitrary detention by State agents in Caracas, Venezuela. The IACHR took note of complaints filed before different bodies regarding these facts. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in light of the context of repression in the post-election protests in Venezuela, the Commission believes that the current situation of Américo de Grazia is part of a cycle of events against him that seek to remove him from public debate. Therefore, under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requests that the State of Venezuela:

- a) Adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary;
- b) Implement the necessary measures to ensure that the proposed beneficiary can carry out his activities as opposition leader in Venezuela, without being subject to threats, harassment, or acts of violence;

- c) Report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and his current circumstances, or provide information on the measures to determine his whereabouts or fate;
  - d) Consult and agree upon on the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
  - e) Report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.
- Resolution No. 53/24 - PM 395-18 - Authorities and members of the Gonzaya (Buenavista) and Po Piyuya (Santa Cruz de Piñuña Blanco) reservations of the Siona People (ZioBain), Colombia.

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted on August 21, 2024, the Follow-up and Extension Resolution 53/2024 regarding the situation of the authorities and members of the Gonzaya and Po Piyuya reservations of the Siona Indigenous People in Colombia (PM-395-18). In the Resolution, the IACHR analyzed the information provided by the parties, positively evaluating the actions implemented by the State and considered that a risk identified in 2018 persists with respect to the reservations of the Siona Indigenous People. The Commission understands that the reported events are part of the actions of the illegal armed groups to consolidate their presence in the reservations and impose themselves on the indigenous authorities. The Commission also analyzed the situation of the human rights defender L.M.E.V., who has been the object of death threats from armed groups operating in the territory of the Indigenous Reservations. The Commission considered that the beneficiary is in a situation posing a serious risk to her rights to life and personal integrity. After analyzing the submissions of fact and law, the Commission considers that the risk has not ceased and, therefore, in accordance with the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission:

- a) Requires the State to strengthen the implementation of necessary measures to effectively protect the life and personal integrity of the groups of beneficiaries identified in Resolution 53/2018, taking into account the assessments made in this Resolution;
  - b) Requests the State to extend the precautionary measures in favor of L.M.E.V. In this regard: (i) adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary; (ii) implement the necessary protection measures so that the beneficiary can continue to carry out her human rights defense work, without being subject to threats, intimidation, harassment, and acts of violence; and (iii) report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of measures in favor of L.M.E.V., so as to prevent such events from reoccurring;
  - c) Exhorts the parties to submit specific, detailed, and updated information on the situation of the beneficiaries with the aim of continuing to analyze their situation pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure. At the time of providing this information, the Commission requests that they specify the situation of the beneficiaries or groups of beneficiaries, so that the Commission can adequately identify how these precautionary measures are being implemented with respect to each of the three groups. This includes, among other actions, reporting on individual and collective protection measures in place, concerted actions and agreements reached; and
  - d) Urges the parties to continue with the consultation and coordination spaces at the domestic level within the framework of the implementation of these precautionary measures.
- Resolution No. 84/24 - PM 967-19 - Delsa Jennifer Solórzano Bernal, her work team, and P.L.I.S., Venezuela

On November 12, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted Follow-up, Modification, and Extension Resolution 84/2024 in relation to the situation of Delsa Jennifer Solórzano Bernal in Venezuela (PM-967-19). The IACHR considered that the risk that has been observed since the granting of the PM against the beneficiary continues and has been increased in the pre-electoral and post-electoral period of the 2024 presidential election, without the State having adopted protection measures in her favor. Likewise, it considered that certain identified persons of her team and P.L.I.S. share the risk, for which reason the measures in her favor were extended. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission concluded that the situation of Ms. Delsa Jennifer Solórzano Bernal continues to exist and decided to extend the precautionary measures in favor of Jonathan Gerardi, Eliannys Vidoza, Axel Espinoza, Daniel Murolo, María Isabel Gudiño, Valentina Rodríguez, and P.L.I.S. Therefore, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a) adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Delsa Jennifer Solórzano Bernal, the members of her work team, and P.L.I.S., duly identified in this resolution;
  - b) implement the necessary measures, with a gender perspective, to guarantee that the beneficiaries can carry out their political activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence;
  - c) consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
  - d) report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.
- Resolution No. 87/24 - PM 409-23 - Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero and family, Venezuela

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights adopted on November 25, 2024, the Follow-up, Modification and Extension Resolution 87/2024 regarding the situation of Franklin Caldera Cordero in Venezuela. The IACHR considered that the risk that places the beneficiary at risk has been observed since the granting of the precautionary measure, continues, and has been extended to his son, Franklin Caldera Martínez, as well as to his wife, Yuraima Martínez. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission concluded that the situation of Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero remains and it is extended to his son, Franklin Caldera Martínez, as well as to his wife, Yuraima Martínez. Consequently, the IACHR decided:

- a) To continue to follow up on the situation of Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero;
- b) To extend the precautionary measures in favor of Franklin Caldera Martínez (son) and Yuraima Martínez;
- c) To modify the scope of these precautionary measures, and require that the State of Venezuela:
  - i. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero, Franklin Caldera Martínez and Yuraima Martínez. In the case of Franklin Caldera Martínez, the measures must include those necessary to also protect his right to health;
  - ii. adopt the necessary measures to guarantee that Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero can continue to carry out his work as a human rights defender without being subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment or acts of violence in the exercise of his duties. In particular, it must formally inform the beneficiary of the existence of any investigation process against him, including at least: the facts under investigation, the crimes he is accused of, the prosecutor's office in charge of the investigation, and the competent judicial authority in charge of the investigation. The State must allow the beneficiary and/or his representatives to have access to the entire criminal file against him, if it exists, allowing him to file the corresponding appeals and guaranteeing his security in its processing;

- iii. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the conditions of detention of Franklin Caldera Martínez (son) are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, among them: guarantee that he is not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, aggression and torture inside the prison; guarantee access to adequate and specialized medical care, as well as to the necessary treatment and medication, and immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment of his health situation; and evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to the deprivation of liberty given the impossibility of protecting his rights in light of the current conditions of detention;
- iv. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representation; and
- v. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption and validity of these precautionary measures, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring. In particular, the State is requested to conduct an investigation with due diligence into the threats, allegations of torture and other acts of violence reported, including those that could have taken place by State officials and/or agents against the beneficiaries.

- Resolution No. 89/24 - PM 125-19 - María Corina Machado, Venezuela

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights adopted on November 25, 2024, the Follow-up and Modification Resolution 89/2024 in relation to the situation of María Corina Machado Parisca in Venezuela. The IACHR considered that the risk that has been observed since the granting of the PM against the beneficiary continues, and has increased in the post-electoral period of the 2024 presidential election, without the State having adopted protection measures in her favor. After analyzing the allegations of fact and law, in the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission concluded that the situation of Ms. María Corina Machado Parisca persists, and decided as follows:

- a) Continue to monitor the situation of María Corina Machado Parisca in Venezuela;
- b) Not to extend the precautionary measures in relation to the requested persons;
- c) Modify the scope of these precautionary measures and to require that the State:
  - i. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Ms. María Corina Machado Parisca;
  - ii. implement the necessary measures to guarantee that the beneficiary can continue to carry out her political participation activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence in the exercise thereof; In particular, to formally inform the beneficiary about the existence of any investigation against her, including at least: the facts under investigation, the alleged offenses, the prosecutor's office in charge of the investigation, and the competent judicial authority overseeing the case.

The State must allow the beneficiary and/or her representation to have access to the entire criminal file against her, if it exists, thereby allowing her to submit the corresponding appeals and guaranteeing her security in the processing of the file;

- iii. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representation; and
  - iv. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of these precautionary measures, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring. In particular, the State is requested to conduct an investigation with due diligence into the threats and acts of violence reported, including those that could have been against the beneficiary at the hands of State officials and/or agents.
- Resolution No. 92/24 - PM 143-13, 181-19 - Identified members of the “Foro Penal” organization, Venezuela

On November 28, 2024, the IACHR identified that the risk persists with respect to four persons who were beneficiaries of precautionary measures through Resolution 8/2015, Resolution 7/2019, and Resolution 64/2019. It also decided to protect 10 additional persons who are members of the same organization. The IACHR regretted the lack of information and implementation of protection measures by the State, which reportedly places the beneficiaries in a situation of lack of protection in the context of the country. Upon analyzing the available information, the Commission decided:

- a) Extend the precautionary measures in favor of the following persons, currently members of the Foro Penal organization in Venezuela: Kennedy Tejeda, Mayela Fonseca, Lucía Quintero, Pedro Arévalo, Arelys Ayala, Wicza Santos Matiz, Laura Valbuena, Raquel Sánchez Carrero, Franyer Jose Hernandez Valladares, and Marbella Gutiérrez;
- b) Maintain the precautionary measures in favor of Alfredo Romero, Gonzalo Himiob Santomé, Luis Betancourt, and Olnar Ortiz;
- c) Continue to monitor the situation of Olnar Ortiz under the registry of Precautionary Measures 143-13;
- d) Lift the precautionary measures regarding Yoseth Colmenares and Robiro Terán;
- e) Not to extend the measures in favor of Orlando Moreno and the other members of Foro Penal, while keeping the possibility open to submit additional information for future assessment.
- f) Modify the precautionary measures and require that the State of Venezuela:
  - i. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the members of Foro Penal duly identified in this resolution;
  - ii. implement the necessary measures to guarantee that the beneficiaries can carry out their human rights defense activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence. Specifically, the Commission requests a detailed report on the circumstances surrounding Kennedy Tejeda’s detention, including his current legal status and ensure that his relatives and trusted legal representatives can communicate with him. Regarding all beneficiaries, to formally inform about the existence of any investigation against them, including at least: the facts under investigation, the alleged offenses, the prosecutor’s office in charge of the investigation, and the competent judicial authority overseeing the case. The State must allow the beneficiaries and/or their representation to have access to the entire criminal file against them, if it exists, thereby allowing them to file the corresponding appeals and guaranteeing their security in the processing of the file;

- iii. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives;
- iv. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

698. In the periodic evaluation of its precautionary measures, the IACHR analyzes whether they continue to meet the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, and may decide to lift them when there is no longer a serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm. In the process of supervising the implementation of the measures, the IACHR also takes into account contextual information and a differentiated approach in the case of groups in especially vulnerable situations and a gender, intercultural and age perspective, taking into account the risk that persons belonging to these groups may face in specific contexts.

699. In 2024, the IACHR decided to completely lift 28 precautionary measures in force and partially lift one. The lifting of precautionary measures refers to inactive cases, with loss of purpose or, in general, those in which no risk factors were verified to support their validity. As indicated in Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, lifting decisions are issued by means of substantiated resolutions (see summaries below). The following aspects, among others, are taken into account: i) the existence or continuity of the situation presenting a risk; ii) whether it has changed throughout the implementation; iii) the effectiveness of the measures adopted by the State; iv) the mitigation of the risk; v) whether the beneficiaries continue to reside or have a presence in the State in question; vi) the inactivity or lack of response by the representatives to the requests for information made by the IACHR, so that it does not have information that justifies the validity of the precautionary measures. The above, within the framework of the strategy of keeping the portfolio more focused on those matters that, due to their current level of risk, require special attention from the IACHR.

4. Resolutions adopted

700. Next, reference is made to the 106 resolutions on precautionary measures, adopted during 2024, concerning: 70 precautionary measures granted; two extended precautionary measures; two extended precautionary measures with follow-up resolution; two extended precautionary measures with follow-up resolution and modification; one extended precautionary measure with follow-up resolution, modification and partial lifting; three modified precautionary measures with follow-up resolution; three precautionary measures with follow-up resolution and 28 measures fully lifted.

ARGENTINA

Resolution No. 3/24 (GRANT) PM 999-23 - Juan Carlos Hollman, Argentina

On January 12, 2024, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of Juan Carlos Hollman, who suffers from colon cancer and does not receive timely and adequate medical attention while in detention in Argentina. According to the applicant, Mr. Hollman has not been receiving cancer treatment for more than 23 months and has a prescription for a pending surgery. Although there are judicial decisions determining the provision of the prescribed medical care, he indicated that there are delays in the granting of medical appointments and appointments for examinations, as well as missed appointments due to lack of transportation. Considering the position of special guarantor of the State in relation to the persons under its custody and that the passage of time without receiving prescribed medical treatment may lead to a worsening of their health situation, and eventually, the death of the patient, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure. Therefore, it requested that Argentina:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Mr. Juan Carlos Hollman. In particular, provide the prescribed medical treatment in a timely and appropriate manner;
- b. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representative; and
- c. report on the actions taken in order to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

BRAZIL

Resolution No. 28/24 (GRANT)

PM 50-24 - Members of the Tapeba Indigenous People of Caucaia, Brazil

On May 9, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Members of the Tapeba Indigenous People of Caucaia regarding Brazil. According to the request, the beneficiaries are suffering episodes of violence and threats by organized crime and the police, as well as expulsions from their villages in the context of completion of the demarcation of their lands and protection of their territory. Therefore, in terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to require that Brazil:

- a. adopt the necessary and culturally appropriate measures to protect the life and personal integrity of the members of the Tapeba Indigenous People of Caucaia, including against acts perpetrated by third parties. These measures must allow the leaders of the Tapeba Indigenous People to continue carrying out their work in defense of human rights, as well as guarantee that the beneficiaries can return to their villages without being subjected to threats, persecution, or acts of violence;
- b. coordinate the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the events that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 38/24 (EXTENSION)

PM 61-23 - Members of the Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe Indigenous Peoples, Brazil

On June 3, 2024, the IACHR extended precautionary measures in favor of members of the Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe Indigenous People regarding Brazil. According to the request, the beneficiaries inhabit the Caramuru-Paraguaçu Indigenous Land in the south of the state of Bahia and are suffering episodes of violence and threats due to disputes over the definition of their territory, as well as the presence of organized crime groups in them. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to demand that Brazil:

- a. adopt the necessary and culturally appropriate measures to protect the life and personal integrity of the members of the Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe Indigenous People, including from acts perpetrated by third parties. These measures should allow the leaders of the Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe Indigenous People to continue carrying out their work in defense of human rights, as well as guarantee that the beneficiaries can return to their villages without being subjected to threats, intimidation or acts of violence;
- b. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 83/24 (GRANT)*PM 934-24 - Layrton Fernandes da Cruz's family, Brazil

On November 12, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Layrton Fernandes da Cruz's family members, considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Brazil. According to the request, the beneficiaries have received constant police raids on their residences, which have intensified after the death of Layrton, a relative of the proposed beneficiaries, which occurred on August 1, 2023, in a police operation carried out in Baixada Santista. The raids include the presence of state security agents armed with rifles under the justification of "combating drug trafficking in the region". The police entries were recorded by security cameras installed in the residences and allegedly occurred on at least 14 occasions and at different times, including in the early hours of the morning, and in the presence of children. Such events are said to have had an intimidating effect on Layrton's relatives, who allegedly felt intimidated and their mental health was affected.

For its part, the State indicated that the protection of the beneficiaries was the subject of a judicial precautionary measure at the domestic level, which was revoked after the proceedings investigating Layrton's death were shelved. It referred that the file of the investigation process was sent to Internal Affairs of the Military Police on July 4, 2024, and that the information on the threatening events was forwarded to the Military Justice and to the Public Prosecutor's Office responsible for the external control of the police activity.

Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Brazil:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiaries;
- b. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

COLOMBIA*Resolution No. 5/24 (LIFT)*PM 150-11 - Hildebrando Vélez and Sandra Viviana Cuéllar, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Hildebrando Vélez and Sandra Viviana Cuéllar. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during the implementation, as well as the observations of the beneficiaries' representation. Following the State's request to have the measures lifted, the IACHR requested, on several occasions, observations from the representatives, who provided their observations. In this regard, given the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that at present there is no information available to find that the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure are fulfilled. After failing to identify compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR decided to lift the precautionary measures at hand.

Resolution No. 12/24 (GRANT)*PM 51-24 - Cindy Vanessa Arenas Fernández and her family, Colombia

On March 22, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Cindy Vanessa Arenas Fernández and her family. Cindy Vanessa, an indigenous woman, was the victim of an attempted femicide and is reportedly being threatened and persecuted, along with her family, by the identified aggressor and individuals from his circle. Meanwhile, the State indicated that it had determined the application of protection measures, without specifying which ones and the beginning of their implementation. The Commission, after evaluating the various actions of the State, deemed them insufficient to prevent the threatening events from continuing. Furthermore, Cindy Vanessa continued to be subjected to death threats, surveillance, and persecution. The mentioned events also extended to members of her family.

Pursuant to Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Colombia:

- c. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Cindy Vanessa Arenas Fernández, Yu'usa Katleen Timaná Arenas, C.L.T.A., and H.S.S.T., with an intersectional approach that considers gender, ethnicity/race, and age, in accordance with the applicable international standards and obligations;
- d. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- e. report on the actions taken in order to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the granting of these precautionary measures, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 19/24 (GRANT)

PM 73-24 - Thirteen members of the La Plata Bahía Málaga Community, Colombia

On April 8, 2024, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of thirteen territorial authorities, social leaders and defenders of ethnic-territorial rights of the Community Council of the black communities of La Plata Bahía Málaga, located in Buenaventura, Valle del Cauca. According to the request, the Community Council has resisted claims of territorial control by illegal armed actors and has been suffering armed incursions by these illegal groups since January 2024. The IACHR highlighted the imminence of the risk, underlining the continuity of the threatening events. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to grant the precautionary measures and requested that the State of Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary and culturally appropriate measures to safeguard the life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries. Among other things, it is requested to take the relevant measures to guarantee that they can safely return to their community;
- b. adopt the necessary protection measures so that the beneficiaries can continue carrying out their activities in defense of human rights without being subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment or acts of violence;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and/or their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to these precautionary measures, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 22/24 (LIFT)

PM 446-03 - Piedad Córdoba, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Piedad Córdoba in Colombia. In making the decision, the Commission assessed the State's actions during the implementation, as well as the observations of the beneficiary's representation. In February 2024, the parties reported the death of the beneficiary from natural causes in January of the same year. As a result of her death, the Commission considers that the measures are now spent and there is no further need for protection.

Resolution No. 32/24 (GRANT)
PM 140-24 - Aldemar Solano Cuellar and his son, Colombia

On May 16, 2024, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of journalist Aldemar Solano Cuellar and his son, Aldemar Felipe Solano Obando. The request argued that Solano Cuellar, director of the digital news program “Conexión”, has received death threats from the illegal armed group “Clan del Golfo”, which include details about his residence and family, and extortion demands. The threats have also been directed at his son, who has received similar intimidating calls. Despite complaints and requests for protection, no concrete measures have been implemented to safeguard their safety. The IACHR noted that the threats persist and that Solano Cuellar, after moving for safety, had to return to Villavicencio. The lack of protection has led him to confine himself to his home, affecting his journalistic work. Consequently, pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to grant the precautionary measures and requested that the State of Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiaries;
- b. implement the necessary measures so that Aldemar Solano Cuellar can carry out his activities as a journalist without being subjected to threats, harassment, or other acts of violence in the exercise of his work;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 33/24 (GRANT)
PM 1036-23 - Víctor Miguel Ángel Moreno Campaña, Colombia

On May 20, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Víctor Miguel Ángel Moreno, community leader and legal representative of the Community Council of Black Communities of Pueblo Rico. According to the request, Mr. Moreno is at risk due to death threats and intimidation attributed to armed groups operating in the area. When analyzing the request, the Commission took into account the alleged facts in light of the context it has been monitoring in Colombia and assessed the protection measures that have been implemented over time. However, given the nature of the threats, the absence of information on progress in the investigative processes, as well as the need to reinforce the protection measures, it was considered that the risk has not been adequately mitigated.

Pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that the State of Colombia:

- a. adopt, with an ethnic differential approach, the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiary;
- b. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out his human rights defense activities without being subjected to threats, harassment or other acts of violence in the exercise of his work;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 34/24 (GRANT)*PM 376-24 - Sonia Chilgueso Dagua, Diana Montilla Moreno, and their families, Colombia

On May 23, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Sonia Chilgueso Dagua, an indigenous woman, and Diana Montilla Moreno, a lawyer and human rights defender, and their respective families, who are being intimidated, harassed and threatened by armed groups in Colombia. Despite complaints and requests for protection to the authorities, adequate protection measures have not been implemented and there has been no progress in the investigations. The Commission concluded that the beneficiary families are exposed to threats, as well as to being declared military targets, being followed by armed groups, to forced displacement and kidnapping attempts, as in the case of Sonia's daughter, whose whereabouts are unknown, with allegations that she may have been killed in a confrontation between armed groups. The State's actions were not sufficient to mitigate the risks, reinforcing the need for the precautionary measures requested. The Commission considered that the matter meets prima facie the requirements of seriousness, urgency and irreparable harm.

In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requires that Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary and culturally appropriate measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries, in accordance with applicable international standards and obligations. In particular, to determine the situation of V.C.D., daughter of Sonia Chilgueso Dagua, whose whereabouts or fate is unknown;
- b. implement the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and/or their representatives; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 36/24 (LIFT)*PM 382-12 - Héctor Sánchez and four other persons, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Héctor Sánchez, Alexander Castrillón Cubides, Hugo Mejía, Claudia Fierro Camacho, and Neiret Escobar Vela, in Colombia. In the process of reaching a decision, the Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State during implementation as well as the observations submitted by the beneficiaries' representation. Despite several requests for updates, the representation has not sent any information to the Commission since 2020. Upon being notified that the current risk would be assessed, the representation still did not provide a response. Consequently, upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 47/24 (LIFT)*PM 261-16 - Daniel Ernesto Prado Albarracín, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Daniel Ernesto Prado Albarracín. The Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State during the time the measures were in force. Despite several requests for information, the representation has not provided a substantial response since the precautionary measures were granted in 2017. Upon being notified that an assessment was to be carried out to determine whether the risk persisted, the representation did not reply. Consequently, upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 53/24 (FOLLOW UP AND EXTENSION)*PM 395-18 - Authorities and members of the Gonzaya (Buenavista) and Po Piyuya (Santa Cruz de Piñuña Blanco) reservations of the Siona People (ZioBain), Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted on August 21, 2024, the Follow-up and Extension Resolution 53/2024 regarding the situation of the authorities and members of the Gonzaya and Po Piyuya reservations of the Siona Indigenous People in Colombia (PM-395-18).

In the Resolution, the IACHR analyzed the information provided by the parties, positively evaluating the actions implemented by the State and considered that a risk identified in 2018 persists with respect to the reservations of the Siona Indigenous People. The Commission understands that the reported events are part of the actions of the illegal armed groups to consolidate their presence in the reservations and impose themselves on the indigenous authorities. The Commission also analyzed the situation of the human rights defender L.M.E.V., who has been the object of death threats from armed groups operating in the territory of the Indigenous Reservations. The Commission considered that the beneficiary is in a situation posing a serious risk to her rights to life and personal integrity. After analyzing the submissions of fact and law, the Commission considers that the risk has not ceased and, therefore, in accordance with the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission:

- a. Requires the State to strengthen the implementation of necessary measures to effectively protect the life and personal integrity of the groups of beneficiaries identified in Resolution 53/2018, taking into account the assessments made in this Resolution;
- b. Requests the State to extend the precautionary measures in favor of L.M.E.V. In this regard: (i) adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary; (ii) implement the necessary protection measures so that the beneficiary can continue to carry out her human rights defense work, without being subject to threats, intimidation, harassment, and acts of violence; and (iii) report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of measures in favor of L.M.E.V., so as to prevent such events from reoccurring;
- c. Exhorts the parties to submit specific, detailed, and updated information on the situation of the beneficiaries with the aim of continuing to analyze their situation pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure. At the time of providing this information, the Commission requested that they specify the situation of the beneficiaries or groups of beneficiaries, so that the Commission can adequately identify how these precautionary measures are being implemented with respect to each of the three groups. This includes, among other actions, reporting on individual and collective protection measures in place, concerted actions and agreements reached; and
- d. Urges the parties to continue with the consultation and coordination spaces at the domestic level within the framework of the implementation of these precautionary measures.

PM 833-24 - Adolescent S.J.C.A., Colombia

On August 24, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of the adolescent S.J.C.A., upon considering that she is at serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Colombia. According to the request, the beneficiary has been missing since April 20, 2024, after allegedly being recruited by the illegal armed group of Segunda Marquetalia. The adolescent was able to communicate with her parents through audio and text messages until August 2024. In these messages, she indicated that she was ill, had injuries on her body, and had suffered unspecified punishments for attempting to escape from the location where she is being held. In addition, the attached medical reports indicate that she has alleged health issues and reportedly requires special health care that is not being provided by the reported recruiters. Although reports have been made to various bodies, there have been no search actions. Given the lack of response from the State, the Commission has no elements to assess the actions that may have been initiated in her favor.

The IACHR considered the seriousness of the passage of time under the alleged conditions, the context in which she is immersed, as well as the deterioration of her health and the potential fatal consequences. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, it requested that Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect her rights to life, personal integrity, and health, and;
- b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 59/24 (LIFT)*PM 132-00 - Jorge Cardona Alzate and Alba Patricia Ribera Uribe, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Jorge Cardona Alzate and Alba Patricia Ribera Uribe regarding Colombia. Despite several requests for updates, the accredited representation has not sent the Commission any information since 2021. Upon being notified that a risk assessment would be carried out, the representation did not respond. Consequently, upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures. Lastly, the Commission recalled that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has been overseeing Jineth Bedoya Lima's situation as part of the ruling in the Case of Bedoya Lima et al. v. Colombia.

Resolution No. 65/24 (GRANT)*PM 765-24 - William Stiven Rojas Rincon and his family unit, Colombia

On September 19, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of journalist, community and social leader William Stiven Rojas Rincon, considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Colombia. According to the request, the beneficiary has been receiving death threats and being followed in a sustained manner. The alleged events are allegedly occurring as a direct consequence of his journalistic and social leadership activities. However, no progress has been made in the investigations. On July 17, 2024, the competent judicial authority ordered an additional security detail and ordered the UNP to conduct a new risk assessment. The request reported failures in the implementation of the granted detail and alleged that the new risk assessment study had not been carried out. For its part, the State informed that the risk assessment study has been underway since July 29, 2024, and that the proposed beneficiary purportedly has one ballistic protection vest, one means of communication, one protection person and transportation support. Finally, he indicated that payment of the August transportation support is pending. The Commission valued the work of the beneficiary, the ongoing threatening situations over time, the lack of progress in the investigation and the fact that a new risk assessment is still pending, despite the judicial determination. Therefore, in accordance with the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, it requested that Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries, in accordance with applicable international standards and obligations;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that William Stiven Rojas Rincon can carry out his work as a journalist and human rights defender without being subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment, or other acts of violence in the course of his duties;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 66/24 (GRANT)*PM 690-24 - G.O.F. and his family unit, Colombia

On September 19, 2024, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of G.O.F. and his family members. The request argued that G.O.F., a patrol officer of the Colombian National Police, was subjected to death threats after he delivered explosives to the authorities that were allegedly to be supplied to the National Liberation Army (ELN) by sub-inspector of the Anti-Narcotics Unit. As a result of his refusal to return the explosive material, G.O.F. and his family received threats and were persecuted, which forced them to move several times. For its part, the State reported that an investigation was opened into the threats and that there are internal protection mechanisms available for public officers and witnesses. The IACHR noted that the threats against G.O.F. and his family persist, and that no material protection measures have been adopted to guarantee their safety. It also considered that the leak of G.O.F.'s whereabouts aggravates his situation of vulnerability and puts his entire family at risk. Consequently, in the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to grant the precautionary measures and requested that the State of Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiaries, including putting in place appropriate protocols to ensure the confidentiality of all information about their status and whereabouts;
- b. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 69/24 (GRANT)
PM 972-24 - Adolescent J.A.R.L and his father, Colombia

On October 2, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of adolescent J.A.R.L and his father, upon considering that they are at serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Colombia. The request for precautionary measures alleged that the proposed beneficiary J.A.R.L has been missing since August 21, 2024, after being allegedly kidnapped by the armed group called "Jaime Martínez" in Colombia. Following these events, J.A.R.L.'s father began to receive threats and intimidation while carrying out efforts to search for his son. Although complaints were filed, reportedly no search actions were initiated. The Commission considered the alleged facts in light of the context it has been monitoring in Colombia and acknowledged the commitment expressed by the State in this matter. Nevertheless, it expressed concern over the information presented, especially the absence of confirmation on the effective activation of the urgent search mechanism for the adolescent J.A.R.L, and the lack of protective measures for J.A.R.L.'s father or other efforts to support the search. Consequently, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, it requires that Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;
- b. implement the necessary measures to protect J.A.R.L.'s father from intimidation and other acts of violence while he continues to search for his son;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 70/24 (LIFT)
PM 189-01 - Gerardo Santibáñez Potes and nine others, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of the members of the board of directors of SINTRAEMSDDES. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during implementation, and the beneficiaries' current situation. Following the requests to lift and upon not identifying compliance with the requirements outlined in Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR has decided to lift these measures.

Resolution No. 72/24 (GRANT)
PM 867-23 - Child Y.A.V.G., Colombia

On October 13, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of the child Y.A.V.G, considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Colombia. According to the request, José Eduardo Vargas Parra, the father, has had no contact with his son, the child Y.A.V.G., since November 15, 2017, relying on judicial determinations on a regime of cohabitation between father and son. This situation has remained, despite administrative, civil, criminal and constitutional actions initiated by the father. This request is related to petition 1976-23.

After requesting information from the State, the Commission took note of the response provided by the Colombian institutional authorities regarding the proceedings and investigations underway. In this regard, the Commission observed that, even though the child has stated that he has not seen his father for the past seven years, the reports attached by the State do not mention any attempt to reconnect him, nor do they provide information suggesting that the absence of ties with him is based on the best interests of the child.

Therefore, in the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Colombia adopt the necessary measures to safeguard, in accordance with the best interests of the child, the rights to identity, family life, and personal integrity of the beneficiary. These measures are to remain in effect until the underlying dispute is resolved, in order to ensure the useful effect of any eventual decision made within the petition and case system. In the same way, it required that the State evaluate the impact of the alleged lack of relationship between father and son, according to the applicable international standards on cohabitation with both parents.

Resolution No. 76/24 (LIFT)
PM 9-02 - Afro-Colombian families in 49 hamlets in the Naya River, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of the Afro-Colombian families living in 49 hamlets located in the Naya River basin in Buenaventura. The Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during implementation, as well as the observations of the beneficiaries' representation. After several requests for information, the representation has failed to send a response since 2020. In this regard, given the nature of the precautionary measures mechanism and considering the information available, the Commission deemed that it did not have the elements to find compliance with the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure. Consequently, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures and continue to follow up on the situation through its monitoring mechanisms.

Resolution No. 86/24 (GRANT)
PM 978-24 - Erika Vanessa Trochez Ortiz and Jazmín Elena Ortiz Urcue, Colombia

On November 17, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) granted precautionary measures in favor of Erika Vanessa Trochez Ortiz and Jazmín Elena Ortiz Urcue, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Colombia. The applicant indicated that Erika Vanessa was recruited by an armed group on November 11, 2023, is being held against her will and her whereabouts are unknown at present. Likewise, her mother Jazmín Elena is reportedly receiving threats from the armed group in retaliation for searching for her daughter. Therefore, under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that the State of Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of Erika Vanessa Trochez Ortiz, in order to protect her rights to life, personal integrity, and health; and protect the life and personal integrity of Jazmín Elena Ortiz Urcue;

- b. implement the necessary measures so that Jazmín Elena Ortiz Urcue can continue with her actions to search for and report on the situation of her daughter, without being subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment, and acts of violence;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures with the beneficiary Jazmín Elena Ortiz Urcue and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 95/24 (GRANT)*PM 203-24 - Antonio Miguel Rivera Escolar and Lenin Ernesto Rivera Escolar, Colombia

On December 9, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Antonio Miguel Rivera Escolar and Lenin Ernesto Rivera Escolar. According to the request, the beneficiaries are human rights defenders and seek justice for the murder of their father Antonio María Rivera Movilla in 2003 by paramilitary groups. It is alleged that they have been subjected to extortion and threats by illegal armed groups when resuming productive activities on their father's farms. This request is related to Case 12.881, pending before the IACHR, regarding the murder of Mr. Rivera Movilla, father of the proposed beneficiaries. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law furnished by the parties, the Commission considers that the information presented shows prima facie that the beneficiaries are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm. Therefore, it requested that Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Antonio Miguel Rivera Escolar and Lenin Ernesto Rivera Escolar;
- b. implement the corresponding actions so that the beneficiaries can continue their work of defense of human rights and search for justice in relation to the murder of their father;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representation; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 106/24 (GRANT)*PM 585-24 - Segundo Bolívar Madroñero Hernández and his sons, Colombia

On December 31, 2024, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of independent journalist Segundo Bolívar Madroñero Hernández and his sons, due to threats, attacks, and harassment related to his journalistic work in Colombia. Since 2016, Madroñero has been subjected to threats and harassment by illegal armed groups linked to his investigations into organized crime and corruption in Nariño, a situation that has worsened in 2024. The State reported that protection measures have been implemented through the National Protection Unit (UNP) and the National Police. The IACHR observed that the protection measures granted by the State have been insufficient to mitigate the risk, which affects not only his safety, but also his right to freedom of expression. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to grant the precautionary measures and requested that the State of Colombia:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiaries;
- b. implement the necessary measures so that Segundo Bolívar Madroñero Hernández can carry out his activities as a journalist without being subjected to threats, harassment, or other acts of violence in the exercise of his work;

- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

COSTA RICA

Resolution No. 90/24 (GRANT)

PM 330-24 - Reinaldo Picado Miranda, Costa Rica

On November 25, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Reinaldo Picado, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm. Consequently, and with the objective of assisting the State in the fulfillment of its obligations, Costa Rica is requested to adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the rights to life and personal integrity of Mr. Picado Miranda. In particular, refraining from deporting, expelling or extraditing the beneficiary to Nicaragua until the competent Costa Rican domestic administrative and/or judicial authorities have duly assessed, in accordance with applicable international standards and the principle of non-refoulement, the alleged risk that his rights to life and physical integrity would face if deprived of his liberty in Nicaragua under the current context of the country.

CUBA

PM 280-24 - Julio César Góngora Millo, Cuba

On April 10, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Julio César Góngora Millo. It was indicated that Mr. Millo is a human rights activist and has been identified as a “counterrevolutionary” or “dissident” by the State. As a result, he is reportedly suffering threats, intimidation, harassment and surveillance attributed to State agents. In addition to the above, it has been alleged that the beneficiary is being denied medical attention by the State as part of the retaliatory actions against him. After evaluating the available information, the Commission requested that the State of Cuba:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary;
- b. adopt the necessary protective measures so that the beneficiary can continue to carry out his work defending human rights, without being subject to threats, intimidation, harassment, and acts of violence. The foregoing implies, among other measures, that the State provide the corresponding medical care so that he can perform his duties; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PM 352-23 - Aniette González García, Cuba

On April 26, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Aniette Gonzalez Garcia, who is deprived of her liberty and at risk due to the lack of adequate medical attention for her health problems in the conditions of detention in which she is being held. At the time of assessing the decision, the IACHR noted the conditions of detention and the lack of specialized medical care, which is aggravated by the insufficient food and supplies according to her current health condition. It also observed that she is being subjected to differential treatment by security agents. After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, requested that Cuba:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity and health of Aniette González García, with a gender perspective, in accordance with applicable international standards and obligations;
- b. implement the necessary measures to bring her conditions of detention into line with applicable international standards. In particular, ensuring that the corresponding medical diagnoses are made and that her medical treatment is defined;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 27/24 (FOLLOW-UP)
PM 484-11 - José Daniel Ferrer García, Cuba

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted on May 6, 2024 the Follow-up Resolution 27/2024, in relation to the situation of José Daniel Ferrer García, who is being held in inadequate conditions of deprivation of liberty in Cuba (PM-484-11). The IACHR expressed particular concern about the State's unwillingness to engage in dialogue, noting that, on the contrary, all the information available, both in the instant matter and through the monitoring of the situation in the country, allows this Commission to affirm that State agents are taking actions that intensify the situation that places the beneficiary at risk, instead of mitigating it. Consequently, the Commission decided as follows:

- a. continue to follow up on the precautionary measures granted on November 5, 2012, in order to protect Mr. José Daniel Ferrer García's life and personal integrity;
- b. require that the State implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions comply with applicable international standards;
- c. request that the State adopt measures to protect the beneficiary's health in a timely and adequate manner;
- d. require the parties to consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented. The foregoing must include allowing the representation to access information regarding the detention conditions and welfare of the beneficiary, either via family members or other representatives; and
- e. request that the State report on the actions taken in order to investigate the events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 29/24 (EXTENSION)
PM 96-15 - Marienys Pavó Oñate, Cuba

On May 11, 2024, the IACHR extended precautionary measures in favor of Marienys Pavó Oñate regarding Cuba. According to the request, Ms. Pavó Oñate is the wife of Julio Alfredo Ferrer Tamayo, member of the Legal Information Center "Cubalex" and beneficiary of these precautionary measures. The representation alleged that she is being subjected to harassment by State agents since Ferrer Tamayo is outside the country, this is so in retaliation for the work that her husband carries out internationally in the field of human rights and with the objective of preventing him from returning to Cuba. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to request that Cuba:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the life and personal integrity of Marienys Pavó Oñate;

- b. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and the representation she designates; and
- c. report on the actions implemented to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to these precautionary measures, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 30/24 (GRANT)
PM 442-24 - D.M.P., Cuba

On May 12, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to D.M.P., political opponent, who has been subjected to beatings, threats and mistreatment, after being deprived of his liberty. It was indicated that he does not receive adequate medical attention for his deteriorating health condition.

The Commission, at the time of evaluating the decision, observed the current conditions of detention of D.M.P., and that the risk factors could be attributed to State agents. For this reason, D.M.P.'s situation of lack of protection is accentuated, not only by the fact that he is classified as a political opponent, but also by the actions taken by the agents responsible for his security to put him at risk. The Commission considered the allegations of collusion between the proposed beneficiary's aggressors and prison officials, in addition to the lack of adequate medical care, to be particularly serious. In addition, the IACHR recognized that the conditions of detention are likely to continue and worsen over time. At the same time, there is no information from the State that would be sufficient to assess whether the alleged situation has been duly mitigated or has disappeared. After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, requested that Cuba.

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of D.M.P.;
- b. ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions undertaken to investigate the alleged events that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 40/24 (GRANT)
PM 379-24 - J.M.M.B., Cuba

On June 28, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of human rights defender J.M.M.B., deprived of his liberty and at risk due to acts of violence against him. Upon analyzing the information furnished by the applicant in the context of Cuba, the Commission considered that J.M.M.B. has been subjected to acts of violence and physical aggression, including an attempted rape. This situation, in the Commission's opinion, reflects the state of lack of protection in which the proposed beneficiary currently finds himself, and the lack of supervision on the part of the prison authorities. In addition, the Commission noted the difficulties that the proposed beneficiary's family members have in reporting the threatening situations and that this limitation aggravates his situation of vulnerability. The Commission requested that Cuba:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of J.M.M.B.;
- b. implement the necessary measures so that his detention conditions align with applicable international standards. In particular, ensuring that he is not subject to threats, intimidation, harassment or violence;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representative; and

- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 41/24*PM 529-24 - Fray Pascual Claro Valladares, Cuba

On June 30, 2024, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of Fray Pascual Claro Valladares, who is reportedly deprived of his liberty in Cuba. Claro Valladares, detained since August 24, 2022, for participating in peaceful protests, has been transferred between several prisons and subjected to severe conditions of isolation, interrogation and mistreatment. In April 2024, after being sentenced to ten years for sedition, he attempted suicide and was punished with solitary confinement instead of receiving the necessary psychiatric care. Prison authorities have threatened to withdraw all his benefits if he and his mother continue to denounce the violations suffered. The IACHR highlighted his special vulnerability due to his classification as a “counterrevolutionary” and the lack of response from the Cuban State. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to grant the precautionary measures and requested that the State of Cuba:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Fray Pascual Claro Valladares;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that his detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, ensure that he is not subject to threats, intimidation, harassment, or violence. Furthermore, that the appropriate medical diagnoses be carried out, that his medical treatment be determined, and that such treatment is effectively provided;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 48/24 (FOLLOW-UP)*PM 602-24 - Joel Jardines Jardines, Cuba

On August 13, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Joel Jardines Jardines, who is deprived of liberty in Aguacate, Cuba. It was indicated that he suffers from larynx carcinoma and since 2021 he should have undergone analyses to start a possible chemotherapy treatment. It was alleged that the beneficiary lacks a treatment plan for his ailments and suffered physical repression when he requested medical attention from the authorities. The State did not respond. The IACHR considered the seriousness of the lack of medical attention for a possibly malignant tumor, as well as the deterioration of his health or the eventual fatal consequences, as well as the allegations of repression in response to the beneficiary’s requests for medical attention. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Cuba:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Joel Jardines Jardines;
- b. take the necessary measures to ensure his detention conditions comply with applicable international standards. In particular, ensuring that the corresponding medical diagnoses are made, that sufficient and timely medical information is provided; and that his medical treatment is defined, with the prior consent of the proposed beneficiary;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

EL SALVADOR

Resolution No. 15/24 (LIFT)

PM 542-19 - Clave Enero and his family unit, El Salvador

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Clave Enero and his family unit in El Salvador. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the measures adopted by the State and identified the lack of response by the representation since January 2021, despite repeated requests for information. Upon not identifying compliance with the requirements set forth in Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to lift these precautionary measures.

GUATEMALA

PM 1088-23 - Irma Elizabeth Palencia Orellana, Guatemala

On January 13, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Irma Elizabeth Palencia Orellana after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Guatemala. According to the request, Ms. Palencia Orellana, in her capacity as a sitting justice of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal of Guatemala (TSE), is being followed, monitored, threatened, and subjected to other events placing her at risk in the exercise of her position, given the current context of the country. Therefore, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that the State of Guatemala:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the rights to life and personal integrity of Irma Elizabeth Palencia Orellana;
- b. take the necessary measures to ensure that Irma Elizabeth Palencia Orellana can continue to perform her duties as a sitting justice of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal of Guatemala without being subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment, or acts of violence;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and her representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 2/24 (GRANT)

PM 4-24 - Leyla Susana Lemus Arriaga, Guatemala

On January 13, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of the sitting Justice of the Constitutional Court, Leyla Susana Lemus Arriaga, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Guatemala. The request for precautionary measures alleged that on December 11, 2023, the National Civil Police (PNC) patrol car located in front of the beneficiary's home was set on fire by third parties and that this incident was related to her work as a Justice. The Commission considered that the events of December 11, 2023, occurred when PNC agents were not providing protection to the proposed beneficiary, due to her reassignment by orders of the institution itself and despite the protection detail determined by the State itself. Similarly, the Commission considered that the change in the said security detail was carried out in an uncoordinated manner with the proposed beneficiary and that the State did not designate replacement agents to continue with its proper implementation. Consequently, in accordance with the provisions of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that the State of Guatemala:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Leyla Susana Lemus Arriaga;
- b. adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary can carry out her duties as a justice in safe conditions;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 43/24 (GRANT)

PM 582-24 - Mirian Aída Reguero Sosa and her family unit, Guatemala

On August 2, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) granted precautionary measures in favor of Mirian Aída Reguero Sosa, prosecutor of the Public Prosecutor's Office of Guatemala, and her family, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Guatemala. The requesting party alleged that the beneficiary has been subjected to two armed attacks against her life. In addition to severe bodily injury, the armed attacks resulted in the death of the beneficiary's then partner, in 2022, and her mother, in 2024. The State indicated that the information on the security detail provided to the beneficiary is classified as confidential; however, it added that this helps to reduce the risk scenarios to which she is exposed. The IACHR considered that the alleged risk has already materialized on two occasions, even with a security detail, which reflects that it was not effective in protecting her. It also noted that the situation of the beneficiary was known by the competent authorities, as well as that no relevant progress was reported in the investigations of the attacks. Consequently, pursuant to Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that the State of Guatemala:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries;
- b. ensure the necessary measures to guarantee that Mirian Aída Reguero Sosa can exercise her functions without being subject to threats, intimidation, harassment, or acts of violence;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 44/24 (GRANT)

PM 638-24 - Gustavo Yaxón Meletz and his family, Guatemala

On August 2, 2024, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of human rights defender Gustavo Yaxón Meletz and his family. The request argued that Yaxón Meletz, leader of the Committee for Peasant Unity (CUC) and representative of the Community Development Council of El Tablón before the municipality of Sololá, was the victim of an armed attack on June 5, 2024, which left him seriously wounded and also caused the death of his father, Marcelo Yaxón Pablo, and the lawyer José Domingo Montejo. The alleged inadequacy of the protection measures in place was highlighted, underlining that the beneficiary was the only witness to the events, which also put his family at risk. The IACHR noted that the current protection detail might not be sufficient to guarantee adequate protection, and emphasized the need to carry out an updated risk study to adjust the protection measures and guarantee the safety of Gustavo Yaxón Meletz and his family.

Consequently, pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to grant the precautionary measures and requested that the State of Guatemala:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of Gustavo Yaxón Meletz and his family unit;
- b. implement the necessary measures so that Gustavo Yaxón Meletz can carry out his activities as a human rights defender without being subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment, or other acts of violence in the exercise of his work;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 85/24 (LIFT)

PM 457-03 - Mario Minera, Héctor Amílcar Mollinedo, and the other members of the Center for Legal Action on Human Rights (CALDH), Guatemala

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Mario Minera, Héctor Amílcar Mollinedo, and the other members of the Center for Legal Action on Human Rights (CALDH, by its Spanish initialism), in Guatemala. Following the State's request to lift the said measures, the Commission assessed the protective actions taken in favor of the beneficiaries for the implementation of the precautionary measures. It has also considered the long period of time without facts that indicate an ongoing situation posing an imminent risk. Thus, given the nature of the precautionary measures and upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 96/24 (LIFT)

PM 185-07 - Norma Cruz Córdova and Alan Maldonado Ordóñez, Guatemala

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Norma Cruz Córdova and Alan Maldonado Ordóñez, in Guatemala. Following the State's request to lift the measures, the Commission assessed the protective actions taken in favor of the beneficiaries for the implementation of the precautionary measures, as well as the extended period without relevant information from the representation to continue assessing whether these precautionary measures should remain in force. Consequently, upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements at present, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

HAITI

PM 181-07 - Lovinsky Pierre-Antoine, Haiti

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Lovinsky Pierre-Antoine regarding Haiti. At the time of making this decision, the Commission noted that 16 years have passed since the precautionary measures were granted, and there has been no updated information on the beneficiary's situation for more than 11 years. Therefore, the Commission considered that it did not have elements to continue to consider that the requirements of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure have been met and, consequently, it decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 42/24 (LIFT)
PM 161-14 - Pierre Espérance and another person, Haiti

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Pierre Espérance and an identified member of the National Human Rights Defense Network (RNDDH) regarding Haiti. At the time of reaching the decision, the Commission observed that, in the approximately 10 years that these precautionary measures have been in force, the representation has not submitted a written response to any of the requests for information issued by the Commission. The State has not sent a response either. Consequently, the Commission considered that there was no information to continue to determine that the requirements of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure have been met. Therefore, it considered it appropriate to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 60/24 (LIFT)
PM 271-06 - Marc-Arthur Mésidort and members of his family unit, Haiti

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Marc-Arthur Mésidort regarding Haiti. When making its decision, the Commission observed that the representation has not replied to the IACHR in the last 11 years. According to the last information sent in 2013, the representation reported that the beneficiary and his family were living abroad. The Commission notes with concern that the State has not provided a written response to the requests for information. Given the lack of information needed to meet procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these measures.

Resolution No. 102/24 (LIFT)
PM 144-08 - Persons detained at the Toussaint Louverture Police Station in Gonaïves, Haiti

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of the people detained at the Toussaint Louverture Police Station in Gonaïves regarding Haiti. At the time of making the decision, the Commission noted that, during the nearly 16 years the precautionary measures have been in force, the State has not responded to the Commission. Moreover, the representation submitted information only up until 2013, and 11 years have therefore elapsed without any further communications from the State. In view of the lack of information that would allow the requirements of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure to continue to be considered met, the Commission decided to lift these precautionary measures.

HONDURAS*Resolution No. 4/24 (LIFT)
PM 14-18 - Ericka Yamileth Varela Pavón and her family, Honduras

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Ericka Yamileth Varela Pavón and her family in Honduras. At the time of making the decision, the Commission identifies the lack of response from the beneficiaries' representation since August 2021, despite the requests for information made. Similarly, the beneficiary and two of her children have been outside Honduras since July 2018. Upon not identifying compliance with the requirements set forth in Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 16/24 (LIFT)
PM 281-10 - Oscar Siri Zúñiga and family, Honduras

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift the present precautionary measures in favor of Oscar Siri Zúñiga and his family in Honduras. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the measures adopted internally by the State, as well as the lack of information on risk events against the beneficiaries since 2017. In that regard, taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it is not possible to identify a situation of risk under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure at this time. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 56/24 (GRANT)*PM 511-24 - Rodsman Saadik Molina Ortez, Honduras

On August 26, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Rodsman Saadik Molina Ortez, after considering that he is at serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Honduras. The proposed beneficiary is president of the Union of Workers of the Honduran Civil Aeronautics Agency (Sindicato de Trabajadores de la Agencia Hondureña de Aeronáutica Civil, SITRAAHAC). He is reportedly at risk due to threats and acts of violence by third parties allegedly in response to his union activities. Despite having a security detail in his favor, the request alleged implementation failures which were not adequately addressed by the State. In addition, the request mentioned the persistence of the situations which placed him at risk, which included his family members. For its part, the State confirmed the granted security detail and stated that it is coordinating with the relevant authorities on the status of the investigations.

Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, the IACHR considered the role of union leader that the proposed beneficiary fulfills, the ongoing situations that have been placing the proposed beneficiary at risk over time, the lack of investigation into these situations, and the absence of adjustments or new risk assessments to accurately outline the protection measures needed. In light of the current context in Honduras, and under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Honduras:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary and his family unit;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary can exercise his functions as president of the Union of Workers of the Honduran Civil Aeronautics Agency (SITRAAHAC), without being subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment, or acts of violence;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 73/24 (LIFT)*PM 69-09 - Inés Yadira Cubero González, Honduras

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Inés Yadira Cubero González, regarding Honduras. Following the State's request to lift the measures, the Commission reviewed the actions taken to implement the precautionary measures and considered the extended period without sufficient evidence of the beneficiary facing an ongoing imminent risk. In this regard, in light of the nature of the precautionary measures and the information available in this matter, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures pursuant to the provisions of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure.

Resolution No. 81/24 (LIFT)*PM 589-15 - Ana Mirian Romero et al., Honduras

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Ana Mirian Romero, the family units of Rosalio Vásquez Pineda and Ana Mirian Romero, and 13 other identified people, in Honduras. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State and the information presented by the parties. Upon not identifying compliance with the requirements set forth in Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

MEXICO

Resolution No. 9/24 (LIFT) PM 519-17 - Eduardo Valencia Castellanos, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Eduardo Valencia Castellanos. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the measures that the State adopted internally, as well as the change in circumstances and lack of situations that put the beneficiary at risk, at this time. Taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it is not possible to identify a situation of risk under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure at this time. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 11/24 (GRANT) PM 674-21 - J. Santos Rosales Contreras and twelve other members of the Nahua indigenous community of Ayotitlán, Mexico

On March 8, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of J. de Jesus Santos Rosales and twelve other members of the Nahua indigenous community of Ayotitlán, who are said to actively participate in actions against mining exploitation in their territory. For this reason, the beneficiaries are reportedly facing continuous threats, intimidation, surveillance, monitoring and other acts of violence by organized crime groups, among other actors. For its part, the State indicated that it is in the best disposition to attend the necessary working meetings to reach satisfactory agreements for the indigenous community of Ayotitlán. In addition, the State indicated that it is willing to establish a coordinated work plan between federal and state authorities to address the problem, especially in light of the allegations of the presence of organized crime groups. The State also reported on the incorporation of some of the beneficiaries into the Mechanism for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders and Journalists and the protection measures available to them. Although the Commission valued positively the various actions of the State to address the problem and provide security to the beneficiaries and other members of the Nahua community of Ayotitlán, it also considered that the implementation of the protection measures has not prevented the continuation of threatening events, following the murder of one of the leaders of the community in November 2023. In addition, the beneficiaries have continued to be subject to death threats, threats of disappearance, surveillance at their homes, extortion calls, among others. The aforementioned events have also extended to members of their families.

In accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Mexico:

- a. adopt the necessary and culturally appropriate measures to guarantee the life and personal integrity of the duly identified beneficiaries;
- b. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 14/24 (LIFT) PM 277-13 - Members of the Otomí-Mexica Indigenous Community of San Francisco Xochicuautla, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Members of the Otomí-Mexica Indigenous Community of San Francisco Xochicuautla, in Mexico. At the time of making its decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during implementation, as well as the lack of information from the representation despite requests issued by the IACHR. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these measures.

Resolution No. 25/24 (LIFTED)*PM 264-10 - Gerardo Vera Orcino, Javier Martínez Robles and Francisco de Asís Manuel, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Gerardo Vera Orcino, Javier Martínez Robles and Francisco de Asís Manuel, in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during the implementation, as well as the lack of information from the representation since 2017. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these measures.

Resolution No. 98/24 (LIFTED)*PM 1165-18 - Sergio López Cantera, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Sergio López Cantera, in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State regarding implementation, as well as the lack of information from the representation during the time they were in force. Thus, in light of the nature of the precautionary measures, and upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 103/24 (LIFTED)*PM 1375-18 - Daniel Ramírez Contreras and his family, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Daniel Ramírez Contreras and his family unit, in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during their implementation, as well as the lack of information from the representation during the time these measures were in force. Thus, in light of the nature of precautionary measures, and upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 104/24 (LIFTED)*PM 603-22 - Girl K. L. R., Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of the child K.L.R., in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State during the time the measures were in force and found a change of factual circumstances. Taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission believes it is not possible to establish a situation of risk under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure at this time. Upon currently not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these measures.

NICARAGUA*Resolution No. 7/24 (GRANTED)*PM 95-24 - Eddy Antonio Castillo Muñoz, Nelly Griselda López García, and Juan Carlos Baquedano, Nicaragua

On March 1, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Eddy Antonio Castillo Muñoz, Nelly Griselda López García, and Juan Carlos Baquedano, who are identified or perceived as political opponents of the current Nicaraguan government, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Nicaragua. The request for precautionary measures alleged that the beneficiaries are deprived of their liberty in different prisons and despite suffering from a series of health problems, they do not have access to the necessary medical attention or medicines. In addition, they are reportedly being held in inadequate conditions of detention and are being subjected to aggression by prison officials. The Commission also found that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the risk faced by the beneficiaries. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Eddy Antonio Castillo Muñoz, Nelly Griselda López García, and Juan Carlos Baquedano;
- b. adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries' detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including: i. guarantee that they are not subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment, or aggression inside the prison; ii. guarantee access to adequate and specialized medical care, and immediately carry out a specialized medical evaluation of their health; iii. provide the necessary treatments and medications to treat their health issues; iv. guarantee regular contact and access to their family and legal representatives, and v. evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to imprisonment given the impossibility of protecting their rights in light of the current detention conditions;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken in order to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 10/24 (GRANT)

PM 274-24 - Carlos Alberto Bojorge Martínez, Nicaragua

On March 6, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Carlos Alberto Bojorge Martínez, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Nicaragua. The request for precautionary measures alleged that Mr. Carlos Alberto Bojorge Martínez, who is a university student and poet, has been missing since January 1, 2024, after being arrested by police officers. It is alleged that on the day of his arrest, he attended a mass at the Metropolitan Cathedral in Managua, wearing a shirt of the Virgin Mary, a small Nicaraguan flag and a picture of Monsignor Arnulfo Romero in reference to the state persecution against the Catholic Church in the country. In the evening hours, he was detained by police officers who took him to an unknown destination, presumably without an arrest warrant and without the reasons for his detention being known. The Commission also found that the State did not provide any information on the measures adopted to mitigate the beneficiary's risk situation, or on the actions taken to determine the beneficiary's whereabouts or fate. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of Mr. Carlos Alberto Bojorge Martinez, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;
- b. report on the conditions of detention in which he is currently being held. In particular, the Commission also requests that Nicaragua report on the place of his detention, allowing access to his legal representatives and family members, as well as the necessary health care; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 23/24 (GRANT)*PM 384-24 - Walner Omier Blandón Ochoa and ten other persons of the “Puerta de la Montaña” ministry, Nicaragua

On April 21, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Walner Omier Blandón Ochoa and ten other persons from the “Puerta de la Montaña” ministry, who are members of the evangelical church “Puerta de la Montaña,” after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Nicaragua. The request for precautionary measures alleged that the beneficiaries are deprived of their liberty in “La Modelo” prison and in the Women’s Comprehensive Correctional Facility and despite suffering from a series of health problems, they do not have access to the necessary medical attention or to the required medicines. In the case of Ms. Marisela de Fátima Mejía Ruiz, she is not receiving post-natal health care and adequate food, after having given birth prior to her detention. In addition, the proposed beneficiaries are said to be in inadequate conditions of detention. The Commission also found that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the alleged risk. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiaries. In particular, officially report on their current situation while in State custody;
- b. adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries’ detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, among them: i. guarantee access to adequate and specialized medical attention, and immediately carry out a specialized medical assessment on their health; ii. ensure access to the necessary treatments and medications to treat their health issues, with the corresponding gender perspective; iii. guarantee regular contact and access to their families and lawyers; and iv. evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to the deprivation of liberty given the impossibility of protecting their rights in light of the current detention conditions. iv. evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to the deprivation of liberty given the impossibility of protecting her rights in light of the current detention conditions;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 37/24 (GRANT)*PM 509-24 - Walner Antonio Ruiz Rivera, Nicaragua

On June 3, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Walner Antonio Ruiz Rivera, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation posing a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiary is deprived of his liberty in “La Modelo” prison and despite suffering from a series of health problems, he does not have access to the necessary medical attention or the required medicines. In addition, he is being held in inadequate conditions of detention and is being subjected to acts of violence by prison officers. The Commission also found that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the alleged risk. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. implement the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Mr. Walner Antonio Ruiz Rivera. In particular, officially report on his current situation while he is in the custody of the State;
- b. adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary’s detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including: i. guaranteeing that he is not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, and aggression; ii. taking the appropriate measures in response to the allegations of torture presented in the request; iii. guaranteeing access to adequate and specialized medical care, and that a specialized medical assessment of his health situation is carried out immediately; iv. ensuring access to the necessary treatments and medications to treat his medical issues; and v. evaluating the possibility of granting alternative measures to the deprivation of liberty, given the impossibility of protecting his rights in light of the impossibility of protecting his rights in the light of his medical conditions;

- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and its representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution so as to prevent such events from reoccurring, particularly regarding the allegations of torture raised by the applicants.

PM 553-24 - Nine persons deprived of their liberty, Nicaragua

On June 17, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of nine persons deprived of liberty, whose rights to life, personal integrity and health are being violated, detained in unhealthy conditions, suffering physical and psychological abuse by prison officials, without access to adequate medical care, resulting in significant risks and irreparable harm. For its part, the State, although informed, has not submitted a response. The Commission, after evaluating the allegations, joint to the context of systematic repression in the country and the lack of response from the State, understands, prima facie, that the requirements of seriousness, urgency, and irreparable harm are present. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiaries. In particular, officially report on their current situation while they are in the custody of the State;
- b. take the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries' detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards on the matter, including: i. guarantee that they are not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, and acts of aggression within the prison; ii. take appropriate measures in response to the allegations of torture presented in the request; iii. guarantee access to adequate and specialized medical care, treatment, and medication, and immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment of the beneficiaries' health; iv. grant immediate access to adequate food and water; and v. evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to deprivation of liberty, given the impossibility of protecting their rights in light of the current detention conditions;
- c. consult and agree upon on the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring, particularly with regard to the allegations of torture presented by the applicants.

PM 697-24, 730-24, 736-24 - Three persons deprived of their liberty, Nicaragua

On August 2, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Douglas Acevedo Castillo, Anner Herrera, and Geovanny Jaret Guido Morales, deprived of liberty in Nicaragua, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiaries are being held in "La Modelo" prison, in inadequate conditions of detention and without receiving the necessary medical attention for their ailments. They also face acts of violence such as beatings, mistreatment and intimidation by prison officers. They are also legally vulnerable due to the lack of access to judicial files and the absence of an effective legal defense. For its part, the State did not provide information that would make it possible to determine that the risk factors identified had been duly mitigated. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiaries. In particular, officially report on their current situation while they are in the custody of the State;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries' detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards on the matter, including: i. guarantee that they are not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, aggression, and torture inside the prison; ii. guarantee access to adequate and specialized medical care and to the necessary treatments and medicines, and immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment of their health; and iii. evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to deprivation of liberty, given the impossibility of protecting their rights in light of the current detention conditions;
- c. consult and agree upon on the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring, particularly with regard to the allegations of torture presented by the applicants.

Resolution No. 52/24 (GRANT)

PM 611-24; 726-24 - Three persons deprived of their liberty, Nicaragua

On August 17, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Frank Kevin Laguna Guevara, Óscar Danilo Parrilla Blandón, and Evelyn Susana Guillén Zepeda, persons deprived of their liberty in Nicaragua, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiaries are being held in the National Penitentiary System "Jorge Navarro" and in the Integral Penal Establishment for Women (EPIM), in poor conditions of detention and without receiving the necessary medical attention for their ailments. In the case of Ms. Evelyn Susana Guillén Zepeda, she suffers from a mental illness after being a victim of sexual violence. Likewise, they face acts of violence such as beatings, mistreatment and intimidation by prison officials. They are also legally vulnerable due to the lack of access to judicial files and the absence of an effective legal defense. For its part, the State did not provide information that would make it possible to determine that the risk factors identified had been duly mitigated. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiaries. In particular, officially report on their current situation while they are in the custody of the State;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries' detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards on the matter, including: i. guarantee that they are not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, and aggression inside the prison; ii. guarantee access to adequate and specialized medical care and to the necessary treatments and medicines, and immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment of their health; and iii. evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to deprivation of liberty, given the impossibility of protecting their rights in light of the current detention conditions;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 68/24 (GRANT)*PM 919-24 - Eddie Moisés González Valdivia, Nicaragua

On September 30, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) granted precautionary measures in favor of Eddie Moisés González Valdivia, upon considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights are at risk of irreparable harm. It was alleged that Eddie Moisés González Valdivia is a retired major of the Nicaraguan Army, university professor, and business consultant in the city of Estelí. He also identifies as a dissident of the ruling party and a critic of the current regime, and is detained in the Jorge Navarro "La Modelo" Penitentiary Center, incommunicado, with no information available about his health and current detention situation. Similarly, the beneficiary is reportedly legally vulnerable due to lack of access to the judicial file and the absence of effective legal defense. The State, for its part, did not provide information that would allow for the determination that the identified risk factors have been adequately mitigated. Pursuant to the provisions of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Eddie Moisés González Valdivia;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards on the matter, including: i. guarantee regular contact and access to his family members, attorneys, and representatives; ii. officially inform them of the beneficiary's legal situation in the framework of the criminal process in which he is allegedly involved; iii. immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment of his health and guarantee access to adequate medical care; and iv. evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to deprivation of liberty, given the impossibility of protecting his rights in light of the current detention conditions;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 75/24 (GRANT)*PM 1134-24 - Gersom Antonio Zeledón Motta and three other persons, Nicaragua

On October 24, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Gersom Antonio Zeledón Motta, Eveling Carolina Matus Hernández, Lesbia del Socorro Gutiérrez Poveda, and Carmen María Sáenz Martínez, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiaries' whereabouts were unknown as of their respective detentions between March and August 2024. It is alleged that the arrests were carried out by police officers through raids and/or searches of the respective homes, without indicating the reasons for their arrest. People close to the beneficiaries went to the various prisons to locate them and learn about their situation. The State authorities have not provided official information on the current whereabouts of these individuals, nor on their current status. The Commission also found that the State did not provide any information on the measures adopted to mitigate the risk faced by the beneficiaries, or on the actions taken to determine their whereabouts. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiaries, in order to protect their rights to life and personal integrity;

- b. inform whether the beneficiaries are in the custody of the State, the circumstances and conditions of their detention. In particular, report on the place of their detention, allowing access to their legal representatives and family members, as well as the necessary health care, and ensure that they are brought before judicial authorities to review and monitor any continued detention; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 77/24 (GRANT)*PM 1133-24 - Steadman Fagot Muller, Nicaragua

On October 28, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) granted precautionary measures in favor of Steadman Fagot Muller, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Nicaragua. The applicant indicated that the beneficiary held a public position from which he opposed the government's policies on indigenous peoples. It was alleged that, in reprisal for this, the Army arrested the beneficiary on September 14, 2024. Since then, his whereabouts, legal situation, and conditions of detention are unknown. The State did not provide information on the matter. The IACHR assessed the human rights crisis situation in Nicaragua and the lack of knowledge of the beneficiary's whereabouts, the judicial investigation that led to his capture, and his current situation. Consequently, in terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, it requested that the State of Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;
- b. inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, the circumstances and conditions of his detention. In particular, report on the place of his detention, allowing access to his legal representatives and family members, as well as the necessary health care, and ensure that he is brought before judicial authorities to review and monitor any continued detention;
- c. ensure the corresponding measures to guarantee that the beneficiary can continue to carry out his activities in defense of the rights of indigenous peoples without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence in the exercise of these activities; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 91/24 (GRANT)*PM 1214-24 - Jhon Fernando Paladines Rubio, Nicaragua

On November 26, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Jhon Fernando Paladines Rubio, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Nicaragua. According to the request, the beneficiary is a businessman in Costa Rica and was traveling in Nicaragua on business. He was reportedly detained on March 9, 2024, by the Judicial Assistance Directorate of the Nicaraguan National Police at the hotel where he was staying in Managua. Since that date, his location has not been known. After several internal actions, the situation remains unchanged to date. The State of Nicaragua has not responded.

Therefore, the IACHR requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;

- b. inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, the circumstances and conditions of his detention. In particular, report on the place of his detention and the criminal case file opened against him, allowing access to his legal representatives and family members, as well as the corresponding consular assistance, and ensure that he is brought before competent judicial authorities for the review and monitoring of his situation;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary, his family members, and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 93/24 (GRANT)*PM 1249-24 - Víctor Boitano Coleman, Nicaragua

On December 4, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Víctor Boitano Coleman, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiary's whereabouts are unknown since he was detained on April 23, 2024, by armed plainclothes agents and police officers, without a warrant. The Commission also considered that the State did not provide information on the actions taken to determine his whereabouts. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;
- b. inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, and the circumstances and conditions of his detention. In particular, report on the place of his detention, allowing access to his legal representatives and family members, as well as the necessary health care, and ensure that he is brought before judicial authorities to review and monitor any continued detention; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 100/24 (GRANT)*PM 1245-24 - Carlos Alberto Vanegas Gómez and Efrén Antonio Vílchez López, Nicaragua

On December 16, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Carlos Alberto Vanegas Gómez and Efrén Antonio Vílchez López, upon considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation given that their rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiaries are deprived of their liberty in unsanitary and inhumane conditions. They are allegedly not receiving the medical care they require for their health issues. Allegations of possible torture were presented. The State did not submit information to the IACHR. Therefore, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission request that the State of Nicaragua:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiaries;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries' detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including:
  - i. guarantee that they are not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, and aggression inside the prison;

- ii. take the measures that are relevant in response to the allegations of torture presented in the request
  - iii. guarantee access to adequate and specialized medical care and to the necessary treatments and medicines, and immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment of their health;
  - iv. provide immediate access to adequate food and water; and
  - v. evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to deprivation of liberty, given the impossibility of protecting their rights in light of the current detention conditions;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
  - d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PERU

Resolution No. 8/24 (LIFT)

PM 81-18 - Náthaly Sara Salazar Ayala, Peru

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Náthaly Sara Salazar Ayala in Peru. When making the decision, the Commission assessed the measures adopted domestically by the State and the lack of response by the beneficiary's representation during the time the precautionary measures were in force. In this regard, it considered the passage of time and the stage of the investigations to clarify the facts that led to the disappearance of the beneficiary. It also took into account the existence of allegations that exceeded the mechanism of precautionary measures after the elapsed time. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 13/24 (GRANT)

PM 1109-23 - Selected families of the native Kichwa community Santa Rosillo de Yanayacu, Peru

On March 25, 2024, the IACHR decided to grant precautionary measures in favor of certain families of the native Kichwa community Santa Rosillo de Yanayacu, located in the district of Huimbayoc, Province and Region of San Martín. According to the request, the leader of the community was murdered in November 2023 and the beneficiaries are at risk due to their work in defense of their collective rights. The IACHR highlighted the imminence of the risk, underlining the recent materialization of the murder of the community leader and the continuity of the threatening events. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to grant the precautionary measure and requested that the State of Peru:

- a. adopt the necessary and culturally appropriate measures to safeguard the life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries. Among other things, it is requested to adopt the essential measures to ensure that the beneficiaries who are displaced in the city of Tarapoto can return safely to their community;
- b. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and/or their representatives; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to these precautionary measures, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 20/24 (FOLLOW-UP)
PM 887-19 - Families of the Nueva Austria del Sira Community, Peru

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to issue the present Resolution on Follow-up of precautionary measures in accordance with the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure. The Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State in favor of the beneficiaries and considered that a situation of risk persists, as well as making assessments regarding the scope of the measures. Consequently, in accordance with Article 25 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, the Commission decided as follows:

- a. to continue to monitor the precautionary measures granted in favor of the families of the Nueva Austria del Sira Community in the terms of Resolution 57/2019;
- b. to request the State to reinforce the protection measures adopted and send the requested information, in the terms of this resolution;
- c. to request the representation to provide updated information on the risk situation of the families of the Nueva Austria del Sira Community in the terms of this resolution;
- d. to require that both parties continue carrying out the relevant concerted actions, in order to reach agreements aimed at mitigating the identified risk factors and the protection of the families of the Nueva Austria del Sira Community;
- e. to continue to promote the appropriate follow-up measures in terms of Article 25.10 and other provisions of its Rules of Procedure.

UNITED STATES*Resolution No. 6/24 (GRANT) PM 1028-23 - Brenda Evers Andrew, United States

On February 26, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Brenda Evers Andrew. The request indicates that Ms. Andrew is at risk given the imminent execution of the death penalty. The applicants also submitted a petition alleging violation of several articles of the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man: due process, right to equality before law, right to a fair trial and adequate defense. In particular, the applicants alleged that her trial was loaded with gender-based stereotypes and a discriminatory narrative. For its part, the State reported that it forwarded the request for precautionary measures to the Attorney General of the state of Oklahoma and reaffirmed its position that the Commission lacks authority to require States to take precautionary measures.

Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law offered, the Commission considered that the information presented shows prima facie that there is a serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm to Ms. Andrew's rights to life and personal integrity, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure. Furthermore, should Ms. Andrew be executed before the Commission has the opportunity to examine the merits of his petition, any eventual decision would be irrelevant and would cause irreparable harm. Accordingly, the Commission requested that the United States of America:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the life and personal integrity of Ms. Brenda Evers Andrew; and
- b. refrain from carrying out the death penalty on Ms. Brenda Evers Andrew until the IACHR has had the opportunity to reach a decision on her petition.

Resolution No. 18/24 (LIFT)
PM 53-99 - Mary and Carrie Dann, United States

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Mary and Carrie Dann regarding the United States of America. At the time of taking the decision, the Commission observes that the merits of the case have been resolved and the scope of the State's obligations has been settled, rendering the precautionary measures at hand moot. In addition, the Commission verified that it is not possible to identify a current situation that places the beneficiaries at risk in the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure. The IACHR will continue to follow up on Report N° 75/02, published on December 27th, 2002.

URUGUAY*Resolution No. 17/24 (LIFT)
PM 402-17 - Jair Krischke, Uruguay

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Jair Krischke, in Uruguay. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during implementation, the progress in the procedures to mitigate the risk, as well as the lack of information from the representation. The representation sent its last communication on October 15, 2019, and did not respond to the requests for information issued between 2019, 2022, and 2023. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these measures.

VENEZUELA*Resolution No. 26/24 (EXTENSION AND FOLLOW-UP)
PM 438-15 - Members of the Venezuelan Program of Education-Action on Human Rights (PROVEA), Venezuela

On April 29, 2024, the IACHR decided to follow up and extend precautionary measures in favor of members of the Venezuelan Program of Education-Action on Human Rights in Venezuela. According to the request, the members of PROVEA are at risk in the context of their work as human rights defenders in the current situation of Venezuela, considering the visibility of the institution and its coordinators, the frequent stigmatizing remarks made by high-ranking State authorities in the media, and the surveillance and monitoring by State agents. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to require that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the life and personal integrity of the persons identified as members of the PROVEA team;
- b. adopt the necessary measures so that the beneficiaries can carry out their activities as human rights defenders without being subjected to acts of violence, threats, and harassment;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to these precautionary measures, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 31/24 (GRANT)
PM 288-24 - Joel Antonio García Hernández, Venezuela

On May 13, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Joel Antonio García Hernández, lawyer and human rights defender, who has been suffering threats and aggression related to his work in defense of people considered “political prisoners” in Venezuela. Despite having filed complaints and requests for protection to the internal authorities, no protection measures have been implemented by State bodies to prevent further attacks, and no progress has been made in the investigations. For its part, the State, although informed, has not submitted a response. The Commission, after evaluating the allegations, as well as the context of hostility in the country against legal defenders and the lack of response from the State, understood, prima facie, that the requirements of seriousness, urgency, and irreparable harm are present.

In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Joel Antonio García Hernández, in accordance with the applicable international standards and obligations, including acts of risk attributable to third parties;
- b. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out his work as a defense lawyer without being subjected to acts of intimidation, threats, or other acts of violence in the exercise thereof;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 46/24 (GRANT)
PM 862-24 - María Andreina Oropeza Camacho, Venezuela

On August 10, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of María Andreina Oropeza Camacho, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Venezuela. The requesting party alleged that María Andreina Oropeza Camacho, state coordinator of the campaign command of presidential candidate Edmundo González, has been in a situation of “forced disappearance” since August 6, 2024, after having suffered an allegedly arbitrary search of her residence by agents of the General Directorate of Military Counterintelligence (DGCIM). It was reported that she managed to record and broadcast live, from her social networks, when the State agents raided her residence. Later, her phone was confiscated. They add that her mother has been looking for her in all the detention centers in Guanare and Acarigua, without receiving news of her whereabouts and state of health. The IACHR took into account that the beneficiary was deprived of her liberty by State agents and her whereabouts are unknown to date, in the context of repression during the post-election protests in the country. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, it requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of María Andreina Oropeza Camacho. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and her current circumstances, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining her whereabouts or fate, and
- b. report on the actions taken in order to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 49/24
PM 533-17 - Williams Dávila, Venezuela

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted on August 14, 2024, the Follow-up and Modification Resolution 49/2024 in relation to the situation of Williams Dávila in Venezuela (PM-533-17). The IACHR expressed particular concern about the ongoing risk faced by the beneficiary since the granting of the PM, without the State having adopted protection measures in his favor, and that the risk has increased after his whereabouts have been unknown since August 8, 2024, following his alleged arbitrary detention by State agents in the Plaza de Los Palos Grandes, in Caracas, Venezuela. The IACHR took note of public information that a criminal complaint for “forced disappearance” was filed with the Public Prosecutor’s Office, highlighting the health situation of the beneficiary and recalling his status as an elderly person. After analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in light of the context of repression in the post-electoral protests in Venezuela, the Commission believed that the current situation of Williams Dávila was part of a cycle of events against him that seek to remove him from public debate. Therefore, pursuant to Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that the State of Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the life and personal integrity of Mr. Williams Dávila;
- b. take the necessary measures to guarantee that Mr. Williams Dávila can carry out his activities as a member of the National Assembly without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence in the exercise of his functions;
- c. report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and his circumstances, or the measures to determine his whereabouts or fate;
- d. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 50/24 (GRANT)
PM 883-24 - Roland Oswaldo Carreño Gutiérrez, Venezuela

On August 17, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Roland Oswaldo Carreño Gutiérrez, journalist, political activist, and national leader of the opposition party Voluntad Popular. On August 2, 2024, in Caracas, he was reportedly deprived of his liberty by agents of the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN). To date, his whereabouts are unknown and it is estimated that he had been “forcibly disappeared.”

When evaluating the decision, the Commission observed, in addition to the contextual monitoring of Venezuela, the follow-up carried out by the Special Rapporteurship for Freedom of Expression of the IACHR on the situation of the beneficiary after his detention in 2020. The Commission highlighted the context of systematic persecution against the opposition in Venezuela and considered the information indicating that he was allegedly detained by State agents to be of particular concern. It also highlighted the impossibility of activating internal institutions to request protection. The Commission considered that the beneficiary faces a situation of extreme vulnerability as his current location and whereabouts are unknown. The Commission expressed its concern given that the beneficiary’s situation could have a chilling effect on other journalists being able to express themselves freely in the current post-electoral context of the country. After analyzing the available information, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Roland Oswaldo Carreño Gutiérrez. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and his current circumstances, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining his whereabouts or fate, and

- b. report on the actions taken in order to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 51/24

PM 359-16 - Américo de Grazia, Venezuela

On August 17, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted Follow-up and Modification Resolution 51/2024 regarding the situation of Américo de Grazia in Venezuela (PM-359-16). The IACHR expressed particular concern about the continued risk faced by the beneficiary since the granting of the PM, without the State having adopted protection measures in his favor, and that the risk has increased after his official whereabouts have been unknown since August 8, 2024, following his alleged arbitrary detention by State agents in Caracas, Venezuela. The IACHR took note of complaints filed before different bodies regarding these facts. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in light of the context of repression in the post-election protests in Venezuela, the Commission believed that the current situation of Américo de Grazia is part of a cycle of events against him that seek to remove him from public debate. Therefore, under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that the State of Venezuela:

- a. Adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary;
- b. Implement the necessary measures to ensure that the proposed beneficiary can carry out his activities as opposition leader in Venezuela, without being subject to threats, harassment, or acts of violence;
- c. Report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and his current circumstances, or provide information on the measures to determine his whereabouts or fate;
- d. Consult and agree upon on the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- e. Report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PM 900-24 - Carmen Leonor García Azuaje, Venezuela

On August 23, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Carmen Leonor García Azuaje. It was informed that Carmen Leonor García Azuaje is secretary of the opposition party “Alianza Bravo Pueblo”. On August 17, 2024, the beneficiary was apprehended in the center of the city of Puerto Ayacucho in Amazonas state by officers of the Strategic Intelligence Division of the Bolivarian National Police. From the moment of her arrest, the whereabouts of the beneficiary is unknown. Therefore, it was alleged that the situation of the beneficiary is one of “forced disappearance”.

The Commission, at the time of evaluating the decision, considered the circumstances that preceded the detention of the beneficiary to be of special importance, in addition to the contextual monitoring of the country carried out by the IACHR. Likewise, the Commission expressed its special concern for the fact that since the moment she was detained by agents of the Bolivarian National Police, her whereabouts are unknown. The Commission highlighted that the beneficiary, in addition to being the secretary of the opposition party “Alianza Bravo Pueblo” in the state of Amazonas, has also been the target of threats and harassment due to her participation as an electoral witness in the July 2024 presidential elections in Venezuela. The Commission considered that the beneficiary is in a total lack of protection against the situations she could be facing at present after her whereabouts are unknown. After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Carmen Leonor García Azuaje. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and the circumstances of her detention, or the measures taken to determine her whereabouts or fate. The Commission considers it necessary for the State to specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review her detention if she has been charged with a crime. If not, specify the reasons why she has not been released to date;
- b. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out her activities as a member of an opposition party without being subjected to threats, harassment or acts of violence; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 55/24 (GRANT)

PM 899-24 - Freddy Francisco Superlano Salinas, Venezuela

On August 26, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Freddy Francisco Superlano Salinas. It was alleged that Freddy Francisco Superlano Salinas is a political leader and serves as national coordinator of the Voluntad Popular party. On July 30, 2024, in Caracas, the beneficiary was arbitrarily deprived of his freedom by alleged state agents affiliated with the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN). They applicants stated that, since his arrest, the beneficiary's whereabouts have been unknown. Having analyzed the information available, pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that the State of Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Freddy Francisco Superlano Salinas. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and his current circumstances, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining his whereabouts or fate. The Commission considers it necessary for the State to specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review his detention if he had been charged with a crime. Otherwise, provide a detailed explanation for the reasons why the individual has not yet been released;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary can carry out his activities as a member of an opposition party without facing threats, harassment, or acts of violence; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PM 907-24 - Ana Carolina Guaita Barreto, Venezuela

On August 27, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of the journalist Ana Carolina Guaita Barreto, upon considering that she is at serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Venezuela. According to the request, the proposed beneficiary was arbitrarily arrested on August 20, 2024 and taken to the headquarters of the Directorate of Citizen Security at the Governor's Office of La Guaira (Dirección de Seguridad Ciudadana de la Gobernación de la Guaira). On August 22, members of the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service allegedly transported her to an unknown location. The applicants characterized the situation as a "forced disappearance." It was added that the beneficiary's parents are in hiding due to political persecution. For this reason, according to the available information, third parties have made search efforts by visiting the Directorate of Citizen Security at the Governor's Office of La Guaira to inquire about the proposed beneficiary's whereabouts. However, they were unable to obtain any information. At the judicial level, an attempt was made to file a writ of habeas corpus, which was reportedly not accepted by the relevant judicial authority. Given the lack of response from the State, the Commission had no elements to assess the actions that may have been initiated in her favor.

The IACHR considered the seriousness of the situation that the proposed beneficiary faces, which is exacerbated by the context in which she is immersed, as well as her complete lack of protection in light of the events she may currently be experiencing, given that her whereabouts are unknown. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, it requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Ana Carolina Guaita Barreto. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and her current circumstances, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining her whereabouts or fate. The Commission considers it necessary for the State to specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review her detention if she had been charged with a crime. Otherwise, provide a detailed explanation for the reasons why the individual has not yet been released;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary can carry out her journalistic activities without facing threats, harassment, or acts of violence; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PM 928-24 - Perkins Rocha Contreras, Venezuela

On September 2, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights adopted Resolution 61/2024, by which it granted precautionary measures for the benefit of Perkins Rocha Contreras after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela.

The applicants indicated that Perkins Rocha Contreras is the Legal Coordinator of the Vente Venezuela party and representative of the Comando Venezuela before the National Electoral Council. He is a lawyer and personal advisor to María Corina Machado, National Coordinator of the Vente Venezuela party. Perkins Rocha was detained on August 27, 2024, by hooded and armed officers, who, after a strong struggle, allegedly took him away without an arrest warrant. Since then, his official whereabouts are unknown. According to public information, the wife of the proposed beneficiary received a message that Mr. Rocha is at the headquarters of the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN), a place where they had previously denied his presence. The family is aware that the proposed beneficiary is charged with various crimes, such as terrorism and treason. However, neither the family nor his trusted lawyer have been able to see him or confirm his legal situation.

After analyzing the submissions of fact and law furnished by the applicants, the Commission considered that the proposed beneficiary is in a serious and urgent situation, given that to date his whereabouts are unknown. Consequently, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Perkins Rocha Contreras. In particular, among others, inform whether the beneficiary is in State custody at the SEBIN headquarters and the circumstances of his detention; specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a competent court to review his detention after having been charged with crimes; or, otherwise, specify the reasons why he has not been released to date; and guarantee the beneficiary's contact with his family and trusted attorneys, and provide them with the minimum official information on his legal situation;

- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary can carry out his activities as a member of an opposition party without facing threats, harassment, or acts of violence;
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 62/24 (GRANT)*PM 937-24 - Eleanger David Navas Vidal, Venezuela

On September 2, 2024, the IACHR adopted precautionary measures in favor of Eleanger David Navas Vidal. It was indicated that the beneficiary is a community manager of the newspaper Oriental. On August 3, 2024, the beneficiary was deprived of his liberty by members of the Bolivarian National Police (PNB). The family members were informed that Eleanger David was transferred to Yare prison on August 26, 2024. However, at that place, they were informed that the beneficiary was not detained. To date, the beneficiary's whereabouts are unknown.

At the time of analyzing the request, the Commission highlighted, in addition to the current context in Venezuela, that the detention and subsequent lack of information about the beneficiary's fate would be closely linked to his role as community manager of the Instagram account of a newspaper whose editorial line is not aligned with the current government. The Commission identified that, since August 26, 2024, his whereabouts are unknown. In addition, his relatives have not been able to obtain official information about his current whereabouts despite the search actions carried out. They have no contact with the beneficiary and have not received any information about any action taken by the assigned public defender.

After analyzing the submissions of fact and law furnished by the applicants, the Commission considered that the beneficiary is in a serious and urgent situation, given that to date his whereabouts are unknown. Consequently, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Eleanger David Navas Vidal. In particular, among others, indicate the detention center where the proposed beneficiary is currently held and clarify his legal situation; allow access and contact with his relatives and trusted attorneys; specify the actions the public defender has taken in favor of the proposed beneficiary; detail whether his current situation has been subject to judicial review; report on the detention conditions in which he is held; and evaluate the granting of alternative measures to the deprivation of liberty, considering the exceptional nature of pretrial detention; and
- b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 63/24 (GRANT)*PM 931-24 - Biagio Pilieri Gianninoto y Jesús Alfredo Pilieri Vasile, Venezuela

On September 6, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights adopted Resolution 63/2024, by which it granted precautionary measures in favor of Biagio Pilieri Gianninoto and Jesús Alfredo Pilieri Vasile after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Venezuela.

After analyzing the submissions of fact and law furnished by the applicants, the Commission observed that in the post-electoral context of Venezuela, and taking into account the applicable prima facie standard, it is proven that the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries are at serious risk, especially after their detention on August 28, 2024, by SEBIN and since the official whereabouts of Biagio Pilieri are currently unknown. Consequently, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries. In particular, among others, inform whether Biagio Pileri Gianninoto is in State custody at the SEBIN headquarters and the circumstances of his detention; specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a competent court to review his detention after having been charged with crimes; or, otherwise, specify the reasons why he has not been released to date; specify whether the beneficiary has undergone a medical evaluation and submit the corresponding documentary support; and guarantee the beneficiary's contact with his family and trusted attorneys, and provide them with the minimum official information on his legal situation;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that Biagio Pileri Gianninoto and Jesús Alfredo Pileri can carry out their activities as members of an opposition party without facing threats, harassment, or acts of violence; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 64/24 (GRANT)*PM 941-24 - Nelida del Rosario Sánchez Oropeza, Venezuela

On September 6, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Nelida del Rosario Sánchez Oropeza, considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Venezuela. According to the request, the beneficiary is the national training coordinator of the non-governmental organization Súmate, in Venezuela, and was detained on August 26, 2024, by agents of the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN). On August 28, 2024, she was transferred to an unknown location. It was added that she was suffering from illnesses that would require special care and that, at the moment, there is no news of her state of health and whether she was receiving adequate medical attention. Family members undertook a search effort, going to the SEBIN headquarters in Helicoide, Caracas, to seek news of the whereabouts of the proposed beneficiary. Despite their efforts, the officials did not provide any information. In addition, an attempt was made to file a complaint of forced disappearance, which was not received by the competent authority. Given the lack of response from the State, the Commission had no elements to evaluate the actions that would have been initiated on her behalf.

Consequently, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, Venezuela was requested to:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Nelida del Rosario Sánchez Oropeza. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and her current circumstances, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining her whereabouts or fate. The Commission deems it necessary for the State to specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review her detention if she had been charged with a crime. Otherwise, provide a detailed explanation for the reasons why the beneficiary has not yet been released. In any case, the State is requested to specify whether the beneficiary has undergone a medical evaluation and to provide the corresponding documentation;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary can carry out her human rights defense activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence; and
- c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 67/24 (GRANT)*PM 952-24 - Osmary Gabriela Sánchez Chirinos, Venezuela

On September 27, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Osmary Gabriela Sánchez Chirinos, who is at risk given that she is pregnant, is currently deprived of her Liberty, and is not receiving adequate medical care for her situation. Upon analyzing the request, the Commission took into account not only the Venezuelan context but highlighted that the beneficiary was arrested within the framework of the so-called “Operation Tun Tun,” aimed at arresting individuals who are perceived as opponents of the regime. Furthermore, the Commission highlighted that, prior to being deprived of her liberty, the beneficiary was unaware of the existence of any criminal proceedings or detention orders against her, that a public defender had been assigned to her, and that she had been subjected to threats from her guards, among other situations. The Commission emphasized that the beneficiary’s detention conditions are not adequate, particularly given her pregnancy and the care she requires. Upon analyzing the available information, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Osmary Gabriela Sánchez Chirinos, with a gender perspective, in accordance with applicable international standards and obligations;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that her detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards on the matter. In particular, guarantee access to the corresponding medical diagnoses and define her medical treatment;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 71/24 (GRANT)
PM 973-24 - Juan Pablo Guanipa Villalobos, Venezuela

On October 7, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Juan Pablo Guanipa Villalobos, considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela. According to the request, he is a member of the Venezuelan opposition and has been subject to intimidation, harassment and aggression at least since 2016. Following the July 2024 presidential elections, he was allegedly subject to motorized persecution, on August 3 and 28, 2024, by SEBIN agents. The harassment allegedly extended to several members of his family, leading to the closure of family businesses, siege of his family home, and cancellation of passports. His brother was also reportedly detained under allegations of arbitrariness. After analyzing the information, the IACHR requested that the State of Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Juan Pablo Guanipa Villalobos;
- b. ensure the corresponding measures to guarantee that the beneficiary can continue to carry out his activities of political participation without being subjected to threats, harassment or acts of violence in the exercise of these activities. In particular, the State must ensure that its agents respect the rights and personal integrity of the beneficiary in accordance with the standards established by international human rights law, as well as in relation to acts of risk attributable to third parties;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 74/24 (GRANT)*PM 1061-24 - Andreina Zerpa Vivas, Yolivares Infante Camacho and Eichler Hernández Ortuño, Venezuela

On October 22, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Andreina Zerpa Vivas, Yolivares Infante Camacho and Eichler Hernández Ortuño, after considering that their rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the identified persons have been subject to threats and harassment, following their participation as campaign members of Edmundo González and María Corina Machado in the State of Guárico for the presidential elections of July 2024 in Venezuela. The request refers to various events that allegedly occurred in the context of persecution of the political opposition in Venezuela.

Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law made by the requesting party, the Commission requested that the State of Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Andreina Zerpa Vivas, Yolivares Infante Camacho, and Eichler Hernández Ortuño;
- b. ensure the corresponding measures to guarantee that the beneficiaries can continue to carry out their activities of political participation without being subjected to threats, harassment or acts of violence in the exercise of these activities. In particular, the State must ensure that its agents respect the rights and personal integrity of the beneficiaries in accordance with the standards established by international human rights law, as well as in relation to acts of risk attributable to third parties. Likewise, it must provide information on existing criminal investigations against the proposed beneficiaries; exhibit the judicial arrest warrants that exist, if any; and allow them to have security guarantees in the development of the eventual investigations;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 78/24 (GRANT)*PM 1042-24, 1043-24 - Israel Moisés Crespo Sulbarán, J.D.C.C., and Gustavo Adolfo Torres

On October 28, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures for the benefit of Israel Moisés Crespo Sulbarán, J.D.C.C. and Gustavo Adolfo Torres Zambrano with respect to Venezuela. The proposed beneficiaries are reported to be at risk following their detention by law enforcement agents on July 30, 2024. To date, the whereabouts of Israel Moisés Crespo Sulbarán and Gustavo Adolfo Torres Zambrano are unknown following their transfer out of the place of detention where they were being held; and the adolescent J.D.C.C. is said to be in inadequate conditions of detention. Consequently, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the proposed beneficiaries. In particular, inform whether Israel Moisés Crespo Sulbarán and Gustavo Adolfo Torres Zambrano are in the custody of the State and the circumstances of their detention, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining their whereabouts or fate. The Commission considers it necessary for the State to specify whether the beneficiaries were brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review their detention if they had been charged with crimes. Otherwise, specify the reasons why they have not been released to date;
- b. ensure the corresponding measures so that the wife of Israel Moises Crespo can continue to denounce her partner's situation without being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation or acts of violence;

- c. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries' detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards on the matter, including: i) guarantee that they are not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, and aggression inside the prison; ii) provide access to adequate and specialized medical care and to the necessary medical care; iii) guarantee regular contact and access to their families and lawyers; and iv) in the case of J.D.C.C., take the corresponding measures in accordance with his best interests; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 79/24 (GRANT)*PM 896-24 - Leocenis Manuel García Osorio, Venezuela

On October 28, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Leocenis Manuel García Osorio, considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela. According to the request, the proposed beneficiary is a leader of the political party "ProCiudadanos" in Venezuela. According to the request, he was detained by state agents on September 11, 2024, after posting a video on his social networks criticizing recent government actions towards Venezuelans. The beneficiary's father tried to obtain official information on his whereabouts or state of health, without receiving a response. Family members have been unable to access domestic remedies due to the lack of information provided by state authorities. Given the lack of response from the State, the Commission had no elements to assess the actions that may have been initiated on his behalf.

- a. Consequently, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, it requested that Venezuela:
- b. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary. In particular, among others, inform whether Leocenis Manuel García Osorio is under State custody and the circumstances of his detention; specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a competent court to review his detention after having been charged with crimes; or, otherwise, clarify the reasons why he has not been released to date; specify whether the beneficiary has undergone a medical evaluation and submit the corresponding documentary support; and guarantee the beneficiary's contact with his family and trusted attorneys, and provide them with the minimum official information on his legal status;
- c. implement the necessary measures to ensure that Leocenis Manuel García Osorio can carry out his political activities without facing threats, harassment, or acts of violence; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 80/24 (GRANT)*PM 1150-24 - Jan Darmovzal, Venezuela

On October 31, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights granted precautionary measures in favor of Jan Darmovzal after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela.

According to the request, the beneficiary is an active reservist in the Venezuelan Army and was traveling in Venezuela for tourism. The beneficiary was reportedly arrested on September 5, 2024, by State security agents in the town of Atabapo, Amazonas State. Since that date his whereabouts have not been known. It was alleged that no arrest warrant was issued, nor an investigation against him. Likewise, he is reportedly being held incommunicado, and it has not been made known in which security agency he is being held, nor has there been any information on his physical or psychological condition.

Consequently, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and the circumstances of his detention, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining his whereabouts or fate. The Commission considers it essential for the State to specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review his detention if he had been charged with a crime. Otherwise, indicate the reasons why he has not been released to date. In any case, it requests that the State specify whether the beneficiary has undergone a medical evaluation, and to provide the relevant documentary support and indicate whether communication has been maintained with his country of nationality; and
- b. report on the actions taken in order to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PM 1122-24 - S.J.R.G., Venezuela

On November 7, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) granted precautionary measures in favor of S.J.R.G., after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela. The request indicated that the beneficiary is an activist of the LGBTI community, a volunteer of the opposition political party Vente Venezuela and has been deprived of his liberty since August 6, 2024. It was alleged that he was subjected to torture, that he is in a state of malnutrition and dehydration, as well as that he does not receive the medical attention necessary to treat the HIV he suffers from. The State did not provide information on the matter. The IACHR valued the lack of information on the crimes of which the beneficiary is accused and what his legal situation is. It also considered the seriousness of the risk posed by the allegations of lack of care for HIV and the lack of knowledge of his current state of health and the actions that the State is taking to mitigate the alleged risk.

Consequently, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, it requested that the State of Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of S.J.R.G., in accordance with the applicable international standards;
- b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that his detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter. In particular, ensuring that he is provided with the necessary medical treatment, as well as water and adequate food. The Commission considers it essential for the State to specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review his detention if he has been charged with a crime. Otherwise, indicate the reasons why he has not been released to date;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 84/24 (FOLLOW-UP, MODIFICATION AND EXTENSION) PM 967-19 - Delsa Jennifer Solórzano Bernal, her work team, and P.L.I.S., Venezuela

On November 12, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted Follow-up, Modification, and Extension Resolution 84/2024 in relation to the situation of Delsa Jennifer Solórzano Bernal in Venezuela (PM-967-19). The IACHR considered that the risk that has been observed since the granting of the PM against the beneficiary continues and has been increased in the pre-electoral and post-electoral period of the 2024 presidential election, without the State having adopted protection measures in her favor.

Likewise, it considered that certain identified persons of her team and P.L.I.S. share the risk, for which reason the measures in her favor were extended. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission concluded that the situation of Ms. Delsa Jennifer Solórzano Bernal continues to exist and decided to extend the precautionary measures in favor of Jonathan Gerardi, Eliannys Vidoza, Axel Espinoza, Daniel Murolo, María Isabel Gudiño, Valentina Rodríguez, and P.L.I.S. Therefore, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Delsa Jennifer Solórzano Bernal, the members of her work team, and P.L.I.S., duly identified in this resolution;
- b. implement the necessary measures, with a gender perspective, to guarantee that the beneficiaries can carry out their political activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 87/24 (EXTENSION AND FOLLOW-UP) PM 409-23 - Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero and family, Venezuela

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted on November 25, 2024 the Follow-up, Modification and Extension Resolution 87/2024 regarding the situation of Franklin Caldera Cordero in Venezuela. The IACHR considered that the risk that places the beneficiary at risk has been observed since the granting of the precautionary measure, continues, and has been extended to his son, Franklin Caldera Martínez, as well as to his wife, Yuraima Martínez. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission concluded that the situation of Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero remains and it is extended to his son, Franklin Caldera Martínez, as well as to his wife, Yuraima Martínez. Consequently, the IACHR decided:

- a. To continue to follow up on the situation of Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero;
- b. To extend the precautionary measures in favor of Franklin Caldera Martínez (son) and Yuraima Martínez;
- c. To modify the scope of these precautionary measures, and require that the State of Venezuela:
  - i. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero, Franklin Caldera Martínez and Yuraima Martínez. In the case of Franklin Caldera Martínez, the measures must include those necessary to also protect his right to health;
  - ii. adopt the necessary measures to guarantee that Franklin Alfredo Caldera Cordero can continue to carry out his work as a human rights defender without being subjected to threats, intimidation, harassment or acts of violence in the exercise of his duties. In particular, it must formally inform the beneficiary of the existence of any investigation process against him, including at least: the facts under investigation, the crimes he is accused of, the prosecutor's office in charge of the investigation, and the competent judicial authority in charge of the investigation. The State must allow the beneficiary and/or his representatives to have access to the entire criminal file against him, if it exists, allowing him to file the corresponding appeals and guaranteeing his security in its processing;
  - iii. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the conditions of detention of Franklin Caldera Martínez (son) are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, among them: guarantee that he is not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, aggression and torture inside the prison; guarantee access to adequate and specialized medical care, as well as to the necessary treatment and medication, and immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment of his health situation; and evaluate the possibility of granting alternative measures to the deprivation of liberty given the impossibility of protecting his rights in light of the current conditions of detention;

- iv. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representation; and
- v. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to the adoption and validity of these precautionary measures, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring. In particular, the State is requested to conduct an investigation with due diligence into the threats, allegations of torture and other acts of violence reported, including those that could have taken place by State officials and/or agents against the beneficiaries.

Resolution No. 88/24 (GRANT)
PM 1237-24 - Eduardo Emiro Labrador, Venezuela

On November 25, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Eduardo Emiro Labrador, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation since his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the beneficiary was detained on October 18, 2024, by agents of the Zulia Regional Police and transferred to an unknown location. The situation has continued despite several domestic remedies filed. The State did not respond. Therefore, in terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the State of Venezuela is requested to:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Eduardo Emiro Labrador. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and his current circumstances, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining his whereabouts or fate. The Commission deems it essential for the State to specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review his detention, if he had been charged with a crime. Otherwise, indicate the reasons why he has not been released to date. In any case, the State is requested to report on the status of the criminal file that has been opened against the beneficiary, and to allow access to family members and legal representatives. Likewise, it is required to specify whether the beneficiary has undergone a medical evaluation, and provide the corresponding documentary support;
- b. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out his activities, as a member of an opposition political party and a deputy of the Legislative Council of the state of Zulia, without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary, his family, and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 89/24 (FOLLOW-UP)
PM 125-19 - María Corina Machado, Venezuela

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) adopted on November 25, 2024 the Follow-up and Modification Resolution 89/2024 in relation to the situation of María Corina Machado Parisca in Venezuela (PM-125-19). The IACHR considered that the risk that has been observed since the granting of the PM against the beneficiary continues, and has increased in the post-electoral period of the 2024 presidential election, without the State having adopted protection measures in her favor. After analyzing the allegations of fact and law, in the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission concluded that the situation of Mrs. María Corina Machado Parisca persists, and decided as follows:

- a. Continue to monitor the situation of María Corina Machado Parisca in Venezuela;
- b. Not to extend the precautionary measures in relation to the requested persons;
- c. Modify the scope of these precautionary measures and to require that the State:
  - i. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Ms. María Corina Machado Parisca;
  - ii. implement the necessary measures to guarantee that the beneficiary can continue to carry out her political participation activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence in the exercise thereof; In particular, to formally inform the beneficiary about the existence of any investigation against her, including at least: the facts under investigation, the alleged offenses, the prosecutor's office in charge of the investigation, and the competent judicial authority overseeing the case. The State must allow the beneficiary and/or her representation to have access to the entire criminal file against her, if it exists, thereby allowing her to submit the corresponding appeals and guaranteeing her security in the processing of the file;
  - iii. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representation; and
  - iv. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of these precautionary measures, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring. In particular, the State is requested to conduct an investigation with due diligence into the threats and acts of violence reported, including those that could have been against the beneficiary at the hands of State officials and/or agents.

Resolution No. 92/24 (EXTENSION, MODIFICATION, FOLLOW-UP, AND LIFT) PM 143-13, 181-19 - Identified members of the organization "Foro Penal", Venezuela

On November 28, 2024, the IACHR identified that the risk persists with respect to four persons who were beneficiaries of precautionary measures through Resolution 8/2015, Resolution 7/2019, and Resolution 64/2019. It also decided to protect 10 additional persons who are members of the same organization. The IACHR regretted the lack of information and implementation of protection measures by the State, which reportedly places the beneficiaries in a situation of lack of protection in the context of the country.

Upon analyzing the available information, the Commission decided:

- a. Extend the precautionary measures in favor of the following persons, currently members of the Foro Penal organization in Venezuela: Kennedy Tejada, Mayela Fonseca, Lucía Quintero, Pedro Arévalo, Arelys Ayala, Wicza Santos Matiz, Laura Valbuena, Raquel Sánchez Carrero, Franyer Jose Hernandez Valladares, and Marbella Gutiérrez;
- b. Maintain the precautionary measures in favor of Alfredo Romero, Gonzalo Himiob Santomé, Luis Betancourt, and Olnar Ortiz;
- c. Continue to monitor the situation of Olnar Ortiz under the registry of Precautionary Measures 143-13;
- d. Lift the precautionary measures regarding Yoseth Colmenares and Robiro Terán;

- e. Not to extend the measures in favor of Orlando Moreno and the other members of Foro Penal, while keeping the possibility open to submit additional information for future assessment.
- f. Modify the precautionary measures and require that the State of Venezuela:
  - i. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the members of Foro Penal duly identified in this resolution;
  - ii. implement the necessary measures to guarantee that the beneficiaries can carry out their human rights defense activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence. Specifically, the Commission requests a detailed report on the circumstances surrounding Kennedy Tejada's detention, including his current legal status and ensure that his relatives and trusted legal representatives can communicate with him. Regarding all beneficiaries, to formally inform about the existence of any investigation against them, including at least: the facts under investigation, the alleged offenses, the prosecutor's office in charge of the investigation, and the competent judicial authority overseeing the case. The State must allow the beneficiaries and/or their representation to have access to the entire criminal file against them, if it exists, thereby allowing them to file the corresponding appeals and guaranteeing their security in the processing of the file;
  - iii. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives;
  - iv. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 94/24 (GRANT)
PM 1219-24 - Jorge Luis Graterol Guzman, Venezuela

On December 4, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Jorge Luis Graterol Guzman, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. It was reported that he was the object of threats and intimidation. State officers reportedly indicated that they were not going to rest until they saw how he had his "toenails pulled out." Later, he was summoned by the Scientific, Penal, and Criminal Investigations Corps (CICPC) to appear for crimes against terrorism. This led him to seek shelter outside the city. Upon analyzing the available information, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Jorge Luis Graterol Guzman;
- b. implement the corresponding measures to guarantee that the beneficiary can continue to carry out his activities of political participation without being subject to threats, harassment or acts of violence in the exercise thereof. In particular, the State must ensure that state actors respect the beneficiary's rights and personal integrity in accordance with the standards established by international human rights law, and in relation to acts of risk attributable to third parties. Likewise, it must report on the existing criminal investigations against the beneficiary; present any judicial arrest warrants, if any; and allow him to have the security guarantees in the development of any investigations;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 97/24 (LIFT)
PM 994-16 – Matter of Lorenzo Mendoza and family, Venezuela

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Lorenzo Mendoza and his family, in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the State's request to lift in its report, as well as the lack of information from both parties since 2017. Upon currently not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these measures.

Resolution No. 99/24 (GRANT)
PM 1331-24 - Arley Danilo Espitia Lara, Venezuela

On December 16, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Arley Danilo Espitia Lara.

On September 13, 2024, he traveled by land from Cúcuta to Venezuela. Once at the border at the Ureña bridge, the migration authorities asked for his documentation and arrested him. From that moment on, his whereabouts have been unknown.

Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, the Commission considers that the proposed beneficiary is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his current location is unknown to date. Consequently, pursuant to the provisions of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary. In particular, inform whether the beneficiary is in custody of the State and his current circumstances, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining his whereabouts or fate. The Commission deems it essential for the State to specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review his detention, if he had been charged with a crime. Otherwise, indicate the reasons why he has not been released to date. In any case, it requests that the State specify whether the beneficiary has undergone a medical evaluation, and to provide the relevant documentary support and detail whether communication has been maintained with his country of nationality; and
- b. report on the actions taken in order to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 101/24 (GRANT)
PM 1213-24 - Gina Paola Mercado Núñez, Venezuela

On December 16th, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Gina Paola Mercado Núñez, upon considering that she is at serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Venezuela. According to the request, the beneficiary was deprived of her liberty on July 29, 2024, after recording the protests that took place in the country's post-electoral context. It is alleged that her current detention conditions put her at risk, particularly as she is not receiving adequate medical care for her health issues. The IACHR regretted the lack of response from the State. Therefore, pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, it requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the beneficiary's rights to life, personal integrity, and health, with a gender perspective, in accordance with the applicable international standards;
- b. implement the necessary measures to bring her detention conditions into line with applicable international standards. In particular, the following: make the corresponding medical diagnoses and define her medical treatment; allow her to receive sunlight on a regular basis; to provide her with food fit for human consumption and compatible with her health issues; to provide water and basic conditions for her hygiene; to ensure that she is not mistreated or physically assaulted; and facilitate contact with her trusted lawyer, giving them access to the criminal file that is being processed against the beneficiary;

- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 105/24 (GRANT)*PM 1426-24 - Jesús Alexander Armas Monasterios, Venezuela

On December 31, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Jesús Alexander Armas Monasterios after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the proposed beneficiary is a former Caracas councilor (2013-2018), political activist, and human rights defender, who was detained by Venezuelan security forces on December 10, 2024, in Caracas, Venezuela. To date there is no official information on the conditions of his current detention. The State did not provide information to the IACHR. Consequently, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

- a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Jesús Alexander Armas Monasterios. In particular, officially report whether he is in custody of the State and the circumstances of his detention; or else, the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;
- b. establish the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including:
  - i. guaranteeing regular contact with and access to his family members, lawyers, and representatives;
  - ii. officially report on the legal situation of the beneficiary in the framework of the criminal process in which he is said to be involved, as well as the reasons why he has not been released to date or taken before an independent court;
  - iii. immediately carry out a medical evaluation of his health and guarantee access to the necessary medical care;
- c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
- d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

5. Provisional measures

701. Provisional measures are provided for in Article 63(2) of the American Convention on Human Rights, which determines that, in situations of extreme gravity and urgency, when it is necessary to avoid irreparable harm to persons, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR) may grant provisional measures. Following the decision of the Inter-American Court to grant a provisional measure, the follow-up of its implementation passes to the Court. In addition, the Commission, at the request of the Court, continues periodically to provide observations and relevant information on the implementation of provisional measures.

702. In 2024, the IACHR filed a new request for provisional measures and two requests for extensions, all of which were granted by the I/A Court H.R.:

- Request for extension of provisional measures in the Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. case regarding Nicaragua.

On June 20, 2023, the Inter-American Commission requested the Inter-American Court of Human Rights to extend the provisional measures in the Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. case regarding Nicaragua to include 25 persons deprived of their liberty, who are in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency of irreparable harm to their rights.

The beneficiaries were detained between 2021 and 2024 in the context of criminalization of any person critical of or opposed to the current government, as well as civil society actors who attempt to participate in public, social, political or religious life. These people are currently being held in three detention centers: in the León Penitentiary System “Santos Bárcenas Centeno”, in the Jorge Navarro Penitentiary System - “La Modelo”, and in the Integral Penitentiary Establishment for Women - “La Esperanza”.

The Commission considered the situation of the identified persons to be of particular concern, considering that they have no communication with their families and lawyers, as well as being held in conditions of detention that put them at risk. This is aggravated by the lack of medical attention and allegations of aggression, intimidation and harassment by state agents. In addition, the individuals have been prevented from enjoying the minimum guarantees of any judicial process.

- Request for provisional measures in the Lovely Lamour case regarding Haiti.

On July 1, 2024, the IACHR requested provisional measures from the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in favor of Lovely Lamour, who is in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency of irreparable harm to her rights. On August 29, 2023, the Commission granted precautionary measures in favor of Lovely Lamour, through Resolution 49/2023, however, she did not receive the necessary medical and psychological care during her pregnancy and after childbirth, despite her request. According to the available information, her physical health has shown a serious deterioration. Lamour has reported experiencing back pain and other conditions related to her reproductive health. In addition, it has been mentioned that her mental health has been affected and deteriorated since the separation and subsequent death of her son, who was buried under the category of “indigent”.

Despite repeated actions to obtain information from the State of Haiti, the Commission has not received a response indicating the adoption of suitable and effective measures to mitigate the risk identified. The IACHR understood that Lovely Lamour’s situation has worsened significantly, affecting her safety and her living and health conditions. The proposed beneficiary is homeless, away from her usual residence, without identification documents or economic resources to access adequate medical treatment, and with a deficient diet. She is currently sleeping in a goods warehouse. The information suggests that he has been subject to threats from relatives of the person with whom he had an incident in 2023, which led to his arrest that year. In addition, at the place where she sleeps, she has been exposed to physical aggression after refusing to have sexual relations with some of the young men who are also there.

The Court granted provisional measures on July 4, 2024.<sup>215</sup>

- Request for extension of provisional measures in the Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. case regarding Nicaragua.

On October 3, 2024, the Inter-American Commission requested the Inter-American Court of Human Rights to extend the provisional measures in the Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. case against Nicaragua to include four persons deprived of their liberty, who are in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency of irreparable harm to their rights.

The proposed beneficiaries were detained between 2021 and 2023 in the context of the criminalization of any person identified or perceived as a critic or opponent of the current government and, in general, of civil society that attempts to participate in public, social, political or religious life in Nicaragua. The four persons are being held in the Jorge Navarro Penitentiary System “La Modelo” and in the Integral Penal Establishment for Women (EPIM) “La Esperanza”.

The Commission considered the situation particularly worrisome considering that the proposed beneficiaries are in detention conditions that put them at risk, such as lack of medical attention, allegations of aggression, intimidation and harassment by state agents and limited contact with their families and lawyers. In addition, the proposed beneficiaries have been denied the minimum guarantees of any judicial process.

703. During 2024, the Commission also submitted 92 legal briefs on provisional measures to the Inter-American Court. In addition, the IACHR presented its oral observations at a hearing convened by the Court held on June 17, 2024:

- Public Hearing Request for Provisional Measures in the Cases of Barrios Altos and La Cantuta v. Peru: the purpose of the request was to ask the Court to order the State to interrupt the legislative process and file Bill 6951/2023-CR. The same openly disobeys sentences issued by the Court by “automatically” establishing the statute of limitations, the nullity of sanctions, the non-enforceability of the same, and the prohibition of criminal prosecution of crimes for acts prior to 2002, which could be considered crimes against humanity or war crimes. On that occasion, the Commission recalled that the human rights violations that took place in the Barrios Altos and La Cantuta v. Peru cases, such as extrajudicial executions and forced disappearances, have been classified by the Commission and the Court as crimes against humanity. In these cases, the Court ruled that amnesty provisions, statutes of limitations and the establishment of exclusions of responsibility that seek to prevent the investigation and punishment of those responsible for these crimes are inadmissible. Thus, the IACHR warned the I/A Court H.R. that the request for provisional measures met the requirements of extreme gravity, urgency and irreparable harm, since it prevented access to justice for the victims of both cases.

6. Dissemination and transparency

704. In 2024, the IACHR continued its efforts to disseminate information on the precautionary measures mechanism and transparency about its operation with a view to increasing the knowledge of the users of the Inter-American system. Thus, the Commission, kept the section of its website for precautionary measures updated, publishing the resolutions adopted in the available translations. On the other hand, the IACHR updated its interactive map of precautionary measures, which compiles information on the resolutions issued by the Commission in this area, presenting qualitative and quantitative information on the precautionary measures granted, followed up and extended or lifted.

<sup>216</sup> I/A Court H.R., Matter of Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. v. Nicaragua, Provisional Measures, Order of November 27, 2024.

705. The Commission also disseminated information on precautionary measures through the publication of 94 press releases (PRs). In these, the IACHR publishes information on resolutions granting, extending, modifying and following up on precautionary measures (81 PRs), disseminates its work on requests for provisional measures before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (three PRs), and follows up on precautionary measures in force (10 PRs), in some cases publishing them jointly with the thematic and country rapporteurships.<sup>217</sup> The press releases also seek to urge States to adopt urgent measures, as in cases of the application of the death penalty.<sup>218</sup>

706. Regarding training on precautionary measures, in 2024, 13 training sessions were conducted for students, staff of international organizations, civil society organizations and state officials. Such training sessions may focus on the process of requesting precautionary measures, on the follow-up of existing measures, or both.

CHAPTER III

ACTIVITIES OF THE THEMATIC AND COUNTRY RAPPORTEURSHIPS, AND PROMOTION AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES

I. PART A. ACTIVITIES OF THE THEMATIC AND COUNTRY RAPPORTEURSHIPS

1. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (the Commission or the IACHR) carries out its functions of observation and monitoring of specific human rights issues through its country rapporteurships and thematic rapporteurships. These functions are performed in the countries of the region in different ways, including through in loco visits, working visits, press releases, requests for information to the States (letters based on Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights<sup>1</sup> and Article 18 of the Statute of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights<sup>2</sup>), among other instruments.

2. Additionally, the Commission carries out training and promotion activities by means of its special work units—and many times in conjunction with the rapporteurships—as part of their dissemination and training efforts to promote the inter-American human rights standards created through the inter-American system of human rights (ISHR) doctrine and jurisprudence. Their purpose is to help the civil society, networks of social players and member states to better understand these standards and to apply and incorporate them into national decisions, regulatory frameworks and public policy with a focus on human rights. In the Commission's view, strengthening state institutions is the foundation for the realization of human rights in the countries of the region.

3. As for the rapporteurships, they were appointed by the Inter-American Commission starting in 1990 and are aimed at serving certain individuals, groups and collectives that are particularly exposed to human rights violations due to their vulnerability and the historical discrimination against them. The purpose of having thematic rapporteurships is to strengthen, foster and systematize the work of the Inter-American Commission on specific issues, and to raise awareness of human rights among the peoples of the Americas.<sup>3</sup> The rapporteurships also support the Commission's work in developing legal standards; contribute to the dissemination of the inter-American system mechanisms; and promote access to national and international justice for individuals, groups and collectives related to their thematic focus. The Commission's rapporteurships work in close collaboration with different sectors from their particular fields of expertise, including the rapporteurships of the United Nations and other universal mechanisms, civil society organizations, States, academia, among others.

4. The thematic rapporteurships are governed by Article 15 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure,<sup>4</sup> as well as by the practices established by the Commission's Plenary. The Commission approves the reports and work plans of each rapporteurship and oversees the day-to-day execution of their mandates. Since these are specialized thematic offices created by the Commission itself, its Rules of Procedure precisely regulate their creation and the election of thematic rapporteurs. The Rules of Procedure also govern the functions of the

Commission in which its rapporteurships participate. These important set of practices and regulations govern the conduct of rapporteurships and establish rigorous procedures for action.

5. Thematic rapporteurships collaborate in the fulfillment of the Commission's main function of advocating for and defending human rights and serve as a consultative body of the OAS to this end.<sup>5</sup> In this regard, they may request information from the States' governments<sup>6</sup> and produce reports on the human rights measures they adopt.<sup>7</sup> They also issue recommendations for the implementation of progressive measures to promote human rights, in accordance with the mandate of the Commission.<sup>8</sup> The rapporteurs also prepare studies and reports relevant to their thematic functions.<sup>9</sup> Additionally, as part of their work, the rapporteurs may conduct working visits to the States and participate in in loco visits by the Commission, with the consent of or invitation from the relevant government.<sup>10</sup>

6. The Commission currently has eleven thematic rapporteurships:

- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (1990);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women (1994);
- Rapporteurship on Human Mobility (1996);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of the Child (1998);
- Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders and Justice Operators (2011);<sup>11</sup>
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons Deprived of Liberty (2004);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Afro-Descendants and against Racial Discrimination (2005);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Trans and Intersex Persons (2014);
- Rapporteurship on Memory, Truth and Justice (2019);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Older Persons (2019); and
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (2019).

7. The Commission also has the authority to create special rapporteurships headed by other persons designated by the Commission itself.<sup>12</sup> It is within this framework that, since 1997, there has been an Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE).<sup>13</sup> This is a permanent office, with independent operations and functions, working within the legal framework of the Commission.

8. On April 3, 2014, the Commission decided to create an Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA), considering the interdependent and indivisible nature of human rights and the importance of the protection and promotion of economic, social and cultural rights in the region. By appointing this new rapporteur, the Commission sought to reinforce and deepen its work in the defense and protection of economic, social and cultural rights in the Americas. This special rapporteurship was created as part of the process of strengthening the inter-American system, since both OAS member states and other parties of the inter-American system had expressed their interest in directing greater attention to the issue of economic, social and cultural rights. This process resulted in the Commission creating specialized institutional spaces. It was during its 146th regular period of sessions, held from October 29 to November 16, 2012, that the Commission established the Unit on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ESCR Unit), which later became the current Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights.

9. Regarding the latest changes in the structure of the thematic rapporteurships, it should be noted that the mandate of the Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons Deprived of Liberty was expanded to include the prevention of and fight against torture, and the mandate of the Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders was expanded to include justice operators. Finally, it should be noted that in 2024 the IACHR decided to change the name of the “Rapporteurship on the Rights of Migrants” to “Rapporteurship on Human Mobility” in order to reinforce the broad scope of its mandate.

10. By virtue of their mandates, rapporteurships have promoted initiatives on priority issues in the region relevant to their focal areas. These regional initiatives have been strengthened by means of participatory information-gathering processes, in which the views of States and the civil society were included; the preparation and presentation of regional reports on pressing issues; outreach activities to disseminate knowledge of the inter-American system standards; questionnaires and consultations with experts; thematic hearings and working visits; press releases; and other mechanisms. As for individual cases, the rapporteurships participate and play a key role in the specialized processing of individual petitions regarding human rights violations received by the Commission. They also take part in the analysis of requests for precautionary measures and provide support in hearings and friendly settlements.

11. As part of their role in monitoring and protecting human rights, the Commission’s thematic rapporteurships strive to consistently work in an articulated and strategic manner, taking into consideration intersectionality and the fact that certain individuals, groups and collectives are at an increased risk of human rights violations in the hemisphere. In addition, over the years, the rapporteurships have identified issues that require cross-cutting and joint action by the different thematic specialists, such as those involving indigenous women or migrants deprived of liberty, among others, which has led to initiatives based on the interaction of the different thematic rapporteurships.

12. In light of the foregoing and considering the many different observation, monitoring, promotion and training activities of the Commission’s rapporteurships, this chapter has been divided into two sections: the first one addresses human rights observation and monitoring activities carried out by the Commission through in loco and working visits, press releases, requests for information and thematic and country reports (A), and the second one reports on training and promotion activities (B).

A. IACHR observation and monitoring activities in 2024

1. In loco visits

13. During this period, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights conducted two in loco visits: to Colombia and to Guatemala.

a. In loco visit to Colombia

14. The Inter-American Commission conducted an in loco visit to Colombia between April 15 and April 19, 2024. Its goal was to study the impact of the different forms of violence on the situation of human rights in the country, with a special focus on the ethnic-racial and gender dimensions. To this end, the visit centered mainly on two aspects: i) the implementation of the 2016 Peace Agreement; and ii) citizen security, from the perspective of the various manifestations of violence and the State’s response to this problem.

15. The delegation comprised the President of the Commission, Commissioner Roberta Clarke; Second Vice President and Rapporteur for Colombia, José Luis Caballero; Commissioners Stuardo Ralón, Arif

Bulkan, Andrea Pochak and Gloria De Mees; Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum; Assistant Executive Secretary María Claudia Pulido; Chief of Staff Patricia Colchero; experts from the Executive Secretariat; Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression Pedro Vaca; and Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights Javier Palummo.

b. In loco visit to Guatemala

17. Between July 22 and July 26, 2024, the Inter-American Commission conducted an in loco visit to Guatemala. Its main goal was to examine the impact that the weakening of democratic institutionality and judicial independence has had on the country since its last visit in 2017. Moreover, the in loco visit sought to analyze the following: the situation of human rights of specific groups exposed to exclusion and historical discrimination, under an ethnic-racial and gender approach; the situation of freedom of expression; citizen security; the rights to memory, truth, justice and reparation for serious human rights violations; and the situation of economic, social, cultural and environmental rights in Guatemala. In total, since 1982, 12 in loco visits were made to Guatemala, which makes it the most visited country by the Commission.

18. The delegation was led by the President of the Commission, Roberta Clarke, and included First Vice President Carlos Bernal, Second Vice President José Luis Caballero and Commissioners Arif Bulkan, Gloria de Mees and Andrea Pochak (also Rapporteur for Guatemala), Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum, Assistant Executive Secretary María Claudia Pulido, Chief of Staff Patricia Colchero, experts from the Executive Secretariat, Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression Pedro Vaca and Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights Javier Palummo.

19. The Commission issued Press Release No. 199/24 at the end of the visit to share details on the meetings held. A fact sheet on the visit is included below.

State	Guatemala

Dates / Locations	Between July 22 and July 26, 2024, the Commission traveled to Guatemala City and the departments of Alta Verapaz, Izabal, Petén, San Marcos, Sololá, Totonicapán and Quetzaltenango.
Topic(s) / Rapporteurship(s)	The in loco visit sought to analyze the following: the situation of human rights of specific groups exposed to exclusion and historical discrimination, under an ethnic-racial and gender approach; the situation of freedom of expression; citizen security; the rights to memory, truth, justice and reparation for serious human rights violations; and the situation of economic, social, cultural and environmental rights in Guatemala.
Institutions visited	The Commission made an unrestricted visit to the Santa Teresa pretrial detention center for women in Zone 18, the pretrial detention center for men in Zone 18, the pretrial detention center for men and women in Cobán, and the Mariscal Zavala detention center, where it met with journalist José Rubén Zamora and former prosecutor Stuardo Campo. It also visited shelters for children and adolescents in need of protection, as well as the reception centers for returnees located in Tecún Umán and Guatemala City. During its visit, the Commission studied the cross-border dynamics of human mobility in the region, particularly at the Rodolfo Robles bridge and the Suchiate river, and met with migrants. In total, the Commission held 31 meetings with representatives of the different branches of government and held more than 48 group meetings with human rights defenders and justice operators, activists, civil society organizations, victims of human rights violations, representatives of academia, trade unions, business associations, representatives of diplomatic missions and United Nations agencies.
Commissioner(s) / Rapporteur(s)	The delegation was led by the President of the Commission, Roberta Clarke, and included First Vice President Carlos Bernal, Second Vice President José Luis Caballero and Commissioners Arif Bulkan, Gloria de Mees and Andrea Pochak (also Rapporteur for Guatemala). Observations	The MESENI conducted a working visit to Costa Rica with the main purpose of holding meetings with the Nicaraguan diaspora on the situation of human rights, disseminating and promoting inter-American standards, gathering testimonies from persons who have been arbitrarily deprived of liberty in Nicaragua or from their next of kin and preparing a working visit with the Country Rapporteur. During the visit, the MESENI participated in an event organized by Race & Equality, titled “One Year After the Release of 222 Persons Deprived of Liberty for Political Reasons.” Participation in this event provided an opportunity to share perspectives and reflections on the current situation of human rights in Nicaragua. During the visit, 16 testimonies were heard, and meetings were held with Race & Equality, CEJIL, Colectivo Nicaragua Nunca Más and a Nicaraguan student collective.

b. Promotional visit to Honduras

22. The promotional visit to Honduras was held between May 13 and May 17, 2024, with the goal of presenting the report on the situation of human rights in the country, which addresses the information gathered after the in loco visit carried out between April 24 and April 28, 2023.

23. The Commission’s delegation was headed by Commissioner Andrea Pochak, Country Rapporteur for Honduras; the Executive Secretary; the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression; the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights; and the Executive Secretariat’s technical team.

24. A fact sheet on the visit is included below.

State	Honduras

c. Working visit to Costa Rica

25. The working visit to Costa Rica took place between May 19 and May 21, 2024, and was aimed at holding meetings with the Nicaraguan diaspora and, in particular, monitoring the situation of indigenous and Afro-descendant persons of the Caribbean Coast of Nicaragua, who have been forced to flee to Costa Rica as a result of increased repression and violence in their ancestral land.

26. The Commission’s delegation was headed by Commissioner Arif Bulkan, Country Rapporteur for Nicaragua and Rapporteur for the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and two experts from the Executive Secretariat.

27. During the visit, the delegation held a protocol meeting with authorities of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Vice Ministry of Peace, the Presidential Commissioner for Social Inclusion, the General Directorate of Migration and Immigration and the Ministry of Public Security. The delegation went to Alajuelita and La Carpio, where it held meetings with indigenous and Afro-descendant Nicaraguans in a situation of human mobility as well as with Nicaraguan civil society organizations.

28. The Commission released its observations on the visit in its Press Release No. 121/2024. A fact sheet on the visit is included below.

State	Costa Rica
Dates / Locations	May 19–21, 2024
Topic(s) / Rapporteurship(s)	Special Follow-Up Mechanism for Nicaragua (MESENI)
Institutions visited	Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Vice Ministry of Peace
Commissioner(s) / Rapporteur(s)	Commissioner Arif Bulkan, Rapporteur for Nicaragua and Rapporteur on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples
Observations	The Commission received information on the serious situation of violence faced by indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples on the Caribbean Coast

	of Nicaragua, as evidenced by reports of murders, kidnappings, threats, sexual violence and armed attacks perpetrated by settlers seeking to dispossess them of their ancestral land. Moreover, information was received on the operation of parallel governments overshadowing traditional leaders and the impact of concessions granted to private companies on these peoples’ natural resources. This situation, as part of a historical context of marginalization, exclusion and violence that was exacerbated since 2018, has resulted in the forced migration of communities. Information was also received on the historical openness of the State of Costa Rica regarding the migration situation, as well as the implementation of programs to prevent discrimination and xenophobia. Furthermore, the Commission learned of the current challenges in terms of access to procedures for obtaining refugee status and in relation to social rights such as work, health, housing and education, as well as of the need for greater responsiveness and sensitivity, under a differentiated approach as regards vulnerable groups and persons with special needs. Press release on the visit:  IACHR concludes visit of the Special Follow-Up Mechanism for Nicaragua to Costa Rica

3. Press releases

57. As part of its mandate to monitor the situation of human rights in the Americas, during 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights issued 112 press releases, among the 330 published during the year. Through these, the Commission had the opportunity to take a stand on specific situations regarding human rights violations as well as on emerging and structural crises; to reinforce the promotion of and adherence to inter-American standards; and to recognize States' good practices. This contributed to strengthening the Commission's position in favor of the protection of human rights. Through this mechanism, the Commission addressed the situation of human rights in 21 countries of the region (Argentina, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Dominica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago, United States and Venezuela).

58. Through press releases and statements on social media, the Commission has addressed all of the issues defined as priorities in its Strategic Plan.

59. With respect to the rights of indigenous peoples, the Commission followed up on the situation through two press releases. The Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights and the Commission expressed their concern over the impacts that illegal mining and other illicit activities currently have on the life, health and survival of the Yanomami people in the Orinoco Mining Arc in Venezuela. They also voiced their concern about recent administrative decisions adopted by Argentina that could affect the protection of indigenous peoples' rights to land, territory and natural resources and undermine the exercise of their right to self-determination.

60. In relation to the rights of women, the Commission monitored the situation by means of seven press releases, thereby urging States to promote the participation and leadership of women in the drafting, implementation and evaluation of crime prevention and reduction policies as well as strategies to address and overcome crisis situations. It also called on States to mitigate maternal mortality among women, girls and persons of African descent of childbearing capacity, and to create the necessary conditions to guarantee the full exercise of reproductive autonomy for women and adolescents, without discrimination. The Commission also urged the States to continue strengthening their legal and institutional frameworks to prevent, protect and punish violence against women, in compliance with the Convention of Belém do Pará.

61. The Commission also monitored the situation of persons in the context of human mobility in the region through six press releases, in which it called on States to strengthen national systems for granting refugee status under a human rights, intersectional and intercultural approach, so as to be able to respond to the current dynamics and needs related to displacement and international protection. Furthermore, together with United Nations experts, the Commission underscored that asylum legislation and practices must resist the politics of fear and exclusion. The Commission also expressed its concern over the immigration reforms that restrict the right to asylum in Chile and the United States. Moreover, it issued Resolution No. 2/24 on human mobility caused by climate change, with the purpose of guiding the States of the region in the development of regulations, programs and public policies to protect the rights of persons who migrate due to the adverse effects of climate change.

62. Furthermore, the Commission continued to monitor the situation of the rights of children and adolescents. It issued four press releases in which it called on the States of the region to undertake measures in favor of children and adolescents as well as to renew their commitment to the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). The Commission also condemned the arbitrary detention of children and adolescents in Venezuela after the elections and the violation of their presumption of innocence and right to a fair trial. In this regard, the Commission adopted Resolution No. 05/23 on the participation of children and adolescents and published a simplified and accessible version thereof.

63. Another issue of particular interest to the Commission is the situation of human rights defenders. The Commission addressed this issue by means of five press releases, in which it expressed its concern over the high rates of violence against human rights defenders during 2023 in the region, having recorded the murder of at least 126 defenders. It further denounced persecution against human rights defenders in Venezuela after the elections and, together with the REDESCA, condemned the murder of environmental defender Juan López in Honduras and urged the State to investigate the facts promptly and diligently, considering his human rights defense work as a possible motive for the crime. Moreover, the Commission adopted Resolution No. 01/2024, in which it recognized national and international election observers as human rights defenders, given the vital link between the respect and protection of rights and the defense of democracy. In addition, on International Human Rights Defenders Day, the Commission and the Offices of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the Americas called on the States of the region to cease the criminalization of human rights defenders.

64. With respect to the rights of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission issued four press releases addressing different challenges and concerns in the region. On the International Day in Support of Victims of Torture, the Commission called on States to promote the creation and establishment of national mechanisms to prevent and combat torture (NPMs), whose work is essential to guarantee the rights of persons deprived of liberty. The Commission also expressed its concern over the persistent repression in Nicaragua, marked by religious persecution, arbitrary detentions and poor prison conditions, and urged the State to put an end to repression and immediately release the persons detained in this context. Furthermore, the Commission condemned the arbitrary deprivation of nationality of the 135 persons released from prison in Nicaragua and urged the State of Venezuela to release the adolescents arbitrarily deprived of liberty during the postelectoral protests.

65. The Commission monitored the situation of the rights of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination through four press releases. In commemoration of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, the Commission and the REDESCA recognized the role of higher education institutions in preserving and providing access to the correct historical memory of Afro-descendants and called on the States of the region to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that these institutions can continue to undertake these initiatives, as well as all educational actions that contribute to the fight against racial discrimination. Moreover, on the International Day of Afro-Latin American, Afro-Caribbean and Diaspora Women, the Commission called on the States to implement culturally appropriate policies that promote equitable healthcare and mitigate maternal mortality among Afro-descendant girls, women and persons of childbearing capacity. Furthermore, on the International Day for People of African Descent, the Commission exhorted States to adopt comprehensive restorative justice measures for Afro-descendant persons and tribal communities, including the official acknowledgment of historical damage as well as the establishment of mechanisms to address the contemporary negative effects of this legacy. The Commission also noted patterns of excessive use of force against persons with disabilities of African descent and other ethno-racial backgrounds and called on the United States to take effective action to address police violence against persons with psychosocial disabilities, as well as race-based police violence.

66. Regarding the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and intersex persons, the Commission followed up on their situation through 10 press releases. It expressed its concern over the violent deaths of trans and gender-diverse persons reported in 2023 and early 2024 in the region and urged States to put an end to killings and to urgently implement concrete measures to prevent discrimination and violence. The Commission also called on States to promote the political participation of trans persons; to foster education programs to guarantee the human rights of lesbian women; to adopt legislation and public policies to guarantee the human rights of bisexual persons. In addition, together with REDESCA, the Commission exhorted States to guarantee the economic, social, cultural and environmental rights of LGBTI persons. Finally, the Commission welcomed the prohibition of practices that seek to modify sexual orientation and gender expression in Mexico, as well as the ruling of the Superior Court of Dominica in favor of equality.

67. As for memory, truth and justice, the Commission issued seven press releases. On the International Day for the Right to the Truth Concerning Gross Human Rights Violations and for the Dignity of Victims, the Commission and the United Nations called on States to comply with court rulings relating to serious human rights violations and international crimes. Therefore, they urged States not to grant amnesty, humanitarian pardon or undue benefits to the perpetrators and masterminds of these types of crimes. Furthermore, on the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances, the Commission exhorted States to overcome the denialism that hinders effective state responses to enforced disappearances. The Commission also released a compendium on integral reparation with a gender perspective in transitional justice contexts.

68. With respect to the rights of older persons, the Commission issued four press releases, thereby urging States to guarantee a dignified old age in the region through sustainable and foreseeable social security systems. It also called on States to guarantee the right of older persons to a life free of any type of violence, thus exhorting States to ensure that the rights to physical and mental integrity and health be protected at residential homes, care facilities or healthcare institutions. Moreover, on the International Day of Older Persons, the Commission highlighted the importance of respecting the autonomy of older persons in decision-making as a guarantee of dignified aging.

69. In relation to freedom of expression, the Commission issued 13 press releases, through which it addressed specific situations related to this issue in different countries of the region. With respect to Cuba, the Commission and the RELE condemned the persistent attacks on organizations and the press as well as the growing repression against the opposition and dissident voices in the context of the serious social and economic crisis unfolding in the country. The Commission and the RELE also called on the United States to respect peaceful protest and academic freedom in universities. Furthermore, they reminded the State of Bolivia of its duty to comply with inter-American standards on freedom of association, peaceful assembly and expression, and urged it to take effective measures to promote dialogue and reduce political polarization in the country. In addition, the Commission exhorted Guatemala to cease religious persecution and to release all persons arbitrarily detained in the country, condemned the mass shutdown of civil society and religious organizations in Nicaragua and reminded Argentina of its duty to guarantee social protest and to respect the rights of association and peaceful assembly. With respect to Venezuela, the Commission warned about political persecution in the electoral context, condemned serious human rights violations reported in the context of the repression of postelection protests, and, together with the RELE, denounced state terrorism practices.

70. Moreover, five press releases were issued on the monitoring of the situation of economic, social, cultural and environmental rights. The Commission and the REDESCA called for international solidarity to assist countries affected by Hurricane Beryl. They also expressed their solidarity with the people affected by the environmental tragedy in Rio Grande do Sul, reaffirmed the importance of promoting actions that are broader in scope in the face of the climate emergency and voiced their concern over the worsening food shortage and prolonged power outages in Cuba.

71. The following is a list of all press releases issued by the Commission in 2024, referring to the work of monitoring of the thematic rapporteurships. This list comprises the 112 press releases related to its monitoring mandate, which are part of the totality of press releases issued by the IACHR in 2024 that are listed in Chapter I of this report.

4. Requests for information

72. In fulfilling its monitoring functions, the Commission sent 88 letters requesting information to 35 States in the region (Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saint Lucia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, United States, Uruguay and Venezuela). Out of these letters, 72 were issued under Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and 16 under Article 18 of the Statute of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights.

73. Through this monitoring mechanism, the Commission paid special attention to situations related to freedom of expression. Of particular note were 15 requests for information on topics such as measures adopted and other events that could severely impact the guarantee and exercise of freedom of expression in Argentina; the enforcement of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) in the Bahamas; the guarantee of the right to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly in academic institutions in Canada and the United States; discussions related to the guarantee and exercise of the right to freedom of expression in Chile; the refusal to allow representatives of the political party Aquí Costa Rica Manda to run for office in Costa Rica; reported events that could severely impact the guarantee of the exercise of freedom of expression and freedom of the press in Ecuador and El Salvador; legal actions and judicial proceedings against media outlets and individuals in relation to the exercise of the right to freedom of expression in Panama; information received regarding judicial proceedings and rulings against journalists reporting on matters of public interest in Paraguay; and reports of threats and restrictions to freedom of expression and association in Peru.

74. Another subject requiring special attention by the Commission is the situation of persons in the context of human mobility. All member states were asked to provide information on the situation of persons in the context of human mobility and climate change. In addition, the Commission requested information on the changes in the composition of the CONARE in Argentina, the deportation of persons in the context of human mobility from Chile, the suspension of activities of Doctors Without Borders in Panama and the deportation of Haitians and Dominicans of Haitian descent from the Dominican Republic.

75. With regard to the rights of women, the Commission issued several requests for information, which included the following: a request for information made to Argentina on the institutional framework for the protection of the rights of women; the requests for information made to Bolivia and Honduras to complete what was gathered during technical working meetings; the request for information made to Ecuador on the María Belén Bernal case and on the situation of violence against women, girls and adolescents; and the request for information made to Guyana on draft amendments to the Sexual Offences Act.

76. Regarding the rights of children and adolescents, the Commission issued several requests for information too. Among them, to Argentina on the continuation of the work of the Office of the Ombudsperson for the Rights of Children and Adolescents; to Peru on reports of sexual violence against Awajún and Wampi children and adolescents; and to Jamaica on the situation of children in its residential care facilities.

77. Regarding persons deprived of liberty, the Commission sent 4 requests for information, among them, to Costa Rica on the extradition process of Reinaldo Picado Miranda; to Ecuador on the situation in its detention centers; and to El Salvador on the deaths of persons deprived of liberty due to pulmonary edemas and on the arrest of Dina Nohemí Hernández Sigaran, a woman with a high-risk pregnancy and a 5-year-old son.

78. In addition, the Commission sent letters to the 35 member states to request information on the situation of human rights in their territory to be included in its 2024 Annual Report.

79. The following is a list of all the requests for information issued by the Commission in 2024, showing the countries, dates and topics of said requests.

II. PART B. PROMOTION AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES

82. The Inter-American Commission carries out its mandate to promote human rights in the region in keeping with the Charter of the Organization and the American Convention on Human Rights, as well as its Statute and Rules of Procedure. In this regard, it raises public awareness about human rights in the countries of the Americas, and it recommends measures that contribute to their protection to OAS Member States.

83. Within that framework, the Commission conducts its promotion and training activities on its working mechanisms and the inter-American human rights standards that have been established through the doctrine and jurisprudence of the inter-American human rights system. The aim is to promote a deeper understanding on the part of the civil society, the networks of social actors and the member states about their scope and, as relevant, about their application to and incorporation into decisions, regulatory frameworks and public policies with a human rights perspective.

84. In 2024, with the implementation of the new 2023–2027 Strategic Plan, the Commission established as one of its strategic objectives the strengthening of the capacity of state agents and civil society organizations to promote, respect and guarantee human rights. For that purpose, two programs were created; namely, Programs 20 and 21, focused on the development of an orderly strategy to disseminate information and provide training on Inter-American standards and the Commission’s protection mechanisms to help promote respect for human rights in the countries of the region.

85. Throughout 2024, the Commission continued to offer promotion and training activities both virtually and in person. The wide range of virtual activities enabled a greater reach, dissemination and access for the public, which was able to join the events by registering for them through the Commission’s channels on X, Facebook and/or YouTube.<sup>14</sup>

86. In 2024, 279 events were held, comprising 69 training activities and 210 promotion activities, which included nine webinars or report releases. In addition, 38,238 people benefited from the activities held by the Commission in 2024. Out of these, 4,152 received training and 34,086 participated in the Commission’s promotion activities through different means.

87. The data presented in the previous paragraph is displayed in the graphs below:

Promotion and training activities carried out in 2024

Total: 279

<sup>14</sup> For the purposes of this report, whenever the total number of people attending promotion and/or training events virtually is mentioned, it will refer to the total that includes broadcasting media such as Zoom, Facebook, Instagram, YouTube and X.

Beneficiaries of promotion and training activities in 2024

Total: 38,238

A. Promotional activities

88. The general objective of the promotion activities is to give publicity to the standards developed by the main bodies of the inter-American human rights system, as well as to the specific activities of the Commission and its decisions. These activities seek to contribute to the promotion of a culture based upon respect for and the protection of the human rights of all persons in the Americas.

89. In 2024, 210 events were held to promote and disseminate inter-American standards, reaching 34,086 people who joined them in person or virtually.

90. The following graph shows comparative data on the promotion activities carried out over the last five years (2019–2024):

Promotion activities 2019–2024

91. Examples of these promotion activities:

1. Sixty-fifth anniversary of the creation of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights
2. Inter-American human rights system Forum – Inter-American Court of Human Rights/Inter-American Commission on Human Rights
3. Cycle of dialogue with the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico
4. Central American Forum on Human Rights
5. Thematic hearings competition before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights – International Center for the Promotion of Human Rights (CIPDH)
6. Other promotion activities
7. Webinars and report releases of the Commission

1. Sixty-fifth anniversary of the creation of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights

92. Within the framework of the fifty-fourth General Assembly of the OAS, which took place in Asunción, Paraguay, on June 25, the Commission held a meeting with OAS member states and observers, where it paid tribute to the unwavering commitment to the promotion and defense of human rights in the region. This work has left an indelible mark on the Americas, especially on historically excluded populations, who have been given hope and dignity, and it has played a key role as an essential pillar in the efforts undertaken by the region to develop inter-American standards and jurisprudence, which are at the core of its strategic plans.

93. On July 15, during the 190th Period of Sessions of the Commission, the Commission’s President, Commissioner Roberta Clarke, underscored the contributions of the Commission in the area of equality and nondiscrimination, made reference to the creation of thematic rapporteurships to address the situation of groups or rights of special interest to the Commission, and stressed the importance of strengthening cooperation with the States in the protection and promotion of a culture of human rights. The event was attended by ambassadors and representatives from the States.

94. Furthermore, on October 9, a special session was held at the Permanent Council of the OAS in which the Commission’s President, Commissioner Roberta Clarke, spoke about the mandate of the Commission and the development of the Commission's standards throughout its history, and also referred to its current challenges. The presentation took place within the framework of the commemoration of the sixty-fifth anniversary of the creation and establishment of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the fifty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the American Convention on Human Rights and the forty-fifth anniversary of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

2. Inter-American human rights system Forum – Inter-American Court of Human Rights/Inter-American Commission on Human Rights

95. The Inter-American Human Rights System Forum is a joint initiative undertaken since 2017 by the main bodies of the Inter-American Human Rights System: the Commission and the Court. The forum aims to build a hemispheric-wide space for promoting awareness, interacting and sharing knowledge of human rights in the region with the different players that are part of the Inter-American human rights system and the general public.

96. On April 11, the sixth edition of the forum was held, which focused on democracy, the Rule of Law and human rights in the Americas and addressed the advancements and challenges in the region 75 years after the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, 65 years after the creation of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and 45 years after the American Convention on Human Rights. The event featured three panels composed of experts, which reached 7,348 people combined.

97. The opening conference was presided over by the President of the Commission, Commissioner Roberta Clarke, and the Vice President of the Inter-American Court, Judge Rodrigo Mudrovitsch, and was moderated by Tania Reneaum Panszi, Executive Secretary of the Commission.

98. The first panel was titled "Contributions and Impact of the Inter-American System for the Protection of Human Rights in the Region," which featured Commissioner Andrea Pochak, Commissioner Arif Bulkan former Judge Elizabeth Odio Benito and the Chair of the OAS Permanent Council, Ambassador Chet Donovan Neymour. The panel was moderated by Gabriela Pacheco Arias, Director of Monitoring Compliance with Judgments at the Inter-American Court.

99. Later, the panel "Democracy and Human Rights: Impact of the Inter-American Human Rights System and Current Challenges" was held. This panel was composed of Judge Patricia Pérez Goldberg, the Second Vice President of the Commission, Commissioner José Luis Caballero Ochoa, and Commissioner Stuardo Ralón. Helen Mack, President of the Myrna Mack Foundation, participated as a guest expert. Pedro Vaca, Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the Commission, moderated the panel.

100. The last panel, which focused on "Emerging Topics," featured Judge Verónica Gómez, the First Vice President of the Commission, Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido, and Commissioner Gloria De Mees. Likewise, Claudia Martin, from the American University, and Patrycja Sasnal, Rapporteur for the United Nations report on climate change, participated as guest experts. The panel was moderated by Javier Palummo, Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights of the Inter-American Commission.

101. Finally, the First Vice President of the Commission, Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido, and Judge Verónica Gómez, closed the event by emphasizing that the work of the inter-American human rights system has been vital to consolidate inter-American standards for the protection of human dignity in the Americas and to promote concrete reparation measures in favor of victims, as well as state measures of a structural impact to guarantee human rights.

3. Cycle of dialogue with the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico

102. The Commission participated in the cycle of dialogue with the inter-American human rights system organized by the Human Rights Directorate of the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico.

103. In June 2024, the Commission participated in two in-person dialogues with the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico. One was about inter-American standards and the protection of women deprived of liberty, and the other addressed standards on human mobility. These dialogues were held in person in the cities of Puebla, Aguascalientes and Mexico City. They were also broadcast on synchronous virtual platforms and amassed a total of 14,800 views on Facebook and YouTube.

104. Data on each dialogue:

- First Dialogue (June 6/Puebla), Conference on Due Process and Judicial Protection for Persons in Human Mobility: Inter-American Principles and Standards: 8,671 views and 180 in-person attendees; presentation by Commissioner Andrea Pochak.
- Second Dialogue (June 20/Aguascalientes), Conference on Inter-American Standards on the Protection of Women Deprived of Liberty: 1,862 views and 60 in-person attendees; presentation by specialist George De Lima.
- Third Dialogue (August 13/Mexico City), Judicial Independence in the Inter-American System: Actions Undertaken by the Commission and Challenges for the Region: 3,040 views and 167 in-person attendees; presentation by the Assistant Executive Secretary for the Petition and Case System, Jorge Meza.
- Fourth Dialogue (November 21/Mexico City), Dialogue with the inter-American Human Rights System: Operation of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights as Part of the Inter-American System: 774 views and 46 in-person attendees; presentation by the Assistant Executive Secretary for the Monitoring, Promotion and Technical Cooperation, Maria Claudia Pulido.

4. Central American Forum for Civil Society Discussion on Human Rights

105. The Central American Forum was held from May 14 to May 17 in association with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the European Union and Pro Derechos. The purpose of the event was to facilitate a space for discussion, reflection and analysis, as well as the identification of challenges and proposals to address the problems shared by Honduras and other Central American countries with regard to human rights. The forum was attended by 120 people. In parallel, as part of the Central American Forum for Civil Society Discussion on Human Rights, the Commission presented the Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Honduras issued from its in loco visit in 2023. The presentation took place on May 15 and was attended by Tania Reneaum Panszi, Executive Secretary of the Commission, and Andrea Pochak, Commissioner and Rapporteur for Honduras.

5. Thematic hearings competition before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights – International Center for the Promotion of Human Rights (CIPDH)

106. The fifth edition of the thematic hearings competition before the Commission was held from October 13 to October 17. The purpose of this contest is for university students to delve deeper into the situation of human rights in the Americas as well as into the international systems for their protection, and, especially, for them to learn about the use of the Commission's mechanisms. The theme of the 2024 edition was "Dreams without Borders: Human Mobility due to the Effects of Climate Change with a Focus on the Protection of Human Rights". In 2024, 34 teams registered for the competition. Out of these, 28 were selected, which represented nine countries in the region (Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, El Salvador, Mexico, Peru and Paraguay). A total of 174 students and tutors took part in the competition. The Executive Secretariat of the Commission participated with its officials as jury in the semifinal and final rounds.

6. Other promotion activities

107. On March 14, the Commission participated as a panelist in a promotion activity organized by ParlAmericas in Washington, D.C. At the event, the Executive Secretariat spoke about the mandate of the Commission and its different mechanisms. In particular, the technical cooperation mechanism was explained to parliamentarians, and the Secretariat highlighted the importance of having legislation on public policies under a human rights approach. The event was attended by 22 people, nine of which were women.

108. On March 14, the fifteenth virtual meeting of Red Cuba was held with the purpose of strengthening the strategic monitoring of the human rights situation in Cuba as well as of promoting inter-American standards. The meeting was joined by 32.

109. On July 12, a promotion meeting on the inter-American system and its mechanisms was held for 17 officials of the African Commission on Human Rights, in which both regional bodies shared challenges and best practices in the monitoring, protection and promotion of human rights.

110. On August 1, the Commission presented the report Public Policy with a Human Rights Approach at a promotion event organized by the OAS School of Governance of the Department for Effective Public Management. A total of 80 people from 17 countries of the region and one observer country attended the event.

111. On September 18, the Commission participated in a side event within the framework of the period of sessions of the United Nations Human Rights Council on the progressive closure of civic space in Venezuela and Nicaragua and the attacks on academic freedom.

112. On October 12, a promotion activity targeted at the civil society in the Caribbean was carried out with the purpose of raising awareness of public hearings before the Commission. A total of 36 people took part in the activity.

113. On October 29, a presentation was given on the standards of the inter-American system in the search for missing persons and forced disappearance. This activity took place as part of the release of Amnesty International’s report Searching without Fear, in which 30 people from the civil society were present.

7. Webinars and report releases of the Commission

114. Among the promotion activities carried out by the Commission, in 2024, various events were held with a view to strengthening the capacities of States and the civil society in the region, emphasizing the importance of the applicable inter-American standards for the protection of human rights.

115. There were nine webinars or report releases in 2024, and more than 4,171 people participated either virtually or in person.

116. The table below provides further information on the different webinars held and reports released.

B. Training activities

117. The purpose of the training activities is to give to the civil society, social actors and States of the Americas a deeper understanding of the scope of the inter-American human rights system, the use of its mechanisms and the application of inter-American decisions and jurisprudence, as well as their incorporation into domestic regulations, policies and practices. Likewise, through capacity building, training activities seek to contribute to the adoption of public policies and the development of a culture under a human rights-based approach.

118. The Commission continued to consolidate its catalog of virtual, hybrid and in-person training activities during 2024, having developed a total of 69 trainings that included five MOOC/virtual classrooms. Three out of these MOOCs/virtual classrooms were supplemented with tutorials and live meetings, and the remaining two were completely self-directed. In 2024, the Commission trained a total of 4,152 people. The Commission also launched a pilot plan for paid courses that aims to make the virtual training programs offered by the Commission available to a wider audience.

119. A comparative graph of the training activities carried out over the last six years is presented below, followed by a description of some of the training sessions held in 2024.

Training activities 2018-2024

120. The following is a summary of the courses that were available to the public or to specific groups and whose main purpose was to increase knowledge of the decisions, jurisprudence and mechanisms of the inter-American human rights system.

1. Massive open online courses (MOOC) <sup>15</sup>

121. MOOC courses are designed for mass audiences, allowing people to access the platform and navigate the proposed contents as well as the suggested activities with complete autonomy, so that each participant can learn in their own time based on their availability. Such flexibility makes it possible for a greater number of people to access training activities and provides an alternative for those who have limited availability and cannot adapt to more structured courses. Participants are offered the possibility of simply exploring the content of the course or of obtaining a certification after completing a series of assessments of the topic. During 2024, 1,960 people took the two MOOC offered, and, out of these, 592 participants opted to obtain certificates.

122. With regard to gender, it is worth noting that more women than men enrolled in the MOOCs open in 2024, reaching a total of 1,277 women and 544 men.

1.1 MOOC - Inter-American Human Rights System - Fourth Edition

123. During 2024, the fourth edition of this course was open to all countries in the Americas. The MOOC on the inter-American human rights system is a self-directed short course that allows participants to discover the inter-American system and learn about its bodies, functions and mechanisms. It was developed using simple language, thus making it accessible to anyone who wants to learn about the system. In addition, it includes additional material so that interested participants can study the system in greater depth.

<sup>15</sup> Hereinafter "MOOC". The acronym MOOC stands for "massive open online course." MOOCs are online courses that allow participants to learn at their own time and pace, according to their needs and circumstances. Since the courses do not provide support by tutors, they can reach a mass audience.

124. Between January 1 and December 31, 962 people enrolled in the course. Out of these, 251 downloaded their certificate of completion (there are currently 435 people who are still in the process of completing the course and could receive their certificate shortly). Out of the total number of people who completed the course successfully, 73 percent were women. The country with the highest enrollment rates was Peru, with 131 participants (16 percent), followed by Mexico, with 109 (13 percent), and Colombia, with 85 (10 percent). Argentina came in fourth place, with 65 participants (8 percent). In addition, 48 percent of participants were linked to state agencies, whereas 16 percent were connected to civil society organizations, and 15 percent worked in academia. The satisfaction survey was responded to by 251 people. Out of these, 237 rated the course as extremely or very useful. Finally, 224 people indicated that what they had learned on the course would be extremely or very applicable in their work; and 204 considered that they had acquired new knowledge.

1.2 MOOC – Inter-American System of Human Rights – Second Edition in English

125. This MOOC is the first to be offered in English and is based on the Spanish-language MOOC on the inter-American human rights system but adapted to the legal system of English-speaking countries. The course seeks to bring the inter-American human rights system closer to States, the civil society and academia in English-speaking countries, by means of simple tools and by using accessible language as well as digital resources such as videos, audios, readings and practice activities that help participants to understand the concepts and their application.

126. The total course load of the second edition is 25 hours, to be completed in about five weeks. It is entirely self-directed, which allows participants to complete the activities at their own pace, on the days and at the times that best suit their personal and professional situation.

127. Between January 1 and December 31, 998 people enrolled in the course. Out of these, 341 downloaded their certificate of completion (there are currently 429 people who are still in the process of completing the course and could receive their certificate shortly). Out of the total number of people who completed the course successfully, 66 percent were women. The country with the highest enrollment rates was the United States, with 134 participants (13 percent), followed by Peru, with 114 (11 percent), and Brazil, with 84 (11 percent). Mexico came in fourth place, with 77 participants (8 percent). The countries with the highest certification rates were the United States, with 73; Guyana, with 61; Jamaica, with 26; and Peru, with 20. The satisfaction survey was responded to by 41 people. Out of these, 315 rated the course as extremely or very useful. Also, 299 indicated that what they had learned on the course would be extremely or very applicable in their work; and 288 considered that they had acquired new knowledge.

2. Virtual classrooms and short courses

128. During 2024, two virtual classrooms and three short courses were developed. The virtual classrooms are asynchronous courses that are combined with live sessions (synchronous) and are supported by an academic tutor (a subject-matter expert from the Commission) as well as a technical tutor. The Commission has offered virtual classrooms to specific countries, with limited spots and using donor funding. During 2024, 464 people participated in five virtual classrooms, including short courses.

2.1 Comprehensive program on the inter-American human rights system and its mechanisms

129. The comprehensive program on the inter-American human rights system and its mechanisms was designed to educate people from the civil society on the system and to offer hands-on training on how to use its mechanisms. The program consisted of four training components and one practice component. Those who completed all five components received certificates for the four courses plus a certificate in the use of the inter-American human rights system mechanisms.

130. The four components of the program included:

- a. Massive open online course (MOOC) –Introduction to the Inter-American Human Rights System: this is the introductory course to the system and its mechanisms, especially focused on the inter-American human rights system mechanisms included in section 1.1 of this report. The course consists of six modules and has an estimated duration of 30 hours.
- b. Short course on how to request a precautionary measure: the objective of the course is for participants to acquire practical skills in requesting a precautionary measure to the Commission and in following up on the processing and resolution of the request. It was developed using simple language and with a focus on practice, so that participants can learn about the mechanism and are able to use it properly. Its estimated duration is 10 hours.
- c. Short course on how to submit petitions: the aim of the course is for participants to acquire practical skills in filing a petition with the Commission and in following up on the processing of the petition/case until its archiving. It was developed using simple language and with a focus on practice, so that participants can learn about the mechanism and are able to use it properly. Its estimated duration is 10 hours.
- d. Short course on how to document human rights violations and gather testimonies: the objective of the course is for participants to acquire practical skills in documenting human rights violations, and, particularly, gathering testimonies. Its estimated duration is 10 hours.

131. The first run of the program was fully virtual, with self-directed components and follow-up by tutors. The program was complemented by three synchronous sessions. This is the first time that the Commission has offered such a complete program virtually, which has constituted both an innovation and a great challenge.

132. The program aims to increase the capacity of the civil society to strategically use the mechanisms of the inter-American human rights system to facilitate their use by the participants. Specifically, this program seeks to develop the capacity of individuals to submit petitions and request precautionary measures to the Commission, as well as to follow up on their processing.

133. At this time, the program was aimed specifically at members of the civil society from Nicaragua and Venezuela. In total, 351 people enrolled in the program, and 187 out of these were selected to participate.

134. During the integral program, three synchronous sessions were held to delve deeper into specific mechanisms, such as the MESENI and the MESEVE, or into specific topics, such as the documentation of human rights violations. Synchronous sessions are very important in virtual programs, insofar as they are key to achieving a more concrete and real connection between users and the system. Many participants express their gratitude for coming into contact with staff from the Executive Secretariat, as well as for being able to identify specific areas they can reach out to whenever they need help in understanding the mechanisms or accessing information. In the case of this program, besides addressing the topics of the session, the synchronous sessions were an opportunity to answer general questions about the mechanisms and even about the components of the program. The participants mentioned that the structure, quality, sequence and extent of the contents were quite complete. Furthermore, they appreciated the interaction with the teaching team, praising the promptness and ease with which they were able to move forward with the program.

2.2. Sixth edition of the Workshop on the Application of Inter-American Standards by the Judiciaries of Costa Rica, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Dominican Republic and Uruguay

135. Between September 24 and October 25, 2024, the Commission ran the sixth edition of the virtual Workshop on the Application of Inter-American Standards by the Judiciary, targeted at justice operators from Costa Rica (11), Ecuador (20), Panama (1), Paraguay (9), Peru (20), Dominican Republic (20) and Uruguay (19). Out of the 100 participants, 50 percent were women, 29 percent were men and 21 percent self-identified with other genders.

136. The virtual workshop comprised four modules, with a total load of approximately 10 hours. Its goal was to improve the capacity of justice operators to implement inter-American standards at the domestic level, especially by way of a conventionality control, to protect persons and prevent human rights violations, particularly among groups in vulnerable situations.

137. A total of 224 applications underwent a selection process. Out of these, 100 persons were enrolled, and 73 out of these opted to download the certificate of completion. Out of those who filled the satisfaction survey, 68 rated the course as extremely or very useful; 93 reported that what they had learned on the course would be extremely or very applicable in their work; and 81 considered that they had acquired new knowledge.

138. The materials offered in the virtual classroom were supplemented with two synchronous sessions delivered by an expert from the Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders and Justice Operators and by an expert from the Secretariat for the Petition and Case System of the Inter-American Commission.

3. Paid virtual courses pilot plan: Standards on memory, truth and justice, and inter-American standards on racial discrimination and Afro-descendants

139. In December 2023, the Commission approved a program of self-sustainable training through the offering of paid courses, which was first implemented in 2024 through the launching of a pilot plan. The aim of the paid courses program is twofold: on the one hand, it seeks to open courses that have been developed but cannot be offered due to insufficient funding; on the other, it seeks to finance the reopening and revision of existing courses for them to be free of charge, as well as the development of new courses.

140. The pilot plan began to be implemented in September 2024 with the opening of a virtual course on the inter-American system of human rights and its mechanisms from a perspective of memory, truth and justice in contexts of transitional justice. A total of 434 persons registered for the course and 177 vacancies were allocated to persons from 24 countries. Approximately 30 percent of them held positions in the public sector. Out of the total number of participants, 134—including 103 women—opted to obtain the certificate of completion. The persons who took the course made up a diverse group, which comprised persons working in government positions and civil society organizations, as well as students, members of academia and private individuals. The satisfaction survey was filled by 137 persons. Out of that total, 121 reported that they had increased their knowledge, and 119 reported that the knowledge they had gained would be useful for the performance of their job duties.

141. The pilot plan was complemented by four synchronous sessions: an introductory lecture; a final evaluation; a lecture delivered by Commissioner Andrea Pochak, Rapporteur on Memory, Truth and Justice; and a lecture by María del Pilar Gutiérrez, Coordinator of the Cases Section of the Secretariat for the Petition and Case System of the Commission.

4. Training activities carried out with other institutions

- 4.1. Introduction to the inter-American system of human rights – University of Oklahoma
- 4.2. Introductory training on the inter-American system of human rights – National Defense University
- 4.3. Introductory training on the inter-American system of human rights – Boston College Law School
- 4.4. International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights – MERCOSUR Institute for Public Policy on Human Rights (IPPDH)
- 4.5. “Héctor Fix Zamudio” Diploma Program on the Inter-American System of Human Rights – National Autonomous University of Mexico
- 4.6. Diploma Program of the OAS School of Governance
- 4.7. Inter-American Defense College
- 4.8. Training on the inter-American system of human rights for members of academia and the civil society in Canada

4.1. Introduction to the inter-American human rights system – University of Oklahoma

142. On March 19, 2024, the Commission held an on-site training workshop for 18 students from the College of International Studies of the University of Oklahoma.

143. The workshop included an introductory module on the inter-American system of human rights and its mechanisms, which was supplemented with a module on the petition and case system. In addition, during the workshop, a dialogue was held with students about careers they could pursue in the field of human rights.

4.2. Introductory training on the inter-American of human rights system – National Defense University

144. On March 19, 2024, the Commission held an on-site training workshop for 27 students from the National Defense University (William J. Perry Center for Hemispheric Defense Studies) in Washington, D.C. The workshop included an introductory module on the inter-American system of human rights and its mechanisms.

145. The students were mostly military or police officers from various countries in the region. The majority of participants were from the Caribbean (Belize, Dominica, Guyana, Jamaica, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Suriname). Twenty-seven persons were trained, 12 of whom were women.

4.3. Introductory training on the inter-American of human rights system – Boston College Law School

146. On March 24, 2024, the Commission held a training workshop for students from the International Human Rights Clinic at the Boston College Law School. A group of 14 students were trained.

147. The workshop included an introductory module on the Inter-American System of Human Rights and its mechanisms, which was supplemented with a module on the petition and case system and the precautionary measures mechanism.

4.4. International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights

148. On June 27, 2024, the call for applications was launched for the seventh edition of the International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights, which is run jointly with the MERCOSUR Institute for Public Policy on Human Rights (IPPDH). On July 22, 2024, a list was published with the results. Eighty individuals were selected from a total of 2,061 applications from 33 countries.

149. The International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights is a comprehensive training course targeted at public officials responsible for devising, managing, implementing and assessing public policies, as well as at members of social organizations and movements, and scholars from MERCOSUR and OAS member states.

150. The first part of the course was delivered virtually between July and October and included an optional specialization workshop on the inter-American human rights system, which was held on October 22, 23 and 24 and was attended by 36 persons, 23 of whom were women. Subsequently, between December 2 and 6, the closing week of the course took place at the IPPDH headquarters, located in Espacio Memoria y Derechos Humanos ex ESMA, in the city of Buenos Aires, Argentina. Persons from 26 countries of the region took part in the training and 47 participants met the passing criteria and received their certificate.

151. The virtual phase was structured around 13 synchronous sessions, including thematic modules on the human rights of children and adolescents, public and citizen innovation laboratories, migration and human trafficking, and corruption and human rights.

152. The in-person phase included spaces for exchange that were complemented by theory and practice lectures with experts in public policy evaluation, indicator systems, and budget and gender, so as to round off the course face to face; there was also a panel on participation in public policies, which featured activists and representatives of civil society organizations. During the closing week, the participants presented their final projects, which consisted in hypothetical drafts of public policies under a human rights-based approach.

4.5. “Héctor Fix Zamudio” Diploma Program on the Inter-American of Human Rights System

153. Between August 12 and November 13, the 12th edition of the “Héctor Fix Zamudio” Diploma Program on the Inter-American of Human Rights System was delivered in a hybrid format. It was run within the framework of a cooperation agreement with the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM). The program was organized by the Institute for Legal Research and the Office of the General Counsel of the UNAM, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Mexico, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the Electoral Judicial School attached to the Electoral Tribunal of Mexico’s Federal Judiciary.

154. The purpose of the training was for participants to learn about the general characteristics (origin, legal sources, bodies, mandate, mechanisms) of each of the bodies that make up the inter-American human rights system, as well as about the standards and jurisprudence that have been developed with respect to some human rights.

155. A total of 71 students —45 women and 26 men— attended the course. Sixty-eight of the students enrolled in the 2024 edition of this training were Mexican, one student was Brazilian, one was Colombian and one was Peruvian.

156. This training initiative comprised 133 sessions and a total load of 194 hours, with compulsory modules on international human rights law, the inter-American system of human rights, relevant inter-American jurisprudence and the protection of persons in vulnerable situations. Upon reaching the end of the core modules, students were able to choose between three optional modules on different topics: international standards on the right of women to a life free of violence; the link between the inter-American and universal systems of human rights and other regional systems, as well as other instances of International Human Rights Law; or political rights and conventionality control in connection to democracy and electoral processes.

157. During the course, Commissioners and Commission experts participated as lecturers in 23 classes, which covered topics such as the human rights of LGBTI persons, women, persons with disabilities and persons of African descent, as well as the fight against racial discrimination and the Commission’s human rights monitoring and protection mechanisms, among others.

4.6. Diploma Program of the OAS School of Governance

158. Between September 23 and 27, as part of the OAS School of Governance Diploma Program “Governance, Management and Public Leadership in the Inter-American System,” a hybrid training course was run on inter-American standards on democracy and human rights. Seventy-four persons from 18 OAS member states joined the course, who came from the public sector, the private sector and civil society organizations.

4.7. Inter-American Defense College

159. On October 16, in-person training was delivered to 51 students from the armed forces, police forces and civilian agencies of OAS member states. The purpose of the course was to provide an overview of key human rights issues, the international system of human rights and international human rights law.

4.8. Training on the inter-American system of human rights for members of academia and the civil society in Canada

160. On December 5, 2024, the Commission ran a workshop mostly targeted at members of the Canadian civil society and academia. The workshop was aimed at improving understanding of the inter-American system of human rights and, more specifically, the operation of the various mechanisms of the Commission, in particular the petition and case system and the precautionary measures system.

161. The training was delivered virtually and featured Commissioner Arif Bulkan, Rapporteur for Canada. Thirty-five persons attended the workshop, 24 of whom were women.

5. Training by geographic area

162. Below is a description of other training activities organized by geographic area.

5.1. Caribbean

5.1.1. CARICOM: Annual Seminar for CARICOM countries on the inter-American human rights system: mechanisms of the inter-American system for the promotion and protection of human rights, with a special focus on climate change in the context of the right to development.

5.1.2. Haiti: Training delivered in collaboration with the OHCHR.

5.1.3. Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ) – Training on the standards of the inter-American system on access to justice, equality and nondiscrimination.

5.1.4. Training on the inter-American system targeted at government officials and the civil society in Barbados.

5.1.5. Training on the inter-American system with a focus on indigenous peoples targeted at government officials and the civil society in Belize.

5.1.6. Training on hearings at the Commission targeted at the Caribbean Network.

5.1.7. Training for Caribbean civil society organizations on the rights of women deprived of liberty.

5.1.8. Strategic litigation seminar: Food, Nutrition and the Law in the Commonwealth Caribbean.

5.1.1 Annual Seminar for CARICOM countries on the inter-American human rights system: mechanisms of the inter-American system for the promotion and protection of human rights, with a special focus on climate change in the context of the right to development

163. On October 30, 2024, the 13th Annual Seminar on Human Rights for CARICOM countries was held. The annual seminar is a joint initiative undertaken by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the George Washington University Law School (GWULS) that began in 2012.

164. The seminar was delivered virtually and was targeted at diplomatic officers and other state agents involved in the protection, promotion and monitoring of human rights. In this edition, the training course focused on the mechanisms of the inter-American system for the promotion and protection of human rights with a special focus on climate change in the context of the right to development. The seminar also included two presentations: one on the Commission's Individual Petition System Portal and another one on the rights of older persons.

165. The seminar featured Commissioners Roberta Clarke and Gloria de Mees, alongside experts from the Commission's Executive Secretariat.

166. The training reached 116 officials representing eight CARICOM countries (Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica, Saint Kitts and Nevis, and Trinidad and Tobago). Out of the total number of participants, approximately 80 were women.

5.1.2. Haiti: Training delivered in collaboration with the OHCHR

167. Between April 25 and 26, 2024, training sessions targeted at human rights defenders were held jointly with the OHCHR on the inter-American system and its mechanisms. The purpose of these workshops was for participants to get a clearer understanding of the inter-American system of human rights and, more specifically, the operation of the various mechanisms of the Commission, in particular the human rights monitoring system, the petition and case system and the precautionary measures system.

168. The training was delivered virtually by experts from the Commission. Twenty-six persons joined the workshops, 10 of whom were women.

5.1.3. Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ) – Training on the standards of the inter-American system on access to justice, equality and nondiscrimination

169. On June 5, 2024, a training session was run for members of the Caribbean Court of Justice. The session was also attended by other judges from the Caribbean (members of the Caribbean Association of Judicial Officers).

170. The training centered on the standards of the inter-American system on access to justice, equality and nondiscrimination.

171. It was led by Commissioners Jose Luis Caballero Ochoa and Gloria De Mees (alongside experts from the Commission's Executive Secretariat). Commissioner Caballero delivered a presentation on access to justice and Commissioner De Mees spoke about equality and nondiscrimination. Twenty-five persons joined the activity, 15 of whom were women.

5.1.4. Training on the inter-American system targeted at government officials and the civil society in Barbados

172. Within the framework of the technical cooperation visit to Barbados conducted between October 8 and 12, 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights held two training sessions for state and non-state agents, both supported by Commissioner Gloria De Mees.

173. Both training sessions focused on the inter-American system of human rights, its origin, composition, mandate and function, as well as on its different mechanisms. The session for state agents also included a module on technical cooperation and a module on the Commission's Individual Petition System Portal; the latter was delivered virtually.

174. The session for state agents took place on October 10 and was attended by 12 persons, including 10 women. The session for non-state agents was run on October 11 and was attended by 21 persons, including 15 women. This session included a module during which a mock hearing was held. It was also an opportunity to discuss various human rights issues with participants.

5.1.5. Training on the inter-American system with a focus on indigenous peoples targeted at government officials and the civil society in Belize

175. Within the framework of the visit to Belize to provide technical assistance and follow up on recommendations, which was conducted between October 15 and 18, 2024, the Commission held two training sessions for state and non-state agents. Commissioner José Luis Caballero Ochoa participated in the session targeted at state agents.

176. Both training sessions focused on the inter-American system of human rights, its origin, composition, mandate and function, as well as on its different mechanisms. They also included a module on technical cooperation and one on standards regarding indigenous peoples.

177. The session for state agents took place on October 17, and a total of 21 persons joined, 13 of whom were women. The session for non-state agents was delivered on October 18, and was attended by 17 persons, including 13 women. It also provided an opportunity to discuss various human rights issues.

5.1.6. Training on hearings before the Commission targeted at the Caribbean Network

178. On August 12, 2024, the Commission delivered a virtual training session to Caribbean civil society organizations on the Commission's hearing mechanism. The purpose of this training was to help the civil society to better use said mechanism. The event took place in the context of the decision to give priority attention to the Caribbean region, in accordance with Program 17 of the Commission's Strategic Plan.

179. The session included information on the purpose of the hearings and how to request them. It reached 36 persons, 23 of whom were women.

5.1.7. Training for Caribbean civil society organizations on the rights of women deprived of liberty

180. On June 7, 2024, a training session was run for Caribbean civil society organizations on the Inter-American System of Human Rights, with a special focus on the rights of women deprived of liberty. This session was held in compliance with Programs 17 and 21 of the Commission's Strategic Plan (priority attention to the Caribbean and promotion and dissemination of mechanisms and standards of the Inter-American Human Rights System).

181. The session included an introduction to the inter-American human rights system and its mechanisms, followed by presentations on the specific rights of women deprived of liberty and the particular challenges faced by women in prison in the Caribbean. Twelve persons attended the training, including 10 women.

5.1.8. Strategic litigation seminar: Food, Nutrition and the Law in the Commonwealth Caribbean

182. On November 7, a training session was held as part of the strategic litigation seminar Food, Nutrition and Law in the Commonwealth Caribbean. The seminar was organized in collaboration with the Global Health Advocacy Incubator (GHAi) and the Global Center for Legal Innovation on Food Environments, an initiative of the O’Neill Institute for National and Global Health Law at Georgetown University.

183. The overall objectives of this workshop were to build legal and litigation capacity in the region and to explore possible avenues for promoting front-of-package labeling (FOPL) and other public policy priorities. The workshop focused on three aspects of food policy: healthy food environments at schools, restricting the marketing of unhealthy foods to children, and front-of-package warning labeling (FOPWL), which are not being implemented despite existing political will. Thirty-five persons from different Caribbean countries joined the workshop.

5.2. Mesoamerica

5.2.1. Guatemala: University of the Isthmus.

5.2.2. Mexico: Monterrey Institute of Technology and Higher Education.

5.2.3. Panama: NGOs against human trafficking.

5.2.1. University of the Isthmus, Guatemala

184. On April 5, a training session was delivered to law students at the University of the Isthmus (Guatemala), with a special focus on the petition and case system and the monitoring mechanism. Five persons attended.

5.2.2. Monterrey Institute of Technology and Higher Education, Mexico

185. On April 2, a training session was delivered at the Monterrey Institute of Technology and Higher Education on the mandate and operation of the Commission. The purpose of this activity was to provide information on the mandate and operation of the Commission to undergraduate law, political science and international relations students. By participating in the class, the students learned about the different mechanisms through which the Commission fulfills its mandate.

5.2.3. NGOs against human trafficking, Panama

186. On April 4, in cooperation with the OHCHR, a training session was delivered to 20 persons from nongovernmental antitrafficking organizations on the mechanisms of precautionary and provisional measures. The training was organized within the framework of a regional network of civil society organizations that provide legal advice and representation to victims of human trafficking in Latin America under a project of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR for the Human Rights of Refugees and Migrants in Venezuela).

5.3. South America

5.3.1. Prosecutors from the Public Prosecutor’s Office of Minas Gerais, Brazil

187. On October 1, a training session was held in Brazil for prosecutors from the Public Prosecutor’s Office of Minas Gerais on the main mechanisms of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, that is, monitoring, technical cooperation, training, petitions and cases, and precautionary measures. Twenty persons attended.

C. Other promotion and training activities related to special procedures, thematic rapporteurships and follow-up of recommendations

188. Below is a summary of the promotion and training activities of the Commission’s thematic rapporteurships and other work carried out throughout the year in relation to its human rights promotion mandate. Many of these activities were organized in cooperation with other actors, thus strengthening collaboration with civil society organizations, academia, regional and international institutions, and States.

189. As for the special rapporteurships, the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA) carried out 57 activities this year. Out of these, 48 were related to promotion and nine were related to training. For more information on these activities, please refer to REDESCA’s annual report. The Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE) carried out 41 activities. Out of these, 38 were related to promotion and reached 782 persons, and three were related to training. For more information on these activities, refer to RELE’s annual report.

1. Thematic rapporteurships

190. The mandate of the thematic rapporteurships is based on Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 18 of the Statute of the Inter-American Commission, which establish the Commission’s specific functions in terms of human rights promotion. In addition, Article 15 of the Commission’s Rules of Procedure sets forth that the Commission may create rapporteurships to contribute to a better performance of its functions, and it establishes guidelines on the operation of the rapporteurships (For more information on the rapporteurships’ activities during 2024, see Chapter 3.A of this annual report.).

191. Below is a brief description of the various promotion and training activities carried out by each of the thematic rapporteurships in 2024.

1.1. Rapporteurship on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples

192. In 1990, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights established the Rapporteurship on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples for the purpose of focusing attention on the indigenous peoples of the Americas, who are especially exposed to human rights violations due to their situation of vulnerability, and to strengthen, drive and systematize the work of the Commission in this area. ## 1.2. Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women

193. In 1994, the Commission created the Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women, whose initial task was to analyze the extent to which the legislation and practices relating to women's rights in the member states were in line with the general obligations set forth in regional human rights instruments such as the American Convention on Human Rights, the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man and the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women, known as the Convention of Belém do Pará. The Commission addresses gender issues based on its mandate to promote and protect human rights in the Americas. Guided by the principles of equality and nondiscrimination, which are the cornerstone of the inter-American system's instruments, the Commission has identified the protection of women's rights as a priority for the region. For more information, go to: OAS, IACHR, Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women, Mandate (oas.org).

1.3. Rapporteurship on Human Mobility

194. In 1996, in response to the critical situation faced by internally displaced persons and migrant workers and their families in several countries of the continent, the Commission created the Rapporteurship on Internally Displaced Persons and the Rapporteurship on Migrant Workers and Members of their Families. While these rapporteurships drew closer attention to the human rights of migrants, their families and internally displaced persons, since its inception, the Commission has also prioritized the protection and promotion of the human rights of other groups in a situation of vulnerability in the context of human mobility due to the forced migration of hundreds of thousands of persons who were compelled to flee or abandon their homes as a result of the dictatorships and armed conflicts in the region throughout the 20th century.

195. In 2012, the Commission decided to unify both rapporteurships and expand its mandate to address the multiple challenges posed by human mobility in the region, whether in the form of international, internal, forced or voluntary migration. The new mandate focuses on the respect and guarantee of the rights of migrants and their families, asylum seekers, refugees, stateless persons, victims of human trafficking, internally displaced persons, as well as other vulnerable groups in the context of human mobility. For more information, go to: OAS, IACHR, Rapporteurship on the Rights of Migrants \(oas.org\).

196. The Commission established the Rapporteurship on the Rights of the Child during a session held between September 24 and October 13, 1998, for the purpose of bolstering respect for the human rights of boys, girls and adolescents in the Americas. The rapporteurship cooperates in the analysis and evaluation of the human rights situation of boys, girls and adolescents in the Americas and offers guidance to the Commission in proceedings involving individual petitions, cases and requests for precautionary and provisional measures related to children and adolescents’ rights. Additionally, it conducts on-site visits to States and prepares studies and publications. 1.5. Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders and Justice Operators

197. In March 2011, the Commission decided to create a rapporteurship on the situation of human rights defenders, considering the petitions it had received and with the aim of raising the visibility of the important role that human rights defenders and justice operators play in building a democratic society in which the Rule of Law is in full effect. As a result, the former unit established in 2001 became a rapporteurship which carries out various activities to monitor the situation of all persons engaged in the defense of rights in the region, including justice operators. For more information, go to: OAS, IACHR, Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders and Justice Operators, \(oas.org\).

1.7. Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons of African Descent and against Racial Discrimination

199. During its 122nd period of sessions, which took place between February 23 and March 11, 2005, the Commission created the Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons of African Descent and against Racial Discrimination. The main objectives of the Rapporteurship include working with OAS member states to raise awareness about their obligations to respect the human rights of Afro-descendants and to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination, analyzing the current challenges the countries of the region face in this area, making recommendations designed to overcome the obstacles, identifying and sharing best practices in the region with respect to this matter, and providing any technical assistance requested by the member states in the implementation of the recommendations in domestic law and in practice. Its work with the civil society focuses on expanding knowledge of the guarantees and mechanisms that the inter-American human rights system offers for the protection of the rights of Afro-descendants and against racial discrimination. For more information, go to: OAS :: IACHR :: Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons of African Descent and against Racial Discrimination \(oas.org\).

1.9. Rapporteurship on Memory, Truth, and Justice

201. The Rapporteurship on Memory, Truth, and Justice of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights was created in 2019 following an analysis of the challenges to the implementation of legal and policy measures in the region in response to serious human rights violations. The Commission considered that the issue continued to be a priority for the region’s countries and required close follow-up. Accordingly, it determined that the rapporteurship would support contributions to fight impunity and promote integral reparations, truth and memory in the Americas, shedding light on the structural ties between the past and the present. 1.10. Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

202. In February 2019, the Commission created the Thematic Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities to build the technical and institutional capacities necessary so that persons with disabilities are able to ensure the effective protection of their rights across the region, to create new mechanisms and to identify dynamics to achieve progress in the development of inter-American standards in line with the inter-American conventions. The Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities objective is to give visibility to the human rights challenges and violations that persons with disabilities in the Americas face to ensure the effective promotion and protection of their human rights, through the different mechanisms available under the inter-American system, and to identify synergies and new opportunities to move forward in the development of robust inter-American standards and promote laws, policies and practices that guarantee the effective and equal enjoyment of human rights by persons with disabilities on an equal footing). 1.11. Rapporteurship on the Rights of Older Persons

203. At its 171st period of sessions, held in February 2019, the Commission decided to create the Thematic Rapporteurship on the Rights of Older Persons to expand and deepen the existing institutional framework for monitoring the protection of the rights of older persons. Previously, in March 2017, the Unit on the Rights of Older Persons had been created, during the 162nd period of sessions and within the framework of the 2017–2021 Strategic Plan, after having performed a diagnosis which highlighted that the protection of the rights of older people continued to be a priority challenge in the region that demanded close monitoring by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, also considering the adoption of the Inter-American Convention on Protecting the Human Rights of Older Persons in 2015.

204. In 2024, in addition to the promotional activities of the Rapporteurship on the Rights of Older Persons reported, the work of the Rapporteurship focused on the dissemination of the report Human Rights of the Elderly and National Protection Systems in the Americas. To that effect, Rapporteur De Mees participated in several promotion events about the inter-American standards on the rights of older persons in general and, specifically, on the care and autonomy of older persons, their protection against violence and abuse, and the experience of the Commission in the adoption and promotion of the Inter-American Convention on Protecting the Human Rights of Older Persons. For more information enter: OAS :: IACHR :: Rapporteurship on the Rights of Older Persons \(oas.org\)

3. Follow-up on recommendations and SIMORE

205. During 2024, the Follow-up on Recommendations and Impact Section (SRI) carried out a series of promotion and training activities whose purpose was to share and publicize the features of the inter-American SIMORE. Those activities were intended to encourage member states, civil society organizations and autonomous entities to create accounts and publish information on the follow-up of recommendations on the SIMORE platform. Chapter I of this annual report contains more information on the activities undertaken in the context of the inter-American SIMORE, as well as additional activities involving joint roundtables with civil society organizations to optimize recommendation follow-up.

206. The following is a list of the main training and promotion activities conducted to disseminate and publicize the SIMORE online tool. Some additional activities related to recommendation follow-up are also listed.

207. During 2024, based on the training strategy for the use of SIMORE, the Commission continued to conduct training sessions for potential users from OAS member states, the civil society, autonomous organizations and academic institutions. Over the course of the year, the Commission organized and conducted a total of nine online sessions to provide training on the use of the inter-American SIMORE. Out of those training exercises, three were addressed to member States (June 7, July 17 and December 3), three were targeted at civil society organizations (May 9, October 31 and November 28) and three at autonomous human rights organizations (February 28, April 3 and May 8).

208. In terms of the results of the strategy for the dissemination of and training on the system, at the end of 2024, the Commission had recorded a total of 228 active user accounts, with which stakeholders are able to publish information on the follow-up of the Commission’s recommendations. Out of those accounts, 53 were created for 12 OAS member states (four of these were created for the State of Bolivia and two for Peru in 2024). Moreover, there are 143 active accounts for civil society organizations and universities. One of those accounts was activated in 2024 for an organization in Colombia. Finally, as of this date, there are 32 active accounts for 14 independent organizations, one of which was activated in 2024 for the MNPT. These numbers are highly significant in that they provide an important base of strategic actors allied to the inter-American SIMORE who are able to upload information on recommendation compliance through this online platform.

CHAPTER IV.A

SITUATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE REGION

OVERVIEW OF HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION BY COUNTRY<sup>1</sup>

METHODOLOGY

1. The Commission approved that Chapter IV.A of its 2024 Annual Report should correspond to an overview of the human rights situation in the States of the region, with special emphasis on the rights and issues prioritized by the IACHR through its Thematic Rapporteurships,<sup>2</sup> as well as on the cross-cutting themes established by the Commission in its 2023-2027 Strategic Plan.<sup>3</sup>

2. In preparing this section, the IACHR took into account the information received regarding the human rights situation in the region during 2024, in the exercise of its monitoring function. The IACHR used input from the different mechanisms through which the IACHR has followed up on the situation in the country, such as public hearings, thematic visits, requests for information under Article 41 of the American Convention and Article 18 of the IACHR Statute, and precautionary measures; as well as information from civil society organizations, journalistic notes, decisions and recommendations from specialized international bodies, among others.

3. In addition, and in accordance with the powers established in Article 41 of the American Convention and Article 18 of the Statute of the IACHR, in September 2024, the Commission requested information from the Member States on the rights, themes and cross-cutting issues prioritized in the Strategic Plan mentioned above. The IACHR received responses from the following Member States before the close of this report: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, and Uruguay. The IACHR is grateful for and appreciates the information sent, which has been included in this chapter.

4. The Commission is grateful for the information provided by institutions and civil society organizations throughout the year through the different monitoring mechanisms, which was included in this section.

TRENDS

5. This introduction highlights some of the advances and challenges observed in the human rights situation in the region during 2024. To this end, trends were identified with respect to the cross-cutting themes of democratic institutions and citizen security, memory, truth and justice, as well as equality and non-discrimination, particularly with respect to persons and groups in situations of special vulnerability. The IACHR monitoring was particularly attentive to the effects, in terms of human rights, of unequal power relations between individuals and social groups. These inequalities are rooted in the complex intersection of historical, economic, political and cultural factors that have given rise to historical and systematic discrimination and human rights violations.

<sup>2</sup> The IACHR has the following 11 thematic rapporteurships: Rapporteurship on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples; Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women; Rapporteurship on Human Mobility; Rapporteurship on the Rights of the Child; Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders; Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons Deprived of Liberty; Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons of African Descent and against Racial Discrimination; Rapporteurship on the Rights of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Trans and Intersex Persons; Rapporteurship on Memory, Truth and Justice; Rapporteurship on Older Persons; Rapporteurship on Persons with Disabilities. There are also two Special Rapporteurships: Special Rapporteurship on Freedom of Expression; and Special Rapporteurship on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights.

6. In terms of democratic institutions, although the holding of free and democratic elections in the region is recognized, there were serious challenges to the principle of separation of powers, one of the essential elements of representative democracy.<sup>4</sup> In particular, a series of actions promoted by powerful groups from within and outside the State were observed, aimed at weakening judicial independence and, consequently, the democratic rule of law. These include, among others, legal initiatives, political trials or disciplinary proceedings, which seek to arbitrarily remove judicial operators and prosecutors. Reports were received of undue interference by other branches of government and private individuals in the selection processes of justice operators, through the failure to apply minimum fundamental criteria such as equality, non-discrimination, training, merit and transparency, in accordance with Inter-American standards. Initiatives of the Executive and/or Legislative Branch were also observed in defiance of the enforcement of judicial decisions. The independence of the judiciary is an essential condition both for its functioning and for guaranteeing human rights and the democratic rule of law.

7. In this context, we observed both a growing questioning of democratic institutions by the population and an increase in polarization in the societies of the Americas. In particular, the way in which this exacerbated polarization impacts democracies, by placing institutionality in second place to partisan and emotional affiliations. This, with the consequent loss of citizen confidence in institutions and the generation of conditions for the emergence of various forms of political violence.<sup>5</sup> Democracy, the rule of law and human rights are interdependent pillars for guaranteeing peace, stability and development in the region. Within this triad, the system of checks and balances plays an essential role in preventing abuses of power, guaranteeing equality before the law, protecting human rights and promoting social cohesion.

8. With respect to citizen security, the Commission observed major challenges in addressing the high levels of violence and insecurity resulting from criminality and organized crime. Militarization actions persist in the region and the excessive use of force in the face of demonstrations. At the same time, in several countries in different parts of the region, States are resorting more frequently to the suspension of guarantees through states of emergency to address this situation. In this sense, the IACHR has questioned its use when it is decreed either in a prolonged or permanent manner, when it is based on vague or ambiguous expressions such as "acts of violence in different regions of the country", or when there is a lack of justification or indications that the situation could not have been addressed through the ordinary mechanisms of the State. For its part, the Inter-American Court has pointed out that the suspension of guarantees must operate as a strictly exceptional measure to confront real emergency situations and does not constitute a means to confront common criminality.

9. The Commission recalls that public policies on citizen security must provide effective and efficient responses to the demands of a democratic society, based on a comprehensive approach to the causes and consequences of crime, and within the limits established by international and inter-American human rights standards. Faced with the false dilemma between adopting effective actions to confront crime and complying with the international human rights obligations of States, the Commission emphasizes that respect for fundamental rights is not only compatible with a citizen security policy, but is its indispensable condition.

<sup>4</sup> Article 3: "Essential elements of representative democracy include, inter alia, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; access to and the exercise of power subject to the rule of law; the holding of periodic, free, fair elections based on universal and secret suffrage as an expression of the sovereignty of the people; the pluralistic system of political parties and organizations; and the separation and independence of the branches of government

10. In this cross-cutting context between democratic institutions and citizen security, there was a generalized tendency to reduce civic space. This situation is manifested in restrictions on the right to protest, the disproportionate use of public force against demonstrators and journalists, and an increasingly hostile environment for the exercise of freedom of expression and the work of human rights defenders. The passing of laws limiting their funding and actions, including through the cancellation of their legal status. The Commission documented attacks, threats and a high number of murders against human rights defenders, as well as the criminalization of their work in several States in the region as a way of hindering the right to defend human rights.

11. Likewise, the IACHR observed the worsening situation of insecurity for justice operators, particularly in the face of organized crime, as well as harassment in the face of decisions contrary to their interests. It is the obligation of the States to guarantee the security of their justice operators against all kinds of external pressures, since the exercise of the jurisdictional function can be seriously affected, and consequently access to justice.

12. Along the same lines, the IACHR noted the weakening of institutions and policies specializing in memory, truth, justice and reparation for serious violations of human rights, as well as the absence of key regulations related to historical memory and the search for missing persons. It also identified serious setbacks in the fight against impunity, expressed in the processing or approval of laws that allow the statute of limitations for crimes against humanity or setbacks in emblematic criminal cases.

13. Significant progress was made in the region in the area of equality and non-discrimination. Some States advanced legislation and public policies to guarantee the rights derived from a family relationship between persons of the same sex; to promote the inclusion of persons and groups historically discriminated against in the labor and educational spheres; and to promote political participation and access to basic services for indigenous communities and persons of African descent; as well as to guarantee the ESCR of persons with disabilities. Progress was also made in the recognition of the rights of the elderly, as well as in the consolidation and strengthening of systems of care and protection of the rights of this population.

14. However, in other countries, the particular challenges faced by individuals and groups suffering from historical and systematic discrimination intensified. In particular, there was an increase in hate speech, misinformation and questioning of the rights of LGBTI people, women, Afro-descendants, indigenous and tribal peoples, as well as initiatives that threaten the full participation and autonomy of people with disabilities. Likewise, there was a weakening of legislation, policies and institutions dedicated to combating discrimination and violence against these groups. This has led to an increase in violence, particularly against women and LGBTI people. This is in addition to the already high rates of gender violence against women, particularly in the family or domestic sphere. In addition, systematic discrimination against indigenous peoples and Afro-descendants has worsened.

15. With respect to the rights of children and adolescents, the IACHR observed that significant challenges persist, particularly the poverty that still plagues a significant portion of this population and the violence against children and adolescents in family, educational, and institutional settings. Also of concern is the tendency observed in some countries to implement curfews, which could violate the individual liberty of children and adolescents.

16. With regard to the situation of persons deprived of their liberty, the IACHR identified a deterioration in detention conditions in several countries in the region, characterized by overcrowding, lack of access to basic services and lack of reintegration activities. This is compounded by intra-prison violence and torture in prisons, as well as the implementation, in some countries, of more restrictive detention regimes with measures that severely limit contact with family members and defense counsel, affecting the fundamental rights of detainees.

17. Finally, with respect to people in human mobility, the outlook for 2025 shows a worrisome panorama, with the use of discourse and other policies by authorities that stigmatize them, pointing out that they threaten national security and are economically detrimental to the countries of transit or destination. This context is accompanied by threats of mass detention and deportation, seriously affecting those who migrate for different reasons or who seek international protection. The IACHR also noted setbacks characterized by the implementation of restrictive migration policies aimed at containing the movement of people and limiting access to protection procedures

18. Pursuant to Article 59.2.e.i of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, the following is a country-by-country overview of the human rights situation in the hemisphere during the year 2024. Each section is divided into two parts: general considerations, highlighting progress and challenges per country identified by each of the thematic rapporteurships; and specific issues, corresponding to the cross-cutting themes prioritized in the IACHR Strategic Plan, in particular: democratic institutions, human rights institutions, access to justice, citizen security, equality and non-discrimination. This overview is complemented by the reports of the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (RELE) and the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA), which are published in the respective chapters of this annual report.

I. ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA

• General considerations

19. As it relates to progress, the Commission notes efforts by the State to reduce delays in its criminal justice system. Moreover, the IACHR takes note of the progress of a judicial challenge against abortion laws in the State. Additionally, the Commission highlights the State's efforts to provide adequate medical care to persons with psychosocial disabilities who are deprived of liberty.

20. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes with concern the increase in homicides and the introduction of a juvenile curfew in the State. Moreover, the Commission takes note of the high occupancy levels in His Majesty's Prison.

21. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

• Specific issues

22. With respect to democratic institutionality, the Commission notes the Electoral Commission's submission in March of its report on the 2023 general election. According to public information, this Report underscores the need for the reform of electoral laws, particularly regarding campaign financing, and identifies current lacunas in the laws, including the Representation of the People's Act, which make it challenging to regulate the financing activities of political parties.<sup>6</sup>

23. Regarding citizen security, in September the State passed the Anti-Gang Act, which seeks to discourage gang-related activity and membership in an effort to maintain public order and safety.<sup>7</sup> According to the Act, a person who recruits another person, including a child, to a gang commits an offence and can face up to 10 years in prison if found guilty.<sup>8</sup>

24. Moreover, the Commission notes with concern an increase in homicides in the State. According to public information, for the period between January and June 2024 there were approximately 6 homicides, compared to 2 homicides reported for the same period in 2023.<sup>9</sup> While this is low as compared to other homicide figures in the Caribbean region, this represents an approximate 200% increase in homicides in 2024. The State's homicide rate was 6.23 per 100,000 inhabitants as of June.<sup>10</sup>

25. In relation to access to justice, according to public information, in May the amendment to the Criminal Proceedings (Trial by Judge Alone) Act made judge alone trials permanent, including for inchoate offences. This amendment seeks to assist with the reduction of delays in the criminal justice system.<sup>11</sup> The IACHR also notes the State's introduction of the Partnership of the Caribbean and the European Union on Justice (PACE Justice) Project in July. This Project aims to enhance the institutional capacities of officials in the criminal justice system and reduce the backlog of court cases via the training of judicial and public officials on restorative justice and criminal mediation best practices.<sup>12</sup>

26. With respect to the rights of children, the IACHR takes note with concern of the juvenile curfew introduced in October through the Small Charges (Amendment) Act, 2024. This legislation, which does not specify an end-term, establishes a curfew which makes it an offence for unaccompanied minors to be out at night unless they are with a parent or guardian, and during the day unless they are engaged in lawful recreational or educational activities.<sup>13</sup> Additionally, the Commission has noted reports indicating an increasing trend of school dropouts among youths under 16, largely attributed to a heightened fear of gang violence.<sup>14</sup>

27. Regarding the rights of women, in November the State launched a sexual offenders' registry as part of the implementation of the law approved in 2022 to combat sexual recidivism.<sup>15</sup> Further, the High Court decided to continue with the trial challenging the abortion legislation that allows women to terminate pregnancies only in cases of risk to their health.<sup>16</sup> According to the claimant, the current law lacks guidelines to differentiate between legal and illegal termination of pregnancy, which promotes arbitrary and discriminatory practices against women.<sup>17</sup>

28. In addition, the Commission takes note of the workshop, hosted in March, aimed at the media to promote language with a gender perspective and prevent the dissemination of gender stereotypes within the framework of the Canada-CARICOM Expert Deployment Mechanism.<sup>18</sup> Additionally, the Commission notes that in May the Government proposed the creation of public daycare centers to reduce the costs associated with childcare in order to facilitate the incorporation of young mothers into the labor market, especially those from densely populated areas.<sup>19</sup>

29. As for persons deprived of liberty, the Commission takes note of the State's efforts in April to relocate inmates with psychosocial disabilities from His Majesty's Prison to a dedicated facility. According to public information, a refurbished facility in the East of the island will serve as this temporary space and will be staffed with a complement of personnel, including nurses.<sup>20</sup> However, the Commission expresses its concern regarding the State's prison system which, as of September 2024, has an occupancy level of 266.7%.<sup>21</sup>

30. In addition, the Commission expresses its concern regarding the death of an inmate in August at His Majesty's Prison after having an altercation with a prison guard.<sup>22</sup> The IACHR takes note that a prison guard has been charged with homicide and remanded into the custody.<sup>23</sup>

31. In relation to the death penalty, the IACHR notes that the State continues to retain the death penalty punishment even though no executions have been carried out since 1991, no one is currently under this penalty, and nobody has been sentenced to death since 1991.<sup>24</sup>

II. ARGENTINA

• General considerations

32. In 2024, Argentina achieved progress in the implementation of the adversarial system of justice in federal criminal courts, the introduction of a special framework for the regularization of Venezuelan migrants, the development of programs to promote the inclusion of persons with disabilities in the workplace, education and sports, the establishment of a state observatory for the care system for adults and older persons, and the provision of support to Roma communities involved in legislative activities to secure the recognition of their rights.

33. As it relates to challenges, the Commission underscores the consequences of the measures aimed at reorganizing and downsizing the State, which have undermined the efforts to combat gender-based violence and discrimination and have had a greater impact on the enjoyment of economic, social, cultural and environmental rights (ESCERs). Moreover, the Commission observed setbacks in memory, truth and justice policies, which are essential for addressing the legacy of human rights violations in the country.

34. On October 10, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>25</sup>

• Specific issues

35. With regard to the democratic institutionality, the State informed that it had adopted measures to guarantee access to public information and ensure transparency in the public administration, such as regulations governing requests for information and a new methodology for monitoring active transparency policies within the public administration.<sup>26</sup>

36. As part of these measures, the government issued executive decrees to reorganize state institutions by merging ministries, transferring competencies and closing entities. These actions were carried out under the state of public emergency declared in 2023, which covered economic, financial, fiscal, administrative, social security, public utility rates, health and social matters. The State reported that the purpose of this declaration was to ensure the stability of the national budget and improve bureaucratic efficiency.<sup>27</sup>

37. However, during a thematic hearing organized by the Commission, organizations warned about the regressive effects on human rights of the austerity policies and cuts in social protection programs that were implemented without considering their impact on the most vulnerable sectors, such as workers of the popular economy. They highlighted, in particular, the negative impact on the national intelligence system, retirement and pension programs and telecommunications and internet services. These organizations added that social participation had been weakened and that essential programs aimed at eradicating poverty had been put at risk.<sup>28</sup>

38. In this regard, a report issued by the National Statistics and Census Institute (INDEC) revealed that poverty affected 52.9 percent of the population in the first semester of the year, impacting 15.7 million people. This represents an 11.2 percent increase nationwide compared to the second half of 2023.<sup>29</sup>

39. With respect to human rights institutions, the National Congress has yet to appoint the head of the National Office of the Ombudsperson, a challenge that has persisted for 15 years and continues to undermine this institution.<sup>30</sup> Similarly, Congress may fail to adopt measures to extend the mandate of the current Ombudswoman for the Rights of Children and Adolescents in Argentina, set to expire in March 2025, or to appoint a new head to the office, potentially jeopardizing the defense of the rights of this population.<sup>31</sup>

40. The State shut down the National Institute Against Discrimination, Xenophobia and Racism (INADI), which was responsible for handling cases involving racism and xenophobia and served as the focal institution for the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD).<sup>32</sup>

41. Regarding citizen security, the State reported that it had provided training to provincial and federal security forces, as well as federal prison staff, as part of the Training Program for Security Forces on Human Rights and the Prevention of Institutional Violence.<sup>33</sup>

42. However, several cases of disproportionate use of public force against demonstrators and journalists were recorded in 2024. The Commission noted that, between January and September 2024, several demonstrations near the National Congress of Argentina were met with violent repression. For instance, from January 31 to February 2, 31 people were arrested and 285 were injured during demonstrations against the “Omnibus Bill of Law” (Ley de Bases y Puntos de Partida para la Libertad de los Argentinos), including 35

journalists who were struck by rubber bullets and sprayed with tear gas.<sup>34</sup> On June 12, reports highlighted the excessive use of nonlethal weapons by security forces during demonstrations against the “Bill of Law on Principles,” (which was a second debate on the former Omnibus Bill of Law); as a result, several journalists were injured.<sup>35</sup> On September 11, the use of tear gas and rubber bullets was reported during demonstrations by pensioners against the veto on the Pension Adjustment Law. Demonstrators and bystanders, including children and older adults, were injured during the protest, as documented by the National Committee to Prevent Torture.<sup>36</sup>

43. On access to justice, the State informed that National Directorate for Assistance to Victims of Institutional Violence and Discrimination, which operates under the Secretariat of Human Rights, had provided assistance and support in 549 cases of institutional violence. These cases involved torture and arbitrary detentions, among other issues.<sup>37</sup> The Argentina State also reported measures to ensure access to justice for persons with disabilities through the National Registry of Communication Facilitators. For its part, the Ministry of Justice published a decree for the gradual implementation of the adversarial system of justice in the federal criminal courts, based on principles such as equality between the parties, as well as oral and public proceedings. The State indicated that this system is expected to be implemented nationwide by 2027.<sup>38</sup>

44. With regard to the rights of indigenous peoples, the State repealed the decree extending the “emergency concerning the possession and ownership of lands traditionally occupied by indigenous communities.” This action represents a regulatory setback, inasmuch as it put an end to the suspension of evictions on lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples.<sup>39</sup> However, evictions were carried out in the provinces of Jujuy,<sup>40</sup> Río Negro<sup>41</sup> and Chubut<sup>42</sup> even while the territorial emergency was in place.

45. In addition, the State reopened technical legal-cadastral land surveys that had already been completed, thus creating legal uncertainty over lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples.<sup>43</sup> It also suspended the National Registry of Indigenous Communities and halted administrative procedures for granting legal status to indigenous communities. In addition, 13 districts still lack a provincial registry.<sup>44</sup>

46. These measures were adopted in a context marked by stigmatizing statements against indigenous peoples and their leaders.<sup>45</sup> In response to these challenges, the Commission issued a press release calling on the Argentine State to uphold its international obligations regarding the rights of indigenous peoples when adopting administrative measures and legal provisions concerning the recognition of indigenous peoples’ legal personality and land titling.<sup>46</sup>

47. As to the rights of women, the restructuring process of the public administration that began in December 2023 has significantly weakened the institutional framework and policies dedicated to women’s protection.<sup>47</sup> In particular, the closure of the Undersecretariat for Protection Against Gender-Based Violence was the final step in the dismantling of the Ministry of Women, Genders and Diversity (MMGyD).<sup>48</sup> For the first time in 40 years, there is no governing body in the country responsible for the design and implementation of policies to prevent and eradicate gender-based violence.<sup>49</sup> This situation, along with other challenges, was addressed during a public hearing convened by the Commission, where organizations reported setbacks in public policies aimed at addressing and eradicating gender-based violence and at guaranteeing sexual and reproductive rights.<sup>50</sup>

48. The State reported that the policies and programs previously implemented by the former Undersecretariat for Protection Against Gender-Based Violence are currently undergoing auditing, review and refocusing.<sup>51</sup> Hence, various secretariats and directorates within the National Ministry of Justice are implementing some of the key programs initially created by the now-defunct MMGyD on prevention, protection, care and access to justice for victims of violence.<sup>52</sup> Notwithstanding that, it is concerning that some of these programs have been adversely affected by the closure of institutions, budget cuts, underexpenditure and/or widespread layoffs. Such is the case of the 144 Helpline, the Acompañar (Support) program, the Access to Justice Centers, the Acercar Derechos (Narrowing Gaps in Access to Rights) program, among others.<sup>53</sup>

49. Moreover, high-rank officials have made statements denying the existence of gender-based violence, a dismissive stance that may incite violence against women, as in the brutal attack on a women human rights defenders.<sup>54</sup> In this context, the National Office of the Ombudsperson documented 147 femicide victims between January and June 2024, most of whom were killed by their partners or former partners.<sup>55</sup> Meanwhile, the civil society had recorded 212 femicides and 526 attempted femicides as of November 20, 2024.<sup>56</sup>

50. Similarly, according to information collected by the civil society, funding for key programs such as the National Plan for the Prevention of Unintended Pregnancy in Adolescence (ENIA Plan) and the Development of Responsible Sexual Health and Procreation Program has been suspended or reduced. Additionally, the Ministry of Health is reportedly failing to distribute supplies for the legal termination of pregnancy (ILE) or contraceptive methods. The civil society also reported barriers to accessing ILE services, including the abusive use of conscientious objections, delays in providing care, refusal to address ILE cases involving advanced pregnancies and instances of violence and stigmatization on the part of the health staff.<sup>57</sup>

51. With regard to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission highlights the adoption of Provision No. 388 of September 5, 2024, by the National Directorate of Migration, which created a special framework for the regularization of Venezuelan migrants, as a positive development.<sup>58</sup> This measure reportedly benefits Venezuelans who were already in Argentine territory at the time of its coming into force, as well as those lacking valid travel documents who seek to enter the country. In particular, this provision allegedly facilitates access to the country through regular routes by providing flexible options for verifying identity and guaranteeing a legal residence permit of at least two years for those who meet the requirements.

52. Furthermore, the composition of the National Commission for Refugees (CONARE) was modified on September 12, 2024, by means of Decree No. 819, under which the representative of INADI — dissolved pursuant to Decree No. 696 of August 5, 2024— was replaced with a representative of the Ministry of Security.<sup>59</sup> Decree No. 819, issued (allegedly) under a law declaring a public administrative emergency and delegating legislative powers to the executive branch, justified this reform on the alleged need to adopt “urgent state measures” in this area.<sup>60</sup>

53. Subsequently, Decree No. 942 of October 21, 2024, introduced amendments to Law No. 26,165,<sup>61</sup> which were focused on procedural guarantees and grounds for exclusion in international protection proceedings. In particular, it eliminated review instances and reduced the time frame for filing appeals against decisions that deny, terminate or revoke the status of refugee. Moreover, Decree No. 942 classifies as criminal offenses certain conducts that are not explicitly defined as unlawful under national legislation, thus enabling the State to refuse protection even when an asylum seeker has merely been accused. These reforms contravene the principle of presumption of innocence and, by laying down vague or indeterminate criminal criteria, fail to demonstrate the existence of circumstances of sufficient gravity to render such measures proportional, objective and legitimate.

54. With respect to human trafficking, the aforementioned Provision No. 388/2024, under which the Special Framework for the Regularization of Migrants Born in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela was created, may help reduce the vulnerability of these people, thereby decreasing their risk of becoming potential victims of human trafficking.<sup>62</sup> The government also enacted the Law on Labor Inclusion for Victims of Human Trafficking which had been passed by the Legislature of the Province of Tierra del Fuego and Southern Atlantic Islands.<sup>63</sup> This law aims to provide paid job training for victims of human trafficking who have no prior work or academic experience.

55. With regard to the rights of children and adolescents, according to official records, 30 percent of households were unable to afford the basic food basket in the first quarter of 2024, leading to a rise in the number of children and adolescents experiencing poverty and food insecurity. Furthermore, challenges persisted with regard to the continuation of food delivery programs and secure funding for community and school canteens.<sup>64</sup>

56. In addition, as of September 2024, the State had recorded 14 legislative initiatives to lower the age of criminal responsibility, with some proposals suggesting a reduction to as low as 12 years of age. Among these initiatives, there was a bill aimed at reforming National Law No. 22,278, known as the Criminal System for Minors. Moreover, pending initiatives seek to increase prison sentences for this population, with penalties potentially reaching up to 20 years of imprisonment.<sup>65</sup>

57. Regarding persons deprived of liberty, the National Committee to Prevent Torture (CNPT), together with other national mechanisms to prevent torture in the region, adopted both the Declaration of San José aimed at institutional strengthening and networking, and the Global Action for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Deprived of Liberty.<sup>66</sup> Additionally, according to a CNPT report published in 2024, mass incarceration practices are reportedly in place in the country, which consist in using pretrial detention and denying requests for alternative measures and early release from prison.<sup>67</sup>

58. In this context, the country is reportedly considering adopting a criminal and penitentiary policy that may violate the rights of persons accused or convicted of crimes.<sup>68</sup> In addition, temporary facilities such as police stations or police detention centers are reportedly still being used as permanent detention sites. According to data collected by academic institutions, in 7 out of all 24 Argentina's jurisdictions, the provincial rate of confinement in police stations was over 30 percent.<sup>69</sup> Among these, the provinces of La Pampa, Tucumán and Santiago del Estero had the highest rates with 61.40 percent, 51.86 percent and 50.41 percent, respectively.<sup>70</sup>

59. Furthermore, the number of individuals detained in police stations in the city of Buenos Aires has reportedly increased by nearly 47 percent in one year. In response, the city government announced measures including the implementation of electronic ankle bracelets in cases of house arrest, the deportation of migrants who have committed crimes, the construction of new detention centers and the installation of detention modules in police stations.<sup>71</sup> However, these modules reportedly fail to ensure detention conditions compatible with human dignity, inasmuch as, according to official records, they consist of "conditioned metal structures" located in "yards or parking lots."<sup>72</sup>

60. With regard to the fight against torture, during the first quarter of 2024, the National Office of the Prison Ombudsman (PPN) documented 77 cases of torture and ill-treatment and filed 34 criminal complaints related to these cases. In addition, investigations were conducted into the deaths of six people who

61. In terms of progress regarding the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the State reported that it provided support to Roma communities that participated in activities held by the National Congress, which is currently studying bills introduced in 2023 aimed at guaranteeing their rights through recognition and reparation.<sup>74</sup> Civil society organizations reported that the State had failed to take action to provide funding for public policies and protection measures aimed at Afro-descendants.<sup>75</sup>

62. As regards the human rights of LGBTI persons, in March 2024, the Argentine justice system convicted 11 individuals for crimes against humanity that were committed during the last military dictatorship. Among the victims of these crimes were eight trans women.<sup>76</sup> In its reasoned judgment, the First Federal Oral Criminal Court of La Plata recognized the systemic nature of the persecution and repression of trans women, which sought to establish a generic and hegemonic sex model.<sup>77</sup>

63. Similarly, in October 2024, the Second Oral Criminal Court of La Plata convicted an individual for the aggravated homicide of Tehuel de la Torre, a young transgender man who disappeared in 2021 and was presumed dead by the Argentine authorities. The conviction was based on the hate motivations of the crime.<sup>78</sup> Furthermore, in October, the Argentine justice system acquitted LGBTI activist Pierina Nochetti of charges related to painting a mural with the phrase “Where is Tehuel?” in Necochea.<sup>79</sup> Activists had raised concerns about the potential use of this case to criminalize social protest and freedom of expression.<sup>80</sup>

64. Media outlets and civil society organizations reported that high-rank officials issued stigmatizing statements against diverse gender identities and the gender perspective.<sup>81</sup> Additionally, the authorities announced restrictions on the application of the Gender Identity Law for persons deprived of liberty,<sup>82</sup> and terminated the employment contracts of at least 90 trans persons who held positions in the public sector.<sup>83</sup>

66. With regard to memory, truth and justice processes, the Argentine State reported that, between 2006 and September 2024, the Office of the Ombudsperson for Crimes Against Humanity recorded 328 judgments on crimes against humanity committed during the dictatorship, resulting in 1,187 convictions and 192 acquittals. The State added that 278 proceedings remain ongoing, with 379 persons being prosecuted, 70 awaiting decisions on their procedural status and 467 facing charges and awaiting trial.<sup>86</sup> As stated above, among these cases is the one in which the Argentine justice system recognized eight trans persons as victims of these crimes for the first time.<sup>87</sup> Furthermore, the State signed the Ljubljana-The Hague Convention on International Cooperation in the Investigation and Prosecution of the Crime of Genocide, Crimes against Humanity, War Crimes and Other International Crimes.<sup>88</sup>

67. Despite the progress made, civil society organizations expressed concerns over serious setbacks ranging from the weakening of litigation capabilities in cases of crimes against humanity to the closure of programs and specialized institutional spaces. In particular, they reported the dismissal of officials from the Secretariat of Human Rights who were responsible for institutional complaints and victim assistance in cases of crimes against humanity, as well as the cancellation of the Collective Memory and Social Inclusion Program, under which audiovisual records of the trials related to such crimes were created. Moreover, the organizations reported the dissolution of the Special Investigation Unit of the National Commission for the Right to Identity (CONADI), which conducted administrative investigations focused on possible cases of child abduction during the dictatorship. These organizations added that the 2025 budget allocated to the National Genetic Data Bank had been reduced, thus impacting the predictability of its operation. For its part, the State informed that these reforms aim to avoid the duplication of efforts in the context of the economic crisis and guaranteed its commitment to the trials for crimes against humanity and to preserving archives and remembrance sites.<sup>89</sup>

68. In addition to the foregoing, the State disbanded the Armed Forces Documentary Survey and Analysis Team as well as the Joint Committee on Intelligence Documents, both of which had been instrumental in the reconstruction of state archives related to human rights violations. In parallel, the Ministries of Defense and Security refused to respond to the requests for information submitted by the CONADI.<sup>90</sup> The State justified these institutional reforms as necessary to prevent the duplication of efforts in the context of the economic crisis and asserted that only the Public Prosecutor's Office and the judiciary may request information for investigating crimes against humanity.<sup>91</sup>

69. In turn, civil society organizations reported a reduction in the budget of the Secretariat of Human Rights, which allegedly jeopardizes the continued existence of eight remembrance sites that rely on state funding, thus leading to staff layoffs.<sup>92</sup> According to the information received, all these measures have been implemented in the context of official statements, even from the highest-rank government authorities, which downplay, deny or vindicate the serious human rights violations committed during the dictatorship. In addition, stigmatization campaigns were reportedly mounted against organizations advocating for memory, truth, justice and reparations in the country.<sup>93</sup> Furthermore, the Commission voiced its concern over Bill No. 2,434/23, currently pending before the National Congress, which seeks to establish a statute of limitations of 20 years to determine the criminal liability and advance on the criminal prosecution from the moment the State becomes aware of a crime in cases where a judgment has not become final. The bill fails to include provisions to exempt crimes against humanity from such statute limitations<sup>94</sup>.

70. With regard to the rights of older persons, the State created the Observatory of the Care System for Adults and Older Persons under the Ministry of Health.<sup>95</sup> Additionally, the city of Buenos Aires developed the Club+Simple application, which is designed to facilitate older persons' access to community integration and recreational events within a user-friendly digital environment.<sup>96</sup> In the field of health, access to vaccines for respiratory infections was improved.<sup>97</sup> In terms of housing, the Permanent Household Survey (EPH) revealed that 7.25 percent of individuals over the age of 60 in Argentina live in rented homes, which accounts for 6.58 percent of the total tenant population nationwide. It also underscored the barriers to access housing that older persons face due to the unavailability of mortgage options<sup>98</sup>.

71. In October, the Commission, through the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA), requested information from the Argentine State regarding the decline in the purchasing power provided by social security benefits. In its response, the State explained that the method currently in force for calculating retirement and pension allowances was established in Decree No. 274/24, which mandates a monthly adjustment based on the General Level of the National Consumer Price Index. According to the information provided, after the decree came into force, the cumulative inflation between April and September 2024 reached 33 percent; consequently, benefits were adjusted by 74 percent, leading to an increase of 31 percent in their actual value. The government also noted that the extraordinary pension bonus for low-income senior citizens continued to be paid to mitigate the negative effects of the previous system (Law No. 27,609)<sup>99</sup>.

72. Furthermore, the National Agency for Disability (ANDIS), which is currently under the National Ministry of Health, is responsible for designing, coordinating and implementing public policies related to persons with disabilities, as well as for promoting the full enjoyment of their rights.<sup>100</sup> The State informed that ANDIS Resolution No. 494/2024 set the starting date for the submission of projects to the Programs for Persons with Disabilities within the framework of the National Fund for the Social Inclusion of Persons with Disabilities (FONADIS). These programs include the Support Program for High Performance Athletes with Disabilities, which provides subsidies to athletes with disabilities for purchasing the equipment necessary for their sports activities; the Program to Strengthen Inclusive Productive Units, which offers financial support to productive units made up of persons with disabilities; and the Educational Inclusion Program, which aims to 73. As it relates to progress, the IACHR welcomes the passage of the Ombudsman Act which will establish an Ombudsman's Office responsible for the promotion and protection of human rights. Moreover, the State's legislative efforts to reduce crime are noted including the introduction of the Bail Amendment and Anti-Gang Bills. The State's efforts to improve the situation of detainees is welcomed, in particular, the passage of the Immigration Detention Center Regulation.

74. In relation to challenges, the Commission notes an increase in homicides and worrying trends regarding gender-based violence. Additionally, the Commission notes that there has been no amendment to the law following the judicial decision in 2023 regarding statelessness.

75. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

76. Regarding democratic institutionality, the Commission notes allegations of corruption regarding high-ranking public officials. In November, several Bahamian government officials, including high-ranking members of the Royal Bahamas Police Force, were indicted in the United States in connection with their alleged participation in a massive illicit drug importation conspiracy.<sup>102</sup> Subsequently, the Prime Minister issued a statement assuring that the State will act decisively to investigate all those responsible for the alleged misconduct.<sup>103</sup> In December, the Prime Minister informed the House of Assembly that the Police Commissioner had tendered his resignation, and the Police Force will be reformed under new leadership.<sup>104</sup> Further, the government introduced into the House of Assembly the Independent Commission of Investigations Bill, 2024 which will provide for the establishment of an independent Commission to conduct investigations into serious allegations of criminal activity by members of the security forces and specified public officials.<sup>105</sup>

77. With respect to human rights institutionality, the Commission observes the passage of the Ombudsman Act 2024.<sup>106</sup> As previously reported by the Commission, the Ombudsman will be responsible for the investigation of any administrative action of a State authority to determine whether there is evidence of maladministration or breach of fundamental rights on the part of the authority.<sup>107</sup> According to the Office of the Attorney General, the Office of the Ombudsman's primary role will be "promotion and protection of all human rights".<sup>108</sup> In October, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights established its first dedicated regional office in The Bahamas, led by Michelle Brathwaite of Barbados. The office's creation was

78. In relation to citizen security, the IACHR takes note of the State's efforts to reduce crime and an overall increase in homicides. In relation to its crime suppressing initiatives, the State has tabled the Bail Amendment and the Anti-Gang Bills, 2024. According to the State, the Bail Amendment Bill is an important tool in its crime prevention strategy which will allow the revocation of bail where a person while on bail commits an offence, interferes with a witness or fails to appear in court. The Bill has been passed in the House of Assembly.<sup>110</sup> Further, the State introduced the Anti-Gang Bill in the House of Assembly. The Bill, which targets organized crime, makes it an offence to be a member of an organized criminal group to engage in any related criminal activity.<sup>111</sup>

79. On the other hand, the Commission notes an increase in homicides in the State. According to public information, there were 119 homicides reported for 2024,<sup>112</sup> as compared to a total of 110 homicides reported in 2023,<sup>113</sup> which represents an approximately 8% increase in homicides. This represents a homicide rate of 28.8 per 100,000 inhabitants.<sup>114</sup>

80. Regarding access to justice, the IACHR notes the coming into force of the Court Services Act 2023 and the passage of the Trial by Judge Alone Bill 2024 in the House of Assembly. On July 1, 2024, the Court Services Act came into effect. According to the State, this Act aims to modernize and improve the efficiency of the judicial system with the creation of a Court Services Council which will manage all administrative matters of the Courts, provide training, education and support for judicial officers, among other duties.<sup>115</sup> Moreover, the Trial by Judge Alone Bill 2024 was passed in the House of Assembly in May.<sup>116</sup> According to the Bill, an accused person may waive their constitutional right to a jury trial in favor of a trial by a judge alone.<sup>117</sup>

81. Regarding the rights of women, the IACHR notes the establishment of a shelter for victims of domestic violence, worrying trends regarding gender-based violence and the existence of a significant wage gap compared to men. In October 2024, according to public information, the State acquired a new shelter for women victims of domestic violence, including their children.<sup>118</sup> A study conducted in the State and published this year revealed that 25.2% of Bahamian women have experienced physical or sexual violence during their lifetime, while 33.7% have been victims of psychological violence and 8.2% have suffered sexual violence by their partner.<sup>119</sup> Within this context, the Commission notes the repeated calls from civil society to make amendments to the Sexual Crimes Law to punish instances of marital rape.<sup>120</sup>

82. Moreover, the IACHR notes with concern reports of alleged sexual abuse against women by members of the Royal Bahamas Police Force. According to public information, at least five members were charged with several counts of rape for incidents that occurred in October 2024.<sup>121</sup> The Commission also notes the existence of a significant wage gap of 33% compared to men and a notable underrepresentation of women in management positions within the private sector.<sup>122</sup>

83. With respect to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission continues to observe with concern the State's ongoing practice of deporting irregular migrants, notably Haitian nationals, without proper assessment of international protection needs. According to public information, in March, the Bahamas Department of Immigration and Ministry of National Security repatriated 263 Haitian migrants after their attempt to make landfall in the State.<sup>123</sup>

84. With regard to the prevention of statelessness, the Commission notes that there has been no amendment to the law following the judicial decision in 2023 regarding statelessness. In 2023, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the State's highest court, ruled that all children born in The Bahamas can acquire Bahamian nationality at birth once one parent is Bahamian, regardless of the parents' marital status.<sup>124</sup> Despite this ruling, the laws which contained discriminatory provisions against women's ability to transfer nationality remained in force and had not been amended. In this context, the Prime Minister has stated that no legislative amendments were needed to enforce the decision of the Privy Council, and the rules of the passport offices have been amended.<sup>125</sup> The Commission understands that these measures do not address fully the decision of the Privy Council and no further information on how the ruling is being effectively implemented is available to the IACHR.<sup>126</sup>

85. Regarding trafficking in persons, the IACHR takes note of the 2024 Regional Trafficking in Persons Committee Forum, which was organized by the State in collaboration with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. This Forum involved 14 participating Caribbean States and sought to advance screening methods and emphasize techniques for detecting trafficking cases<sup>127</sup>.

86. Regarding the situation of people of African descent and against racial discrimination, the situation of Haitian migrants raises concerns regarding human rights violations and ethnic discrimination. Human rights institutions and organizations have reported cases of discrimination and labor exploitation, including wages below the minimum, the withholding of work permits by employers, and ethnic-racial profiling by immigration authorities.<sup>128</sup>

87. Regarding the rights of LGBTI people, the Commission welcomes the holding of the first LGBTI pride march in the State in October 2024. This event, which was held peacefully, represented a significant advance in the visibility of sexual and gender diversity in The Bahamas. However, it is noted with concern that participants faced insults and ridicule from some spectators during the march, reflecting the persistence of attitudes of discrimination towards the LGBTI population.<sup>129</sup>

88. Note is also taken of the challenges faced by LGBTI people and people with disabilities in the country, especially in the context of migration. Recent reports indicate that migrants are particularly exposed to discrimination in various areas, which limits their access to basic services and opportunities for social integration.<sup>130</sup> A worrying case is the disappearance in June 2024 of Taylor Casey, a transgender human rights defender originally from Chicago.<sup>131</sup>

89. As for persons deprived of liberty, the Commission observes the State's efforts to improve the situation of detainees. In particular, it values the passing of the Immigration Detention Center Regulation in December 2023, which seeks to establish domestic standards for the administration of detention centers in line with international human rights standards.<sup>132</sup>

90. In addition, the IACHR takes note of the State's plans, expressed in September, to build a new detention facility focused on rehabilitation.<sup>133</sup> On the other hand, the IACHR expresses its concerns about the occupancy level of 161.7% of the State's prison system as of September 2024.<sup>134</sup>

91. In relation to the death penalty, the IACHR observes that the Bahamas has maintained a de facto moratorium in place. According to the World Coalition Against Capital Punishment, no executions have taken place since 2000, no one has been sentenced to death since this time, and nobody is currently under a sentence of death.<sup>135</sup>

IV. BARBADOS

- General considerations

92. As it relates to progress, the IACHR notes the establishment of a National Advisory Council on Citizen Security, the intention of the State to establish a National Gender Policy to address the prevalence of gender-based violence, and of significant efforts by the State in promoting the call for reparations for people of African descent. The Commission also highlights the technical cooperation and promotional visit to the State in October.

93. With regards to challenges, the Commission notes with concern the increase in homicides and high levels of domestic and sexual violence against women. Moreover, the IACHR takes note that discriminatory provisions against women's ability to transfer nationality to daughters and sons remain in force in the State.

94. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

95. In relation to democratic institutionalism, the IACHR notes the submission of the final Report by the Parliamentary Reform Commission and the Constitutional Reform Commission.<sup>136</sup> The Parliamentary Reform Commission has recommended the introduction of National Members of Parliament. According to the Report, these National Members of Parliament will not represent a specific constituency but instead represent the interests of the entire populace and be empowered to advocate in Parliament on national policy issues. Further, the Report recommended increasing the number of Opposition Senate seats from two to five and the introduction of an intermittent progress report on all legislation passed but not yet proclaimed in order to promote the Executive's accountability to Parliament.<sup>137</sup>

96. In addition, following public consultations which commenced in 2022, the final report of the Constitutional Reform Commission prescribes the expansion of the fundamental rights and freedoms to include, in particular, the right to work, to access information held by the State, to fair and just administrative action, to vote and to stand for election, as well as the establishment of a National Human Rights Commission which would raise awareness about human rights as well as receive and investigate alleged human rights violations.<sup>138</sup> According to public information, the reports of both Commissions will be the subject of public consultation.<sup>139</sup>

97. Concerning human rights institutions, in October the IACHR conducted a technical cooperation and promotional visit to Barbados. This visit focused on promoting the Inter-American System of Human Rights, strengthening the Commission's relations with the country to increase collaboration in human rights and promoting technical cooperation mechanisms and capacity building for the State, civil society and other non-state actors.<sup>140</sup>

98. With respect to citizen security, the Commission highlights the passage of the new Bail Act in July which repeals the previous law relating to the granting of bail within criminal matters. This new law increases the age under which a person is considered a child from 14 years to 18 years, expands the grounds and factors for refusing bail, and places the burden onto the accused to prove that bail should be granted.<sup>141</sup> Further, the IACHR notes the establishment of a National Advisory Council on Citizen Security, whose mandate includes multi-sectoral consultations on solutions to the crime situation and the proposal for the establishment of a Serious Organized Crime Unit.<sup>142</sup>

99. According to public information, the State recorded 50 homicides in total in 2024, compared to 21 homicides recorded in total in 2023, which represents an approximate 138.09% increase.<sup>143</sup> This indicates that the State's homicide rate was 17.71 per 100,000 inhabitants.<sup>144</sup>

100. Regarding access to justice, the IACHR observes the efforts to improve the justice system through the launch of a new Court Case Management System in the Magistrate's Courts which is expected to assist with modernizing the justice system and reducing some of the existing delays in the administration of justice.<sup>145</sup> Further, in August, the State passed the Criminal Justice (Plea Negotiations and Agreements) Bill which aims to provide for plea negotiations and plea agreements between the accused and prosecutor in criminal cases and will assist in expediting the criminal justice process.<sup>146</sup> The Commission also highlights the new Sentencing Guidelines of the Barbados Supreme Court which were released in May to help ensure consistency and fairness in the sentencing of offenders by prescribing a detailed sentencing process for judges and magistrates.<sup>147</sup>

101. Concerning the rights of children, the Commission welcomes the passage of the Child Protection Act in May to safeguard children from abuse and neglect, provide for children in need of care and protection and to promote overall child welfare.<sup>148</sup> The IACHR also acknowledges the reestablishment of the National Child Labour Committee and its efforts to drive and guide national initiatives aimed at preventing and eliminating all forms of child labor in Barbados.<sup>149</sup>

102. With regard to the rights of women, the Commission takes note of the announcement of a study on the prevalence of gender-based violence on the island.<sup>150</sup> This study will accompany the proposed creation of the National Gender Policy which will be delivered to the Government by March 2025.<sup>151</sup> However, the Commission notes with concern the prevalence of domestic and sexual violence against women.<sup>152</sup> According to public information made available in 2024, there were 572 cases of domestic violence in 2023, a 21% increase compared to 471 cases in 2022. Of these reports, 55% of the incidents were related to physical assault.<sup>153</sup> Moreover, between January and June, there were 22 rapes reported<sup>154</sup> and civil society reported a 30% increase in calls to crisis lines.<sup>155</sup>

103. In relation to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the IACHR notes the State's intention to enact a new Immigration Bill. According to public information, this new Bill, which will replace the Immigration Act of 1976, is to be tabled in Parliament before the end of 2024.<sup>156</sup> However, the IACHR was not informed of the content of the bill and as of the date of writing this report, the Bill is yet to be laid in Parliament.

104. With regards to statelessness, the Commission notes that laws containing discriminatory provisions against women's ability to transfer nationality to daughters and sons remain in force in the State but also takes note of the recommendation of the Barbados Constitutional Reform Commission to address gender discrimination in relation to citizenship.<sup>157</sup> In its final report, the Reform Commission recommended the removal of all gender discrimination in citizenship provisions of the laws and the conferral of citizenship on an equal basis regardless of sex.<sup>158</sup>

105. Regarding the situation of people of African descent and against racial discrimination, the State has undertaken significant efforts calling for a reparations agenda linked to the period of slavery. The Commission notes that the Prime Minister requested that Caribbean countries be included in the Church of England's reparations plan due to its role in the transatlantic slave trade.<sup>159</sup> Additionally, the State decided to halt the acquisition of a former slave plantation, owned by a British conservative Parliamentarian, in response to civil society demands urging the owner to transfer the land to the State as a gesture of reparations for historical injustices.<sup>160</sup>

106. With respect to the rights of LGBTI persons, the Commission notes statements made in October by high-level public officials in favor of the use of gender-neutral language by amending the Sexual Offences Act. The inclusion of such a perspective regarding gender would aim to ensure the protection of all persons against sexual offences, regardless of their gender identity.<sup>161</sup> In addition, the IACHR notes with concern the ruling of the Employment Rights Tribunal of Barbados, issued in August, which dismissed the complaint of an unjustified termination of employment brought by a transgender woman against her employer. The Tribunal ruled that there was no standing to allege gender discrimination since transgender persons are not recognized under the laws of the State.<sup>162</sup>

107. With respect to the rights of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission takes note of the State's continuous efforts during 2024 to attain food security and improve the health of inmates through food production programs in the national prison system. This includes the installation of a new water irrigation system and other infrastructure.<sup>163</sup>

108. In relation to the death penalty, the Commission notes that no executions have been carried out since 1984.<sup>164</sup> According to the most updated information, as of May 2023, there were six individuals under the sentence of death.<sup>165</sup>

V. BELIZE

- General considerations

109. As it relates to progress, the IACHR highlights the proposed expansion of the Ombudsman's Office's mandate to include the protection and promotion of human rights, the passage of several pieces of legislation aimed at reforming the criminal justice system and the passage of the Marriage Amendment Bill which raises the age of legal marriage to 18. Further, the Commission notes the approval of the National Gender Policy and proposed legislative reform regarding sexual harassment in the State. Further, the Commission highlights the technical cooperation and promotional visit to the State in October.

110. As it relates to challenges, the Commission notes with concern an increase in homicides and the continued reliance on States of Emergency (SOE). Moreover, the IACHR highlights high levels of complaints regarding gender-based violence and restrictive regulations regarding abortion, and reports of the mistreatment of persons deprived of liberty that include the use of isolation as a form of punishment.

- Specific issues

112. In relation to democratic institutionality, the IACHR takes note of the tabling of the Representation of the People Amendment Bill, 2024 in the House of Representatives of the Belizean Parliament. This Bill proposes to give effect to the Redivision Report of the Elections and Boundaries Commission by varying boundaries and removing and creating electoral divisions.<sup>166</sup> Civil society has expressed opposition to the redistricting proposed by the Bill and have called for it to be rejected by the Parliament. At the time of writing this report, the Bill was before the Public Service House Committee.<sup>167</sup>

113. With regards to human rights institutions, the Commission welcomes the approval granted by the government for the restructuring of the Ombudsman's Office, which includes expanding its mandate "to protect and promote human rights as set out in the Paris Principles and its General Observations". Further, the IACHR notes the intention of the government to establish a National Human Rights Institution in line with its commitment under the human rights treaties signed by Belize.<sup>168</sup>

114. Further, in October the IACHR conducted a technical cooperation and promotional visit to Belize. This visit focused on promoting the Inter-American System of Human Rights, technical cooperation mechanisms and capacity building, strengthening the Commission's relations with the country to increase collaboration in human rights, as well as conducting meetings to gather information relevant to the State's progress with Case 12.053 on the Maya Indigenous communities in Toledo.<sup>169</sup>

115. In December, Belize officially joined the Inter-American Convention on the Protection of Human Rights of Older Persons by depositing its accession document with the Organization of American States General Secretariat. During the deposit ceremony, Belize's Permanent Representative to the OAS, emphasized the country's commitment to human rights at all life stages, promoting dignity and inclusivity for older adults.<sup>170</sup>

116. Regarding citizen security, according to the Belize Crime Observatory, there were 80 homicides reported for the period January to November 2024, which represented an approximately 2.5% increase as compared to the 78 homicides reported for the same period in 2023.<sup>171</sup> This represents a homicide rate of 19.4 per 100,000 inhabitants as of June 2024.<sup>172</sup>

117. With respect to the use of States of Emergency, in its 2023 Annual Report the Commission noted the use of an SOE in Belize City which ended in August 2023 and resulted in the detention of 25 persons.<sup>173</sup> In June 2024, the State again implemented an SOE in certain parts of the Belize and Cayo districts with the aim of suppressing increasing homicides and organized criminal activity. Under Article 18 of its Statute, the IACHR requested information from the State on this SOE particularly regarding the persons detained, specifically children.<sup>174</sup> In response, the State informed that 107 persons had been detained as of August 22, 2024 under the SOE, with 8 of those persons being children. Further, the State noted that all detainees,

118. On the issue of access to justice, the State enacted the Criminal Procedure (Plea Discussion and Plea Agreement) Act 2024; the Alternative Sentencing Act 2024; and the Criminal Records (Rehabilitation of Offenders) Act 2024.<sup>177</sup> According to official information, these pieces of legislation are collectively geared towards facilitating a more efficient system for the timely disposal of criminal cases, focusing on restorative justice, and providing offenders with the ability to reintegrate into society without the stigma of a criminal record inhibiting their future.<sup>178</sup>

119. Moreover, in October the State launched a new website for its Senior Courts with the aim of enhancing the delivery and access to justice. According to official information, the new website is designed to provide easier access to information from litigants, judicial officers, legal practitioners, and members of the public thereby ensuring greater transparency and efficiency. In this regard, the new website would serve as a central hub for a wide range of services and resources, allowing users to access judgments, practice directions and other relevant updates.<sup>179</sup>

120. With regard to the rights of children, the IACHR welcomed the passage of the Marriage Amendment Bill, which raises the age of legal marriage to 18 and eliminates provisions allowing parental or guardian consent for the marriage of children.<sup>180</sup> The Commission also welcomes the Cabinet's approval for Belize to accede to the 1996 Hague Convention on Child Protection and the 2007 Hague Convention on Child Support. The 1996 Convention enhances safeguards for children across borders, while the 2007 Convention provides a framework for the enforcement of child support decisions abroad.<sup>181</sup> In addition, the IACHR commends the State on receiving certification from the World Health Organization (WHO) for eliminating the mother-to-child transmission of HIV and syphilis (EMTCT).<sup>182</sup>

121. With respect to the rights of women, the IACHR welcomes the approval of the National Gender Policy 2024-2030 that focuses on various areas such as health, education, employment, the prevention of gender violence and the participation of women in decision-making positions.<sup>183</sup> On the other hand, the Commission takes note of the introduction of new Bill which seeks to reform the Protection Against Sexual Harassment Act to provide protection for victims in the digital sphere and means of redress. In addition, employers will be obligated to implement a sexual harassment policy and maintain a register of complaints. However, this reform proposal includes criminal sanctions for reports considered false, which may discourage victims from reporting.<sup>184</sup> Between January and October 2024, 2,400 gender-based violence complaints were registered, of which 1,924 corresponded to female victims.<sup>185</sup>

122. Moreover, in terms of sexual and reproductive rights, the IACHR notes restrictive regulations on access to abortion which expose victims of rape or incest to criminalization.<sup>186</sup> Likewise, the Commission notes that there are no regulations to guarantee the access of adolescents to sexual and reproductive health services.<sup>187</sup>

123. Regarding the situation of persons in the context of human mobility, the IACHR notes that The State's Amnesty Program, realized in collaboration with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), seeks to regularize the status of migrants in Belize<sup>188</sup>. According to official information, as of May, 2024, approximately 12,765 applications from migrants from 32 countries were being processed.<sup>189</sup> This Amnesty Program has resulted in migrants receiving permanent residency cards which allow them to reside, work and operate in Belize, and also qualifies them to apply for Belizean nationality after five years of residency.<sup>190</sup>

124. Regarding human trafficking, in January the Group of Women Parliamentarians, members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, participated in a training aimed at providing legislative leaders with the knowledge and tools necessary to contribute to the eradication of human trafficking.<sup>191</sup> In August, the Leadership Summit on Human Trafficking took place, with the objective of strengthening the knowledge on best practices as well as common errors in the response to human trafficking.<sup>192</sup>

125. Regarding the rights of indigenous peoples, the Government of Belize and the Ministry of Human Development acted to advance in the delimitation of villages and the implementation of a Maya customary land tenure policy. The draft policy proposes a conceptual model for Maya villages to apply for areas of land to be automatically registered as Maya customary lands. The draft allows for the application for additional lands to be registered beyond these limitations once villages can show evidence or proof of customary land use and occupation.<sup>193</sup>

126. On the situation of people of African descent and against racial discrimination, the Commission notes that available data from 2024 indicated an overrepresentation of Garífuna people and women from the Maya community in the highest unemployment rates, when compared to the rates among other ethnicities. Specifically, the unemployment rate for Maya women stands at 8.4%, more than three times higher than the rate among Maya men, which is 2.6%. The highest unemployment rate, however, is found among the Garífuna people, reaching 13.5% of this population.<sup>194</sup>

127. Regarding the rights of persons with disabilities, according to official information, a Situational Analysis on Children with Disabilities developed by the State in partnership with UNICEF will provide a comprehensive framework to examine the conditions and challenges faced by this population and aims to uncover critical data gaps, identify barriers to inclusion, and guide the development of evidence-based policies and programs that foster an inclusive society. Consultations will be held with children with disabilities,

128. As for persons deprived of liberty, the Commission is concerned about reports of mistreatment of prisoners. According to public information published in 2024, the prison system uses isolation without proper sanitation or ventilation as a form of punishment.<sup>196</sup> Also, inmates have reported the use of pepper spray inside the cells.<sup>197</sup>

129. Regarding the death penalty, the IACHR notes that there has been no progress to remove this punishment from the statutory books, even though no execution has occurred since 1985, and nobody is currently sentenced to death.<sup>198</sup>

VI. BOLIVIA

- General considerations

130. In 2024, the State made progress in conducting national and penitentiary censuses, drafting bills to address sexual crimes and introducing measures to combat climate change focused on Afro-descendant women and young people. Bolivia also established the Interinstitutional Commission for Victims of Political Violence to promote memory, truth and justice and preserve the memory of victims of the dictatorship.

131. However, challenges persisted in terms of institutional weakness, which was aggravated by the partial renewal of the positions in the high courts and the extension of the duration of some positions in the judiciary. Additionally, political polarization within the party in office worsened, and the lack of effective dialogue mechanisms led to social unrest.

132. On October 8, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>199</sup>

- Specific issues

133. As regards the progress made in terms of democratic institutionality, in 2024, the State completed the National Population and Housing Census, a critical step for the allocation of resources and the implementation of public policies.<sup>200</sup> In addition, the Plurinational Constitutional Court (TCP) ratified the prohibition of indefinite reelection.<sup>201</sup> In parallel, political parties met and agreed to hold general elections in 2025, ensure the fair distribution of seats and suspend primary elections.<sup>202</sup> Following this meeting, the Plurinational Legislative Assembly (ALP) passed a law to uphold the political parties' decision, although it faced criticism from opposition sectors.<sup>203</sup> Judicial elections were held on December 15 after several postponements by the ALP and the TCP.<sup>204</sup>

134. However, the judicial election process was completed only partially after the TCP declared the call for candidates to the Plurinational Constitutional Court void in the departments of Pando, Cochabamba, Santa Cruz, Beni and Tarija, as well as to the Supreme Court of Justice (TSJ) in the departments of Beni and Pando, which resulted in the extension of the duration of some positions in the judiciary and was met with rejection by the public.<sup>205</sup>

135. In parallel, governance was affected by the escalation of internal disputes within the Movement for Socialism–Political Instrument for the Sovereignty of the Peoples (MAS-IPSP) political party.<sup>206</sup> This division fueled tensions within the ALP, where opposing factions fought to control the legislative branch. One faction began protests to demand the acknowledgment of former president Evo Morales’s leadership and his registration as presidential candidate. Conversely, the other faction within the party backed the political leadership of current President Luis Alberto Arce Catacora.<sup>207</sup> On June 26, an alleged coup attempted by a sector of the army deployed military vehicles and occupied public spaces in La Paz, raising concerns over institutional weakness.<sup>208</sup>

136. With respect to access to justice and judicial independence, the Commission engaged in a process of technical cooperation with the ALP of Bolivia regarding the preselection of candidates for the country’s courts and the Judicial Council. This process was guided by inter-American standards related to the selection of judicial authorities and involved various state institutions. As part of the cooperation process, the Commission and the ALP drafted and presented a document systematizing the inter-American standards applicable to the judiciary, as well as a technical note on the merits criteria for evaluating candidates, which was a matter of discussion between the ALP and the Commission’s country rapporteur.<sup>209</sup>

137. According to information from the Plurinational Electoral Entity, 82 percent of the population participated in the election held in late 2024. Unlike the judicial elections that took place in 2011 and 2017, the percentage of valid votes surpassed that of blank and null votes, reaching 64.29 percent of the total.<sup>210</sup>

138. Nevertheless, the partial suspension of the elections and the further extension of the duration of the terms of the representatives from Pando, Cochabamba, Santa Cruz, Beni and Tarija in the TCP, as well as those from Beni and Pando in the TSJ, were met with public rejection, inasmuch as they were perceived as a threat to the Rule of Law and undermined the confidence in the justice system.<sup>211</sup> In this context, the TCP announced criminal and disciplinary sanctions against judges who contravened this precedent, a measure that justice operators considered a violation of their judicial independence.<sup>212</sup> This situation has heightened social distrust, particularly regarding the treatment of ongoing judicial cases, including those related to the 2019 electoral crisis, such as the case against former governor of Santa Cruz Luis Fernando Camacho.<sup>213</sup>

139. With regard to human rights institutions, the Commission for the Submission of State Reports on Human Rights and Enforced Disappearances (CPIE) held six sessions.<sup>214</sup>

140. As to citizen security, the State provided human rights training for police officers on the legal limits on the use of force.<sup>215</sup> In turn, the Police issued Memorandum No. 17/2024 to ensure respect for the rights of LGBTI persons during police operations.<sup>216</sup>

141. However, political polarization fueled violence during social protests, which mimicked historical conflict dynamics in Bolivia. The Office of the Ombudsperson recorded 410 conflicts between January and September, which were linked to labor, economic and governance demands.<sup>217</sup> In October, the government deployed joint military and police forces<sup>218</sup> to clear road blockades. In addition, according to reports, non-state armed groups were involved in violent incidents or citizen security operations,<sup>219</sup> and opposition demonstrators were detained with no access to medical screening for 12 hours.<sup>220</sup> Former President Evo Morales also denounced an armed attack, which the State attributed to an antinarcotics operation.<sup>221</sup>

142. With regard to the situation of Afro-descendant persons and policies against racial discrimination, the State committed to prioritizing measures to address the impact of climate change on Afro-descendant women and young people.<sup>222</sup>

143. In turn, the CERD concluded that discrimination and structural racism had been perpetuated in the country, noting the excessive use of force and racial profiling by law enforcement officials against <sup>217</sup> According to the quarterly reports on unrest in Bolivia issued by the Office of the Ombudsperson, 410 conflicts were recorded between January and September 2024, primarily driven by social demands related to labor (19 percent), economic issues (19 percent) and governance (15 percent), among others. The parties involved frequently used pressure tactics such as demonstrations (27 percent), blockades (9 percent) and confrontations (8 percent), among others. <sup>219</sup> The Ombudsperson informed: “During the demonstration held between September 17 and 23 and led by former president EMA [Evo Morales Ayma], the Ombudsperson raised concerns over the presence of paramilitary groups, which the Public Prosecutor’s Office did not investigate. In addition, during the operations led by police forces to clear road blockades on the Ichilo bridge (Santa Cruz) on October 22, the Office of the Ombudsperson once again expressed concern over reports that paramilitary groups were (allegedly) operating alongside the police, an irregular and unlawful situation. Moreover, in the early hours of October 31, groups of civilians attempted to remove a blockade in the Santa Cruz-Cochabamba highway in the city of Mairana (Santa Cruz), leaving one person seriously injured. Furthermore, according to a press release from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, on November 1, irregular groups attacked three military units in Chapare, department of Cochabamba. These groups reportedly took over 200 military officers hostage and stole combat weapons and ammunition from military vehicles.” Information submitted by the Office of the Ombudsperson for the preparation of the Annual Report of the Commission.

144. With regard to the rights of women, bills were introduced to repeal provisions on the crime of statutory rape and to amend Article 308 of the Criminal Code on the crime of rape. The amendment seeks to establish the absence of the victim's consent as the basic requirement for the crime and to remove intimidation or violence as requirements.<sup>225</sup> Additionally, the State made progress in drafting a protocol for assisting victims of harassment and political violence.<sup>226</sup>

145. However, in 2024, the Public Prosecutor's Office recorded 45,396 cases of gender-based violence, mostly related to family or domestic violence (33,907).<sup>227</sup> Seventy-eight femicides had been reported as of November, most of them in La Paz,<sup>228</sup> including an attempted femicide in a detention center in Cochabamba, where the victim was assaulted by her former partner, who had been previously convicted of femicide.<sup>229</sup> Sexual violence also reached alarming levels, with 3,390 cases of sexual abuse, 2,813 cases of rape, 2,449 cases of rape against minors and 1,677 cases of statutory rape.<sup>230</sup> In this challenging context, the legislative branch advanced a bill to amend Article 94 of the Comprehensive Law to Guarantee a Life Free of Violence to Women, which raised concerns over the potential revictimization of the victims by reducing deadlines and subjecting complaints to additional review.<sup>231</sup>

146. As regards the rights of indigenous peoples, communities denounced the contamination of water sources in Ayllu San Agustín de Puñaca, Oruro, caused by mining activity, highlighting its disproportionate impact on indigenous women, forced migration and agricultural and livestock farming.<sup>232</sup> In turn, the forest fires in September particularly affected indigenous peoples, forcing at least 10 communities to relocate and seek shelter in the cities of Concepción and San Javier.<sup>233</sup>

for the rights of transgender people in Bolivia and coordinate joint actions in their favor.<sup>234</sup> It also urged the State to protect the rights of an intersex person born in 2024.<sup>235</sup>

148. Furthermore, as of May, the Office of the Ombudsperson had documented two murders against trans persons. In one case, the alleged perpetrator was arrested and brought before judicial authorities.<sup>236</sup> In this context, civil society organizations reiterated the need for the State to adopt measures guaranteeing the full enjoyment of rights by trans, non-binary and gender-diverse persons without discrimination, particularly in light of the effects of a 2017 TCP judgment that restricted the exercise of some rights.<sup>237</sup>

149. With regard to memory, truth and justice processes, as of May 2024, the Bolivian State had compensated 853 victims of political violence during the dictatorship and established the Interinstitutional Commission for Extraordinary Review to reassess over 4,000 reparation requests which had previously been rejected.<sup>238</sup> In addition, the Ministry of Justice and Institutional Transparency installed memorial plaques in former detention and torture centers, and launched the virtual Paseo de la Memoria (memory route) to facilitate access to historical information about that period, thus reinforcing the country's memory, truth and justice processes.<sup>239</sup>

150. Notwithstanding the foregoing, six decades after the coup d'état, serious human rights violations committed during the dictatorship in Bolivia remain unpunished. In addition, there are no policies in the country in relation to the search for disappeared people and new legislation is still required to certify their absence, as well as to preserve and protect remembrance sites, thus hindering progress in terms of justice and historical memory.<sup>240</sup>

151. With regard to the rights of children and adolescents, the Ministry of Health and Sports and the Departmental Health Services signed a manifesto for the health of children and adolescents, by which they committed to prioritize the full vaccination schedule as a fundamental healthcare measure to curb and reduce the spread of preventable diseases.<sup>241</sup> Moreover, the State carried out vaccination campaigns against several diseases such as human papillomavirus infection,<sup>242</sup> poliomyelitis<sup>243</sup> and influenza.<sup>244</sup>

152. In 2024, there was an increase in sexual violence against children and adolescents in Bolivia. Between January and June, 1,466 cases of rape were reported, which accounts for an upturn of 6.7 percent compared to the figures recorded in the same period of 2023 according to official data,<sup>245</sup> which points to an increasingly concerning issue.

153. In relation to the rights of older persons, the Ministry of Health and Sports carried out medical campaigns free of charge by means of the Unified Health System (SUS) and the National Program for Strengthening Functional Healthcare Networks.<sup>246</sup> In addition, the State recorded an increase in the access of older persons to the annuity program Renta Dignidad (Dignified Pension) and to different state initiatives that seek to shed light on the problem of violence against the elderly.<sup>247</sup>

154. However, in terms of challenges, people protested against Bill No. 035/2023-2024, which, according to union leaders, was intended to impose mandatory retirement at 65 years of age. The Government of Bolivia later clarified that the text of said bill only establishes the need for a medical examination at that age, so as to prove that people can continue working.<sup>248</sup> In this regard, the International Labor Organization (ILO) warned about the high rate of labor participation of persons over 65 years old in Bolivia, which is the State with the highest percentage thereof in the region.<sup>249</sup> In this context, the civil society expressed their concern about physical, psychological, economic and verbal violence against older persons<sup>250</sup> and demanded that the State address the phenomenon of loneliness that is currently affecting this population.<sup>251</sup>

155. With regard to persons deprived of liberty, Bolivia completed a prison census that included over 29,000 persons deprived of liberty.<sup>252</sup> Furthermore, the State undertook social reinsertion programs, such as work activities for women inmates at the Women's Prison (COF) in Obrajes,<sup>253</sup> and educational and artistic workshops at three prisons in Cochabamba.<sup>254</sup> In addition, the Bolivian mechanism for combating torture, together with others in the region, adopted both the Declaration of San José aimed at institutional strengthening and networking and the Global Action for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Deprived of Liberty.<sup>255</sup>

156. However, the Office of the Ombudsperson reported that prisons in Bolivia face serious overcrowding, which is aggravated by the overuse of pretrial detention. This has hampered access to health services and has led to problems with the allocation of prediarios (monthly state allowances to inmates for purchasing food and other personal expenses), which are insufficient to cover nutrition needs.<sup>256</sup> According to official data reported by the World Prison Brief, as of July 2024, Bolivia's prison population amounted to 31,105 persons, while as of December 2023, the official prison capacity was 10,521 persons.<sup>257</sup> These figures indicate that, with an overpopulation of 20,584 persons, the current overcrowding rate accounts for 195.6 percent. makes Bolivia the country with the third highest rate of prison overcrowding in the Americas.<sup>258</sup> Moreover, between January and June 2024, the number of women deprived of liberty increased by 12.5 percent; more than half of them (55.39 percent) are pregnant women, mothers, older women, persons with disabilities or persons who belong to vulnerable groups, which therefore points to the need for urgent measures to address overcrowding.<sup>259</sup>

157. In relation to human trafficking, the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling reactivated a technical commission for the criminal prosecution of crimes of human trafficking, smuggling of migrants and related offences.<sup>260</sup> This initiative seeks to strengthen the coordinated work between the members of the Council on prevention and investigation of these crimes. The Regional Platform against Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants was created to consolidate best practices between Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela.<sup>261</sup>

VII. BRAZIL

• General considerations

158. The Commission noted progress in the strengthening of democratic institutions and access to justice, along with the enactment of laws that benefit people with disabilities and protect the rights of children and adolescents. It also observed actions undertaken against racial discrimination and the recognition of the land rights of the Quilombola communities.

159. Nevertheless, the Commission identified challenges in relation to citizen security, given the reports on deaths during police operations in the state of São Paulo and the increase of violence in indigenous territories. Moreover, it noted the advancement of bills that might curtail women's sexual and reproductive health rights, as well as undermine the rights of trans persons.

160. On November 7, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>262</sup>

• Specific issues

161. In terms of democratic institutionality, the State reported on the creation of the National Observatory on Misinformation and for the Defense of Democracy, linked to the Superior Electoral Court (TSE), in response to the attacks on the electoral system observed during the elections in 2022.<sup>263</sup> In the same vein, the Federal Supreme Court (STF) ordered the arrest of 208 persons for failing to comply with precautionary measures related to the extremist acts of January 8, 2023.<sup>264</sup> The Federal Police have indicted former President Jair Bolsonaro and 36 former officials for attempting a coup d'état following the 2022 elections. They face charges of violently undermining the Democratic Rule of Law, coup d'état, and criminal conspiracy, with the alleged intent to assassinate magistrates and elected officials, including the president and vice president.<sup>265</sup>

162. Furthermore, the STF suspended the operation of the social network X from August 30 to October 8 for failing to comply with a court order requiring the appointment of a legal representative in Brazil, in accordance with the country's prevailing legal framework. This measure was ordered once the company shut down its office in disagreement with a court ruling ordering it to block accounts used to spread hate speech and fake news.<sup>266</sup> In October 2024, the platform complied with the legal requirements and was authorized to resume operations in the country.<sup>267</sup>

163. Regarding human rights institutions, the State reported on the adoption of strategies for the protection of human rights with a special focus on groups exposed to greater discrimination. Specifically, the State implemented the National Human Rights System, with a decentralized perspective;<sup>268</sup> it launched the Opinion or Hate website, a tool to raise awareness and combat hate speech;<sup>269</sup> it enacted Law No. 14,992, which establishes guidelines to promote the inclusion of persons with an autism spectrum disorder (ASD) in the labor market;<sup>270</sup> and it established the Committee for Monitoring the National Strategy to Combat Violence against LGBTQIA Persons.<sup>271</sup> It also reactivated the Special Commission on Political Deaths and Disappearances, created in 1995.<sup>272</sup>

164. As for access to justice, the STF and the National Council of Justice (CNJ) launched the New Judicial Service Portal, which centralizes access to justice and updates the Brazilian judicial system with upgraded technology.<sup>273</sup> In addition, the executive branch enacted Law No. 14,941, which provides for a committee to manage the resources of the Federal Public Defense Fund, which will allow for the expansion of comprehensive and free legal assistance to regions in the interior of Brazil.<sup>274</sup>

165. These initiatives are complementary to the efforts made to democratize justice, given that, according to data from the Brazilian Bar Association (OAB), only 16 percent of the persons prosecuted in the country have access to public defenders.<sup>275</sup>

166. With regard to citizen security, the State reported on the modernization of public security actions through initiatives such as the National Body Cameras Project, which promotes the use of recording devices by security agents; the Project to Increase Homicide Investigation Capacity through Specialized Units; the Project to Increase the Service Capacity of the Military Police; the Project on Digital Transformation for Public Security Agencies, which seeks to centralize information; and the National Guidelines on the Use of Force by Public Security Agents.<sup>276</sup>

167. Available official data also shows that the homicide rate dropped by 5 percent —50 percent in 2024 compared to 2023—, amounting to a total of 32,451 victims of intentional homicide as of November 2024. The states with the highest number of recorded cases were Bahia, Ceará, Pernambuco and Rio de Janeiro.<sup>277</sup>

168. Regarding police violence, the State faces a significant challenge. According to information provided by the civil society, during the first quarter of 2024 alone, the number of deaths perpetrated by the civil and military police in the Baixada Santista, São Paulo, reportedly reached a record high of 84 victims, the highest toll in the last 11 years and a 394 percent increase compared to the 17 victims recorded in the same period of 2023.<sup>278</sup> In response, the Supreme Federal Court (STF) mandated the use of body cameras by military police officers during operations in São Paulo. It also called for the implementation of additional cameras based on a police lethality risk analysis and urged the publication of relevant data on the website of São Paulo's Public Security Secretariat, following a request from the Public Defender's Office.<sup>279</sup> The Commission has received alarming reports indicating that investigations into police interventions lack sufficient independence, as they are conducted by the police themselves. This raises serious concerns about potential threats to the right to access justice.<sup>280</sup>

169. Regarding the situation of indigenous peoples, in 2024, the Amnesty Commission of the Ministry of Human Rights and Citizenship (MDHC) approved, for the first time since its creation, a request for collective reparations for serious violations of the rights of indigenous communities during the military regime (1964–1985), including massacres, torture and forced displacement.<sup>281</sup> In addition, the State undertook measures to curb and remove trespassers and garimpeiros (illegal gemstone miners) from the Yanomami Amazon reservation, thus reinforcing the protection of this indigenous territory.<sup>282</sup>

170. In terms of challenges, legal uncertainty in relation to land tenure persisted due to the possible reestablishment of the “timeframe thesis,” which restricts claims and titling in favor of indigenous communities. In this context, the STF created a settlement committee, although organizations pointed out they are inadequately represented therein and expressed their disagreement with the proposal.<sup>283</sup> An increase in violence in indigenous territories was also reported, especially in the states of Bahia,<sup>284</sup> Paraná<sup>285</sup> and Mato Grosso do Sul,<sup>286</sup> where indigenous leaders and members of the Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe, Avá-Guarani and Guarani Kaiowá communities have been murdered.

171. Publicly available sources reported that Ademir Machado Reis, from the Caramuru Catarina Paraguassu Indigenous Reserve, was found dead days after a military intervention by the Força-Tarefa in the area on January 9, which took place without the community's prior consent. On January 16, Roberto Bráz Ferreira, a Pataxó Indigenous man, was found dead in his home with signs of severe beatings.<sup>287</sup> Additionally, on September 18, Neri Guarani Kaiowa was fatally shot during an operation conducted by the Military Police of Mato Grosso do Sul.<sup>288</sup>

172. Regarding advances in the situation of Afro-descendant persons and policies against racial discrimination, the Jury Court of Rio de Janeiro convicted two former policemen as direct perpetrators of the murders of human rights defender Marielle Franco and her driver Anderson Gomes in 2018. In addition, the police concluded the investigation into the masterminds of the murders, which resulted in the imprisonment of two political leaders.<sup>289</sup>

173. Furthermore, the State demarcated and titled lands for more than 19 Quilombola communities in nine states, benefiting more than 4,500 families,<sup>290</sup> and created a special directorate to guarantee that this population enjoys their territorial rights.<sup>291</sup> The State also promoted an agenda of reparations for damages caused during the time of slavery, which was submitted to the Government of Portugal.<sup>292</sup> Moreover, the executive branch launched the first policy targeted at the country's Roma population, which includes anti-discrimination measures, the recognition of land rights and access to human rights.<sup>293</sup>

174. However, rates of lethal violence in Afro-descendant communities during police operations increased significantly in 2024, especially in the states of São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro and Bahia.<sup>294</sup> In the first two months of the year, deaths perpetrated by police officers increased by 94 percent, including reprisal killings against specific communities, according to reports.<sup>295</sup> Among the most serious cases, the Commission notes that of Gabriel Renan Soares, 26, who was shot 11 times in the back after attempting to steal cleaning products in São Paulo on November 3.<sup>296</sup> Moreover, Thainara Vitória Francisco dos Santos, who was 18 years old and pregnant, died on November 14 in Governador Valadares, Minas Gerais, after being arrested and assaulted by police officers while defending her 15-year-old autistic brother.<sup>297</sup> Also, Marcelo Barbosa do Amaral, 25, was assaulted and thrown from a bridge by military police in São Paulo on December 3.<sup>298</sup>

175. Furthermore, structural racism continued to disproportionately impact Quilombola communities, who denounced the granting of environmental licenses to operate in their ancestral territories, as well as deforestation, the use of pesticides, threats and the criminalization of environmental defenders.<sup>299</sup> The Quilombola community of Queimadas, in Minas Gerais, reported threats and reprisals due to their opposition to the operations of mining company Herculano.<sup>300</sup> Other reports point to human rights violations by corporate actors,<sup>301</sup> which have sparked high levels of violence against indigenous and Quilombola persons and leaders,<sup>302</sup> as well as the failure to demarcate these communities' territories.<sup>303</sup>

176. Regarding the rights of women, the State adopted measures to strengthen its regulatory framework and public policies for the prevention, tackling and eradication of gender-based violence. Among these, it established the crime of femicide as an autonomous crime<sup>304</sup> and modified regulations to guarantee priority and adequate assistance to women in situations of domestic and family violence by the health and public security systems.<sup>305</sup> In terms of prevention, the executive branch launched the Action Plan of the National Pact for the Prevention of Femicide<sup>306</sup> and carried out various awareness campaigns to prevent femicide and political violence against women.<sup>307</sup>

177. Similarly, important measures were undertaken to promote gender equality in various areas, including the ratification of Convention 189 and Recommendation No. 201 of the ILO on the rights of home-based workers,<sup>308</sup> the implementation of a gender perspective in the 2024–2027 multi-year plan,<sup>309</sup> and efforts made to mainstream said approach in public policies and budgets.<sup>310</sup>

178. Moreover, in 2024, only 10 percent of the Women's Police stations operated uninterruptedly, as established by law,<sup>311</sup> and there are currently only 10 Brazilian Women's House units in operation, despite efforts to expand their coverage.<sup>312</sup> In this context, sexual violence rates against girls and adolescents continue to be alarming, as 49.6 percent of cases involve girls aged 10 to 14 years.<sup>313</sup> In addition, in some of its rulings, the Superior Court of Justice underestimated the seriousness of sexual violence against girls under 14 years of age in cases involving consensual relationships, young aggressors or subsequent pregnancies.<sup>314</sup> High rates of sexual exploitation of women, girls and adolescents were still observed in highways, tourist areas in the northeast region, coastal areas<sup>315</sup> and indigenous communities living in poverty.<sup>316</sup> Moreover, the State

179. In addition to the above, the STF decided as a precautionary measure to suspend the validity of the resolution of the Federal Medical Board of Brazil that prohibited the performance of legal abortions after 22 weeks of gestation.<sup>319</sup> However, obstacles to access legal abortion persist, such as inadequate or delayed healthcare provision, the demands for patients to meet criteria that are not provided for by law, the denial of service in cases permitted by law, the spread of misinformation, the claim of conscientious objection by medical personnel and the lack of such health services outside the state capitals.<sup>320</sup> Moreover, several bills have been introduced with a view to imposing greater restrictions on access to sexual and reproductive healthcare.<sup>321</sup> This took place in a context of high maternal mortality rates in the country, which amounted to 43,196 cases between January and August 2024, most of the victims being Afro-descendant women.<sup>322</sup>

180. Regarding persons deprived of liberty, the STF decriminalized the possession of cannabis for personal use, establishing a limit of 40 grams or six female Cannabis sativa plants to differentiate between personal use and commercialization.<sup>323</sup> In addition, the State adopted the Fair Sentence strategy at the national level to address the unconstitutional state of affairs in Brazilian prisons,<sup>324</sup> in compliance with the STF ruling of October 4.<sup>325</sup> This plan, already approved by the STF in December, must be implemented within three years and defines specific actions to address the challenges related to detention.<sup>326</sup> The National Council of Justice also adopted a resolution providing for judicial inspections in detention facilities,<sup>327</sup> in addition to the accession of the National Committee to Prevent and Combat Torture (CNPCT) to the Declaration of San José —aimed at institutional strengthening and networking—, and the Global Action for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Deprived of Liberty.<sup>328</sup>

The State also mapped the State Systems to Prevent and Combat Torture on the platform of the National Human Rights Observatory to monitor their creation, their current status and other additional information.<sup>329</sup>

182. Notwithstanding the progress made, with a total prison population of 642,491 persons as of December 2023,<sup>330</sup> Brazil continues to rank third in largest prison populations in the world.<sup>331</sup> Furthermore, taking into account that the country's official prison capacity is 487,208 people, the overcrowding rate is 31.9 percent.<sup>332</sup> In this outlook, the Congress amended legislation to prohibit humanitarian temporary releases on specific dates, such as Christmas. As a result, temporary releases are only granted to people who request to leave to attend professional training or go to work.<sup>333</sup>

183. In addition to the above, specific risk situations were observed in the prisons of some states, such as Pará, where the civil society reported various violations.<sup>334</sup> In the prisons of Goiás, a CNJ report identified overcrowding in 14 facilities and shed light on precarious infrastructure, insufficient food, acts of torture and lack of legal assistance.<sup>335</sup> In Minas Gerais, available data shows that 69 percent of the 218 prisons are overcrowded and in "regular, bad or very bad" condition.<sup>336</sup> Finally, the federal and Rio de Janeiro mechanisms for combating torture indicated that the José Frederico Marques Public Prison, where custody hearings are held, is currently in a precarious status mainly due to unsanitary conditions, lack of drinking water, inadequate toilets, lack of mattresses and shortage of medicines.<sup>337</sup>

184. In relation to the rights of human rights defenders, the State reported that the Program for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders (PPDDDH) operated across Brazil through voluntary agreements between the federal government and the federated states. Paraíba, Pará, Bahia and other states had state teams in place, while Amazonas, Roraima and Mato Grosso do Sul had region-focused federal teams in place; the remaining states worked under the guidance of the Federal Technical Team.<sup>338</sup> The State also noted that, in 2024, program funding was increased by 85 percent—from 17.6 million Brazilian reais in 2023 to 32.9 million Brazilian reais in 2024, including 4.8 million Brazilian reais allocated to the protection of the Yanomami people. In addition, region-focused technical teams were expanded, and an office was set up in Porto Seguro, Bahia, thus bolstering the program's coverage in the southern area of the state of Bahia.<sup>339</sup>

185. 22,” the State reported to the Commission that it had held three public hearings, 54 public consultations and 11 sessions as part of the work of the GTT, including consultations with the Commission and with the United Nations Special Rapporteur on human rights defenders. The draft National Plan for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders was subject to public consultation between November 13 and 26, 2024 and had to be submitted by December 12, 2024.<sup>341</sup>

186. Nevertheless, 2024 was marked by attacks on human rights defenders, especially indigenous defenders. On May 30, Quilombola defender Antonio Alvez was the victim of an armed attack in Santa Inés, Maranhão, and other defenders from Quilombo Onça, such as Antonio Jean, Valdivino Lopes and Reginaldo da Conceição, received death threats.<sup>342</sup> Due to the context of violence against indigenous peoples in Bahia, Paraná and Mato Grosso do Sul linked to the defense of their territorial rights, the Commission extended the scope of the precautionary measures granted to the Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe people after the murder of the majé Nega Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe on January 21 and following threats against community leaders.<sup>343</sup>

187. Regarding progress related to the rights of LGBTI persons, Brazil undertook various public policies, such as a campaign to celebrate trans visibility as part of its national strategy to combat violence against LGBTQIA+ persons under the Ministry of Human Rights.<sup>344</sup> This Ministry also created a program to support homeless LGBTQIA+ persons, promote economic empowerment and decent employment, and combat violence in rural areas, to which 8.5 million Brazilian reais (1.62 million US dollars) were earmarked.<sup>345</sup> Moreover, the Federal Prosecutor’s Office for Citizen Rights supported the establishment of quotas for trans persons in universities,<sup>346</sup> and the Ministry of Education issued an ordinance against harassment and prejudice that incorporates an inclusive perspective.<sup>347</sup>

188. Additionally, the STF unanimously ratified the ruling indicating that the Unified Health System should update its platforms so that trans persons can access consultations, examinations and procedures according to their specific needs and regardless of their sex assigned at birth.<sup>348</sup> The STF also ordered an investigation of transphobic actions on social media against trans Congresswoman Erika Hilton.<sup>349</sup>

189. In terms of challenges, according to data published by the civil society in January, 257 LGBTI persons died under violent circumstances during 2023 in Brazil.<sup>350</sup> Out of these deaths, 145 victims were trans persons.<sup>351</sup> In this context, the civil society reported that there are over 70 laws in force that limit the rights of trans persons in various contexts, such as education, health, sports and the use of public spaces and restrooms.<sup>352</sup>

190. Regarding the processes of memory, truth and justice, the State reported the reinstatement of the Special Commission on Political Deaths and Disappearances —in charge of the search for people killed and disappeared for political reasons during the military dictatorship—,<sup>353</sup> following its dissolution in December 2022.<sup>354</sup> The State also announced a plan to resume the search and identification of the victims of the guerrilla of Araguaia.<sup>355</sup> In addition, it reported that it is advancing on the creation of a permanent committee to follow up on the recommendations contained in the Final Report of the National Truth Commission,<sup>356</sup> and it reported on the calls for tender to set up two Memory Centers of Victims of State Violence in the cities of Santos and Rio de Janeiro.<sup>357</sup> Furthermore, the Public Prosecutor's Office filed a complaint requesting that 42 former agents of the military dictatorship be found liable for the torture and disappearance of persons who opposed the regime.<sup>358</sup>

191. Despite these advances, the lack of financial resources has hindered the operation of the Amnesty Commission.<sup>359</sup>

192. With respect to children and adolescents, Brazil made progress in the protection of their rights by means of Law No. 14,811 and Law No. 15,032, which established measures against violence in schools and child sexual abuse,<sup>360</sup> in addition to allocating public funds for sports clubs to implement policies against child abuse.<sup>361</sup> It also created the National System to Monitor and Combat Violence in Schools<sup>362</sup> and it passed resolutions on digital rights<sup>363</sup> and family coexistence.<sup>364</sup> It was further reported that during the 12th National Conference on the Rights of Children and Adolescents over 300 children and adolescents participated in the drafting of public policies.<sup>365</sup>

193. However, in 2024, complaints of sexual exploitation of children and adolescents in the island of Marajó, in Pará, led the MDHC to promote the establishment of two Comprehensive Care Centers in Portel and Soure, equipped in collaboration with Fundação ParáPaz. In addition, the Marajó Citizenship Program, focused on combating child abuse and sexual exploitation and guaranteeing access to public policies in the region, has continued to be implemented since its launch in 2023.<sup>366</sup> According to official data, as of July, there were over 255,000 complaints of human rights violations against children and adolescents, including physical, psychological and sexual abuse, as well as neglect and exploitation.<sup>367</sup>

194. Regarding the situation of persons in the context of human mobility, between January and September, Brazil recorded the entry of 143,352 people, including 71,266 Venezuelans under the category of "shelter." In that period, the country received 55,940 asylum applications, and the National Committee for Refugees (CONARE) resolved 43,019 cases, granting asylum to 5,938 persons (13.8 percent). In addition, between January and August, 203,473 migrants, refugees and stateless persons formally joined the labor market. Between 2017 and September 2024, 255,972 Venezuelans requested asylum in Brazil, out of which

134,070 were granted refugee status (52.3 percent), which thus evidences the country's role as a recipient of human mobility flows in the region.<sup>368</sup>

195. The legislative branch also passed an amendment to the Migration Law that expands legal protection for refugees and migrants, especially those in a situation of socioeconomic vulnerability. The amendment allows for easier access to the labor market and to education, inasmuch as it removes bureaucratic obstacles that used to restrict access to these rights.<sup>369</sup> In addition, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security held the 2nd National Conference on Migration, Asylum and Statelessness (COMIGRAR), which included an inclusive approach to guide public policies aimed at strengthening the rights of these groups. The Conference resulted in the selection of proposals in six key areas: equal treatment, socioeconomic inclusion, addressing rights violations, governance, migration regularization and interculturality. These actions constitute progress in the protection of migrants in the country.<sup>370</sup>

196. In April and May 2024, extreme weather events in Rio Grande do Sul affected 2.3 million people, internally displacing more than 600,000 people. Six months later, challenges persisted in restoring public services, rebuilding infrastructure and ensuring adequate housing for the displaced persons.<sup>371</sup> Moreover, the situation worsened at the Guarulhos airport, in São Paulo, where 192 migrants and asylum seekers were held in precarious conditions, given that they were not provided with a space for sleeping, had insufficient food and hygiene resources and faced mobility restrictions.<sup>372</sup> Reports indicate there were deportations without warning, families were separated, women were detained in the same spaces as men and officials engaged in medical negligence, as in the case of the Ghanaian citizen Evans Ossêi Ússu, who died of a widespread infection.<sup>373</sup> In addition, the State issued Technical Note No. 18/2024, in which it advised to not grant admission to migrants in transit, therefore restricting their right to seek asylum.<sup>374</sup>

197. With respect to human trafficking, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) launched a campaign to inform and advise Brazilian nationals, particularly fashion models and soccer players, about working abroad and the risk of human trafficking.<sup>375</sup> Moreover, in July, the State held a bilateral meeting with Bolivia to strengthen operations at its border with Brazil to combat human trafficking, among other crimes.<sup>376</sup>

198. In relation to persons with disabilities, among the progress made, the Commission highlights that the Government of Brazil created the National Registration System for Persons with Autism Spectrum Disorder, which simplifies the issuance of credentials, so as to grant easier access to public policies.<sup>377</sup>

199. However, according to official data, 8,302 cases of domestic violence against persons with disabilities have been reported, out of which 3,662 involved people with psychosocial disabilities, who were the majority of victims.<sup>378</sup> Civil society organizations also expressed their concern<sup>379</sup> about the processing of a

VIII. CANADÁ

- General considerations

200. With respect to progress, the Commission takes note of the coming into force of the Act to Enact the Fighting Against Forced Labor and Child Labor in Supply Chains and to amend the Customs Tariff. It also welcomes the launch of the Supporting Indigenous Victims of Crime (SIVC) initiative, aimed at funding projects to enhance access to victim-centered services led by indigenous communities. In addition, it takes note of efforts carried by the State, the Government of the Northwest Territories, and the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation to support Inuit-led child and family services.

201. In relation to challenges, the Commission expresses its concern about migrant workers who are participants of the Temporary Foreign Worker Program (TFWP) program as they may be at a higher risk of labor exploitation. It also observes with concern that, indigenous women, girls and adolescents continue to be exposed to being victims of murder, disappearances, and family violence. In addition, the IACHR expresses concern over allegations of racial profiling and discrimination, according to a report on anti-black racism from the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

202. On October 10, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

203. In relation to democratic institutionality, the Commission values efforts by the State to protect the integrity of its electoral system. In May, the State approved Bill C-70, an Act Respecting Countering Foreign Interference, which proposes to update existing laws to better equip the government to detect, disrupt, and protect against foreign threats.<sup>381</sup> A Bill C-70 will also amend existing laws, among others: the Security of Information Act, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act, and the Canada Evidence Act. In addition, the Commission takes note of introduced amendments to Canada Election Act (CEA) to enhance citizens' participation and trust in Canada's electoral process.<sup>382</sup>

204. In relation to human rights institutionality, the Commission takes note of the appointment in June, of the new chief commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission (CHRC).<sup>383</sup> Based on publicly available information, the Ministry of Justice is conducting a background check on the new appointee for allegedly making antisemitic comments in the past.<sup>384</sup>

205. Regarding citizen security, the State indicated that, in 2024, it continued to move forward with Bill C-21, an act focused on strengthening gun control measures and containing violence. The Bill's measures will include among others the implementation of a nationwide freeze on handguns and the establishment of a technical definition for prohibited firearms to address the risk of assault-style firearms.<sup>385</sup> In addition, the State informed that in 2024, funds were allocated to the Canada Border Service Agency (CBSA) and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) to prevent firearms from illegally entering Canada.<sup>386</sup>

206. With respect to access to justice, the State indicated that in 2024, launched the Supporting Indigenous Victims of Crime (SIVC) initiative to improve the availability of, and access to, indigenous-led, culturally safe and trauma-informed victims services.<sup>387</sup> It is expected that this initiative will support projects that advance a wide range of activities to increase access to survivor-centered services and support, and activities that will reflect community needs. In addition, the IACHR takes note of other initiatives such as the provision of funding to support access to legal aid in the criminal justice system, and to support increased access to justice for tenants through resources, advice, and information.<sup>388</sup>

207. Regarding the rights of children, the Commission welcomes the coordination agreement signed in September by the Government of Canada, the Government of the Northwest Territories, and the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation to support Inuit-led child and family services<sup>389</sup>. This agreement paves the way for Inuvialuit to rightfully determine how best to support the well-being of their families, reinforce their way of life, and strengthen ties within their communities, including by preserving children's connections to their culture.<sup>390</sup> In addition, the Commission takes note that in February the Online Harms Act was introduced, aimed at making online platforms responsible for addressing harmful content and for creating a safer online space that protects all people in Canada, especially children.<sup>391</sup>

208. Regarding the rights of women, the Commission welcomes the continuation and/or adoption of new measures to guarantee sexual and reproductive rights. Among others: i) the launch of a national coverage plan that would guarantee free access to contraceptive medicines and devices;<sup>392</sup> ii) the investment in research projects on health issues that affect women and people of sexual diversity;<sup>393</sup> iii) the continuation of the Menstrual Equity Fund pilot project that seeks to guarantee access to menstrual hygiene products and education on sexual and reproductive health and rights for people in a situation of economic vulnerability,<sup>394</sup> and; iv) amendments to the Labor Code that requires the availability of menstrual hygiene products in all federally regulated workplaces.<sup>395</sup>

209. However, the Commission notes with concern that indigenous women, girls, and adolescents continue to be exposed to a greater risk of being victims of murder, disappearances, violence in the family or intimate partner sphere, sexual violence and forced sterilizations, compared to other women.<sup>396</sup> In the absence of specific official data on femicide,<sup>397</sup> the IACHR resorts to other publicly available sources of information that indicate that, as of October 2024, 137 violent deaths of women were reported, mostly perpetrated by their partners or family members,<sup>398</sup> of which 16% would be indigenous women and girls. They would also account for 11% of all missing women.<sup>399</sup>

210. In relation to human mobility, the State indicated that actions have been put in place under the Temporary Foreign Worker Program (TFWP) to protect migrant workers. Official information shows that, from January 1 to August 31, 2024, the Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) has granted 2,789 permits under the TFWP and the Open Work Permit for Vulnerable Workers (OWP-V). Moreover, the State reported that since the launching of the OWP-V in 2019 and until August 31, 2024, a total of 7,652 permits for vulnerable workers have been approved.<sup>400</sup>

211. Despite the above initiative, the Commission observes with concern that, based on information available to the IACHR, migrant workers who are participants of the TFWP program are at a higher risk of labor exploitation compared to Canadian nationals mainly due to the nature of their visas.<sup>401</sup> According to information available, migrant workers under this program may suffer wage theft, unsafe conditions at work, excessive working hours without rest, inadequate housing, and racist abuse, among others. After an official visit to Canada in July, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Contemporary Forms of Slavery stated that TFWP expressed their concerns over the Program indicating that it “serves as a breeding ground for contemporary forms of slavery, as it institutionalizes asymmetries of power that favor employers and prevent workers from exercising their rights”.<sup>402</sup>

212. Regarding the detention of migrants, the Commission takes note of the use of alternative programs to migration detention by the Canada Border Service Agency (CBSA). According to official information, as of March 2024, a total of 12,819 individuals were enrolled in these programs.<sup>403</sup> However, the Commission expresses concern over the preliminary findings of the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, who conducted an official visit to Canada from May 13 to 24, 2024. As per their findings, alternatives to detention are often only considered after arrest at the review hearing, when the prejudice of being removed from family, community and employment may have already been done.<sup>404</sup>

213. Furthermore, the Working Group was alarmed by the fact that Canada allows children and youths to be held in centers for migrants and recommended the State to prohibit any migration-related detention of persons under the age of 18.<sup>405</sup> In addition, the Working Group expressed concerns over the fact that private security contractors who guard the detainees are not CBSA officials, making it more difficult for detainees to access information regarding their status and to lodge complaints about their detention conditions.<sup>406</sup>

214. With respect to the prevention of statelessness, the Commission welcomes the State's decision to introduce Bill C-71 on May, 2024,<sup>407</sup> that would: i) automatically remedy the status of any person already born who would have been a citizen were it not for the first-generation limit; and ii) establishes a new framework for citizenship by descent going forward that would allow for access to citizenship beyond the first generation based on a substantial connection to Canada.<sup>408</sup> According to public information, while the amendments are passed, Canada appears to be processing applications for subsequent generations born abroad if the applicant can demonstrate an urgent need for Canadian citizenship such as statelessness, among others.<sup>409</sup> On December 19, 2023, the Ontario Superior Court of Justice declared that the first-generation limit for those born abroad is unconstitutional.<sup>410</sup>

215. In relation to human trafficking, the State informed of its first Supply Chain Act, which requires certain entities and government institutions to report annually on the measures taken to prevent and reduce forced and child labor in supply chains. By May of 2024, 5,795 report submissions had been received, of which 5,650 came from entities and 145 were governmental.<sup>411</sup> However, the Commission takes note of the report presented by the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Contemporary Forms of Slavery including its causes and consequences, which indicated that the distribution of responsibilities between the Federal Government and provincial and territorial governments systematically create situations of interjurisdictional negligence, thus, contributing to increased vulnerability to contemporary forms of slavery for certain groups and hampering efforts to protect and assist victims, with particular impacts on indigenous peoples, migrants, the homeless and people with disabilities.<sup>412</sup>

216. Regarding the rights of indigenous peoples, the Commission welcomes the launch in October of the Supporting Indigenous Victims of Crime (SIVC)<sup>413</sup> initiative, aimed at funding projects to enhance access to victim-centered services led by indigenous communities. Similarly, the Commission was informed about the availability of funding to improve access to justice for indigenous and "racialized communities" in British Columbia.<sup>414</sup>

217. In January 2024, the British Columbia Supreme Court convicted three Indigenous land defenders—Sleydo' (Molly Wickham), Shaylynn Sampson, and Corey Jayohcee Jocko—of criminal contempt for defying an injunction against obstructing Coastal GasLink pipeline construction on Wet'suwet'en territory. They subsequently filed abuse of process applications, alleging misconduct by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) during their November 2021 arrests.<sup>415</sup> In July 2024, Wet'suwet'en Chief Dsta'hyl was sentenced to 60 days of house arrest for peacefully opposing the pipeline construction. Amnesty International condemned his conviction and confinement, asserting he was unjustly penalized for defending his people's land and rights amid a climate emergency, and declared him a 'prisoner of conscience'.<sup>416</sup>

218. In relation to people of African descent and against racial discrimination, the State reported the findings of the Steering Group for Canada's Black Justice Strategy, outlining policy recommendations and accountability measures that will guide the Government's response to address systemic racism and the overrepresentation of individuals of African descent in the criminal justice system.<sup>417</sup> In January, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) launched the Race-Based Data Collection Initiative, which collects and analyzes race-based data to better understand the experiences of racialized communities in their interactions with frontline officers RCMP.<sup>418</sup> In June, the State launched the Canada's Anti Racism Strategy 2024-2028, aimed at building a better, fairer and more inclusive country by advancing racial equity and promoting economic, social and cultural empowerment.<sup>419</sup>

219. On the other hand, the Ontario Human Rights Commission (OHRC) proposed an enforceable agreement with the Toronto Police Service (TPS) and the Toronto Police Services Board (TPSB) in response to insufficient progress on recommendations issued in 2023 aimed at addressing anti-Black racism in the city's policing practices.<sup>420</sup> Moreover, a report from the Canadian Human Rights Commission revealed allegations of interpersonal and institutional racial discrimination within the Privy Council's Office.<sup>421</sup> It also documented racial profiling and excessive use of force by police officers in Ottawa, Hamilton, and Montreal.<sup>422</sup> The report highlighted the murder of Vanessa Rentería Valencia, an Afro-Colombian refugee, who was fatally shot by a RCMP officer in Surrey, British Columbia.<sup>423</sup> Additionally, 51% of racialized individuals aged 15 and older reported experiencing discrimination, compared to 27% of non-racialized individuals, underscoring persistent inequalities.<sup>424</sup>

220. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, the Canadian government invested public funds to support civil society initiatives that aim to recognize the rights of LGBTI persons. For example, in June the Government proposed $12 million over five years for projects to combat hate against the 2SLGBTQI+ communities.<sup>425</sup> Nevertheless, several bills were introduced in October in the province of Alberta that aim to restrict the rights of transgender persons.<sup>426</sup> According to public information, the Health Statutes Amendment Act seeks to limit access to gender-affirming healthcare for transgender children and adolescents, including hormonal treatments and gender-affirming surgeries, although such surgeries are rarely performed.<sup>427</sup>

221. In relation to human rights defenders, the Commission notes with concern the case of Wet'suwet'en indigenous defenders who since 2022 have been accused of contempt after allegedly failing to comply with a court order (injunction) granted in favor of a gas company that is building a gas pipeline within the community's territory.<sup>428</sup> In January 2024, of the 20 people accused, three were found guilty of the crime of contempt and challenged this process,<sup>429</sup> while, in February of this year, another of the leaders was found guilty and sentenced to 60 days of house arrest in July of 2024.<sup>430</sup> The deliberations have continued throughout the year.

222. Regarding the processes of memory, truth and justice, the IACHR takes note of the final report on Indigenous-led Reparation Framework for Missing and Disappeared Children and Unmarked Burials associated with Indian Residential Schools, of October 29. The appointment of the Independent Special Interlocutor responsible for the report followed the investigation of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada and aimed to support the recovery of the indigenous children who went missing after they were separated from their families to attend those schools up until the decade of 1990<sup>431</sup>. The report indicated that, among others: i) many disappearances are attributable to the State; ii) highlights the urgency for creating a commission of inquiry; and iii) reveals the existence of a culture of amnesty and impunity in Canada.<sup>432</sup> The Report identifies 42 obligations to be met within an indigenous people-led reparation system for truth, justice, and reconciliation.<sup>433</sup> In this regard, the IACHR values the inclusion of the signature and ratification of the American Convention on Human Rights and the acceptance of the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court on Human Rights as one of the obligations cited.

IX. CHILE

- General considerations

223. In 2024, Chile made significant progress in relation to social rights, especially in terms of labor and pension reforms. A bill was drafted to create the National System of Support and Care; gender mainstreaming was implemented in foreign policy and international trade programs; and measures were adopted to prevent, punish and eradicate violence against women.

224. Nevertheless, Chile faced challenges in the field of citizen security, inasmuch as bills that might be regressive with respect to the use of force by law enforcement officers and the armed forces were processed. Human mobility policies also raised concern, given the possible risk of measures restricting the exercise of refugee and asylum rights.

225. On November 5, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>434</sup>

- Specific issues

226. In relation to democratic institutionalism, Chile enacted Law No. 21,693, which "amends various legal bodies to improve the electoral system and hold the 2024 municipal and regional elections in two days.” During these two days, elections of regional governors, mayors, councilpersons and regional councillors were held. According to Chile’s Electoral Service (SERVEL), 13,112,090 people casted their votes out of a total of 15.4 million eligible voters, which accounts for an 84.87 percent turnout, the highest figure in the country’s electoral history.<sup>435</sup>

<sup>434</sup> Government of Chile, Report submitted by the State of Chile in response to the request for information of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights for the preparation of the 2024 Annual Report, Note No. 234/24, November 5, 2024. In IACHR files.

227. Regarding human rights institutions, Chile undertook measures to advance the implementation of the Escazú Agreement, including the drafting of the 2024–2030 National Plan for the Participatory Implementation of the Escazú Agreement, and the submission to Congress of an amendment to Law No. 19,300 on General Environmental Principles. The latter is intended to make the country’s institutions stronger and more efficient in dealing with environmental issues.<sup>436</sup>

228. In November 2024, when passing the 2025 Budget Law, the Chamber of Deputies excluded the allocation of resources to the National Human Rights Institute (INDH) due to the lack of guidance from the government on increasing these funds.<sup>437</sup> Subsequently, the Senate approved the allotment of resources to the INDH with 18 votes in favor, 15 votes against and one abstention, according to official sources.<sup>438</sup>

229. Moreover, the bill that “establishes a new Criminal Code” constitutes progress in terms of access to justice, insomuch as it includes new crimes such as cybercrimes, environmental crimes, cyber harassment, phishing and pharming. Additionally, if approved, the reform would eliminate concepts such as offenses against decency or public morals from national legislation and introduce a new sentencing system.<sup>439</sup> In addition to the above, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers highlighted different advances in the consolidation of a robust justice system, among these, the upgrade of the criminal justice infrastructure, the digitalization of the judicial system and the advances made in gender issues by the Technical Secretariat for Gender Equality and Non-Discrimination and the Commission for Peace and Understanding.<sup>440</sup>

230. However, the Rapporteur also underscored some challenges that Chile still faces, such as the persistence of significant socioeconomic inequality, which translates into unequal access to justice, and the allegations of influence peddling in possible key appointments in the judiciary.<sup>441</sup> Furthermore, the Senate decided to remove a Supreme Court justice who was an environmental and health rights defender following a constitutional accusation,<sup>442</sup> on charges of notable dereliction of duty by failing to exercise correctional functions and omitting to report the misconduct of his daughter, who also performs judicial functions.<sup>443</sup> This decision was criticized by high-level authorities, who warned that the resolution could set a “dangerous precedent” by affecting the indispensable independence of the judiciary through misleading procedural maneuvering.<sup>444</sup>

231. Concerning citizen security, the State incorporated the Supraterritorial Prosecutor's Office, specialized in organized crime and highly complex crimes, into the Public Prosecutor's Office.<sup>445</sup> The State also created the Ministry of Security and introduced reforms to the anti-terrorist law.<sup>446</sup>

232. However, the State faced challenges in passing the bill on the use of force by agents of the public security forces and the armed forces at the first legislative stage, that is, the Chamber of Deputies. This bill excluded the principle of proportionality and established new presumptions to release law enforcement agents from criminal liability.<sup>447</sup> According to official sources, this bill is currently being examined by the Senate.<sup>448</sup>

233. In this regard, in a joint press release, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) expressed their concern about the removal of the principle of proportionality (according to which the use of force needs to be in strict accord with the seriousness of the threat or crime and the legitimate public order or law enforcement purpose that is being pursued). Both agencies also recalled that international standards indicate that military justice may only handle crimes committed by active military officers in the course of duty and that civilians may not, under any circumstances, be tried by military courts.<sup>449</sup>

234. Regarding the situation in the country's southern macro-region, the State reported on the successive decrees issued on the constitutional state of emergency in the Araucanía region and the provinces of Arauco and Biobío since 2022. While the State reported a decrease of 36 percent in rural violence during 2024 compared to the same period in 2023, and a fall of 26 percent compared to 2021,<sup>450</sup> the Commission still observed alarming facts, such as the murder of three police officers who were shot and then incinerated inside their police car on April 27, 2024, in the region of Biobío.<sup>451</sup>

235. The Chilean State has made some progress in the processes of memory, truth and justice with the implementation of the National Search Plan intended to locate 1,469 disappeared persons during the dictatorship. This plan identified over 36,000 relevant documents and 47 sites of interest for forensic search.<sup>452</sup> The government announced the expropriation of land to build memory sites<sup>453</sup> and urgently submitted a bill to repeal the Amnesty Law, which has been in force since 2014.<sup>454</sup> In addition, Chile signed the Ljubljana-The Hague Convention, which reinforces international cooperation to investigate and prosecute the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and other international crimes.<sup>455</sup>

236. As for challenges, Chile recorded repeated attacks to memory sites: over 160 aggressions have been recorded since 2018, out of which 20 took place in 2024. These attacks included acts of vandalism with negationist slogans, theft and arson,<sup>456</sup> such as the fire reported at the sawmill of Neltume, which had been declared part of the national heritage.<sup>457</sup> Furthermore, the State has faced some challenges in terms of site maintenance due to the absence of a memory law,<sup>458</sup> problems with access to funding and delays in the allocation of resources.<sup>459</sup> In addition, the country's failure to recognize forced displacement during the dictatorship as a crime against humanity has restricted access to justice and reparation for victims.<sup>460</sup>

237. With respect to the situation of persons in the context of human mobility, the State created the Interministerial Advisory Committee for the Implementation of the National Policy on Migration and Foreigners, which is in charge of providing advice on policy execution and the design of an action plan.<sup>461</sup> In addition, the State implemented the Sello Migrante (Migration Stamp) program, which acknowledges the work of those municipalities that promote the inclusion of migrants, with 141 municipalities registered as of June 2024.<sup>462</sup> Moreover, the Second Chamber of the Supreme Court annulled a deportation order against a Venezuelan woman with family ties in Chile, which sets a relevant precedent in the protection of the rights of migrants.<sup>463</sup>

238. Additionally, Chile played a key role in the Cartagena +40 Process, leading efforts to strengthen protection and solutions for refugees, displaced persons, and stateless individuals in Latin America and the Caribbean. This process culminated in the adoption of the Chile Declaration and Plan of Action 2024-2034, which serves as an updated guide for governments in the region in the implementation of comprehensive and sustainable responses for refugees, displaced and stateless persons.<sup>464</sup>

239. However, Law No. 21,655, which reforms legislation on the protection of refugees and migrants in Chile, restricted effective access to the right to seek and receive asylum. In particular, it set out an initial verification stage that allows authorities to reject requests found ungrounded or fraudulent without a profound analysis by the corresponding competent authority.<sup>465</sup> This couples with the obstacles faced by Venezuelan and Haitian nationals to exercise their right to seek and receive asylum, as well as to access protection or migration regularization mechanisms. From 2010 to 2024, out of the 30,597 asylum applications filed, only 957 were approved, which translates into a low approval rate of 3.1 percent. In addition, 89.1 percent of the applications remained pending for years, without a final resolution, which posed serious administrative challenges in the system.<sup>466</sup>

240. Regarding indigenous peoples, the State implemented policies with a special focus on the regions of Biobío, Araucanía, Los Ríos and Los Lagos, with an intercultural approach centered mainly in rural areas and Mapuche communities. As part of these measures, the Interministerial Council for Coordination of the Plan Buen Vivir (Good Living Plan), created in 2023,<sup>467</sup> started to operate, and dialogue sessions were held through the Presidential Commission for Peace and Understanding. These actions sought to set the foundations for medium- and long-term solutions related to land and reparation for Mapuche communities.<sup>468</sup>

241. Moreover, the Chilean Senate suspended the processing of Coastal Marine Areas of Native Peoples (ECMPO) under the framework of the Lafkenche Law (Law No. 20,249), a tool used by indigenous communities to protect and safeguard their cultural, economic and spiritual practices in coastal territories.<sup>469</sup> In response, unconstitutionality appeals have been filed with the Constitutional Court, which admitted these appeals and scheduled sessions to analyze the merits of the case.<sup>470</sup>

242. As for the human rights of women, the State enacted Law No. 21,675, which governs the prevention, punishment and eradication of gender-based violence against women. This law includes types of violence that had been previously overlooked, such as vicarious, symbolic and gynecological and obstetric violence, and provides for a follow-up mechanism designed to ensure compliance with measures related to gender violence.<sup>471</sup> Also, a pilot project for an Integrated System of Information on gender violence was put in place<sup>472</sup> and significant measures concerning equality were adopted. They include labelling budget allocations with a gender perspective in the 2025 budget, an action plan for a feminist foreign policy that has gender equality as its cornerstone, the adoption of a gender approach in international trade agreements<sup>473</sup> and reforms to the Labor Code through laws that promote work-life balance, as well as the prevention, investigation and punishment of labor and sexual harassment and workplace violence.<sup>474</sup> Chile also took steps forward aimed at amending the community property system, which is considered discriminatory against women, and give priority to its processing.<sup>475</sup> The State also amended the rules on conscientious objection under Law No. 21.030, which ensures that the exercise of such objection does not prevent access to the voluntary termination of pregnancy when permitted by law.<sup>476</sup>

243. However, between January and November 2024, the country registered 41 femicides and 266 attempted femicides.<sup>477</sup> Alarming cases of violence and sexual exploitation against migrant women were also reported, especially in border areas, as well as an increase in the use of digital technologies to commit acts of online violence.<sup>478</sup> In addition, challenges persisted in terms of access to reproductive health goods and services, including high rates in the use of conscientious objection, limited access to contraceptives and family

244. Concerning human rights defenders, in April 2024, Chile approved a Protocol for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders. This interinstitutional coordination protocol seeks to reinforce the State's response and set out protection measures for those who face risks or threats to their fundamental rights because of the work they do in the defense of human rights.<sup>480</sup>

245. With respect to the rights of Afro-descendant persons and policies against racial discrimination, in the context of the enforcement of Law No. 21,151—which legally recognizes the Chilean tribal people of African descent,<sup>481</sup>—the State passed regulations on prior consultation for this ethnic-racial group.<sup>482</sup> The State also included a self-identification question for Afro-descendant people in the Population and Housing Census carried out between March and June 2024. This census invited several ethnic peoples, including 45 Afro-Chilean organizations at the first stage of intercultural participation.<sup>483</sup>

246. In 2024, educational and informative public policies were implemented to prevent violence against women and LGBTI persons in education centers<sup>484</sup> and to promote the rights of women and sexually diverse people, with a focus on trans children and adolescents.<sup>485</sup> In addition, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights reaffirmed Law No. 20,609 with the creation of anti-discrimination institutions under the Undersecretariat of Human Rights and a Council for Equality and Non-Discrimination.<sup>486</sup>

247. However, significant challenges persisted, such as the exclusion of questions on sexual orientation in the 2024 census by the National Institute of Statistics<sup>487</sup> and regressive measures including the prohibition approved by both the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies against the public funding of hormone therapy for trans children.<sup>488</sup> Furthermore, a Chamber commission recommended that health and education policies for LGBTI persons be repealed and that aspects related to children in the Gender Identity Law be amended.<sup>489</sup>

248. With regard to the rights of children and adolescents, the State approved the new Policy on Children and Adolescents together with the 2024–2032 Action Plan, which prioritizes the integral well-being of children and adolescents, supporting their development throughout their life and strengthening political and institutional conditions to guarantee their rights.<sup>490</sup> In addition, comprehensive protection rules were made consistent with key laws, such as the law creating the National Specialized Protection Service, the Law on Financial Contributions and the Law of Guarantees.<sup>491</sup> Furthermore, Chile established the Presidential Advisory Commission to look into and shed light on violations of the rights of children and adolescents under the custody of the National Children's Service.<sup>492</sup> In response to the call made by the Office of the Ombudsman for Children, the Ministry of Education authorized 8,718 additional vacancies for unenrolled students, as part of the Plan to Strengthen Enrollment.<sup>493</sup>

249. Concerning the rights of older persons, the State moved forward with the deployment of the National Support and Care System (SNAC), which is called Chile Cuida (Chile Cares), under which 20 new day community centers were opened as a result of an increase in budget allocation and supply services for older persons.<sup>494</sup> Furthermore, three new "protected housing units" were opened during 2024, which will drive support and care for each person who lives in these units.<sup>495</sup> The country also developed the Diabfrail LatAm project in the city of Cauquenes, whose purpose is to promote healthy aging and the autonomy of older persons by means of recreational activities and multisectoral participation.<sup>496</sup>

250. A public report by the academia indicates that individuals over the age of 50 have faced the greatest challenges in finding employment since the COVID-19 pandemic.<sup>497</sup>

251. As for persons deprived of liberty, the Court of Guarantees of Puerto Montt heard a writ of amparo filed to protect women detained in the Alto Bonito prison who were in appalling conditions due to overcrowding, deficient infrastructure and lack of appropriate spaces and mattresses. The Court admitted the remedy and ordered such conditions be improved.<sup>498</sup> Furthermore, the Chilean Committee to Prevent Torture (CPT), together with other national mechanisms to prevent torture in the region, adopted the San José Declaration aimed at institutional strengthening and networking and the Global Action for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Deprived of Liberty.<sup>499</sup>

252. Chile also took measures in 2024, under the Master Plan on Prison Infrastructure, to increase the number of vacancies in the prison system,<sup>500</sup> including new bidding processes to maintain infrastructure and build new penitentiaries.<sup>501</sup>

253. These infrastructure measures were adopted in the context of the prison crisis faced by Chile after the 48-percent increase in prison population between 2021 and 2024<sup>502</sup> due to the tightening of the criminal policy related to citizen security, drug trafficking and organized crime.<sup>503</sup> This approach has led to an increase in the number of sentences, their duration and the use of pretrial detention, which resulted in an overcrowding rate of 137.6 percent in August 2024, with critical conditions in some prisons.<sup>504</sup> In addition, in June 2024, 10 Gendarmerie officials were detained due to the fact that they were allegedly members of a corruption network related to arms trafficking, drug trafficking and other crimes in prisons.<sup>505</sup>

254. Finally, with regard to human trafficking, the United Nations Human Rights Council (UNHRC), in its analysis of the Seventh Periodic Report of Chile on the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, underscored the progress made in the fight against human trafficking. The measures highlighted included the prevention measures targeted at vulnerable populations, the streamlining of procedures to identify victims, better efforts to investigate, prosecute and punish these crimes and the guarantee of integral reparation for victims, including medical, material and legal assistance, support for their social reintegration and protection against revictimization.<sup>506</sup>

X. COLOMBIA

- General considerations

255. In 2024, the State made progress in terms of citizen security and democratic institutionality, promoting the rights of Afro-descendant and indigenous people. It performed actions under the Development Plan to transform territories with low state presence and it approved the retirement reform as part of an integral response to armed conflict and violence in the country. Specifically, in April, it welcomed an on-site visit from the IACHR, reaffirming its commitment to international human rights oversight and accountability.

256. As for challenges, the violence caused by the armed conflict continued to have a serious impact on human rights defenders, social leaders, indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples, peasant communities, women, children and adolescents. In addition, the lack of political consensus hindered the application of strategies to transform the areas most affected by conflict and state absence.

257. On October 3, 2024, the State submitted an extensive, detailed response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter<sup>507</sup>.

- Specific issues

258. With regard to democratic institutionalism, the State emphasized the adoption of a holistic approach towards democracy, one that includes the defense of diversity, equality, justice, the realization of economic, social, cultural and environmental rights, the reaffirmation of the Social Rule of Law and the guarantee to uphold human rights.<sup>508</sup> Under this definition, the State reported on a broad set of actions intended to consolidate peace, drive participation and develop differentiated approaches, among other initiatives.<sup>509</sup> An example of these actions is the implementation of the Permanent Dismantling Action Plan, which embraces several approaches: a differentiated, gender-based and feminist, ethnical, multisectoral, human safety, territorial, supranational plan with a focus on citizen participation. It was designed together with the civil society through the National Commission of Security Guarantees by means of Agreement No. 001 of 2023, adopted by the Government of Colombia through Decree No. 665 of 2024.<sup>510</sup>

259. However, several noticeable security challenges persisted and affected democracy. These challenges included the expansion of armed groups, such as the Clan del Golfo, which expanded its territorial control and its illegal activities.<sup>511</sup> In 2024, violence still affected social leaders and vulnerable communities, and the lack of a clear roadmap in the negotiations clouded peace-making efforts. Furthermore, political polarization and distrust in institutions hindered the effective implementation of initiatives to promote peace. Additionally, the National Electoral Commission (CNE) started an investigation into the expenses of the campaign launched by the Pacto Histórico coalition, represented by the current President Gustavo Petro and other party authorities, which were allegedly above the cap set for electoral campaigns.<sup>512</sup>

260. In terms of citizen security, the Public Policy and Permanent Action Plan came into force with the aim of dismantling criminal conducts or organizations that attack human rights defenders, members of social movements or people who participate in the implementation of agreements and the construction of peace.<sup>513</sup> Such actions are supplemented by the Policy on Security, Defense and Coexistence called "Garantías para la Vida y la Paz 2022-2026" (Guarantees for Life and Peace) adopted by the Ministry of Defense<sup>514</sup> and the 2022-2025 National Plan on Criminal Policy.<sup>515</sup>

261. Additionally, the State pointed to the progress made in the implementation of the Paz Total (Total Peace) plan. The plan includes four negotiation tables with armed political groups: the National Liberation Army (ELN) table, created in 2022; the General Staff of the Magdalena Medio Blocks called Comandante Gentil Duarte, Comandante Jorge Suárez Briceño and the Raúl Reyes front of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC-EP), a negotiation table created on October 16, 2023; and two recently created tables with Segunda Marquetalia, on June 25, 2024, and Comuneros del Sur, on July 19, 2024.<sup>516</sup>

262. The negotiations held with the ELN and the Central General Staff (EMC) resulted in the complete or partial end of ceasefires, which has increased violence across territories. As for the remaining negotiation talks, actions have been agreed to reduce violence in the areas where they exist.<sup>517</sup> With regard to the social and legal talks with criminal organizations from Medellín and Valle de Aburrá, Quibdó and Buenaventura, the State reported a strong reduction in murder rates and other crimes against civilians.<sup>518</sup> In 2024, 13,341 homicides were recorded —the lowest figure since 2020.<sup>519</sup>

263. Despite these efforts, levels of violence remain high across the country. Until November 2024, 26 early alerts had been issued for 24 departments, 123 municipalities and 15 non-municipal areas concerning human rights violations by armed groups and their links to drug trafficking, illegal mining and deforestation.<sup>520</sup>

264. With respect to the challenges faced in the access to justice, in 2024, the dismissal and/or disqualification by the Inspector General's Office (PGN) of persons holding positions elected by the people remained in place. In 2024, the PGN dismissed and ordered the general disqualification of 14 mayors, 7 governors and 1 member of the Chamber of Deputies. It also suspended and disqualified 4 mayors, 3 councillors and 1 member of the Chamber of Deputies, and it suspended 40 mayors, 24 councillors and 8 governors, which adds up to 72 people sanctioned.<sup>521</sup> In this regard, the plenary of the State Council determined that the PGN could continue applying this type of sanctions until legislation is passed by the Congress on the underlying issue.<sup>522</sup>

265. As for human rights defenders, the State ratified a regional agreement on access to information, participation and access to justice in environmental matters in Latin America and the Caribbean —the Escazú Agreement— after the Constitutional Court's approval of Law No. 2,273 of 2022 on August 28, 2024.<sup>523</sup> Moreover, the State resumed the activities of the National Guarantees Working Group.<sup>524</sup>

266. Despite these measures, between January and October 2024, the Office of the Ombudsperson registered 147 murders of defenders or social leaders.<sup>525</sup> Between January 1 and November 30, 2024, the OHCHR received 186 complaints of murders of human rights defenders. Of those, 80 were verified, 11 are under analysis and 95 are not conclusive.<sup>526</sup> According to the United Nations Verification Mission in Colombia, most victims were social leaders and members of community action boards, representatives of indigenous peoples or Afro-descendant and peasant communities. The highest rates of murders were recorded in the departments of Arauca, Cauca and Valle del Cauca.<sup>527</sup> In this context, the Commission issued five resolutions in 2024 that granted precautionary measures in favor of defenders after it learned of facts that were putting the lives and personal integrity of defenders at risk as a result of their activism.<sup>528</sup>

267. With regard to investigations of crimes against human rights defenders, the State reported that it learned of 1,325 homicides of defenders and social and community leaders which took place between 2016 and September 11, 2024. Of these cases, 749 were prosecuted, with 186 convictions, 4 sanctioning sentences against minors, 12 appeals and 8 acquittals.<sup>529</sup> As for threats against leaders, the State pointed out that, through the Working Group on Investigation of Threats of the Attorney General's Office (FGN) of Colombia, between 2018 and August 2024, progress was made in the investigations of 120 cases, which led to the following results: 23 convictions, 17 cases in which the principle of opportunity was applied by means of an agreement between the parties, 1 termination of the criminal proceeding upon the death of the indicted person, 8 requests and authorizations of arrest warrants, 2 cases that fell under indigenous jurisdiction, 7 indictments, 49 trials, 1 case processed together with another case on a related crime and 12 cases closed.<sup>530</sup> In this context, while the Commission takes note of such progress, civil society organizations denounce that high levels of impunity persist with regard to these crimes and underscore that, in most cases that result in convictions, the sentences refer to material perpetrators only, without making any reference to the masterminds.<sup>531</sup>

268. Moreover, until June 2024, through the work of the National Protection Unit (UNP), 1,473 protection measures for defenders and social leaders were granted: 821 hard measures and 652 soft measures.<sup>532</sup> They include 665 protection vests, 330 panic buttons, 139 communication devices, 1,509 bodyguards, 369 conventional vehicles, 227 armored vehicles and 68 ground support kits.<sup>533</sup> The budget allocated to the UNP in 2024 amounted to 2.3 trillion Colombian pesos (approximately 553 million US dollars).<sup>534</sup>

269. Nevertheless, the civil society pointed to deficiencies in protection measures associated with material defects found in vehicles, protection vests, phones, panic buttons and mobility restrictions as a result of guards' limited travel expenses and fuel.<sup>535</sup> Such deficiencies were also associated with the lack of institutions in the territory, as well as the absence of qualified personnel and measures based on gender, ethnic-racial and territorial approaches.<sup>536</sup> This hinders the documentary registration required by the UNP<sup>537</sup> to assess risks and the development of effective protection measures.<sup>538</sup>

270. With regard to the rights of indigenous peoples, the executive branch issued Decree No. 1,275, which grants indigenous authorities competence over environmental matters within their territories.<sup>539</sup>

The State also highlighted the restitution of at least 55,000 hectares of land to indigenous communities in the departments of La Guajira, Cauca, Valle del Cauca, Chocó and Antioquia in compliance with court orders.<sup>540</sup>

271. Moreover, discrimination based on ethnicity and race, coupled with armed conflicts and illicit economies in indigenous communities, continued to disproportionately affect ethnic groups —the Wounaam, Embera (Chamí, Katío, Dóbida, Eyábida) and Nasa communities being the most impacted.<sup>541</sup> Likewise, year on year, several acts of violence against indigenous leaders were recorded; out of the 47 murder victims registered until September 2024, 12 were indigenous.<sup>542</sup>

272. Concerning forced displacement and confinement, in 2024, indigenous peoples accounted for 35 percent and 42 percent of victims, respectively.<sup>543</sup> The departments where most of these cases were registered are Antioquia, Arauca, Chocó, Cauca, La Guajira, Nariño and Valle de Cauca.<sup>544</sup> In this context, the situation of the Wiwa people is alarming: they have been forced to relocate more than once during 2024.<sup>545</sup> The situation of the communities affected by illegal mining in the basins of the Atrato, Nechi and Cauca rivers must also be highlighted.<sup>546</sup> In addition, violence resulting from the armed conflict, illicit economies, extractive industries and the absence of an institutional response to these facts has jeopardized the survival of cross-border indigenous communities, located across Perú, Colombia and Ecuador.<sup>547</sup>

273. In particular, forced recruitment continued to affect indigenous children and adolescents, who account for 50 percent of the victims.<sup>548</sup> Furthermore, Wayuu children have suffered several violations to their right to food and water.<sup>549</sup>

274. As for the progress made concerning Afro-descendant persons and policies against racial discrimination, in the context of the 16th session of the Conference of the Parties (COP16), the State acknowledged the key role of Afro-descendants in the preservation and sustainable use of biodiversity. Together with the State of Brazil, it created the Afro-descendant Peoples of the Americas program, which seeks to reaffirm their role as guardians of biodiversity and promote access to cooperation funds earmarked for biodiversity projects.<sup>550</sup> In addition, the State regulated procedures to expand, improve and legally protect the territories traditionally occupied by black Afro-Colombian, Raizal and Palenquera communities.<sup>551</sup>

275. However, several challenges persisted in terms of security and access to rights, which continued to affect the life of Afro-descendants in Colombia. In the context of the armed conflict and the search for territorial control for the operation of illegal economies, in 2024, the Commission granted precautionary measures to 13 Afro-descendant leaders who are members of the La Plata Bahía Málaga Community Center.<sup>552</sup> As for racial profiling by state authorities, a case was registered involving an Afro-descendant defender who was a victim of this practice by migration authorities in Bogotá.<sup>553</sup> As for gender violence, the femicide of Naomi Arboleda stands out; she was an African-Colombian young woman who was killed on November 11 in Bogotá after being attacked by a group of men who were harassing her.<sup>554</sup>

276. In addition, some studies reveal the barriers faced by Afro-Colombian women to access sexual and reproductive health services, such as birth control methods and the voluntary termination of pregnancy.<sup>555</sup> In Chocó, 73 percent of women failed to receive information on contraceptive methods and many of them resorted to unsafe practices, including homemade contraceptive devices.<sup>556</sup> Maternal mortality disproportionately affected Afro-descendant women, with higher rates than women without an ethnic affiliation, especially in terms of the impact of unsafe abortions and the lack of access to adequate services.<sup>557</sup>

277. As for the human rights of women, the State informed about the presentation of and progress made due to several legislative initiatives focused on the protection of women's rights.<sup>558</sup> In particular, the Senate passed Bill No. 297/2024, which forbids child marriage, domestic partnerships and early unions in Colombia.<sup>559</sup> Moreover, the executive branch launched the National Action Plan on Women, Peace and Security, whose purpose is to take action in favor of women who are victims of the armed conflict and increase their involvement in conflict prevention, management and solution.<sup>560</sup>

278. In addition, the Ministry of Justice and Law implemented a series of measures to improve the judicial response and to fight impunity in cases of violence due to gender and prejudice. In particular, in the context of a strategy called Red Justas, technical and financial support measures were taken to strengthen territorial institutionality, organization processes and the capacities of territorial entities involved in the support, prevention and prosecution of gender-based violence cases.<sup>561</sup> Likewise, the process to draft a bill for the eradication of violence due to gender and prejudice moved forward. The bill presents multiple cross-cutting measures to create a support, protection, investigation and prosecution system that takes on a comprehensive approach towards these types of violence.<sup>562</sup>

279. Moreover, despite significant discrepancies found in records, figures on violence against women continue to be alarming.<sup>563</sup> Between January and September 2024, the FGN registered 474 femicides,<sup>564</sup> while the civil society registered 671.<sup>565</sup> In addition, the PGN recorded 198 femicides as of November, most of which were committed by the victim's partner or former partner.<sup>566</sup> Additionally, as of September 2024, the FGN registered 74,695 complaints of domestic violence, with most victims being women, and 21,012 complaints of sexual offenses.<sup>567</sup> In this context, it is alarming that most of the victims of sexual violence are girls who remain exposed to this type of violence even in educational settings.<sup>568</sup>

280. Furthermore, two years after the decision to decriminalize the voluntary termination of pregnancy of 24 weeks or less,<sup>569</sup> some obstacles remained in place in terms of access to this health service. In particular, socioeconomic gaps between urban and rural areas, geographical differences and ignorance regarding the applicable legal framework by health providers pose significant challenges in accessing legal termination of pregnancy, especially for women, children and adolescents who live in rural areas, and even more so for women of indigenous or African descent.<sup>570</sup>

281. As for the rights of children and adolescents, the Senate passed a law called Son niñas no esposas (They Are Girls, Not Wives) in November 2024, which removed an article of the Civil Code that allowed girls older than 14 years of age to get married with the consent of their parents.<sup>571</sup> Likewise, the passing of Law Sara Sofía o Alerta Colombia (Sara Sofía or Colombia Alert) led to the creation and regulation of a tool to disseminate information on disappeared children and trigger immediate search mechanisms.<sup>572</sup>

282. As for sexual violence against children and adolescents, based on data from the National Institute of Legal Medicine and Forensic Sciences, as of September 2024, 13,420 forensic examinations were performed on children and adolescents to investigate potential sexual crimes. The Colombian Institute of Family Welfare (ICBF) reported that, as of November 2024, administrative rights restoration processes were opened for 13,237 children and adolescents due to sexual violence.<sup>573</sup> The Office of the Ombudsperson expressed their concern about cases of sexual abuse reported in education centers.<sup>574</sup>

283. Additionally, until November 2024, the Office of the Ombudsperson registered 282 cases of recruitment of children and adolescents. Sixty-five percent of those cases involved boys, while 35 percent involved girls.

284. Concerning advances in terms of the situation of LGBTI persons, the State adopted significant measures to guarantee the rights of LGBTI persons. Those measures included the creation of a specialized group tasked with the investigation of prejudice-based crimes against such population, with a focus on homicides, femicides, discrimination and harassment.<sup>575</sup> In addition, the Superintendency of Health issued guidelines to ensure adequate medical care for trans persons.<sup>576</sup> Furthermore, the Special Jurisdiction for Peace (JEP) recognized a prejudice-based violence pattern in Macro-case 07 on the recruitment of minors during the armed conflict.<sup>577</sup>

285. In terms of legislative measures, the Chamber of Deputies passed Bill No. 272 of 2024, known as Ley inconvertibles (Inconvertible Law), which forbids conversion therapy.<sup>578</sup> Additionally, the Congress submitted Bill No. 122 of 2024, called Ley Integral Trans (Integral Trans Law) to protect the rights of people with diverse gender identities.<sup>579</sup> In addition, the Council of Bogotá approved the draft of Agreement No. 399 of 2024 to guarantee the rights of LGBTI children and adolescents in education centers.<sup>580</sup>

286. Furthermore, several challenges have been identified in connection with the above-mentioned steps forward. Bill No. 272 was archived due to the lack of debate in Congress, which put an end to its legislative processing.<sup>581</sup> At the same time, groups that opposed the recognition of rights for trans persons launched a campaign against the guidelines of the Superintendency of Health arguing that they promoted the “hormonization” of children,<sup>582</sup> a statement labelled as disinformation by human rights defenders.<sup>583</sup>

287. In parallel, some law initiatives intended to restrict the rights of trans persons, particularly for children and adolescents, have paved their way in Congress. These include Bill No. 1 of 2024, called Ley con los niños no te metas (Leave Children Alone Law), which seeks to forbid hormone therapy, puberty blockers and gender affirmation surgery in persons under 18 years of age, irrespective of recommendations from doctors specialized in the subject matter.<sup>584</sup>

288. Within this context of regressiveness, the Office of the Ombudsperson registered 286 cases of violence against the LGBTI population between January and May 2024.<sup>585</sup> According to civil society organizations, at least 28 trans persons were killed in 2024.<sup>586</sup>

289. With regard to persons in the context of human mobility, Colombia established the Special Permanence Permit for Legal Representatives or Guardians of Children and Adolescents (PEP Tutor) aimed at

Venezuelan nationals responsible for minors holding a Temporary Protection Permit (PPT) issued until December 31, 2023. This document allows persons with child custody to regularize their migration status and engage in legal activities.<sup>587</sup> A public consultation process was launched to draft the regulations governing the PEP Tutor permits in order to ensure transparency and incorporate input from the civil society. Moreover, the Constitutional Court issued Judgment No. T-243-23 ordering migration authorities to develop a clear and accessible road map to guide the Venezuelan population on legal alternatives, requirements and deadlines for staying in Colombia.<sup>588</sup>

290. With respect to statelessness, the Constitutional Court issued Judgment No. T-232-24 ordering the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the National Civil Registry to regulate various articles of Law No. 2136 of 2001 to address the risk of statelessness faced by children born under transnational surrogacy agreements. The Constitutional Court also invited the Superintendency of Notaries and Registry Offices to issue guidelines that account for this risk when recording births following maternity disputes in cases of gestational surrogacy. Additionally, it urged Congress to legislate on surrogacy, considering its transnational dimension and ensuring safeguards against statelessness in compliance with Colombia's international obligations.<sup>589</sup>

291. Moreover, in 2024, more than 170,000 people were forcibly displaced due to the armed conflict and disputes over the control of illegal economic activities, including 43,000 persons in massive displacements and 128,000 in individual forced displacement. Ethnic peoples remained the most affected by massive displacement, with 41 percent of the victims belonging to Afro-descendant communities and 19 percent to indigenous peoples<sup>590</sup>.

292. In relation to human trafficking, during the Universal Periodic Review (UPR), the United Nations Human Rights Council recommended that Colombia endorse the Safe Schools Declaration, adopt a protocol to identify and assist victims of human trafficking and strengthen efforts to combat this crime, particularly against women and children<sup>591</sup>.

293. In terms of progress regarding the situation of persons deprived of liberty, the State approved the Optional Protocol to the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment in May 2024<sup>592</sup>.

294. However, challenges related to detention conditions in prisons and temporary detention facilities persisted. Overcrowding reached 24.6 percent in National Prison Centers (ERON)<sup>593</sup> and 140 percent in temporary detention facilities.<sup>594</sup> This situation was exacerbated by the deplorable infrastructure and poor hygiene conditions, limited access to water, unreliable electricity supply, scarce and low-quality food, deficient medical care, shortage of beds and mattresses and barriers to accessing reintegration programs.<sup>595</sup> Moreover, the National Institute for Prisons (INPEC) faced a deficit of approximately 14,000 officers (including 8,000 security personnel and 6,000 administrative workers)<sup>596</sup>.

295. In February 2024, the State declared a prison emergency in the ERONs in response to attacks on the lives and integrity of INPEC officials.<sup>597</sup> These attacks resulted in the death of at least six officials in 2024, including the director of the La Modelo prison in Bogotá, whose murder was condemned by the Commission on May 17, 2024.<sup>598</sup> In this context, the Commission also notes the implementation of Operation Domino to combat crimes within detention centers<sup>599</sup>.

296. Furthermore, although 92 women had received alternative sentences involving community service pursuant to Law No. 2292, as of November 29, 2024,<sup>600</sup> imprisonment continued to have disproportionate effects due to the absence of measures incorporating a gender and intersectional approach.<sup>601</sup> Incarcerated women faced irregular medical attention and constant ill-treatment.<sup>602</sup> Indigenous persons lack adequate accommodation spaces, while persons with disabilities endured inadequate infrastructure that affected their rights in detention, underscoring the need for comprehensive reforms in the prison system.<sup>603</sup>

297. With respect to memory, truth and justice, the State enacted Law No. 2364 of 2024, on the recognition and comprehensive protection of the work and rights of women and other persons who search for victims of enforced disappearance.<sup>604</sup> The executive branch also enacted the reform of the Victims Law (Law No. 1448 of 2011), which, inter alia, expanded the definition of victims to include law enforcement agents, victims abroad and relatives of direct victims.<sup>605</sup>

300. With regard to progress, the Commission notes the information on measures adopted to promote gender equality and women's political rights, the publication of the 2024-2034 Comprehensive Migration Policy and reforms to the asylum system. It also highlights the Age-Friendly Cities and Communities initiative and other projects aimed at improving the quality of life of older persons. The Commission recognizes Costa Rica's openness to international dialogue and human rights scrutiny, as well as its regional leadership in this area.

301. In terms of challenges, the Commission expresses its concern over citizen security and questions regarding the state's response, as well as complaints of violations of judicial independence. The Commission is also concerned about complaints of violations of the rights of indigenous peoples, particularly regarding prior consultation and land demarcation; as well as significant gaps in the guarantee of economic, social and cultural rights for groups facing risks, such as persons in human mobility, women and the older persons.

302. On December 9, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>609</sup> Additionally, the Commission received information from the Office of the Ombudsperson of the Republic on November 15, 2024.<sup>610</sup>

303. With regard to democratic institutionality, the State reported that municipal elections had been held on February 4, 2024, resulting in the election of 6,212 local authorities across 84 municipalities and 492 districts. The State informed that this electoral process was among the most complex in history due to the high number of participating political parties, the large number of representative positions contested and the implementation of the principle of horizontal parity for the first time. In total, 39,734 candidates were registered, compared to 33,873 candidates submitted in 2020.<sup>611</sup>

304. During the electoral process, the Electoral Observation Mission of the Organization of American States (EOM/OAS) and the Commission received reports questioning gender parity rules and allegations of restrictions on the political rights of certain candidates.<sup>612</sup> On February 6, 2024, the EOM/OAS congratulated the State for holding a successful election day and recognized the efforts of Costa Rican institutions, such as the Supreme Electoral Tribunal, to “foster greater openness and reinforce the political participation of citizens under equitable conditions, in addition to ensuring the alternation of power, which is a fundamental pillar of a democratic system.”<sup>613</sup> Moreover, the EOM/OAS acknowledged the application of gender parity and the prohibition of immediate and indefinite reelection of municipal authorities as progress in compliance with previous recommendations of the Organization of American States (OAS).<sup>614</sup>

305. With regard to human rights institutions, the State reported that the Office of the Ombudsperson had renewed its class A accreditation, the highest distinction, following an evaluation by the Sub-Committee on Accreditation of the Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI)<sup>615</sup>. The State emphasized that the Office of the Ombudsperson has direct and independent access to United Nations and inter-American bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights obligations of Costa Rica, enabling it to provide any information it deems relevant in the independent exercise of its mandate.<sup>616</sup> Finally, the State reported that the National Police Academy requires all police forces to complete a course on human rights and gender equality as a prerequisite for graduation.<sup>617</sup>

306. The Commission commends the renewal of the Office of the Ombudsperson's accreditation, its efforts to promote and protect human rights in Costa Rica and its cooperation with international and regional human rights mechanisms, as noted by the GANHRI Sub-Committee on Accreditation.<sup>618</sup> It also underscores the importance of further strengthening this institution by ensuring adequate human and financial resources.<sup>619</sup>

307. With regard to the cross-cutting issue of citizen security, Costa Rica is facing significant challenges. In 2023, the country recorded 907 intentional murders for the first time in its history, while 2024 is projected to be the second most violent year. As of December 1, 2024, the Criminal Investigation Service (OIJ) had documented 807 homicides nationwide.<sup>620</sup> Moreover, in 2024, the Commission became aware of concerns raised by the Office of the Ombudsperson regarding the security policy implemented by the executive branch, specifically, allegations that the government had not been transparent in its design and implementation, did not develop mechanisms to guarantee citizen participation or a concrete medium- and long-term action plan

308. With regard to access to justice and judicial independence, at the regional hearing on the “Current status of judicial independence in the Americas,” the Commission received information about the gradual weakening of the Costa Rican justice administration system in recent years and its impact on human rights resulting from a series of legislative measures and judicial governance policies.<sup>622</sup> These include setbacks in the retirement and pension systems, severe budgetary restrictions on the judiciary, over 1,000 resignations recorded in the judiciary in the past three years due to inadequate conditions and the inability to replace these positions.<sup>623</sup> In 2024, the Commission was also informed about the alleged harassment by the executive branch against justice operators who made judgments affecting its government plan or with regard to the Attorney General’s Office’s investigations into corruption cases.<sup>624</sup> Furthermore, on July 1, 2024, the en banc Court declared that applicants for judicial positions should accept discretionary transfers and changes in schedules or working hours under the “employer’s management powers,” thereby weakening guarantees of stability in the judiciary.<sup>625</sup>

309. With regard to the rights of indigenous peoples, the Office of the Ombudsperson reported that government programs lack a cross-cutting approach with a perspective on the rights of indigenous peoples. Additionally, it documented complaints regarding the absence of measures for the demarcation and rectification of territories, as well as the failure to conduct free, prior and informed consultation processes.<sup>626</sup> Furthermore, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health expressed concern over the challenges faced by indigenous communities in accessing healthcare services which are located far from the communities and lack intercultural adaptation. Furthermore, the Special Rapporteur also noted the rise in depression and anxiety among young indigenous persons studying outside their communities, as well as an increase in attempted suicides and deaths by suicide in Talamanca.<sup>627</sup>

310. With regard to the rights of women, the Costa Rican State highlighted progress in improving women’s representation in local governments, particularly an increase from 7 to 22 women mayors after the February 2024 elections.<sup>628</sup> The Commission also takes note of measures reported by Costa Rica to promote gender equality, including the approval of a technical sheet for analyzing legislative projects with a gender perspective<sup>629</sup> and the introduction of a bill to incorporate gender equality and equity education at all levels.<sup>630</sup> With regard to measures focused on gender-based violence, the Commission highlights the reestablishment of the 1125 hotline, which provides free legal, psychological and social assistance to women<sup>631</sup> and the proposal to legally institutionalize the 72-hour Protocol, and the Rapid Response Comprehensive Care Teams for Victims of Sexual Crimes (ERRVV).<sup>632</sup>

311. However, the Commission is concerned about the persistence of sexual violence against women in human mobility<sup>633</sup> and gender-based violence in general. According to official data, 70 violent deaths of women had been recorded as of November 13, 2024, with 21 cases classified as femicides and 41 pending classification.<sup>634</sup> Civil society organizations reported barriers in health services to access contraceptive methods, including emergency contraception, such as the denial of the product or service, mistreatment, unattainable requirements, and lack of information.<sup>635</sup>

312. With regard to the rights of children and adolescents, the Commission welcomes the enactment of the Law on the Prevention, Early Detection and Response to Violence Against Children and Adolescents in June 2024. This law seeks to establish measures for the prevention and early detection of all forms of violence against children and adolescents by raising awareness, coordinating actions among State institutions and promoting their rights.<sup>636</sup> The Commission also takes note of the presentation of the 2024-2036 National Policy for Children and Adolescents, developed with the participation of 2,000 children and adolescents. This policy aims to enhance institutional coordination through seven strategic areas focused on strengthening the protection, promotion, guarantee and defense of the rights of children and adolescents.<sup>637</sup> Nevertheless, the Office of the Ombudsperson warned that the policy would exclude indigenous children and adolescents and therefore filed a writ of amparo before the Constitutional Court, which is currently pending.<sup>638</sup>

313. In addition, the Commission notes the challenges identified by the Office of the Ombudsperson regarding access to education for children and adolescents. These include: i) failure to comply with salary obligations to teachers;<sup>639</sup> ii) budget cuts to the Avancemos (Let's Move Forward) scholarship program, which would affect at least 15,000 children and adolescents,<sup>640</sup> and iii) a possible reduction in the budget<sup>641</sup> for education policies in 2025.<sup>642</sup>

314. Finally, the Commission notes with concern the allegations of improper conduct in the system of alternative care for children and adolescents removed from family care, in particular, the

315. With regard to the rights of LGBTI persons, the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Costa Rica ruled in February that denying maternity leave to a woman in a same-sex relationship because she was not the pregnant mother constituted an act of discrimination and ordered the recognition of her rights.<sup>645</sup> Similarly, the Constitutional Chamber rejected a constitutional remedy filed against the decree that implemented the Government Policy to Eradicate Discrimination Against LGBTI Persons from its Institutions.<sup>646</sup> In this judgment, the Constitutional Chamber allowed public officials to refuse training on LGBTI issues if they considered that these contravened their ethical, moral or religious beliefs, invoking the concept of conscientious objection.<sup>647</sup>

316. With respect to persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission takes note of the publication of Decree No. 44385-MGP which formalizes the 2024-2034 Comprehensive Migration Policy. According to official information, this policy establishes migration objectives and actions for the development of medium- and long-term strategic programs and projects.<sup>648</sup> Like other Central American countries, Costa Rica has been a migration corridor for persons in mobility, mostly those who cross the border between Colombia and Panama through the Darién gap with the intention of reaching the countries in North America.<sup>649</sup> The transit of 251,912 migrants was recorded during 2024, a 24 percent decrease compared to the same period in 2023, when 333,422 persons entered the country.<sup>650</sup>

317. Furthermore, the Commission welcomed the issuance of Executive Decree No. 44,501, which introduced reforms to the asylum system.<sup>651</sup> In particular, the Commission commends: i) the protection against refoulement for asylum seekers, ii) the provision of a provisional document certifying temporary regular migration status and allowing the applicant to engage in self-employed or dependent work, and iii) the availability of motions to vacate and appeals against decisions declaring an asylum application groundless.<sup>652</sup> Between January and August 2024, Costa Rica received 16,063 asylum petitions. Most of the asylum seekers in Costa Rica are nationals from Nicaragua (12,636 applications), Cuba (1,125 applications), Venezuela (1,046 applications), Colombia (796 applications) and China (156 applications).<sup>653</sup>

318. During the public hearing titled “Costa Rica: Situation of Nicaraguan asylum seekers and refugees,” the organizations that requested the hearing presented the challenges faced by Nicaraguans in accessing rights and protection in Costa Rica. They also noted the absence of inclusive policies for indigenous persons and expressed concern about the cases of persons who were returned to Nicaragua. For its part, the State highlighted the legal and administrative measures implemented to address the migration of Nicaraguan persons, guarantee their access to rights and improve migration procedures. At the hearing, the Commission recognized Costa Rica's open borders policy and noted the persistent barriers that Nicaraguans face in accessing rights, with an emphasis on the additional challenges experienced by indigenous persons.<sup>654</sup>

319. Moreover, the Commission acknowledges the operational audit conducted by the Office of the Comptroller General of the Republic to “evaluate the effectiveness of the General Directorate of Migration and Immigration (DGME) in refugee status determination proceedings,”<sup>655</sup> which concluded that current procedures were not effective. As a result, the Office of the Comptroller General made eight recommendations to strengthen these procedures and set deadlines for the DGME to report on progress in their application, ensuring proper implementation and follow-up.<sup>656</sup>

320. Regarding the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, according to public information, the State promoted initiatives to enhance access to justice and combat growing discrimination on social media. These measures included agreements signed by the Public Defender's Office and the development of the Government Strategy against Hate Speech and Discrimination with a focus on cultural, ethnic-racial and gender diversity.<sup>657</sup>

321. For their part, civil society organizations stated that the Coastal Regulatory Plan, which includes land use planning policies for economic, social and environmental development in the land-maritime zone, might impact the territorial rights of Afro-descendant communities in the Caribbean region. The Cahuita Afro-Costa Rican tribal community, located in the province of Limón, voiced its opposition to this plan and urged the State to guarantee their right to prior, adequate and informed consultation.<sup>658</sup>

322. With respect to persons deprived of liberty, the Commission welcomes the participation of the National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture of Costa Rica, along with the mechanisms of five other States in the region,<sup>659</sup> in the declaration entitled “Global Action for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Deprived of Liberty,” which was issued on May 3, 2024. 323. Notwithstanding this progress, the Commission expresses its concern over information provided by the Ministry of Justice and Peace to the Office of the Ombudsperson of Costa Rica regarding a project to build tents to be used as detention centers. The Office of the Ombudsperson initiated an ex officio intervention in response to this situation.<sup>663</sup> Additionally, in 2024, the Commission followed up on complaints concerning the lack of drinking water due to damaged pipes in the Terrazas, Jorge Arturo Montero, Adulto Mayor, Ofelia Vicenci and Carlos Luis Fallas Comprehensive Care Centers, as well as in the Reynaldo Villalobos and 20 de Diciembre Comprehensive Care Units.<sup>664</sup> According to information provided by a relative of a detainee, the water supplied in July was transported in garbage containers, which reportedly impacted the health and hygiene of persons in custody.<sup>665</sup>

324. With regard to the rights of older persons, the Commission welcomes the State's commitment to the Age-Friendly Cities and Communities global initiative. Currently, 30 cities in Costa Rica have adapted to accommodate the needs of older persons, implementing groundbreaking projects such as a therapeutic garden and a pedestrian circuit.<sup>666</sup>

325. With regard to social security, the Commission takes note of data published by the National Statistics and Census Institute (INEC) showing that 60.6 percent of older persons have informal jobs with no access to social benefits. As a result, poverty rates are higher among this group compared to other sectors of the population. According to a report by the Chair of Aging and Society of the School of Medicine and the Development Observatory Research Center (CIOdD), more than 215,000 older persons do not receive any type of pension and live in economic uncertainty in Costa Rica.<sup>667</sup>

326. Finally, the Commission learned of a report prepared by the Chair of Aging and Society of the School of Medicine and the University of Costa Rica's (UCR) CIOdD expressing concern over an accelerated aging process affecting Costa Rica's population, with significant implications for the health system and the quality of services. It also highlights the challenges faced by older persons, including chronic diseases, malnutrition, discrimination, social exclusion, abandonment and increased dependency, among others.<sup>668</sup>

327. Regarding the rights of persons with disabilities, the Commission notes progress with the publication of the results of the National Disability Survey, which included disaggregated data and the analysis of multiple variables, as well as the creation of an updated registry on the situation of persons with disabilities, which would facilitate the development of policies and laws.<sup>669</sup> The National Council for Persons with Disabilities (CONAPDIS) eliminated the requirement of medical examinations to obtain the disability

328. However, in terms of challenges, the repeal of Article 5 and other key aspects of Law No. 9379/16 in 2024 reinstated legal types such as interdiction and conservatorship, which undermined the right of persons with disabilities to exercise their legal capacity on an equal footing and removed the possibility of using freely chosen supports for decision making.<sup>672</sup>

329. With respect to human trafficking, the Commission takes note of a workshop held in May 2024 within the framework of the Capacity Building Program for Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice Agencies to promote the incorporation of a gender and human rights approach in data and statistics on human trafficking.<sup>673</sup>

XII. DOMINICA

- General considerations

330. As it relates to progress, the Commission welcomes the decision of the Dominican High Court regarding the rights of LGBTI persons and the efforts by the State to develop a National Domestic Violence Action Plan.

331. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes with concern high levels of pre-trial detention.

332. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

333. Regarding democratic institutionality, the Commission takes note of the publication in May of the Draft Electoral Commission Act, 2024 which makes provision for the operation of the Electoral Commission; the Draft House of Assembly (Elections) Act and Regulations 2024 which provide for the election of Members to the House of Assembly; and the Draft Registration of Electors Act and Regulations 2024 which provide for the registration of electors.<sup>674</sup> In this context, pursuant to Article 41 of the American Convention, the IACHR requested information from the State regarding its proposed electoral reform process.<sup>675</sup>

334. On the other hand, the IACHR was informed of public concerns regarding the electoral reform process, including the removal of provisions from the draft amendments to the electoral legislation pertaining to campaign financing, overseas voting and the transportation of voters to the country by political parties, and the selection, nomination and appointment of the members of the Electoral Commission.<sup>676</sup> The next election is constitutionally due in 2027.<sup>677</sup>

335. With respect to citizen security, the IACHR notes that according to public information, as of December 19 the State recorded 10 homicides, compared to 18 homicides in total in 2023, which represents an approximate 44% decrease.<sup>678</sup> This indicates that the State's homicide rate was approximately 13.6 per 100,000 inhabitants as of December.<sup>679</sup>

336. In relation to access to justice, the Commission notes the appointment in September of additional judges dealing with civil matters in the High Court. The complement of judges has been increased to three and a new High Court Judge has been assigned to the State under the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court.<sup>680</sup>

337. With regard to the rights of women, the State implemented efforts to develop a National Domestic Violence Action Plan to ensure that frontline service providers and key stakeholders, including the police, the judiciary and civil society, are fully aware of the provisions of the updated Domestic Violence Act.<sup>681</sup> Moreover, the Commission also notes the filing of a constitutional challenge in April against colonial era laws that criminalize abortion and disproportionately affect women, girls, and adolescents in poverty.<sup>682</sup>

338. With respect to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, training programs were held in May and September as part of the Training-of-Trainers initiative of the International Organization for Migration (IOM), and targeted law enforcement and immigration officers. The training curriculum covered various topics in immigration and border governance, including the management of identity and travel documents, regulatory frameworks for migration and methods of human trafficking and smuggling, investigation techniques, and intra-agency cooperation strategies, among others.<sup>683</sup>

339. In relation to the rights of LGBTI persons, the Commission welcomed the ruling issued by the Dominica High Court in April, which declared unconstitutional, null and void section 14 of the Sexual Offences Act prohibiting 'gross indecency' and section 16 prohibiting 'buggery'. The Commission called on States of the region that still maintain these forms of criminalization to repeal these laws which allow the persecution of LGBTI persons and encourage acts of violence due to prejudice and discrimination.<sup>684</sup>

340. As for persons deprived of liberty, the Commission values the implementation in February of a prison farm program with the aim of achieving food self-sufficiency within the Dominica State Prison.<sup>685</sup> In March and April, the State conducted reintegration training which allowed inmates to expand their skills in building trade modules and trowel texture painting.<sup>686</sup> On the other hand, the IACHR reiterates its concern over the use of pre-trial detention<sup>687</sup>. According to public information, as of March, Dominica had a prison population of 260 inmates, of which 125 were awaiting trial<sup>688</sup>. This means that the rate of pre-trial detention was 48%.

341. Concerning the death penalty, the IACHR notes that Dominica continues to retain the death penalty even though no execution has been carried out since 1986. In addition, as of May 2023, no one was under the sentence of death<sup>689</sup>.

XIII. DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

- General considerations

342. As it relates to progress, the Commission welcomes the constitutional reform and the increased participation of women in public office. It also notes the ongoing actions taken to reduce procedural delays, the implementation of a police reform and the decrease in homicide rates. Moreover, it highlights the amendment of the Law on Smuggling of Migrants and Human Trafficking and the implementation of measures to improve care for victims of gender-based violence, promote gender equality and ensure immediate birth registration.

343. Among the challenges faced by the State, the Commission notes limitations in the exercise of the right to nationality of Haitian nationals and Dominicans of Haitian descent, and the persistence of structural discrimination. It also expresses its concern over the decision to expel migrants with an irregular migration status and the complaints of human rights violations during deportations. Moreover, the Commission is alarmed at the prevalence of pregnancy among girls and adolescents, the continued ban on abortion on all grounds, the reported acts of violence against human rights defenders, the overcrowding faced by persons deprived of liberty and the overuse of pretrial detention.

344. On November 5, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.<sup>690</sup>

- Specific issues

345. With regard to democratic institutionality, in May, the State held general elections to vote for president, vice president, 32 senators, 195 deputies of the Congress of the Republic and 20 deputies for the Central American Parliament (PARLACEN). By resolution 41-2024 of May 24, 2024, the Central Electoral Board (JCE) declared President-elect, by absolute majority, Luis Rodolfo Abinader Corona<sup>691</sup> who, according to JCE figures, obtained 57.44% of the total valid votes.<sup>692</sup>

346. The Commission takes note of the report of the Electoral Observation Mission (EOM) of the Organization of American States (OAS), which highlighted that the campaign "took place in an atmosphere of respect and that the media provided broad coverage of the candidates, giving the different political options the opportunity to present their proposals."<sup>693</sup> However, it notes with concern that the report in question noted that, of the 35 complaints received, seven were for vote buying, a practice that was also directly observed by members of the Mission. In addition, it recorded an unnecessary use of assisted voting in some precincts, including cases in which the same person accompanied different voters. For this reason, it insisted on the urgent need to eradicate the purchase of votes and ballots and reiterates that their elimination is a shared responsibility of the administrative, electoral, police and judicial authorities, as well as of the political parties themselves and of the public.<sup>694</sup>

347. The State reported that, in October, a new Constitution<sup>695</sup> was enacted with a view to strengthening democracy.<sup>696</sup> In particular, it emphasized that the new Constitution incorporates the following: i) presidential elections as an inalienable right, ensuring alternation in power; ii) the limitation of presidential reelection; iii) the consolidation of the independence of the Public Prosecutor's Office; iv) the appointment of the Attorney General of the Republic as a joint decision with the National Judicial Council. An irrevocable clause to prevent a future constitutional reform from allowing perpetuation in power was also added to the new Constitution. According to the information received, the new Constitution also categorically sets forth that the country's form of government shall always be civilian, republican, democratic and representative, and that this provision shall be placed on the same hierarchical level as the other uncompromising principles.<sup>697</sup>

348. In terms of human rights institutions, the State reported on the extension of the 2018–2022 National Human Rights Plan until 2024, due to the interruptions caused by the Covid-19 pandemic and the need to ensure greater cohesion in public policies and government strategic planning.<sup>698</sup> According to official information, such extension will contribute to the observance of human rights and will serve as a tool to foster good governance, as it will strengthen state management capacities for the promotion, protection and enjoyment of human rights.<sup>699</sup> The State did not indicate whether there are any initiatives to devise a new national plan in 2025.

349. As for citizen security, the State reported that the Joint Task Force achieved a 1.7 percent reduction in the homicide rate compared to previous years and that, as of October 14, 2024, the cumulative annual rate was 9.65 per 100,000 inhabitants. This constitutes a step forward, considering that the rate recorded in 2023 was 11.5, while it had reached 13.2 in 2022. In the State's opinion, this is proof of the effectiveness of the actions taken in this area. Additionally, the State reiterated that it has been working on a police reform, highlighting it had provided training in human rights and citizen coexistence to 3,000 active police officers across the country.<sup>700</sup>

350. Regarding access to justice, the State provided details on the steps taken to improve the efficiency and accessibility of the justice system.<sup>701</sup> Among these steps are the rulings issued on all the cases filed before the different chambers of the Supreme Court of Justice that were pending hearings and judgments prior to 2022. According to the information received, there are still 12 files pending, which were submitted between 2023 and January 2024. The State also reported that 35 percent of the court chambers nationwide are completely caught up on backlog. It also highlighted the approval of the new judicial ranking, a tool that allows judges to further their careers within the judiciary.<sup>702</sup>

351. With respect to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the State reported that "the current crisis in Haiti has led to an unprecedented increase in migration to the Dominican Republic and created a risk of penetration of Haitian organized crime into the country." It added that this situation has forced the government to adopt new measures to mitigate this risk,<sup>703</sup> although it did not offer any details on said measures. In 2024, the Commission expressed its concern over the announcement made by the National Security and Defense Council concerning the deportation of up to 10,000 people with irregular migratory status per week,<sup>704</sup> without considering possible international protection needs.<sup>705</sup> Official information indicates that, between January and June 2024, the State expelled 67,844 people, out of which 66,227 were Haitians.<sup>706</sup> The Commission notes that deportations have escalated since the implementation of the Security Council's decision, inasmuch as 15,500 cases were recorded during the first 15 days of November.<sup>707</sup>

352. The State indicated that potential deportations are assessed on a case-by-case basis prior to their execution, and that a record is kept of each person held in detention facilities. It also pointed out that, as part of its commitment to continuing to strengthen human rights, it is working on a Protocol on Interdiction and Deportation Operations based on the 1999 bilateral agreement with Haiti. The purpose of this protocol is to standardize the processes related to foreigners who have violated immigration regulations or are in the country irregularly.<sup>708</sup> Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Commission expresses its concern over the complaints received regarding the use of practices such as racial profiling and the alleged implementation of discriminatory migration protocols that mainly affect Haitians, Dominicans of Haitian descent and Afro-descendants.<sup>709</sup>

353. In this regard, civil society organizations have publicly denounced that large groups of people have been deported together from the Dominican Republic following migration proceedings that involved racial profiling practices and discrimination. In this outlook, they made an urgent call for institutions to eradicate racial profiling, structural racism and racial discrimination, and to guarantee respect for the human dignity and physical integrity of migrants from Haiti or of Haitian descent.<sup>710</sup>

354. Regarding children and adolescents in contexts of human mobility, the State reported that, between 2021 and the first half of 2024, the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI) assisted 7,554 unaccompanied minors. Out of that total, 2,761 were reunited with their families in the Dominican Republic and 4,323 were assisted in their return to Haiti by means of the bilateral mechanism CONANI-Institut du Bien-Être Social et de Recherches (IBESR).<sup>711</sup> However, information provided by the civil society indicates that, in some cases, the CONANI has allegedly handed over children and adolescents to Haitian authorities without following adequate protocol, while failing to guarantee their rights and safety or to have their best interest in mind. Furthermore, according to the civil society, children and adolescents were on occasion deported to areas where no adequate authorities or organizations are present, such as Malpasse, a town that is reportedly under the control of criminal gangs.<sup>712</sup> In addition, organizations stated that the refusal to provide identity documents to Dominican children and adolescents of Haitian descent prevents them from enrolling in schools and universities<sup>713</sup>.

355. As for statelessness, the State reported that, following the enforcement of Law No. 169-14: i) authorization was granted for the registration of 24,806 children born to foreign parents with a regular migratory status who were holders of identity cards at the time of registration; and ii) 28,014 records of children born to foreign parents with an irregular migratory status—who retained their Dominican nationality—were transcribed.<sup>714</sup> The Commission acknowledged the steps taken by the State to restore the nationality of at least 26,000 persons and to grant citizenship to 799 individuals affected by the Constitutional Court's Ruling TC/0168/13, under which a considerable number of persons were arbitrarily deprived of Dominican nationality, thus rendering those who were not considered nationals of any other country stateless.<sup>715</sup> However, 10 years after the enactment of Law No. 169-14, challenges to its effective implementation persist, since persons identified by the State as beneficiaries are still awaiting the resolution of their cases<sup>716</sup>.

356. In addition, the Commission was informed of the adoption of Resolution 13-24 of the JCE, which establishes the “procedure for the submission, processing and transcription of birth records of the children of foreign parents born in the Dominican Republic, who were regularized and naturalized in accordance with the provisions of the National Plan for the Regularization of Foreigners with an Irregular Migratory Status.”<sup>717</sup> According to civil society organizations, this resolution provides for an additional procedure that must be followed after being granted citizenship and will only benefit the 799 persons who have been naturalized<sup>718</sup> out of the total who make up the group B, as described in Law No. 169-14.<sup>719</sup> Civil society organizations also expressed their concern about the overall situation, since requirements include the submission of a naturalization certificate—which is in possession of the State, inasmuch as the government is responsible for granting them—as well as an identity card that, based on the information provided, has not yet been delivered by the Dominican authorities<sup>720</sup>.

357. Moreover, the State reported that the JCE has promoted the creation of Civil Registry offices in health centers to record births immediately. In spite of this, in the case of foreign mothers, a proof of birth is given so that the JCE may register newborns in a book for foreigners, which does not imply that those registered therein will acquire the Dominican nationality<sup>721</sup> and could lead to a risk of statelessness<sup>722</sup>.

358. In the area of human trafficking, the Commission takes note of the following: i) the training provided in April to labor inspectors on how to identify, monitor and improve their response to human trafficking, with an emphasis on migrant and “vulnerable” populations;<sup>723</sup> and ii) the signing, in February, of the Framework Cooperation Agreement between the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Supérate (Excel

Under these amendments, victims' consent to any form of exploitation will not constitute grounds for exoneration from the criminal offense. Moreover, when human trafficking involves children, persons with disabilities or "vulnerable" persons, it shall be considered a crime even when there is no proof of deception, abduction, use of force, duress, coercion or threat, among others.<sup>726</sup> The State also highlighted actions to prosecute the crime of human trafficking, such as Operation Catleya, during which over 80 victims were rescued<sup>727</sup>.

359. In relation to the rights of children, the Commission welcomes the creation of a committee to evaluate the operation of the Special Protection System for Children and Adolescents in March, thus prioritizing the care of this population in foster homes managed by the CONANI.<sup>728</sup> The Commission also highlights the cooperation agreement signed between the National Institute of Comprehensive Care for Early Childhood and UNICEF, aimed at strengthening the model of comprehensive care for children aged 0–5 years old.<sup>729</sup> Additionally, the Commission appreciates the agreement signed in April by the Association of Hotels and Tourism and UNICEF, which seeks to promote the rights of children in tourist areas of the country, implement family-friendly policies for the benefit of employees in the tourism sector and prevent the sexual exploitation of children and adolescents in vacation areas<sup>730</sup>.

360. Regarding the rights of women, the Commission takes note of the following: i) the creation of 14 Comprehensive Care Units for Victims of Intrafamily Violence and Sex Crimes (UVGs) and the adaptation of 19 existing units;<sup>731</sup> ii) the inauguration of two Comprehensive Development Centers for Women (CEDI-MUJER) in Santiago and Santo Domingo del Norte;<sup>732</sup> iii) the establishment of the Municipal Office for Women Affairs in Boca Chica to facilitate the coordination of programs that promote the rights of women in the territory;<sup>733</sup> and iv) the implementation of the National School for Equality for the mainstreaming of the gender perspective into the public, private and community sectors.<sup>734</sup> The Commission also welcomes the increase in the representation of women in public office. In the 2024 elections, the number of women elected to regidurías (local councils) rose from 352 to 484, and the number of women appointed to the National Congress went up from 52 to 74, compared to the 2020 elections. However, in mayors' offices, positions held by women dropped from 19 to 16.<sup>735</sup> Finally, the Commission highlights the preparation of the Participatory Gender Diagnosis to promote the participation of women in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs<sup>736</sup>.

361. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Commission is concerned over the high rates of violence against women. Between January and August, 13,667 cases of gender-based violence, 26,866 cases of intrafamily violence and 5,003 cases of sexual violence were reported. Furthermore, 25,052 protection orders were issued over the same period of time.<sup>737</sup> As of November 2024, 47 femicides had been recorded.<sup>738</sup> In addition, as of September, 37 victims of human trafficking had been assisted, most of whom were victims of sexual exploitation<sup>739</sup>.

362. For its part, the State reported a decrease in teenage pregnancy: between January and March, 1,623 cases were recorded, which represents a 26.58 percent reduction compared to the same period in 2023.<sup>740</sup> However, figures from the National Statistics Office show that, as of June, 8,365 teenagers and 647 girls under 15 years of age had given birth in 2024.<sup>741</sup> Finally, the Commission regrets that abortion continues to be banned on all grounds and notes that efforts to decriminalize abortion failed to obtain the necessary votes during the process of approval of the new Criminal Code<sup>742</sup>.

363. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, the Commission takes note of the bill that seeks to criminalize various forms of violence against women, including violence based on their sexual orientation, gender identity or gender expression.<sup>743</sup> Nevertheless, it notes with concern the exclusion of discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity from the draft reform of the Criminal Code.<sup>744</sup>

364. With respect to Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the State trained security forces so that their operations would comply with international human rights standards. This training initiative included the Human Rights and Progressive Use of Force program for military personnel deployed in border areas.<sup>745</sup> In addition, the National Health Service (SNS) provided training in Haitian Creole to its personnel to improve communication and informed consent between doctors and patients.<sup>746</sup>

365. However, the Commission notes that challenges persist in relation to the link between racial discrimination and lethal violence by law enforcement authorities, which has resulted in 78 deaths, mostly of young Afro-descendants in situations of economic vulnerability. According to information provided by the civil society, this reportedly took place in the absence of an independent institutional mechanism to monitor law enforcement authorities.<sup>747</sup> In the case of Afro-descendants living in rural communities known as bateyes, in addition to violence, they face poverty and a restricted access to healthcare, education, electricity and drinking water.<sup>748</sup>

366. As for the situation of human rights defenders, civil society organizations have warned that they are increasingly becoming victims of threats, acts of intimidation, hate speech, stigmatization, cyberbullying and verbal and physical assault because of their work.<sup>749</sup> This situation was also reiterated during a public hearing held by the Commission in November, where reports indicated that defenders are frequently singled out as “possible agents who promote migration,” even “irregular” migration, and who, in many cases, are linked to criminal networks.<sup>750</sup> In this regard, in October, the Commission condemned the attack on the offices of Movimiento Socio-Cultural de Trabajo Humanitario y Ambiental (MOSCTHA), an organization that promotes the defense of the rights of migrants. According to reports submitted to the Commission, representatives of groups that support the new deportation policy promoted by the executive branch surrounded the offices, violently demanding that the staff receive them while shouting stigmatizing slogans against Haitians.<sup>751</sup>

367. As regards persons deprived of liberty, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights appreciates the creation, by means of Decree No. 186-24 issued in April, of a commission charged with monitoring the Prison Reform Plan. Among other tasks, said commission will cooperate with the authorities and monitor the operations of Las Parras Penitentiary, as well as the infrastructure improvement works at La Victoria National Penitentiary.<sup>752</sup> In terms of health, the Commission applauds the opening, in May, of a mental health pavilion for individuals detained in the Najayo Correction and Rehabilitation Center for Men, which will provide care to 40 people.<sup>753</sup> The Commission also welcomes the incorporation of 28 professionals in “in critical areas” as part of the agreements entered into with the National Health Service and the Ministry of Public Health.<sup>754</sup> As for social reinsertion, the Commission takes note of the signing, in August, of an agreement between the National Institute of Technical and Professional Education and the Regional Prison Academy to develop tools that encourage persons deprived of liberty to learn a trade and enter the labor market.<sup>755</sup> The Commission also highlights the inauguration of an industrial kitchen at the Najayo 17 center, in San Cristóbal, to provide cooking training to detainees<sup>756</sup>.

368. Notwithstanding this progress, the Commission expresses its concern over detention conditions at penitentiary units, which have reportedly led to the death of 13 people at La Victoria National Penitentiary on March 18 during a fire caused by an electrical failure.<sup>757</sup> Even though overcrowding decreased from 90.46 percent in 2020 to 58.17 percent in 2024, it remains a matter of concern. Faced with this situation, the State reported that it will create 10,650 vacancies at some penitentiaries to alleviate the current deficit of 9,891 vacancies and produce a surplus of 1,859 spots.<sup>758</sup> The information furnished by the State indicates that 62 percent of the persons deprived of liberty are under pretrial detention, which constitutes an overcrowding factor<sup>759</sup>.

369. Furthermore, at a public hearing held in February 2024, the Commission was informed that, in addition to overcrowding, detainees have no access to health and education services and face ill-treatment and torture. The Commission also learned that the prison system transformation process initiated by means of Law No. 113-21, which implemented a “single model,” has not seen any progress. This resulted in the coexistence of two management models, with over half of the detainees still under the traditional model. For its part, the State acknowledged current challenges, highlighted the measures taken to improve the situation of persons deprived of liberty and referred to joint coordination efforts with the judiciary<sup>760</sup>.

XIV. ECUADOR

- General considerations

370. In 2024, Ecuador made progress on an early warning protocol for indigenous peoples living in isolation, on various instruments to protect women against violence and on the rights of LGBTI persons, particularly on the prohibition of treatments aimed at modifying a person's gender identity.

371. In turn, various challenges to citizen security persisted due to its increasing militarization through repeated states of exception, which affected multiple human rights, including economic, social and cultural rights.

372. On October 17, 2024, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter<sup>761</sup>.

- Specific issues

373. With regard to democratic institutionality, the National Electoral Council scheduled general elections for 2025<sup>762</sup> and conducted activities to strengthen the electoral process, including workshops against misinformation and the establishment of an electoral security roundtable<sup>763</sup>.

374. Meanwhile, the Ministry of Labor imposed a 150-day suspension against Vice President Verónica Abad due to an alleged dereliction of duty without cause. Abad condemned the suspension as an attack against the Rule of Law, arguing that the Constitution prohibits administration measures against the Vice President. She also accused the executive of attempting to prevent her from assuming the role of acting president and denounced these actions as gender-based political violence<sup>764</sup>.

See also: El Mercurio, “Suspensión Verónica Abad es inconstitucional según especialistas,” November 12, 2024.

375. With respect to citizen security, the State reported that the National Police had implemented measures to increase the effectiveness of its actions against crime, and that it had also conducted workshops on violence against women, children and adolescents<sup>765</sup>.

376. However, organized crime remained a threat to both citizen security and democracy in Ecuador. The Commission issued a press release reporting a new wave of terrorist violence which began inside prisons between January 8 and 9. Riots broke out in at least six prisons, with at least 139 state agents taken hostage. Acts of violence and explosions were also reported outside prison facilities, including incidents near the residence of the President of the National Court of Justice. The Commission noted that the city of Guayaquil was particularly impacted, with at least eight persons killed and multiple others injured in violent acts. In addition, an armed group broke into the facilities of TC Televisión, a television station, during a live broadcast and threatened to kill its workers. The National Police swiftly intervened to safeguard the life and physical integrity of those under threat and captured those responsible<sup>766</sup>.

377. In response, the State declared at least 10 new states of emergency, continuing a practice it has adopted in recent years to address security issues<sup>767</sup>. For the first time, the suspension of guarantees was based on an alleged non-international armed conflict which, according to the executive branch, would trigger the application of international humanitarian law (IHL), among other considerations listed by the State in the information submitted for the preparation of this chapter<sup>768</sup>. In this regard, the Constitutional Court recalled that the existence of an armed conflict and the subsequent application of IHL could not be established by means of a government declaration<sup>769</sup>.

378. Regarding access to justice and judicial independence, the Public Prosecutor's Office revealed investigations concerning the infiltration of organized crime in the judiciary in Ecuador. Criminal structures have allegedly bribed judicial officers to obtain favorable decisions, illegitimate changes in court make-up, unjustified procedural delays and penitentiary benefits in favor of members of organized crime gangs.<sup>770</sup>

379. Furthermore, criminal organizations threatened judicial independence by resorting to violent acts against prosecutors, particularly those investigating corruption cases.<sup>771</sup> According to organizations, at least six judicial officers were murdered, five suffered assassination attempts and five judicial buildings were attacked.<sup>772</sup> These incidents included the murder of Prosecutor César Suárez from the National Specialized Unit for Investigation against Transnational Organized Crime, who was leading inquiries on the surge of violence in January 2024<sup>773</sup>.

380. In this context, human rights defenders reported challenges in conducting their work due to threats from organized crime and the recurrent states of exception. They raised concerns about the stigmatization of their activities; criminalization; legal proceedings aimed at curbing public participation, particularly through claims for moral damages; the lack of investigations into violent incidents and the absence of a specialized protection mechanism. Environmental defenders in the context of extractive activities in the territories of indigenous, peasant, Montubio and Afro-descendant communities faced heightened risks<sup>774</sup>.

381. With regard to the rights of indigenous peoples, the State adopted an early warning protocol for situations involving risks to the rights of indigenous peoples living in voluntary isolation.<sup>775</sup>

382. Cross-border indigenous peoples in Peru, Colombia and Ecuador warned that illegal activities, the presence of armed groups and the expansion of extractive industries threatened their survival.<sup>776</sup> This situation, combined with the persistent absence of free, prior and informed consultation processes on extractive projects in indigenous territories, sparked protests led by indigenous communities which, in turn, resulted in the arbitrary arrests and the criminalization of their leaders.<sup>777</sup>

383. With regard to the situation of Afro-descendant persons and policies against racial discrimination, social organizations reported recurrent cases of racial profiling and police violence, primarily affecting young Afro-descendants between the ages of 15 and 30. According to reports, the State's growing militarization has led to human rights violations and an increase in hate speech against Afro-descendants.<sup>778</sup> On December 8, the disappearance and subsequent murder of a child and three adolescents, all of whom were Afro-descendants, was reported following their detention during a military operation in Guayaquil. The Public Prosecutor's Office opened an investigation into their enforced disappearance.<sup>779</sup>

384. Furthermore, the communities that may be impacted by mining projects in the Las Pampas and Palo Quemado parishes, as well as in Las Naves canton, were excluded from the environmental consultation process. This includes mining projects such as La Plata S.A. in Cotopaxi and Curipamba-El Domo in Bolívar.<sup>780</sup> In this context, human rights defenders from these communities reported that they had been criminally prosecuted for opposing these projects and demanding prior consultations.<sup>781</sup>

385. With regard to the rights of women, the State established specialized courts for processing cases involving violence against women<sup>782</sup> and enacted the Law for Support, Assistance and Comprehensive and Transformative Reparations for Daughters, Sons, Mothers, Fathers and other Relatives of Victims of Femicide and other Deaths Caused by Gender-Based Violence.<sup>783</sup> In addition, the State informed that the executive branch had inaugurated four violet centers.<sup>784</sup> Moreover, Ecuador enacted the Organic Law on Wage Parity Between Women and Men and prepared a draft of its implementing regulations.<sup>785</sup>

386. However, the death of 453 women was recorded between January and November 2024, including 72 cases classified as femicides, most of which were committed by partners or former partners of women in the early hours of the morning.<sup>786</sup> Additionally, the civil society had documented 96 femicides as of September 2024. Twenty-three of these victims had previously reported being victims of violence.<sup>787</sup>

387. Moreover, the Commission notes the status of the investigation in the case of María Belén Bernal Otavalo, which is currently at the appeals stage according to information provided by the State in response to a request sent by the Commission regarding this case. The Commission also expresses its concern over a new incident of violence against women linked to state institutions. In this context, the femicide of deputy lieutenant Aidita Pamela Ati at the armed forces facilities in Orellana was reported. This new incident of violence related to state institutions has prompted an investigation against army officers, underscoring the urgent need to address gender-based violence within the armed forces and to strengthen prevention and accountability measures in these institutions.<sup>788</sup>

388. With regard to sexual and reproductive rights, the executive branch made progress in drafting the regulations of the organic law governing the voluntary termination of pregnancy for girls, adolescents and women in cases of rape. The Commission also notes the 2024 Clinical Practice Guide for Therapeutic Abortion Care and a proposal to expand the network of health facilities providing these services.<sup>789</sup> The civil society filed constitutional remedies against the criminalization of abortion<sup>790</sup> and denounced the

389. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, the Administrative Registry of Sex/Gender Variables was established with the aim of producing data and designing inclusive policies.<sup>792</sup> Additionally, the State set up the Interinstitutional Committee of the Diversity Action Plan.<sup>793</sup> The State added that awareness-raising workshops were held for public officials<sup>794</sup> and that it developed an interinstitutional manual on the care of persons deprived of liberty with a focus on sexual and gender diversity.<sup>795</sup> The Ministry of Health also updated its manual on assistance to sex- and gender-diverse persons.<sup>796</sup>

390. Furthermore, data from the 2024 census unveiled that 270,970 persons—that is, 2.43 percent of the population—identify as LGBTI. In this context, the reforms introduced to the Organic Law on Identity and Civil Data Management allowed persons over 18 years old to rectify their gender information in official documents.<sup>797</sup> In addition, the Organic Law on Mental Health prohibited treatments aimed at modifying gender identity.<sup>798</sup>

391. However, in the context of the security crisis, LGBTI activists reported that persons who display non-normative gender expressions are considered “suspicious” and exposed to arbitrary military controls.<sup>799</sup> It was further reported that LGBTI persons deprived of liberty suffer discrimination and violence.<sup>800</sup> According to the civil society, there is not much social support for laws that prevent discrimination against LGBTI persons and that allow this population to freely express their identity or show affection in public.<sup>801</sup>

392. With respect to the situation of persons in the context of human mobility, Decree No. 370 was approved, which grants amnesty to immigrants and provides for an extraordinary regularization process for Venezuelan nationals and their next of kin.<sup>802</sup> The process is available to those who have an expired migrant residence certificate and have not obtained a visa in previous regularization processes for temporary exceptional resident visas, and establishes special regulations for Venezuelan children and adolescents who have migrated on their own or are separated from their families. In addition, based on this decree, identity or travel documents that expired or were extended up to five years ago are considered valid for regularization purposes.<sup>803</sup>

On April 5, the National Police of Ecuador broke into the Embassy of Mexico, in the city of Quito, to arrest former Vice President of Ecuador Jorge Glas, who had been sheltered therein since December 2023. Hours before the raid, the State of Mexico had granted him diplomatic political asylum. In response, the IACHR called on the State to uphold its international obligations regarding asylum and diplomatic immunity<sup>804</sup>. It also continued monitoring the precautionary measure granted in favor of Jorge Glas, in effect since December 2019, including an observation visit in October 2024 to assess his detention conditions.

394. As regards the rights of children and adolescents, the State adopted the Policy for the Eradication of Sexual Violence in Educational Environments.<sup>805</sup> According to data submitted by the civil society, between January 2020 and June 2024, 2,827 cases of sexual violence were recorded within the educational system.<sup>806</sup> Moreover, the Creciendo con Nuestros Hijos (Growing Up with Our Children) program expanded its coverage from 21.8 percent to 27.6 percent of its target population. This program is aimed at children aged 0 to 36 months old and pregnant women living in poverty, extreme poverty and situations of vulnerability.

395. One of the challenges faced by the country is that, according to data from the National Institute of Statistics and Census, 19.3 percent of children under two years of age are chronically malnourished.<sup>807</sup> In addition, the context of violence in the country led to the temporary suspension of in-person schooling until March of 2024, which affected millions of students.<sup>808</sup> Moreover, the Office of the Ombudsperson recorded a high number of disappearances of children and adolescents, which amounted to 574 cases as of June 2024.<sup>809</sup>

396. Furthermore, members of the Assembly proposed lowering the age of criminal liability, thus enabling adolescents between the ages of 14 and 17 to be prosecuted and tried as adults in cases of felonies such as murder, kidnapping, extortion and drug trafficking. Under this reform, once adolescents have reached the age of majority, they will have to serve their sentences in adult detention centers.<sup>810</sup>

397. In relation to the rights of older persons, the State reported on campaigns aimed at ensuring compliance with the law and the protection of their human rights, with a focus on the exemption from property tax payments.<sup>811</sup> Additionally, the city of Quito joined the Global Network of Age-Friendly Cities and Communities.<sup>812</sup> According to the National Survey on Employment, Unemployment and Underemployment (Enemdu), approximately 8.7 percent of the total population over 65 years of age has been forced to continue working due to lack of access to social security. The International Labor Organization expressed its concern over the high percentage of older persons in Ecuador who live in a situation of economic insecurity, in addition to the fact that 82 percent of people between 65 and 75 years of age are employed in the informal sector.<sup>813</sup>

398. Regarding the situation of persons deprived of liberty, the Ecuadorian Mechanism to Combat Torture, together with others in the region, adopted the Declaration of San José aimed at institutional strengthening and networking, and the Global Action for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Deprived of Liberty<sup>814</sup>. Moreover, the State emphasized that issues related to persons deprived of liberty are addressed as a priority and highlighted the creation of working groups and the delivery of continuous training to security forces<sup>815</sup>. Additionally, it reported on the upcoming building of two new maximum security detention centers<sup>816</sup>.

399. In 2024, prison violence intensified after the escape of Adolfo Macías Villamar, which resulted in riots in at least six prisons.<sup>817</sup> As of March 7, 21 incarcerated individuals had died due to prison violence, and 111 inmates had escaped, of whom 35 were recaptured. Additionally, 211 state agents were taken hostage, all of whom were released shortly after<sup>818</sup>. In addition to these deaths, at least 15 persons died at the Litoral Penitentiary on November 12, 2024<sup>819</sup>.

400. To curb the crisis, under the states of emergency declared by the executive branch, the Armed Forces were authorized to support the Police in all centers of deprivation of liberty.<sup>820</sup> According to the State, once the prison emergency is over, penitentiaries will remain under the control of the Armed Forces, inasmuch as prisons have been declared “security areas.”<sup>821</sup> While these measures have allegedly led to a reduction in the number of deaths resulting from prison violence,<sup>822</sup> the Committee against Torture highlighted the lack of a comprehensive plan to address the systemic causes of the prison crisis and underscored the continued adoption of military measures, as well as various problems related to ill-treatment and possible acts of torture<sup>823</sup>.

401. With regard to food, during the first months of the state of emergency in prisons, the civil society documented cases in which food was denied or provided in poor condition, among other issues<sup>824</sup>. Also, in 2024, the provision of food was suspended for weeks due to the lack of payment to a former prison food supplier<sup>825</sup>. Although a new company was hired, problems in the coordination of food distribution have

402. Moreover, Ecuador recorded various acts of violence against officials of the National Service for Comprehensive Care for Adults Deprived of Liberty and Adolescent Offenders (SNAI). Namely, the director of the Guayas Prison No. 1, María Daniela Icaza Resabala, was murdered on September 12, 2024.<sup>827</sup> The directors of El Rodeo and Lago Agrio prisons, Damian Parrales and Alex Guervara, were also murdered on April 21 and September 3, 2024, respectively<sup>828</sup>.

403. Finally, as to human trafficking, the State created the Mechanism for the Detection and Referral of Cases of Human Trafficking for Labor Exploitation. The purpose of the mechanism is for labor inspectors and public officials to act in a comprehensive and coordinated manner when faced with potential cases of human trafficking for labor exploitation.<sup>829</sup> In addition to the above, the State reported that the Comprehensive Protection Service held workshops on the prevention and investigation of human trafficking<sup>830</sup>.

XV. EL SALVADOR

- General considerations

404. As it relates to the progress achieved, the Commission notes there has been a significant reduction in the homicide rate in the country. It also appreciates the adoption of various measures to strengthen the institutions that protect and guarantee the rights of women, including the creation of the Interinstitutional Care Commission and the amendment of the Law on the Creation of the Solidarity Fund for Microentrepreneur Families, aimed at promoting the economic independence of women. The Commission also welcomes the measures undertaken by the State to incorporate into its 2024 census an indicator for respondents to identify themselves as Afro-descendants.

405. As it relates to challenges, the Commission reiterates its concern over the 33 successive extensions of the state of emergency, which have kept constitutional rights and guarantees suspended since March 2022. In this context, concerns persist regarding allegations of mass, arbitrary and illegal detentions, as well as the conditions of detention experienced by persons deprived of liberty, especially in relation to complaints of torture, ill-treatment and deaths in custody, together with obstacles to access effective legal remedies. Moreover, questions were raised regarding the selection process of Supreme Court justices. The Commission also expresses alarm at child and adolescent pregnancy rates, the restrictions on access to comprehensive sexual education and the persistence of the criminalization of abortion on all grounds. Furthermore, the Commission underscores that serious human rights violations committed during the armed conflict are still unpunished and notes a lack of legislation on transitional justice.

406. On October 18, 2024, El Salvador submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter<sup>831</sup>.

- Specific issues

407. In terms of democratic institutionality, the Commission notes that, in February and March 2024, elections were held in El Salvador to vote for the new president and vice president, as well as for members of the Legislative Assembly, mayors, municipal councils and representatives of the Central American Parliament.<sup>832</sup> The electoral process was completed with no incidents. The OAS Electoral Observation Mission pointed out that these elections were held under unprecedented conditions, since they took place under a state of emergency and, for the first time since the 1983 Constitution has been in force, an incumbent President ran for the presidency for a second consecutive term.<sup>833</sup> It was also highlighted that the electoral reforms of 2023, which cut down on the number of legislative seats and changed the way in which those seats were allocated, resulted in a dramatic decrease in political pluralism in the Legislative Assembly.<sup>834</sup>

408. At a public hearing before the Commission, civil society organizations voiced their concern over the reelection of the president for a consecutive term because it contravenes an express prohibition set forth in the Constitution and pointed out that said reelection was possible thanks to a ruling issued after the dismissal and replacement of the judges of the Constitutional Chamber in 2021.<sup>835</sup> Moreover, civil society organizations reported a lack of institutional checks and balances, as well as a concentration of power in the hands of the executive branch. They further indicated that the Legislative Assembly is making an excessive use of the "waiver of procedure" to pass constitutional and legal reforms submitted by the executive branch, without prior discussion or broad citizen participation.<sup>836</sup> Civil society organizations were particularly concerned over the amendment of Article 248 of the Constitution,<sup>837</sup> which seeks to simplify the constitutional reform process. With this amendment, reforms would require the approval and ratification of a three-fourths majority of just one legislative chamber, in a context in which the ruling party is in control of the Legislative Assembly.<sup>838</sup> The Commission notes that this reform was approved in April 2024 and remains pending ratification by a second legislative chamber before it enters into force.<sup>839</sup>

409. Furthermore, in September 2024, the Legislative Assembly appointed seven people to positions in the Supreme Court of Justice of El Salvador, including the presidency of the Constitutional Chamber.<sup>840</sup> The Commission notes that the selection process was questioned by civil society organizations due to the lack of transparency in the submission of candidate profiles, the absence of clear criteria of eligibility and professional merit for their evaluation, the reduction of spaces for citizen participation and the lack of gender parity among the appointees.<sup>841</sup> The Commission is also closely monitoring the selection process of the Attorney General of the Republic, which began in October 2024 and was scheduled to conclude before January 5, 2025.<sup>842</sup> According to information provided by the press, the Legislative Assembly received only two nominations for said position.<sup>843</sup>

410. With regard to human rights institutions, the State reported on various measures undertaken in relation to child protection, care, food security and health policies, as well as on the follow-up of compliance with international obligations stemming from several United Nations treaty bodies and special procedures.<sup>844</sup> The Commission notes that, according to the draft budget for 2025, the Office of the Prosecutor for the Defense of Human Rights of El Salvador will have its funds cut by just over 2 million dollars compared to its budget in 2024. This will therefore be the lowest budget allocated to this institution since 2020 and will entail a downsizing of 56 staff members.<sup>845</sup>

411. In relation to citizen security and access to justice, the Commission has closely followed up on the security measures implemented by El Salvador in the context of the state of emergency in force. The State reported that, since the declaration of the state of emergency up to September 2024, 700 days had elapsed without any homicides being committed.<sup>846</sup> It also highlighted the creation of Urban Centers for Wellbeing and Opportunities (CUBOs) to train and educate young people in areas previously controlled by gangs, as well as the implementation of the Territorial Activation program, under which it provides access to the services of 15 state institutions to communities affected by gang violence.<sup>847</sup> By the end of 2024, El Salvador had extended the state of emergency 33 consecutive times,<sup>848</sup> despite repeated calls by the Commission to put an end to this regime.<sup>849</sup> In this regard, in its report State of Emergency and Human Rights in El Salvador, released in 2024, the Commission held that, according to the information provided by the State on the improvement in crime rates, there was no emergency situation that justified the continuation of the suspension of rights and guarantees.

412. In 2024, the Commission continued to receive information about human rights violations related to citizen security operations against people allegedly linked to gangs in the context of the state of emergency. From the beginning of the state of emergency through June 2024, civil society organizations documented a total of 6,426 complaints of human rights violations, out of which 245 were recorded in the first half of 2024.<sup>850</sup> Among the main violations reported, there are allegations of arbitrary detentions, violations of due process of law, house raids, cruel or inhumane treatment, threats, forced disappearances and harassment. In addition, civil society organizations documented complaints of sexual harassment, sexual abuse, rape and discrimination based on the sexual orientation and identity of the victims. As for the perpetrators of these acts, civil society organizations noted that at least 75 percent of cases had been committed by agents of the National Civil Police.<sup>851</sup>

413. In addition to the foregoing, the Commission received information regarding obstacles to access effective legal remedies for human rights violations in the context of the state of emergency. At a public hearing before the Commission, civil society organizations reported that the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice was massively and systematically rejecting habeas corpus by requiring excessive formalities and going against its own case law without due motivation for a change of criteria.<sup>852</sup> They further pointed out that, in cases of extreme gravity, such as possible forced disappearances or situations involving a risk to life and integrity, instead of offering immediate protection, the Constitutional Chamber often requests detailed information and sets overly short deadlines for submission thereof.<sup>853</sup> In relation to the above, the Commission notes that, according to information in the public domain, the Institute of Forensic Medicine has been repeatedly denied access to prisons to conduct medical inspections, despite existing court orders to that effect.<sup>854</sup>

414. With respect to persons deprived of liberty, the Commission continued to closely monitor the situation of this population in the context of the state of emergency. According to official information, as of October 18, 2024, 82,963 detentions had been recorded under the state of emergency.<sup>855</sup> This means that, over the first ten months of 2024, approximately 7,800 arrests were made, given that the number of detentions documented by the end of 2023 was 75,163.<sup>856</sup> At a public hearing before the Commission, civil society organizations expressed their concern over the absence of a policy to reinsert persons deprived of liberty into society under the state of emergency and reported cuts in resources for reparation policies for victims of violence and crime.<sup>857</sup>

415. The Commission warns that the deplorable conditions of detention in Salvadoran prisons have worsened, which has created serious risks to the lives and integrity of those imprisoned. According to civil society organizations, these conditions have caused the death of at least 349 persons up to the first half of December 2024;<sup>858</sup> out of these people, 136 died while under state custody during 2024, since deaths recorded in December 2023 amounted to 213.<sup>859</sup> Available information indicates that detention conditions are mostly marked by overcrowding; lack of access to essential services; unsanitary conditions; negligent medical care; insufficient access to water, food and medicine; and ill-treatment.<sup>860</sup> Regarding ill-treatment, information points to a systematic use of torture and other types of ill-treatment against persons deprived of liberty in prisons in El Salvador, including physical and verbal abuse, overuse of pepper spray and restricted access to food, water and toilets, among others.<sup>861</sup> In addition, various forms of sexual violence against women detainees were documented, perpetrated both by guards and other persons deprived of liberty.<sup>862</sup>

416. Furthermore, there were cases in which the State reportedly did not provide information to the families about the situation of their detained relatives. According to communications received by the Commission, the families only learned of the deprivation of liberty of their next of kin and not necessarily by means of a notification from the State. In some cases, after learning about the detention, families allegedly lost contact with their relatives and are still unaware of their current situation.<sup>863</sup> In this scenario, according to testimonies received by the Commission, family members have been forced to travel to different penitentiaries to find out the whereabouts of their detained relatives.<sup>864</sup>

417. With regard to human rights defenders, the Commission received information about the case of Rosa Elvira Flores Martínez, a human rights defender and the leader of the Salvadoran Women's Movement (MSM), who disappeared on March 19 and was later found dead with signs of violence in Cantón Los Lagartos, municipality of San Julián, department of Sonsonate.<sup>865</sup> In addition, Verónica Delgado, mother of a disappeared person and member of the Disappeared Persons Search Group, was arrested on March 11 on charges of conspiracy. She was detained under the state of emergency in force in El Salvador.<sup>866</sup> The Commission later learned of her release after having been detained for 24 days.<sup>867</sup>

418. With respect to the rights of children and adolescents, the Commission notes with concern that, between March 2022 and December 2023, over 3,000 children and adolescents were reportedly detained under the state of emergency, out of whom 841 remained in detention as of January 2024.<sup>868</sup> According to a civil society report, a significant number of these children and adolescents had no links to gang activities. The children and adolescents in detention were allegedly victims of torture and/or other forms of ill-treatment and were subjected to inhumane and unsanitary conditions. They also suffered lack of food and health care and lost contact with their families.<sup>869</sup> Moreover, the Commission learned of a request made by civil society organizations to investigate the National Council for Early Childhood, Children and Adolescent (CONAPINA) for their alleged failure to respond to the deaths of children and adolescents in prisons.<sup>870</sup>

419. In relation to the rights of women, the Commission acknowledges the sustained efforts of the Salvadoran Women's Development Institute (ISDEMU) to mainstream a perspective of equality, nondiscrimination and a life free of violence for women into public institutions by means of training, awareness-raising and specialized counseling.<sup>871</sup> However, the Commission notes with concern the reform of the ISDEMU Law, which brought down from two to one the number of seats for civil society representatives in the Board of Directors,<sup>872</sup> as well as the elimination of the Women's Parliamentary Group<sup>873</sup> and the Women and Gender Equality Commission in the Legislative Assembly —now reshaped into the Children and Social Integration Commission—, which was exclusively dedicated to the study of legislative initiatives related to the rights of women.<sup>874</sup>

420. Moreover, the Commission appreciates the measures adopted to promote gender equality in the economic sphere, such as the amendment to the Law on the Creation of the Solidarity Fund for Microentrepreneur Families, which seeks to promote women's economic independence and bridge the gender digital divide,<sup>875</sup> and the creation of the Interinstitutional Care Commission, aimed at implementing the National Policy on Shared Responsibility over Caregiving.<sup>876</sup> However, the Commission also warns that women continue to suffer economic and social hardships in the context of the state of emergency, both due to arrests<sup>877</sup> and to the eviction of street vendors from public spaces, which has a differentiated impact on women whose livelihoods depend on such work.<sup>878</sup>

421. As regards gender-based violence against women, the Commission reiterates its concern over the confidentiality of statistics related to femicides, disappeared persons and shelters.<sup>879</sup> According to available official information, there has been a 15 percent increase in the number of complaints of gender-based violence between June 2023 and May 2024 compared to the previous year.<sup>880</sup> Thus, for the most recent period available, data shows there were 130 femicides, 8,984 cases of sexual violence —out of which 3,018 were rapes—, 2,664 cases of physical violence, 7,909 cases of psychological violence and 1,263 cases of financial violence.<sup>881</sup> Moreover, based on data from the civil society for the January–November 2024 period, 36 femicides were recorded, 17 of which were committed by partners or former partners of the victims.<sup>882</sup> The Commission is also alarmed at the widespread accusations of harassment and sexual violence against women, girls and adolescents involving security forces in the framework of the state of emergency,<sup>883</sup> as well as at the attacks and threats against human rights defenders and journalists in both physical and digital spaces.<sup>884</sup>

422. Moreover, the Commission notes that during the first half of the year, 4,024 girls and adolescents between the ages of 10 and 19 were pregnant.<sup>885</sup> Therefore, it is of concern that the Ministry of Education ordered to ban the so-called gender ideology<sup>886</sup> in educational institutions without explaining its scope of application, thus restricting access to comprehensive sexual education<sup>887</sup> and, in turn, hindering the implementation of the National Intersectoral Strategy for the Prevention of Pregnancy in Girls and Adolescents (ENIPENA).<sup>888</sup> Furthermore, although the Commission welcomes the release of a woman who suffered an abortion as a result of an obstetric emergency,<sup>889</sup> it regrets that another young woman under similar circumstances was criminally prosecuted and that the State continues to criminalize abortion on all grounds.<sup>890</sup> It also takes note of a report concerning the detention of a human rights defender with a high-risk pregnancy who was allegedly denied prenatal care and whose daughter died while her mother was under custody.<sup>891</sup>

423. In relation to the rights of LGBTI persons, different challenges have been reported. As of July 30, 2024, at least 137 LGBTI persons had been victims of human rights violations during the state of emergency, according to information from various civil society organizations.<sup>892</sup> Press reports also indicate that, in penitentiaries, the LGBTI population faces ill-treatment, punishments aimed at “correcting” their sexual orientation and gender identity, and various forms of torture.<sup>893</sup> Trans women have been forced to modify their female gender expression, including by having their hair cut and by providing them with male clothing. <sup>886</sup> The IACHR finds it troubling that the gender perspective is pejoratively referred to as “gender ideology.” In this regard, it has clarified that the gender perspective is not a “theory,” let alone an “ideology,” but rather a method of analysis of reality that sheds light on how differently people are socially valued based on the gender assigned to or assumed by them; it evidences the unequal power relations stemming from these differences. Therefore, it constitutes a key tool for combating discrimination and violence against women and against persons with diverse sexual orientations and gender identities. addition, they are placed in cells with men, which exposes them to sexual and physical violence by other persons deprived of liberty.<sup>894</sup>

424. These challenges are part of a series of institutional setbacks in relation to the rights of the LGBTI population. The Commission notes that the executive branch has expressed its intention to ban the teaching of “gender ideology” in educational institutions<sup>895</sup>. The IACHR has observed that, in the region, these types of measures that derogatorily qualify the gender perspective as an ideology are used to justify limitations to the rights of women and LGBTI persons.<sup>896</sup> In line with this, in February 2024, the Ministry of Health eliminated a protocol against discrimination towards persons with HIV, along with educational materials targeted at the LGBTI population.<sup>897</sup> Subsequently, in June, the Ministry of Culture dismissed 300 workers following the staging of a play featuring drag queens, on the grounds that it was incompatible with government policies.<sup>898</sup>

425. On the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the Commission notes that, for the 2024 census, a section was included in the census questionnaire for persons to identify themselves as Afro-descendants.<sup>899</sup> This is a step forward and has resulted in an increase in the number of persons who identify themselves as Afro-descendants in the country, compared to the data from the 2007 census.<sup>900</sup>

426. As to the rights of indigenous peoples, the State reported on the celebration of anniversaries and other cultural initiatives in favor of indigenous peoples. The Commission notes that, thanks to a civil society initiative, the Observatory of Violence against Indigenous Women was created, which is run by indigenous women leaders to make cases of violence more visible and evident. According to a survey carried out by the observatory, 47 percent of the indigenous women surveyed had become pregnant for the first time before the age of 18.<sup>901</sup>

427. On the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission notes the launch of the scheme of prevention of irregular migration within the framework of the Coordination Mechanism on Human Mobility. This is aimed at coordinating efforts to strengthen programs that promote access to job opportunities, entrepreneurship and academic and skill development projects to help persons who might otherwise migrate to other countries.<sup>902</sup>

Committee of Relatives of Deceased and Disappeared Migrants of El Salvador (COFAMIDE) unveils that, although several sources agree that economic needs are the main reason why Salvadorans emigrate, different types of violence also contribute greatly to human mobility, which includes, for example, forced internal displacement.<sup>903</sup> The report further points out that Salvadoran nationals face difficulties in accessing updated and verifiable data on human mobility from the State. This restricts the possible drafting and implementation of an adequate public policy in this area,<sup>904</sup> and makes it difficult to assess the phenomenon based on information from official sources and conduct an analysis of its multiple causes and intersectional implications.<sup>905</sup>

429. Regarding returnees, according to IOM figures, between January and August 2024, a total of 10,326 people were returned to the country. Out of these, 70.7 percent are men and 29.3 percent are women.<sup>906</sup> Although civil society organizations observe a decrease in the number of returnees to El Salvador when comparing return records to detention records, since mid-2021, the records of the General Directorate on Migration and Immigration (DGME) on returned migrants cannot be accessed, nor can the statistics on the responses to the forms that returnees must fill when they return to El Salvador.<sup>907</sup>

430. In terms of internal displacement, human rights organizations indicate that, from the beginning of the state of emergency until March 15, 2024, 669 displaced persons were recorded, that is, an average of 28 victims per month. They highlight that this trend would have continued in 2024. Moreover, they voice their concern over the attention given by the State to this phenomenon, inasmuch as the Attorney General's Office has only reported 35 victims.<sup>908</sup>

431. The Internal Displacement Monitoring Center (IDMC) notes that obtaining data for countries affected by criminal and other forms of violence in Central America continues to be a challenge. The only country where survey data shows an annual picture of internal displacement is El Salvador, where around 66,000 movements were reported this year, the lowest figure since 2014 when data first became available. Survey data also pointed to the fact that around 49,000 people were living in displacement as a result of conflict and violence at the end of 2023. In addition, 5,300 disaster-related displacements were reported in that same year.<sup>909</sup>

432. With respect to older persons, the Commission has assessed information in the public domain and thus observed concerning situations related to the right to community participation, social security and nondiscrimination. The Commission welcomes the implementation of the Activando Abuelos (Activating grandparents) program, led by the National Directorate of Integration, under which paid internships are offered to people over 60 years of age to promote the directorate's projects.<sup>910</sup> In relation to the right to social security, the Commission has accessed information from the Central Reserve Bank (BCR) that warns of an increase in state debt owed to private pension funds, which amounts to over 737 million US dollars, according to the Social Security Institute of El Salvador (ISP). Moreover, news outlets indicate that 80 percent of older persons cannot afford to retire.<sup>911</sup>

433. As to the processes of memory, truth, and justice, the State reported that it has strengthened the Unit for the Investigation of Crimes Committed During the Armed Conflict, under the Attorney General's Office, which has led to the arrest of senior military commanders in cases such as the El Calabozo Massacre, the Dutch Journalists and the Massacre at the Central American University José Simeón Cañas.<sup>912</sup> In this regard, the Commission notes that, in August 2024, a Salvadoran court ordered the initiation of a trial against five members of the armed forces for the murders of four Dutch journalists during the armed conflict in the country.<sup>913</sup> However, civil society organizations recalled that no person has ever been tried or punished for the serious human rights violations and international crimes committed during the armed conflict in El Salvador, which means that these acts remain in total impunity.<sup>914</sup>

434. Furthermore, civil society organizations reiterated that the Legislative Assembly continues to fail to comply with the 2016 Supreme Court ruling that ordered it to pass legislation on transitional justice.<sup>915</sup> The Commission notes that the Bill on Transitional Justice submitted with the input of civil society organizations was shelved by the Legislative Assembly in May 2024.<sup>916</sup> It also notes that the civil society submitted a draft bill for the third time, which is still pending discussion.<sup>917</sup>

435. Regarding the search for disappeared persons, the State reported that the Search Commissions have achieved 53 reunions, performed 27 exhumations, retrieved 43 skeletal remains and taken 450 biological samples. In addition, it pointed out that progress is being made in the creation of a registry of disappeared persons.<sup>918</sup> Nevertheless, civil society organizations claimed that between 6,000 and 8,000 adults and nearly 2,000 children and adolescents are still disappeared as a result of the armed conflict. These organizations indicated that the fact that the two specialized search institutions depend on the executive branch restricts their work, inasmuch as it limits their financial autonomy and technical independence.<sup>919</sup>

XVI. GRENADA

- General considerations

436. As it relates to progress, the IACHR welcomes the ruling of the Supreme Court of Grenada which declared the sentence of corporal punishment by flogging or whipping as unconstitutional. Further, the Commission takes note of the reduction in the backlog of criminal cases in the court system.

437. With respect to challenges, the Commission notes with concern the State's lack of progress in establishing a national human rights institution for the promotion and protection of human rights, the high prison occupancy rates and the retention of laws which criminalize same-sex relationships between consenting adults.

438. The State did not respond to the request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

439. In relation to democratic institutionality, according to official information, the Parliamentary Elections Office, which manages the voter registration and election process in the State, is procuring a new voter registration system and planned to inform the public about the proposed upgrades through a series of consultations held from May to June.<sup>920</sup> However, the IACHR notes that the public consultations were suspended in June without explanation by the Parliamentary Elections Office.<sup>921</sup>

440. With respect to human rights institutionality, the IACHR again notes the absence of a centralized national human rights institution and reiterates the importance of establishing such at the national level for the promotion and protection of human rights in line with the Paris Principles.<sup>922</sup>

441. Regarding citizen security, the State amended the Firearm Act to increase the penalties for firearm-related offences, such as longer custodial sentences and higher fines, and provided for a gun amnesty from May 1 to July 30.<sup>923</sup> According to public information, six firearms and 339 rounds of ammunition were recovered during that 90-day amnesty.<sup>924</sup>

442. With respect to access to justice, according to public information, the backlog in the number of criminal cases in the High Court was reduced from 179 cases in April 2020 to 79 cases in April 2024, due to streamlining of court proceedings and addressing of pending cases in the justice system.<sup>925</sup> This represents an approximately 56% decreased in the backlog of cases from 2020 to 2024.<sup>926</sup>

443. In terms of the rights of LGBTI persons, the Commission highlights the persistence of laws which criminalize same-sex relationships between consenting adults. In this context, the Commission reiterates its call for the repeal of laws directed at criminalizing same-sex sexual relationships between consenting adults and to adopt an anti-discrimination legal framework which prohibits discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, gender identity or expression – real or perceived – and body diversity.

444. As for persons deprived of liberty, in December, the Commission welcomed the ruling issued by the Supreme Court of Grenada, which declared the sentence of corporal punishment by flogging or whipping as unconstitutional. The IACHR noted that the Supreme Court recognized the right of all persons to receive humane treatment with unrestricted respect for their inherent dignity and fundamental rights, specifically their right to life and personal integrity.<sup>927</sup> On the other hand, the Commission observes with concern that, as of September, the State had a prison occupancy rate of 194.4%.<sup>928</sup>

445. In relation to the death penalty, the IACHR observes that Grenada maintains a de facto moratorium since the last execution that was carried out in 1978.<sup>929</sup> The Commission reiterates its concern about the sole prisoner under the sentence of death and urges the State to abolish the death penalty as a punishment.<sup>930</sup>

XVII. GUATEMALA

- General considerations

446. Concerning the progress made, the Commission understands the inauguration of the authorities elected as president and vice president of the Republic as a triumph for democracy, as it respects the will of the Guatemalan people freely expressed in the polls. The Commission also underscores the new administration's acceptance of international monitoring, the invitation made to the Commission to conduct an in loco visit in July and the commitment undertaken by senior officials to guarantee the human rights of the population, apply public policies in this regard and follow up on the recommendations made by the Commission and other international mechanisms for the protection of human rights. The Commission welcomes the strengthening of the role of the National Coordinator for the Prevention of Domestic Violence and Violence against Women (CONAPREVI) and the measures taken to improve the response, investigation and prosecution of acts of violence against women, including the creation of a social protection model for women who are victims of violence.

447. As for the challenges ahead, the Commission notes the persistent use of the judicial system to criminalize human rights defenders, reporters, justice operators, the President of the Republic and, in general, anyone who is involved in the fight against impunity and corruption. The reported meddling in the selection process of the members of the Supreme Court of Justice, courts of appeals and other courts of the same hierarchy, as well as alleged violations of international human rights standards, are also areas of special concern.

448. The State of Guatemala submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter on October 22, 2024.<sup>931</sup> On December 19, 2024, the Guatemalan Prosecutor for Human Rights (PDH) submitted information for the preparation of this chapter<sup>932</sup>.

- Specific issues

rights “to overcome the current crises.”<sup>936</sup> In this regard, it resumed relations with international human rights agencies and promoted visits by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the OHCHR, which took place in 2024.<sup>937</sup> In this context, the PDH informed the Commission about the challenges faced in the implementation of the 2024-2028 General Government Policy (PGG) by the executive branch, such as corruption and institutional weakness, limited capacities of local governments and social inequalities.<sup>938</sup>

451. On January 15, 2024, the Commission recognized Bernardo Arévalo as President of the Republic for the 2024-2028 period as a victory for democracy and proof of the resilience of the Guatemalan people in their fight for the upholding of the Rule of Law. The Commission also expressed its willingness to provide the technical cooperation required to support and overcome the serious violations of human rights observed in the country, in particular those related to the decline in democratic institutionalality and judicial independence, and the rise of impunity. These issues resulted in the inclusion of Guatemala in Chapter IV.B of the annual reports prepared by the Commission between 2021 and 2023.<sup>939</sup> Finally, at the invitation of the State of Guatemala, between July 22 and 26, 2024, the Commission made an in loco visit to observe the impact caused by the decline in democratic institutionalality and judicial independence since the last visit conducted in 2017.<sup>940</sup>

452. As for human rights institutions, the State of Guatemala explained that it is facing historic challenges due to deeply rooted social inequalities, structural violence and historic discrimination against some groups of the population.<sup>941</sup> The State highlighted that the new administration undertook a commitment to respecting and guaranteeing human rights. Therefore, it will prioritize the application of public policies that not only ensure access to rights such as health, education and security, but that also promote inclusion and engagement by women, indigenous communities, young people and persons with disabilities.<sup>942</sup> As part of such commitment, the State underscored the reinforcement of the PDH and the Presidential Commission for Peace and Human Rights (COPADEH) and its willingness to collaborate with international human rights protection mechanisms. With regard to the work performed by COPADEH, the State shared abundant information on the measures taken to follow up on judgments issued by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the recommendations made by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights through its different mechanisms.<sup>943</sup>

453. Concerning citizen security, the State reported on the work carried out by the Ministry of the Interior (MIGOB) and the National Civil Police (PNC) to reduce crime rates and restore citizens’ trust in security institutions.<sup>944</sup> In particular, as part of its 2024-2032 Institutional Strategic Plan, the MIGOB will be in charge of implementing the following public policies: Prison Reform, Open Data, Prevention and Fight against Customs Fraud and Smuggling, Prevention of Violence and Crime, Citizen Security and Peaceful Coexistence, and Fight against Sexual Violence in Guatemala (2019-2029).<sup>945</sup> Moreover, the 2021-2028 Institutional Strategic Plan guides the actions of the PNC.<sup>946</sup> Finally, the State explained that it had implemented more rigorous control mechanisms in border areas to fight organized crime and protect its sovereignty. In this regard, the State provided information on the results of the work performed by the Tax Administration Superintendency (SAT) in partnership with the PNC and the Guatemalan army, such as seizures and raids.<sup>947</sup>

454. According to public information furnished by the PDH, in 2024, there was a slight decrease in the rate of homicides compared to that of 2023, going from 24.8 to 24.0 homicides every 100,000 people. However, there has been an increase in other crimes, such as extortion, with a 44.6-percent increase in complaints received by the Public Prosecutor's Office (from 13,468 cases in 2020 to 19,469 cases in 2024). Data from the PNC, however, shows that this increase was even higher, reaching 76.8 percent (from 13,031 cases in 2020 to 23,042 in 2024).<sup>948</sup>

455. Concerning the judicial independence and justice operators, the State pointed out that the co-optation of the judicial system in Guatemala remains a critical challenge.<sup>949</sup> In particular, the State explained that "the influence of power groups on institutions, such as the Public Prosecutor's Office and courts of justice, as well as attacks against independent justice operators, have undermined trust in the judicial system."<sup>950</sup> The State added that, despite the efforts made by the executive branch to promote a policy of respect towards human rights, this co-optation has weakened the capacity of the justice system to administer impartial justice, which seriously affects institutionalism and democracy.<sup>951</sup> As explained to the Commission, an important group of justice operators, human rights defenders, reporters and persons who collaborate in the fight against corruption and who are still criminalized, remain in exile.<sup>952</sup> In this regard, the State pointed to the "need to assess the possibility of establishing a case review mechanism and a process to remove cases from the judicial process in circumstances of clear criminalization and use of criminal prosecution as a tool for political persecution."<sup>953</sup> Finally, according to the State, the recent selection process of high court members clearly showed the need to move forward with reforms that ensure a judicial system that is free from external influence and that allows justice operators to act impartially and pursuant to the principles of justice and equity.<sup>954</sup>

456. The Commission followed up on the selection process of justices for the Supreme Court of Justice and judges sitting at courts of appeals for the 2024-2029 tenure. Said process concluded in October 2024.<sup>955</sup> The Commission learned about the number of challenges involved, including the application of deficient evaluation mechanisms and the absence of an ethical evaluation of candidates by the nominating commissions, the National Congress' lack of publicity and transparency in showcasing candidates and the alleged influence exerted by the Public Prosecutor's Office in such process through the use of the criminal law system.<sup>956</sup>

457. As for human rights defenders, the State informed that it resumed the design of a public protection policy for human rights defenders, with the technical support of the OHCHR in Guatemala. The State reported that it held working sessions with victims' representatives to update such policy and that it has held meetings with several state institutions and civil society organizations.<sup>957</sup>

458. Moreover, the PDH underscored the resumption of activities by the Unit for the Analysis of Attacks against the Right of Persons, Organizations, Communities and Authorities of Native Peoples to Defend Human Rights, by means of a Ministerial Agreement dated August 29, 2024, in compliance with the recommendations made by such entity to the MIGOB.<sup>958</sup> The PDH added that in 2024, it followed up on the implementation of the public protection policy for human rights defenders.<sup>959</sup>

459. Concerning criminal prosecution against defenders, the State informed that, by means of General Order No. 08-2022, the General Director of the Civil Police set out the structure and duties of two departments within the Criminal Investigation Special Unit (DECI), whose purpose is to conduct criminal investigations, as well as document, advise and inform on criminal acts against the life and integrity of defenders.<sup>960</sup> Moreover, the Public Prosecutor's Office reported that between January and August 2024, it received a total of 75 complaints on crimes committed against human rights defenders.<sup>961</sup>

460. In addition, the Commission learned about the assassination of Felipe Xo Quib, a fisherman and community leader who founded the Union of Artisanal Fishermen of El Estor, Izabal.<sup>962</sup> The Commission also condemned the murder of human rights defender José Alberto Domingo Montejo, committed on June 5 in the department of Escuintla, after an attack in which members of the Peasant Union Committee (CUC) Marcelo Yaxón Pablo and Gustavo Yaxón were also injured.<sup>963</sup> The Commission later granted precautionary measures in favor of Marcelo and Gustavo Yaxón as it considered they were facing serious risk and needed urgent protection.<sup>964</sup>

461. With respect to the criminalization of defenders, in the context of the public hearing "Guatemala: Forced Internal Displacements of Indigenous and Peasant Communities" held during the 190th period of sessions of the Commission, civil society organizations informed the Commission about the existence of a substantial number of arrest warrants issued against several indigenous persons and peasants. According to the information received, at least 115 arrest warrants have been issued against several Guatemalan communities, mostly located in the departments of Alta Verapaz, Baja Verapaz, Izabal and Suchitepéquez. Furthermore, in 2023, the Peasant Committee of the Altiplano (CCDA), in the district of Alta Verapaz, reported that there were 1,080 judicial accusations primarily based on usurpation claims, as well as pending warrants

462. In connection with memory, truth and justice, the State of Guatemala pointed to the proposal for a National Plan for Dignification and Reparations, whose purpose is to acknowledge and redress victims of the armed conflict (1960-1996), as well as a Policy for Democratic Memory, intended to preserve historical truth.<sup>966</sup> The State added that the Presidential Commission for Peace and Human Rights has engaged in dialogue to address the situation of disappeared persons, including the preparation of a national search plan and the creation of a National Register of Disappeared Persons.<sup>967</sup>

463. As for the challenges ahead, the Commission has received complaints against the abuse of legal remedies to hinder the investigation of human rights violations and international crimes committed during the armed conflict.<sup>968</sup> In November, the Commission expressed its concern about the decision adopted by the Second Chamber of High Risk Appeals whereby it declared that the High Risk Court did not have jurisdiction over the Creompaz case, released defendants and annulled all procedural acts in the case, which was related to the forced disappearance of 558 people, after an appeal filed by a military involved in the case.<sup>969</sup> The Commission also learned about the suspension of the final trial stage of the Genocidio Ixil case based on a request for disqualification filed by the former chief of staff of the army, who was prosecuted for genocide and forced disappearance.<sup>970</sup> Claims that the Human Rights Prosecutor's Office is being dismantled are also an area of concern, after the dismissal of prosecutor Erick de León, who was in charge of the Genocidio Ixil case investigation,<sup>971</sup> as well as claims that prosecutor assistants from the Unit Investigating Internal Armed Conflict Cases are being transferred.<sup>972</sup>

464. Concerning the human rights of women, the Commission welcomes the public apologies made by the State to the families of Claudina Isabel Velásquez Paiz and María Isabel Véliz Franco for the human rights violations committed against them through acts of gender-based violence, which resulted in a judgment by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.<sup>973</sup> In this context, the Commission appreciates the efforts made by the State to prevent and combat gender-based violence and to improve judicial response in these cases.

465. In particular, the Commission applauds the resumption of activities by CONAPREVI, by means of Government Agreement No. 257-2023, which required relevant entities to earmark budget resources for the deployment of the 2020-2029 National Plan to Eradicate Violence against Women (Planovi 2020-2029).<sup>974</sup> In this regard, as part of the measures taken to improve the response to, investigation and punishment of violence, the Commission highlights the creation of a social protection model for women who are victims of violence;<sup>975</sup> the establishment of an Interinstitutional Commission against Sexual Violence (CIVS), which will make decisions to foster prevention, comprehensive support, justice and reparation for victims;<sup>976</sup> and the reforms of the Alba-Keneth Alert System Law and the Law for the Immediate Search of Disappeared Women intended to promote coordinated efforts to disseminate information through mobile telephone operators.<sup>977</sup> The Commission also appreciates the creation and reinforcement of Gender Units in the public administration.<sup>978</sup>

466. Conversely, the figures on violence against women in 2024 are alarming. According to official records, between January and August 2024, 34,121 complaints were filed for acts of violence against women, 157 femicide complaints and 56 complaints against gender-based crimes committed by the PCN.<sup>979</sup> Furthermore, the National Institute of Forensic Sciences recorded 6,184 forensic examinations for sexual violence from January to November 2024.<sup>980</sup> In terms of access to justice, official records show that between January and August 2024, 3,549 persons were convicted for acts of violence against women while 55 were convicted for femicide.<sup>981</sup>

467. The Commission notes with concern the high number of pregnancies among girls and adolescents. According to data from the Observatory on Reproductive Health, between January and October 2024, 46,557 pregnancies were recorded in adolescents from 15 to 19 years old and 1,650 in girls between 10 and 14 years old.<sup>982</sup> In addition, the Commission warns against the disproportionate impact of abortion criminalization, such as exposure to criminal prosecution and forced pregnancies,<sup>983</sup> obstacles in the access to therapeutic abortion—the only type of abortion authorized under the current legal framework<sup>984</sup>—even in pregnancies of girls under 14 years of age, which are considered of high risk given their nature<sup>985</sup> and the public scorn to which women detained and accused of having had an abortion are subjected.<sup>986</sup>

468. Concerning the rights of LGBTI persons, the Public Criminal Defense Institute of Guatemala informed that it has an area specialized in providing assistance to LGBTI persons, which is made up of personnel with expertise in the defense of crime victims. In addition, the Institute's roadmap focuses on removing stereotypes, ensuring dignified treatment and respecting gender identity and the pronouns of those it supports. It has also moved forward with the implementation of a protocol to support the LGBTI community, created in 2020, which provides guidelines for public defenders to provide a dignified service, free from discrimination.<sup>987</sup>

469. Despite these efforts, the State faces challenges in terms of violence. Until mid-2024, at least 19 LGBTI persons were victims of acts of violence, with high levels of cruelty, mainly against gay men, bisexual persons and trans women.<sup>988</sup> This couples with the resolution issued by the Constitutional Court, dated June 28, 2024, which ordered the observance of “good customs” in the 2024 LGBTI Pride parade after a petition had been filed in an attempt to prevent the parade from taking place in public spaces in the city of Guatemala, which could restrict the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly of the LGBTI community.<sup>989</sup> Additionally, in September 2024, a group of deputies proposed to remove references to gender identity and sexual orientation from school books to purportedly defend traditional values.<sup>990</sup> While the Ministry of Education denied the existence of such content in schools, these initiatives might limit the right of students to an integral education that respects diversity.<sup>991</sup>

470. With regard to the situation of the Afro-descendants and indigenous peoples, the State referred to the efforts made to protect and promote the social and economic rights of Afro-descendant and Garífuna communities<sup>992</sup> through the work of the Indigenous Development Fund of Guatemala (FODIGUA) and projects focused on intercultural education, sustainable agriculture and access to drinking water and health services for these communities.<sup>993</sup>

471. The Commission takes note of the actions promoting access to water, housing and education carried out by the FODIGUA, which helped around 10,000 people from 11 linguistic communities. It also welcomes the bill submitted by the Ministry of the Environment and Natural Resources to create a category for Collective, Indigenous or Community Management Areas. In addition, the Commission underscores the design of the curricula for an Initial Training Program for Trial Court Candidates, which prioritizes training in the human rights of indigenous peoples.<sup>994</sup>

472. Conversely, the Commission notes with concern the complaints made by organizations and communities on frequent power outages during 2024, which affected access to their fundamental rights, such as health and water, and resulted in economic losses for their business activities.<sup>995</sup> Likewise, indigenous, peasant and Garífuna communities reported forced evictions related to mining and palm plantations, as well as the persecution of human rights defenders in their territories.<sup>996</sup> These evictions are carried out without notice nor effective judicial action, which derives in the forced displacement of indigenous communities.<sup>997</sup>

473. According to the information furnished by the PDH, this uncoordinated work by institutions advocating for peace has increased conflict over land. In 2024, despite the president’s announcement of an

“Agrarian Political Agreement,” there were currently no clear procedures or rules governing land access and tenure, which would primarily impact the rights of indigenous communities.<sup>998</sup>

474. Moreover, the OHCHR stated that racial discrimination and systemic racism continue to negatively affect the enjoyment of human rights by indigenous, Garífuna and Afro-descendant communities. The OHCHR found that multidimensional deprivation affects 86.1 percent of households in the Xinka people, 82.3 percent of households in the Maya communities and 63.2 percent of households across the country.<sup>999</sup>

475. As for persons in the context of human mobility, Guatemala has traditionally been a country of origin, transit and return of persons in human mobility and, to a lesser extent, a destination for some people who require international protection. According to a joint report prepared by the Secretariat of Planning and Programming of the Office of the President (SEGEPLAN) and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), there is a constant, ever-growing migration flow of Guatemalan people to foreign countries. Most displacements are irregular, which makes it an invisible flow from an institutional standpoint and, therefore, difficult to measure.<sup>1000</sup>

476. As for the transit of persons across the country, the PDH reported to the Commission that, during 2024, there was an increase in the number of people in transit, with a daily average of 2,300 people<sup>1001</sup> compared to the 2023 daily average of 2,213 persons.<sup>1002</sup> In this context, the Commission notes with concern the risks faced along the migration route. People in human mobility are victims of theft, extortion and kidnapping, threats, physical and psychological violence, while women, girls and LGBTI persons experienced sexual violence too, mainly by PNC agents. In 2024, the Commission received information about serious cases of sexual rape against migrant women and girls committed by groups of people, including police agents. Furthermore, civil society organizations have expressed their concern about the disappearance of Guatemalan migrants and the lack of response by the State in their search and ultimate repatriation of their bodies.<sup>1003</sup> The PDH highlighted that the complexity of migration flows, fueled by economic, social and political factors, calls for comprehensive, coordinated responses to ensure the respect and protection of the human rights of people in mobility situations.<sup>1004</sup>

477. As for the insertion and adaptation of returnees, as of September 30, 2024, the Guatemalan Migration Institute (IGM) identified 61,892 returnees, of which 10.47 percent were children and adolescents.<sup>1005</sup> This represents an increase against the same period of 2023, with 57,384 returnees.<sup>1006</sup> More often than not, these people return in adverse economic conditions, without clear employment perspectives, worn-out social support networks and the need for psychosocial care.<sup>1007</sup> According to the PDH, this rise mirrors variations in the migration policies of the destination countries and regional migration dynamics.<sup>1008</sup>

478. In terms of internal displacement in Guatemala, the IDMC report, published in 2024, states that, by late 2023, only 580 displacements had been identified as related to conflicts and violence, while 48,000 of displacements were related to disasters. The report also explains that knowing the scale, scope and complexity of internal displacement in countries such as Guatemala is key to inform policies and operational responses.<sup>1009</sup>

479. Concerning persons deprived of liberty, there is still cause for concern in terms of prison conditions and the excessive use of pretrial detention. In particular, the situation of detainees in Guatemala is marked by overcrowding, with prison occupation exceeding 200 percent of prison capacity.<sup>1010</sup> This stems from a crime policy that prioritizes imprisonment by means of an excessive use of pretrial detention—with a 47-percent rate—<sup>1011</sup> as well as the absence of alternative measures to punish certain crimes, including those related to organized crime, especially to extortion and to the Law against Drug Trafficking.<sup>1012</sup> In this regard, said crime policy hinders the access to benefits, such as the commutation of sentences caused by an insufficient number of programs or by administrative hurdles and the continued imprisonment of persons with a served sentence due to the lack of resources to pay the fines imposed.<sup>1013</sup>

480. In connection with the rights of children and adolescents, the Commission takes note of the launch of crime prevention programs to reduce crimes and ensure citizen security targeted at protecting Guatemalan children and adolescents.<sup>1014</sup> Furthermore, the Commission underscores the implementation, since May, of the Plan to Prevent and Respond to Violence Against Children, developed in partnership with the Government of Sweden and UNICEF.<sup>1015</sup>

481. In addition, the Commission acknowledges the efforts made by the Attorney General's Office (PGN) to protect the rights of children and adolescents in Guatemala. During the first quarter of 2024, the PGN provided support to 588 children and adolescents whose rights to protection against ill-treatment, integrity, family, health, education and protection against sexual exploitation had been violated.<sup>1016</sup> Furthermore, between January and September 2024, the PGN provided assistance in 104 cases of children affected by malnutrition—93 of them involved children under 5 years of age.<sup>1017</sup>

482. Moreover, based on data from the Public Prosecutor's Office, as of August 31, 2024, 9,496 complaints on crimes against children and adolescents were received, of which 59 percent involved ill-treatment, 28 percent were related to violence and 11 percent concerned sexual assault.<sup>1018</sup> As for children and adolescents in situations of human mobility, from January to September 28, 2024, a total of 6,484 children and adolescents returned to Guatemala, out of which 2,027 were unaccompanied.<sup>1019</sup>

483. Furthermore, the Commission takes note that in January 2024, almost seven years after the facts of the Hogar Seguro Virgen de Asunción case took place, in which 41 girls and adolescents died in a fire,<sup>1020</sup> the trial against eight former public officials was initiated; these former public officials were accused of abuse of authority, breach of duty, manslaughter, negligent injury and ill-treatment against minors.<sup>1021</sup>

484. With regard to human trafficking, the Commission welcomes the letter of commitment signed in March by the IGM and the Secretariat against Sexual Violence, Exploitation and Human Trafficking (SVET) to join efforts and ensure that complaints are heard and human trafficking victims are supported at border crossings.<sup>1022</sup> Moreover, the PDH stated that human trafficking would continue to show alarming figures, affecting mainly children, even in their early childhood.<sup>1023</sup>

XVIII. GUYANA

- General considerations

485. As it relates to progress, the Commission highlights the State's continued progress towards constitutional reform including the establishment of the Constitutional Reform Commission, its legislative efforts to transform its judicial system and address gender-based violence. In addition, the IACHR highlights the State's proposal to provide specialized training to migrants and the provision of language learning sessions for migrant children. Furthermore, the Commission values the State's continuing commitment to facilitate social reintegration and improve the conditions of detention of persons deprived of their liberty.
